La corniche d'entablement au-dessous des fenêtres était fort large; la poussière des champs envolée du plateau de bruyère avait fini par s'y amasser, les pluies avaient refait de la terre avec cette poussière, le vent y avait apporté des graines, si bien qu'une ronce avait profité de ce peu de terre pour pousser là. Cette ronce était de l'espèce vivace dite mûrier de renard. On était en août, la ronce était couverte de mûres, et une branche de la ronce entrait par une fenêtre. Cette branche pendait presque jusqu'à terre.

Gros-Alain, après avoir découvert la ficelle, après avoir découvert la charrette, découvrit cette ronce. Il s'en approcha.

Il cueillit une mûre et la mangea.

— J'ai faim, dit René-Jean.

Et Georgette, galopant sur ses genoux et sur ses mains, arriva.

A eux trois ils pillèrent la branche et mangèrent toutes les mûres. Ils s'en grisèrent et s'en barbouillèrent, et, tout vermeils de cette pourpre de la ronce, ces trois petits séraphins finirent par être trois petits faunes, ce qui eût choqué Dante et charmé Virgile. Ils riaient aux éclats.

De temps en temps la ronce leur piquait les doigts. Rien pour rien.

Georgette tendit à René-Jean son doigt où perlait une petite goutte de sang et dit en montrant la ronce: Pique.

Gros-Alain, piqué aussi, regarda la ronce avec défiance et dit:

— C'est une bête.

— Non, répondit René-Jean, c'est un bâton.

— Un bâton, c'est méchant, reprit Gros-Alain.

Georgette, cette fois encore, eut envie de pleurer, mais elle se mit à rire.

v.

Cependant René-Jean, jaloux peut-être des découvertes de son frère cadet Gros-Alain, avait conçu un grand projet. Depuis quelque temps, tout en cueillant des mûres et en se piquant les doigts, ses yeux se tournaient fréquemment du côté du lutrin-pupitre monté sur pivot et isolé comme un monument au milieu de la bibliothèque. C'est sur ce lutrin que s'étalait le célèbre volume Saint-Barthélemy.

C'était vraiment un in-quarto magnifique et mémorable. Ce Saint-Barthélemy avait été publié à Cologne par le fameux éditeur de la Bible de 1682, Bloeuw, en latin Csius. Il avait été fabriqué par des presses à boîtes et à nerfs de boeuf; il était imprimé, non sur papier de Hollande, mais sur ce beau papier arabe, si admiré par Edrisi, qui est en soie et coton et toujours blanc; la reliure était de cuir doré et les fermoirs étaient d'argent; les gardes étaient de ce parchemin que les parcheminiers de Paris faisaient serment d'acheter à la salle Saint-Mathurin «et point ailleurs». Ce volume était plein de gravures sur bois et sur cuivre et de figures géographiques de beaucoup de pays; il était précédé d'une protestation des imprimeurs, papetiers et libraires contre l'édit de 1633 qui frappait d'un impôt «les cuirs, les bières, le pied fourché, le poisson de mer et le papier»; et au verso du frontispice on lisait une dédicace adressée aux Gryphes, qui sont à Lyon ce que les Elzévirs sont à Amsterdam. De tout cela, il résultait un exemplaire illustre, presque aussi rare que l'Apostol de Moscou.

Ce livre était beau; c'est pourquoi René-Jean le regardait, trop peut-être. Le volume était précisément ouvert à une grande estampe représentant saint Barthélemy portant sa peau sur son bras. Cette estampe se voyait d’en bas. Quand toutes les mûres furent mangées, René-Jean la considéra avec un regard d’amour terrible, et Georgette, dont l’oeil suivait la direction des yeux de son frère, aperçut l’estampe et dit: — Gimage.

Ce mot sembla déterminer René-Jean. Alors, à la grande stupeur de Gros-Alain, il fit une chose extraordinaire.

Une grosse chaise de chêne était dans un angle de la bibliothèque; René-Jean marcha à cette chaise, la saisit, et la traîna à lui tout seul jusqu’au pupitre. Puis, quand la chaise toucha le pupitre, il monta dessus et posa ses deux poings sur le livre.

Parvenu à ce sommet, il sentit le besoin d’être magnifique; il prit la «gimage» par le coin d’en haut et la déchira soigneusement; cette déchirure de saint Barthélemy se fit de travers, mais ce ne fut pas la faute de René-Jean; il laissa dans le livre tout le côté gauche avec un oeil et un peu de l’auréole du vieil évangéliste apocryphe, et offrit à Georgette l’autre moitié du saint et toute sa peau. Georgette reçut le saint et dit:

— Momomme.

— Et moi! cria Gros-Alain.

Il en est de la première page arrachée comme du premier sang versé. Cela décide le carnage.

René-Jean tourna le feuillet; derrière le saint il y avait le commentateur, Pantoenus; René-Jean décerna Pantoenus à Gros-Alain.

Cependant Georgette déchira son grand morceau en deux petits, puis les deux petits en quatre; si bien que l’histoire pourrait dire que saint Barthélemy, après avoir été écorché en Arménie, fut écartelé en Bretagne.

vi.

L’écartèlement terminé, Georgette tendit la main à René-Jean et dit:

— Encore!

Après le saint et le commentateur venaient, portraits rébarbatifs, les glossateurs. Le premier en date était Gavantus; René-Jean l’arracha et mit dans la main de Georgette Gavantus.

Tous les glossateurs de saint Barthélemy y passèrent.

Donner est une supériorité. René-Jean ne se réserva rien. Gros-Alain et Georgette le contemplaient; cela lui suffisait; il se contenta de l’admiration de son public.

René-Jean, inépuisable et magnanime, offrit à Gros-Alain Fabricio Pignatelli et à Georgette le père Stilting; il offrit à Gros-Alain Alphonse

Tostat et à Georgette Cornelius a Lapide; Gros-Alain eut Henri Hammond,

et Georgette eut le père Roberti, augmenté d’une vue de la ville de Douai, où il naquit en 1619. Gros-Alain reçut la protestation des papetiers et

Georgette obtint la dédicace aux Gryphes. Il y avait aussi des cartes.

René-Jean les distribua. Il donna l’Ethiopie à Gros-Alain et la Lycaonie à Georgette. Cela fait, il jeta le livre à terre.

Ce fut un moment effrayant. Gros-Alain et Georgette virent, avec une extase mêlée d’épouvante, René-Jean froncer ses sourcils, roidir ses jarrets, crisper ses poings et pousser hors du lutrin l’in-quarto massif. Un bouquin majestueux qui perd contenance, c’est tragique. Le lourd volume désarçonné pendit un moment, hésita, se balança, puis s’écroula, et, rompu, froissé, lacéré, déboîté dans sa reliure, disloqué dans ses fermoirs, s’aplatit lamentablement sur le plancher. Heureusement il ne tomba point sur eux.

Ils furent éblouis, point écrasés. Toutes les aventures des conquérants ne finissent pas aussi bien.

Comme toutes les gloires, cela fit un grand bruit et un nuage de poussière.

Ayant terrassé le livre, René-Jean descendit de la chaise. Il y eut un instant de silence et de terreur, la victoire a ses effrois. Les trois enfants se prirent les mains et se tinrent à distance, considérant le vaste volume démantelé.

Mais après un peu de rêverie, Gros-Alain s’approcha énergiquement et lui donna un coup de pied.

Ce fut fini. L’appétit de la destruction existe. René-Jean donna son coup de pied, Georgette donna son coup de pied, ce qui la fit tomber par terre, mais assise; elle en profita pour se jeter sur Saint-Barthélemy; tout prestige disparut; René-Jean se précipita, Gros-Alain se rua, et joyeux, éperdus, triomphants, impitoyables, déchirant les estampes, balafrant les feuillets, arrachant les signets, égratignant la reliure, décollant le cuir doré, déclouant les clous des coins d’argent, cassant le parchemin, déchiquetant le texte auguste, travaillant des pieds, des mains, des ongles, des dents, roses, riants, féroces, les trois anges de proie s’abattirent sur l’évangéliste sans défense.

Ils anéantirent l’Arménie, la Judée, le Bénévent où sont les reliques du saint, Nathanaël, qui est peut-être le même que Barthélemy, le pape Gélase, qui déclara apocryphe l’évangile Barthélemy-Nathanaël, toutes les figures, toutes les cartes, et l’exécution inexorable du vieux livre les absorba tellement qu’une souris passa sans qu’ils y prissent garde.

Ce fut une extermination.

Tailler en pièces l’histoire, la légende, la science, les miracles vrais ou faux, le latin d’église, les superstitions, les fanatismes, les mystères, déchirer toute une religion du haut en bas, c’est un travail pour trois géants, et même pour trois enfants; les heures s’écoulèrent dans ce labeur, mais ils en vinrent à bout; rien ne resta de Saint-Barthélemy.

Quand ce fut fini, quand la dernière page fut détachée, quand la dernière estampe fut par terre, quand il ne resta plus du livre que des tronçons de texte et d’images dans un squelette de reliure, René-Jean se dressa debout, regarda le plancher jonché de toutes ces feuilles éparses, et battit des mains.

Gros-Alain battit des mains.

Georgette prit à terre une de ces feuilles, se leva, s’appuya contre la fenêtre qui lui venait au menton et se mit à déchiqueter par la croisée la grande page en petits morceaux.

Ce que voyant, René-Jean et Gros-Alain en firent autant. Ils ramassèrent et déchirèrent, ramassèrent encore et déchirèrent encore, par la croisée comme Georgette; et, page à page, émietté par ces petits doigts acharnés, presque tout l’antique livre s’envola dans le vent. Georgette, pensive, regarda ces essaims de petits papiers blancs se disperser à tous les souffles de l’air, et dit:

— Papillons.

Et le massacre se termina par un évanouissement dans l’azur.

vii.

Telle fut la deuxième mise à mort de saint Barthélemy qui avait été déjà une première fois martyr l’an 49 de Jésus-Christ.

Cependant le soir venait, la chaleur augmentait, la sieste était dans l’air, les yeux de Georgette devenaient vagues, René-Jean alla à son berceau, en tira le sac de paille qui lui tenait lieu de matelas, le traîna jusqu’à la fenêtre, s’allongea dessus et dit: — Couchons-nous.

Gros-Alain mit sa tête sur René-Jean, Georgette mit sa tête sur Gros-Alain, et les trois malfaiteurs s’endormirent.

Les souffles tièdes entraient par les fenêtres ouvertes; des parfums de fleurs sauvages, envolés des ravins et des collines, erraient mêlés aux haleines du soir; l’espace était calme et miséricordieux, tout rayonnait, tout s’apaisait, tout aimait tout; le soleil donnait à la création cette caresse, la lumière; on percevait par tous les pores l'harmonie qui se dégage de la douceur colossale des choses; il y avait de la maternité dans l'infini; la création est un prodige en plein épanouissement, elle complète son énormité par sa bonté; il semblait que l'on sentît quelqu'un d'invisible prendre ces mystérieuses précautions qui dans le redoutable conflit des êtres protègent les chétifs contre les forts; en même temps, c'était beau; la splendeur égalait la mansuétude. Le paysage, ineffablement assoupi, avait cette moire magnifique que font sur les prairies et sur les rivières les déplacements de l'ombre et de la clarté; les fumées montaient vers les nuages, comme des rêveries vers des visions; des vols d'oiseaux tourbillonnaient au-dessus de la Tourgue; les hirondelles regardaient par les croisées, et avaient l'air de venir voir si les enfants dormaient bien. Ils étaient gracieusement groupés l'un sur l'autre, immobiles, demi-nus dans des poses d'amours; ils étaient adorables et purs, à eux trois ils n'avaient pas neuf ans, ils faisaient des songes de paradis qui se reflétaient sur leurs bouches en vagues sourires, Dieu leur parlait peut-être à l'oreille, ils étaient ceux que toutes les langues humaines appellent les faibles et les bénis, ils étaient les innocents vénérables; tout faisait silence comme si le souffle de leurs douces poitrines était l'affaire de l'univers et était écouté de la création entière, les feuilles ne bruissaient pas, les herbes ne frissonnaient pas; il semblait que le vaste monde étoilé retînt sa respiration pour ne point troubler ces trois humbles dormeurs angéliques, et rien n'était sublime comme l'immense respect de la nature autour de cette petitesse.

Le soleil allait se coucher et touchait presque à l'horizon. Tout à coup, dans cette paix profonde, éclata un éclair qui sortit de la forêt, puis un bruit farouche. On venait de tirer un coup de canon. Les échos s'emparèrent de ce bruit et en firent un fracas. Le grondement prolongé de colline en colline fut monstrueux. Il réveilla Georgette.

Elle souleva un peu sa tête, dressa son petit doigt, écouta et dit:

— Poum!

Le bruit cessa, tout rentra dans le silence, Georgette remit sa tête sur Gros-Alain, et se rendormit.

LIVRE QUATRIÈME

LA MÈRE

I. LA MORT PASSE

Ce soir-là, la mère, qu’on a vue cheminant presque au hasard, avait marché toute la journée. C’était, du reste, son histoire de tous les jours; aller devant elle et ne jamais s’arrêter. Car ses sommeils d’accablement dans le premier coin venu n’étaient pas plus du repos que ce qu’elle mangeait çà et là, comme les oiseaux picorent, n’était de la nourriture. Elle mangeait et dormait juste autant qu’il fallait pour ne pas tomber morte.

C’était dans une grange abandonnée qu’elle avait passé la nuit précédente; les guerres civiles font de ces masures-là; elle avait trouvé dans un champ désert quatre murs, une porte ouverte, un peu de paille sous un reste de toit, et elle s’était couchée sur cette paille et sous ce toit, sentant à travers la paille le glissement des rats et voyant à travers le toit le lever des astres. Elle avait dormi quelques heures; puis s’était réveillée au milieu de la nuit, et remise en route afin de faire le plus de chemin possible avant la grande chaleur du jour. Pour qui voyage à pied l’été, minuit est plus clément que midi.

Elle suivait de son mieux l’itinéraire sommaire que lui avait indiqué le paysan de Vantortes; elle allait le plus possible au couchant. Qui eût été près d’elle l’eût entendue dire sans cesse à demi-voix: — La Tourgue. — Avec les noms de ses trois enfants, elle ne savait plus guère que ce mot-là.

Tout en marchant, elle songeait. Elle pensait aux aventures qu’elle avait traversées; elle pensait à tout ce qu’elle avait souffert, à tout ce qu’elle avait accepté; aux rencontres, aux indignités, aux conditions faites, aux marchés proposés et subis, tantôt pour un asile, tantôt pour un morceau de pain, tantôt simplement pour obtenir qu’on lui montrât sa route. Une femme misérable est plus malheureuse qu’un homme misérable, parce qu’elle est instrument de plaisir. Affreuse marche errante! Du reste tout lui était bien égal pourvu qu’elle retrouvât ses enfants.

Sa première rencontre, ce jour-là, avait été un village sur la route; l’aube paraissait à peine; tout était encore baigné du sombre de la nuit; pourtant quelques portes étaient déjà entre-bâillées dans la grande rue du village, et des têtes curieuses sortaient des fenêtres. Les habitants avaient l’agitation d’une ruche inquiétée. Cela tenait à un bruit de roues et de ferrailles qu’on avait entendu.

Sur la place, devant l’église, un groupe ahuri, les yeux en l’air, regardait quelque chose descendre par la route vers le village du haut d’une colline. C’était un chariot à quatre roues traîné par cinq chevaux attelés de chaînes. Sur le chariot on distinguait un entassement qui ressemblait à un monceau de longues solives au milieu desquelles il y avait on ne sait quoi d’informe; c’était recouvert d’une grande bâche, qui avait l’air d’un linceul. Dix hommes à cheval marchaient en avant du chariot et dix autres en arrière. Ces hommes avaient des chapeaux à trois cornes et l’on voyait se dresser au-dessus de leurs épaules des pointes qui paraissaient être des sabres nus. Tout ce cortège, avançant lentement, se découpait en vive noirceur sur l’horizon. Le chariot semblait noir, l’attelage semblait noir, les cavaliers semblaient noirs. Le matin blêmissait derrière.

Cela entra dans le village et se dirigea vers la place.

Il s’était fait un peu de jour pendant la descente de ce chariot et l’on put voir distinctement le cortège, qui paraissait une marche d’ombres, car il n’en sortait pas une parole.

Les cavaliers étaient des gendarmes. Ils avaient en effet le sabre nu. La bâche était noire.

La misérable mère errante entra de son côté dans le village et s’approcha de l’attroupement des paysans au moment où arrivaient sur la place cette voiture et ces gendarmes. Dans l’attroupement, des voix chuchotaient des questions et des réponses.

— Qu’est-ce que c’est que ça?

— C’est la guillotine qui passe.

— D’où vient-elle?

— De Fougères.

— Où va-t-elle?

— Je ne sais pas. On dit qu’elle va à un château du côté de Parigné.

— A Parigné!

— Qu’elle aille où elle voudra, pourvu qu’elle ne s’arrête pas ici!

Cette grande charrette avec son chargement voilé d’une sorte de suaire, cet attelage, ces gendarmes, le bruit de ces chaînes, le silence de ces hommes, l’heure crépusculaire, tout cet ensemble était spectral.

Ce groupe traversa la place et sortit du village; le village était dans un fond entre une montée et une descente; au bout d’un quart d’heure, les paysans, restés là comme pétrifiés, virent reparaître la lugubre procession au sommet de la colline qui était à l’occident. Les ornières cahotaient les grosses roues, les chaînes de l’attelage grelottaient au vent du matin, les sabres brillaient; le soleil se levait, la route tourna, tout disparut.

C’était le moment même où Georgette, dans la salle de la bibliothèque, se réveillait à côté de ses frères encore endormis, et disait bonjour à ses pieds roses.

II. LA MORT PARLE

La mère avait regardé cette chose obscure passer, mais n’avait pas compris ni cherché à comprendre, ayant devant les yeux une autre vision, ses enfants perdus dans les ténèbres.

Elle sortit du village, elle aussi, peu après le cortège qui venait de défiler, et suivit la même route, à quelque distance en arrière de la deuxième escouade de gendarmes. Subitement le mot «guillotine» lui revint; «guillotine», pensa-t-elle; cette sauvage, Michelle Fléchard, ne savait pas ce que c’était; mais l’instinct avertit; elle eut, sans pouvoir dire pourquoi, un frémissement, il lui sembla horrible de marcher derrière cela, et elle prit à gauche, quitta la route, et s’engagea sous des arbres qui étaient la forêt de Fougères.

Après avoir rôdé quelque temps, elle aperçut un clocher et des toits, c’était un des villages de la lisière du bois, elle y alla. Elle avait faim.

Ce village était un de ceux où les républicains avaient établi des postes militaires.

Elle pénétra jusqu’à la place de la mairie.

Dans ce village-là aussi il y avait émoi et anxiété. Un rassemblement se pressait devant un perron de quelques marches qui était l’entrée de la mairie. Sur ce perron on apercevait un homme escorté de soldats qui tenait à la main un grand placard déployé. Cet homme avait à sa droite un tambour et à sa gauche un afficheur portant un pot à colle et un pinceau.

Sur le balcon au-dessus de la porte le maire était debout, ayant son écharpe tricolore mêlée à ses habits de paysan.

L’homme au placard était un crieur public.

Il avait son baudrier de tournée auquel était suspendue une petite sacoche, ce qui indiquait qu’il allait de village en village, et qu’il avait quelque chose à crier dans tout le pays.

Au moment où Michelle Fléchard approcha, il venait de déployer le placard, et il en commençait la lecture. Il dit d’une voix haute:

— «République française. Une et indivisible.»

Le tambour fit un roulement. Il y eut dans le rassemblement une sorte d’ondulation. Quelques-uns ôtèrent leurs bonnets; d’autres renfoncèrent leurs chapeaux. Dans ce temps-là et dans ce pays-là, on pouvait presque reconnaître l’opinion à la coiffure; les chapeaux étaient royalistes, les bonnets étaient républicains. Les murmures de voix confuses cessèrent, on écouta, le crieur lut:

— «… En vertu des ordres à nous donnés et des pouvoirs à nous délégués par le comité de salut public…»

Il y eut un deuxième roulement de tambour. Le crieur poursuivit:

— «… Et en exécution du décret de la Convention nationale qui met hors la loi les rebelles pris les armes à la main, et qui frappe de la peine capitale quiconque leur donnera asile ou les fera évader…»

Un paysan demanda bas à son voisin:

— Qu’est-ce que c’est que ça, la peine capitale?

Le voisin répondit:

— Je ne sais pas.

Le crieur agita le placard:

— «… Vu l’article 17 de la loi du 30 avril qui donne tout pouvoir aux délégués et aux subdélégués contre les rebelles.

«Sont mis hors la loi…»

Il fit une pause et reprit:

— «… Les individus désignés sous les noms et surnoms qui suivent…»

Tout l’attroupement prêta l’oreille.

La voix du crieur devint tonnante. Il dit:

— «… Lantenac, brigand.»

— C’est monseigneur, murmura un paysan.

Et l’on entendit dans la foule ce chuchotement: C’est monseigneur.

Le crieur reprit:

— «… Lantenac, ci-devant marquis, brigand. — L’Imânus, brigand…»

Deux paysans se regardèrent de côté.

— C’est Gouge-le-Bruant.

— Oui, c’est Brise-Bleu.

Le crieur continuait de lire la liste:

— «… Grand-Francoeur, brigand…»

Le rassemblement murmura:

— C’est un prêtre.

— Oui, monsieur l’abbé Turmeau.

— Oui, quelque part, du côté du bois de la Chapelle, il est curé.

— Et brigand, dit un homme à bonnet.

Le crieur lut:

— «… Boisnouveau, brigand. — Les deux frères Pique-en-bois, brigands.

— Houzard, brigand…»

— C’est monsieur de Quélen, dit un paysan.

— «Panier, brigand…»

— C’est monsieur Sepher.

— «… Place-nette, brigand…»

— C’est monsieur Jamois.

Le crieur poursuivait sa lecture sans s’occuper de ces commentaires.

— «… Guinoiseau, brigand. — Chatenay, dit Robi, brigand…»

Un paysan chuchota:

— Guinoiseau est le même que le Blond, Chatenay est de Saint-Ouen.

— «… Hoisnard, brigand», reprit le crieur.

Et l’on entendit dans la foule:

— Il est de Ruillé.

— Oui, c’est Branche-d’Or.

— Il a eu son frère tué à l’attaque de Pontorson.

— Oui, Hoisnard-Malonnière.

— Un beau jeune homme de dix-neuf ans.

— Attention, dit le crieur. Voici la fin de la liste: — «… Belle-Vigne, brigand. — La Musette, brigand. — Sabre-tout, brigand. — Brin-d’Amour, brigand…»

Un garçon poussa le coude d’une fille. La fille sourit.

Le crieur continua:

— «… Chante-en-hiver, brigand. — Le Chat, brigand…»

Un paysan dit:

— C’est Moulard.

— «… Tabouze, brigand…»

Un paysan dit:

— C’est Gauffre.

— Ils sont deux, les Gauffre, ajouta une femme.

— Tous des bons, grommela un gars.

Le crieur secoua l’affiche et le tambour battit un ban.

Le crieur reprit sa lecture:

— «… Les susnommés, en quelque lieu qu’ils soient saisis, et après l’identité constatée, seront immédiatement mis à mort.»

Il y eut un mouvement.

Le crieur poursuivit:

— «… Quiconque leur donnera asile ou aidera à leur évasion sera traduit en cour martiale, et mis à mort. Signé…»

Le silence devint profond.

— «… Signé: le délégué du Comité de salut public, CIMOURDAIN.»

— Un prêtre, dit un paysan.

— L’ancien curé de Parigné, dit un autre.

Un bourgeois ajouta:

— Turmeau et Cimourdain. Un prêtre blanc et un prêtre bleu.

— Tous deux noirs, dit un autre bourgeois.

Le maire, qui était sur le balcon, souleva son chapeau, et cria:

— Vive la république!

Un roulement de tambour annonça que le crieur n’avait pas fini. En effet il fit un signe de la main.

— Attention, dit-il. Voici les quatre dernières lignes de l’affiche du gouvernement. Elles sont signées du chef de la colonne d’expédition des Côtes-du-Nord, qui est le commandant Gauvain.

— Ecoutez! dirent les voix de la foule.

Et le crieur lut:

— «Sous peine de mort…»

Tous se turent.

— «… Défense est faite, en exécution de l’ordre ci-dessus, de porter aide et secours aux dix-neuf rebelles susnommés qui sont à cette heure investis et cernés dans la Tourgue.»

— Hein? dit une voix.

C’était une voix de femme. C’était la voix de la mère.

III. BOURDONNEMENT DE PAYSANS

Michelle Fléchard était mêlée à la foule. Elle n’avait rien écouté, mais ce qu’on n’écoute pas, on l’entend. Elle avait entendu ce mot, la Tourgue. Elle dressait la tête.

— Hein? répéta-t-elle, la Tourgue?

On la regarda. Elle avait l’air égaré. Elle était en haillons. Des voix murmurèrent: — Ça a l’air d’une brigande.

Une paysanne qui portait des galettes de sarrasin dans un panier s’approcha et lui dit tout bas:

— Taisez-vous.

Michelle Fléchard considéra cette femme avec stupeur. De nouveau, elle ne comprenait plus. Ce nom, la Tourgue, avait passé comme un éclair, et la nuit se refaisait. Est-ce qu’elle n’avait pas le droit de s’informer? Qu’est-ce qu’on avait donc à la regarder ainsi?

Cependant le tambour avait battu un dernier ban, l’afficheur avait collé l’affiche, le maire était rentré dans la mairie, le crieur était parti pour quelque autre village, et l’attroupement se dispersait.

Un groupe était resté devant l’affiche. Michelle Fléchard alla à ce groupe.

On commentait les noms des hommes mis hors la loi.

Il y avait là des paysans et des bourgeois; c’est-à-dire des blancs et des bleus.

Un paysan disait:

— C’est égal, ils ne tiennent pas tout le monde. Dix-neuf, ça n’est que dix-neuf. Ils ne tiennent pas Priou, ils ne tiennent pas Benjamin Moulins, ils ne tiennent pas Goupil, de la paroisse d’Andouillé.

— Ni Lorieul, de Monjean, dit un autre.

D’autres ajoutèrent:

— Ni Brice-Denys.

— Ni François Dudouet.

— Oui, celui de Laval.

— Ni Huet, de Launey-Villiers.

— Ni Grégis.

— Ni Pilon.

— Ni Filleul.

— Ni Ménicent.

— Ni Guéharrée.

— Ni les trois frères Logerais.

— Ni monsieur Lechandelier de Pierreville.

— Imbéciles! dit un vieux sévère à cheveux blancs. Ils ont tout, s’ils ont Lantenac.

— Ils ne l’ont pas encore, murmura un des jeunes.

Le vieillard répliqua:

— Lantenac pris, l’âme est prise. Lantenac mort, la Vendée est tuée.

— Qu’est-ce que c’est donc que ce Lantenac? demanda un bourgeois.

Un bourgeois répondit:

— C’est un ci-devant.

Et un autre reprit:

— C’est un de ceux qui fusillent les femmes.

Michelle Fléchard entendit, et dit:

— C’est vrai.

On se retourna.

Et elle ajouta:

— Puisqu’on m’a fusillée.

Le mot était singulier; il fit l’effet d’une vivante qui se dit morte. On se mit à l’examiner, un peu de travers.

Elle était inquiétante à voir en effet; tressaillant de tout, effarée, frissonnante, ayant une anxiété fauve, et si effrayée qu’elle était effrayante. Il y a dans le désespoir de la femme on ne sait quoi de faible qui est terrible. On croit voir un être suspendu à l’extrémité du sort. Mais les paysans prennent la chose plus en gros. L’un d’eux grommela:

— Ça pourrait bien être une espionne.

— Taisez-vous donc, et allez-vous-en, lui dit tout bas la bonne femme qui lui avait déjà parlé.

Michelle Fléchard répondit:

— Je ne fais pas de mal. Je cherche mes enfants.

La bonne femme regarda ceux qui regardaient Michelle Fléchard, se toucha le front du doigt en clignant de l’œil, et dit:

— C’est une innocente.

Puis elle la prit à part, et lui donna une galette de sarrasin.

Michelle Fléchard, sans remercier, mordit avidement dans la galette.

— Oui, dirent les paysans, elle mange comme une bête, c’est une innocente.

Et le reste du rassemblement se dissipa. Tous s’en allèrent l’un après l’autre.

Quand Michelle Fléchard eut mangé, elle dit à la paysanne:

— C’est bon, j’ai mangé. Maintenant, la Tourgue?

— Voilà que ça la reprend! s’écria la paysanne.

— Il faut que j’aille à la Tourgue. Dites-moi le chemin de la Tourgue.

— Jamais! dit la paysanne. Pour vous faire tuer, n’est-ce pas? D’ailleurs, je ne sais pas. Ah ça, vous êtes donc vraiment folle? Ecoutez, pauvre femme, vous avez l’air fatiguée. Voulez-vous vous reposer chez moi?

— Je ne me repose pas, dit la mère.

— Elle a les pieds tout écorchés, murmura la paysanne.

Michelle Fléchard reprit:

— Puisque je vous dis qu’on m’a volé mes enfants. Une petite fille et deux petits garçons. Je viens du carnichot qui est dans la forêt. On peut parler de moi à Tellmarch-le-Caimand. Et puis à l’homme que j’ai rencontré dans le champ là-bas. C’est le caimand qui m’a guérie. Il paraît que j’avais quelque chose de cassé. Tout cela, ce sont des choses qui sont arrivées. Il y a encore le sergent Radoub. On peut lui parler. Il dira. Puisque c’est lui qui nous a rencontrés dans un bois. Trois. Je vous dis trois enfants. Même que l’aîné s’appelle René-Jean. Je puis prouver tout cela. L’autre s’appelle Gros-Alain, et l’autre s’appelle Georgette. Mon mari est mort. On l’a tué. Il était métayer à Siscoignard. Vous avez l’air d’une bonne femme. Enseignez-moi mon chemin. Je ne suis pas une folle, je suis une mère. J’ai perdu mes enfants. Je les cherche. Voilà tout. Je ne sais pas au juste d’où je viens. J’ai dormi cette nuit-ci sur de la paille dans une grange. La Tourgue, voilà où je vais. Je ne suis pas une voleuse. Vous voyez bien que je dis la vérité. On devrait m’aider à retrouver mes enfants. Je ne suis pas du pays. J’ai été fusillée, mais je ne sais pas où.

La paysanne hocha la tête et dit:

— Ecoutez, la passante. Dans des temps de révolution, il ne faut pas dire des choses qu’on ne comprend pas. Ça peut vous faire arrêter.

— Mais la Tourgue! cria la mère. Madame, pour l’amour de l’enfant Jésus et de la sainte bonne Vierge du paradis, je vous en prie, madame, je vous en supplie, je vous en conjure, dites-moi par où l’on va pour aller à la Tourgue!

La paysanne se mit en colère.

— Je ne le sais pas! et je le saurais que je ne le dirais pas! Ce sont là de mauvais endroits. On ne va pas là.

— J’y vais pourtant, dit la mère.

Et elle se remit en route.

La paysanne la regarda s’éloigner et grommela:

— Il faut cependant qu’elle mange.

Elle courut après Michelle Fléchard et lui mit une galette de blé noir dans la main.

— Voilà pour votre souper.

Michelle Fléchard prit le pain de sarrasin, ne répondit pas, ne tourna pas la tête, et continua de marcher.

Elle sortit du village. Comme elle atteignait les dernières maisons, elle rencontra trois petits enfants déguenillés et pieds nus, qui passaient. Elle s’approcha d’eux et dit:

— Ceux-ci, c’est deux filles et un garçon.

Et voyant qu’ils regardaient son pain, elle le leur donna.

Les enfants prirent le pain et eurent peur.

Elle s’enfonça dans la forêt.

IV. UNE MEPRISE

Cependant, ce jour-là même, avant que l’aube parût, dans l’obscurité indistincte de la forêt, il s’était passé, sur le tronçon de chemin qui va de Javené à Lécousse, ceci:

Tout est chemin creux dans le Bocage, et, entre toute, la route de Javené à Parigné par Lécousse est très encaissée. De plus, tortueuse. C’est plutôt un ravin qu’un chemin. Cette route vient de Vitré et a eu l’honneur de cahoter le carrosse de madame de Sévigné. Elle est comme murée à droite et à gauche par les haies. Pas de lieu meilleur pour une embuscade.

Ce matin-là, une heure avant que Michelle Fléchard, sur un autre point de la forêt, arrivât dans ce premier village où elle avait eu la sépulcrale apparition de la charrette escortée de gendarmes, il y avait dans les halliers que la route de Javené traverse au sortir du pont sur le Couesnon, un pêle-mêle d’hommes invisibles. Les branches cachaient tout. Ces hommes étaient des paysans, tous vêtus du grigo, sayon de poil que portaient les rois de Bretagne au sixième siècle et les paysans au dix-huitième. Ces hommes étaient armés, les uns de fusils, les autres de cognées. Ceux qui avaient des cognées venaient de préparer dans une clairière une sorte de bûcher de fagots secs et de rondins auquel on n’avait plus qu’à mettre le feu. Ceux qui avaient des fusils étaient groupés des deux côtés du chemin dans une posture d’attente. Qui eût pu voir à travers les feuilles eût aperçu partout des doigts sur des détentes et des canons de carabine braqués dans les embrasures que font les entrecroisements des branchages. Ces gens étaient à l’affût. Tous les fusils convergeaient sur la route, que le point du jour blanchissait.

Dans ce crépuscule des voix basses dialoguaient.

— Es-tu sûr de ça?

— Dame, on le dit.

— Elle va passer?

— On dit qu’elle est dans le pays.

— Il ne faut pas qu’elle en sorte.

— Il faut la brûler.

— Nous sommes trois villages venus pour cela.

— Oui, mais l’escorte?

— On tuera l’escorte.

— Mais est-ce que c’est par cette route-ci qu’elle passe?

— On le dit.

— C’est donc alors qu’elle viendrait de Vitré?

— Pourquoi pas?

— Mais c’est qu’on disait qu’elle venait de Fougères.

— Qu’elle vienne de Fougères ou de Vitré, elle vient du diable.

— Oui.

— Et il faut qu’elle y retourne.

— Oui.

— C’est donc à Parigné qu’elle irait?

— Il paraît.

— Elle n’ira pas.

— Non.

— Non, non, non!

— Attention.

Il devenait utile de se taire en effet, car il commençait à faire un peu jour.

Tout à coup les hommes embusqués retinrent leur respiration; on entendit un bruit de roues et de chevaux. Ils regardèrent à travers les branches et distinguèrent confusément dans le chemin creux une longue charrette, une escorte à cheval, quelque chose sur la charrette; cela venait à eux.

— La voilà! dit celui qui paraissait le chef.

— Oui, dit un des guetteurs, avec l’escorte.

— Combien d’hommes d’escorte?

— Douze.

— On disait qu’ils étaient vingt.

— Douze ou vingt, tuons tout.

— Attendons qu’ils soient en pleine portée.

Peu après, à un tournant du chemin, la charrette et l’escorte apparurent.

— Vive le roi! cria le chef paysan.

Cent coups de fusil partirent à la fois.

Quand la fumée se dissipa, l’escorte aussi était dissipée. Sept cavaliers étaient tombés, cinq s’étaient enfuis. Les paysans coururent à la charrette.

— Tiens, s’écria le chef, ce n’est pas la guillotine. C’est une échelle.

La charrette avait en effet pour tout chargement une longue échelle.

Les deux chevaux s’étaient abattus, blessés; le charretier avait été tué, mais pas exprès.

— C’est égal, dit le chef, une échelle escortée est suspecte. Cela allait du côté de Parigné. C’était pour l’escalade de la Tourgue, bien sûr.

— Brûlons l’échelle, crièrent les paysans.

Et ils brûlèrent l’échelle.

Quant à la funèbre charrette qu’ils attendaient, elle suivait une autre route, et elle était déjà à deux lieues plus loin, dans ce village où Michelle Fléchard la vit passer au soleil levant.

V. VOX IN DESERTO

Michelle Fléchard, en quittant les trois enfants auxquels elle avait donné son pain, s’était mise à marcher au hasard à travers le bois.

Puisqu’on ne voulait pas lui montrer son chemin, il fallait bien qu’elle le trouvât toute seule. Par instants elle s’asseyait, et elle se relevait, et elle s’asseyait encore. Elle avait cette fatigue lugubre qu’on a d’abord dans les muscles, puis qui passe dans les os; fatigue d’esclave. Elle était esclave en effet. Esclave de ses enfants perdus. Il fallait les retrouver; chaque minute écoulée pouvait être leur perte; qui a un tel devoir n’a plus de droit; reprendre haleine lui était interdit. Mais elle était bien lasse. A ce degré d’épuisement, un pas de plus est une question. Le pourra-t-on faire? Elle marchait depuis le matin; elle n’avait plus rencontré de village, ni même de maison. Elle prit d’abord le sentier qu’il fallait, puis celui qu’il ne fallait pas, et elle finit par se perdre au milieu des branches pareilles les unes aux autres. Approchait-elle du but? Touchait-elle au terme de sa passion? Elle était dans la voie douloureuse, et elle sentait l’accablement de la dernière station. Allait-elle tomber sur la route et expirer là? À un certain moment, avancer encore lui sembla impossible, le soleil déclinait, la forêt était obscure, les sentiers s’étaient effacés sous l’herbe, et elle ne sut plus que devenir. Elle n’avait plus que Dieu. Elle se mit à appeler, personne ne répondit.

Elle regarda autour d’elle, elle vit une claire-voie dans les branches, elle se dirigea de ce côté-là, et brusquement se trouva hors du bois.

Elle avait devant elle un vallon étroit comme une tranchée, au fond duquel coulait dans les pierres un clair filet d’eau. Elle s’aperçut alors qu’elle avait une soif ardente. Elle alla à cette eau, s’agenouilla, et but.

Elle profita de ce qu’elle était à genoux pour faire sa prière.

En se relevant, elle chercha à s’orienter.

Elle enjamba le ruisseau.

Au delà du petit vallon se prolongeait à perte de vue un vaste plateau couvert de broussailles courtes, qui, à partir du ruisseau, montait en plan incliné et emplissait tout l’horizon. La forêt était une solitude, ce plateau était un désert. Dans la forêt, derrière chaque buisson on pouvait rencontrer quelqu’un; sur le plateau, aussi loin que le regard pouvait s’étendre, on ne voyait rien. Quelques oiseaux qui avaient l’air de fuir volaient dans les bruyères.

Alors, en présence de cet abandon immense, sentant fléchir ses genoux, et comme devenue insensée, la mère éperdue jeta à la solitude ce cri étrange:

— Y a-t-il quelqu’un ici?

Et elle attendit la réponse.

On répondit.

Une voix sourde et profonde éclata, cette voix venait du fond de l’horizon, elle se répercuta d’écho en écho; cela ressemblait à un coup de tonnerre à moins que ce ne fût un coup de canon; et il semblait que cette voix répliquait à la question de la mère et qu’elle disait: Oui.

Puis le silence se fit.

La mère se dressa, ranimée; il y avait quelqu’un. Il lui paraissait qu’elle avait maintenant à qui parler; elle venait de boire et de prier; les forces lui revenaient, elle se mit à gravir le plateau du côté où elle avait entendu l’énorme voix lointaine.

Tout à coup elle vit sortir de l’extrême horizon une haute tour. Cette tour était seule dans ce sauvage paysage; un rayon du soleil couchant l’empourprait. Elle était à plus d’une lieue de distance. Derrière cette tour se perdait dans la brume une grande verdure diffuse qui était la forêt de Fougères.

Cette tour lui apparaissait sur le même point de l’horizon d’où était venu ce grondement qui lui avait semblé un appel. Etait-ce cette tour qui avait fait ce bruit?

Michelle Fléchard était arrivée sur le sommet du plateau; elle n’avait plus devant elle que de la plaine.

Elle marcha vers la tour.

VI. SITUATION

Le moment était venu.

L’inexorable tenait l’impitoyable.

Cimourdain avait Lantenac dans sa main.

Le vieux royaliste rebelle était pris au gîte; évidemment il ne pouvait échapper; et Cimourdain entendait que le marquis fût décapité chez lui, sur place, sur ses terres, et en quelque sorte dans sa maison, afin que la demeure féodale vît tomber la tête de l’homme féodal, et que l’exemple fût mémorable.

C’est pourquoi il avait envoyé chercher à Fougères la guillotine. On vient de la voir en route.

Tuer Lantenac, c’était tuer la Vendée; tuer la Vendée, c’était sauver la France. Cimourdain n’hésitait pas. Cet homme était à l’aise dans la férocité du devoir.

Le marquis semblait perdu; de ce côté Cimourdain était tranquille, mais il était inquiet d’un autre côté. La lutte serait certainement affreuse; Gauvain la dirigerait, et voudrait s’y mêler peut-être; il y avait du soldat dans ce jeune chef; il était homme à se jeter dans ce pugilat; pourvu qu’il n’y fût pas tué? Gauvain! son enfant! l’unique affection qu’il eût sur la terre! Gauvain avait eu du bonheur jusque-là, mais le bonheur se lasse. Cimourdain tremblait. Sa destinée avait cela d’étrange qu’il était entre deux Gauvain, l’un dont il voulait la mort, l’autre dont il voulait la vie.

Le coup de canon qui avait secoué Georgette dans son berceau et appelé la mère du fond des solitudes n’avait pas fait que cela. Soit hasard, soit intention du pointeur, le boulet, qui n’était pourtant qu’un boulet d’avertissement, avait frappé, crevé et arraché à demi l’armature de barreaux de fer qui masquait et fermait la grande meurtrière du premier étage de la tour. Les assiégés n’avaient pas eu le temps de réparer cette avarie.

Les assiégés s’étaient vantés. Ils avaient très peu de munitions. Leur situation, insistons-y, était plus critique encore que les assiégeants ne le supposaient. S’ils avaient eu assez de poudre, ils auraient fait sauter la Tourgue, eux et l’ennemi dedans; c’était leur rêve; mais toutes leurs réserves étaient épuisées. A peine avaient-ils trente coups à tirer par homme. Ils avaient beaucoup de fusils, d’espingoles et de pistolets, et peu de cartouches. Ils avaient chargé toutes les armes afin de pouvoir faire un feu continu; mais combien de temps durerait ce feu? Il fallait à la fois le nourrir et le ménager. Là était la difficulté. Heureusement — bonheur sinistre — la lutte serait surtout d'homme à homme, et à l'arme blanche; au sabre et au poignard. On se colleterait plus qu'on ne se fusillerait. On se hacherait; c'était là leur espérance.

L'intérieur de la tour semblait inexpugnable. Dans la salle basse où aboutissait le trou de brèche, était la retirade, cette barricade savamment construite par Lantenac, qui obstruait l'entrée. En arrière de la retirade, une longue table était couverte d'armes chargées, tromblons, carabines et mousquetons, et de sabres, de haches et de poignards. N'ayant pu utiliser pour faire sauter la tour le cachot-crypte des oubliettes qui communiquait avec la salle basse, le marquis avait fait fermer la porte de ce caveau. Au-dessus de la salle basse était la chambre ronde du premier étage à laquelle on n'arrivait que par une vis-de-Saint-Gilles très étroite; cette chambre, meublée, comme la salle basse,d'une table couverte d'armes toutes prêtes et sur lesquelles on n'avait qu'à mettre la main, était éclairée par la grande meurtrière dont un boulet venait de défoncer le grillage; au-dessus de cette chambre, l'escalier en spirale menait à la chambre ronde du second étage où était la porte de fer donnant sur le pont-châtelet. Cette chambre du second s'appelait indistinctement la chambre de la porte de fer ou la chambre des miroirs, à cause de beaucoup de petits miroirs, accrochés à cru sur la pierre nue à de vieux clous rouillés, bizarre recherche mêlée à la sauvagerie. Les chambres d'en haut ne pouvant être utilement défendues, cette chambre des miroirs était ce que Mannesson-Mallet, le législateur des places fortes, appelle «le dernier poste où les assiégés font une capitulation». Il s'agissait, nous l'avons dit déjà, d'empêcher les assiégeants d'arriver là.

Cette chambre ronde du second étage était éclairée par des meurtrières; pourtant une torche y brûlait. Cette torche, plantée dans une torchère de fer pareille à celle de la salle basse, avait été allumée par l'Imânus, qui avait placé tout à côté l'extrémité de la mèche soufrée. Soins horribles.

Au fond de la salle basse, sur un long tréteau, il y avait à manger, comme dans une caverne homérique; de grands plats de riz, du fur, qui est une bouillie de blé noir, de la godnivelle, qui est un hachis de veau, des rondeaux de houichepote, pâte de farine et de fruits cuits à l'eau, de la badrée, des pots de cidre. Buvait et mangeait qui voulait.

Le coup de canon les mit tous en arrêt. On n’avait plus qu’une demi-heure devant soi.

L’Imânus, du haut de la tour, surveillait l’approche des assiégeants. Lantenac avait commandé de ne pas tirer et de les laisser arriver. Il avait dit:

— Ils sont quatre mille cinq cents. Tuer dehors est inutile. Ne tuez que dedans. Dedans, l’égalité se refait.

Et il avait ajouté en riant: — Egalité, Fraternité.

Il était convenu que lorsque l’ennemi commencerait son mouvement, l’Imânus, avec sa trompe, avertirait.

Tous, en silence, postés derrière la retirade, ou sur les marches des escaliers, attendaient, une main sur leur mousquet, l’autre sur leur rosaire.

La situation se précisait, et était ceci:

Pour les assaillants, une brèche à gravir, une barricade à forcer, trois salles superposées à prendre de haute lutte l’une après l’autre, deux escaliers tournants à emporter marche par marche, sous une nuée de mitraille; pour les assiégés, mourir.

VII. PRÉLIMINAIRES

Gauvain de son côté mettait en ordre l’attaque. Il donnait ses dernières instructions à Cimourdain, qui, on s’en souvient, devait, sans prendre part à l’action, garder le plateau, et à Guéchamp qui devait rester en observation avec le gros de l’armée dans le camp de la forêt. Il était entendu que ni la batterie basse du bois ni la batterie haute du plateau ne tireraient, à moins qu’il n’y eût sortie ou tentative d’évasion. Gauvain se réservait le commandement de la colonne de brèche. C’est là ce qui troublait Cimourdain.

Le soleil venait de se coucher.

Une tour en rase campagne ressemble à un navire en pleine mer. Elle doit être attaquée de la même façon. C’est plutôt un abordage qu’un assaut. Pas de canon. Rien d’inutile. A quoi bon canonner des murs de quinze pieds d’épaisseur? Un trou dans le sabord, les uns qui le forcent, les autres qui le barrent, des haches, des couteaux, des pistolets, les poings et les dents. Telle est l’aventure.

Gauvain sentait qu’il n’y avait pas d’autre moyen d’enlever la Tourgue. Une attaque où l’on se voit le blanc des yeux, rien de plus meurtrier. Il connaissait le redoutable intérieur de la tour, y ayant été enfant.

Il songeait profondément.

Cependant, à quelques pas de lui, son lieutenant, Guéchamp, une longue-vue à la main, examinait l’horizon du côté de Parigné. Tout à coup Guéchamp s’écria:

— Ah! enfin!

Cette exclamation tira Gauvain de sa rêverie.

— Qu’y a-t-il, Guéchamp?

— Mon commandant, il y a que voici l’échelle.

— L’échelle de sauvetage?

— Oui.

— Comment? nous ne l’avions pas encore?

— Non, commandant. Et j’étais inquiet. L’exprès que j’avais envoyé à Javené était revenu.

— Je le sais.

— Il avait annoncé qu’il avait trouvé à la charpenterie de Javené l’échelle de la dimension voulue, qu’il l’avait réquisitionnée, qu’il avait fait mettre l’échelle sur une charrette, qu’il avait requis une escorte de douze cavaliers, et qu’il avait vu partir pour Parigné la charrette, l’escorte et l’échelle. Sur quoi, il était revenu à franc étrier.

— Et nous avait fait ce rapport. Et il avait ajouté que la charrette, étant bien attelée et partie vers deux heures du matin, serait ici avant le coucher du soleil. Je sais tout cela. Eh bien?

— Eh bien, mon commandant, le soleil vient de se coucher et la charrette qui apporte l’échelle n’est pas encore arrivée.

— Est-ce possible? Mais il faut pourtant que nous attaquions. L’heure est venue. Si nous tardions, les assiégés croiraient que nous reculons.

— Mon commandant, on peut attaquer.

— Mais l’échelle de sauvetage est nécessaire.

— Sans doute.

— Mais nous ne l’avons pas.

— Nous l’avons.

— Comment?

— C’est ce qui m’a fait dire: Ah! enfin! La charrette n’arrivait pas; j’ai pris ma longue-vue, et j’ai examiné la route de Parigné à la Tourgue, et, mon commandant, je suis content. La charrette est là-bas avec l’escorte. Elle descend une côte. Vous pouvez la voir.

Gauvain prit la longue-vue et regarda.

— En effet. La voici. Il ne fait plus assez de jour pour tout distinguer. Mais on voit l’escorte, c’est bien cela. Seulement l’escorte me paraît plus nombreuse que vous ne le disiez, Guéchamp.

— Et à moi aussi.

— Ils sont à environ un quart de lieue.

— Mon commandant, l’échelle de sauvetage sera ici dans un quart d’heure.

— On peut attaquer.

C’était bien une charrette en effet qui arrivait, mais ce n’était pas celle qu’ils croyaient.

Gauvain, en se retournant, vit derrière lui le sergent Radoub, droit, les yeux baissés, dans l’attitude du salut militaire.

— Qu’est-ce, sergent Radoub?

— Citoyen commandant, nous, les hommes du bataillon du Bonnet-Rouge, nous avons une grâce à vous demander.

— Laquelle?

— De nous faire tuer.

— Ah! dit Gauvain.

— Voulez-vous avoir cette bonté?

— Mais … c’est selon, dit Gauvain.

— Voici, commandant. Depuis l’affaire de Dol, vous nous ménagez. Nous sommes encore douze.

— Eh bien?

— Ça nous humilie.

— Vous êtes la réserve.

— Nous aimons mieux être l’avant-garde.

— Mais j’ai besoin de vous pour décider le succès à la fin d’une action. Je vous conserve.

— Trop.

— C’est égal. Vous êtes dans la colonne. Vous marchez.

— Derrière. C’est le droit de Paris de marcher devant.

— J’y penserai, sergent Radoub.

— Pensez-y aujourd’hui, mon commandant. Voici une occasion. Il va y avoir un rude croc-en-jambe à donner ou à recevoir. Ce sera dru. La Tourgue brûlera les doigts de ceux qui y toucheront. Nous demandons la faveur d’en être.

Le sergent s’interrompit, se tordit la moustache, et reprit d’une voix

Altérée:

— Et puis, voyez-vous, mon commandant, dans cette tour, il y a nos mômes. Nous avons là nos enfants, les enfants du bataillon, nos trois enfants. Cette affreuse face de Gribouille-mon-cul-te-baise, le nommé Brise-Bleu, le nommé Imânus, ce Gouge-le-Bruant, ce Bouge-le-Gruand, ce Fouge-le-Truand, ce tonnerre de Dieu d’homme du diable, menace nos enfants. Nos enfants, nos mioches, mon commandant! Quand tous les tremblements s’en mêleraient, nous ne voulons pas qu’il leur arrive malheur. Entendez-vous ça, autorité? Nous ne le voulons pas. Tantôt, j’ai profité de ce qu’on ne se battait pas, et je suis monté sur le plateau, et je les ai regardés par une fenêtre, oui, ils sont vraiment là, on peut les voir du bord du ravin, et je les ai vus, et je leur ai fait peur, à ces amours. Mon commandant, s’il tombe un seul cheveu de leurs petites caboches de chérubins, je le jure, mille noms de noms de tout ce qu’il y a de sacré, moi le sergent Radoub, je m’en prends à la carcasse du Père Eternel. Et voici ce que dit le bataillon: nous voulons que les mômes soient sauvés, ou être tous tués. C’est notre droit, ventraboumine! oui, tous tués. Et maintenant, salut et respect.

Gauvain tendit la main à Radoub, et dit:

— Vous êtes des braves. Vous serez de la colonne d’attaque. Je vous partage en deux. Je mets six de vous à l’avant-garde, afin qu’on avance, et j’en mets six à l’arrière-garde, afin qu’on ne recule pas.

— Est-ce toujours moi qui commande les douze?

— Certes.

— Alors, mon commandant, merci. Car je suis de l’avant-garde.

Radoub refit le salut militaire et regagna le rang.

Gauvain tira sa montre, dit quelques mots à l’oreille de Guéchamp, et la colonne d’attaque commença à se former.

VIII. LE VERBE ET LE RUGISSEMENT

Cependant Cimourdain, qui n’avait pas encore gagné son poste du plateau, et qui était à côté de Gauvain, s’approcha d’un clairon.

— Sonne à la trompe, lui dit-il.

Le clairon sonna, la trompe répondit.

Un son de clairon et un son de trompe s’échangèrent encore.

— Qu’est-ce que c’est? demanda Gauvain à Guéchamp. Que veut Cimourdain?

Cimourdain s’était avancé vers la tour, un mouchoir blanc à la main.

Il éleva la voix.

— Hommes qui êtes dans la tour, me connaissez-vous?

Une voix, la voix de l’Imânus, répliqua du haut de la tour:

— Oui.

Les deux voix alors se parlèrent et se répondirent et l’on entendit ceci:

— Je suis l’envoyé de la république.

— Tu es l’ancien curé de Parigné.

— Je suis le délégué du comité du salut public.

— Tu es un prêtre.

— Je suis le représentant de la loi.

— Tu es un renégat.

— Je suis le commissaire de la révolution.

— Tu es un apostat.

— Je suis Cimourdain.

— Tu es le démon.

— Vous me connaissez?

— Nous t’exécrons.

— Seriez-vous contents de me tenir en votre pouvoir?

— Nous sommes ici dix-huit qui donnerions nos têtes pour avoir la tienne.

— Eh bien, je viens me livrer à vous.

On entendit au haut de la tour un éclat de rire sauvage et ce cri:

— Viens!

Il y avait dans le camp un profond silence d’attente.

Cimourdain reprit:

— A une condition.

— Laquelle?

— Ecoutez.

— Parle.

— Vous me haïssez?

— Oui.

— Moi, je vous aime. Je suis votre frère.

La voix du haut de la tour répondit:

— Oui, Caïn.

Cimourdain repartit avec une inflexion singulière, qui était à la fois haute et douce:

— Insultez, mais écoutez. Je viens ici en parlementaire. Oui, vous êtes mes frères. Vous êtes de pauvres hommes égarés. Je suis votre ami. Je suis la lumière et je parle à l'ignorance. La lumière contient toujours de la fraternité. D'ailleurs, est-ce que nous n'avons pas tous la même mère, la patrie? Eh bien, écoutez-moi. Vous saurez plus tard, ou vos enfants sauront, ou les enfants de vos enfants sauront que tout ce qui se fait en ce moment se fait par l'accomplissement des lois d'en haut, et que ce qu'il y a dans la révolution, c'est Dieu. En attendant le moment où toutes les consciences, même les vôtres, comprendront, et où tous les fanatismes, même les nôtres, s'évanouiront, en attendant que cette grande clarté soit faite, personne n'aura-t-il pitié de vos ténèbres? Je viens à vous, je vous offre ma tête; je fais plus, je vous tends la main. Je vous demande la grâce de me perdre pour vous sauver. J'ai pleins pouvoirs, et ce que je dis, je le puis. C'est un instant suprême; je fais un dernier effort. Oui, celui qui vous parle est un citoyen, et dans ce citoyen, oui, il y a un prêtre. Le citoyen vous combat, mais le prêtre vous supplie. Ecoutez-moi. Beaucoup d'entre vous ont des femmes et des enfants. Je prends la défense de vos enfants et de vos femmes. Je prends leur défense contre vous. O mes frères…

— Va, prêche! ricana l'Imânus.

Cimourdain continua:

— Mes frères, ne laissez pas sonner l'heure exécrable. On va ici s'entr'égorger. Beaucoup d'entre nous qui sommes ici devant vous ne verront pas le soleil de demain; oui, beaucoup d'entre nous périront, et vous, vous tous, vous allez mourir. Faites-vous grâce à vous-mêmes. Pourquoi verser tout ce sang quand c'est inutile? Pourquoi tuer tant d'hommes quand deux suffisent?

— Deux? dit l'Imânus.

— Oui. Deux.

— Qui?

— Lantenac et moi.

Et Cimourdain éleva la voix:

— Deux hommes sont de trop, Lantenac pour nous, moi pour vous. Voici ce que je vous offre, et vous aurez tous la vie sauve: donnez-nous Lantenac, et prenez-moi. Lantenac sera guillotiné, et vous ferez de moi ce que vous voudrez.

— Prêtre, hurla l’Imânus, si nous t’avions, nous te brûlerions à petit feu.

— J’y consens, dit Cimourdain.

Et il reprit:

— Vous, les condamnés qui êtes dans cette tour, vous pouvez tous dans une heure être vivants et libres. Je vous apporte le salut. Acceptez-vous?

L’Imânus éclata.

— Tu n’es pas seulement scélérat, tu es fou. Ah çà, pourquoi viens-tu nous déranger? Qui est-ce qui te prie de venir nous parler? Nous, livrer monseigneur! Qu’est-ce que tu veux?

— Sa tête. Et je vous offre…

— Ta peau. Car nous t’écorcherions comme un chien, curé Cimourdain. Eh bien, non, ta peau ne vaut pas sa tête. Va-t’en.

— Cela va être horrible. Une dernière fois, réfléchissez.

La nuit venait pendant ces paroles sombres qu’on entendait au dedans de la tour comme au dehors. Le marquis de Lantenac se taisait et laissait faire. Les chefs ont de ces sinistres égoïsmes. C’est un des droits de la responsabilité.

L’Imânus jeta sa voix par-dessus Cimourdain, et cria:

— Hommes qui nous attaquez, nous vous avons dit nos propositions, elles sont faites, et nous n’avons rien à y changer. Acceptez-les, sinon, malheur! Consentez-vous? Nous vous rendrons les trois enfants qui sont là, et vous nous donnerez la sortie libre et la vie sauve, à tous.

— A tous, oui, répondit Cimourdain, excepté un.

— Lequel?

— Lantenac.

— Monseigneur! Livrer monseigneur! Jamais.

— Il nous faut Lantenac.

— Jamais.

— Nous ne pouvons traiter qu’à cette condition.

— Alors commencez.

Le silence se fit.

L’Imânus, après avoir sonné avec sa trompe le coup de signal, redescendit; le marquis mit l’épée à la main; les dix-neuf assiégés se groupèrent en silence dans la salle basse, en arrière de la retirade, et se mirent à genoux; ils entendaient le pas mesuré de la colonne d’attaque qui avançait vers la tour dans l’obscurité; ce bruit se rapprochait; tout à coup ils le sentirent tout près d’eux, à la bouche même de la brèche. Alors tous, agenouillés, épaulèrent à travers les fentes de la retirade leurs fusils et leurs espingoles, et l’un d’eux, Grand-Francoeur, qui était le prêtre Turmeau, se leva, et, un sabre nu dans la main droite, un crucifix dans la main gauche, dit d’une voix grave:

— Au nom du Père, du Fils et du Saint-Esprit!

Tous firent feu à la fois, et la lutte s’engagea.

IX. TITANS CONTRE GÉANTS

Cela fut en effet épouvantable.

Ce corps à corps dépassa tout ce qu’on avait pu rêver.

Pour trouver quelque chose de pareil, il faudrait remonter aux grands duels d’Eschyle ou aux antiques tueries féodales; à ces «attaques à armes courtes» qui ont duré jusqu’au dix-septième siècle, quand on pénétrait dans les places fortes par les fausses brayes; assauts tragiques, où, dit le vieux sergent de la province d’Alentejo, «les fourneaux ayant fait leur effet, les assiégeants s’avanceront portant des planches couvertes de lames de fer-blanc, armés de rondaches et de mantelets, et fournis de quantité de grenades, faisant abandonner les retranchements ou retirades à ceux de la place, et s’en rendront maîtres, poussant vigoureusement les assiégés».

Le lieu d’attaque était horrible; c’était une de ces brèches qu’on appelle en langue du métier brèches sans voûte, c’est-à-dire, on se le rappelle, une crevasse traversant le mur de part en part et non une fracture évasée à ciel ouvert. La poudre avait agi comme une vrille. L’effet de la mine avait été si violent que la tour avait été fendue par l’explosion à plus de quarante pieds au-dessus du fourneau, mais ce n’était qu’une lézarde, et la déchirure praticable qui servait de brèche et donnait entrée dans la salle basse ressemblait plutôt au coup de lance qui perce qu’au coup de hache qui entaille.

C’était une ponction au flanc de la tour, une longue fracture pénétrante, quelque chose comme un puits couché à terre, un couloir serpentant et montant comme un intestin à travers une muraille de quinze pieds d’épaisseur, on ne sait quel informe cylindre encombré d’obstacles, de pièges, d’explosions, où l’on se heurtait le front aux granits, les pieds aux gravats, les yeux aux ténèbres.

Les assaillants avaient devant eux ce porche noir, bouche de gouffre ayant pour mâchoires, en bas et en haut, toutes les pierres de la muraille déchiquetée; une gueule de requin n’a pas plus de dents que cet arrachement effroyable. Il fallait entrer dans ce trou, et en sortir.

Dedans éclatait la mitraille, dehors se dressait la retirade. Dehors, c’est-à-dire dans la salle basse du rez-de-chaussée.

Les rencontres de sapeurs dans les galeries couvertes quand la contre-mine vient couper la mine, les boucheries à la hache sous les entre-ponts des vaisseaux qui s’abordent dans les batailles navales, ont seules cette férocité. Se battre au fond d’une fosse, c’est le dernier degré de l’horreur. Il est affreux de s’entre-tuer avec un plafond sur la tête. Au moment où le premier flot des assiégeants entra, toute la retirade se couvrit d’éclairs, et ce fut quelque chose comme la foudre éclatant sous terre. Le tonnerre assaillant répliqua au tonnerre embusqué. Les détonations se ripostèrent; le cri de Gauvain s’éleva: Fonçons! Puis le cri de Lantenac: Faites ferme contre l’ennemi! Puis le cri de l’Imânus: A moi les Mainiaux! Puis des cliquetis, sabres contre sabres, et, coup sur coup, d’effroyables décharges tuant tout. La torche accrochée au mur éclairait vaguement toute cette épouvante. Impossible de rien distinguer; on était dans une noirceur rougeâtre; qui entrait là était subitement sourd et aveugle, sourd du bruit, aveugle de la fumée. Les hommes mis hors de combat gisaient parmi les décombres, on marchait sur des cadavres, on écrasait des plaies, on broyait des membres cassés d’où sortaient des hurlements, on avait les pieds mordus par des mourants. Par instants, il y avait des silences plus hideux que le bruit. On se colletait, on entendait l’effrayant souffle des bouches, puis des grincements, des râles, des imprécations, et le tonnerre recommençait. Un ruisseau de sang sortait de la tour par la brèche, et se répandait dans l’ombre. Cette flaque sombre fumait dehors dans l’herbe.

On eût dit que c’était la tour elle-même qui saignait et que la géante était blessée.

Chose surprenante, cela ne faisait presque pas de bruit dehors. La nuit était très noire, et dans la plaine et dans la forêt il y avait autour de la forteresse attaquée une sorte de paix funèbre. Dedans c’était l’enfer, dehors c’était le sépulcre. Ce choc d’hommes s’exterminant dans les ténèbres, ces mousqueteries, ces clameurs, ces rages, tout ce tumulte expirait sous la masse des murs et des voûtes, l’air manquait au bruit, et au carnage s’ajoutait l’étouffement. Hors de la tour, cela s’entendait à peine. Les petits enfants dormaient pendant ce temps-là.

L’acharnement augmentait. La retirade tenait bon. Rien de plus malaisé à forcer que ce genre de barricade en chevron rentrant. Si les assiégés avaient contre eux le nombre, ils avaient pour eux la position. La colonne d’attaque perdait beaucoup de monde. Alignée et allongée dehors au pied de la tour, elle s’enfonçait lentement dans l’ouverture de la brèche, et se raccourcissait, comme une couleuvre qui entre dans son trou.

Gauvain, qui avait des imprudences de jeune chef, était dans la salle basse au plus fort de la mêlée, avec toute la mitraille autour de lui. Ajoutons qu’il avait la confiance de l’homme qui n’a jamais été blessé.

Comme il se retournait pour donner un ordre, une lueur de mousqueterie éclaira un visage tout près de lui.

— Cimourdain! s’écria-t-il, qu’est-ce que vous venez faire ici?

C’était Cimourdain en effet. Cimourdain répondit:

— Je viens être près de toi.

— Mais vous allez vous faire tuer!

— Hé bien, toi, qu’est-ce que tu fais donc?

— Mais je suis nécessaire ici. Vous pas.

— Puisque tu y es, il faut que j’y sois.

— Non, mon maître.

— Si, mon enfant!

Et Cimourdain resta près de Gauvain.

Les morts s’entassaient sur les pavés de la salle basse.

Bien que la retirade ne fût pas forcée encore, le nombre évidemment devait finir par vaincre. Les assaillants étaient à l’abri; dix assiégeants tombaient contre un assiégé, mais les assiégeants se renouvelaient. Les assiégeants croissaient et les assiégés décroissaient.

Les dix-neuf assiégés étaient tous derrière la retirade, l’attaque étant là. Ils avaient des morts et des blessés. Quinze tout au plus combattaient encore. Un des plus farouches, Chante-en-hiver, avait été affreusement mutilé. C’était un breton trapu et crépu, de l’espèce petite et vivace. Il avait un oeil crevé et la mâchoire brisée. Il pouvait encore marcher. Il se traîna dans l’escalier en spirale, et monta dans la chambre du premier étage, espérant pouvoir là prier et mourir.

Il s’était adossé au mur près de la meurtrière pour tâcher de respirer un peu.

En bas la boucherie devant la retirade était de plus en plus horrible. Dans une intermittence, entre deux décharges, Cimourdain éleva la voix:

— Assiégés! cria-t-il. Pourquoi faire couler le sang plus longtemps? Vous êtes pris. Rendez-vous. Songez que nous sommes quatre mille cinq cents contre dix-neuf, c’est-à-dire plus de deux cents contre un. Rendez-vous.

— Cessons ce marivaudage, répondit le marquis de Lantenac.

Et vingt balles ripostèrent à Cimourdain.

La retirade ne montait pas jusqu’à la voûte; cela permettait aux assiégés de tirer par-dessus, mais cela permettait aux assiégeants de l’escalader.

— L’assaut à la retirade! cria Gauvain. Y a-t-il quelqu’un de bonne volonté pour escalader la retirade?

— Moi, dit le sergent Radoub.

X. RADOUB

Ici les assaillants eurent une stupeur. Radoub était entré par le trou de brèche, à la tête de la colonne d’attaque, lui sixième, et sur ces six hommes du bataillon parisien, quatre étaient déjà tombés. Après qu’il eut jeté ce cri: Moi! on le vit, non avancer, mais reculer, et, baissé, courbé, rampant presque entre les jambes des combattants, regagner l’ouverture de la brèche, et sortir. Etait-ce une fuite? Un tel homme fuir? Qu’est-ce que cela voulait dire?

Arrivé hors de la brèche, Radoub, encore aveuglé par la fumée, se frotta les yeux comme pour en ôter l’horreur et la nuit, et, à la lueur des étoiles, regarda la muraille de la tour. Il fit ce signe de tête satisfait qui veut dire: Je ne m’étais pas trompé.

Radoub avait remarqué que la lézarde profonde de l’explosion de la mine montait au-dessus de la brèche jusqu’à cette meurtrière du premier étage dont un boulet avait défoncé et disloqué l’armature de fer. Le réseau des barreaux rompus pendait à demi arraché, et un homme pouvait passer.

Un homme pouvait passer, mais un homme pouvait-il monter? Par la lézarde, oui, à la condition d’être un chat.

C’est ce qu’était Radoub. Il était de cette race que Pindare appelle «les athlètes agiles». On peut être vieux soldat et homme jeune; Radoub, qui avait été garde-française, n’avait pas quarante ans. C’était un Hercule leste.

Radoub posa à terre son mousqueton, ôta sa buffleterie, quitta son habit et sa veste, et ne garda que ses deux pistolets qu’il mit dans la ceinture de son pantalon et son sabre nu qu’il prit entre ses dents. La crosse des deux pistolets passait au-dessus de sa ceinture.

Ainsi allégé de l’inutile, et suivi des yeux dans l’obscurité par tous ceux de la colonne d’attaque qui n’étaient pas encore entrés dans la brèche, il se mit à gravir les pierres de la lézarde du mur comme les marches d’un escalier. N’avoir pas de souliers lui fut utile; rien ne grimpe comme un pied nu; il crispait ses orteils dans les trous des pierres. Il se hissait avec ses poings et s’affermissait avec ses genoux. La montée était rude. C’était quelque chose comme une ascension le long des dents d’une scie. — Heureusement, pensait-il, qu’il n’y a personne dans la chambre du premier étage, car on ne me laisserait pas escalader ainsi.

Il n'avait pas moins de quarante pieds à gravir de cette façon. A mesure qu'il montait, un peu gêné par les pommeaux saillants de ses pistolets, la lézarde allait se rétrécissant, et l'ascension devenait de plus en plus difficile. Le risque de la chute augmentait en même temps que la profondeur du précipice.

Enfin il parvint au rebord de la meurtrière; il écarta le grillage tordu et descellé, il avait largement de quoi passer; il se souleva d'un effort puissant, appuya son genou sur la corniche du rebord, saisit d'une main un tronçon de barreau à droite, de l'autre main un tronçon à gauche, et se dressa jusqu'à mi-corps devant l'embrasure de la meurtrière, le sabre aux dents, suspendu par ses deux poings sur l'abîme.

Il n'avait plus qu'une enjambée à faire pour sauter dans la salle du premier étage.

Mais une face apparut dans la meurtrière.

Radoub vit brusquement devant lui dans l'ombre quelque chose d'effroyable; un oeil crevé, une mâchoire fracassée, un masque sanglant.

Ce masque, qui n'avait plus qu'une prunelle, le regardait.

Ce masque avait deux mains; ces deux mains sortirent de l'ombre et s'avancèrent vers Radoub; l'une, d'une seule poignée, lui prit ses deux pistolets dans sa ceinture, l'autre lui ôta son sabre des dents.

Radoub était désarmé. Son genou glissait sur le plan incliné de la corniche, ses deux poings crispés aux tronçons du grillage suffisaient à peine à le soutenir, et il avait derrière lui quarante pieds de précipice.

Ce masque et ces mains, c'était Chante-en-hiver.

Chante-en-hiver, suffoqué par la fumée qui montait d'en bas, avait réussi à entrer dans l'embrasure de la meurtrière, là l'air extérieur l'avait ranimé, la fraîcheur de la nuit avait figé son sang, et il avait repris un peu de force; tout à coup il avait vu surgir au dehors devant l'ouverture le torse de Radoub; alors, Radoub ayant les mains cramponnées aux barreaux et n'ayant que le choix de se laisser tomber ou de se laisser désarmer, Chante-en-hiver, épouvantable et tranquille, lui avait cueilli ses pistolets à sa ceinture et son sabre entre les dents.

Un duel inouï commença. Le duel du désarmé et du blessé.

Evidemment, le vainqueur c'était le mourant. Une balle suffisait pour jeter

Radoub dans le gouffre béant sous ses pieds.

Par bonheur pour Radoub, Chante-en-hiver, ayant les deux pistolets dans une seule main, ne put en tirer un et fut forcé de se servir du sabre. Il porta un coup de pointe à l’épaule de Radoub. Ce coup de sabre blessa Radoub et le sauva.

Radoub, sans armes, mais ayant toute sa force, dédaigna sa blessure qui d’ailleurs n’avait pas entamé l’os, fit un soubresaut en avant, lâcha les barreaux et bondit dans l’embrasure.

Là il se trouva face à face avec Chante-en-hiver, qui avait jeté le sabre derrière lui et qui tenait les deux pistolets dans ses deux poings.

Chante-en-hiver, dressé sur ses genoux, ajusta Radoub presque à bout portant, mais son bras affaibli tremblait, et il ne tira pas tout de suite.

Radoub profita de ce répit pour éclater de rire.

— Dis donc, cria-t-il, Vilain-à-voir! est-ce que tu crois me faire peur avec ta gueule en boeuf à la mode? Sapristi, comme on t’a délabré le minois!

Chante-en-hiver le visait.

Radoub continua:

— Ce n’est pas pour dire, mais tu as eu la gargoine joliment chiffonnée par la mitraille. Mon pauvre garçon, Bellone t’a fracassé la physionomie. Allons, allons, crache ton petit coup de pistolet, mon bonhomme.

Le coup partit et passa si près de la tête qu’il arracha à Radoub la moitié de l’oreille. Chante-en-hiver éleva l’autre bras armé du second pistolet, mais Radoub ne lui laissa pas le temps de viser.

— J’ai assez d’une oreille de moins, cria-t-il. Tu m’as blessé deux fois. A moi la belle!

Et il se rua sur Chante-en-hiver, lui rejeta le bras en l’air, fit partir le coup qui alla n’importe où, et lui saisit et lui mania sa mâchoire disloquée.

Chante-en-hiver poussa un rugissement et s’évanouit.

Radoub l’enjamba et le laissa dans l’embrasure.

— Maintenant que je t’ai fait savoir mon ultimatum, dit-il, ne bouge plus. Reste là, méchant traîne-à-terre. Tu penses bien que je ne vais pas à présent m’amuser à te massacrer. Rampe à ton aise sur le sol, concitoyen de mes savates. Meurs, c’est toujours ça de fait. C’est tout à l’heure que tu vas savoir que ton curé ne te disait que des bêtises. Va-t’en dans le grand mystère, paysan.

Et il sauta dans la salle du premier étage.

— On n’y voit goutte, grommela-t-il.

Chante-en-hiver s’agitait convulsivement et hurlait à travers l’agonie.

Radoub se retourna.

— Silence! fais-moi le plaisir de te taire, citoyen sans le savoir. Je ne me mêle plus de ton affaire. Je méprise de t’achever. Fiche-moi la paix.

Et, inquiet, il fourra son poing dans ses cheveux, tout en considérant

Chante-en-hiver.

— Ah çà, qu’est-ce que je vais faire? C’est bon tout ça, mais me voilà désarmé. J’avais deux coups à tirer. Tu me les as gaspillés, animal! Et avec ça une fumée qui vous fait aux yeux un mal de chien!

Et rencontrant son oreille déchirée:

— Aïe! dit-il.

Et il reprit:

— Te voilà bien avancé de m’avoir confisqué une oreille! Au fait, j’aime mieux avoir ça de moins qu’autre chose, ça n’est guère qu’un ornement. Tu m’as aussi égratigné à l’épaule, mais ce n’est rien. Expire, villageois, je te pardonne.

Il écouta. Le bruit dans la salle basse était effrayant. Le combat était plus forcené que jamais.

— Ça va bien en bas. C’est égal, ils gueulent vive le roi. Ils crèvent noblement.

Ses pieds cognèrent son sabre à terre. Il le ramassa, et il dit à

Chante-en-hiver qui ne bougeait plus et qui était peut-être mort:

— Vois-tu, homme des bois, pour ce que je voulais faire, mon sabre ou zut, c’est la même chose. Je le reprends par amitié. Mais il me fallait mes pistolets. Que le diable t’emporte, sauvage! Ah çà, qu’est-ce que je vais faire? Je ne suis bon à rien ici.

Il avança dans la salle tâchant de voir et de s’orienter. Tout à coup dans la pénombre, derrière le pilier du milieu, il aperçut une longue table, et sur cette table quelque chose qui brillait vaguement. Il tâta. C’étaient des tromblons, des pistolets, des carabines, une rangée d’armes à feu disposées en ordre et semblant n’attendre que des mains pour les saisir; c’était la réserve de combat préparée par les assiégés pour la deuxième phase de l’assaut; tout un arsenal.

— Un buffet! s’écria Radoub.

Et il se jeta dessus, ébloui.

Alors il devint formidable.

La porte de l’escalier communiquant aux étages d’en haut et d’en bas était visible, toute grande ouverte, à côté de la table chargée d’armes. Radoub laissa tomber son sabre, prit dans ses deux mains deux pistolets à deux coups et les déchargea à la fois au hasard sous la porte dans la spirale de l’escalier, puis il saisit une espingole et la déchargea, puis il empoigna un tromblon gorgé de chevrotines et le déchargea. Le tromblon, vomissant quinze balles, sembla un coup de mitraille. Alors Radoub, reprenant haleine, cria d’une voix tonnante dans l’escalier: Vive Paris!

Et s’emparant d’un deuxième tromblon plus gros que le premier, il le braqua sous la voûte tortueuse de la vis-de-Saint-Gilles, et attendit.

Le désarroi dans la salle basse fut indescriptible. Ces étonnements imprévus désagrègent la résistance.

Deux des balles de la triple décharge de Radoub avaient porté; l’une avait tué Houzard, qui était M. de Quélen.

— Ils sont en haut! cria le marquis.

Ce cri détermina l’abandon de la retirade, une volée d’oiseaux n’est pas plus vite en déroute, et ce fut à qui se précipiterait dans l’escalier. Le marquis encourageait cette fuite.

— Faites vite, disait-il. Le courage est d’échapper. Montons tous au deuxième étage! Là nous recommencerons.

Il quitta la retirade le dernier.

Cette bravoure le sauva.

Radoub, embusqué au haut du premier étage de l’escalier, le doigt sur la détente du tromblon, guettait la déroute. Les premiers qui apparurent au tournant de la spirale reçurent la décharge en pleine face, et tombèrent foudroyés. Si le marquis en eût été, il était mort. Avant que Radoub eût eu le temps de saisir une nouvelle arme, les autres passèrent, le marquis après tous, et plus lent que les autres. Ils croyaient la chambre du premier pleine d’assiégeants, ils ne s’y arrêtèrent pas, et gagnèrent la salle du second étage, la chambre des miroirs. C’est là qu’était la porte de fer, c’est là qu’était la mèche soufrée, c’est là qu’il fallait capituler ou mourir.

Gauvain, aussi surpris qu’eux-mêmes des détonations de l’escalier et ne s’expliquant pas le secours qui lui arrivait, en avait profité sans chercher à comprendre, avait sauté, lui et les siens, par-dessus la retirade, et avait poussé les assiégés l’épée aux reins jusqu’au premier étage.

Là il trouva Radoub.

Radoub commença par le salut militaire et dit:

— Une minute, mon commandant. C’est moi qui ai fait ça. Je me suis souvenu de Dol. J’ai fait comme vous. J’ai pris l’ennemi entre deux feux.

— Bon élève, dit Gauvain en souriant.

Quand on est un certain temps dans l’obscurité, les yeux finissent par se faire à l’ombre comme ceux des oiseaux de nuit; Gauvain s’aperçut que Radoub était tout en sang.

— Mais tu es blessé, camarade!

— Ne faites pas attention, mon commandant. Qu’est-ce que c’est que ça, une oreille de plus ou de moins? J’ai aussi un coup de sabre, je m’en fiche. Quand on casse un carreau, on s’y coupe toujours un peu. D’ailleurs il n’y a pas que de mon sang.

On fit une sorte de halte dans la salle du premier étage, conquise par Radoub. On apporta une lanterne. Cimourdain rejoignit Gauvain. Ils délibérèrent. Il y avait lieu à réfléchir en effet. Les assiégeants n’étaient pas dans le secret des assiégés; ils ignoraient leur pénurie de munitions; ils ne savaient pas que les défenseurs de la place étaient à court de poudre; le deuxième étage était le dernier poste de résistance; les assiégeants pouvaient croire l’escalier miné.

Ce qui était certain, c’est que l’ennemi ne pouvait échapper. Ceux qui n’étaient pas morts étaient là comme sous clef. Lantenac était dans la souricière.

Avec cette certitude, on pouvait se donner un peu le temps de chercher le meilleur dénoûment possible. On avait déjà bien des morts. Il fallait tâcher de ne pas perdre trop de monde dans ce dernier assaut.

Le risque de cette suprême attaque serait grand. Il y aurait probablement un rude premier feu à essuyer.

Le combat était interrompu. Les assiégeants, maîtres du rez-de-chaussée et du premier étage, attendaient, pour continuer, le commandement du chef. Gauvain et Cimourdain tenaient conseil. Radoub assistait en silence à leur délibération.

Il hasarda un nouveau salut militaire, timide.

— Mon commandant?

— Qu’est-ce, Radoub?

— Ai-je droit à une petite récompense?

— Certes. Demande ce que tu voudras.

— Je demande à monter le premier.

On ne pouvait le lui refuser. D’ailleurs il l’eût fait sans permission.

XI. LES DÉSESPÉRÉS

Pendant qu'on délibérait au premier étage, on se barricadait au second. Le succès est une fureur, la défaite est une rage. Les deux étages allaient se heurter éperdument. Toucher à la victoire, c'est une ivresse. En bas il y avait l'espérance, qui serait la plus grande des forces humaines si le désespoir n'existait pas.

Le désespoir était en haut.

Un désespoir calme, froid, sinistre.

En arrivant à cette salle de refuge, au delà de laquelle il n'y avait rien pour eux, le premier soin des assiégés fut de barrer l'entrée. Fermer la porte était inutile, encombrer l'escalier valait mieux. En pareil cas, un obstacle à travers lequel on peut voir et combattre vaut mieux qu'une porte fermée.

La torche plantée dans la torchère du mur par l'Imânus près de la mèche soufrée les éclairait.

Il y avait dans cette salle du second un de ces gros et lourds coffres de chêne où l'on serrait les vêtements et le linge avant l'invention des meubles à tiroirs.

Ils traînèrent ce coffre et le dressèrent debout sous la porte de l'escalier. Il s'y emboîtait solidement et bouchait l'entrée. Il ne laissait d'ouvert, près de la voûte, qu'un espace étroit, pouvant laisser passer un homme, excellent pour tuer les assaillants un à un. Il était douteux qu'on s'y risquât.

L'entrée obstruée leur donnait un répit.

Ils se comptèrent.

Les dix-neuf n'étaient plus que sept, dont l'Imânus. Excepté l'Imânus et le marquis, tous étaient blessés.

Les cinq qui étaient blessés, mais très vivants, car, dans la chaleur du combat, toute blessure qui n'est pas mortelle vous laisse aller et venir, étaient Chatenay, dit Robi, Guinoiseau, Hoisnard Branche-d'Or, Brin-d'Amour et Grand-Francur. Tout le reste était mort.

Ils n'avaient plus de munitions. Les gibernes étaient épuisées. Ils comptèrent les cartouches. Combien, à eux sept, avaient-ils de coups à tirer? Quatre.

On était arrivé à ce moment où il n'y a plus qu'à tomber. On était acculé à l'escarpement, béant et terrible. Il était difficile d'être plus près du bord.

Cependant l’attaque venait de recommencer; mais lente et d’autant plus sûre. On entendait les coups de crosse des assiégeants sondant l’escalier marche à marche.

Nul moyen de fuir. Par la bibliothèque? Il y avait là sur le plateau six canons braqués, mèche allumée. Par les chambres d’en haut? A quoi bon? elles aboutissaient à la plate-forme. Là on trouvait la ressource de se jeter du haut en bas de la tour.

Les sept survivants de cette bande épique se voyaient inexorablement enfermés et saisis par cette épaisse muraille qui les protégeait et qui les livrait. Ils n’étaient pas encore pris; mais ils étaient déjà prisonniers.

Le marquis éleva la voix:

— Mes amis, tout est fini.

Et après un silence, il ajouta:

— Grand-Francoeur redevient l’abbé Turmeau.

Tous s’agenouillèrent, le rosaire à la main. Les coups de crosse des assaillants se rapprochaient.

Grand-Francoeur, tout sanglant d’une balle qui lui avait effleuré le crâne et arraché le cuir chevelu, dressa de la main droite son crucifix. Le marquis, sceptique au fond, mit un genou en terre.

— Que chacun, dit Grand-Francoeur, confesse ses fautes à haute voix.

Monseigneur, parlez.

Le marquis répondit:

— J’ai tué.

— J’ai tué, dit Hoisnard.

— J’ai tué, dit Guinoiseau.

— J’ai tué, dit Brin-d’Amour.

— J’ai tué, dit Châtenay.

— J’ai tué, dit l’Imânus.

Et Grand-Francoeur reprit:

— Au nom de la très sainte Trinité, je vous absous. Que vos âmes aillent en paix.

— Ainsi soit-il, répondirent toutes les voix.

Le marquis se releva.

— Maintenant, dit-il, mourons.

— Et tuons, dit l’Imânus.

Les coups de crosse commençaient à ébranler le coffre qui barrait la porte.

— Pensez à Dieu, dit le prêtre. La terre n’existe plus pour vous.

— Oui, reprit le marquis, nous sommes dans la tombe.

Tous courbèrent le front et se frappèrent la poitrine. Le marquis seul et le prêtre étaient debout. Les yeux étaient fixés à terre, le prêtre priait, les paysans priaient, le marquis songeait. Le coffre, battu comme par des marteaux, sonnait lugubrement.

En ce moment une voix vive et forte, éclatant brusquement derrière eux, cria:

— Je vous l’avais bien dit, monseigneur!

Toutes les têtes se retournèrent, stupéfaites.

Un trou venait de s’ouvrir dans le mur.

Une pierre, parfaitement rejointoyée avec les autres, mais non cimentée, et ayant un piton en haut et un piton en bas, venait de pivoter sur elle-même à la façon des tourniquets, et en tournant avait ouvert la muraille. La pierre ayant évolué sur son axe, l’ouverture était double et offrait deux passages, l’un à droite, l’autre à gauche, étroits, mais suffisants Pour laisser passer un homme. Au delà de cette porte inattendue on apercevait les premières marches d’un escalier en spirale. Une face d’homme apparaissait à l’ouverture.

Le marquis reconnut Halmalo.

XII. SAUVEUR

— C’est toi, Halmalo?

— Moi, monseigneur. Vous voyez bien que les pierres qui tournent, cela existe, et qu’on peut sortir d’ici. J’arrive à temps, mais faites vite. Dans dix minutes, vous serez en pleine forêt.

— Dieu est grand, dit le prêtre.

— Sauvez-vous, monseigneur, crièrent toutes les voix.

— Vous tous d’abord, dit le marquis.

— Vous le premier, monseigneur, dit l’abbé Turmeau.

— Moi le dernier.

Et le marquis reprit d’une voix sévère:

— Pas de combat de générosité. Nous n’avons pas le temps d’être magnanimes. Vous êtes blessés. Je vous ordonne de vivre et de fuir. Vite! et profitez de cette issue. Merci, Halmalo.

— Monsieur le marquis, dit l’abbé Turmeau, nous allons nous séparer?

— En bas, sans doute. On ne s’échappe jamais qu’un à un.

— Monseigneur nous assigne-t-il un rendez-vous?

— Oui. Une clairière dans la forêt. La Pierre-Gauvaine. Connaissez-vous l’endroit?

— Nous le connaissons tous.

— J’y serai demain, à midi. Que tous ceux qui pourront marcher s’y trouvent.

— On y sera.

— Et nous recommencerons la guerre, dit le marquis.

Cependant Halmalo, en pesant sur la pierre tournante, venait de s’apercevoir qu’elle ne bougeait plus. L’ouverture ne pouvait plus se clore.

— Monseigneur, dit-il, dépêchons-nous, la pierre résiste à présent. J’ai pu ouvrir le passage, mais je ne pourrai le fermer.

La pierre, en effet, après une longue désuétude, était comme ankylosée dans sa charnière. Impossible désormais de lui imprimer un mouvement.

— Monseigneur, reprit Halmalo, j’espérais refermer le passage, et que les bleus, quand ils entreraient, ne trouveraient plus personne, et n’y comprendraient rien, et vous croiraient en allés en fumée. Mais voilà la pierre qui ne veut pas. L’ennemi verra la sortie ouverte et pourra poursuivre. Au moins ne perdons pas une minute. Vite, tous dans l’escalier.

L’Imânus posa la main sur l’épaule de Halmalo:

— Camarade, combien de temps faut-il pour qu'on sorte par cette passe et qu'on soit en sûreté dans la forêt?

— Personne n'est blessé grièvement? demanda Halmalo.

Ils répondirent: — Personne.

— En ce cas, un quart d'heure suffit.

— Ainsi, repartit l'Imânus, si l'ennemi n'entrait ici que dans un quart d'heure?

— Il pourrait nous poursuivre, il ne nous atteindrait pas.

— Mais, dit le marquis, ils seront ici dans cinq minutes, ce vieux coffre n'est pas pour les gêner longtemps. Quelques coups de crosse en viendront à bout. Un quart d'heure! Qui est-ce qui les arrêtera un quart d'heure?

— Moi, dit l'Imânus.

— Toi, Gouge-le-Bruant?

— Moi, monseigneur. Ecoutez. Sur six, vous êtes cinq blessés. Moi je n'ai pas une égratignure.

— Ni moi, dit le marquis.

— Vous êtes le chef, monseigneur. Je suis le soldat. Le chef et le soldat, c'est deux.

— Je le sais, nous avons chacun un devoir différent.

— Non, monseigneur, nous avons, vous et moi, le même devoir, qui est de vous sauver.

L'Imânus se tourna vers ses camarades.

— Camarades, il s'agit de tenir en échec l'ennemi et de retarder la poursuite le plus possible. Ecoutez. J'ai toute ma force, je n'ai pas perdu une goutte de sang; n'étant pas blessé, je durerai plus longtemps qu'un autre. Partez tous. Laissez-moi vos armes. J'en ferai bon usage. Je me charge d'arrêter l'ennemi une bonne demi-heure. Combien y a-t-il de pistolets chargés?

— Quatre.

— Mettez-les à terre.

On fit ce qu'il voulait.

— C'est bien. Je reste. Ils trouveront à qui parler. Maintenant, vite, allez-vous-en.

Les situations à pic suppriment les remerciements. A peine prit-on le temps de lui serrer la main.

— A bientôt, lui dit le marquis.

— Non, monseigneur. J’espère que non. Pas à bientôt; car je vais mourir.

Tous s’engagèrent l’un après l’autre dans l’étroit escalier, les blessés d’abord. Pendant qu’ils descendaient, le marquis prit le crayon de son carnet de poche, et écrivit quelques mots sur la pierre qui ne pouvait plus tourner et qui laissait le passage béant.

— Venez, monseigneur, il n’y a plus que vous, dit Halmalo.

Et Halmalo commença à descendre.

Le marquis le suivit.

L’Imânus resta seul.

XIII. BOURREAU

Les quatre pistolets avaient été posés sur les dalles, car cette salle n’avait pas de plancher. L’Imânus en prit deux, un dans chaque main.

Il s’avança obliquement vers l’entrée de l’escalier que le coffre obstruait et masquait.

Les assaillants craignaient évidemment quelque surprise, une de ces explosions finales qui sont la catastrophe du vainqueur en même temps que celle du vaincu. Autant la première attaque avait été impétueuse, autant la dernière était lente et prudente. Ils n’avaient pas pu, ils n’avaient pas voulu peut-être, enfoncer violemment le coffre; ils en avaient démoli le fond à coups de crosse, et troué le couvercle à coups de bayonnette, et par ces trous ils tâchaient de voir dans la salle avant de se risquer à y pénétrer.

La lueur des lanternes dont ils éclairaient l’escalier passait à travers ces trous.

L’Imânus aperçut à un de ces trous une de ces prunelles qui regardaient. Il ajusta brusquement à ce trou le canon d’un de ses pistolets et pressa la détente. Le coup partit, et l’Imânus, joyeux, entendit un cri horrible. La balle avait crevé l’oeil et traversé la tête, et le soldat qui regardait venait de tomber dans l’escalier à la renverse.

Les assaillants avaient entamé assez largement le bas du couvercle en deux endroits, et y avaient pratiqué deux espèces de meurtrières, l’Imânus profita de l’une de ces entailles, y passa le bras, et lâcha au hasard dans le tas des assiégeants son deuxième coup de pistolet. La balle ricocha probablement, car on entendit plusieurs cris, comme si trois ou quatre étaient tués ou blessés, et il se fit dans l’escalier un grand tumulte d’hommes qui lâchent pied et qui reculent.

L’Imânus jeta les deux pistolets qu’il venait de décharger, et prit les deux qui restaient, puis, les deux pistolets à ses deux poings, il regarda par les trous du coffre.

Il constata le premier effet produit.

Les assaillants avaient redescendu l’escalier. Des mourants se tordaient sur les marches; le tournant de la spirale ne laissait voir que trois ou quatre degrés.

L’Imânus attendit.

— C’est du temps de gagné, pensait-il.

Cependant il vit un homme, à plat ventre, monter en rampant les marches de l'escalier, et en même temps, plus bas, une tête de soldat apparut derrière le pilier central de la spirale. L'Imânus visa cette tête et tira. Il y eut un cri, le soldat tomba, et l'Imânus fit passer de sa main gauche dans sa main droite le dernier pistolet chargé qui lui restait.

En ce moment-là il sentit une affreuse douleur, et ce fut lui qui, à son tour, jeta un hurlement. Un sabre lui fouillait les entrailles. Un poing, le poing de l'homme qui rampait, venait de passer à travers la deuxième meurtrière du bas du coffre, et ce poing avait plongé un sabre dans le ventre de l'Imânus.

La blessure était effroyable. Le ventre était fendu de part en part.

L'Imânus ne tomba pas. Il grinça des dents, et dit: C'est bon!

Puis chancelant et se traînant, il recula jusqu'à la torche qui brûlait à côté de la porte de fer, il posa son pistolet à terre et empoigna la torche, et, soutenant de la main gauche ses intestins qui sortaient, de la main droite il abaissa la torche et mit le feu à la mèche soufrée.

Le feu prit, la mèche flamba. L'Imânus lâcha la torche, qui continua de brûler à terre, ressaisit son pistolet, et, tombé sur la dalle, mais se soulevant encore, attisa la mèche du peu de souffle qui lui restait.

La flamme courut, passa sous la porte de fer et gagna le pont-châtelet.

Alors, voyant cette exécrable réussite, plus satisfait peut-être de son crime que de sa vertu, cet homme qui venait d'être un héros et qui n'était plus qu'un assassin, et qui allait mourir, sourit.

— Ils se souviendront de moi, murmura-t-il. Je venge, sur leurs petits, notre petit à nous, le roi qui est au Temple.

XIV. L’IMANUS AUSSI S’EVADE

En cet instant-là, un grand bruit se fit, le coffre violemment poussé s’effondra, et livra passage à un homme qui se rua dans la salle, le sabre à la main.

— C’est moi, Radoub. Qui en veut? Ça m’ennuie d’attendre. Je me risque. C’est égal, je viens toujours d’en éventrer un. Maintenant je vous attaque tous. Qu’on me suive ou qu’on ne me suive pas, me voilà. Combien êtes-vous?

C’était Radoub, en effet, et il était seul. Après le massacre que l’Imânus venait de faire dans l’escalier, Gauvain, redoutant quelque fougasse masquée, avait fait replier ses hommes et se concertait avec Cimourdain.

Radoub, le sabre à la main sur le seuil, dans cette obscurité où la torche presque éteinte jetait à peine une lueur, répéta sa question:

— Je suis un. Combien êtes-vous?

N’entendant rien, il avança. Un de ces jets de clarté qu’exhalent par instants les foyers agonisants et qu’on pourrait appeler des sanglots de lumière, jaillit de la torche et illumina toute la salle.

Radoub avisa un des petits miroirs accrochés au mur, s’en approcha, regarda sa face ensanglantée et son oreille pendante, et dit:

— Démantibulage hideux.

Puis il se retourna, stupéfait de voir la salle vide.

— Il n’y a personne! s’écria-t-il. Zéro d’effectif.

Il aperçut la pierre qui avait tourné, l’ouverture et l’escalier.

— Ah! je comprends. Clef des champs. Venez donc tous! camarades, venez! ils s’en sont allés. Ils ont filé, fusé, fouiné, fichu le camp. Cette cruche de vieille tour était fêlée. Voici le trou par où ils ont passé, canailles! Comment veut-on qu’on vienne à bout de Pitt et Cobourg avec des farces comme ça! C’est le bon Dieu du diable qui est venu à leur secours! Il n’y a plus personne! Un coup de pistolet partit, une balle lui effleura le coude et s’aplatit contre le mur.

— Mais si! il y a quelqu’un. Qui est-ce qui a la bonté de me faire cette politesse?

— Moi, dit une voix.

Radoub avança la tête et distingua dans le clair-obscur quelque chose qui était l’Imânus.

— Ah! cria-t-il. J’en tiens un. Les autres se sont échappés, mais toi, tu n’échapperas pas.

— Crois-tu? répondit l’Imânus.

Radoub fit un pas et s’arrêta.

— Hé, l’homme qui es par terre, qui es-tu?

— Je suis celui qui est par terre et qui se moque de ceux qui sont debout.

— Qu’est-ce que tu as dans ta main droite?

— Un pistolet.

— Et dans ta main gauche?

— Mes boyaux.

— Je te fais prisonnier.

— Je t’en défie.

Et l’Imânus, se penchant sur la mèche en combustion, soufflant son dernier soupir sur l’incendie, expira.

Quelques instants après, Gauvain et Cimourdain, et tous, étaient dans la salle. Tous virent l’ouverture. On fouilla les recoins, on sonda l’escalier; il aboutissait à une sortie dans le ravin. On constata l’évasion. On secoua l’Imânus, il était mort. Gauvain, une lanterne à la main, examina la pierre qui avait donné issue aux assiégés; il avait entendu parler de cette pierre tournante, mais lui aussi tenait cette légende pour une fable. Tout en considérant la pierre, il aperçut quelque chose qui était écrit au crayon; il approcha la lanterne et lut ceci:

— Au revoir, monsieur le vicomte. —

LANTENAC.

Guéchamp avait rejoint Gauvain. La poursuite était évidemment inutile, la fuite était consommée et complète, les évadés avaient pour eux tout le pays, le buisson, le ravin, le taillis, l'habitant; ils étaient sans doute déjà bien loin; nul moyen de les retrouver; et la forêt de Fougères tout entière était une immense cachette. Que faire? Tout était à recommencer. Gauvain et Guéchamp échangeaient leurs désappointements et leurs conjectures.

Cimourdain écoutait, grave, sans dire une parole.

— A propos, Guéchamp, dit Gauvain, et l'échelle?

— Commandant, elle n'est pas arrivée.

— Mais pourtant nous avons vu venir une voiture escortée par des gendarmes.

Guéchamp répondit:

— Elle n'apportait pas l'échelle.

— Qu'est-ce donc qu'elle apportait?

— La guillotine, dit Cimourdain.

XV. NE PAS METTRE DANS LA MÊME POCHE UNE MONTRE ET UNE CLEF

Le marquis de Lantenac n’était pas si loin qu’ils le croyaient.

Il n’en était pas moins entièrement en sûreté et hors de leur atteinte.

Il avait suivi Halmalo.

L’escalier par où Halmalo et lui étaient descendus, à la suite des autres fugitifs, se terminait tout près du ravin et des arches du pont par un étroit couloir voûté. Ce couloir s’ouvrait sur une profonde fissure naturelle du sol qui d’un côté aboutissait au ravin, et de l’autre à la forêt. Cette fissure, absolument dérobée aux regards, serpentait sous des végétations impénétrables. Impossible de reprendre là un homme. Un évadé, une fois parvenu dans cette fissure, n’avait plus qu’à faire une fuite de couleuvre, et était introuvable. L’entrée du couloir secret de l’escalier était tellement obstruée de ronces que les constructeurs du passage souterrain avaient considéré comme inutile de la fermer autrement.

Le marquis n’avait plus maintenant qu’à s’en aller. Il n’avait pas à s’inquiéter d’un déguisement. Depuis son arrivée en Bretagne, il n’avait pas quitté ses habits de paysan, se jugeant plus grand seigneur ainsi.

Il s’était borné à ôter son épée, dont il avait débouclé et jeté le ceinturon.

Quand Halmalo et le marquis débouchèrent du couloir dans la fissure, les cinq autres, Guinoiseau, Hoisnard Branche-d’Or, Brin-d’Amour, Chatenay et l’abbé Turmeau, n’y étaient déjà plus.

— Ils n’ont pas été longtemps à prendre leur volée, dit Halmalo.

— Fais comme eux, dit le marquis.

— Monseigneur veut que je le quitte?

— Sans doute. Je te l’ai dit déjà. On ne s’évade bien que seul. Où un passe, deux ne passent pas. Ensemble nous appellerions l’attention. Tu me ferais prendre et je te ferais prendre.

— Monseigneur connaît le pays?

— Oui.

— Monseigneur maintient le rendez-vous à la Pierre-Gauvaine?

— Demain. A midi.

— J’y serai. Nous y serons.

Halmalo s’interrompit.

— Ah! monseigneur, quand je pense que nous avons été en pleine mer, que nous étions seuls, que je voulais vous tuer, que vous étiez mon seigneur, que vous pouviez me le dire, et que vous ne me l'avez pas dit! Quel homme vous êtes!

Le marquis reprit:

— L'Angleterre. Il n'y a plus d'autre ressource. Il faut que dans quinze jours les Anglais soient en France.

— J'aurai bien des comptes à rendre à monseigneur. J'ai fait ses commissions.

— Nous parlerons de tout cela demain.

— A demain, monseigneur.

— A propos, as-tu faim?

— Peut-être, monseigneur. J'étais si pressé d'arriver que je ne sais pas si j'ai mangé aujourd'hui.

Le marquis tira de sa poche une tablette de chocolat, la cassa en deux, en donna une moitié à Halmalo et se mit à manger l'autre.

— Monseigneur, dit Halmalo, à votre droite, c'est le ravin; à votre gauche, c'est la forêt.

— C'est bien. Laisse-moi. Va de ton côté.

Halmalo obéit. Il s'enfonça dans l'obscurité. On entendit un bruit de broussailles froissées, puis plus rien. Au bout de quelques secondes il eût été impossible de ressaisir sa trace. Cette terre du Bocage, hérissée et inextricable, était l'auxiliaire du fugitif. On ne disparaissait pas, on s'évanouissait. C'est cette facilité des dispersions rapides qui faisait hésiter nos armées devant cette Vendée toujours reculante, et devant ses combattants si formidablement fuyards.

Le marquis demeura immobile. Il était de ces hommes qui s'efforcent de ne rien éprouver; mais il ne put se soustraire à l'émotion de respirer l'air libre après avoir respiré tant de sang et de carnage. Se sentir complètement sauvé après avoir été complètement perdu; après la tombe, vue de si près, prendre possession de la pleine sécurité; sortir de la mort et rentrer dans la vie, c'était là, même pour un homme comme Lantenac, une secousse; et, bien qu'il en eût déjà traversé de pareilles, il ne put soustraire son âme imperturbable à un ébranlement de quelques instants. Il s'avoua à lui-même qu'il était content. Il dompta vite ce mouvement qui ressemblait presque à de la joie.

Il tira sa montre, et la fit sonner. Quelle heure était-il?

A son grand étonnement, il n’était que dix heures. Quand on vient de subir une de ces péripéties de la vie humaine où tout a été mis en question, on est toujours stupéfait que des minutes si pleines ne soient pas plus longues que les autres. Le coup de canon d’avertissement avait été tiré un peu avant le coucher du soleil, et la Tourgue avait été abordée par la colonne d’attaque une demi-heure après, entre sept et huit heures, à la nuit tombante. Ainsi, ce colossal combat, commencé à huit heures, était fini à dix. Toute cette épopée avait duré cent vingt minutes. Quelquefois une rapidité d’éclair est mêlée aux catastrophes. Les événements ont de ces raccourcis surprenants.

En y réfléchissant, c’est le contraire qui eût pu étonner; une résistance de deux heures d’un si petit nombre contre un si grand nombre était extraordinaire, et certes elle n’avait pas été courte, ni tout de suite finie, cette bataille de dix-neuf contre quatre mille.

Cependant il était temps de s’en aller, Halmalo devait être loin, et le marquis jugea qu’il n’était pas nécessaire de rester là plus longtemps. Il remit sa montre dans sa veste, non dans la même poche, car il venait de remarquer qu’elle y était en contact avec la clef de la porte de fer que lui avait rapportée l’Imânus, et que le verre de sa montre pouvait se briser contre cette clef; et il se disposa à gagner à son tour la forêt.

Comme il allait prendre à gauche, il lui sembla qu’une sorte de rayon vague pénétrait jusqu’à lui.

Il se retourna, et, à travers les broussailles nettement découpées sur un fond rouge et devenues tout à coup visibles dans leurs moindres détails, il aperçut une grande lueur dans le ravin. Il y marcha, puis se ravisa, trouvant inutile de s’exposer à cette clarté; quelle qu’elle fût, ce n’était pas son affaire après tout; il reprit la direction que lui avait montrée Halmalo et fit quelques pas vers la forêt.

Tout à coup, profondément enfoui et caché sous les ronces, il entendit sur sa tête un cri terrible; ce cri semblait partir du rebord même du plateau au-dessus du ravin. Le marquis leva les yeux, et s’arrêta.

LIVRE CINQUIEME

IN DAEMONE DEUS

I. TROUVÉS, MAIS PERDUS

Au moment où Michelle Fléchard avait aperçu la tour rougie par le soleil couchant, elle en était à plus d’une lieue. Elle qui pouvait à peine faire un pas, elle n’avait point hésité devant cette lieue à faire. Les femmes sont faibles, mais les mères sont fortes. Elle avait marché.

Le soleil s’était couché; le crépuscule était venu, puis l’obscurité profonde; elle avait entendu, marchant toujours, sonner au loin, à un clocher qu’on ne voyait pas, huit heures, puis neuf heures. Ce clocher était probablement celui de Parigné. De temps en temps elle s’arrêtait pour écouter des espèces de coups sourds, qui étaient peut-être un des fracas vagues de la nuit.

Elle avançait droit devant elle, cassant les ajoncs et les landes aiguës sous ses pieds sanglants. Elle était guidée par une faible clarté qui se dégageait du donjon lointain, le faisait saillir, et donnait dans l’ombre à cette tour un rayonnement mystérieux. Cette clarté devenait plus vive quand Les coups devenaient plus distincts, puis elle s’effaçait.

Le vaste plateau où cheminait Michelle Fléchard n’était qu’herbe et bruyère, sans une maison ni un arbre; il s’élevait insensiblement, et, à perte de vue, appuyait sa longue ligne droite et dure sur le sombre horizon étoilé. Ce qui la soutint dans cette montée, c’est qu’elle avait toujours la tour sous les yeux.

Elle la voyait grandir lentement. Les détonations étouffées et les lueurs pâles qui sortaient de la tour avaient, nous venons de le dire, des intermittences; elles s’interrompaient, puis reprenaient, proposant on ne sait quelle poignante énigme à la misérable mère en détresse.

Brusquement elles cessèrent; tout s’éteignit, bruit et clarté; il y eut un moment de plein silence, une sorte de paix lugubre se fit.

C’est en cet instant-là que Michelle Fléchard arriva au bord du plateau.

Elle aperçut à ses pieds un ravin dont le fond se perdait dans une blême épaisseur de nuit; à quelque distance, sur le haut du plateau, un enchevêtrement de roues, de talus et d’embrasures qui était une batterie de canons, et devant elle, confusément éclairé par les mèches allumées de la batterie, un énorme édifice qui semblait bâti avec des ténèbres plus noires que toutes les autres ténèbres qui l’entouraient.

Cet édifice se composait d’un pont dont les arches plongeaient dans le ravin, et d’une sorte de château qui s’élevait sur le pont, et le château et le pont s’appuyaient à une haute rondeur obscure, qui était la tour vers laquelle cette mère avait marché de si loin.

On voyait des clartés aller et venir aux lucarnes de la tour, et, à une rumeur qui en sortait, on la devinait pleine d’une foule d’hommes dont quelques silhouettes débordaient en haut jusque sur la plate-forme.

Il y avait près de la batterie un campement dont Michelle Fléchard distinguait les vedettes, mais, dans l’obscurité et dans les broussailles, elle n’en avait pas été aperçue.

Elle était parvenue au bord du plateau, si près du pont qu’il lui semblait presque qu’elle y pouvait toucher avec la main. La profondeur du ravin l’en séparait. Elle distinguait dans l’ombre les trois étages du château du pont.

Elle resta un temps quelconque, car les mesures du temps s’effaçaient dans son esprit, absorbée et muette devant ce ravin béant et cette bâtisse ténébreuse. Qu’était-ce que cela? Que se passait-il là? Etait-ce la Tourgue? Elle avait le vertige d’on ne sait quelle attente qui ressemblait à l’arrivée et au départ. Elle se demandait pourquoi elle était là.

Elle regardait, elle écoutait.

Subitement elle ne vit plus rien.

Un voile de fumée venait de monter entre elle et ce qu’elle regardait. Une âcre cuisson lui fit fermer les yeux. A peine avait-elle clos les paupières qu’elles s’empourprèrent et devinrent lumineuses. Elle les rouvrit.

Ce n’était plus la nuit qu’elle avait devant elle, c’était le jour; mais une espèce de jour funeste, le jour qui sort du feu. Elle avait sous les yeux un commencement d’incendie.

La fumée de noire était devenue écarlate, et une grande flamme était dedans; cette flamme apparaissait, puis disparaissait, avec ces torsions farouches qu’ont les éclairs et les serpents.

Cette flamme sortait comme une langue de quelque chose qui ressemblait à une gueule et qui était une fenêtre pleine de feu. Cette fenêtre, grillée de barreaux de fer déjà rouges, était une des croisées de l’étage inférieur du château construit sur le pont. De tout l’édifice on n’apercevait que cette fenêtre. La fumée couvrait tout, même le plateau, et l’on ne distinguait que le bord du ravin, noir sur la flamme vermeille.

Michelle Fléchard, étonnée, regardait. La fumée est nuage, le nuage est rêve; elle ne savait plus ce qu’elle voyait. Devait-elle fuir? Devait-elle rester? Elle se sentait presque hors du réel.

Un souffle de vent passa et fendit le rideau de fumée, et dans la déchirure la tragique bastille, soudainement démasquée, se dressa visible tout entière, donjon, pont, châtelet, éblouissante, horrible, avec la magnifique dorure de l’incendie, réverbéré sur elle de haut en bas. Michelle Fléchard put tout voir dans la netteté sinistre du feu.

L’étage inférieur du château bâti sur le pont brûlait.

Au-dessus on distinguait les deux autres étages encore intacts, mais comme portés par une corbeille de flammes. Du rebord du plateau, où était Michelle Fléchard, on en voyait vaguement l’intérieur à travers des interpositions de feu et de fumée. Toutes les fenêtres étaient ouvertes.

Par les fenêtres du second étage qui étaient très grandes, Michelle Fléchard apercevait, le long des murs, des armoires qui lui semblaient pleines de livres, et, devant une des croisées, à terre, dans la pénombre, un petit groupe confus, quelque chose qui avait l’aspect indistinct et amoncelé d’un nid ou d’une couvée, et qui lui faisait l’effet de remuer par moments.

Elle regardait cela.

Qu’était-ce que ce petit groupe d’ombre?

A de certains instants, il lui venait à l’esprit que cela ressemblait à des formes vivantes, elle avait la fièvre, elle n’avait pas mangé depuis le matin, elle avait marché sans relâche, elle était exténuée, elle se sentait dans une sorte d’hallucination dont elle se défiait instinctivement; pourtant ses yeux de plus en plus fixes ne pouvaient se détacher de cet obscur entassement d’objets quelconques, inanimés probablement, et en apparence inertes, qui gisait là sur le parquet de cette salle superposée à l’incendie.

Tout à coup le feu, comme s’il avait une volonté, allongea d’en bas un de ses jets vers le grand lierre mort qui couvrait précisément cette façade que Michelle Fléchard regardait. On eût dit que la flamme venait de découvrir ce réseau de branches sèches; une étincelle s’en empara avidement, et se mit à monter le long des sarments avec l’agilité affreuse des traînées de poudre. En un clin d’oeil, la flamme atteignit le second étage. Alors, d’en haut, elle éclaira l’intérieur du premier. Une vive lueur mit subitement en relief trois petits êtres endormis.

C’était un petit tas charmant, bras et jambes mêlés, paupières fermées, blondes têtes souriantes.

La mère reconnut ses enfants.

Elle jeta un cri effrayant.

Ce cri de l’inexprimable angoisse n’est donné qu’aux mères. Rien n’est plus farouche et rien n’est plus touchant. Quand une femme le jette, on croit entendre une louve; quand une louve le pousse, on croit entendre une femme.

Ce cri de Michelle Fléchard fut un hurlement. Hécube aboya, dit Homère.

C’était ce cri que le marquis de Lantenac venait d’entendre.

On a vu qu’il s’était arrêté.

Le marquis était entre l’issue du passage par où Halmalo l’avait fait échapper, et le ravin. A travers les broussailles entre-croisées sur lui, il vit le pont en flammes, la Tourgue rouge de la réverbération, et, par l’écartement de deux branches, il aperçut au-dessus de sa tête, de l’autre côté, sur le rebord du plateau, vis-à-vis du château brûlant et dans le plein jour de l’incendie, une figure hagarde et lamentable, une femme penchée sur le ravin.

C’était de cette femme qu’était venu ce cri.

Cette figure, ce n’était plus Michelle Fléchard, c’était Gorgone. Les misérables sont les formidables. La paysanne s’était transfigurée en Euménide. Cette villageoise quelconque, vulgaire, ignorante, inconsciente, venait de prendre brusquement les proportions épiques du désespoir. Les grandes douleurs sont une dilatation gigantesque de l’âme; cette mère, c’était la maternité; tout ce qui résume l’humanité est surhumain; elle se dressait là, au bord de ce ravin, devant cet embrasement, devant ce crime, comme une puissance sépulcrale; elle avait le cri de la bête et le geste de la déesse; sa face, d’où tombaient des imprécations, semblait un masque de flamboiement. Rien de souverain comme l’éclair de ses yeux noyés de larmes; son regard foudroyait l’incendie.

Le marquis écoutait. Cela tombait sur sa tête; il entendait on ne sait quoi d’inarticulé et de déchirant, plutôt des sanglots que des paroles.

— Ah! mon Dieu! mes enfants! Ce sont mes enfants! Au secours! au feu! au feu! au feu! Mais vous êtes donc des bandits! Est-ce qu’il n’y a personne là? Mais mes enfants vont brûler! Ah! voilà une chose! Georgette! mes enfants! Gros-Alain, René-Jean! Mais qu’est-ce que cela veut dire? Qui donc a mis mes enfants là? Ils dorment. Je suis folle! C’est une chose impossible. Au secours!

Cependant un grand mouvement se faisait dans la Tourgue et sur le plateau. Tout le camp accourait autour du feu qui venait d'éclater. Les assiégeants, après avoir eu affaire à la mitraille, avaient affaire à l'incendie. Gauvain, Cimourdain, Guéchamp donnaient des ordres. Que faire? Il y avait à peine quelques seaux d'eau à puiser dans le maigre ruisseau du ravin. L'angoisse allait croissant. Tout le rebord du plateau était couvert de visages effarés qui regardaient.

Ce qu'on voyait était effroyable.

On regardait, et l'on n'y pouvait rien.

La flamme, par le lierre qui avait pris feu, avait gagné l'étage d'en haut. Là elle avait trouvé le grenier plein de paille et elle s'y était précipitée. Tout le grenier brûlait maintenant. La flamme dansait; la joie de la flamme, chose lugubre. Il semblait qu'un souffle scélérat attisait ce bûcher. On eût dit que l'épouvantable Imânus tout entier était là changé en tourbillon d'étincelles, vivant de la vie meurtrière du feu, et que cette âme monstre s'était faite incendie.

L'étage de la bibliothèque n'était pas encore atteint, la hauteur de son plafond et l'épaisseur de ses murs retardaient l'instant où il prendrait feu, mais cette minute fatale approchait; il était léché par l'incendie du premier étage et caressé par celui du troisième. L'affreux baiser de la mort l'effleurait. En bas une cave de lave, en haut une voûte de braise; qu'un trou se fît au plancher, c'était l'écroulement dans la cendre rouge; qu'un trou se fît au plafond, c'était l'ensevelissement sous les charbons ardents. René-Jean, Gros-Alain et Georgette ne s'étaient pas encore réveillés, ils dormaient du sommeil profond et simple de l'enfance, et, à travers les plis de flamme et de fumée qui tour à tour couvraient et découvraient les fenêtres, on les apercevait dans cette grotte de feu, au fond d'une lueur de météore, paisibles, gracieux, immobiles, comme trois enfants-Jésus confiants endormis dans un enfer; et un tigre eût pleuré de voir ces roses dans cette fournaise et ces berceaux dans ce tombeau.

Cependant la mère se tordait les bras:

— Au feu! je crie au feu! on est donc des sourds qu'on ne vient pas! on me brûle mes enfants! arrivez donc, vous les hommes qui êtes là. Voilà des jours et des jours que je marche, et c'est comme ça que je les retrouve! Au feu! Au secours! des anges! dire que ce sont des anges! Qu'est-ce qu'ils ont fait, ces innocents-là! moi on m'a fusillée, eux on les brûle! Qui est-ce donc qui fait ces choses-là! Au secours! sauvez mes enfants! est-ce que vous ne m’entendez pas? Une chienne, on aurait pitié d’une chienne! Mes enfants! Mes enfants! ils dorment! Ah! Georgette! je vois son petit ventre à cet amour! René-Jean! Gros-Alain! c’est comme cela qu’ils s’appellent. Vous voyez bien que je suis leur mère. Ce qui se passe dans ce temps-ci est abominable. J’ai marché des jours et des nuits. Même que j’ai parlé ce matin à une femme. Au secours! au secours! au feu! On est donc des monstres! C’est une horreur! l’aîné n’a pas cinq ans, la petite n’a pas deux ans. Je vois leurs petites jambes nues. Ils dorment, bonne sainte Vierge! la main du ciel me les rend et la main de l’enfer me les reprend. Dire que j’ai tant marché! Mes enfants que j’ai nourris de mon lait! moi qui me croyais malheureuse de ne pas les retrouver! Ayez pitié de moi! Je veux mes enfants, il me faut mes enfants! C’est pourtant vrai qu’ils sont là dans le feu! Voyez mes pauvres pieds comme ils sont tout en sang. Au secours! Ce n’est pas possible qu’il y ait des hommes sur la terre et qu’on laisse ces pauvres petits mourir comme cela! au secours! à l’assassin! Des choses comme on n’en voit pas de pareilles. Ah! les brigands! Qu’est-ce que c’est que cette affreuse maison-là? On me les a volés pour me les tuer! Jésus misère! Je veux mes enfants. Oh! je ne sais pas ce que je ferais! Je ne veux pas qu’ils meurent! au secours! au secours! au secours! Oh! s’ils devaient mourir comme cela, je tuerais Dieu!

En même temps que la supplication terrible de la mère, des voix s’élevaient sur le plateau et dans le ravin:

— Une échelle!

— On n’a pas d’échelle!

— De l’eau!

— On n’a pas d’eau!

— Là-haut, dans la tour, au second étage, il y a une porte!

— Elle est en fer.

— Enfoncez-la!

— On ne peut pas.

Et la mère redoublait ses appels désespérés:

— Au feu! au secours! Mais dépêchez-vous donc! Alors, tuez-moi! Mes enfants! mes enfants! Ah! l’horrible feu! qu’on les en ôte, ou qu’on m’y jette!

Dans les intervalles de ces clameurs on entendait le pétillement tranquille de l’incendie.

Le marquis tâta sa poche et y toucha la clef de la porte de fer. Alors, se courbant sous la voûte par laquelle il s'était évadé, il rentra dans le passage d'où il venait de sortir.

II. DE LA PORTE DE PIERRE A LA PORTE DE FER

Toute une armée éperdue autour d’un sauvetage impossible; quatre mille hommes ne pouvant secourir trois enfants; telle était la situation.

On n’avait pas d’échelle en effet; l’échelle envoyée de Javené n’était pas arrivée; l’embrasement s’élargissait comme un cratère qui s’ouvre; essayer de l’éteindre avec le ruisseau du ravin presque à sec était dérisoire; autant jeter un verre d’eau sur un volcan.

Cimourdain, Guéchamp et Radoub étaient descendus dans le ravin; Gauvain était remonté dans la salle du deuxième étage de la Tourgue où étaient la pierre tournante, l’issue secrète et la porte de fer de la bibliothèque.

C’est là qu’avait été la mèche soufrée allumée par l’Imânus; c’était de là que l’incendie était parti.

Gauvain avait amené avec lui vingt sapeurs. Enfoncer la porte de fer, il n’y avait plus que cette ressource. Elle était effroyablement bien fermée.

On commença par des coups de hache. Les haches cassèrent. Un sapeur dit:

— L’acier est du verre sur ce fer-là.

La porte était en effet de fer battu, et faite de doubles lames boulonnées ayant chacune trois pouces d’épaisseur.

On prit des barres de fer et l’on essaya des pesées sous la porte. Les barres de fer cassèrent.

— Comme des allumettes, dit le sapeur.

Gauvain, sombre, murmura:

— Il n’y a qu’un boulet qui ouvrirait cette porte. Il faudrait pouvoir monter ici une pièce de canon.

— Et encore! dit le sapeur.

Il y eut un moment d’accablement. Tous ces bras impuissants s’arrêtèrent. Muets, vaincus, consternés, ces hommes considéraient l’horrible porte inébranlable. Une réverbération rouge passait par-dessous. Derrière, l’incendie croissait.

L’affreux cadavre de l’Imânus était là, sinistre victorieux.

Encore quelques minutes peut-être, et tout allait s’effondrer.

Que faire? Il n’y avait plus d’espérance.

Gauvain exaspéré s’écria, l’oeil fixé sur la pierre tournante du mur et sur l’issue ouverte de l’évasion:

— C’est pourtant par là que le marquis de Lantenac s’en est allé!

— Et qu’il revient, dit une voix.

Et une tête blanche se dessina dans l’encadrement de pierre de l’issue secrète.

C’était le marquis.

Depuis bien des années Gauvain ne l’avait pas vu de si près. Il recula.

Tous ceux qui étaient là restèrent dans l’attitude où ils étaient, pétrifiés.

Le marquis avait une grosse clef à la main, il refoula d’un regard altier quelques-uns des sapeurs qui étaient devant lui, marcha droit à la porte de fer, se courba sous la voûte et mit la clef dans la serrure. La serrure grinça, la porte s’ouvrit, on vit un gouffre de flamme, le marquis y entra.

Il y entra d’un pied ferme, la tête haute.

Tous le suivaient des yeux, frissonnants.

A peine le marquis eut-il fait quelques pas dans la salle incendiée que le parquet miné par le feu et ébranlé par son talon s’effondra derrière lui et mit entre lui et la porte un précipice. Le marquis ne tourna pas la tête et continua d’avancer. Il disparut dans la fumée.

On ne vit plus rien.

Avait-il pu aller plus loin? Une nouvelle fondrière de feu s’était-elle ouverte sous lui? N’avait-il réussi qu’à se perdre lui-même? On ne pouvait rien dire. On n’avait devant soi qu’une muraille de fumée et de flamme. Le marquis était au delà, mort ou vivant.

III. OU L’ON VOIT SE REVEILLER LES ENFANTS QU’ON A VUS SE RENDORMIR

Cependant les enfants avaient fini par ouvrir les yeux.

L’incendie, qui n’était pas encore entré dans la salle de la bibliothèque, jetait au plafond un reflet rose. Les enfants ne connaissaient pas cette espèce d’aurore-là. Ils la regardèrent. Georgette la contempla.

Toutes les splendeurs de l’incendie se déployaient; l’hydre noire et le dragon écarlate apparaissaient dans la fumée difforme, superbement sombre et vermeille. De longues flammèches s’envolaient au loin et rayaient l’ombre, et l’on eût dit des comètes combattantes, courant les unes après les autres. Le feu est une prodigalité; les brasiers sont pleins d’écrins qu’ils sèment au vent; ce n’est pas pour rien que le charbon est identique au diamant. Il s’était fait au mur du troisième étage des crevasses par où la braise versait dans le ravin des cascades de pierreries; les tas de paille et d’avoine qui brûlaient dans le grenier commençaient à ruisseler parles fenêtres en avalanches de poudre d’or, et les avoines devenaient des améthystes, et les brins de paille devenaient des escarboucles.

— Joli! dit Georgette.

Ils s’étaient dressés tous les trois.

— Ah! cria la mère, ils se réveillent!

René-Jean se leva, alors Gros-Alain se leva, alors Georgette se leva.

René-Jean étira ses bras, alla vers la croisée et dit:

— J’ai chaud.

— Ai chaud, répéta Georgette.

La mère les appela.

— Mes enfants! René! Alain! Georgette!

Les enfants regardaient autour d’eux. Ils cherchaient à comprendre. Où les hommes sont terrifiés, les enfants sont curieux. Qui s’étonne aisément s’effraye difficilement; l’ignorance contient de l’intrépidité. Les enfants ont si peu droit à l’enfer que, s’ils le voyaient, ils l’admireraient.

La mère répéta:

— René! Alain! Georgette!

René-Jean tourna la tête; cette voix le tira de sa distraction; les enfants ont la mémoire courte, mais ils ont le souvenir rapide; tout le passé est pour eux hier; René-Jean vit sa mère, trouva cela tout simple, et, entouré comme il l’était de choses étranges, sentant un vague besoin d’appui, il cria:

— Maman!

— Maman! dit Gros-Alain.

— M’man! dit Georgette.

Et elle tendit ses petits bras.

Et la mère hurla: — Mes enfants!

Tous les trois vinrent au bord de la fenêtre; par bonheur, l’embrasement n’était pas de ce côté-là.

— J’ai trop chaud, dit René-Jean.

Il ajouta:

— Ça brûle.

Et il chercha des yeux sa mère.

— Viens donc, maman!

— Don, m’man, répéta Georgette.

La mère échevelée, déchirée, saignante, s’était laissé rouler de broussaille en broussaille dans le ravin. Cimourdain y était avec Guéchamp, aussi impuissants en bas que Gauvain en haut. Les soldats, désespérés d’être inutiles, fourmillaient autour d’eux. La chaleur était insupportable, personne ne la sentait. On considérait l’escarpement du pont, la hauteur des arches, l’élévation des étages, les fenêtres inaccessibles, et la nécessité d’agir vite. Trois étages à franchir. Nul moyen d’arriver là. Radoub, blessé, un coup de sabre à l’épaule, une oreille arrachée, ruisselant de sueur et de sang, était accouru; il vit Michelle Fléchard.

— Tiens, dit-il, la fusillée, vous êtes donc ressuscitée!

— Mes enfants! dit la mère.

— C’est juste, répondit Radoub; nous n’avons pas le temps de nous occuper des revenants. Et il se mit à escalader le pont, essai inutile, il enfonça ses ongles dans la pierre, il grimpa quelques instants; mais les assises étaient lisses, pas une cassure, pas un relief, la muraille était aussi correctement rejointoyée qu’une muraille neuve, et Radoub retomba. L’incendie continuait, épouvantable; on apercevait, dans l’encadrement de la croisée toute rouge, les trois têtes blondes. Radoub, alors, montra le poing au ciel, comme s’il y cherchait quelqu’un du regard, et dit: C’est donc ça une conduite, bon Dieu! La mère embrassait à genoux les piles du pont en criant: Grâce!

De sourds craquements se mêlaient aux pétillements du brasier. Les vitres des armoires de la bibliothèque se fêlaient, et tombaient avec bruit. Il était évident que la charpente cédait. Aucune force humaine n'y pouvait rien. Encore un moment et tout allait s'abîmer. On n'attendait plus que la catastrophe. On entendait les petites voix répéter: Maman! maman! On était au paroxysme de l'effroi.

Tout à coup, à la fenêtre voisine de celle où étaient les enfants, sur le fond pourpre du flamboiement, une haute figure apparut.

Toutes les têtes se levèrent, tous les yeux devinrent fixes. Un homme était là-haut, un homme était dans la salle de la bibliothèque, un homme était dans la fournaise. Cette figure se découpait en noir sur la flamme, mais elle avait des cheveux blancs. On reconnut le marquis de Lantenac.

Il disparut, puis il reparut.

L'effrayant vieillard se dressa à la fenêtre maniant une énorme échelle. C'était l'échelle de sauvetage déposée dans la bibliothèque qu'il était allé chercher le long du mur et qu'il avait traînée jusqu'à la fenêtre. Il la saisit par une extrémité, et, avec l'agilité magistrale d'un athlète, il la fit glisser hors de la croisée, sur le rebord de l'appui extérieur jusqu'au fond du ravin. Radoub, en bas, éperdu, tendit les mains, reçut l'échelle, la serra dans ses bras, et cria:

— Vive la République!

Le marquis répondit: — Vive le Roi!

Et Radoub grommela: — Tu peux bien crier tout ce que tu voudras, et dire des bêtises si tu veux, tu es le bon Dieu.

L'échelle était posée; la communication était établie entre la salle incendiée et la terre; vingt hommes accoururent, Radoub en tête, et en un clin d'oeil ils s'étagèrent du haut en bas, adossés aux échelons, comme les maçons qui montent et qui descendent des pierres. Cela fit sur l'échelle de bois une échelle humaine. Radoub, au faîte de l'échelle, touchait à la fenêtre. Il était, lui, tourné vers l'incendie.

La petite armée, éparse dans les bruyères et sur les pentes, se pressait, bouleversée de toutes les émotions à la fois, sur le plateau, dans le ravin, sur la plate-forme de la tour.

Le marquis disparut encore, puis reparut, apportant un enfant.

Il y eut un immense battement de mains.

C'était le premier que le marquis avait saisi au hasard. C'était

Gros-Alain.

Gros-Alain criait: — J’ai peur.

Le marquis donna Gros-Alain à Radoub, qui le passa derrière lui et au-dessous de lui à un soldat qui le passa à un autre, et, pendant que Gros-Alain, très effrayé et criant, arrivait ainsi de bras en bras jusqu’au bas de l’échelle, le marquis, un moment absent, revint à la fenêtre avec René-Jean qui résistait et pleurait, et qui battit Radoub au moment où le marquis le passa au sergent.

Le marquis rentra dans la salle pleine de flammes. Georgette était restée seule. Il alla à elle. Elle sourit. Cet homme de granit sentit quelque chose d’humide lui venir aux yeux. Il demanda: — Comment t’appelles-tu?

— Orgette, dit-elle.

Il la prit dans ses bras, elle souriait toujours, et au moment où il la remettait à Radoub, cette conscience si haute et si obscure eut l’éblouissement de l’innocence, le vieillard donna à l’enfant un baiser.

— C’est la petite môme! dirent les soldats; et Georgette, à son tour, descendit de bras en bras jusqu’à terre parmi des cris d’adoration. On battait des mains, on trépignait; les vieux grenadiers sanglotaient, et elle leur souriait.

La mère était au pied de l’échelle, haletante, insensée, ivre de tout cet inattendu, jetée sans transition de l’enfer dans le paradis. L’excès de joie meurtrit le coeur à sa façon. Elle tendait les bras, elle reçut d’abord Gros-Alain, ensuite René-Jean, ensuite Georgette, elle les couvrit pêle-mêle de baisers, puis elle éclata de rire et tomba évanouie.

Un grand cri s’éleva:

— Tous sont sauvés!

Tous étaient sauvés, en effet, excepté le vieillard.

Mais personne n’y songeait, pas même lui peut-être.

Il resta quelques instants rêveur au bord de la fenêtre, comme s’il voulait laisser au gouffre de flamme le temps de prendre un parti. Puis sans se hâter, lentement, fièrement, il enjamba l’appui de la croisée, et, sans se retourner, droit, debout, adossé aux échelons, ayant derrière lui l’incendie, faisant face au précipice, il se mit à descendre l’échelle en silence avec une majesté de fantôme. Ceux qui étaient sur l’échelle se précipitèrent en bas, tous les assistants tressaillirent, il se fit autour de cet homme qui arrivait d’en haut un recul d’horreur sacré comme autour d’une vision. Lui, cependant, s’enfonçait gravement dans l’ombre qu’il avait devant lui; pendant qu’ils reculaient, il s’approchait d’eux; sa pâleur de marbre n’avait pas un pli, son regard de spectre n’avait pas un éclair; à chaque pas qu’il faisait vers ces hommes dont les prunelles effarées se fixaient sur lui dans les ténèbres, il semblait plus grand, l’échelle tremblait et sonnait sous son pied lugubre, et l’on eût dit la statue du commandeur redescendant dans le sépulcre.

Quand le marquis fut en bas, quand il eut atteint le dernier échelon et posé son pied à terre, une main s’abattit sur son collet. Il se retourna.

— Je t’arrête, dit Cimourdain.

— Je t’approuve, dit Lantenac.

LIVRE SIXIEME

C’EST APRES LA VICTOIRE QU’A LIEU LE COMBAT

I. LANTENAC PRIS

C’était dans le sépulcre en effet que le marquis était redescendu.

On l’emmena.

La crypte-oubliette du rez-de-chaussée de la Tourgue fut immédiatement rouverte sous l’oeil sévère de Cimourdain; on y mit une lampe, une cruche d’eau et un pain de soldat, on y jeta une botte de paille, et, moins d’un quart d’heure après la minute où la main du prêtre avait saisi le marquis, la porte du cachot se refermait sur Lantenac.

Cela fait, Cimourdain alla trouver Gauvain; en ce moment-là l’église lointaine de Parigné sonnait onze heures du soir; Cimourdain dit à Gauvain:

— Je vais convoquer la cour martiale. Tu n’en seras pas. Tu es Gauvain et Lantenac est Gauvain. Tu es trop proche parent pour être juge, et je blâme Egalité d’avoir jugé Capet. La cour martiale sera composée de trois juges, un officier, le capitaine, Guéchamp, un sous-officier, le sergent Radoub, et moi, qui présiderai. Rien de tout cela ne te regarde plus. Nous nous conformerons au décret de la Convention; nous nous bornerons à constater l’identité du ci-devant marquis de Lantenac. Demain la cour martiale, après-demain la guillotine. La Vendée est morte.

Gauvain ne répliqua pas une parole, et Cimourdain, préoccupé de la chose suprême qui lui restait à faire, le quitta. Cimourdain avait des heures à désigner et des emplacements à choisir. Il avait comme Lequinio à Granville, comme Tallien à Bordeaux, comme Châlier à Lyon, comme Saint-Just à Strasbourg, l’habitude, réputée de bon exemple, d’assister de sa personne aux exécutions; le juge venant voir travailler le bourreau; usage emprunté par la Terreur de 93 aux parlements de France et à l’inquisition d’Espagne.

Gauvain aussi était préoccupé.

Un vent froid soufflait de la forêt. Gauvain, laissant Guéchamp donner les ordres nécessaires, alla à sa tente qui était dans le pré de la lisière du bois, au pied de la Tourgue, et y prit son manteau à capuchon, dont il s’enveloppa. Ce manteau était bordé de ce simple galon qui, selon la mode républicaine, sobre d’ornements, désignait le commandant en chef. Il se mit à marcher dans ce pré sanglant où l’assaut avait commencé. Il était là seul. L’incendie continuait, désormais dédaigné; Radoub était près des enfants et de la mère, presque aussi maternel qu’elle; le châtelet du pont achevait de brûler, les sapeurs faisaient la part du feu, on creusait des fosses, on enterrait les morts, on pansait les blessés, on avait démoli la retirade, on désencombrait de cadavres les chambres et les escaliers, on nettoyait le lieu du carnage, on balayait le tas d'ordures terrible de la victoire, les soldats faisaient, avec la rapidité militaire, ce qu'on pourrait appeler le ménage de la bataille finie. Gauvain ne voyait rien de tout cela.

A peine jetait-il un regard, à travers sa rêverie, au poste de la brèche doublé sur l'ordre de Cimourdain.

Cette brèche, il la distinguait dans l'obscurité, à environ deux cents pas du coin de la prairie où il s'était comme réfugié. Il voyait cette ouverture noire. C'était par là que l'attaque avait commencé, il y avait trois heures de cela; c'était par là que lui Gauvain avait pénétré dans la tour; c'était là le rez-de-chaussée où était la retirade; c'était dans ce rez-de-haussée que s'ouvrait la porte du cachot où était le marquis. Ce poste de la brèche gardait ce cachot.

En même temps que son regard apercevait vaguement cette brèche, son oreille entendait confusément revenir, comme un glas qui tinte, ces paroles: Demain la cour martiale, après-demain la guillotine.

L'incendie, qu'on avait isolé et sur lequel les sapeurs lançaient toute l'eau qu'on avait pu se procurer, ne s'éteignait pas sans résistance et jetait des flammes intermittentes; on entendait par instants craquer les plafonds et se précipiter l'un sur l'autre les étages croulants; alors des tourbillons d'étincelles s'envolaient comme d'une torche secouée, une clarté d'éclair faisait visible l'extrême horizon, et l'ombre de la Tourgue, subitement gigantesque, s'allongeait jusqu'à la forêt.

Gauvain allait et venait à pas lents dans cette ombre et devant la brèche de l'assaut. Par moments il croisait ses deux mains derrière sa tête recouverte de son capuchon de guerre. Il songeait.

II. GAUVAIN PENSIF

Sa rêverie était insondable.

Un changement à vue inouï venait de se faire.

Le marquis de Lantenac s’était transfiguré.

Gauvain avait été témoin de cette transfiguration.

Jamais il n’aurait cru que de telles choses pussent résulter d’une complication d’incidents, quels qu’ils fussent. Jamais il n’aurait, même en rêve, imaginé qu’il pût arriver rien de pareil. L’imprévu, cet on ne sait quoi de hautain qui joue avec l’homme, avait saisi Gauvain et le tenait. Gauvain avait devant lui l’impossible devenu réel, visible, palpable, inévitable, inexorable.

Que pensait-il de cela, lui, Gauvain?

Il ne s’agissait pas de tergiverser; il fallait conclure.

Une question lui était posée; il ne pouvait prendre la fuite devant elle.

Posée par qui?

Par les événements.

Et pas seulement par les événements.

Car lorsque les événements, qui sont variables, nous font une question, la justice, qui est immuable, nous somme de répondre.

Derrière le nuage, qui nous jette son ombre, il y a l’étoile, qui nous jette sa clarté.

Nous ne pouvons pas plus nous soustraire à la clarté qu’à l’ombre.

Gauvain subissait un interrogatoire.

Il comparaissait devant quelqu’un.

Devant quelqu’un de redoutable.

Sa conscience.

Gauvain sentait tout vaciller en lui. Ses résolutions les plus solides, ses promesses les plus fermement faites, ses décisions les plus irrévocables, tout cela chancelait dans les profondeurs de sa volonté.

Il y a des tremblements d’âme.

Plus il réfléchissait à ce qu’il venait de voir, plus il était bouleversé.

Gauvain, républicain, croyait être, et était, dans l’absolu. Un absolu supérieur venait de se révéler.

Au-dessus de l’absolu révolutionnaire, il y a l’absolu humain.

Ce qui se passait ne pouvait être éludé; le fait était grave; Gauvain faisait partie de ce fait; il en était; il ne pouvait s'en retirer; et, bien que Cimourdain lui eût dit: — «Cela ne te regarde plus,» — il sentait en lui quelque chose comme ce qu'éprouve l'arbre au moment où on l'arrache de sa racine.

Tout homme a une base; un ébranlement à cette base cause un trouble profond; Gauvain sentait ce trouble.

Il pressait sa tête dans ses deux mains, comme pour en faire jaillir la vérité. Préciser une telle situation n'était pas facile; simplifier le complexe, rien de plus malaisé; il avait devant lui de redoutables chiffres dont il fallait faire le total; faire l'addition de la destinée, quel vertige! Il l'essayait; il tâchait de se rendre compte; il s'efforçait de rassembler ses idées, de discipliner les résistances qu'il sentait en lui, et de récapituler les faits.

Il se les exposait à lui-même.

A qui n'est-il pas arrivé de se faire un rapport, et de s'interroger, dans une circonstance suprême, sur l'itinéraire à suivre, soit pour avancer, soit pour reculer?

Gauvain venait d'assister à un prodige.

En même temps que le combat terrestre, il y avait eu un combat céleste.

Le combat du bien contre le mal.

Un coeur effrayant venait d'être vaincu.

Etant donné l'homme avec tout ce qui est mauvais en lui, la violence, l'erreur, l'aveuglement, l'opiniâtreté malsaine, l'orgueil, l'égoïsme, Gauvain venait de voir un miracle.

La victoire de l'humanité sur l'homme.

L'humanité avait vaincu l'inhumain.

Et par quel moyen? de quelle façon? comment avait-elle terrassé un colosse de colère et de haine? quelles armes avait-elle employées? quelle machine de guerre? Le berceau.

Un éblouissement venait de passer sur Gauvain. En pleine guerre sociale, en pleine conflagration de toutes les inimitiés et de toutes les vengeances, au moment le plus obscur et le plus furieux du tumulte, à l'heure où le crime donnait toute sa flamme et la haine toutes ses ténèbres, à cet instant des luttes où tout devient projectile, où la mêlée est si funèbre qu'on ne sait plus où est le juste, où est l'honnête, où est le vrai; brusquement, l'Inconnu, l'avertisseur mystérieux des âmes, venait de faire resplendir, au-dessus des clartés et des noirceurs humaines, la grande lueur éternelle.

Au-dessus du sombre duel entre le faux et le relatif, dans les profondeurs, la face de la vérité avait tout à coup apparu.

Subitement la force des faibles était intervenue.

On avait vu trois pauvres êtres, à peine nés, inconscients, abandonnés, souriants, ayant contre eux la guerre civile, le talion, l’affreuse logique des représailles, le meurtre, le carnage, le fratricide, la rage, la rancune, toutes les gorgones, triompher; on avait vu l’avortement et la défaite d’un infâme incendie, chargé de commettre un crime; on avait vu les préméditations atroces déconcertées et déjouées; on avait vu l’antique férocité féodale, le vieux dédain inexorable, la prétendue expérience des nécessités de la guerre, la raison d’état, tous les arrogants partis-pris de la vieillesse farouche, s’évanouir devant le bleu regard de ceux qui n’ont pas vécu; et c’est tout simple, car celui qui n’a pas vécu encore n’a pas fait le mal, il est la justice, il est la vérité, il est la blancheur, et les immenses anges du ciel sont dans les petits enfants.

Spectacle utile; conseil; leçon; les combattants frénétiques de la guerre sans merci avaient soudainement vu, en face de tous les forfaits, de tous les attentats, de tous les fanatismes, de l’assassinat, de la vengeance attisant les bûchers, de la mort arrivant une torche à la main, au-dessus de l’énorme légion des crimes, se dresser cette toute-puissance, l’innocence.

Et l’innocence avait vaincu.

Et l’on pouvait dire: Non, la guerre civile n’existe pas, la barbarie n’existe pas, la haine n’existe pas, le crime n’existe pas, les ténèbres n’existent pas; pour dissiper ces spectres, il suffit de cette aurore, l’enfance.

Jamais, dans aucun combat, Satan n’avait été plus visible, ni Dieu.

Ce combat avait eu pour arène une conscience.

La conscience de Lantenac.

Maintenant il recommençait, plus acharné et plus décisif encore peut-être, dans une autre conscience.

La conscience de Gauvain.

Quel champ de bataille que l’homme!

Nous sommes livrés à ces dieux, à ces monstres, à ces géants, nos pensées.

Souvent ces belligérants terribles foulent aux pieds notre âme.

Gauvain méditait.

Le marquis de Lantenac, cerné, bloqué, condamné, mis hors la loi, serré, comme la bête dans le cirque, comme le clou dans la tenaille, enfermé dans son gîte devenu sa prison, étreint de toutes parts par une muraille de fer et de feu, était parvenu à se dérober. Il avait fait ce miracle d'échapper. Il avait réussi ce chef-d'oeuvre, le plus difficile de tous dans une telle guerre, la fuite. Il avait repris possession de la forêt pour s'y retrancher, du pays pour y combattre, de l'ombre pour y disparaître. Il était redevenu le redoutable allant et venant, l'errant sinistre, le capitaine des invisibles, le chef des hommes souterrains, le maître des bois. Gauvain avait la victoire, mais Lantenac avait la liberté. Lantenac désormais avait la sécurité, la course illimitée devant lui, le choix inépuisable des asiles. Il était insaisissable, introuvable, inaccessible. Le lion avait été pris au piège, et il en était sorti.

Eh bien, il y était rentré.

Le marquis de Lantenac avait volontairement, spontanément de sa pleine préférence, quitté la forêt, l'ombre, la sécurité, la liberté, pour rentrer dans le plus effroyable péril, intrépidement, une première fois, Gauvain l'avait vu, en se précipitant dans l'incendie au risque de s'y engouffrer, une deuxième fois, en descendant cette échelle qui le rendait à ses ennemis, et qui, échelle de sauvetage pour les autres, était pour lui échelle de perdition.

Et pourquoi avait-il fait cela?

Pour sauver trois enfants.

Et maintenant qu'allait-on en faire de cet homme?

Le guillotiner.

Ainsi, cet homme, pour trois enfants, les siens? non; de sa famille? non; de sa caste? non; pour trois petits pauvres, les premiers venus, des enfants trouvés, des inconnus, des déguenillés, des va-nu-pieds, ce gentilhomme, ce prince, ce vieillard, sauvé, délivré, vainqueur, car l'évasion est un triomphe, avait tout risqué, tout compromis, tout remis en question, et, hautainement, en même temps qu'il rendait les enfants, il avait apporté sa tête, et cette tête, jusqu'alors terrible, maintenant auguste, il l'avait offerte.

Et qu'allait-on faire?

L'accepter.

Le marquis de Lantenac avait eu le choix entre la vie d'autrui et la sienne; dans cette option superbe, il avait choisi sa mort.

Et on allait la lui accorder.

On allait le tuer.

Quel salaire de l'héroïsme!

Répondre à un acte généreux par un acte sauvage!

Donner ce dessous à la révolution!

Quel rapetissement pour la république!

Tandis que l’homme des préjugés et des servitudes, subitement transformé, rentrait dans l’humanité, eux, les hommes de la délivrance et de l’affranchissement, ils resteraient dans la guerre civile, dans la routine du sang, dans le fratricide!

Et la haute loi divine de pardon, d’abnégation, de rédemption, de sacrifice, existerait pour les combattants de l’erreur, et n’existerait pas pour les soldats de la vérité!

Quoi! ne pas lutter de magnanimité! se résigner à cette défaite, étant les plus forts, d’être les plus faibles, étant les victorieux, d’être les meurtriers, et de faire dire qu’il y a, du côté de la monarchie, ceux qui sauvent les enfants, et du côté de la république, ceux qui tuent les vieillards!

On verrait ce grand soldat, cet octogénaire puissant, ce combattant désarmé, volé plutôt que pris, saisi en pleine bonne action, garrotté avec sa permission, ayant encore au front la sueur d’un dévouement grandiose, monter les marches de l’échafaud comme on monte les degrés d’une apothéose! Et l’on mettrait sous le couperet cette tête, autour de laquelle voleraient suppliantes les trois âmes des petits anges sauvés! et, devant ce supplice infamant pour les bourreaux, on verrait le sourire sur la face de cet homme, et sur la face de la république la rougeur!

Et cela s’accomplirait en présence de Gauvain, chef! Et pouvant l’empêcher, il s’abstiendrait! Et il se contenterait de ce congé altier, — cela ne te regarde plus! — Et il ne se dirait point qu’en pareil cas, abdication, c’est complicité! Et il ne s’apercevrait pas que, dans une action si énorme, entre celui qui fait et celui qui laisse faire, celui qui laisse faire est le pire, étant le lâche!

Mais cette mort, ne l’avait-il pas promise? lui, Gauvain, l’homme clément, n’avait-il pas déclaré que Lantenac faisait exception à la clémence, et qu’il livrerait Lantenac à Cimourdain?

Cette tête, il la devait. Eh bien, il la payait. Voilà tout.

Mais était-ce bien la même tête?

Jusqu’ici Gauvain n’avait vu dans Lantenac que le combattant barbare, le fanatique de royauté et de féodalité, le massacreur de prisonniers, l’assassin déchaîné par la guerre, l’homme sanglant. Cet homme-là, il ne le craignait pas; ce proscripteur, il le proscrirait; cet implacable le trouverait implacable. Rien de plus simple, le chemin était tracé et lugubrement facile à suivre, tout était prévu, on tuera celui qui tue, on était dans la ligne droite de l’horreur. Inopinément, cette ligne droite s’était rompue, un tournant imprévu révélait un horizon nouveau, une métamorphose avait eu lieu. Un Lantenac inattendu entrait en scène. Un héros sortait du monstre; plus qu’un héros, un homme. Plus qu’une âme, un coeur. Ce n’était plus un tueur que Gauvain avait devant lui, mais un sauveur. Gauvain était terrassé par un flot de clarté céleste. Lantenac venait de le frapper d’un coup de foudre de bonté.

Et Lantenac transfiguré ne transfigurerait pas Gauvain! Quoi! ce coup de lumière serait sans contre-coup! L’homme du passé irait en avant, et l’homme de l’avenir en arrière! L’homme des barbaries et des superstitions ouvrirait des ailes subites, et planerait, et regarderait ramper sous lui, dans de la fange et dans de la nuit, l’homme de l’idéal! Gauvain resterait à plat ventre dans la vieille ornière féroce, tandis que Lantenac irait dans le sublime courir les aventures!

Autre chose encore.

Et la famille!

Ce sang qu’il allait répandre, — car le laisser verser, c’est le verser soi-même, — est-ce que ce n’était pas son sang, à lui Gauvain? Son grand-père était mort, mais son grand-oncle vivait; et ce grand-oncle, c’était le marquis de Lantenac. Est-ce que celui des deux frères qui était dans le tombeau ne se dresserait pas pour empêcher l’autre d’y entrer? Est-ce qu’il n’ordonnerait pas à son petit-fils de respecter désormais cette couronne de cheveux blancs, soeur de sa propre auréole? Est-ce qu’il n’y avait pas là, entre Gauvain et Lantenac, le regard indigné d’un spectre?

Est-ce donc que la révolution avait pour but de dénaturer l’homme? Est-ce pour briser la famille, est-ce pour étouffer l’humanité, qu’elle était faite? Loin de là. C’est pour affirmer ces réalités suprêmes, et non pour les nier, que 89 avait surgi. Renverser les bastilles, c’est délivrer l’humanité; abolir la féodalité, c’est fonder la famille. L’auteur étant le point de départ de l’autorité, et l’autorité étant incluse dans l’auteur, il n’y a point d’autre autorité que la paternité; de là la légitimité de la reine-abeille qui crée son peuple, et qui, étant mère, est reine; de là l’absurdité du roi-homme, qui, n’étant pas le père, ne peut être le maître; de là la suppression du roi; de là la république. Qu’est-ce que tout cela? C’est la famille, c’est l’humanité, c’est la révolution. La révolution, c’est l’avènement des peuples; et, au fond, le Peuple, c’est l’Homme.

Il s’agissait de savoir si, quand Lantenac venait de rentrer dans l’humanité, Gauvain, allait, lui, rentrer dans la famille.

Il s’agissait de savoir si l’oncle et le neveu allaient se rejoindre dans la lumière supérieure, ou bien si à un progrès de l’oncle répondrait un recul du neveu.

La question, dans ce débat pathétique de Gauvain avec sa conscience, arrivait à se poser ainsi, et la solution semblait se dégager d’elle-même: sauver Lantenac.

Oui, mais la France?

Ici le vertigineux problème changeait de face brusquement.

Quoi! la France était aux abois! la France était livrée, ouverte, démantelée! elle n’avait plus de fossé, l’Allemagne passait le Rhin; elle n’avait plus de muraille, l’Italie enjambait les Alpes et l’Espagne les Pyrénées. Il lui restait le grand abîme, l’Océan. Elle avait pour elle le gouffre. Elle pouvait s’y adosser, et, géante, appuyée à toute la mer, combattre toute la terre. Situation, après tout, inexpugnable. Eh bien non, cette situation allait lui manquer. Cet Océan n’était plus à elle. Dans cet Océan, il y avait l’Angleterre. L’Angleterre, il est vrai, ne savait comment passer. Eh bien, un homme allait lui jeter le pont, un homme allait lui tendre la main, un homme allait dire à Pitt, à Craig, à Cornwallis, à Dundas, aux pirates: venez! un homme allait crier: Angleterre, prends la France! Et cet homme était le marquis de Lantenac.

Cet homme, on le tenait. Après trois mois de chasse, de poursuite, d’acharnement, on l’avait enfin saisi. La main de la révolution venait de s’abattre sur le maudit; le poing crispé de 93 avait pris le meurtrier royaliste au collet; par un de ces effets de la préméditation mystérieuse qui se mêle d’en haut aux choses humaines, c’était dans son propre cachot de famille que ce parricide attendait maintenant son châtiment; l’homme féodal était dans l’oubliette féodale; les pierres de son château se dressaient contre lui et se fermaient sur lui, et celui qui voulait livrer son pays était livré par sa maison. Dieu avait visiblement édifié tout cela; l’heure juste avait sonné; la révolution avait fait prisonnier cet ennemi public; il ne pouvait plus combattre, il ne pouvait plus lutter, il ne pouvait plus nuire; dans cette Vendée où il y avait tant de bras, il était le seul cerveau; lui fini, la guerre civile était finie; on l’avait; dénouement tragique et heureux; après tant de massacres et de carnages, il était là, l’homme qui avait tué, et c’était son tour de mourir.

Et il se trouverait quelqu’un pour le sauver!

Cimourdain, c’est-à-dire 93, tenait Lantenac, c’est-à-dire la monarchie, et il se trouverait quelqu’un pour ôter de cette serre de bronze cette proie! Lantenac, l’homme en qui se concentrait cette gerbe de fléaux qu’on nomme le passé, le marquis de Lantenac était dans la tombe, la lourde porte éternelle s’était refermée sur lui, et quelqu’un viendrait, du dehors, tirer le verrou! ce malfaiteur social était mort, et avec lui la révolte, la lutte fratricide, la guerre bestiale, et quelqu’un le ressusciterait!

Oh! comme cette tête de mort rirait!

Comme ce spectre dirait: c’est bon, me voilà vivant, imbéciles!

Comme il se remettrait à son oeuvre hideuse! Comme Lantenac se replongerait, implacable et joyeux, dans le gouffre de haine et de guerre! comme on reverrait, dès le lendemain, les maisons brûlées, les prisonniers massacrés, les blessés achevés, les femmes fusillées!

Et après tout, cette action qui fascinait Gauvain, Gauvain ne se l’exagérait-il pas?

Trois enfants étaient perdus; Lantenac les avait sauvés.

Mais qui donc les avait perdus?

N’était-ce pas Lantenac?

Qui avait mis ces berceaux dans cet incendie?

N’était-ce pas l’Imânus?

Qu’était-ce que l’Imânus?

Le lieutenant du marquis.

Le responsable, c’est le chef.

Donc l’incendiaire et l’assassin, c’était Lantenac.

Qu’avait-il donc fait de si admirable?

Il n’avait point persisté, rien de plus.

Après avoir construit le crime, il avait reculé devant. Il s’était fait horreur à lui-même. Le cri de la mère avait réveillé en lui ce fond de vieille pitié humaine, sorte de dépôt de la vie universelle, qui est dans toutes les âmes, même les plus fatales. A ce cri, il était revenu sur ses pas.

De la nuit où il s’enfonçait, il avait rétrogradé vers le jour. Après avoir fait le crime, il l’avait défait. Tout son mérite était ceci: n’avoir pas été un monstre jusqu’au bout.

Et pour si peu, lui rendre tout! lui rendre l’espace, les champs, les plaines, l’air, le jour, lui rendre la forêt dont il userait pour le banditisme, lui rendre la liberté dont il userait pour la servitude, lui rendre la vie dont il userait pour la mort!

Quant à essayer de s'entendre avec lui, quant à vouloir traiter avec cette âme altière, quant à lui proposer sa délivrance sous condition, quant à lui demander s'il consentirait, moyennant la vie sauve, à s'abstenir désormais de toute hostilité et de toute révolte; quelle faute ce serait qu'une telle offre, quel avantage on lui donnerait, à quel dédain on se heurterait, comme il souffletterait la question par la réponse! comme il dirait: Gardez les hontes pour vous. Tuez-moi!

Rien à faire en effet avec cet homme, que le tuer ou le délivrer. Cet homme était à pic: il était toujours prêt à s'envoler ou à se sacrifier; il était à lui-même son aigle et son précipice. Ame étrange.

Le tuer? quelle anxiété! le délivrer? quelle responsabilité!

Lantenac sauvé, tout serait à recommencer avec la Vendée comme avec l'hydre tant que la tête n'est pas coupée. En un clin d'oeil, et avec une course de météore, toute la flamme, éteinte par la disparition de cet homme, se rallumerait. Lantenac ne se reposerait pas tant qu'il n'aurait point réalisé ce plan exécrable, poser, comme un couvercle de tombe, la monarchie sur la république et l'Angleterre sur la France. Sauver Lantenac, c'était sacrifier la France; la vie de Lantenac, c'était la mort d'une foule d'êtres innocents, hommes, femmes, enfants, repris par la guerre domestique; c'était le débarquement des Anglais, le recul de la révolution, les villes saccagées, le peuple déchiré, la Bretagne sanglante, la proie rendue à la griffe. Et Gauvain, au milieu de toutes sortes de lueurs incertaines et de clartés en sens contraires, voyait vaguement s'ébaucher dans sa rêverie et se poser devant lui ce problème: la mise en liberté du tigre.

Et puis, la question reparaissait sous son premier aspect; la pierre de Sisyphe, qui n'est pas autre chose que la querelle de l'homme avec lui-même, retombait: Lantenac, était-ce donc le tigre?

Peut-être l'avait-il été; mais l'était-il encore? Gauvain subissait ces spirales vertigineuses de l'esprit revenant sur lui-même, qui font la pensée pareille à la couleuvre. Décidément, même après examen, pouvait-on nier le dévouement de Lantenac, son abnégation stoïque, son désintéressement superbe? Quoi! en présence de toutes les gueules de la guerre civile ouvertes, attester l'humanité! quoi! dans le conflit des vérités inférieures, apporter la vérité supérieure! quoi! Prouver qu'au-dessus des royautés, au-dessus des révolutions, au-dessus des questions terrestres, il y a l'immense attendrissement de l'âme humaine, la protection due aux faibles par les forts, le salut dû à ceux qui sont perdus par ceux qui sont sauvés, la paternité due à tous les enfants par tous les vieillards! Prouver ces choses magnifiques, et les prouver par le don de sa tête! Quoi! être un général et renoncer à la stratégie, à la bataille, à la revanche! Quoi! être un royaliste, prendre une balance, mettre dans un plateau le roi de France, une monarchie de quinze siècles, les vieilles lois à rétablir, l'antique société à restaurer, et dans l'autre, trois petits paysans quelconques, et trouver le roi, le trône, le sceptre et les quinze siècles de monarchie légers, pesés à ce poids de trois innocences! quoi! tout cela ne serait rien! quoi! celui qui a fait cela resterait le tigre et devrait être traité en bête fauve! non! non! non! ce n'était pas un monstre l'homme qui venait d'illuminer de la clarté d'une action divine le précipice des guerres civiles! le porte-glaive s'était métamorphosé en porte-lumière. L'infernal Satan était redevenu le Lucifer céleste. Lantenac s'était racheté de toutes ses barbaries par un acte de sacrifice; en se perdant matériellement il s'était sauvé moralement; il s'était refait innocent; il avait signé sa propre grâce. Est-ce que le droit de se pardonner à soi-même n'existe pas? Désormais il était vénérable.

Lantenac venait d'être extraordinaire. C'était maintenant le tour de

Gauvain.

Gauvain était chargé de lui donner la réplique.

La lutte des passions bonnes et des passions mauvaises faisait en ce moment sur le monde le chaos; Lantenac, dominant ce chaos, venait d'en dégager l'humanité; c'était à Gauvain maintenant d'en dégager la famille.

Qu'allait-il faire?

Gauvain allait-il tromper la confiance de Dieu?

Non. Et il balbutiait en lui-même: — Sauvons Lantenac.

Alors c'est bien. Va, fais les affaires des Anglais. Déserte. Passe à l'ennemi. Sauve Lantenac et trahis la France.

Et il frémissait.

Ta solution n'en est pas une, ô songeur! — Gauvain voyait dans l'ombre le sinistre sourire du sphinx.

Cette situation était une sorte de carrefour redoutable où les vérités combattantes venaient aboutir et se confronter, et où se regardaient fixement les trois idées suprêmes de l'homme, l'humanité, la famille, la patrie.

Chacune de ces voix prenait à son tour la parole, et chacune à son tour disait vrai. Comment choisir? chacune à son tour semblait trouver le joint de sagesse et de justice, et disait: Fais cela. Etait-ce cela qu’il fallait faire? Oui. Non. Le raisonnement disait une chose; le sentiment en disait une autre; les deux conseils étaient contraires. Le raisonnement n’est que la raison; le sentiment est souvent la conscience; l’un vient de l’homme, l’autre de plus haut.

C’est ce qui fait que le sentiment a moins de clarté et plus de puissance.

Quelle force pourtant dans la raison sévère!

Gauvain hésitait.

Perplexités farouches.

Deux abîmes s’ouvraient devant Gauvain. Perdre le marquis? ou le sauver? Il fallait se précipiter dans l’un ou dans l’autre.

Lequel de ces deux gouffres était le devoir?

III. LE CAPUCHON DU CHEF

C’est au devoir en effet qu’on avait affaire.

Le devoir se dressait; sinistre devant Cimourdain, formidable devant Gauvain.

Simple devant l’un; multiple, divers, tortueux, devant l’autre. Minuit sonna, puis une heure du matin.

Gauvain s’était, sans s’en apercevoir, insensiblement rapproché de l’entrée de la brèche.

L’incendie ne jetait plus qu’une réverbération diffuse et s’éteignait.

Le plateau, de l’autre côté de la tour, en avait le reflet, et devenait visible par instants, puis s’éclipsait, quand la fumée couvrait le feu. Cette lueur, ravivée par soubresauts et coupée d’obscurités subites, disproportionnait les objets et donnait aux sentinelles du camp des aspects de larves. Gauvain, à travers sa méditation, considérait vaguement ces effacements de la fumée par le flamboiement et du flamboiement par la fumée. Ces apparitions et ces disparitions de la clarté devant ses yeux avaient on ne sait quelle analogie avec les apparitions et les disparitions de la vérité dans son esprit.

Soudain, entre deux tourbillons de fumée une flammèche envolée du brasier décroissant éclaira vivement le sommet du plateau et y fit saillir la silhouette vermeille d’une charrette. Gauvain regarda cette charrette; elle était entourée de cavaliers qui avaient des chapeaux de gendarme. Il lui sembla que c’était la charrette que la longue-vue de Guéchamp lui avait fait voir à l’horizon, quelques heures auparavant, au moment où le soleil se couchait. Des hommes étaient sur la charrette et avaient l’air occupés à la décharger. Ce qu’ils retiraient de la charrette paraissait pesant, et rendait par moments un son de ferraille; il eût été difficile de dire ce que c’était; cela ressemblait à des charpentes; deux d’entre eux descendirent et posèrent à terre une caisse qui, à en juger par sa forme, devait contenir un objet triangulaire. La flammèche s’éteignit, tout rentra dans les ténèbres; Gauvain, l’oeil fixe, demeura pensif devant ce qu’il y avait là dans l’obscurité.

Des lanternes s’étaient allumées, on allait et venait sur le plateau, mais les formes qui se mouvaient étaient confuses, et d’ailleurs Gauvain d’en bas, et de l’autre côté du ravin, ne pouvait voir que ce qui était tout à fait sur le bord du plateau.

Des voix parlaient, mais on ne percevait pas les paroles. Çà et là, des chocs sonnaient sur du bois. On entendait aussi on ne sait quel grincement métallique pareil au bruit d'une faulx qu'on aiguise.

Deux heures sonnèrent.

Gauvain lentement, et comme quelqu'un qui ferait volontiers deux pas en avant et trois pas en arrière, se dirigea vers la brèche. A son approche, reconnaissant dans la pénombre le manteau et le capuchon galonné du commandant, la sentinelle présenta les armes. Gauvain pénétra dans la salle du rez-de-chaussée, transformée en corps de garde. Une lanterne était pendue à la voûte. Elle éclairait juste assez pour qu'on pût traverser la salle sans marcher sur les hommes du poste, gisant à terre sur de la paille, et la plupart endormis.

Ils étaient couchés là; ils s'y étaient battus quelques heures auparavant; la mitraille, éparse sous eux en grains de fer et de plomb, et mal balayée, les gênait un peu pour dormir; mais ils étaient fatigués, et ils se reposaient. Cette salle avait été le lieu horrible; là on avait attaqué; là on avait rugi, hurlé, grincé, frappé, tué, expiré; beaucoup des leurs étaient tombés morts sur ce pavé où ils se couchaient assoupis; cette paille qui servait à leur sommeil buvait le sang de leurs camarades; maintenant c'était fini, le sang était étanché, les sabres étaient essuyés, les morts étaient morts; eux ils dormaient paisibles. Telle est la guerre. Et puis, demain, tout le monde aura le même sommeil.

A l'entrée de Gauvain, quelques-uns de ces hommes assoupis se levèrent, entre autres l'officier qui commandait le poste. Gauvain lui désigna la porte du cachot:

— Ouvrez-moi, dit-il.

Les verrous furent tirés, la porte s'ouvrit.

Gauvain entra dans le cachot.

La porte se referma derrière lui.

LIVRE SEPTIÈME

FÉODALITÉ ET RÉVOLUTION

I. L’ANCÊTRE

Une lampe était posée sur la dalle de la crypte, à côté du soupirail carré de l’oubliette.

On apercevait aussi sur la dalle la cruche pleine d’eau, le pain de munition et la botte de paille. La crypte étant taillée dans le roc, le prisonnier qui eût eu la fantaisie de mettre le feu à la paille eût perdu sa peine; aucun risque d’incendie pour la prison, certitude d’asphyxie pour le prisonnier.

A l’instant où la porte tourna sur ses gonds, le marquis marchait dans son cachot; va-et-vient machinal propre à tous les fauves mis en cage.

Au bruit que fit la porte en s’ouvrant puis en se refermant, il leva la tête, et la lampe qui était à terre entre Gauvain et le marquis éclaira ces deux hommes en plein visage.

Ils se regardèrent, et ce regard était tel qu’il les fit tous deux immobiles.

Le marquis éclata de rire et s’écria:

— Bonjour, monsieur. Voilà pas mal d’années que je n’ai eu la bonne fortune de vous rencontrer. Vous me faites la grâce de venir me voir. Je vous remercie. Je ne demande pas mieux que de causer un peu. Je commençais à m’ennuyer. Vos amis perdent le temps, des constatations d’identité, des cours martiales, c’est long toutes ces manières-là. J’irais plus vite en besogne. Je suis ici chez moi. Donnez-vous la peine d’entrer. Eh bien, qu’est-ce que vous dites de tout ce qui se passe? C’est original, n’est-ce pas? Il y avait une fois un roi et une reine; le roi, c’était le roi; la reine, c’était la France. On a tranché la tête au roi et marié la reine à Robespierre; ce monsieur et cette dame ont eu une fille qu’on nomme la guillotine, et avec laquelle il paraît que je ferai connaissance demain matin. J’en serai charmé. Comme de vous voir. Venez-vous pour cela? Avez-vous monté en grade? Seriez-vous le bourreau? Si c’est une simple visite d’amitié, j’en suis touché. Monsieur le vicomte, vous ne savez peut-être plus ce que c’est qu’un gentilhomme. Eh bien, en voilà un; c’est moi. Regardez ça. C’est curieux; ça croit en Dieu, ça croit à la tradition, ça croit à la famille, ça croit à ses aïeux, ça croit à l’exemple de son père, à la fidélité, à la loyauté, au devoir envers son prince, au respect des vieilles lois, à la vertu, à la justice; et ça vous ferait fusiller avec plaisir. Ayez, je vous prie, la bonté de vous asseoir. Sur le pavé, c’est vrai; car il n’y a pas de fauteuil dans ce salon; mais qui vit dans la boue peut s’asseoir par terre. Je ne dis pas cela pour vous offenser, car ce que nous appelons la boue, vous l'appelez la nation. Vous n'exigez sans doute pas que je crie Liberté, Egalité, Fraternité? Ceci est une ancienne chambre de ma maison; jadis les seigneurs y mettaient les manants; maintenant les manants y mettent les seigneurs. Ces niaiseries-là se nomment une révolution. Il paraît qu'on me coupera le cou d'ici à trente-six heures. Je n'y vois pas d'inconvénient. Par exemple, si l'on était poli, on m'aurait envoyé ma tabatière, qui est là-haut dans la chambre des miroirs, où vous avez joué tout enfant et où je vous ai fait sauter sur mes genoux. Monsieur, je vais vous apprendre une chose, vous vous appelez Gauvain, et, chose bizarre, vous avez du sang noble dans les veines, pardieu, le même sang que le mien, et ce sang qui fait de moi un homme d'honneur fait de vous un gueusard. Telles sont les particularités. Vous me direz que ce n'est pas votre faute. Ni la mienne. Parbleu, on est un malfaiteur sans le savoir. Cela tient à l'air qu'on respire; dans des temps comme les nôtres, on n'est pas responsable de ce qu'on fait, la révolution est coquine pour tout le monde; et tous vos grands criminels sont de grands innocents. Quelles buses! A commencer par vous. Souffrez que je vous admire. Oui, j'admire un garçon tel que vous, qui, homme de qualité, bien situé dans l'état, ayant un grand sang à répandre pour les grandes causes, vicomte de cette Tour-Gauvain, prince de Bretagne, pouvant être duc par droit et pair de France par héritage, ce qui est à peu près tout ce que peut désirer ici-bas un homme de bon sens, s'amuse, étant ce qu'il est, à être ce que vous êtes, si bien qu'il fait à ses ennemis l'effet d'un scélérat et à ses amis l'effet d'un imbécile. A propos, faites mes compliments à monsieur l'abbé Cimourdain.

Le marquis parlait à son aise, paisiblement, sans rien souligner, avec sa voix de bonne compagnie, avec son il clair et tranquille, les deux mains dans ses goussets. Il s'interrompit, respira longuement, et reprit:

— Je ne vous cache pas que j'ai fait ce que j'ai pu pour vous tuer. Tel que vous me voyez, j'ai trois fois, moi-même, en personne, pointé un canon sur vous. Procédé discourtois, je l'avoue; mais ce serait faire fond sur une mauvaise maxime que de s'imaginer qu'en guerre l'ennemi cherche à nous être agréable. Car nous sommes en guerre, monsieur mon neveu. Tout est à feu et à sang. C'est pourtant vrai qu'on a tué le roi. Joli siècle.

Il s'arrêta encore, puis poursuivit:

— Quand on pense que rien de tout cela ne serait arrivé si l'on avait pendu Voltaire et mis Rousseau aux galères! Ah! les gens d'esprit, quel fléau! Ah çà, qu'est-ce que vous lui reprochez à cette monarchie? c'est vrai, on envoyait l’abbé Pucelle à son abbaye de Corbigny, en lui laissant le choix de la voiture et tout le temps qu’il voudrait pour faire le chemin; et quant à votre monsieur Titon, qui avait été, s’il vous plaît, un fort débauché, et qui allait chez les filles avant d’aller aux miracles du diacre Pâris, on le transférait du château de Vincennes au château de Ham en Picardie, qui est, j’en conviens, un assez vilain endroit. Voilà les griefs; je m’en souviens; j’ai crié aussi dans mon temps; j’ai été aussi bête que vous.

Le marquis tâta sa poche comme s’il y cherchait sa tabatière, et continua:

— Mais pas aussi méchant. On parlait pour parler. Il y avait aussi la mutinerie des enquêtes et des requêtes; et puis ces messieurs les philosophes sont venus, on a brûlé les écrits au lieu de brûler les auteurs, les cabales de la cour s’en sont mêlées; il y a eu tous ces benêts, Turgot, Quesnay, Malesherbes, les physiocrates, et caetera, et le grabuge a commencé. Tout est venu des écrivailleurs et des rimailleurs. L’Encyclopédie! Diderot! d’Alembert! Ah! les méchants bélîtres! Un homme bien né comme ce roi de Prusse, avoir donné là-dedans! Moi, j’eusse supprimé tous les gratteurs de papier. Ah! nous étions des justiciers, nous autres. On peut voir ici, sur le mur, la marque des roues d’écartèlement. Nous ne plaisantions pas. Non, non, point d’écrivassiers! Tant qu’il y aura des Arouet, il y aura des Marat. Tant qu’il y aura des grimauds qui griffonnent, il y aura des gredins qui assassinent; tant qu’il y aura de l’encre, il y aura de la noirceur; tant que la patte de l’homme tiendra la plume de l’oie, les sottises frivoles engendreront les sottises atroces. Les livres font les crimes. Le mot chimère a deux sens, il signifie rêve, et il signifie monstre. Comme on se paye de billevesées! Qu’est-ce que vous nous chantez avec nos droits? Droits de l’homme! droits du peuple! Cela est-il assez creux, assez stupide, assez imaginaire, assez vide de sens! Moi, quand je dis: Havoise, soeur de Conan II, apporta le comté de Bretagne à Hoël, comte de Nantes et de Cornouailles, qui laissa le trône à Alain Fergant, oncle de Berthe, qui épousa Alain le Noir, seigneur de la Roche-sur-Yon, et en eut Conan le Petit, aïeul de Guy ou Gauvain de Thouars, notre ancêtre, je dis une chose claire, et voilà un droit. Mais vos drôles, vos marauds, vos croquants, qu’appellent-ils leurs droits? Le déicide et le régicide. Si ce n’est pas hideux! Ah! les maroufles! J’en suis fâché pour vous, monsieur; mais vous êtes de ce fier sang de Bretagne; vous et moi, nous avons Gauvain de Thouars pour grand-père; nous avons encore pour aïeul ce grand duc de Montbazon qui fut pair de France et honoré du collier des ordres, qui attaqua le faubourg de Tours et fut blessé au combat d'Arques, et qui mourut grand-veneur de France en sa maison de Couzières en Touraine, âgé de quatre-vingt-six ans. Je pourrais vous parler encore du duc de Laudunois, fils de la dame de la Garnache, de Claude de Lorraine, duc de Chevreuse, et de Henri de Lenoncourt, et de Françoise de Laval-Boisdauphin. Mais à quoi bon? Monsieur a l'honneur d'être un idiot, et il tient à être l'égal de mon palefrenier. Sachez ceci, j'étais déjà un vieil homme que vous étiez encore un marmot. Je vous ai mouché, morveux, et je vous moucherai encore. En grandissant, vous avez trouvé moyen de vous rapetisser. Depuis que nous ne nous sommes vus, nous sommes allés chacun de notre côté, moi du côté de l'honnêteté, vous du côté opposé. Ah! je ne sais pas comment tout cela finira; mais messieurs vos amis sont de fiers misérables. Ah! oui, c'est beau, j'en tombe d'accord, les progrès sont superbes, on a supprimé dans l'armée la peine de la chopine d'eau infligée trois jours consécutifs au soldat ivrogne; on a le maximum, la Convention, l'évêque Gobel, monsieur Chaumette et monsieur Hébert, et l'on extermine en masse tout le passé, depuis la Bastille jusqu'à l'almanach. On remplace les saints par les légumes. Soit, messieurs les citoyens, soyez les maîtres, régnez, prenez vos aises, donnez-vous-en, ne vous gênez pas. Tout cela n'empêchera point que la religion ne soit la religion, que la royauté n'emplisse quinze cents ans de notre histoire, et que la vieille seigneurie française, même décapitée, ne soit plus haute que vous. Quant à vos chicanes sur le droit historique des races royales, nous en haussons les épaules. Chilpéric, au fond, n'était qu'un moine appelé Daniel; ce fut Rainfroy qui inventa Chilpéric pour ennuyer Charles Martel; nous savons ces choses-là aussi bien que vous. Ce n'est pas la question. La question est ceci: être un grand royaume; être la vieille France, être ce pays d'arrangement magnifique, où l'on considère premièrement la personne sacrée des monarques, seigneurs absolus de l'état, puis les princes, puis les officiers de la couronne, pour les armes sur terre et sur mer, pour l'artillerie, direction et surintendance des finances. Ensuite il y a la justice souveraine et subalterne, suivie du maniement des gabelles et recettes générales, et enfin la police du royaume dans ses trois ordres. Voilà qui était beau et noblement ordonné; vous l'avez détruit. Vous avez détruit les provinces, comme de lamentables ignorants que vous êtes, sans même vous douter de ce que c'était que les provinces. Le génie de la France est composé du génie même du continent, et chacune des provinces de France représentait une vertu de l’Europe; la franchise de l’Allemagne était en Picardie, la générosité de la Suède en Champagne, l’industrie de la Hollande en Bourgogne, l’activité de la Pologne en Languedoc, la gravité de l’Espagne en Gascogne, la sagesse de l’Italie en Provence, la subtilité de la Grèce en Normandie, la fidélité de la Suisse en Dauphiné. Vous ne saviez rien de tout cela; vous avez cassé, brisé, fracassé, démoli, et vous avez été tranquillement des bêtes brutes. Ah! vous ne voulez plus avoir de nobles! Eh bien, vous n’en aurez plus. Faites-en votre deuil. Vous n’aurez plus de paladins, vous n’aurez plus de héros. Bonsoir les grandeurs anciennes. Trouvez-moi un d’Assas à présent! Vous avez tous peur pour votre peau. Vous n’aurez plus les chevaliers de Fontenoy qui saluaient avant de tuer, vous n’aurez plus les combattants en bas de soie du siège de Lérida; vous n’aurez plus de ces fières journées militaires où les panaches passaient comme des météores; vous êtes un peuple fini; vous subirez ce viol, l’invasion; si Alaric II revient, il ne trouvera plus en face de lui Clovis; si Abdérame revient, il ne trouvera plus en face de lui Charles Martel; si les Saxons reviennent, ils ne trouveront plus devant eux Pépin; vous n’aurez plus Agnadel, Rocroy, Lens, Staffarde, Nerwinde, Steinkerque, la Marsaille, Raucoux, Lawfeld, Mahon; vous n’aurez plus Marignan avec François Ier; vous n’aurez plus Bouvines avec Philippe-Auguste faisant prisonnier, d’une main, Renaud, comte de Boulogne, et de l’autre, Ferrand, comte de Flandre. Vous aurez Azincourt, mais vous n’aurez plus pour s’y faire tuer, enveloppé de son drapeau, le sieur de Bacqueville, le grand porte-oriflamme! Allez! Allez! faites! Soyez les hommes nouveaux. Devenez petits!

Le marquis fit un moment silence, et repartit:

— Mais laissez-nous grands. Tuez les rois, tuez les nobles, tuez les prêtres, abattez, ruinez, massacrez, foulez tout aux pieds, mettez les maximes antiques sous le talon de vos bottes, piétinez le trône, trépignez l’autel, écrasez Dieu, dansez dessus! c’est votre affaire. Vous êtes des traîtres et des lâches, incapables de dévouement et de sacrifice. J’ai dit. Maintenant faites-moi guillotiner, monsieur le vicomte. J’ai l’honneur d’être votre très humble.

Et il ajouta:

— Ah! je vous dis vos vérités! Qu’est-ce que cela me fait? Je suis mort.

— Vous êtes libre, dit Gauvain.

Et Gauvain s’avança vers le marquis, défit son manteau de commandant, le lui jeta sur les épaules, et lui rabattit le capuchon sur les yeux. Tous deux étaient de même taille.

— Eh bien, qu’est-ce que tu fais? dit le marquis.

Gauvain éleva la voix et cria:

— Lieutenant, ouvrez-moi.

La porte s’ouvrit.

Gauvain cria:

— Vous aurez soin de refermer la porte derrière moi.

Et il poussa dehors le marquis stupéfait.

La salle basse, transformée en corps de garde, avait, on s’en souvient, pour tout éclairage, une lanterne de corne qui faisait tout voir trouble, et donnait plus de nuit que de jour. Dans cette lueur confuse, ceux des soldats qui ne dormaient pas virent marcher au milieu d’eux, se dirigeant vers la sortie, un homme de haute stature ayant le manteau et le capuchon galonné de commandant en chef; ils firent le salut militaire, et l’homme passa.

Le marquis, lentement, traversa le corps de garde, traversa la brèche, non sans s’y heurter la tête plus d’une fois, et sortit.

La sentinelle, croyant voir Gauvain, lui présenta les armes.

Quand il fut dehors, ayant sous ses pieds l’herbe des champs, à deux cents pas de la forêt, et devant lui l’espace, la nuit, la liberté, la vie, il s’arrêta et demeura un moment immobile comme un homme qui s’est laissé faire, qui a cédé à la surprise, et qui, ayant profité d’une porte ouverte, cherche s’il a bien ou mal agi, hésite avant d’aller plus loin, et donne audience à une dernière pensée. Après quelques secondes de rêverie attentive, il leva sa main droite, fit claquer son médius contre son pouce et dit: Ma foi!

Et il s’en alla.

II. LA COUR MARTIALE

La porte du cachot s’était refermée. Gauvain était dedans.

Tout alors dans les cours martiales était à peu près discrétionnaire. Dumas, à l’Assemblée législative, avait esquissé une ébauche de législation militaire, retravaillée plus tard par Talot au conseil des Cinq-Cents, mais le code définitif des conseils de guerre n’a été rédigé que sous l’empire. C’est de l’empire que date, par parenthèse, l’obligation imposée aux tribunaux militaires de ne recueillir les votes qu’en commençant par le grade inférieur. Sous la révolution cette loi n’existait pas.

En 1793, le président d’un tribunal militaire était presque à lui seul tout le tribunal; il choisissait les membres, classait l’ordre des grades, réglait le mode du vote; il était le maître en même temps que le juge.

Cimourdain avait désigné, pour prétoire de la cour martiale, cette salle même du rez-de-chaussée où avait été la retirade et où était maintenant le corps de garde. Il tenait à tout abréger, le chemin de la prison au tribunal et le trajet du tribunal à l’échafaud.

A midi, conformément à ses ordres, la cour était en séance avec l’apparat que voici: trois chaises de paille, une table de sapin, deux chandelles allumées, un tabouret devant la table.

Les chaises étaient pour les juges et le tabouret pour l’accusé. Aux deux bouts de la table il y avait deux autres tabourets, l’un pour le commissaire-auditeur qui était un fourrier, l’autre pour le greffier qui était un caporal.

Il y avait sur la table un bâton de cire rouge, le sceau de la République en cuivre, deux écritoires, des dossiers de papier blanc, et deux affiches imprimées, étalées toutes grandes ouvertes, contenant l’une, la mise hors la loi, l’autre, le décret de la Convention.

La chaise du milieu était adossée à un faisceau de drapeaux tricolores; dans ces temps de rude simplicité, un décor était vite posé, et il fallait peu de temps pour changer un corps de garde en cour de justice.

La chaise du milieu, destinée au président, faisait face à la porte du cachot.

Pour public, les soldats.

Deux gendarmes gardaient la sellette.

Cimourdain était assis sur la chaise du milieu, ayant à sa droite le capitaine Guéchamp, premier juge, et à sa gauche le sergent Radoub, deuxième juge.

Il avait sur la tête son chapeau à panache tricolore, à son côté son sabre, dans sa ceinture ses deux pistolets. Sa balafre, qui était d'un rouge vif, ajoutait à son air farouche.

Radoub avait fini par se faire panser. Il avait autour de la tête un mouchoir sur lequel s'élargissait lentement une plaque de sang.

A midi, l'audience n'était pas encore ouverte, une estafette, dont on entendait dehors piaffer le cheval, était debout près de la table du tribunal. Cimourdain écrivait. Il écrivait ceci:

«Citoyens membres du Comité de salut public.

«Lantenac est pris. Il sera exécuté demain.»

Il data et signa, plia et cacheta la dépêche, et la remit à l'estafette, qui partit.

Cela fait, Cimourdain dit d'une voix haute:

— Ouvrez le cachot.

Les deux gendarmes tirèrent les verrous, ouvrirent le cachot, et y entrèrent.

Cimourdain leva la tête, croisa les bras, regarda la porte, et cria:

— Amenez le prisonnier.

Un homme apparut entre les deux gendarmes, sous le cintre de la porte ouverte.

C'était Gauvain.

Cimourdain eut un tressaillement.

— Gauvain! s'écria-t-il.

Et il reprit:

— Je demande le prisonnier.

— C'est moi, dit Gauvain.

— Toi?

— Moi.

— Et Lantenac?

— Il est libre.

— Libre!

— Oui.

— Evadé?

— Evadé.

Cimourdain balbutia avec un tremblement:

— En effet, ce château est à lui, il en connaît toutes les issues, l’oubliette communique peut-être à quelque sortie, j’aurais dû y songer, il aura trouvé moyen de s’enfuir, il n’aura eu besoin pour cela de l’aide de personne.

— Il a été aidé, dit Gauvain.

— A s’évader?

— A s’évader.

— Qui l’a aidé?

— Moi.

— Toi!

— Moi.

— Tu rêves!

— Je suis entré dans le cachot, j’étais seul avec le prisonnier, j’ai ôté mon manteau, je le lui ai mis sur le dos, je lui ai rabattu le capuchon sur le visage, il est sorti à ma place et je suis resté à la sienne. Me voici.

— Tu n’as pas fait cela!

— Je l’ai fait.

— C’est impossible.

— C’est réel.

— Amenez-moi Lantenac!

— Il n’est plus ici. Les soldats, lui voyant le manteau de commandant, l’ont pris pour moi et l’ont laissé passer. Il faisait encore nuit.

— Tu es fou.

— Je dis ce qui est.

Il y eut un silence. Cimourdain bégaya:

— Alors tu mérites…

— La mort, dit Gauvain.

Cimourdain était pâle comme une tête coupée. Il était immobile comme un homme sur qui vient de tomber la foudre. Il semblait ne plus respirer. Une grosse goutte de sueur perla sur son front.

Il raffermit sa voix et dit:

— Gendarmes, faites asseoir l’accusé.

Gauvain se plaça sur le tabouret.

Cimourdain reprit:

— Gendarmes, tirez vos sabres.

C’était la formule usitée quand l’accusé était sous le poids d’une sentence capitale.

Les gendarmes tirèrent leurs sabres.

La voix de Cimourdain avait repris son accent ordinaire.

— Accusé, dit-il, levez-vous.

Il ne tutoyait plus Gauvain.

III. LES VOTES

Gauvain se leva.

— Comment vous nommez-vous? demanda Cimourdain.

Gauvain répondit:

— Gauvain.

Cimourdain continua l’interrogatoire.

— Qui êtes-vous?

— Je suis commandant en chef de la colonne expéditionnaire des Côtes-du-Nord.

— Etes-vous parent ou allié de l’homme évadé?

— Je suis son petit-neveu.

— Vous connaissez le décret de la Convention?

— J’en vois l’affiche sur votre table.

— Qu’avez-vous à dire sur ce décret?

— Que je l’ai contresigné, que j’en ai ordonné l’exécution, et que c’est moi qui ai fait faire cette affiche au bas de laquelle est mon nom.

— Faites choix d’un défenseur.

— Je me défendrai moi-même.

— Vous avez la parole.

Cimourdain était redevenu impassible. Seulement son impassibilité ressemblait moins au calme d’un homme qu’à la tranquillité d’un rocher.

Gauvain demeura un moment silencieux et comme recueilli.

Cimourdain reprit:

— Qu’avez-vous à dire pour votre défense?

Gauvain leva lentement la tête, ne regarda personne, et répondit:

— Ceci: une chose m’a empêché d’en voir une autre; une bonne action, vue de trop près, m’a caché cent actions criminelles; d’un côté un vieillard, de l’autre des enfants, tout cela s’est mis entre moi et le devoir. J’ai oublié les villages incendiés, les champs ravagés, les prisonniers massacrés, les blessés achevés, les femmes fusillées, j’ai oublié la France livrée à l’Angleterre; j’ai mis en liberté le meurtrier de la patrie. Je suis coupable. En parlant ainsi, je semble parler contre moi; c’est une erreur. Je parle pour moi. Quand le coupable reconnaît sa faute, il sauve la seule chose qui vaille la peine d’être sauvée, l’honneur.

— Est-ce là, repartit Cimourdain, tout ce que vous avez à dire pour votre défense?

— J'ajoute qu'étant le chef, je devais l'exemple, et qu'à votre tour, étant les juges, vous le devez.

— Quel exemple demandez-vous?

— Ma mort.

— Vous la trouvez juste?

— Et nécessaire.

— Asseyez-vous.

Le fourrier, commissaire-auditeur, se leva et donna lecture, premièrement, de l'arrêté qui mettait hors la loi le ci-devant marquis de Lantenac; deuxièmement, du décret de la Convention édictant la peine capitale contre quiconque favoriserait l'évasion d'un rebelle prisonnier. Il termina par les quelques lignes imprimées au bas du décret, intimant défense «de porter aide et secours» au rebelle susnommé «sous peine de mort», et signées: le commandant en chef de la colonne expéditionnaire, GAUVAIN.

Ces lectures faites, le commissaire-auditeur se rassit.

Cimourdain croisa les bras et dit:

— Accusé, soyez attentif. Public, écoutez, regardez, et taisez-vous. Vous avez devant vous la loi. Il va être procédé au vote. La sentence sera rendue à la majorité simple. Chaque juge opinera à son tour, à haute voix, en présence de l'accusé, la justice n'ayant rien à cacher.

Cimourdain continua:

— La parole est au premier juge. Parlez, capitaine Guéchamp.

Le capitaine Guéchamp ne semblait voir ni Cimourdain, ni Gauvain. Ses paupières abaissées cachaient ses yeux immobiles fixés sur l'affiche du décret et la considérant comme on considérerait un gouffre.

Il dit:

— La loi est formelle. Un juge est plus et moins qu'un homme; il est moins qu'un homme, car il n'a pas de cœur; il est plus qu'un homme, car il a le glaive. L'an 414 de Rome, Manlius fit mourir son fils pour le crime d'avoir vaincu sans son ordre. La discipline violée voulait une expiation. Ici, c'est la loi qui a été violée; et la loi est plus haute encore que la discipline. Par suite d'un accès de pitié, la patrie est remise en danger. La pitié peut avoir les proportions d'un crime. Le commandant Gauvain a fait évader le rebelle Lantenac. Gauvain est coupable. Je vote la mort.

— Ecrivez, greffier, dit Cimourdain.

Le greffier écrivit: «Capitaine Guéchamp: la mort.»

Gauvain éleva la voix.

— Guéchamp, dit-il, vous avez bien voté, et je vous remercie.

Cimourdain reprit:

— La parole est au deuxième juge. Parlez, sergent Radoub.

Radoub se leva, se tourna vers Gauvain et fit à l'accusé le salut militaire. Puis il s'écria:

— Si c'est ça, alors, guillotinez-moi, car j'en donne ici ma nom de Dieu de parole d'honneur la plus sacrée, je voudrais avoir fait, d'abord ce qu'a fait le vieux, et ensuite ce qu'a fait mon commandant. Quand j'ai vu cet individu de quatre-vingts ans se jeter dans le feu pour en tirer les trois mioches, j'ai dit: Bonhomme, tu es un brave homme! Et quand j'apprends que c'est mon commandant qui a sauvé ce vieux de votre bête de guillotine, mille noms de noms, je dis: Mon commandant, vous devriez être mon général, et vous êtes un vrai homme, et moi, tonnerre! je vous donnerais la croix de Saint-Louis, s'il y avait encore des croix, s'il y avait encore des saints, et s'il y avait encore des louis! Ah çà! est-ce qu'on va être des imbéciles, à présent? Si c'est pour des choses comme ça qu'on a gagné la bataille de Jemmapes, la bataille de Valmy, la bataille de Fleurus et la bataille de Wattignies, alors il faut le dire. Comment! voilà le commandant Gauvain qui depuis quatre mois mène toutes ces bourriques de royalistes tambour battant, et qui sauve la république à coups de sabre, et qui a fait la chose de Dol où il fallait joliment de l'esprit, et, quand vous avez cet homme-là, vous tâchez de ne plus l'avoir! et, au lieu d'en faire votre général, vous voulez lui couper le cou! je dis que c'est à se jeter la tête la première par-dessus le parapet du Pont-Neuf, et que vous-même, citoyen Gauvain, mon commandant, si, au lieu d'être mon général, vous étiez mon caporal, je vous dirais que vous avez dit de fichues bêtises tout à l'heure. Le vieux a bien fait de sauver les enfants, vous avez bien fait de sauver le vieux, et si l'on guillotine les gens parce qu'ils ont fait de bonnes actions, alors va-t'en à tous les diables, je ne sais plus du tout de quoi il est question. Il n'y a plus de raison pour qu'on s'arrête. C'est pas vrai, n'est-ce pas, tout ça? Je me pince pour savoir si je suis éveillé. Je ne comprends pas. Il fallait donc que le vieux laisse brûler les mômes tout vifs, il fallait donc que mon commandant laisse couper le cou au vieux. Tenez, oui, guillotinez-moi. J'aime autant ça. Une supposition, les mioches seraient morts, le bataillon du Bonnet-Rouge était déshonoré. Est-ce que c’est ça qu’on voulait? Alors mangeons-nous les uns les autres. Je me connais en politique aussi bien que vous qui êtes là, j’étais du club de la section des Piques. Sapristi! nous nous abrutissons à la fin! Je résume ma façon de voir. Je n’aime pas les choses qui ont l’inconvénient de faire qu’on ne sait plus du tout où on en est. Pourquoi diable nous faisons-nous tuer? Pour qu’on nous tue notre chef! Pas de ça, Lisette. Je veux mon chef! Il me faut mon chef! Je l’aime encore mieux aujourd’hui qu’hier. L’envoyer à la guillotine, mais vous me faites rire! Tout ça, nous n’en voulons pas. J’ai écouté. On dira tout ce qu’on voudra. D’abord, pas possible.

Et Radoub se rassit. Sa blessure s’était rouverte. Un filet de sang qui sortait du bandeau coulait le long de son cou, de l’endroit où avait été son oreille.

Cimourdain se tourna vers Radoub.

— Vous votez pour que l’accusé soit absous?

— Je vote, dit Radoub, pour qu’on le fasse général.

— Je vous demande si vous votez pour qu’il soit acquitté.

— Je vote pour qu’on le fasse le premier de la république.

— Sergent Radoub, votez-vous pour que le commandant Gauvain soit acquitté, oui ou non?

— Je vote pour qu’on me coupe la tête à sa place.

— Acquittement, dit Cimourdain. Ecrivez, greffier.

Le greffier écrivit: «Sergent Radoub: acquittement.»

Puis le greffier dit:

— Une voix pour la mort. Une voix pour l’acquittement. Partage.

C’était à Cimourdain de voter.

Il se leva. Il ôta son chapeau et le posa sur la table.

Il n’était plus pâle ni livide. Sa face était couleur de terre.

Tous ceux qui étaient là eussent été couchés dans des suaires que le silence n’eût pas été plus profond.

Cimourdain dit d’une voix grave, lente et ferme:

— Accusé Gauvain, la cause est entendue. Au nom de la république, la cour martiale, à la majorité de deux voix contre une….

Il s’interrompit, il eut comme un temps d’arrêt; hésitait-il devant la mort? hésitait-il devant la vie? toutes les poitrines étaient haletantes. Cimourdain continua:

— … Vous condamne à la peine de mort.

Son visage exprimait la torture du triomphe sinistre. Quand Jacob dans les ténèbres se fit bénir par l’ange qu’il avait terrassé, il devait avoir ce sourire effrayant.

Ce ne fut qu’une lueur, et cela passa. Cimourdain redevint de marbre, se rassit, remit son chapeau sur sa tête, et ajouta:

— Gauvain, vous serez exécuté demain, au lever du soleil.

Gauvain se leva, salua et dit:

— Je remercie la cour.

— Emmenez le condamné, dit Cimourdain.

Cimourdain fit un signe, la porte du cachot se rouvrit, Gauvain y entra, le cachot se referma. Les deux gendarmes restèrent en faction des deux côtés de la porte, le sabre nu.

On emporta Radoub, qui venait de tomber sans connaissance.

IV. APRÈS CIMOURDAIN JUGE, CIMOURDAIN MAITRE

Un camp, c’est un guêpier. En temps de révolution surtout. L’aiguillon civique, qui est dans le soldat, sort volontiers et vite, et ne se gêne pas pour piquer le chef après avoir chassé l’ennemi. La vaillante troupe qui avait pris la Tourgue eut des bourdonnements variés, d’abord contre le commandant Gauvain quand on apprit l’évasion de Lantenac. Lorsqu’on vit Gauvain sortir du cachot où l’on croyait tenir Lantenac, ce fut comme une commotion électrique, et en moins d’une minute tout le corps fut informé. Un murmure éclata dans la petite armée, ce premier murmure fut: — Ils sont en train de juger Gauvain. Mais c’est pour la frime. Fiez-vous donc aux ci-devant et aux calotins! Nous venons de voir un vicomte qui sauve un marquis, et nous allons voir un prêtre qui absout un noble! — Quand on sut la condamnation de Gauvain, il y eut un deuxième murmure: — Voilà qui est fort! notre chef, notre brave chef, notre jeune commandant, un héros! C’est un vicomte, eh bien, il n’en a que plus de mérite à être républicain! Comment! lui, le libérateur de Pontorson, de Villedieu, de Pont-au-Beau! le vainqueur de Dol et de la Tourgue! celui par qui nous sommes invincibles! celui qui est l’épée de la république dans la Vendée! l’homme qui depuis cinq mois tient tête aux chouans et répare toutes les sottises de Léchelle et des autres! ce Cimourdain ose le condamner à mort! pourquoi? parce qu’il a sauvé un vieillard qui avait sauvé trois enfants! un prêtre tuer un soldat! —

Ainsi grondait le camp victorieux et mécontent. Une sombre colère entourait Cimourdain. Quatre mille hommes contre un seul, il semble que ce soit une force; ce n’en est pas une. Ces quatre mille hommes étaient une foule, et Cimourdain était une volonté. On savait que Cimourdain fronçait aisément le sourcil, et il n’en fallait pas davantage pour tenir l’armée en respect. Dans ces temps sévères, il suffisait que l’ombre du Comité de salut public fût derrière un homme pour faire cet homme redoutable et pour faire aboutir l’imprécation au chuchotement et le chuchotement au silence. Avant comme après les murmures, Cimourdain restait l’arbitre du sort de Gauvain comme du sort de tous. On savait qu’il n’y avait rien à lui demander et qu’il n’obéirait qu’à sa conscience, voix surhumaine entendue de lui seul. Tout dépendait de lui. Ce qu’il avait fait comme juge martial, seul, il pouvait le défaire comme délégué civil. Seul il pouvait faire grâce. Il avait pleins pouvoirs; d'un signe il pouvait mettre Gauvain en liberté; il était le maître de la vie et de la mort; il commandait à la guillotine. En ce moment tragique, il était l'homme suprême.

On ne pouvait qu'attendre.

La nuit vint.

V. LE CACHOT

La salle de justice était redevenue corps de garde; le poste était doublé comme la veille; deux factionnaires gardaient la porte du cachot fermée.

Vers minuit, un homme, qui tenait une lanterne à la main, traversa le corps de garde, se fit reconnaître et se fit ouvrir le cachot.

C’était Cimourdain.

Il entra et la porte resta entr’ouverte derrière lui.

Le cachot était ténébreux et silencieux. Cimourdain fit un pas dans cette obscurité, posa la lanterne à terre, et s’arrêta. On entendait dans l’ombre la respiration égale d’un homme endormi. Cimourdain écouta, pensif, ce bruit paisible.

Gauvain était au fond du cachot, sur la botte de paille. C’était son souffle qu’on entendait. Il dormait profondément.

Cimourdain s’avança avec le moins de bruit possible, vint tout près et se mit à regarder Gauvain; une mère regardant son nourrisson dormir n’aurait pas un plus tendre et plus inexprimable regard. Ce regard était plus fort peut-être que Cimourdain; Cimourdain appuya, comme font quelquefois les enfants, ses deux poings sur ses yeux, et demeura un moment immobile. Puis il s’agenouilla, souleva doucement la main de Gauvain et posa ses lèvres dessus.

Gauvain fit un mouvement. Il ouvrit les yeux, avec le vague étonnement du réveil en sursaut. La lanterne éclairait faiblement la cave. Il reconnut Cimourdain.

— Tiens, dit-il, c’est vous, mon maître.

Et il ajouta:

— Je rêvais que la mort me baisait la main.

Cimourdain eut cette secousse que nous donne parfois la brusque invasion d’un flot de pensées; quelquefois ce flot est si haut et si orageux qu’il semble qu’il va éteindre l’âme. Rien ne sortit du profond coeur de Cimourdain. Il ne put dire que: — Gauvain!

Et tous deux se regardèrent; Cimourdain avec des yeux pleins de ces flammes qui brûlent les larmes, Gauvain avec son plus doux sourire.

Gauvain se souleva sur son coude et dit:

— Cette balafre que je vois sur votre visage, c’est le coup de sabre que vous avez reçu pour moi. Hier encore vous étiez dans cette mêlée à côté de moi et à cause de moi. Si la providence ne vous avait pas mis près de mon berceau, où serais-je aujourd’hui? dans les ténèbres. Si j’ai la notion du devoir, c’est de vous qu’elle me vient. J’étais né noué. Les préjugés sont des ligatures, vous m’avez ôté ces bandelettes, vous avez remis ma croissance en liberté, et de ce qui n’était déjà plus qu’une momie, vous avez refait un enfant. Dans l’avorton probable vous avez mis une conscience. Sans vous, j’aurais grandi petit. J’existe par vous. Je n’étais qu’un seigneur, vous avez fait de moi un citoyen; je n’étais qu’un citoyen, vous avez fait de moi un esprit; vous m’avez fait propre, comme homme, à la vie terrestre, et, comme âme, à la vie céleste. Vous m’avez donné, pour aller dans la réalité humaine, la clef de vérité, et, pour aller au delà, la clef de lumière. O mon maître, je vous remercie. C’est vous qui m’avez créé.

Cimourdain s’assit sur la paille à côté de Gauvain et lui dit:

— Je viens souper avec toi.

Gauvain rompit le pain noir, et le lui présenta. Cimourdain en prit un morceau; puis Gauvain lui tendit la cruche d’eau.

— Bois le premier, dit Cimourdain.

Gauvain but et passa la cruche à Cimourdain qui but après lui. Gauvain n’avait bu qu’une gorgée; Cimourdain but à longs traits.

Dans ce souper, Gauvain mangeait et Cimourdain buvait. Signe du calme de l’un et de la fièvre de l’autre. On ne sait quelle sérénité terrible était dans ce cachot. Ces deux hommes causaient.

Gauvain disait:

— Les grandes choses s’ébauchent. Ce que la révolution fait en ce moment est mystérieux. Derrière l’oeuvre visible il y a l’oeuvre invisible. L’une cache l’autre. L’oeuvre visible est farouche, l’oeuvre invisible est sublime. En cet instant je distingue tout très nettement. C’est étrange et beau. Il a bien fallu se servir des matériaux du passé. De là cet extraordinaire 93. Sous un échafaudage de barbarie se construit un temple de civilisation.

— Oui, répondit Cimourdain. De ce provisoire sortira le définitif. Le définitif, c’est-à-dire le droit et le devoir parallèles, l’impôt proportionnel et progressif, le service militaire obligatoire, le nivellement, aucune déviation, et, au-dessus de tous et de tout, cette ligne droite, la loi. La république de l’absolu.

— Je préfère, dit Gauvain, la république de l’idéal.

Il s’interrompit, puis continua:

— O mon maître, dans tout ce que vous venez de dire, où placez-vous le dévouement, le sacrifice, l’abnégation, l’entrelacement magnanime des bienveillances, l’amour? Mettre tout en équilibre, c’est bien; mettre tout en harmonie, c’est mieux. Au-dessus de la balance il y a la lyre. Votre république dose, mesure et règle l’homme; la mienne l’emporte en plein azur; c’est la différence qu’il y a entre un théorème et un aigle.

— Tu te perds dans le nuage.

— Et vous dans le calcul.

— Il y a du rêve dans l’harmonie.

— Il y en a aussi dans l’algèbre.

— Je voudrais l’homme fait par Euclide.

— Et moi, dit Gauvain, je l’aimerais mieux fait par Homère.

Le sourire sévère de Cimourdain s’arrêta sur Gauvain comme pour tenir cette âme en arrêt.

— Poésie. Défie-toi des poètes.

— Oui, je connais ce mot. Défie-toi des souffles, défie-toi des rayons, défie-toi des parfums, défie-toi des fleurs, défie-toi des constellations.

— Rien de tout cela ne donne à manger.

— Qu’en savez-vous? l’idée aussi est nourriture. Penser, c’est manger.

— Pas d’abstraction. La république c’est deux et deux font quatre. Quand j’ai donné à chacun ce qui lui revient….

— Il vous reste à donner à chacun ce qui ne lui revient pas.

— Qu’entends-tu par là?

— J’entends l’immense concession réciproque que chacun doit à tous et que tous doivent à chacun, et qui est toute la vie sociale.

— Hors du droit strict, il n’y a rien.

— Il y a tout.

— Je ne vois que la justice.

— Moi, je regarde plus haut.

— Qu’y a-t-il donc au-dessus de la justice?

— L’équité.

Par moments ils s’arrêtaient comme si des lueurs passaient.

Cimourdain reprit:

— Précise, je t’en défie.

— Soit. Vous voulez le service militaire obligatoire. Contre qui? contre d’autres hommes. Moi, je ne veux pas de service militaire. Je veux la paix. Vous voulez les misérables secourus, moi je veux la misère supprimée. Vous voulez l’impôt proportionnel. Je ne veux point d’impôt du tout. Je veux la dépense commune réduite à sa plus simple expression et payée par la plus-value sociale.

— Qu’entends-tu par là?

— Ceci: d’abord supprimez les parasitismes; le parasitisme du prêtre, le parasitisme du juge, le parasitisme du soldat. Ensuite, tirez parti de vos richesses; vous jetez l’engrais à l’égout, jetez-le au sillon. Les trois quarts du sol sont en friche, défrichez la France, supprimez les vaines pâtures; partagez les terres communales. Que tout homme ait une terre, et que toute terre ait un homme. Vous centuplerez le produit social. La France, à cette heure, ne donne à ses paysans que quatre jours de viande par an; bien cultivée, elle nourrirait trois cent millions d’hommes, toute l’Europe. Utilisez la nature, cette immense auxiliaire dédaignée. Faites travailler pour vous tous les souffles de vent, toutes les chutes d’eau, tous les effluves magnétiques. Le globe a un réseau veineux souterrain; il y a dans ce réseau une circulation prodigieuse d’eau, d’huile, de feu; piquez la veine du globe, et faites jaillir cette eau pour vos fontaines, cette huile pour vos lampes, ce feu pour vos foyers. Réfléchissez au mouvement des vagues, au flux et reflux, au va-et-vient des marées. Qu’est-ce que l’océan? une énorme force perdue. Comme la terre est bête! ne pas employer l’océan!

— Te voilà en plein songe.

— C’est-à-dire en pleine réalité.

Gauvain reprit:

— Et la femme? qu’en faites-vous?

Cimourdain répondit:

— Ce qu’elle est. La servante de l’homme.

— Oui. A une condition.

— Laquelle?

— C’est que l’homme sera le serviteur de la femme.

— Y penses-tu? s’écria Cimourdain, l’homme serviteur! jamais. L’homme est maître. Je n’admets qu’une royauté, celle du foyer. L’homme chez lui est roi.

— Oui. A une condition.

— Laquelle?

— C’est que la femme y sera reine.

— C’est-à-dire que tu veux pour l’homme et pour la femme….

— L’égalité.

— L’égalité! y songes-tu? les deux êtres sont divers.

— J’ai dit l’égalité. Je n’ai pas dit l’identité.

Il y eut encore une pause, comme une sorte de trêve entre ces deux esprits échangeant des éclairs. Cimourdain la rompit.

— Et l’enfant! à qui le donnes-tu?

— D’abord au père qui l’engendre, puis à la mère qui l’enfante, puis au maître qui l’élève, puis à la cité qui le virilise, puis à la patrie qui est la mère suprême, puis à l’humanité qui est la grande aïeule.

— Tu ne parles pas de Dieu.

— Chacun de ces degrés, père, mère, maître, cité, patrie, humanité, est un des échelons de l’échelle qui monte à Dieu.

Cimourdain se taisait, Gauvain poursuivit:

— Quand on est au haut de l’échelle, on est arrivé à Dieu. Dieu s’ouvre; on n’a plus qu’à entrer.

Cimourdain fit le geste d’un homme qui en rappelle un autre.

— Gauvain, reviens sur la terre. Nous voulons réaliser le possible.

— Commencez par ne pas le rendre impossible.

— Le possible se réalise toujours.

— Pas toujours. Si l’on rudoie l’utopie, on la tue. Rien n’est plus sans défense que l’oeuf.

— Il faut pourtant saisir l’utopie, lui imposer le joug du réel, et l’encadrer dans le fait. L’idée abstraite doit se transformer en idée concrète; ce qu’elle perd en beauté, elle le regagne en utilité; elle est moindre, mais meilleure. Il faut que le droit entre dans la loi; et, quand le droit s’est fait loi, il est absolu. C’est là ce que j’appelle le possible.

— Le possible est plus que cela.

— Ah! te revoilà dans le rêve.

— Le possible est un oiseau mystérieux toujours planant au-dessus de l’homme.

— Il faut le prendre.

— Vivant.

Gauvain continua:

— Ma pensée est: Toujours en avant. Si Dieu avait voulu que l’homme reculât, il lui aurait mis un oeil derrière la tête. Regardons toujours du côté de l’aurore, de l’éclosion, de la naissance. Ce qui tombe encourage ce qui monte. Le craquement du vieil arbre est un appel à l’arbre nouveau. Chaque siècle fera son oeuvre, aujourd’hui civique, demain humaine. Aujourd’hui la question du droit, demain la question du salaire. Salaire et droit, au fond c’est le même mot. L’homme ne vit pas pour n’être point payé; Dieu en donnant la vie contracte une dette; le droit, c’est le salaire inné; le salaire, c’est le droit acquis.

Gauvain parlait avec le recueillement d’un prophète. Cimourdain écoutait. Les rôles étaient intervertis, et maintenant il semblait que c’était l’élève qui était le maître.

Cimourdain murmura:

— Tu vas vite.

— C’est que je suis peut-être un peu pressé, dit Gauvain en souriant.

Et il reprit:

— O mon maître, voici la différence entre nos deux utopies. Vous voulez la caserne obligatoire, moi, je veux l’école. Vous rêvez l’homme soldat, je rêve l’homme citoyen. Vous le voulez terrible, je le veux pensif. Vous fondez une république de glaives, je fonde….

Il s’interrompit:

— Je fonderais une république d’esprits.

Cimourdain regarda le pavé du cachot, et dit:

— Et en attendant que veux-tu?

— Ce qui est.

— Tu absous donc le moment présent?

— Oui.

— Pourquoi?

— Parce que c’est une tempête. Une tempête sait toujours ce qu’elle fait. Pour un chêne foudroyé, que de forêts assainies! La civilisation avait une peste, ce grand vent l’en délivre. Il ne choisit pas assez peut-être. Peut-il faire autrement? Il est chargé d’un si rude balayage! Devant l’horreur du miasme, je comprends la fureur du souffle.

Gauvain continua:

— D’ailleurs, que m’importe la tempête, si j’ai la boussole, et que me font les événements, si j’ai ma conscience!

Et il ajouta de cette voix basse qui est aussi la voix solennelle:

— Il y a quelqu’un qu’il faut toujours laisser faire.

— Qui? demanda Cimourdain.

Gauvain leva le doigt au-dessus de sa tête. Cimourdain suivit du regard la direction de ce doigt levé, et, à travers la voûte du cachot, il lui sembla voir le ciel étoilé.

Ils se turent encore.

Cimourdain reprit:

— Société plus grande que nature. Je te le dis, ce n’est plus le possible, c’est le rêve.

— C’est le but. Autrement, à quoi bon la société? Restez dans la nature. Soyez les sauvages. Otaïti est un paradis. Seulement, dans ce paradis on ne pense pas. Mieux vaudrait encore un enfer intelligent qu’un paradis bête. Mais non, point d’enfer. Soyons la société humaine. Plus grande que nature. Oui. Si vous n’ajoutez rien à la nature, pourquoi sortir de la nature? Alors, contentez-vous du travail comme la fourmi, et du miel comme l’abeille. Restez la bête ouvrière au lieu d’être l’intelligence reine. Si vous ajoutez quelque chose à la nature, vous serez nécessairement plus grand qu’elle; ajouter, c’est augmenter; augmenter, c’est grandir. La société, c’est la nature sublimée. Je veux tout ce qui manque aux ruches, tout ce qui manque aux fourmilières, les monuments, les arts, la poésie, les héros, les génies. Porter des fardeaux éternels, ce n’est pas la loi de l’homme. Non, non, non, plus de parias, plus d’esclaves, plus de forçats, plus de damnés! Je veux que chacun des attributs de l’homme soit un symbole de civilisation et un patron de progrès; je veux la liberté devant l’esprit, l’égalité devant le coeur, la fraternité devant l’âme. Non! plus de joug! l’homme est fait, non pour traîner des chaînes, mais pour ouvrir des ailes. Plus d’homme reptile. Je veux la transfiguration de la larve en lépidoptère; je veux que le ver de terre se change en une fleur vivante, et s’envole. Je veux….

Il s’arrêta. Son oeil devint éclatant.

Ses lèvres remuaient. Il cessa de parler.

La porte était restée ouverte. Quelque chose des rumeurs du dehors pénétrait dans le cachot. On entendait de vagues clairons, c’était probablement la diane; puis des crosses de fusil sonnant à terre, c’étaient les sentinelles qu’on relevait; puis, assez près de la tour, autant qu’on en pouvait juger dans l’obscurité, un mouvement pareil à un remuement de planches et de madriers, avec des bruits sourds et intermittents qui ressemblaient à des coups de marteau.

Cimourdain, pâle, écoutait. Gauvain n’entendait pas.

Sa rêverie était de plus en plus profonde. Il semblait qu’il ne respirât plus, tant il était attentif à ce qu’il voyait sous la voûte visionnaire de son cerveau. Il avait de doux tressaillements. La clarté d’aurore qu’il avait dans la prunelle grandissait.

Un certain temps se passa ainsi. Cimourdain lui demanda:

— A quoi penses-tu?

— A l’avenir, dit Gauvain.

Et il retomba dans sa méditation. Cimourdain se leva du lit de paille où ils étaient assis tous les deux. Gauvain ne s’en aperçut pas. Cimourdain, couvant du regard le jeune homme pensif, recula lentement jusqu’à la porte, et sortit Le cachot se referma.

VI. CEPENDANT LE SOLEIL SE LÈVE

Le jour ne tarda pas à poindre à l’horizon.

En même temps que le jour, une chose étrange, immobile, surprenante, et que les oiseaux du ciel ne connaissaient pas, apparut sur le plateau de la Tourgue au-dessus de la forêt de Fougères.

Cela avait été mis là dans la nuit. C’était dressé, plutôt que bâti. De loin sur l’horizon c’était une silhouette faite de lignes droites et dures ayant l’aspect d’une lettre hébraïque ou d’un de ces hiéroglyphes d’Egypte qui faisaient partie de l’alphabet de l’antique énigme.

Au premier abord, l’idée que cette chose éveillait était l’idée de l’inutile. Elle était là parmi les bruyères en fleur. On se demandait à quoi cela pouvait servir. Puis on sentait venir un frisson. C’était une sorte de tréteau ayant pour pieds quatre poteaux. A un bout du tréteau, deux hautes solives, debout et droites, reliées à leur sommet par une traverse, élevaient et tenaient suspendu un triangle qui semblait noir sur l’azur du matin. A l’autre bout du tréteau, il y avait une échelle. Entre les deux solives, en bas, au-dessous du triangle, on distinguait une sorte de panneau composé de deux sections mobiles qui, en s’ajustant l’une à l’autre, offraient au regard un trou rond à peu près de la dimension du cou d’un homme. La section supérieure du panneau glissait dans une rainure, de façon à pouvoir se hausser ou s’abaisser. Pour l’instant, les deux croissants qui en se rejoignant formaient le collier étaient écartés. On apercevait au pied des deux piliers portant le triangle une planche pouvant tourner sur charnière et ayant l’aspect d’une bascule. A côté de cette planche il y avait un panier long, et entre les deux piliers, en avant, et à l’extrémité du tréteau, un panier carré. C’était peint en rouge. Tout était en bois, excepté le triangle qui était en fer. On sentait que cela avait été construit par des hommes, tant c’était laid, mesquin et petit; et cela aurait mérité d’être apporté là par des génies, tant c’était formidable.

Cette bâtisse difforme, c’était la guillotine.

En face, à quelques pas, dans le ravin, il y avait un autre monstre, la Tourgue. Un monstre de pierre faisant pendant au monstre de bois. Et, disons-le, quand l’homme a touché au bois et à la pierre, le bois et la pierre ne sont plus ni bois ni pierre, et prennent quelque chose de l’homme. Un édifice est un dogme, une machine est une idée.

La Tourgue était cette résultante fatale du passé qui s’appelait la Bastille à Paris, la Tour de Londres en Angleterre, le Spielberg en Allemagne, l’Escurial en Espagne, le Kremlin à Moscou, le château Saint-Ange à Rome.

Dans la Tourgue étaient condensés quinze cents ans, le moyen âge, le vasselage, la glèbe, la féodalité; dans la guillotine une année, 93; et ces douze mois faisaient contre-poids à ces quinze siècles.

La Tourgue, c’était la monarchie; la guillotine, c’était la révolution.

Confrontation tragique.

D’un côté, la dette; de l’autre, l’échéance. D’un côté, l’inextricable complication gothique, le serf, le seigneur, l’esclave, le maître, la roture, la noblesse, le code multiple ramifié en coutumes, le juge et le prêtre coalisés, les ligatures innombrables, le fisc, les gabelles, la mainmorte, les capitations, les exceptions, les prérogatives, les préjugés, les fanatismes, le privilège royal de banqueroute, le sceptre, le trône, le bon plaisir, le droit divin; de l’autre, cette chose simple, un couperet.

D’un côté, le noeud; de l’autre, la hache.

La Tourgue avait été longtemps seule dans ce désert. Elle était là avec ses mâchicoulis d’où avaient ruisselé l’huile bouillante, la poix enflammée et le plomb fondu, avec ses oubliettes pavées d’ossements, avec sa chambre aux écartèlements, avec la tragédie énorme dont elle était remplie; elle avait dominé de sa figure funeste cette forêt, elle avait eu dans cette ombre quinze siècles de tranquillité farouche, elle avait été dans ce pays l’unique puissance, l’unique respect et l’unique effroi; elle avait régné; elle avait été, sans partage, la barbarie; et tout à coup elle voyait se dresser devant elle et contre elle, quelque chose, — plus que quelque chose, — quelqu’un d’aussi horrible qu’elle, la guillotine.

La pierre semble quelquefois avoir des yeux étranges. Une statue observe, une tour guette, une façade d’édifice contemple. La Tourgue avait l’air d’examiner la guillotine.

Elle avait l’air de s’interroger.

Qu’était-ce que cela?

Il semblait que cela était sorti de terre.

Et cela en était sorti en effet.

Dans la terre fatale avait germé l’arbre sinistre. De cette terre, arrosée de tant de sueurs, de tant de sang, de cette terre où avaient été creusées tant de fosses, tant de tombes, tant de cavernes, tant d’embûches, de cette terre où avaient pourri toutes les espèces de morts faits par toutes les espèces de tyrannies, de cette terre superposée à tant d'abîmes, et où avaient été enfouis tant de forfaits, semences affreuses, de cette terre profonde, était sortie, au jour marqué, cette inconnue, cette vengeresse, cette féroce machine porte-glaive,et 93 avait dit au vieux monde: — Me voilà.

Et la guillotine avait le droit de dire au donjon: — Je suis ta fille.

Et en même temps le donjon, car ces choses fatales vivent d'une vie obscure, se sentait tué par elle.

La Tourgue, devant la redoutable apparition, avait on ne sait quoi d'effaré. On eût dit qu'elle avait peur. La monstrueuse masse de granit était majestueuse et infâme, cette planche avec son triangle était pire. La toute-puissante déchue avait l'horreur de la toute-puissante nouvelle. L'histoire criminelle considérait l'histoire justicière. La violence d'autrefois se comparait à la violence d'à-présent; l'antique forteresse, l'antique prison, l'antique seigneurie, où avaient hurlé les patients démembrés, la construction de guerre et de meurtre, hors de service et hors de combat, violée, démantelée, découronnée, tas de pierres valant un tas de cendres, hideuse, magnifique et morte, toute pleine du vertige des siècles effrayants, regardait passer la terrible heure vivante. Hier frémissait devant Aujourd'hui, la vieille férocité constatait et subissait la nouvelle épouvante, ce qui n'était plus que le néant ouvrait des yeux d'ombre devant ce qui était la terreur, et le fantôme regardait le spectre.

La nature est impitoyable; elle ne consent pas à retirer ses fleurs, ses musiques, ses parfums et ses rayons devant l'abomination humaine; elle accable l'homme du contraste de la beauté divine avec la laideur sociale; elle ne lui fait grâce ni d'une aile de papillon ni d'un chant d'oiseau; il faut qu'en plein meurtre, en pleine vengeance, en pleine barbarie, il subisse le regard des choses sacrées; il ne peut se soustraire à l'immense reproche de la douceur universelle et à l'implacable sérénité de l'azur. Il faut que la difformité des lois humaines se montre toute nue au milieu de l'éblouissement éternel. L'homme brise et broie, l'homme stérilise, l'homme tue; l'été reste l'été, le lys reste le lys, l'astre reste l'astre.

Ce matin-là, jamais le ciel frais du jour levant n'avait été plus charmant. Un vent tiède remuait les bruyères, les vapeurs rampaient mollement dans les branchages, la forêt de Fougères, toute pénétrée de l'haleine qui sort des sources, fumait dans l'aube comme une vaste cassolette pleine d'encens; le bleu du firmament, la blancheur des nuées, la claire transparence des eaux, la verdure, cette gamme harmonieuse qui va de l’aigue-marine à l’émeraude, les groupes d’arbres fraternels, les nappes d’herbes, les plaines profondes, tout avait cette pureté qui est l’éternel conseil de la nature à l’homme. Au milieu de tout cela s’étalait l’affreuse impudeur humaine; au milieu de tout cela apparaissaient la forteresse et l’échafaud, la guerre et le supplice, les deux figures de l’âge sanguinaire et de la minute sanglante; la chouette de la nuit du passé et la chauve-souris du crépuscule de l’avenir. En présence de la création fleurie, embaumée, aimante et charmante, le ciel splendide inondait d’aurore la Tourgue et la guillotine, et semblait dire aux hommes: Regardez ce que je fais et ce que vous faites.

Tels sont les formidables usages que le soleil fait de sa lumière.

Ce spectacle avait des spectateurs.

Les quatre mille hommes de la petite armée expéditionnaire étaient rangés en ordre de combat sur le plateau. Ils entouraient la guillotine de trois côtés, de façon à tracer autour d’elle, en plan géométral, la figure d’un E; la batterie placée au centre de la plus grande ligne faisait le cran de l’E. La machine rouge était comme enfermée dans ces trois fronts de bataille, sorte de muraille de soldats repliée des deux côtés jusqu’aux bords de l’escarpement du plateau; le quatrième côté, le côté ouvert, était le ravin même, et regardait la Tourgue.

Cela faisait une place en carré long, au milieu de laquelle était l’échafaud. A mesure que le jour montait, l’ombre portée de la guillotine décroissait sur l’herbe.

Les artilleurs étaient à leurs pièces, mèches allumées.

Une douce fumée bleue s’élevait du ravin; c’était l’incendie du pont qui achevait d’expirer.

Cette fumée estompait sans la voiler la Tourgue dont la haute plate-forme dominait tout l’horizon. Entre cette plate-forme et la guillotine il n’y avait que l’intervalle du ravin. De l’une à l’autre on pouvait se parler.

Sur cette plate-forme avaient été transportées la table du tribunal et la chaise ombragée de drapeaux tricolores. Le jour se levait derrière la Tourgue et faisait saillir en noir la masse de la forteresse et, à son sommet, sur la chaise du tribunal et sous le faisceau de drapeaux, la figure d’un homme assis, immobile et les bras croisés.

Cet homme était Cimourdain. Il avait, comme la veille, son costume de délégué civil, sur la tête le chapeau à panache tricolore, le sabre au côté et les pistolets à la ceinture.

Il se taisait. Tous se taisaient. Les soldats avaient le fusil au pied et baissaient les yeux. Ils se touchaient du coude, mais ne se parlaient pas. Ils songeaient confusément à cette guerre, à tant de combats, aux fusillades des haies si vaillamment affrontées, aux citadelles prises, aux batailles gagnées, aux victoires, et il leur semblait maintenant que toute cette gloire leur tournait en honte. Une sombre attente serrait toutes les poitrines. On voyait sur l'estrade de la guillotine le bourreau qui allait et venait. La clarté grandissante du matin emplissait majestueusement le ciel.

Soudain on entendit ce bruit voilé que font les tambours couverts d'un crêpe. Ce roulement funèbre approcha; les rangs s'ouvrirent, et un cortège entra dans le carré, et se dirigea vers l'échafaud.

D'abord, les tambours noirs, puis une compagnie de grenadiers, l'arme basse, puis un peloton de gendarmes, le sabre nu, puis le condamné, — Gauvain.

Gauvain marchait librement. Il n'avait de cordes ni aux pieds ni aux mains.

Il était en petit uniforme; il avait son épée.

Derrière lui venait un autre peloton de gendarmes.

Gauvain avait encore sur le visage cette joie pensive qui l'avait illuminé au moment où il avait dit à Cimourdain: Je pense à l'avenir. Rien n'était ineffable et sublime comme ce sourire continué.

En arrivant sur le lieu triste, son premier regard fut pour le haut de la tour. Il dédaigna la guillotine.

Il savait que Cimourdain se ferait un devoir d'assister à l'exécution. Il le chercha des yeux sur la plate-forme. Il l'y trouva.

Cimourdain était blême et froid. Ceux qui étaient près de lui n'entendaient pas son souffle.

Quand il aperçut Gauvain, il n'eut pas un tressaillement.

Gauvain cependant s'avançait vers l'échafaud.

Tout en marchant, il regardait Cimourdain et Cimourdain le regardait. Il semblait que Cimourdain s'appuyât sur ce regard.

Gauvain arriva au pied de l'échafaud. Il y monta. L'officier qui commandait les grenadiers l'y suivit. Il défit son épée et la remit à l'officier; il ôta sa cravate et la remit au bourreau.

Il ressemblait à une vision. Jamais il n'avait apparu plus beau. Sa chevelure brune flottait au vent; on ne coupait pas les cheveux alors. Son cou blanc faisait songer à une femme, et son oeil héroïque et souverain faisait songer à un archange. Il était sur l’échafaud, rêveur. Ce lieu-là aussi est un sommet. Gauvain y était debout, superbe et tranquille. Le soleil, l’enveloppant, le mettait comme dans une gloire.

Il fallait pourtant lier le patient. Le bourreau vint, une corde à la main.

En ce moment-là, quand ils virent leur jeune capitaine si décidément engagé sous le couteau, les soldats n’y tinrent plus; le coeur de ces gens de guerre éclata. On entendit cette chose énorme, le sanglot d’une armée. Une clameur s’éleva. Grâce! grâce! Quelques-uns tombèrent à genoux; d’autres jetaient leurs fusils et levaient les bras vers la plate-forme où était Cimourdain. Un grenadier cria en montrant la guillotine:

— Reçoit-on des remplaçants pour ça? Me voici. — Tous répétaient frénétiquement: Grâce! grâce! et des lions qui auraient entendu cela eussent été émus ou effrayés, car les larmes des soldats sont terribles.

Le bourreau s’arrêta, ne sachant plus que faire.

Alors une voix brève et basse, et que tous pourtant entendirent, tant elle était sinistre, cria du haut de la tour:

— Force à la loi!

On reconnut l’accent inexorable. Cimourdain avait parlé. L’armée frissonna.

Le bourreau n’hésita plus. Il s’approcha tenant sa corde.

— Attendez, dit Gauvain.

Il se tourna vers Cimourdain, lui fit, de sa main droite encore libre, un geste d’adieu, puis se laissa lier.

Quand il fut lié, il dit au bourreau:

— Pardon. Un moment encore.

Et il cria:

— Vive la République!

On le coucha sur la bascule. Cette tête charmante et fière s’emboîta dans l’infâme collier. Le bourreau lui releva doucement les cheveux, puis pressa le ressort; le triangle se détacha et glissa lentement d’abord, puis rapidement; on entendit un coup hideux…

Au même instant on en entendit un autre. Au coup de hache répondit un coup de pistolet. Cimourdain venait de saisir un des pistolets qu’il avait à sa ceinture, et, au moment où la tête de Gauvain roulait dans le panier, Cimourdain se traversait le coeur d’une balle. Un flot de sang lui sortit de la bouche, il tomba mort.

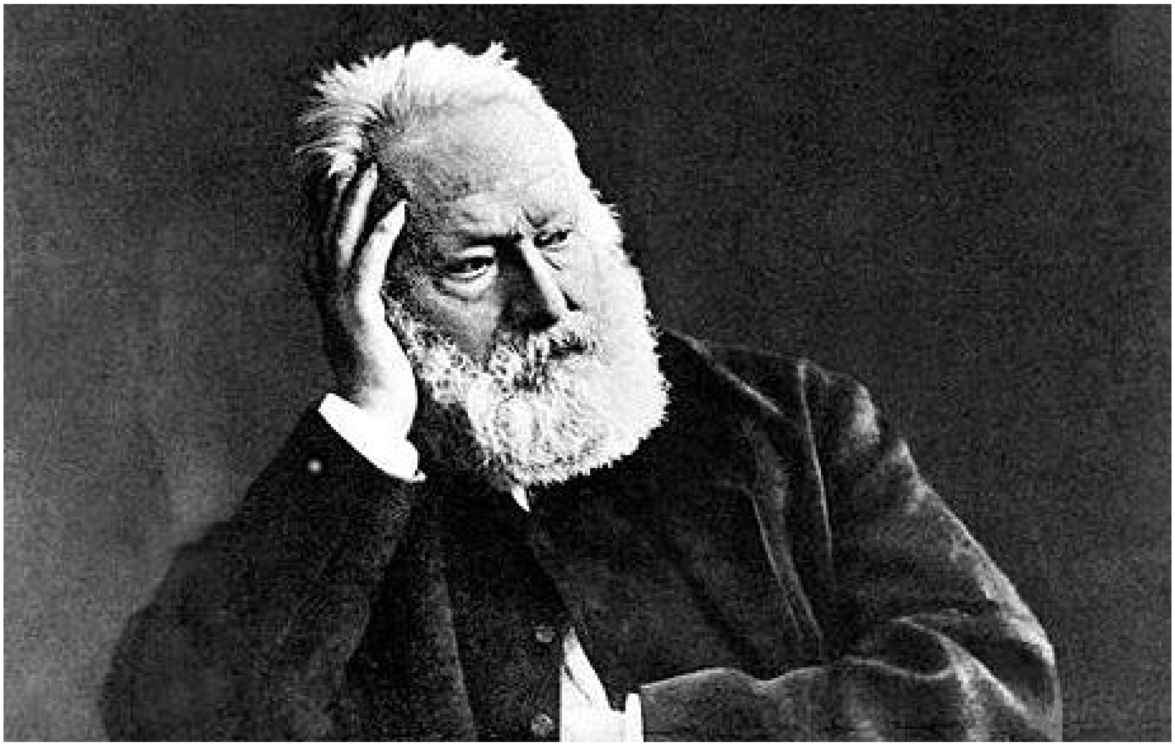
Et ces deux âmes, soeurs tragiques, s’envolèrent ensemble, l’ombre de l’une mêlée à la lumière de l’autre.

FIN

The Novels in French

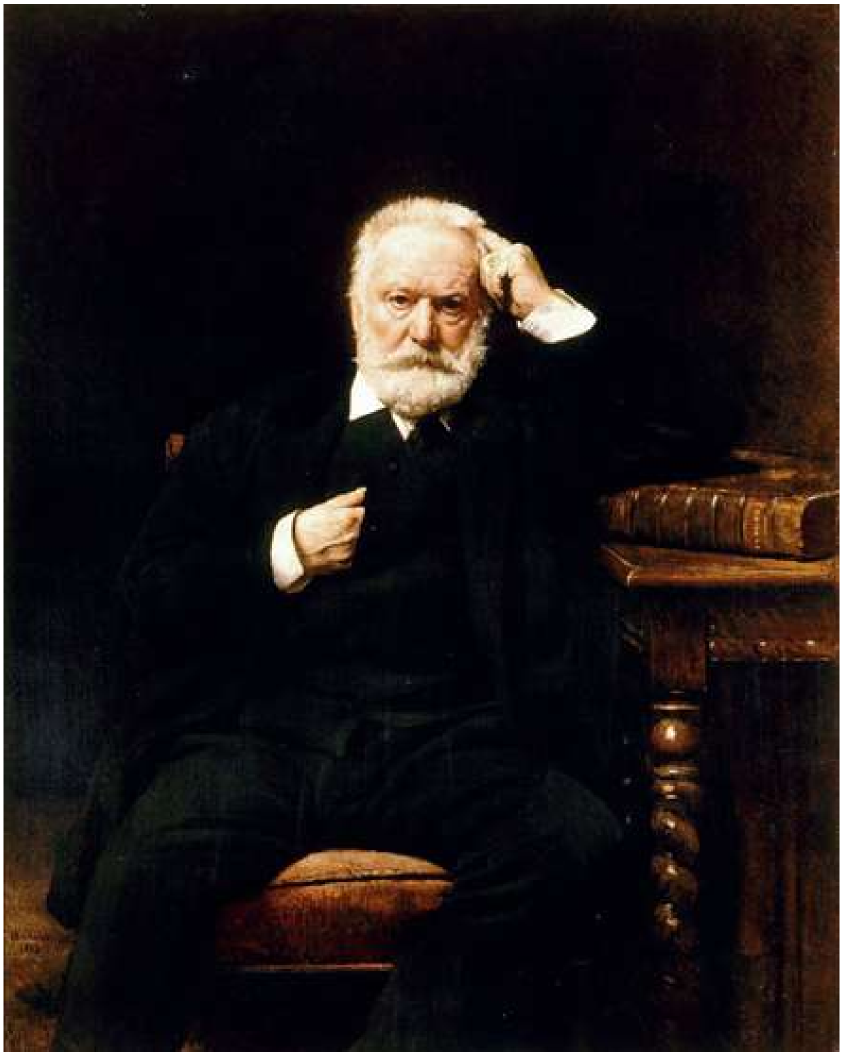
BUG-JARGAL
HAN D’ISLANDE
LE DERNIER JOUR D’UN CONDAMNE
NOTRE-DAME DE PARIS
CLAUDE GUEUX
LES MISÉRABLES
LES TRAVAILLEURS DE LA MER
L’HOMME QUI RIT
QUATREVINGT-TREIZE NINETY-THREE

The Poetry



POEMS IN TRANSLATION

This section contains English translations of some of Hugo’s finest poetry, with examples ranging from his earliest poems to his later religious epics. Hugo’s complete poetry in the original French follows after this section.



Portrait of Victor Hugo by Léon Bonnat, 1879

POEMS IN ENGLISH

CONTENTS

EARLY POEMS.

ENVY AND AVARICE.

ODES. — 1818-28.

KING LOUIS XVII.
THE FEAST OF FREEDOM.
TO YE KINGS.
GENIUS.
THE GIRL OF OTAHEITE.
NERO’S INCENDIARY SONG.
REGRET.
THE MORNING OF LIFE.
BELOVED NAME.
THE PORTRAIT OF A CHILD.

BALLADES. — 1823-28.

THE GRANDMOTHER
ENVOY.
THE GIANT IN GLEE.
THE CYMBALEER’S BRIDE.
BATTLE OF THE NORSEMEN AND THE GAELS.
MADELAINE.
THE FAY AND THE PERI.

LES ORIENTALES. — 1829.

THE SCOURGE OF HEAVEN.
PIRATES’ SONG.
THE TURKISH CAPTIVE.
MOONLIGHT ON THE BOSPHORUS.
THE VEIL.
THE FAVORITE SULTANA.

THE PASHA AND THE DERVISH.
THE LOST BATTLE.
THE GREEK BOY.
ZARA, THE BATHER
EXPECTATION.
THE LOVER’S WISH.
THE SACKING OF THE CITY.
NOORMAHAL THE FAIR.
THE DJINNS.
THE OBDURATE BEAUTY.
DON RODRIGO.
CORNFLOWERS.
MAZEPPA.
THE DANUBE IN WRATH.
OLD OCEAN.
MY NAPOLEON.

LES FEUILLES D’AUTOMNE. — 1831.

DICTATED BEFORE THE RHONE GLACIER.
THE POET’S LOVE FOR LIVELINESS.
INFANTILE INFLUENCE.
THE WATCHING ANGEL.
SUNSET.
THE UNIVERSAL PRAYER.

LES CHANTS DU CRÉPUSCULE. — 1849.

THE LAND OF FABLE.
THE THREE GLORIOUS DAYS.
TRIBUTE TO THE VANQUISHED.
ANGEL OR DEMON.
THE ERUPTION OF VESUVIUS.
MARRIAGE AND FEASTS.
THE MORROW OF GRANDEUR.
THE EAGLET MOURNED.
OUTSIDE THE BALL-ROOM.
PRAYER FOR FRANCE.
TO CANARIS, THE GREEK PATRIOT.

POLAND.
INSULT NOT THE FALLEN.
MORNING.
SONG OF LOVE.
SWEET CHARMER.
MORE STRONG THAN TIME.
ROSES AND BUTTERFLIES.
A SIMILE.
THE POET TO HIS WIFE.

LES VOIX INTÉRIEURES. — 1840.

TO ALBERT DÜRER.
TO HIS MUSE.
THE COW.
MOTHERS.
TO SOME BIRDS FLOWN AWAY.
MY THOUGHTS OF YE.
THE BEACON IN THE STORM.
LOVE’S TREACHEROUS POOL
THE ROSE AND THE GRAVE.

LES RAYONS ET LES OMBRES. — 1840.

HOLYROOD PALACE.
THE HUMBLE HOME.
THE EIGHTEENTH CENTURY.
STILL BE A CHILD.
THE POOL AND THE SOUL.
YE MARINERS WHO SPREAD YOUR SAILS.
ON A FLEMISH WINDOW-PANE.
THE PRECEPTOR.
GASTIBELZA.
GUITAR SONG.
COME WHEN I SLEEP.
EARLY LOVE REVISITED.
SWEET MEMORY OF LOVE.
THE MARBLE FAUN.
A LOVE FOR WINGED THINGS.

BABY'S SEASIDE GRAVE.

LES CHÂTIMENTS. — 1853.

INDIGNATION!
IMPERIAL REVELS.
POOR LITTLE CHILDREN.
APOSTROPHE TO NATURE.
NAPOLEON "THE LITTLE."
FACT OR FABLE?
A LAMENT.
NO ASSASSINATION.
THE DESPATCH OF THE DOOM.
THE SEAMAN'S SONG.
THE RETREAT FROM MOSCOW.
THE OCEAN'S SONG.
THE TRUMPETS OF THE MIND.
AFTER THE COUP D'ÊTAT.
PATRIA.
THE UNIVERSAL REPUBLIC.

LES CONTEMPLATIONS. — 1830-56.

THE VALE TO YOU, TO ME THE HEIGHTS.
CHILDHOOD.
SATIRE ON THE EARTH.
HOW BUTTERFLIES ARE BORN.
HAVE YOU NOTHING TO SAY FOR YOURSELF?
INSCRIPTION FOR A CRUCIFIX.
DEATH, IN LIFE.
THE DYING CHILD TO ITS MOTHER.
EPITAPH.
ST. JOHN.
THE POET'S SIMPLE FAITH.
I AM CONTENT.

LA LÉGENDE DES SIÈCLES.

BOAZ ASLEEP.
SONG OF THE GERMAN LANZKNECHT

KING CANUTE.
THE BOY-KING’S PRAYER.
THE KNIGHT ERRANT.
THE SOUDAN, THE SPHINXES, THE CUP, THE LAMP.
A QUEEN FIVE SUMMERS OLD.
SEA-ADVENTURERS’ SONG.
THE SWISS MERCENARIES.
THE CUP ON THE BATTLE-FIELD.
HOW GOOD ARE THE POOR.

LA VOIX DE GUERNESEY.

LES CHANSONS DES RUES ET DES BOIS.

SHOOTING STARS.

L’ANNÉE TERRIBLE.

TO A SICK CHILD DURING THE SIEGE OF PARIS.
THE CARRIER PIGEON.
TOYS AND TRAGEDY.
MOURNING.
THE LESSON OF THE PATRIOT DEAD.
THE BOY ON THE BARRICADE.
TO HIS ORPHAN GRANDCHILDREN.
TO THE CANNON “VICTOR HUGO.”

L’ART D’ÊTRE GRANDPÊRE.

THE EPIC OF THE LION.

LES QUATRE VENTS DE L’ESPRIT.

MY HAPPIEST DREAM.
AN OLD-TIME LAY.
JERSEY.
L’ENVOY.
THEN, MOST, I SMILE.
THE EXILE’S DESIRE.
THE REFUGEE’S HAVEN.

VARIOUS PIECES.

CHARITY.
SWEET SISTER.
THE PITY OF THE ANGELS.
THE SOWER.
OH, WHY NOT BE HAPPY?
FREEDOM AND THE WORLD.
SERENADE.
AN AUTUMNAL SIMILE.
TO CRUEL OCEAN.
ESMERALDA IN PRISON.
LOVER’S SONG.
A FLEETING GLIMPSE OF A VILLAGE.
LORD ROCHESTER’S SONG.
THE BEGGAR’S QUATRAIN.
THE QUIET RURAL CHURCH.
A STORM SIMILE.

DRAMATIC PIECES.

THE FATHER’S CURSE.
PATERNAL LOVE.
THE DEGENERATE GALLANTS.
THE OLD AND THE YOUNG BRIDEGROOM.
THE SPANISH LADY’S LOVE.
THE LOVER’S SACRIFICE.
THE OLD MAN’S LOVE.
THE ROLL OF THE DE SILVA RACE.
THE LOVERS’ COLLOQUY.
CROMWELL AND THE CROWN.
MILTON’S APPEAL TO CROMWELL.
FIRST LOVE.
THE FIRST BLACK FLAG.
THE SON IN OLD AGE.
THE EMPEROR’S RETURN.

EARLY POEMS.

MOSES ON THE NILE.

(“Mes soeurs, l’onde est plus fraiche.”)

[TO THE FLORAL GAMES, Toulouse, Feb. 10, 1820.]

“Sisters! the wave is freshest in the ray
  Of the young morning; the reapers are asleep;
The river bank is lonely: come away!
  The early murmurs of old Memphis creep
Faint on my ear; and here unseen we stray, —
  Deep in the covert of the grove withdrawn,
  Save by the dewy eye-glance of the dawn.

“Within my father’s palace, fair to see,
  Shine all the Arts, but oh! this river side,
Pranked with gay flowers, is dearer far to me
  Than gold and porphyry vases bright and wide;
How glad in heaven the song-bird carols free!
  Sweeter these zephyrs float than all the showers
  Of costly odors in our royal bowers.

“The sky is pure, the sparkling stream is clear:
  Unloose your zones, my maidens! and fling down
To float awhile upon these bushes near
  Your blue transparent robes: take off my crown,
And take away my jealous veil; for here
  To-day we shall be joyous while we lave
  Our limbs amid the murmur of the wave.

“Hasten; but through the fleecy mists of morn,
  What do I see? Look ye along the stream!
Nay, timid maidens — we must not return!
  Coursing along the current, it would seem
An ancient palm-tree to the deep sea borne,

That from the distant wilderness proceeds,
Downwards, to view our wondrous Pyramids.

“But stay! if I may surely trust mine eye, —
It is the bark of Hermes, or the shell
Of Iris, wafted gently to the sighs
Of the light breeze along the rippling swell;
But no: it is a skiff where sweetly lies
An infant slumbering, and his peaceful rest
Looks as if pillowed on his mother’s breast.

“He sleeps — oh, see! his little floating bed
Swims on the mighty river’s fickle flow,
A white dove’s nest; and there at hazard led
By the faint winds, and wandering to and fro,
The cot comes down; beneath his quiet head
The gulfs are moving, and each threatening wave
Appears to rock the child upon a grave.

“He wakes — ah, maids of Memphis! haste, oh, haste!
He cries! alas! — What mother could confide
Her offspring to the wild and watery waste?
He stretches out his arms, the rippling tide
Murmurs around him, where all rudely placed,
He rests but with a few frail reeds beneath,
Between such helpless innocence and death.

“Oh! take him up! Perchance he is of those
Dark sons of Israel whom my sire proscribes;
Ah! cruel was the mandate that arose
Against most guiltless of the stranger tribes!
Poor child! my heart is yearning for his woes,
I would I were his mother; but I’ll give
If not his birth, at least the claim to live.”

Thus Iphis spoke; the royal hope and pride
Of a great monarch; while her damsels nigh,
Wandered along the Nile’s meandering side;

And these diminished beauties, standing by
The trembling mother; watching with eyes wide
Their graceful mistress, admired her as stood,
More lovely than the genius of the flood!

The waters broken by her delicate feet
Receive the eager wader, as alone
By gentlest pity led, she strives to meet
The wakened babe; and, see, the prize is won!
She holds the weeping burden with a sweet
And virgin glow of pride upon her brow,
That knew no flush save modesty’s till now.

Opening with cautious hands the reedy couch,
She brought the rescued infant slowly out
Beyond the humid sands; at her approach
Her curious maidens hurried round about
To kiss the new-born brow with gentlest touch;
Greeting the child with smiles, and bending nigh
Their faces o’er his large, astonished eye!

Haste thou who, from afar, in doubt and fear,
Dost watch, with straining eyes, the fated boy —
The loved of heaven! come like a stranger near,
And clasp young Moses with maternal joy;
Nor fear the speechless transport and the tear
Will e’er betray thy fond and hidden claim,
For Iphis knows not yet a mother’s name!

With a glad heart, and a triumphal face,
The princess to the haughty Pharaoh led
The humble infant of a hated race,
Bathed with the bitter tears a parent shed;
While loudly pealing round the holy place
Of Heaven’s white Throne, the voice of angel choirs
Intoned the theme of their undying lyres!

“No longer mourn thy pilgrimage below —
O Jacob! let thy tears no longer swell
The torrent of the Egyptian river: Lo!
Soon on the Jordan’s banks thy tents shall dwell;
And Goshen shall behold thy people go
Despite the power of Egypt’s law and brand,
From their sad thrall to Canaan’s promised land.

“The King of Plagues, the Chosen of Sinai,
Is he that, o’er the rushing waters driven,
A vigorous hand hath rescued for the sky;
Ye whose proud hearts disown the ways of heaven!
Attend, be humble! for its power is nigh
Israel! a cradle shall redeem thy worth —
A Cradle yet shall save the widespread earth!”

Dublin University Magazine, 1839

ENVY AND AVARICE.

(“L’Avarice et l’Envie.”)

[LE CONSERVATEUR LIITÉRAIRE, 1820.]

Envy and Avarice, one summer day,
  Sauntering abroad
  In quest of the abode
Of some poor wretch or fool who lived that way —
You — or myself, perhaps — I cannot say —
Along the road, scarce heeding where it tended,
Their way in sullen, sulky silence wended;

For, though twin sisters, these two charming creatures,
Rivals in hideousness of form and features,
Wasted no love between them as they went.
  Pale Avarice,
  With gloating eyes,
And back and shoulders almost double bent,
Was hugging close that fatal box
  For which she’s ever on the watch
  Some glance to catch
Suspiciously directed to its locks;
And Envy, too, no doubt with silent winking
  At her green, greedy orbs, no single minute
Withdrawn from it, was hard a-thinking
  Of all the shining dollars in it.

The only words that Avarice could utter,
Her constant doom, in a low, frightened mutter,
  “There’s not enough, enough, yet in my store!”
While Envy, as she scanned the glittering sight,
Groaned as she gnashed her yellow teeth with spite,
  “She’s more than me, more, still forever more!”

Thus, each in her own fashion, as they wandered,
Upon the coffer's precious contents pondered,
  When suddenly, to their surprise,
  The God Desire stood before their eyes.
Desire, that courteous deity who grants
All wishes, prayers, and wants;
Said he to the two sisters: "Beauteous ladies,
As I'm a gentleman, my task and trade is
  To be the slave of your behest —
Choose therefore at your own sweet will and pleasure,
Honors or treasure!
  Or in one word, whatever you'd like best.
But, let us understand each other — she
Who speaks the first, her prayer shall certainly Receive — the other, the same boon redoubled!"

Imagine how our amiable pair,
At this proposal, all so frank and fair,
  Were mutually troubled!
Misers and enviers, of our human race,
Say, what would you have done in such a case?
Each of the sisters murmured, sad and low
  "What boots it, oh, Desire, to me to have
  Crowns, treasures, all the goods that heart can crave,
Or power divine bestow,
Since still another must have always more?"

So each, lest she should speak before
The other, hesitating slow and long
Till the god lost all patience, held her tongue.
  He was enraged, in such a way,
  To be kept waiting there all day,
With two such beauties in the public road;
  Scarce able to be civil even,
  He wished them both — well, not in heaven.

Envy at last the silence broke,
  And smiling, with malignant sneer,
  Upon her sister dear,
    Who stood in expectation by,
Ever implacable and cruel, spoke
    ”I would be blinded of one eye!”

American Keepsake

ODES. — 1818-28.

KING LOUIS XVII.

(“En ce temps-là du ciel les portes.”)

[Bk. I. v., December, 1822.]

The golden gates were opened wide that day,
All through the unveiled heaven there seemed to play
  Out of the Holiest of Holy, light;
And the elect beheld, crowd immortal,
  A young soul, led up by young angels bright,
Stand in the starry portal.

A fair child fleeing from the world’s fierce hate,
In his blue eye the shade of sorrow sate,
  His golden hair hung all dishevelled down,
On wasted cheeks that told a mournful story,
  And angels twined him with the innocent’s crown,
The martyr’s palm of glory.

The virgin souls that to the Lamb are near,
Called through the clouds with voices heavenly clear,
  God hath prepared a glory for thy brow,
Rest in his arms, and all ye hosts that sing
His praises ever on untired string,
  Chant, for a mortal comes among ye now;
Do homage—”’Tis a king.”

And the pale shadow saith to God in heaven:
  ”I am an orphan and no king at all;
I was a weary prisoner yestereven,
  My father’s murderers fed my soul with gall.
Not me, O Lord, the regal name beseems.
  Last night I fell asleep in dungeon drear,
But then I saw my mother in my dreams,
  Say, shall I find her here?”

The angels said: “Thy Saviour bids thee come,
Out of an impure world He calls thee home,
  From the mad earth, where horrid murder waves
  Over the broken cross her impure wings,
  And regicides go down among the graves,
  Scenting the blood of kings.”

He cries: “Then have I finished my long life?
Are all its evils over, all its strife,
And will no cruel jailer evermore
Wake me to pain, this blissful vision o’er?
Is it no dream that nothing else remains
  Of all my torments but this answered cry,
And have I had, O God, amid my chains,
  The happiness to die?

“For none can tell what cause I had to pine,
What pangs, what miseries, each day were mine;
And when I wept there was no mother near
To soothe my cries, and smile away my tear.
Poor victim of a punishment unending,
  Torn like a sapling from its mother earth,
So young, I could not tell what crime impending
  Had stained me from my birth.

“Yet far off in dim memory it seems,
With all its horror mingled happy dreams,
Strange cries of glory rocked my sleeping head,
And a glad people watched beside my bed.
One day into mysterious darkness thrown,
  I saw the promise of my future close;
I was a little child, left all alone,
  Alas! and I had foes.

“They cast me living in a dreary tomb,
Never mine eyes saw sunlight pierce the gloom,
Only ye, brother angels, used to sweep
Down from your heaven, and visit me in sleep.

‘Neath blood-red hands my young life withered there.
  Dear Lord, the bad are miserable all,
Be not Thou deaf, like them, unto my prayer,
  It is for them I call.”

The angels sang: “See heaven’s high arch unfold,
  Come, we will crown thee with the stars above,
Will give thee cherub-wings of blue and gold,
  And thou shalt learn our ministry of love,
Shalt rock the cradle where some mother’s tears
  Are dropping o’er her restless little one,
Or, with thy luminous breath, in distant spheres,
  Shalt kindle some cold sun.”

Ceased the full choir, all heaven was hushed to hear,
Bowed the fair face, still wet with many a tear,
In depths of space, the rolling worlds were stayed,
Whilst the Eternal in the infinite said:

“O king, I kept thee far from human state,
  Who hadst a dungeon only for thy throne,
O son, rejoice, and bless thy bitter fate,
  The slavery of kings thou hast not known,
What if thy wasted arms are bleeding yet,
  And wounded with the fetter’s cruel trace,
No earthly diadem has ever set
  A stain upon thy face.

“Child, life and hope were with thee at thy birth,
But life soon bowed thy tender form to earth,
  And hope forsook thee in thy hour of need.
Come, for thy Saviour had His pains divine;
Come, for His brow was crowned with thorns like thine,
  His sceptre was a reed.”

Dublin University Magazine.

THE FEAST OF FREEDOM.

(“Lorsqu’à l’antique Olympe immolant l’evangile.”)

[Bk. II. v., 1823.]

[There was in Rome one antique usage as follows: On the eve of the execution day, the sufferers were given a public banquet — at the prison gate — known as the “Free Festival.” — CHATEAUBRIAND’S “Martyrs.”]

TO YE KINGS.

When the Christians were doomed to the lions of old
By the priest and the praetor, combined to uphold
An idolatrous cause,
Forth they came while the vast Colosseum throughout
Gathered thousands looked on, and they fell ‘mid the shout
Of “the People’s” applause.

On the eve of that day of their evenings the last!
At the gates of their dungeon a gorgeous repast,
Rich, unstinted, unpriced,
That the doomed might (forsooth) gather strength ere they bled,
With an ignorant pity the jailers would spread
For the martyrs of Christ.

Oh, ’twas strange for a pupil of Paul to recline
On voluptuous couch, while Falernian wine
Fill’d his cup to the brim!
Dulcet music of Greece, Asiatic repose,
Spicy fragrance of Araby, Italian rose,
All united for him!

Every luxury known through the earth’s wide expanse,
In profusion procured was put forth to enhance
The repast that they gave;
And no Sybarite, nursed in the lap of delight,
Such a banquet ere tasted as welcomed that night
The elect of the grave.

And the lion, meantime, shook his ponderous chain,
Loud and fierce howled the tiger, impatient to stain
The bloodthirsty arena;
Whilst the women of Rome, who applauded those deeds
And who hailed the forthcoming enjoyment, must needs
Shame the restless hyena.

They who figured as guests on that ultimate eve,
In their turn on the morrow were destined to give
To the lions their food;
For, behold, in the guise of a slave at that board,
Where his victims enjoyed all that life can afford,
Death administering stood.

Such, O monarchs of earth! was your banquet of power,
But the tocsin has burst on your festival hour —
’Tis your knell that it rings!
To the popular tiger a prey is decreed,
And the maw of Republican hunger will feed
On a banquet of Kings!

“FATHER PROUT” (FRANK MAHONY)

GENIUS.

(DEDICATED TO CHATEAUBRIAND.)

[Bk. IV. vi., July, 1822.]

Woe unto him! the child of this sad earth,
Who, in a troubled world, unjust and blind,
Bears Genius — treasure of celestial birth,
Within his solitary soul enshrined.
Woe unto him! for Envy’s pangs impure,
Like the undying vultures’, will be driven
Into his noble heart, that must endure
Pangs for each triumph; and, still unforgiven,
Suffer Prometheus’ doom, who ravished fire from Heaven.

Still though his destiny on earth may be
Grief and injustice; who would not endure
With joyful calm, each proffered agony;
Could he the prize of Genius thus ensure?
What mortal feeling kindled in his soul
That clear celestial flame, so pure and high,
O’er which nor time nor death can have control,
Would in inglorious pleasures basely fly
From sufferings whose reward is Immortality?
No! though the clamors of the envious crowd
Pursue the son of Genius, he will rise

From the dull clod, borne by an effort proud
Beyond the reach of vulgar enmities.
’Tis thus the eagle, with his pinions spread,
Reposing o’er the tempest, from that height
Sees the clouds reel and roll above our head,
While he, rejoicing in his tranquil flight,
More upward soars sublime in heaven’s eternal light.

MRS. TORRE HULME

THE GIRL OF OTAHEITE.

("O! dis-moi, tu veux fuir?")

[Bk. IV, vii., Jan. 31, 1821.]

Forget? Can I forget the scented breath
  Of breezes, sighing of thee, in mine ear;
The strange awaking from a dream of death,
  The sudden thrill to find thee coming near?
  Our huts were desolate, and far away
  I heard thee calling me throughout the day,
  No one had seen thee pass,
  Trembling I came. Alas!
      Can I forget?

Once I was beautiful; my maiden charms
  Died with the grief that from my bosom fell.
Ah! weary traveller! rest in my loving arms!
  Let there be no regrets and no farewell!
  Here of thy mother sweet, where waters flow,
  Here of thy fatherland we whispered low;
    Here, music, praise, and prayer
    Filled the glad summer air.
      Can I forget?

Forget? My dear old home must I forget?
  And wander forth and hear my people weep,
Far from the woods where, when the sun has set,
  Fearless but weary to thy arms I creep;
  Far from lush flow'rets and the palm-tree's moan
  I could not live. Here let me rest alone!
    Go! I must follow nigh,
    With thee I'm doomed to die,
      Never forget!

CLEMENT SCOTT

NERO’S INCENDIARY SONG.

(“Amis! ennui nous tue.”)

[Bk. IV. xv., March, 1825.]

Aweary unto death, my friends, a mood by wise abhorred,
Come to the novel feast I spread, thrice-consul, Nero, lord,
The Caesar, master of the world, and eke of harmony,
Who plays the harp of many strings, a chief of minstrelsy.

My joyful call should instantly bring all who love me most, —
For ne’er were seen such arch delights from Greek or Roman host;
Nor at the free, control-less jousts, where, spite of cynic vaunts,
Austere but lenient Seneca no “Ercles” bumper daunts;

Nor where upon the Tiber floats Aglae in galley gay,
‘Neath Asian tent of brilliant stripes, in gorgeous array;
Nor when to lutes and tambourines the wealthy prefect flings
A score of slaves, their fetters wreathed, to feed grim, greedy things.

I vow to show ye Rome aflame, the whole town in a mass;
Upon this tower we’ll take our stand to watch the ‘wildered pass;
How paltry fights of men and beasts! here be my combatants, —
The Seven Hills my circus form, and fiends shall lead the dance.

This is more meet for him who rules to drive away his stress —
He, being god, should lightnings hurl and make a wilderness —
But, haste! for night is darkling — soon, the festival it brings;
Already see the hydra show its tongues and sombre wings,

And mark upon a shrinking prey the rush of kindling breaths;
They tap and sap the threatened walls, and bear uncounted deaths;
And ‘neath caresses scorching hot the palaces decay —
Oh, that I, too, could thus caress, and burn, and blight, and slay!

Hark to the hubbub! scent the fumes! Are those real men or ghosts?
The stillness spreads of Death abroad — down come the temple posts,
Their molten bronze is coursing fast and joins with silver waves
To leap with hiss of thousand snakes where Tiber writhes and raves.

All’s lost! in jasper, marble, gold, the statues totter — crash!
Spite of the names divine engraved, they are but dust and ash.
The victor-scourge sweeps swollen on, whilst north winds sound the horn
To goad the flies of fire yet beyond the flight forlorn.

Proud capital! farewell for e’er! these flames nought can subdue —
The Aqueduct of Sylla gleams, a bridge o’er hellish brew.
’Tis Nero’s whim! how good to see Rome brought the lowest down;
Yet, Queen of all the earth, give thanks for such a splendrous crown!

When I was young, the Sybils pledged eternal rule to thee;
That Time himself would lay his bones before thy unbent knee.
Ha! ha! how brief indeed the space ere this “immortal star”
Shall be consumed in its own glow, and vanished — oh, how far!

How lovely conflagrations look when night is utter dark!
The youth who fired Ephesus’ fane falls low beneath my mark.
The pangs of people — when I sport, what matters? — See them whirl
About, as salamanders frisk and in the brazier curl.

Take from my brow this poor rose-crown — the flames have made it pine;
If blood rains on your festive gowns, wash off with Cretan wine!
I like not overmuch that red — good taste says “gild a crime?”
“To stifle shrieks by drinking-songs” is — thanks! a hint sublime!

I punish Rome, I am avenged; did she not offer prayers
Erst unto Jove, late unto Christ? — to e’en a Jew, she dares!
Now, in thy terror, own my right to rule above them all;
Alone I rest — except this pile, I leave no single hall.

Yet I destroy to build anew, and Rome shall fairer shine —
But out, my guards, and slay the dolts who thought me not divine.

The stiffnecks, haste! annihilate! make ruin all complete —
And, slaves, bring in fresh roses — what odor is more sweet?

H.L. WILLIAMS

REGRET.

(“Oui, le bonheur bien vite a passé.”)

[Bk. V. ii., February, 1821.]

Yes, Happiness hath left me soon behind!
  Alas! we all pursue its steps! and when
We’ve sunk to rest within its arms entwined,
Like the Phoenician virgin, wake, and find
  Ourselves alone again.

Then, through the distant future’s boundless space,
  We seek the lost companion of our days:
“Return, return!” we cry, and lo, apace
Pleasure appears! but not to fill the place
  Of that we mourn always.

I, should unhallowed Pleasure woo me now,
  Will to the wanton sorc’ress say, “Begone!
Respect the cypress on my mournful brow,
Lost Happiness hath left regret — but thou
  Leavest remorse, alone.”

Yet, haply lest I check the mounting fire,
  O friends, that in your revelry appears!
With you I’ll breathe the air which ye respire,
And, smiling, hide my melancholy lyre
  When it is wet with tears.

Each in his secret heart perchance doth own
  Some fond regret ‘neath passing smiles concealed; —
Sufferers alike together and alone
Are we; with many a grief to others known,
  How many unrevealed!

Alas! for natural tears and simple pains,
  For tender recollections, cherished long,
For guileless griefs, which no compunction stains,
We blush; as if we wore these earthly chains
  Only for sport and song!

Yes, my blest hours have fled without a trace:
  In vain I strove their parting to delay;
Brightly they beamed, then left a cheerless space,
Like an o’erclouded smile, that in the face
  Lightens, and fades away.

Fraser’s Magazine

THE MORNING OF LIFE.

(“Le voile du matin.”)

[Bk. V. viii., April, 1822.]

The mist of the morning is torn by the peaks,
  Old towers gleam white in the ray,
And already the glory so joyously seeks
  The lark that’s saluting the day.

Then smile away, man, at the heavens so fair,
  Though, were you swept hence in the night,
From your dark, lonely tomb the owlets would stare
  At the sun rising newly as bright.

But out of earth’s trammels your soul would have flown
  Where glitters Eternity’s stream,
And you shall have waked ‘midst pure glories unknown,
  As sunshine disperses a dream.

BELOVED NAME.

(“Le parfum d’un lis.”)

[Bk. V. xiii.]

The lily’s perfume pure, fame’s crown of light,
  The latest murmur of departing day,
Fond friendship’s plaint, that melts at piteous sight,
The mystic farewell of each hour at flight,
  The kiss which beauty grants with coy delay, —

The sevenfold scarf that parting storms bestow
  As trophy to the proud, triumphant sun;
The thrilling accent of a voice we know,
The love-enthralled maiden’s secret vow,
  An infant’s dream, ere life’s first sands be run, —

The chant of distant choirs, the morning’s sigh,
  Which erst inspired the fabled Memnon’s frame, —
The melodies that, hummed, so trembling die, —
The sweetest gems that ‘mid thought’s treasures lie,
  Have naught of sweetness that can match HER NAME!

Low be its utterance, like a prayer divine,
  Yet in each warbled song be heard the sound;
Be it the light in darksome fanes to shine,
The sacred word which at some hidden shrine,
  The selfsame voice forever makes resound!

O friends! ere yet, in living strains of flame,
  My muse, bewildered in her circlings wide,
With names the vaunting lips of pride proclaim,
Shall dare to blend the one, the purer name,
Which love a treasure in my breast doth hide, —

Must the wild lay my faithful harp can sing,
  Be like the hymns which mortals, kneeling, hear;
To solemn harmonies attuned the string,
As, music show’ring from his viewless wing,
  On heavenly airs some angel hovered near.

CAROLINE BOWLES (MRS. SOUTHEY)

THE PORTRAIT OF A CHILD.

(“Oui, ce front, ce sourire.”)

[Bk. V. xxii., November, 1825.]

That brow, that smile, that cheek so fair,
  Beseem my child, who weeps and plays:
  A heavenly spirit guards her ways,
From whom she stole that mixture rare.
  Through all her features shining mild,
The poet sees an angel there,
  The father sees a child.

And by their flame so pure and bright,
  We see how lately those sweet eyes
  Have wandered down from Paradise,
And still are lingering in its light.

All earthly things are but a shade
  Through which she looks at things above,
And sees the holy Mother-maid,
  Athwart her mother’s glance of love.

She seems celestial songs to hear,
And virgin souls are whispering near.
  Till by her radiant smile deceived,
  I say, “Young angel, lately given,
  When was thy martyrdom achieved?
  And what name lost thou bear in heaven?”

Dublin University Magazine.

BALLADES. — 1823-28.

THE GRANDMOTHER

(“Dors-tu? mère de notre mère.”)

[III., 1823.]

“To die — to sleep.” — SHAKESPEARE.

Still asleep! We have been since the noon thus alone.
  Oh, the hours we have ceased to number!
Wake, grandmother! — speechless say why thou art grown.
Then, thy lips are so cold! — the Madonna of stone
  Is like thee in thy holy slumber.
We have watched thee in sleep, we have watched thee at prayer,
  But what can now betide thee?
Like thy hours of repose all thy orisons were,
And thy lips would still murmur a blessing whene’er
  Thy children stood beside thee.

Now thine eye is unclosed, and thy forehead is bent
  O’er the hearth, where ashes smoulder;
And behold, the watch-lamp will be speedily spent.
Art thou vexed? have we done aught amiss? Oh, relent!
  But — parent, thy hands grow colder!
Say, with ours wilt thou let us rekindle in thine
  The glow that has departed?
Wilt thou sing us some song of the days of lang syne?
Wilt thou tell us some tale, from those volumes divine,
  Of the brave and noble-hearted?

Of the dragon who, crouching in forest green glen,
  Lies in wait for the unwary —
Of the maid who was freed by her knight from the den
Of the ogre, whose club was uplifted, but then
  Turned aside by the wand of a fairy?
Wilt thou teach us spell-words that protect from all harm,
  And thoughts of evil banish?

What goblins the sign of the cross may disarm?
What saint it is good to invoke? and what charm
  Can make the demon vanish?

Or unfold to our gaze thy most wonderful book,
  So feared by hell and Satan;
At its hermits and martyrs in gold let us look,
At the virgins, and bishops with pastoral crook,
  And the hymns and the prayers in Latin.
Oft with legends of angels, who watch o’er the young,
  Thy voice was wont to gladden;
Have thy lips yet no language — no wisdom thy tongue?
Oh, see! the light wavers, and sinking, bath flung
  On the wall forms that sadden.

Wake! awake! evil spirits perhaps may presume
  To haunt thy holy dwelling;
Pale ghosts are, perhaps, stealing into the room —
Oh, would that the lamp were relit! with the gloom
  These fearful thoughts dispelling.
Thou hast told us our parents lie sleeping beneath
  The grass, in a churchyard lonely:
Now, thine eyes have no motion, thy mouth has no breath,
And thy limbs are all rigid! Oh, say, Is this death,
  Or thy prayer or thy slumber only?

ENVOY.

Sad vigil they kept by that grandmother’s chair,
  Kind angels hovered o’er them —
And the dead-bell was tolled in the hamlet — and there,
On the following eve, knelt that innocent pair,
  With the missal-book before them.

“FATHER PROUT” (FRANK S. MAHONY).

THE GIANT IN GLEE.

("Ho, guerriers! je suis né dans le pays des Gaules.")

[V., March 11, 1825.]

Ho, warriors! I was reared in the land of the Gauls;
O'er the Rhine my ancestors came bounding like balls
Of the snow at the Pole, where, a babe, I was bathed
Ere in bear and in walrus-skin I was enswathed.

Then my father was strong, whom the years lowly bow, —
A bison could wallow in the grooves of his brow.
He is weak, very old — he can scarcely uptear
A young pine-tree for staff since his legs cease to bear;

But here's to replace him! — I can toy with his axe;
As I sit on the hill my feet swing in the flax,
And my knee caps the boulders and troubles the trees.
How they shiver, yea, quake if I happen to sneeze!

I was still but a springald when, cleaving the Alps,
I brushed snowy periwigs off granitic scalps,
And my head, o'er the pinnacles, stopped the fleet clouds,
Where I captured the eagles and caged them by crowds.

There were tempests! I blew them back into their source!
And put out their lightnings! More than once in a course,
Through the ocean I went wading after the whale,
And stirred up the bottom as did never a gale.

Fond of rambling, I hunted the shark 'long the beach,
And no osprey in ether soared out of my reach;
And the bear that I pinched 'twixt my finger and thumb,
Like the lynx and the wolf, perished harmless and dumb.

But these pleasures of childhood have lost all their zest;
It is warfare and carnage that now I love best:
The sounds that I wish to awaken and hear
Are the cheers raised by courage, the shrieks due to fear;

When the riot of flames, ruin, smoke, steel and blood,
Announces an army rolls along as a flood,
Which I follow, to harry the clamorous ranks,
Sharp-goading the laggards and pressing the flanks,
Till, a thresher ‘mid ripest of corn, up I stand
With an oak for a flail in my unflagging hand.

Rise the groans! rise the screams! on my feet fall vain tears
As the roar of my laughter redoubles their fears.
I am naked. At armor of steel I should joke —
True, I’m helmed — a brass pot you could draw with ten yoke.

I look for no ladder to invade the king’s hall —
I stride o’er the ramparts, and down the walls fall,
Till choked are the ditches with the stones, dead and quick,
Whilst the flagstaff I use ‘midst my teeth as a pick.

Oh, when cometh my turn to succumb like my prey,
May brave men my body snatch away from th’ array
Of the crows — may they heap on the rocks till they loom
Like a mountain, befitting a colossus’ tomb!

Foreign Quarterly Review (adapted)

THE CYMBALEER’S BRIDE.

(“Monseigneur le Duc de Bretagne.”)

[VI., October, 1825.]

My lord the Duke of Brittany
  Has summoned his barons bold —
Their names make a fearful litany!
Among them you will not meet any
  But men of giant mould.

Proud earls, who dwell in donjon keep,
  And steel-clad knight and peer,
Whose forts are girt with a moat cut deep —
But none excel in soldiership
  My own loved cymbaleer.

Clashing his cymbals, forth he went,
  With a bold and gallant bearing;
Sure for a captain he was meant,
To judge his pride with courage blent,
  And the cloth of gold he’s wearing.

But in my soul since then I feel
  A fear in secret creeping;
And to my patron saint I kneel,
That she may recommend his weal
  To his guardian-angel’s keeping.

I’ve begged our abbot Bernardine
  His prayers not to relax;
And to procure him aid divine
I’ve burnt upon Saint Gilda’s shrine
  Three pounds of virgin wax.

Our Lady of Loretto knows
  The pilgrimage I’ve vowed:
“To wear the scallop I propose,
If health and safety from the foes
  My lover be allowed.”

No letter (fond affection’s gage!)
  From him could I require,
The pain of absence to assuage —
A vassal-maid can have no page,
  A liegeman has no squire.

This day will witness, with the duke’s,
  My cymbaleer’s return:
Gladness and pride beam in my looks,
Delay my heart impatient brooks,
  All meaner thoughts I spurn.

Back from the battlefield elate
  His banner brings each peer;
Come, let us see, at the ancient gate,
The martial triumph pass in state —
  With the princes my cymbaleer.

We’ll have from the rampart walls a glance
  Of the air his steed assumes;
His proud neck swells, his glad hoofs prance,
And on his head unceasing dance,
  In a gorgeous tuft, red plumes!

Be quick, my sisters! dress in haste!
  Come, see him bear the bell,
With laurels decked, with true love graced,
While in his bold hands, fitly placed,
  The bounding cymbals swell!

Mark well the mantle that he’ll wear,
  Embroidered by his bride!

Admire his burnished helmet’s glare,
O’ershadowed by the dark horsehair
  That waves in jet folds wide!

The gypsy (spiteful wench!) foretold,
  With a voice like a viper hissing.
(Though I had crossed her palm with gold),
That from the ranks a spirit bold
  Would be to-day found missing.

But I have prayed so much, I trust
  Her words may prove untrue;
Though in a tomb the hag accurst
Muttered: “Prepare thee for the worst!”
  Whilst the lamp burnt ghastly blue.

My joy her spells shall not prevent.
  Hark! I can hear the drums!
And ladies fair from silken tent
Peep forth, and every eye is bent
  On the cavalcade that comes!

Pikemen, dividing on both flanks,
  Open the pageantry;
Loud, as they tread, their armor clanks,
And silk-robed barons lead the ranks —
  The pink of gallantry!

In scarfs of gold the priests admire;
  The heralds on white steeds;
Armorial pride decks their attire,
Worn in remembrance of some sire
  Famed for heroic deeds.

Feared by the Paynim’s dark divan,
  The Templars next advance;
Then the tall halberds of Lausanne,

Foremost to stand in battle van
  Against the foes of France.

Now hail the duke, with radiant brow,
  Girt with his cavaliers;
Round his triumphant banner bow
Those of his foe. Look, sisters, now!
  Here come the cymbaleers!

She spoke — with searching eye surveyed
  Their ranks — then, pale, aghast,
Sunk in the crowd! Death came in aid —
’Twas mercy to that loving maid —
  The cymbaleers had passed!

“FATHER PROUT” (FRANK S. MAHONY)

BATTLE OF THE NORSEMEN AND THE GAELS.

(“Accourez tous, oiseaux de proie!”)

[VII., September, 1825.]

Ho! hither flock, ye fowls of prey!
Ye wolves of war, make no delay!
For foemen ‘neath our blades shall fall
Ere night may veil with purple pall.
The evening psalms are nearly o’er,
  And priests who follow in our train
  Have promised us the final gain,
And filled with faith our valiant corps.

Let orphans weep, and widows brood!
To-morrow we shall wash the blood
Off saw-gapped sword and lances bent,
So, close the ranks and fire the tent!
And chill yon coward cavalcade
  With brazen bugles blaring loud,
  E’en though our chargers’ neighing proud
Already has the host dismayed.

Spur, horsemen, spur! the charge resounds!
On Gaelic spear the Northman bounds!
Through helmet plumes the arrows flit,
And plated breasts the pikeheads split.
The double-axe fells human oaks,
  And like the thistles in the field
  See bristling up (where none must yield!)
The points hewn off by sweeping strokes!

We, heroes all, our wounds disdain;
Dismounted now, our horses slain,

Yet we advance — more courage show,
Though stricken, seek to overthrow
The victor-knights who tread in mud
  The writhing slaves who bite the heel,
  While on caparisons of steel
The maces thunder — cudgels thud!

Should daggers fail hide-coats to shred,
Seize each your man and hug him dead!
Who falls unslain will only make
A mouthful to the wolves who slake
Their month-whet thirst. No captives, none!
  We die or win! but should we die,
  The lopped-off hand will wave on high
The broken brand to hail the sun!

MADELAINE.

("Ecoute-moi, Madeline.")

[IX., September, 1825.]

List to me, O Madelaine!
Now the snows have left the plain,
  Which they warmly cloaked.
Come into the forest groves,
Where the notes that Echo loves
  Are from horns evoked.

Come! where Springtide, Madelaine,
Brings a sultry breath from Spain,
  Giving buds their hue;
And, last night, to glad your eye,
Laid the floral marquetry,
  Red and gold and blue.

Would I were, O Madelaine,
As the lamb whose wool you train
  Through your tender hands.
Would I were the bird that whirls
Round, and comes to peck your curls,
  Happy in such bands.

Were I e'en, O Madelaine,
Hermit whom the herd disdain
  In his pious cell,
When your purest lips unfold
Sins which might to all be told,
  As to him you tell.

Would I were, O Madelaine,
Moth that murmurs 'gainst your pane,
  Peering at your rest,

As, so like its woolly wing,
Ceasing scarce its fluttering,
  Heaves and sinks your breast.

If you seek it, Madelaine,
You may wish, and not in vain,
  For a serving host,
And your splendid hall of state
Shall be envied by the great,
  O’er the Jew-King’s boast.

If you name it, Madelaine,
Round your head no more you’ll train
  Simple marguerites,
No! the coronet of peers,
Whom the queen herself oft fears,
  And the monarch greets.

If you wish, O Madelaine!
Where you gaze you long shall reign —
  For I’m ruler here!
I’m the lord who asks your hand
If you do not bid me stand
  Loving shepherd here!

THE FAY AND THE PERI.

("Où vas-tu donc, jeune âme.")

[XV.]

THE PERI.

Beautiful spirit, come with me
Over the blue enchanted sea:
  Morn and evening thou canst play
In my garden, where the breeze
Warbles through the fruity trees;
  No shadow falls upon the day:
There thy mother's arms await
Her cherished infant at the gate.
Of Peris I the loveliest far —
My sisters, near the morning star,
In ever youthful bloom abide;
But pale their lustre by my side —
A silken turban wreathes my head,
Rubies on my arms are spread,
While sailing slowly through the sky,
By the uplooker's dazzled eye
Are seen my wings of purple hue,
Glittering with Elysian dew.
  Whiter than a far-off sail
  My form of beauty glows,
  Fair as on a summer night
  Dawns the sleep star's gentle light;
  And fragrant as the early rose
  That scents the green Arabian vale,
  Soothing the pilgrim as he goes.

THE FAY.

Beautiful infant (said the Fay),
  In the region of the sun
I dwell, where in a rich array
The clouds encircle the king of day,
  His radiant journey done.
My wings, pure golden, of radiant sheen
  (Painted as amorous poet’s strain),
Glimmer at night, when meadows green
  Sparkle with the perfumed rain
  While the sun’s gone to come again.
And clear my hand, as stream that flows;
  And sweet my breath as air of May;
  And o’er my ivory shoulders stray
  Locks of sunshine; — tunes still play
From my odorous lips of rose.

Follow, follow! I have caves
Of pearl beneath the azure waves,
And tents all woven pleasantly
In verdant glades of Faëry.
Come, belovèd child, with me,
And I will bear thee to the bowers
Where clouds are painted o’er like flowers,
And pour into thy charmed ear
Songs a mortal may not hear;
  Harmonies so sweet and ripe
  As no inspired shepherd’s pipe
  E’er breathed into Arcadian glen,
  Far from the busy haunts of men.

THE PERI.

My home is afar in the bright Orient,
Where the sun, like a king, in his orange tent,
Reigneth for ever in gorgeous pride —
  And wafting thee, princess of rich countree,
  To the soft flute’s lush melody,

My golden vessel will gently glide,
Kindling the water ‘long the side.

Vast cities are mine of power and delight,
  Lahore laid in lilies, Golconda, Cashmere;
And Ispahan, dear to the pilgrim’s sight,
  And Bagdad, whose towers to heaven uprear;
  Alep, that pours on the startled ear,
From its restless masts the gathering roar,
As of ocean hamm’ring at night on the shore.

Mysore is a queen on her stately throne,
  Thy white domes, Medina, gleam on the eye, —
  Thy radiant kiosques with their arrowy spires,
  Shooting afar their golden fires
    Into the flashing sky, —
Like a forest of spears that startle the gaze
Of the enemy with the vivid blaze.

Come there, beautiful child, with me,
Come to the arcades of Araby,
To the land of the date and the purple vine,
Where pleasure her rosy wreaths doth twine,
And gladness shall be alway thine;
Singing at sunset next thy bed,
Strewing flowers under thy head.
  Beneath a verdant roof of leaves,
  Arching a flow’ry carpet o’er,
  Thou mayst list to lutes on summer eves
  Their lays of rustic freshness pour,
  While upon the grassy floor
  Light footsteps, in the hour of calm,
  Ruffle the shadow of the palm.

THE FAY.

Come to the radiant homes of the blest,
Where meadows like fountain in light are drest,

And the grottoes of verdure never decay,
And the glow of the August dies not away.
Come where the autumn winds never can sweep,
And the streams of the woodland steep thee in sleep,
Like a fond sister charming the eyes of a brother,
Or a little lass lulled on the breast of her mother.
Beautiful! beautiful! hasten to me!
Colored with crimson thy wings shall be;
Flowers that fade not thy forehead shall twine,
Over thee sunlight that sets not shall shine.

The infant listened to the strain,
Now here, now there, its thoughts were driven —
  But the Fay and the Peri waited in vain,
  The soul soared above such a sensual gain —
The child rose to Heaven.

Asiatic Journal

LES ORIENTALES. — 1829.

THE SCOURGE OF HEAVEN.

("Là, voyez-vous passer, la nuée.")

[I., November, 1828.]

I.

Hast seen it pass, that cloud of darkest rim?
Now red and glorious, and now gray and dim,
  Now sad as summer, barren in its heat?
One seems to see at once rush through the night
The smoke and turmoil from a burning site
  Of some great town in fiery grasp complete.

Whence comes it? From the sea, the hills, the sky?
Is it the flaming chariot from on high
  Which demons to some planet seem to bring?
Oh, horror! from its wondrous centre, lo!
A furious stream of lightning seems to flow
  Like a long snake uncoiling its fell ring.

II.

The sea! naught but the sea! waves on all sides!
Vainly the sea-bird would outstrip these tides!
  Naught but an endless ebb and flow!
Wave upon wave advancing, then controlled
Beneath the depths a stream the eyes behold
  Rolling in the involved abyss below!

Whilst here and there great fishes in the spray
Their silvery fins beneath the sun display,
  Or their blue tails lash up from out the surge,
Like to a flock the sea its fleece doth fling;
The horizon's edge bound by a brazen ring;
  Waters and sky in mutual azure merge.

"Am I to dry these seas?" exclaimed the cloud.
"No!" It went onward 'neath the breath of God.

III.

Green hills, which round a limpid bay
Reflected, bask in the clear wave!
The javelin and its buffalo prey,
The laughter and the joyous stave!
The tent, the manger! these describe
A hunting and a fishing tribe
Free as the air — their arrows fly
Swifter than lightning through the sky!
By them is breathed the purest air,
Where'er their wanderings may chance!
Children and maidens young and fair,
And warriors circling in the dance!
Upon the beach, around the fire,
Now quenched by wind, now burning higher,
Like spirits which our dreams inspire
To hover o'er our trance.

Virgins, with skins of ebony,
Beauteous as evening skies,
Laughed as their forms they dimly see
In metal mirrors rise;
Others, as joyously as they,
Were drawing for their food by day,
With jet-black hands, white camels' whey,
Camels with docile eyes.

Both men and women, bare,
Plunged in the briny bay.
Who knows them? Whence they were?
Where passed they yesterday?
Shrill sounds were hovering o'er,
Mixed with the ocean's roar,

Of cymbals from the shore,
And whinnying courser’s neigh.

“Is’t there?” one moment asked the cloudy mass;
“Is’t there?” An unknown utterance answered: “Pass!”

IV.

Whitened with grain see Egypt’s lengthened plains,
Far as the eyesight farthest space contains,
Like a rich carpet spread their varied hues.
The cold sea north, southwards the burying sand
Dispute o’er Egypt — while the smiling land
Still mockingly their empire does refuse.

Three marble triangles seem to pierce the sky,
And hide their basements from the curious eye.
Mountains — with waves of ashes covered o’er!
In graduated blocks of six feet square
From golden base to top, from earth to air
Their ever heightening monstrous steps they bore.

No scorching blast could daunt the sleepless ken
Of roseate Sphinx, and god of marble green,
Which stood as guardians o’er the sacred ground.
For a great port steered vessels huge and fleet,
A giant city bathed her marble feet
In the bright waters round.

One heard the dread simoom in distance roar,
Whilst the crushed shell upon the pebbly shore
Crackled beneath the crocodile’s huge coil.
Westwards, like tiger’s skin, each separate isle
Spotted the surface of the yellow Nile;
Gray obelisks shot upwards from the soil.

The star-king set. The sea, it seemed to hold
In the calm mirror this live globe of gold,

This world, the soul and torchbearer of our own.
In the red sky, and in the purple streak,
Like friendly kings who would each other seek,
Two meeting suns were shown.

“Shall I not stop?” exclaimed the impatient cloud.
“Seek!” trembling Tabor heard the voice of God.

V.

Sand, sand, and still more sand!
The desert! Fearful land!
Teeming with monsters dread
And plagues on every hand!
Here in an endless flow,
Sandhills of golden glow,
Where’er the tempests blow,
Like a great flood are spread.
Sometimes the sacred spot
Hears human sounds profane, when
As from Ophir or from Memphre
Stretches the caravan.
From far the eyes, its trail
Along the burning shale
Bending its wavering tail,
Like a mottled serpent scan.
These deserts are of God!
His are the bounds alone,
Here, where no feet have trod,
To Him its centre known!
And from this smoking sea
Veiled in obscurity,
The foam one seems to see
In fiery ashes thrown.

“Shall desert change to lake?” cried out the cloud.
“Still further!” from heaven’s depths sounded that Voice aloud.

VI.

Like tumbled waves, which a huge rock surround;
Like heaps of ruined towers which strew the ground,
  See Babel now deserted and dismayed!
Huge witness to the folly of mankind;
Four distant mountains when the moonlight shined
  Seem covered with its shade.

O’er miles and miles the shattered ruins spread
Beneath its base, from captive tempests bred,
  The air seemed filled with harmony strange and dire;
While swarmed around the entire human race
A future Babel, on the world’s whole space
  Fixed its eternal spire.

Up to the zenith rose its lengthening stair,
While each great granite mountain lent a share
  To form a stepping base;
Height upon height repeated seemed to rise,
For pyramid on pyramid the strainèd eyes
  Saw take their ceaseless place.

Through yawning walls huge elephants stalked by;
Under dark pillars rose a forestry,
  Pillars by madness multiplied;
As round some giant hive, all day and night,
Huge vultures, and red eagles’ wheeling flight
  Was through each porch descried.

“Must I complete it?” said the angered cloud.
“On still!” “Lord, whither?” groaned it, deep not loud.

VII.

Two cities, strange, unknown in history’s page,
Up to the clouds seemed scaling, stage by stage,
Noiseless their streets; their sleeping inmates lie,

Their gods, their chariots, in obscurity!
Like sisters sleeping ‘neath the same moonlight,
O’er their twin towers crept the shades of night,
Whilst scarce distinguished in the black profound,
Stairs, aqueducts, great pillars, gleamed around,
And ruined capitals: then was seen a group
Of granite elephants ‘neath a dome to stoop,
Shapeless, giant forms to view arise,
Monsters around, the spawn of hideous ties!
Then hanging gardens, with flowers and galleries:
O’er vast fountains bending grew ebon-trees;
Temples, where seated on their rich tiled thrones,
Bull-headed idols shone in jasper stones;
Vast halls, spanned by one block, where watch and stare
Each upon each, with straight and moveless glare,
Colossal heads in circles; the eye sees
Great gods of bronze, their hands upon their knees.
Sight seemed confounded, and to have lost its powers,
‘Midst bridges, aqueducts, arches, and round towers,
Whilst unknown shapes fill up the devious views
Formed by these palaces and avenues.
Like capes, the lengthening shadows seem to rise
Of these dark buildings, pointed to the skies,
Immense entanglement in shroud of gloom!
The stars which gleamed in the empyrean dome,
Under the thousand arches in heaven’s space
Shone as through meshes of the blackest lace.
Cities of hell, with foul desires demented,
And monstrous pleasures, hour by hour invented!
Each roof and home some monstrous mystery bore!
Which through the world spread like a twofold sore!
Yet all things slept, and scarce some pale late light
Flitted along the streets through the still night,
Lamps of debauch, forgotten and alone,
The feast’s lost fires left there to flicker on;
The walls’ large angles clove the light-lengthening shades
‘Neath the white moon, or on some pool’s face played.

Perchance one heard, faint in the plain beneath,
The kiss suppressed, the mingling of the breath;
And the two sister cities, tired of heat,
In love’s embrace lay down in murmurs sweet!
Whilst sighing winds the scent of sycamore
From Sodom to Gomorrah softly bore!
Then over all spread out the blackened cloud,
“’Tis here!” the Voice on high exclaimed aloud.

VIII.

From a cavern wide
In the rent cloud’s side,
In sulphurous showers
The red flame pours.
The palaces fall
  In the lurid light,
Which casts a red pall
  O’er their facades white!

Oh, Sodom! Gomorrah!
What a dome of horror
Rests now on your walls!
On you the cloud falls,
Nation perverse!
  On your fated heads,
From its fell jaws, a curse
  Its lightning fierce spreads!

The people awaken
  Which godlessly slept;
Their palaces shaken,
  Their offences unwept!
Their rolling cars all
  Meet and crash in the street;
And the crowds, for a pall,
  Find flames round their feet!

Numberless dead,
Round these high towers spread,
Still sleep in the shade
By their rugged heights made;
Colossi of rocks
In ill-steadied blocks!
So hang on a wall
Black ants, like a pall!

To escape is in vain
From this horrible rain!
  Alas! all things die;
In the lightning’s red flash
The bridges all crash;
‘Neath the tiles the flame creeps;
From the fire-struck steeps
Falls on the pavements below,
All lurid in glow,
  Rolling down from on high!

Beneath every spark,
  The red, tyrannous fire
Mounts up in the dark
  Ever redder and higher;
More swiftly than steed
  Uncontrolled, see it pass!
  Horrid idols all twist,
  By the crumbling flame kissed
In their infamous dread,
  Shrivelled members of brass!

It grows angry, flows on,
Silver towers fall down
Unforeseen, like a dream
In its green and red stream,
Which lights up the walls
Ere one crashes and falls,

Like the changeable scale
Of a lizard’s bright mail.
Agate, porphyry, cracks
And is melted to wax!
Bend low to their doom
These stones of the tomb!
E’en the great marble giant
Called Nabo, sways pliant
Like a tree; whilst the flare
  Seemed each column to scorch
  As it blazed like a torch
Round and round in the air.

The magi, in vain,
From the heights to the plain
Their gods’ images carry
  In white tunic: they quake —
  No idol can make
The blue sulphur tarry;
The temple e’en where they meet,
Swept under their feet
In the folds of its sheet!
Turns a palace to coal!
Whence the straitened cries roll
From its terrified flock;
  With incendiary grips
It loosens a block,
  Which smokes and then slips
From its place by the shock;
  To the surface first sheers,
  Then melts, disappears,
Like the glacier, the rock!
The high priest, full of years,
On the burnt site appears,
  Whence the others have fled.
Lo! his tiara’s caught fire
As the furnace burns higher,

And pale, full of dread,
See, the hand he would raise
To tear his crown from the blaze
Is flaming instead!

Men, women, in crowds
Hurry on — the fire shrouds
And blinds all their eyes
As, besieging each gate
Of these cities of fate
To the conscience-struck crowd,
In each fiery cloud,
Hell appears in the skies!

IX.

Men say that then, to see his foe’s sad fall
As some old prisoner clings to his prison wall,
Babel, accomplice of their guilt, was seen
O’er the far hills to gaze with vision keen!
And as was worked this dispensation strange,
A wondrous noise filled the world’s startled range;
Reached the dull hearing that deep, direful sound
Of their sad tribe who live below the ground.

X.

‘Gainst this pitiless flame who condemned could prevail?
Who these walls, burnt and calcined, could venture to scale?
Yet their vile hands they sought to uplift,
Yet they cared still to ask from what God, by what law?
In their last sad embrace, ‘midst their honor and awe,
Of this mighty volcano the drift.
‘Neath great slabs of marble they hid them in vain,
‘Gainst this everliving fire, God’s own flaming rain!
’Tis the rash whom God seeks out the first;
They call on their gods, who were deaf to their cries,
For the punishing flame caused their cold granite eyes

  In tears of hot lava to burst!
Thus away in the whirlwind did everything pass,
The man and the city, the soil and its grass!
  God burnt this sad, sterile champaign;
Naught living was left of this people destroyed,
And the unknown wind which blew over the void,
  Each mountain changed into a plain.

XI.

The palm-tree that grows on the rock to this day,
Feels its leaf growing yellow, its slight stem decay,
  In the blasting and ponderous air;
These towns are no more! but to mirror their past,
O’er their embers a cold lake spread far and spread fast,
  With smoke like a furnace, lies there!

J.N. FAZAKERLEY

PIRATES’ SONG.

(“Nous emmenions en esclavage.”)

[VIII., March, 1828.]

We’re bearing fivescore Christian dogs
  To serve the cruel drivers:
Some are fair beauties gently born,
  And some rough coral-divers.
We hardy skimmers of the sea
  Are lucky in each sally,
And, eighty strong, we send along
  The dreaded Pirate Galley.

A nunnery was spied ashore,
  We lowered away the cutter,
And, landing, seized the youngest nun
  Ere she a cry could utter;
Beside the creek, deaf to our oars,
  She slumbered in green alley,
As, eighty strong, we sent along
  The dreaded Pirate Galley.

“Be silent, darling, you must come —
  The wind is off shore blowing;
You only change your prison dull
  For one that’s splendid, glowing!
His Highness doats on milky cheeks,
  So do not make us dally” —
We, eighty strong, who send along
  The dreaded Pirate Galley.

She sought to flee back to her cell,
  And called us each a devil!
We dare do aught becomes Old Scratch,
  But like a treatment civil,

So, spite of buffet, prayers, and calls —
  Too late her friends to rally —
We, eighty strong, bore her along
  Unto the Pirate Galley.

The fairer for her tears profuse,
  As dews refresh the flower,
She is well worth three purses full,
  And will adorn the bower —
For vain her vow to pine and die
  Thus torn from her dear valley:
She reigns, and we still row along
  The dreaded Pirate Galley.

THE TURKISH CAPTIVE.

(“Si je n’était captive.”)

[IX., July, 1828.]

Oh! were I not a captive,
  I should love this fair countree;
Those fields with maize abounding,
  This ever-plaintive sea:
I’d love those stars unnumbered,
  If, passing in the shade,
Beneath our walls I saw not
  The spahi’s sparkling blade.

I am no Tartar maiden
  That a blackamoor of price
Should tune my lute and hold to me
  My glass of sherbet-ice.
Far from these haunts of vices,
  In my dear countree, we
With sweethearts in the even
  May chat and wander free.

But still I love this climate,
  Where never wintry breeze
Invades, with chilly murmur,
  These open lattices;
Where rain is warm in summer,
  And the insect glossy green,
Most like a living emerald,
  Shines ‘mid the leafy screen.

With her chapelles fair Smyrna —
  A gay princess is she!
Still, at her summons, round her
  Unfading spring ye see.

And, as in beauteous vases,
  Bright groups of flowers repose,
So, in her gulfs are lying
  Her archipelagoes.

I love these tall red turrets;
  These standards brave unrolled;
And, like an infant's playthings,
  These houses decked with gold.
I love forsooth these reveries,
  Though sandstorms make me pant,
Voluptuously swaying
  Upon an elephant.

Here in this fairy palace,
  Full of such melodies,
Methinks I hear deep murmurs
  That in the deserts rise;
Soft mingling with the music
  The Genii's voices pour,
Amid the air, unceasing,
  Around us evermore.

I love the burning odors
  This glowing region gives;
And, round each gilded lattice,
  The trembling, wreathing leaves;
And, 'neath the bending palm-tree,
  The gayly gushing spring;
And on the snow-white minaret,
  The stork with snowier wing.

I love on mossy couch to sing
  A Spanish roundelay,
And see my sweet companions
  Around commingling gay, —
A roving band, light-hearted,
  In frolicsome array, —

Who ‘neath the screening parasols
  Dance down the merry day.
But more than all enchanting
  At night, it is to me,
To sit, where winds are sighing,
  Lone, musing by the sea;
And, on its surface gazing,
  To mark the moon so fair,
Her silver fan outspreading,
  In trembling radiance there.

W.D., Tait’s Edin. Magazine

MOONLIGHT ON THE BOSPHORUS.

(“La lune était sereine.”)

[X., September, 1828.]

Bright shone the merry moonbeams dancing o’er the wave;
  At the cool casement, to the evening breeze flung wide,
  Leans the Sultana, and delights to watch the tide,
With surge of silvery sheen, yon sleeping islets lave.

From her hand, as it falls, vibrates the light guitar.
  She listens — hark! that sound that echoes dull and low.
  Is it the beat upon the Archipelago
Of some long galley’s oar, from Scio bound afar?

Is it the cormorants, whose black wings, one by one,
  Cut the blue wave that o’er them breaks in liquid pearls?
  Is it some hovering sprite with whistling scream that hurls
Down to the deep from yon old tower a loosened stone?

Who thus disturbs the tide near the seraglio?
  ’Tis no dark cormorants that on the ripple float,
  ’Tis no dull plume of stone — no oars of Turkish boat,
With measured beat along the water creeping slow.

’Tis heavy sacks, borne each by voiceless dusky slaves;
  And could you dare to sound the depths of yon dark tide,
  Something like human form would stir within its side.
Bright shone the merry moonbeams dancing o’er the wave.

JOHN L. O’SULLIVAN.

THE VEIL.

(“Qu’avez-vous, mes frères?”)

[XI., September, 18288.]

“Have you prayed tonight, Desdemona?”

THE SISTER
What has happened, my brothers? Your spirit to-day
  Some secret sorrow damps
There’s a cloud on your brow. What has happened? Oh, say,
For your eyeballs glare out with a sinister ray
  Like the light of funeral lamps.
And the blades of your poniards are half unsheathed
  In your belt — and ye frown on me!
There’s a woe untold, there’s a pang unbreathed
  In your bosom, my brothers three!

ELDEST BROTHER.

Gulnara, make answer! Hast thou, since the dawn,
To the eye of a stranger thy veil withdrawn?

THE SISTER.

As I came, oh, my brother! at noon — from the bath —
  As I came — it was noon, my lords —
And your sister had then, as she constantly hath,
Drawn her veil close around her, aware that the path
  Is beset by these foreign hordes.
But the weight of the noonday’s sultry hour
Near the mosque was so oppressive
That — forgetting a moment the eye of the Giaour —
  I yielded to th’ heat excessive.

SECOND BROTHER.

Gulnara, make answer! Whom, then, hast thou seen,
In a turban of white and a caftan of green?

THE SISTER.

Nay, he might have been there; but I muflled me so,
  He could scarcely have seen my figure. —
But why to your sister thus dark do you grow?
What words to yourselves do you mutter thus low,
  Of “blood” and “an intriguer”?
Oh! ye cannot of murder bring down the red guilt
  On your souls, my brothers, surely!
Though I fear — from the hands that are chafing the hilt,
  And the hints you give obscurely.

THIRD BROTHER.

Gulnara, this evening when sank the red sun,
Didst thou mark how like blood in descending it shone?

THE SISTER.

Mercy! Allah! have pity! oh, spare!
  See! I cling to your knees repenting!
Kind brothers, forgive me! for mercy, forbear!
Be appeased at the cry of a sister’s despair,
  For our mother’s sake relenting.
O God! must I die? They are deaf to my cries!
  Their sister’s life-blood shedding;
They have stabbed me each one — I faint — o’er my eyes
  A veil of Death is spreading!

THE BROTHERS.

Gulnara, farewell! take that veil; ’tis the gift
Of thy brothers — a veil thou wilt never lift!

“FATHER PROUT” (FRANK S. MAHONY).

THE FAVORITE SULTANA.

(“N’ai-je pas pour toi, belle juive.”)

[XII., Oct. 27, 1828.]

To please you, Jewess, jewel!
  I have thinned my harem out!
Must every flirting of your fan
  Presage a dying shout?

Grace for the damsels tender
  Who have fear to hear your laugh,
For seldom gladness gilds your lips
  But blood you mean to quaff.

In jealousy so zealous,
  Never was there woman worse;
You’d have no roses but those grown
  Above some buried corse.

Am I not pinioned firmly?
  Why be angered if the door
Repulses fifty suing maids
  Who vainly there implore?

Let them live on — to envy
  My own empress of the world,
To whom all Stamboul like a dog
  Lies at the slippers curled.

To you my heroes lower
  Those scarred ensigns none have cowed;
To you their turbans are depressed
  That elsewhere march so proud.

To you Bassora offers
Her respect, and Trebizonde
Her carpets richly wrought, and spice
And gems, of which you’re fond.

To you the Cyprus temples
Dare not bar or close the doors;
For you the mighty Danube sends
The choicest of its stores.

Fear you the Grecian maidens,
Pallid lilies of the isles?
Or the scorching-eyed sand-rover
From Baalbec’s massy piles?

Compared with yours, oh, daughter
Of King Solomon the grand,
What are round ebon bosoms,
High brows from Hellas’ strand?

You’re neither blanched nor blackened,
For your tint of olive’s clear;
Yours are lips of ripest cherry,
You are straight as Arab spear.

Hence, launch no longer lightning
On these paltry slaves of ours.
Why should your flow of tears be matched
By their mean life-blood showers?

Think only of our banquets
Brought and served by charming girls,
For beauties sultans must adorn
As dagger-hilts the pearls.

THE PASHA AND THE DERVISH.

(“Un jour Ali passait.”)

[XIII, Nov. 8, 1828.]

Ali came riding by — the highest head
Bent to the dust, o’ercharged with dread,
  Whilst “God be praised!” all cried;
But through the throng one dervish pressed,
Aged and bent, who dared arrest
  The pasha in his pride.

“Ali Tepelini, light of all light,
Who hold’st the Divan’s upper seat by right,
  Whose fame Fame’s trump hath burst —
Thou art the master of unnumbered hosts,
Shade of the Sultan — yet he only boasts
  In thee a dog accurst!

“An unseen tomb-torch flickers on thy path,
Whilst, as from vial full, thy spare-naught wrath
  Splashes this trembling race:
These are thy grass as thou their trenchant scythes
Cleaving their neck as ‘twere a willow withe —
  Their blood none can efface.

“But ends thy tether! for Janina makes
A grave for thee where every turret quakes,
  And thou shalt drop below
To where the spirits, to a tree enchained,
Will clutch thee, there to be ‘mid them retained
  For all to-come in woe!

“Or if, by happy chance, thy soul might flee
Thy victims, after, thou shouldst surely see
  And hear thy crimes relate;

Streaked with the guileless gore drained from their veins,
Greater in number than the reigns on reigns
  Thou hopedst for thy state.

“This so will be! and neither fleet nor fort
Can stay or aid thee as the deathly port
  Receives thy harried frame!
Though, like the cunning Hebrew knave of old,
To cheat the angel black, thou didst enfold
  In altered guise thy name.”

Ali deemed anchorite or saint a pawn —
The crater of his blunderbuss did yawn,
  Sword, dagger hung at ease:
But he had let the holy man revile,
Though clouds o’erswept his brow; then, with a smile,
  He tossed him his pelisse.

THE LOST BATTLE.

(“Allah! qui me rendra-”)

[XVL, May, 1828.]

Oh, Allah! who will give me back my terrible array?
My emirs and my cavalry that shook the earth to-day;
My tent, my wide-extending camp, all dazzling to the sight,
Whose watchfires, kindled numberless beneath the brow of night,
Seemed oft unto the sentinel that watched the midnight hours,
As heaven along the sombre hill had rained its stars in showers?
Where are my beys so gorgeous, in their light pelisses gay,
And where my fierce Timariot bands, so fearless in the fray;
My dauntless khans, my spahis brave, swift thunderbolts of war;
My sunburnt Bedouins, trooping from the Pyramids afar,
Who laughed to see the laboring hind stand terrified at gaze,
And urged their desert horses on amid the ripening maize?
These horses with their fiery eyes, their slight untiring feet,
That flew along the fields of corn like grasshoppers so fleet —
What! to behold again no more, loud charging o’er the plain,
Their squadrons, in the hostile shot diminished all in vain,
Burst grandly on the heavy squares, like clouds that bear the storms,
Enveloping in lightning fires the dark resisting swarms!
Oh! they are dead! their housings bright are trailed amid their gore;
Dark blood is on their manes and sides, all deeply clotted o’er;
All vainly now the spur would strike these cold and rounded flanks,
To wake them to their wonted speed amid the rapid ranks:
Here the bold riders red and stark upon the sands lie down,
Who in their friendly shadows slept throughout the halt at noon.
Oh, Allah! who will give me back my terrible array?
See where it straggles ‘long the fields for leagues on leagues away,
Like riches from a spendthrift’s hand flung prodigal to earth.
Lo! steed and rider; — Tartar chiefs or of Arabian birth,
Their turbans and their cruel course, their banners and their cries,
Seem now as if a troubled dream had passed before mine eyes —

My valiant warriors and their steeds, thus doomed to fall and bleed!
Their voices rouse no echo now, their footsteps have no speed;
They sleep, and have forgot at last the sabre and the bit —
Yon vale, with all the corpses heaped, seems one wide charnel-pit.
Long shall the evil omen rest upon this plain of dread —
To-night, the taint of solemn blood; to-morrow, of the dead.
Alas! ’tis but a shadow now, that noble armament!
How terribly they strove, and struck from morn to eve unspent,
Amid the fatal fiery ring, enamoured of the fight!
Now o’er the dim horizon sinks the peaceful pall of night:
The brave have nobly done their work, and calmly sleep at last.
The crows begin, and o’er the dead are gathering dark and fast;
Already through their feathers black they pass their eager beaks.
Forth from the forest’s distant depth, from bald and barren peaks,
They congregate in hungry flocks and rend their gory prey.
Woe to that flaunting army’s pride, so vaunting yesterday!
That formidable host, alas! is coldly nerveless now
To drive the vulture from his gorge, or scare the carrion crow.
Were now that host again mine own, with banner broad unfurled,
With it I would advance and win the empire of the world.
Monarchs to it should yield their realms and veil their haughty brows;
My sister it should ever be, my lady and my spouse.
Oh! what will unrestoring Death, that jealous tyrant lord,
Do with the brave departed souls that cannot swing a sword?
Why turned the balls aside from me? Why struck no hostile hand
My head within its turban green upon the ruddy sand?
I stood all potent yesterday; my bravest captains three,
All stirless in their tigered selle, magnificent to see,
Hailed as before my gilded tent rose flowing to the gales,
Shorn from the tameless desert steeds, three dark and tossing tails.
But yesterday a hundred drums were heard when I went by;
Full forty agas turned their looks respectful on mine eye,
And trembled with contracted brows within their hall of state.
Instead of heavy catapults, of slow unwieldy weight,
I had bright cannons rolling on oak wheels in threatening tiers,
And calm and steady by their sides marched English cannoniers.
But yesterday, and I had towns, and castles strong and high,

And Greeks in thousands, for the base and merciless to buy.
But yesterday, and arsenals and harems were my own;
While now, defeated and proscribed, deserted and alone,
I flee away, a fugitive, and of my former power,
Allah! I have not now at least one battlemented tower.
And must he fly — the grand vizier! the pasha of three tails!
O’er the horizon’s bounding hills, where distant vision fails,
All stealthily, with eyes on earth, and shrinking from the sight,
As a nocturnal robber holds his dark and breathless flight,
And thinks he sees the gibbet spread its arms in solemn wrath,
In every tree that dimly throws its shadow on his path!

Thus, after his defeat, pale Reschid speaks.
Among the dead we mourned a thousand Greeks.
Lone from the field the Pasha fled afar,
And, musing, wiped his reeking scimitar;
His two dead steeds upon the sands were flung,
And on their sides their empty stirrups hung.

W.D., Bentley’s Miscellany, 1839.

THE GREEK BOY.

(“Les Turcs ont passés là.”)

[XVIII., June 10, 1828.]

All is a ruin where rage knew no bounds:
Chio is levelled, and loathed by the hounds,
  For shivered yest’reen was her lance;
Sulphurous vapors envenom the place
Where her true beauties of Beauty’s true race
  Were lately linked close in the dance.

Dark is the desert, with one single soul;
Cerulean eyes! whence the burning tears roll
  In anguish of uttermost shame,
Under the shadow of one shrub of May,
Splashed still with ruddy drops, bent in decay
  Where fiercely the hand of Lust came.

“Soft and sweet urchin, still red with the lash
Of rein and of scabbard of wild Kuzzilbash,
  What lack you for changing your sob —
If not unto laughter beseeming a child —
To utterance milder, though they have defiled
  The graves which they shrank not to rob?

“Would’st thou a trinket, a flower, or scarf,
Would’st thou have silver? I’m ready with half
  These sequins a-shine in the sun!
Still more have I money — if you’ll but speak!”
He spoke: and furious the cry of the Greek,
  “Oh, give me your dagger and gun!”

ZARA, THE BATHER

(“Sara, belle d’indolence.”)

[XIX., August, 1828.]

In a swinging hammock lying,
  Lightly flying,
Zara, lovely indolent,
 O’er a fountain’s crystal wave
  There to lave
Her young beauty — see her bent.

As she leans, so sweet and soft,
  Flitting oft,
O’er the mirror to and fro,
 Seems that airy floating bat,
  Like a feather
From some sea-gull’s wing of snow.

Every time the frail boat laden
  With the maiden
Skims the water in its flight,
 Starting from its trembling sheen,
  Swift are seen
A white foot and neck so white.

As that lithe foot’s timid tips
  Quick she dips,
Passing, in the rippling pool,
 (Blush, oh! snowiest ivory!)
  Frolic, she
Laughs to feel the pleasant cool.

Here displayed, but half concealed —
  Half revealed,
Each bright charm shall you behold,

In her innocence emerging,
As a-verging
On the wave her hands grow cold.

For no star howe’er divine
Has the shine
Of a maid’s pure loveliness,
Frightened if a leaf but quivers
As she shivers,
Veiled with naught but dripping trees.

By the happy breezes fanned
See her stand, —
Blushing like a living rose,
On her bosom swelling high
If a fly
Dare to seek a sweet repose.

In those eyes which maiden pride
Fain would hide,
Mark how passion’s lightnings sleep!
And their glance is brighter far
Than the star
Brightest in heaven’s bluest deep.

O’er her limbs the glittering current
In soft torrent
Rains adown the gentle girl,
As if, drop by drop, should fall,
One and all
From her necklace every pearl.

Lengthening still the reckless pleasure
At her leisure,
Care-free Zara ever slow
As the hammock floats and swings
Smiles and sings,
To herself, so sweet and low.

“Oh, were I a capitana,
Or sultana,
Amber should be always mixt
In my bath of jewelled stone,
Near my throne,
Griffins twain of gold betwixt.

“Then my hammock should be silk,
White as milk;
And, more soft than down of dove,
Velvet cushions where I sit
Should emit
Perfumes that inspire love.

“Then should I, no danger near,
Free from fear,
Revel in my garden’s stream;
Nor amid the shadows deep
Dread the peep,
Of two dark eyes’ kindling gleam.

“He who thus would play the spy,
On the die
For such sight his head must throw;
In his blood the sabre naked
Would be slakèd,
Of my slaves of ebon brow.

“Then my rich robes trailing show
As I go,
None to chide should be so bold;
And upon my sandals fine
How should shine
Rubies worked in cloth-of-gold!”

Fancying herself a queen,
All unseen,
Thus vibrating in delight;

In her indolent coquetting
Quite forgetting
How the hours wing their flight.

As she lists the showery tinkling
Of the sprinkling
By her wanton curvets made;
Never pauses she to think
Of the brink
Where her wrapper white is laid.

To the harvest-fields the while,
In long file,
Speed her sisters' lively band,
Like a flock of birds in flight
Streaming light,
Dancing onward hand in hand.

And they're singing, every one,
As they run
This the burden of their lay:
"Fie upon such idleness!
Not to dress
Earlier on harvest-day!"

JOHN L. O'SULLIVAN.

EXPECTATION.

("Moune, écureuil.")

[xx.]

Squirrel, mount yon oak so high,
To its twig that next the sky
  Bends and trembles as a flower!
Strain, O stork, thy pinion well, —
From thy nest 'neath old church-bell,
Mount to yon tall citadel,
  And its tallest donjon tower!
To your mountain, eagle old,
Mount, whose brow so white and cold,
  Kisses the last ray of even!
And, O thou that lov'st to mark
Morn's first sunbeam pierce the dark,
Mount, O mount, thou joyous lark —
  Joyous lark, O mount to heaven!
And now say, from topmost bough,
Towering shaft, and peak of snow,
  And heaven's arch — O, can you see
One white plume that like a star,
Streams along the plain afar,
And a steed that from the war
  Bears my lover back to me?

JOHN L. O'SULLIVAN.

THE LOVER’S WISH.

(“Si j’étais la feuille.”)

[XXII., September, 1828.]

Oh! were I the leaf that the wind of the West,
  His course through the forest uncaring;
To sleep on the gale or the wave’s placid breast
  In a pendulous cradle is bearing.

All fresh with the morn’s balmy kiss would I haste,
  As the dewdrops upon me were glancing;
When Aurora sets out on the roseate waste,
  And round her the breezes are dancing.

On the pinions of air I would fly, I would rush
  Thro’ the glens and the valleys to quiver;
Past the mountain ravine, past the grove’s dreamy hush,
  And the murmuring fall of the river.

By the darkening hollow and bramble-bush lane,
  To catch the sweet breath of the roses;
Past the land would I speed, where the sand-driven plain
  ’Neath the heat of the noonday reposes.

Past the rocks that uprear their tall forms to the sky,
  Whence the storm-fiend his anger is pouring;
Past lakes that lie dead, tho’ the tempest roll nigh,
  And the turbulent whirlwind be roaring.

On, on would I fly, till a charm stopped my way,
  A charm that would lead to the bower;
Where the daughter of Araby sings to the day,
  At the dawn and the vesper hour.

Then hovering down on her brow would I light,
’Midst her golden tresses entwining;
That gleam like the corn when the fields are bright,
And the sunbeams upon it shining.

A single frail gem on her beautiful head,
I should sit in the golden glory;
And prouder I’d be than the diadem spread
Round the brow of kings famous in story.

V., Eton Observer.

THE SACKING OF THE CITY.

("La flamme par ton ordre, O roi!")

[XXIII., November, 1825.]

Thy will, O King, is done! Lighting but to consume,
  The roar of the fierce flames drowned even the shouts and shrieks;
Reddening each roof, like some day-dawn of bloody doom,
  Seemed they in joyous flight to dance about their wrecks.

Slaughter his thousand giant arms hath tossed on high,
  Fell fathers, husbands, wives, beneath his streaming steel;
Prostrate, the palaces, huge tombs of fire, lie,
  While gathering overhead the vultures scream and wheel!

Died the pale mothers, and the virgins, from their arms,
  O Caliph, fiercely torn, bewailed their young years' blight;
With stabs and kisses fouled, all their yet quivering charms,
  At our fleet coursers' heels were dragged in mocking flight.

Lo! where the city lies mantled in pall of death;
  Lo! where thy mighty hand hath passed, all things must bend!
Priests prayed, the sword estopped blaspheming breath,
  Vainly their cheating book for shield did they extend.

Some infants yet survived, and the unsated steel
  Still drinks the life-blood of each whelp of Christian-kind,
To kiss thy sandall'd foot, O King, thy people kneel,
  And golden circlets to thy victor-ankle bind.

JOHN L. O'SULLIVAN.

NOORMAHAL THE FAIR.

(“Entre deux rocs d’un noir d’ébène.”)

[XXVII., November, 1828.]

Between two ebon rocks
  Behold yon sombre den,
Where brambles bristle like the locks
  Of wool between the horns of scapegoat banned by men!

Remote in ruddy fog
  Still hear the tiger growl
At the lion and stripèd dog
  That prowl with rusty throats to taunt and roar and howl;

Whilst other monsters fast
  The hissing basilisk;
The hippopotamus so vast,
  And the boa with waking appetite made brisk!

The orfrey showing tongue,
  The fly in stinging mood,
The elephant that crushes strong
  And elastic bamboos an the scorpion’s brood;

And the men of the trees
  With their families fierce,
Till there is not one scorching breeze
  But brings here its venom — its horror to pierce —

Yet, rather there be lone,
  ’Mid all those horrors there,
Than hear the sickly honeyed tone
  And see the swimming eyes of Noormahal the Fair!

THE DJINNS.

("Murs, ville et port.")

[XXVIII., Aug. 28, 1828.]

Town, tower,
Shore, deep,
Where lower
Cliff's steep;
Waves gray,
Where play
Winds gay,
All sleep.

Hark! a sound,
Far and slight,
Breathes around
On the night
High and higher,
Nigh and nigher,
Like a fire,
Roaring, bright.

Now, on 'tis sweeping
With rattling beat,
Like dwarf imp leaping
In gallop fleet
He flies, he prances,
In frolic fancies,
On wave-crest dances
With pattering feet.

Hark, the rising swell,
With each new burst!
Like the tolling bell
Of a convent curst;

Like the billowy roar
On a storm-lashed shore, —
Now hushed, but once more
Maddening to its worst.

O God! the deadly sound
Of the Djinn’s fearful cry!
Quick, ‘neath the spiral round
Of the deep staircase fly!
See, see our lamplight fade!
And of the balustrade
Mounts, mounts the circling shade
Up to the ceiling high!

’Tis the Djinns’ wild streaming swarm
Whistling in their tempest flight;
Snap the tall yews ‘neath the storm,
Like a pine flame crackling bright.
Swift though heavy, lo! their crowd
Through the heavens rushing loud
Like a livid thunder-cloud
With its bolt of fiery might!

Ho! they are on us, close without!
Shut tight the shelter where we lie!
With hideous din the monster rout,
Dragon and vampire, fill the sky!
The loosened rafter overhead
Trembles and bends like quivering reed;
Shakes the old door with shuddering dread,
As from its rusty hinge ’twould fly!
Wild cries of hell! voices that howl and shriek!
The horrid troop before the tempest tossed —
O Heaven! — descends my lowly roof to seek:

Bends the strong wall beneath the furious host.
Totters the house as though, like dry leaf shorn
From autumn bough and on the mad blast borne,

Up from its deep foundations it were torn
To join the stormy whirl. Ah! all is lost!

O Prophet! if thy hand but now
Save from these hellish things,
A pilgrim at thy shrine I'll bow,
Laden with pious offerings.
Bid their hot breath its fiery rain
Stream on the faithful's door in vain;
Vainly upon my blackened pane
Grate the fierce claws of their dark wings!

They have passed! — and their wild legion
Cease to thunder at my door;
Fleeting through night's rayless region,
Hither they return no more.
Clanking chains and sounds of woe
Fill the forests as they go;
And the tall oaks cower low,
Bent their flaming light before.

On! on! the storm of wings
Bears far the fiery fear,
Till scarce the breeze now brings
Dim murmurings to the ear;
Like locusts' humming hail,
Or thrash of tiny flail
Plied by the fitful gale
On some old roof-tree sere.

Fainter now are borne
Feeble mutterings still;
As when Arab horn
Swells its magic peal,
Shoreward o'er the deep
Fairy voices sweep,
And the infant's sleep
Golden visions fill.

Each deadly Djinn,
Dark child of fright,
Of death and sin,
Speeds in wild flight.
Hark, the dull moan,
Like the deep tone
Of Ocean’s groan,
Afar, by night!

More and more
Fades it slow,
As on shore
Ripples flow, —
As the plaint
Far and faint
Of a saint
Murmured low.

Hark! hist!
Around,
I list!
The bounds
  Of space
  All trace
  Efface
Of sound.

JOHN L. O’SULLIVAN.

THE OBDURATE BEAUTY.

("A Juana la Grenadine!")

[XXIX., October, 1843.]

To Juana ever gay,
Sultan Achmet spoke one day
  "Lo, the realms that kneel to own
  Homage to my sword and crown
All I'd freely cast away,
  Maiden dear, for thee alone."

"Be a Christian, noble king!
For it were a grievous thing:
  Love to seek and find too well
  In the arms of infidel.
Spain with cry of shame would ring,
  If from honor faithful fell."

"By these pearls whose spotless chain,
Oh, my gentle sovereign,
  Clasps thy neck of ivory,
  Aught thou askest I will be,
If that necklace pure of stain
  Thou wilt give for rosary."

JOHN L. O'SULLIVAN.

DON RODRIGO.

A MOORISH BALLAD.

(“Don Roderique est à la chasse.”)

[XXX., May, 1828.]

Unto the chase Rodrigo’s gone,
  With neither lance nor buckler;
A baleful light his eyes outshone —
  To pity he’s no truckler.

He follows not the royal stag,
  But, full of fiery hating,
Beside the way one sees him lag,
  Impatient at the waiting.

He longs his nephew’s blood to spill,
  Who ‘scaped (the young Mudarra)
That trap he made and laid to kill
  The seven sons of Lara.

Along the road — at last, no balk —
  A youth looms on a jennet;
He rises like a sparrow-hawk
  About to seize a linnet.

“What ho!” “Who calls?” “Art Christian knight,
  Or basely born and boorish,
Or yet that thing I still more slight —
  The spawn of some dog Moorish?

“I seek the by-born spawn of one
  I e’er renounce as brother —
Who chose to make his latest son
  Caress a Moor as mother.

“I’ve sought that cub in every hole,
’Midland, and coast, and islet,
For he’s the thief who came and stole
Our sheathless jewelled stilet.”

“If you well know the poniard worn
Without edge-dulling cover —
Look on it now — here, plain, upborne!
And further be no rover.

“Tis I — as sure as you’re abhorred
Rodrigo — cruel slayer,
’Tis I am Vengeance, and your lord,
Who bids you crouch in prayer!

“I shall not grant the least delay —
Use what you have, defending,
I’ll send you on that darksome way
Your victims late were wending.

“And if I wore this, with its crest —
Our seal with gems enwreathing —
In open air— ’twas in your breast
To seek its fated sheathing!”

CORNFLOWERS.

(“Tandis que l’étoile inodore.”)

[XXXII.]

While bright but scentless azure stars
  Be-gem the golden corn,
And spangle with their skyey tint
  The furrows not yet shorn;
While still the pure white tufts of May
  Ape each a snowy ball, —
Away, ye merry maids, and haste
  To gather ere they fall!

Nowhere the sun of Spain outshines
  Upon a fairer town
Than Peñafiel, or endows
  More richly farming clown;
Nowhere a broader square reflects
  Such brilliant mansions, tall, —
Away, ye merry maids, etc.

Nowhere a statelier abbey rears
  Dome huger o’er a shrine,
Though seek ye from old Rome itself
  To even Seville fine.
Here countless pilgrims come to pray
 And promenade the Mall, —
Away, ye merry maids, etc.

Where glide the girls more joyfully
  Than ours who dance at dusk,
With roses white upon their brows,
  With waists that scorn the busk?
Mantillas elsewhere hide dull eyes —

  Compared with these, how small!
Away, ye merry maids, etc.

A blossom in a city lane,
  Alizia was our pride,
And oft the blundering bee, deceived,
  Came buzzing to her side —
But, oh! for one that felt the sting,
  And found, ‘neath honey, gall —
Away, ye merry maids, etc.

Young, haughty, from still hotter lands,
  A stranger hither came —
Was he a Moor or African,
  Or Murcian known to fame?
None knew — least, she — or false or true,
  The name by which to call.
Away, ye merry maids, etc.

Alizia asked not his degree,
  She saw him but as Love,
And through Xarama’s vale they strayed,
  And tarried in the grove, —
Oh! curses on that fatal eve,
  And on that leafy hall!
Away, ye merry maids, etc.

The darkened city breathed no more;
  The moon was mantled long,
Till towers thrust the cloudy cloak
  Upon the steeples’ throng;
The crossway Christ, in ivy draped,
  Shrank, grieving, ‘neath the pall, —
Away, ye merry maids, etc.

But while, alone, they kept the shade,
  The other dark-eyed dears
Were murmuring on the stifling air

  Their jealous threats and fears;
Alizia was so blamed, that time,
  Unheeded rang the call:
Away, ye merry maids, etc.

Although, above, the hawk describes
  The circle round the lark,
It sleeps, unconscious, and our lass
  Had eyes but for her spark —
A spark? — a sun! ’Twas Juan, King!
  Who wears our coronal, —
Away, ye merry maids, etc.

A love so far above one’s state
  Ends sadly. Came a black
And guarded palanquin to bear
  The girl that ne’er comes back;
By royal writ, some nunnery
  Still shields her from us all
Away, ye merry maids, and haste
  To gather ere they fall!

H. L. WILLIAMS

MAZEPPA.

(“Ainsi, lorsqu’un mortel!”)

[XXXIV., May, 1828.]

As when a mortal — Genius’ prize, alack!
Is, living, bound upon thy fatal back,
  Thou reinless racing steed!
In vain he writhes, mere cloud upon a star,
Thou bearest him as went Mazeppa, far
  Out of the flow’ry mead, —
So — though thou speed’st implacable, (like him,
Spent, pallid, torn, bruised, weary, sore and dim,
  As if each stride the nearer bring
Him to the grave) — when comes the time,
After the fall, he rises — KING!

H.L. WILLIAMS

THE DANUBE IN WRATH.

("Quoi! ne pouvez-vous vivre ensemble?")

[XXXV., June, 1828.]

The River Deity upbraids his Daughters, the contributary Streams: —

Ye daughters mine! will naught abate
Your fierce interminable hate?
Still am I doomed to rue the fate
  That such unfriendly neighbors made?
The while ye might, in peaceful cheer,
Mirror upon your waters clear,
Semlin! thy Gothic steeples dear,
  And thy bright minarets, Belgrade!

Fraser's Magazine

OLD OCEAN.

("J'étais seul près des flots.")

[XXXVII., September 5, 1828.]

I stood by the waves, while the stars soared in sight,
Not a cloud specked the sky, not a sail shimmered bright;
  Scenes beyond this dim world were revealed to mine eye;
And the woods, and the hills, and all nature around,
Seem'd to question with moody, mysterious sound,
  The waves, and the pure stars on high.
And the clear constellations, that infinite throng,
While thousand rich harmonies swelled in their song,
  Replying, bowed meekly their diamond-blaze —
And the blue waves, which nothing may bind or arrest,
Chorus'd forth, as they stooped the white foam of their crest
  "Creator! we bless thee and praise!"

R.C. ELLWOOD

MY NAPOLEON.

("Toujours lui! lui partout!")

[XL., December, 1828.]

Above all others, everywhere I see
  His image cold or burning!
My brain it thrills, and oftentime sets free
  The thoughts within me yearning.
My quivering lips pour forth the words
  That cluster in his name of glory —
The star gigantic with its rays of swords
  Whose gleams irradiate all modern story.

I see his finger pointing where the shell
  Should fall to slay most rabble,
And save foul regicides; or strike the knell
  Of weaklings 'mid the tribunes' babble.
A Consul then, o'er young but proud,
  With midnight poring thinned, and sallow,
But dreams of Empire pierce the transient cloud,
  And round pale face and lank locks form the halo.

And soon the Caesar, with an eye a-flame
  Whole nations' contact urging
To gain his soldiers gold and fame
  Oh, Sun on high emerging,
Whose dazzling lustre fired the hells
  Embosomed in grim bronze, which, free, arose
To change five hundred thousand base-born Tells,
  Into his host of half-a-million heroes!

What! next a captive? Yea, and caged apart.
  No weight of arms enfolded
Can crush the turmoil in that seething heart
  Which Nature — not her journeymen — self-moulded.

Let sordid jailers vex their prize;
But only bends that brow to lightning,
As gazing from the seaward rock, his sighs
Cleave through the storm and haste where France looms bright’ning.

Alone, but greater! Broke the sceptre, true!
Yet lingers still some power —
In tears of woe man’s metal may renew
The temper of high hour;
For, bating breath, e’er list the kings
The pinions clipped may grow! the Eagle
May burst, in frantic thirst for home, the rings
And rend the Bulldog, Fox, and Bear, and Beagle!

And, lastly, grandest! ‘tween dark sea and here
Eternal brightness coming!
The eye so weary’s freshened with a tear
As rises distant drumming,
And wailing cheer — they pass the pale
His army mourns though still’s the end hid;
And from his war-stained cloak, he answers “Hail!”
And spurns the bed of gloom for throne aye-splendid!

H.L. WILLIAMS.

LES FEUILLES D’AUTOMNE. — 1831.

THE PATIENCE OF THE PEOPLE.

(“Il s’est dit tant de fois.”)

[III., May, 1830.]

How often have the people said: “What’s power?”
Who reigns soon is dethroned? each fleeting hour
Has onward borne, as in a fevered dream,
Such quick reverses, like a judge supreme —
Austere but just, they contemplate the end
To which the current of events must tend.
Self-confidence has taught them to forbear,
And in the vastness of their strength, they spare.
Armed with impunity, for one in vain
Resists a nation, they let others reign.

G.W.M. REYNOLDS.

DICTATED BEFORE THE RHONE GLACIER.

("Souvent quand mon esprit riche.")

[VII., May 18, 1828.]

When my mind, on the ocean of poesy hurled,
Floats on in repose round this wonderful world,
  Oft the sacred fire from heaven —
Mysterious sun, that gives light to the soul —
Strikes mine with its ray, and above the pole
  Its upward course is driven,

Like a wandering cloud, then, my eager thought
Capriciously flies, to no guidance brought,
  With every quarter's wind;
It regards from those radiant vaults on high,
Earth's cities below, and again doth fly,
  And leaves but its shadow behind.

In the glistening gold of the morning bright,
It shines, detaching some lance of light,
  Or, as warrior's armor rings;
It forages forests that ferment around,
Or bathed in the sun-red gleams is found,
  Where the west its radiance flings.

Or, on mountain peak, that rears its head
Where snow-clad Alps around are spread,
  By furious gale 'tis thrown.
From the yawning abyss see the cloud scud away,
And the glacier appears, with its multiform ray,
  The giant mountain's crown!

Like Parnassian pinnacle yet to be scaled,
In its form from afar, by the aspirant hailed;
  On its side the rainbow plays,

And at eve, when the shadow sinks sleeping below,
The last slanting ray on its crest of snow
  Makes its cap like a crater to blaze.

In the darkness, its front seems some pale orb of light,
The chamois with fear flashes on in its flight,
  The eagle afar is driven;
The deluge but roars in despair to its feet,
And scarce dare the eye its aspect to meet,
  So near doth it rise to heaven.

Alone on these altitudes, feeling no fear,
Forgetful of earth, my spirit draws near;
  On the starry vault to gaze,
And nearer, to gaze on those glories of night,
On th’ horizon high heaving, like arches of light,
  Till again the sun shall blaze.

For then will the glacier with glory be graced,
On its prisms will light streaked with darkness be placed,
  The morn its echoes greet;
Like a torrent it falls on the ocean of life,
Like Chaos unformed, with the sea-stormy strife,
  When waters on waters meet.

As the spirit of poesy touches my thought,
It is thus my ideas in a circle are brought,
  From earth, with the waters of pain.
As under a sunbeam a cloud ascends,
These fly to the heavens — their course never ends,
  But descend to the ocean again.

Author of “Critical Essays.”

THE POET'S LOVE FOR LIVELINESS.

("Moi, quelque soit le monde.")

[XV., May 11, 1830.]

For me, whate'er my life and lot may show,
Years blank with gloom or cheered by mem'ry's glow,
  Turmoil or peace; never be it mine, I pray,
To be a dweller of the peopled earth,
Save 'neath a roof alive with children's mirth
  Loud through the livelong day.

So, if my hap it be to see once more
Those scenes my footsteps tottered in before,
  An infant follower in Napoleon's train:
Rodrigo's holds, Valencia and Leon,
And both Castiles, and mated Aragon;
  Ne'er be it mine, O Spain!

  To pass thy plains with cities scant between,
Thy stately arches flung o'er deep ravine,
  Thy palaces, of Moor's or Roman's time;
Or the swift makings of thy Guadalquiver,
Save in those gilded cars, where bells forever
  Ring their melodious chime.

Fraser's Magazine

INFANTILE INFLUENCE.

("Lorsque l'enfant parait.")

[XIX., May 11, 1830.]

The child comes toddling in, and young and old
With smiling eyes its smiling eyes behold,
  And artless, babyish joy;
A playful welcome greets it through the room,
The saddest brow unfolds its wrinkled gloom,
  To greet the happy boy.

If June with flowers has spangled all the ground,
Or winter bleak the flickering hearth around
  Draws close the circling seat;
The child still sheds a never-failing light;
We call; Mamma with mingled joy and fright
  Watches its tottering feet.

Perhaps at eve as round the fire we draw,
We speak of heaven, or poetry, or law,
  Or politics, or prayer;
The child comes in, 'tis now all smiles and play,
Farewell to grave discourse and poet's lay,
  Philosophy and care.

When fancy wakes, but sense in heaviest sleep
Lies steeped, and like the sobs of them that weep
  The dark stream sinks and swells,
The dawn, like Pharos gleaming o'er the sea,
Bursts forth, and sudden wakes the minstrelsy
  Of birds and chiming bells;

Thou art my dawn; my soul is as the field,
Where sweetest flowers their balmy perfumes yield
  When breathed upon by thee,

Of forest, where thy voice like zephyr plays,
And morn pours out its flood of golden rays,
  When thy sweet smile I see.

Oh, sweetest eyes, like founts of liquid blue;
And little hands that evil never knew,
  Pure as the new-formed snow;
Thy feet are still unstained by this world’s mire,
Thy golden locks like aureole of fire
  Circle thy cherub brow!

Dove of our ark, thine angel spirit flies
On azure wings forth from thy beaming eyes.
  Though weak thine infant feet,
What strange amaze this new and strange world gives
To thy sweet virgin soul, that spotless lives
  In virgin body sweet.

Oh, gentle face, radiant with happy smile,
And eager prattling tongue that knows no guile,
  Quick changing tears and bliss;
Thy soul expands to catch this new world’s light,
Thy mazed eyes to drink each wondrous sight,
  Thy lips to taste the kiss.

Oh, God! bless me and mine, and these I love,
And e’en my foes that still triumphant prove
  Victors by force or guile;
A flowerless summer may we never see,
Or nest of bird bereft, or hive of bee,
  Or home of infant’s smile.

HENRY HIGHTON, M.A.

THE WATCHING ANGEL.

("Dans l'alcôve sombre.")

[XX., November, 1831.]

In the dusky nook,
  Near the altar laid,
Sleeps the child in shadow
  Of his mother's bed:
Softly he reposes,
And his lid of roses,
Closed to earth, uncloses
  On the heaven o'erhead.

Many a dream is with him,
  Fresh from fairyland,
Spangled o'er with diamonds
  Seems the ocean sand;
Suns are flaming there,
Troops of ladies fair
Souls of infants bear
  In each charming hand.

Oh, enchanting vision!
  Lo, a rill upsprings,
And from out its bosom
  Comes a voice that sings
Lovelier there appear
Sire and sisters dear,
While his mother near
  Plumes her new-born wings.

But a brighter vision
  Yet his eyes behold;
Roses pied and lilies
  Every path enfold;

Lakes delicious sleeping,
Silver fishes leaping,
Through the wavelets creeping
  Up to reeds of gold.

Slumber on, sweet infant,
  Slumber peacefully
Thy young soul yet knows not
  What thy lot may be.
Like dead weeds that sweep
O’er the dol’rous deep,
Thou art borne in sleep.
  What is all to thee?

Thou canst slumber by the way;
  Thou hast learnt to borrow
Naught from study, naught from care;
  The cold hand of sorrow
On thy brow unwrinkled yet,
Where young truth and candor sit,
Ne’er with rugged nail hath writ
  That sad word, “To-morrow!”

Innocent! thou sleepest —
  See the angelic band,
Who foreknow the trials
  That for man are planned;
Seeing him unarmed,
Unfearing, unalarmed,
With their tears have warmed
  This unconscious hand.

Still they, hovering o’er him,
  Kiss him where he lies,
Hark, he sees them weeping,
  ”Gabriel!” he cries;
“Hush!” the angel says,
On his lip he lays

One finger, one displays
  His native skies.

Foreign Quarterly Review

SUNSET.

("Le soleil s'est couché")

[XXXV. vi., April, 1829.]

The sun set this evening in masses of cloud,
  The storm comes to-morrow, then calm be the night,
Then the Dawn in her chariot refulgent and proud,
  Then more nights, and still days, steps of Time in his flight.
The days shall pass rapid as swifts on the wing.
  O'er the face of the hills, o'er the face of the seas,
O'er streamlets of silver, and forests that ring
  With a dirge for the dead, chanted low by the breeze;
The face of the waters, the brow of the mounts
Deep scarred but not shrivelled, and woods tufted green,
Their youth shall renew; and the rocks to the founts
Shall yield what these yielded to ocean their queen.
But day by day bending still lower my head,
  Still chilled in the sunlight, soon I shall have cast,
At height of the banquet, my lot with the dead,
  Unmissed by creation aye joyous and vast.

TORU DUTT.

THE UNIVERSAL PRAYER.

("Ma fille, va prier!")

[XXXVII., June, 1830.]

I.

Come, child, to prayer; the busy day is done,
  A golden star gleams through the dusk of night;
The hills are trembling in the rising mist,
  The rumbling wain looms dim upon the sight;
All things wend home to rest; the roadside trees
  Shake off their dust, stirred by the evening breeze.

The sparkling stars gush forth in sudden blaze,
  As twilight open flings the doors of night;
The fringe of carmine narrows in the west,
  The rippling waves are tipped with silver light;
The bush, the path — all blend in one dull gray;
The doubtful traveller gropes his anxious way.

Oh, day! with toil, with wrong, with hatred rife;
  Oh, blessed night! with sober calmness sweet,
The sad winds moaning through the ruined tower,
  The age-worn hind, the sheep's sad broken bleat —
All nature groans opprest with toil and care,
And wearied craves for rest, and love, and prayer.

At eve the babes with angels converse hold,
  While we to our strange pleasures wend our way,
Each with its little face upraised to heaven,
  With folded hands, barefoot kneels down to pray,
At selfsame hour with selfsame words they call
On God, the common Father of them all.

And then they sleep, and golden dreams anon,
  Born as the busy day’s last murmurs die,
In swarms tumultuous flitting through the gloom
  Their breathing lips and golden locks descry.
And as the bees o’er bright flowers joyous roam,
Around their curtained cradles clustering come.

Oh, prayer of childhood! simple, innocent;
  Oh, infant slumbers! peaceful, pure, and light;
Oh, happy worship! ever gay with smiles,
  Meet prelude to the harmonies of night;
As birds beneath the wing enfold their head,
Nestled in prayer the infant seeks its bed.

HENRY HIGHTON, M.A.

II.

To prayer, my child! and O, be thy first prayer
For her who, many nights, with anxious care,
  Rocked thy first cradle; who took thy infant soul
From heaven and gave it to the world; then rife
  With love, still drank herself the gall of life,
And left for thy young lips the honeyed bowl.

And then — I need it more — then pray for me!
For she is gentle, artless, true like thee; —
  She has a guileless heart, brow placid still;
Pity she has for all, envy for none;
Gentle and wise, she patiently lives on;
  And she endures, nor knows who does the ill.

In culling flowers, her novice hand has ne’er
Touched e’en the outer rind of vice; no snare
  With smiling show has lured her steps aside:
On her the past has left no staining mark;
Nor knows she aught of those bad thoughts which, dark
  Like shade on waters, o’er the spirit glide.

She knows not — nor mayest thou — the miseries
In which our spirits mingle: vanities,
  Remorse, soul-gnawing cares, Pleasure’s false show:
Passions which float upon the heart like foam,
Bitter remembrances which o’er us come,
  And Shame’s red spot spread sudden o’er the brow.

I know life better! when thou’rt older grown
I’ll tell thee — it is needful to be known —
  Of the pursuit of wealth — art, power; the cost.
That it is folly, nothingness: that shame
For glory is oft thrown us in the game
  Of Fortune; chances where the soul is lost.

The soul will change. Although of everything
The cause and end be clear, yet wildering
  We roam through life (of vice and error full).
We wander as we go; we feel the load
Of doubt; and to the briars upon the road
  Man leaves his virtue, as the sheep its wool.

Then go, go pray for me! And as the prayer
Gushes in words, be this the form they bear: —
  ”Lord, Lord, our Father! God, my prayer attend; Pardon! Thou art good! Pardon — Thou art great!”
Let them go freely forth, fear not their fate!
  Where thy soul sends them, thitherward they tend.

There’s nothing here below which does not find
Its tendency. O’er plains the rivers wind,
  And reach the sea; the bee, by instinct driven,
Finds out the honeyed flowers; the eagle flies
To seek the sun; the vulture where death lies;
  The swallow to the spring; the prayer to Heaven!

And when thy voice is raised to God for me,
I’m like the slave whom in the vale we see
  Seated to rest, his heavy load laid by;

I feel refreshed — the load of faults and woe
Which, groaning, I drag with me as I go,
  Thy wingèd prayer bears off rejoicingly!

Pray for thy father! that his dreams be bright
With visitings of angel forms of light,
  And his soul burn as incense flaming wide,
Let thy pure breath all his dark sins efface,
So that his heart be like that holy place,
  An altar pavement each eve purified!

C., Tait's Magazine

LES CHANTS DU CRÉPUSCULE. — 1849.

PRELUDE TO “THE SONGS OF TWILIGHT.”

(“De quel non te nommer?”)

[PRELUDE, a, Oct. 20, 1835.]

How shall I note thee, line of troubled years,
  Which mark existence in our little span?
One constant twilight in the heaven appears —
  One constant twilight in the mind of man!

Creed, hope, anticipation and despair,
  Are but a mingling, as of day and night;
The globe, surrounded by deceptive air,
  Is all enveloped in the same half-light.

And voice is deadened by the evening breeze,
  The shepherd’s song, or maiden’s in her bower,
Mix with the rustling of the neighboring trees,
  Within whose foliage is lulled the power.

Yet all unites! The winding path that leads
  Thro’ fields where verdure meets the trav’ller’s eye.
The river’s margin, blurred with wavy reeds,
  The muffled anthem, echoing to the sky!

The ivy smothering the armèd tower;
  The dying wind that mocks the pilot’s ear;
The lordly equipage at midnight hour,
  Draws into danger in a fog the peer;

The votaries of Satan or of Jove;
  The wretched mendicant absorbed in woe;
The din of multitudes that onward move;
  The voice of conscience in the heart below;

The waves, which Thou, O Lord, alone canst still;
  Th’ elastic air; the streamlet on its way;
And all that man projects, or sovereigns will;
  Or things inanimate might seem to say;

The strain of gondolier slow streaming by;
  The lively barks that o’er the waters bound;
The trees that shake their foliage to the sky;
  The wailing voice that fills the cots around;

And man, who studies with an aching heart —
  For now, when smiles are rarely deemed sincere,
In vain the sceptic bids his doubts depart —
  Those doubts at length will arguments appear!

Hence, reader, know the subject of my song —
  A mystic age, resembling twilight gloom,
Wherein we smile at birth, or bear along,
  With noiseless steps, a victim to the tomb!

G.W.M. REYNOLDS

THE LAND OF FABLE.

(“L’Orient! qu’y voyez-vous, poëtes?”)

[PRELUDE, b.]

Now, vot’ries of the Muses, turn your eyes,
  Unto the East, and say what there appears!
“Alas!” the voice of Poesy replies,
  ”Mystic’s that light between the hemispheres!”

“Yes, dread’s the mystic light in yonder heaven —
  Dull is the gleam behind the distant hill;
Like feeble flashes in the welkin driven,
  When the far thunder seems as it were still!

“But who can tell if that uncertain glare
  Be Phoebus’ self, adorned with glowing vest;
Or, if illusions, pregnant in the air,
  Have drawn our glances to the radiant west?

“Haply the sunset has deceived the sight —
  Perchance ’tis evening, while we look for morning;
Bewildered in the mazes of twilight,
  That lucid sunset may appear a dawning!”

G.W.M. REYNOLDS

THE THREE GLORIOUS DAYS.

("Frères, vous avez vos journées.")

[I., July, 1830.]

Youth of France, sons of the bold,
Your oak-leaf victor-wreaths behold!
Our civic-laurels — honored dead!
  So bright your triumphs in life's morn,
  Your maiden-standards hacked and torn,
On Austerlitz might lustre shed.

All that your fathers did re-done —
A people's rights all nobly won —
Ye tore them living from the shroud!
  Three glorious days bright July's gift,
  The Bastiles off our hearts ye lift!
Oh! of such deeds be ever proud!

Of patriot sires ye lineage claim,
Their souls shone in your eye of flame;
Commencing the great work was theirs;
  On you the task to finish laid
  Your fruitful mother, France, who bade
Flow in one day a hundred years.

E'en chilly Albion admires,
The grand example Europe fires;
America shall clap her hands,
  When swiftly o'er the Atlantic wave,
  Fame sounds the news of how the brave,
In three bright days, have burst their bands!

With tyrant dead your fathers traced
A circle wide, with battles graced;
Victorious garland, red and vast!

  Which blooming out from home did go
  To Cadiz, Cairo, Rome, Moscow,
From Jemappes to Montmirail passed!

Of warlike Lyceums ye are
The favored sons; there, deeds of war
Formed e'en your plays, while o'er you shook
  The battle-flags in air aloft!
  Passing your lines, Napoleon oft
Electrified you with a look!

Eagle of France! whose vivid wing
Did in a hundred places fling
A bloody feather, till one night
  The arrow whelmed thee 'neath the wave!
  Look up — rejoice — for now thy brave
And worthy eaglets dare the light.

ELIZABETH COLLINS.

TRIBUTE TO THE VANQUISHED.

("Laissez-moi pleurer sur cette race.")

[I. v.]

  Oh! let me weep that race whose day is past,
  By exile given, by exile claimed once more,
  Thrice swept away upon that fatal blast.
  Whate'er its blame, escort we to our shore
  These relics of the monarchy of yore;
And to th' outmarching oriflamme be paid
War's honors by the flag on Fleurus' field displayed!

Fraser's Magazine

ANGEL OR DEMON.

("Tu domines notre âge; ange ou démon, qu'importe!")

[I. vii.]

Angel or demon! thou, — whether of light
The minister, or darkness — still dost sway
This age of ours; thine eagle's soaring flight
Bears us, all breathless, after it away.
The eye that from thy presence fain would stray,
Shuns thee in vain; thy mighty shadow thrown
Rests on all pictures of the living day,
And on the threshold of our time alone,
Dazzling, yet sombre, stands thy form, Napoleon!

Thus, when the admiring stranger's steps explore
The subject-lands that 'neath Vesuvius be,
Whether he wind along the enchanting shore
To Portici from fair Parthenope,
Or, lingering long in dreamy reverie,
O'er loveliest Ischia's od'rous isle he stray,
Wooed by whose breath the soft and am'rous sea
Seems like some languishing sultana's lay,
A voice for very sweets that scarce can win its way.

Him, whether Paestum's solemn fane detain,
Shrouding his soul with meditation's power;
Or at Pozzuoli, to the sprightly strain
Of tarantella danced 'neath Tuscan tower,
Listening, he while away the evening hour;
Or wake the echoes, mournful, lone and deep,
Of that sad city, in its dreaming bower
By the volcano seized, where mansions keep
The likeness which they wore at that last fatal sleep;

Or be his bark at Posillippo laid,
While as the swarthy boatman at his side
Chants Tasso’s lays to Virgil’s pleased shade,
Ever he sees, throughout that circuit wide,
From shaded nook or sunny lawn espied,
From rocky headland viewed, or flow’ry shore,
From sea, and spreading mead alike descried,
The Giant Mount, tow’ring all objects o’er,
And black’ning with its breath th’ horizon evermore!

Fraser’s Magazine

THE ERUPTION OF VESUVIUS.

(“Quand longtemps a grondé la bouche du Vésuve.”)

[I. vii.]

When huge Vesuvius in its torment long,
Threatening has growled its cavernous jaws among,
When its hot lava, like the bubbling wine,
Foaming doth all its monstrous edge incarnadine,
Then is alarm in Naples.

With dismay,
Wanton and wild her weeping thousands pour,
Convulsive grasp the ground, its rage to stay,
Implore the angry Mount — in vain implore!
For lo! a column tow’ring more and more,
Of smoke and ashes from the burning crest
Shoots like a vulture’s neck reared from its airy nest.

Sudden a flash, and from th’ enormous den
Th’ eruption’s lurid mass bursts forth amain,
Bounding in frantic ecstasy. Ah! then
Farewell to Grecian fount and Tuscan fane!
Sails in the bay imbibe the purpling stain,
The while the lava in profusion wide
Flings o’er the mountain’s neck its showery locks untied.

It comes — it comes! that lava deep and rich,
That dower which fertilizes fields and fills
New moles upon the waters, bay and beach.
Broad sea and clustered isles, one terror thrills
As roll the red inexorable rills;
While Naples trembles in her palaces,
More helpless than the leaves when tempests shake the trees.

  Prodigious chaos, streets in ashes lost,
  Dwellings devoured and vomited again.
  Roof against neighbor-roof, bewildered, tossed.
  The waters boiling and the burning plain;
While clang the giant steeples as they reel,
Unprompted, their own tocsin peal.

  Yet ‘mid the wreck of cities, and the pride
  Of the green valleys and the isles laid low,
  The crash of walls, the tumult waste and wide,
  O’er sea and land; ‘mid all this work of woe,
  Vesuvius still, though close its crater-glow,
Forgetful spares — Heaven wills that it should spare,
The lonely cell where kneels an aged priest in prayer.

Fraser’s Magazine.

MARRIAGE AND FEASTS.

(“La salle est magnifique.”)

[IV. Aug. 23, 1839.]

The hall is gay with limpid lustre bright —
The feast to pampered palate gives delight —
The sated guests pick at the spicy food,
And drink profusely, for the cheer is good;
And at that table — where the wise are few —
Both sexes and all ages meet the view;
The sturdy warrior with a thoughtful face —
The am’rous youth, the maid replete with grace,
The prattling infant, and the hoary hair
Of second childhood’s proselytes — are there; —
And the most gaudy in that spacious hall,
Are e’er the young, or oldest of them all
Helmet and banner, ornament and crest,
The lion rampant, and the jewelled vest,
The silver star that glitters fair and white,
The arms that tell of many a nation’s might —
Heraldic blazonry, ancestral pride,
And all mankind invents for pomp beside,
The wingèd leopard, and the eagle wild —
All these encircle woman, chief and child;
Shine on the carpet burying their feet,
Adorn the dishes that contain their meat;
And hang upon the drapery, which around
Falls from the lofty ceiling to the ground,
Till on the floor its waving fringe is spread,
As the bird’s wing may sweep the roses’ bed. —

Thus is the banquet ruled by Noise and Light,
Since Light and Noise are foremost on the site.

The chamber echoes to the joy of them
Who throng around, each with his diadem —
Each seated on proud throne — but, lesson vain!
Each sceptre holds its master with a chain!
Thus hope of flight were futile from that hall,
Where chiefest guest was most enslaved of all!
The godlike-making draught that fires the soul
The Love — sweet poison-honey — past control,
(Formed of the sexual breath — an idle name,
Offspring of Fancy and a nervous frame) —
Pleasure, mad daughter of the darksome Night,
Whose languid eye flames when is fading light —
The gallant chases where a man is borne
By stalwart charger, to the sounding horn —
The sheeny silk, the bed of leaves of rose,
Made more to soothe the sight than court repose;
The mighty palaces that raise the sneer
Of jealous mendicants and wretches near —
The spacious parks, from which horizon blue
Arches o’er alabaster statues new;
Where Superstition still her walk will take,
Unto soft music stealing o’er the lake —
The innocent modesty by gems undone —
The qualms of judges by small brib’ry won —
The dread of children, trembling while they play —
The bliss of monarchs, potent in their sway —
The note of war struck by the culverin,
That snakes its brazen neck through battle din —
The military millipede
That tramples out the guilty seed —
The capital all pleasure and delight —
And all that like a town or army chokes
The gazer with foul dust or sulphur smokes.
The budget, prize for which ten thousand bait
A subtle hook, that ever, as they wait
Catches a weed, and drags them to their fate,

While gleamingly its golden scales still spread —
Such were the meats by which these guests were fed.

A hundred slaves for lazy master cared,
And served each one with what was e’er prepared
By him, who in a sombre vault below,
Peppered the royal pig with peoples’ woe,
And grimly glad went laboring till late —
The morose alchemist we know as Fate!
That ev’ry guest might learn to suit his taste,
Behind had Conscience, real or mock’ry, placed;
Conscience a guide who every evil spies,
But royal nurses early pluck out both his eyes!

Oh! at the table there be all the great,
Whose lives are bubbles that best joys inflate!
Superb, magnificent of revels — doubt
That sagest lose their heads in such a rout!
In the long laughter, ceaseless roaming round,
Joy, mirth and glee give out a maelström’s sound;
And the astonished gazer casts his care,
Where ev’ry eyeball glistens in the flare.

But oh! while yet the singing Hebes pour
Forgetfulness of those without the door —
At very hour when all are most in joy,
And the hid orchestra annuls annoy,
Woe — woe! with jollity a-top the heights,
With further tapers adding to the lights,
And gleaming ‘tween the curtains on the street,
Where poor folks stare — hark to the heavy feet!
Some one smites roundly on the gilded grate,
Some one below will be admitted straight,
Some one, though not invited, who’ll not wait!
Close not the door! Your orders are vain breath —
That stranger enters to be known as Death —

Or merely Exile — clothed in alien guise —
Death drags away — with his prey Exile flies!

Death is that sight. He promenades the hall,
And casts a gloomy shadow on them all,
’Neath which they bend like willows soft,
Ere seizing one — the dumbest monarch oft,
And bears him to eternal heat and drouth,
While still the toothsome morsel’s in his mouth.

G.W.M. REYNOLDS.

THE MORROW OF GRANDEUR.

(“Non, l’avenir n’est à personne!”)

[V. ii., August, 1832.]

Sire, beware, the future’s range
  Is of God alone the power,
Naught below but augurs change,
  E’en with ev’ry passing hour.
Future! mighty mystery!
All the earthly goods that be,
Fortune, glory, war’s renown,
King or kaiser’s sparkling crown,
Victory! with her burning wings,
Proud ambition’s covetings, —
  These may our grasp no more detain
Than the free bird who doth alight
Upon our roof, and takes its flight
  High into air again.

Nor smile, nor tear, nor haughtiest lord’s command,
Avails t’ unclasp the cold and closèd hand.
  Thy voice to disenthrall,
Dumb phantom, shadow ever at our side!
Veiled spectre, journeying with us stride for stride,
  Whom men “To-morrow” call.

Oh, to-morrow! who may dare
  Its realities to scan?
God to-morrow brings to bear
  What to-day is sown by man.
’Tis the lightning in its shroud,
’Tis the star-concealing cloud,
Traitor, ’tis his purpose showing,
Engine, lofty tow’rs o’erthrowing,

Wand’ring star, its region changing,
“Lady of kingdoms,” ever ranging.
  To-morrow! ’Tis the rude display
Of the throne’s framework, blank and cold,
That, rich with velvet, bright with gold,
  Dazzles the eye to-day.

To-morrow! ’tis the foaming war-horse falling;
To-morrow! thy victorious march appalling,
  ’Tis the red fires from Moscow’s tow’rs that wave;
’Tis thine Old Guard strewing the Belgian plain;
’Tis the lone island in th’ Atlantic main:
  To-morrow! ’tis the grave!

Into capitals subdued
  Thou mayst ride with gallant rein,
Cut the knots of civil feud
  With the trenchant steel in twain;
With thine edicts barricade
Haughty Thames’ o’er-freighted trade;
Fickle Victory’s self enthrall,
Captive to thy trumpet call;
Burst the stoutest gates asunder;
Leave the names of brightest wonder,
  Pale and dim, behind thee far;
And to exhaustless armies yield
Thy glancing spur, — o’er Europe’s field
  A glory-guiding star.

God guards duration, if lends space to thee,
Thou mayst o’er-range mundane immensity,
  Rise high as human head can rise sublime,
Snatch Europe from the stamp of Charlemagne,
Asia from Mahomet; but never gain
  Power o’er the Morrow from the Lord of Time!

Fraser’s Magazine.

THE EAGLET MOURNED.

(“Encore si ce banni n’eût rien aimé sur terre.”)

[V, iv., August, 1832.]

Too hard Napoleon’s fate! if, lone,
No being he had loved, no single one,
  Less dark that doom had been.
But with the heart of might doth ever dwell
The heart of love! and in his island cell
  Two things there were — I ween.

Two things — a portrait and a map there were —
Here hung the pictured world, an infant there:
That framed his genius, this enshrined his love.
And as at eve he glanced round th’ alcove,
Where jailers watched his very thoughts to spy,
What mused he then — what dream of years gone by
Stirred ‘neath that discrowned brow, and fired that glistening eye?

’Twas not the steps of that heroic tale
That from Arcola marched to Montmirail
  On Glory’s red degrees;
Nor Cairo-pashas’ steel-devouring steeds,
Nor the tall shadows of the Pyramids —
  Ah! Twas not always these;

’Twas not the bursting shell, the iron sleet,
The whirlwind rush of battle ‘neath his feet,
  Through twice ten years ago,
When at his beck, upon that sea of steel
Were launched the rustling banners — there to reel
  Like masts when tempests blow.

’Twas not Madrid, nor Kremlin of the Czar,
Nor Pharos on Old Egypt’s coast afar,

Nor shrill réveillé's camp-awakening sound,
Nor bivouac couch'd its starry fires around,
Crested dragoons, grim, veteran grenadiers,
Nor the red lancers 'mid their wood of spears
Blazing like baleful poppies 'mong the golden ears.

No— 'twas an infant's image, fresh and fair,
With rosy mouth half oped, as slumbering there.
  It lay beneath the smile,
Of her whose breast, soft-bending o'er its sleep,
Lingering upon that little lip doth keep
  One pendent drop the while.

Then, his sad head upon his hands inclined,
He wept; that father-heart all unconfined,
  Outpoured in love alone.
My blessing on thy clay-cold head, poor child.
Sole being for whose sake his thoughts, beguiled,
  Forgot the world's lost throne.

Fraser's Magazine

INVOCATION.

[V, vi., August, 1832.]

Say, Lord! for Thou alone canst tell
Where lurks the good invisible
Amid the depths of discord's sea —
That seem, alas! so dark to me!
Oppressive to a mighty state,
Contentions, feuds, the people's hate —
But who dare question that which fate
  Has ordered to have been?
Haply the earthquake may unfold
The resting-place of purest gold,
And haply surges up have rolled
  The pearls that were unseen!

G.W.M. REYNOLDS.

OUTSIDE THE BALL-ROOM.

(“Ainsi l’Hôtel de Ville illumine.”)

[VI., May, 1833.]

Behold the ball-room flashing on the sight,
From step to cornice one grand glare of light;
The noise of mirth and revelry resounds,
Like fairy melody on haunted grounds.
But who demands this profuse, wanton glee,
These shouts prolonged and wild festivity —
Not sure our city — web, more woe than bliss,
In any hour, requiring aught but this!

Deaf is the ear of all that jewelled crowd
To sorrow’s sob, although its call be loud.
Better than waste long nights in idle show,
To help the indigent and raise the low —
To train the wicked to forsake his way,
And find th’ industrious work from day to day!
Better to charity those hours afford,
Which now are wasted at the festal board!

And ye, O high-born beauties! in whose soul
Virtue resides, and Vice has no control;
Ye whom prosperity forbids to sin,
So fair without — so chaste, so pure within —
Whose honor Want ne’er threatened to betray,
Whose eyes are joyous, and whose heart is gay;
Around whose modesty a hundred arms,
Aided by pride, protect a thousand charms;
For you this ball is pregnant with delight;
As glitt’ring planets cheer the gloomy night: —
But, O, ye wist not, while your souls are glad,
How millions wander, homeless, sick and sad!

Hazard has placed you in a happy sphere,
And like your own to you all lots appear;
For blinded by the sun of bliss your eyes
Can see no dark horizon to the skies.

Such is the chance of life! Each gallant thane,
Prince, peer, and noble, follow in your train; —
They praise your loveliness, and in your ear
They whisper pleasing things, but insincere;
Thus, as the moths enamoured of the light,
Ye seek these realms of revelry each night.
But as ye travel thither, did ye know
What wretches walk the streets through which you go.
Sisters, whose gewgaws glitter in the glare
Of your great lustre, all expectant there,
Watching the passing crowd with avid eye,
Till one their love, or lust, or shame may buy;
Or, with commingling jealousy and rage,
They mark the progress of your equipage;
And their deceitful life essays the while
To mask their woe beneath a sickly smile!

G.W.M. REYNOLDS.

PRAYER FOR FRANCE.

("O Dieu, si vous avez la France.")

[VII., August, 1832.]

O God! if France be still thy guardian care,
Oh! spare these mercenary combats, spare!
The thrones that now are reared but to be broke;
The rights we render, and anon revoke;
The muddy stream of laws, ideas, needs,
Flooding our social life as it proceeds;
Opposing tribunes, even when seeming one —
Soft, yielding plaster put in place of stone;
Wave chasing wave in endless ebb and flow;
War, darker still and deeper in its woe;
One party fall'n, successor scarce preludes,
Than, straight, new views their furious feuds;
The great man's pressure on the poor for gold,
Rumors uncertain, conflicts, crimes untold;
Dark systems hatched in secret and in fear,
Telling of hate and strife to every ear,
That even to midnight sleep no peace is given,
For murd'rous cannon through our streets are driven.

J.S. MACRAE.

TO CANARIS, THE GREEK PATRIOT.

(“Canaris! nous t’avons oublié.”)

[VIII., October, 1832.]

O Canaris! O Canaris! the poet’s song
Has blameful left untold thy deeds too long!
But when the tragic actor’s part is done,
When clamor ceases, and the fights are won,
When heroes realize what Fate decreed,
When chieftains mark no more which thousands bleed;
When they have shone, as clouded or as bright,
As fitful meteor in the heaven at night,
And when the sycophant no more proclaims
To gaping crowds the glory of their names, —
’Tis then the mem’ries of warriors die,
And fall — alas! — into obscurity,
Until the poet, in whose verse alone
Exists a world — can make their actions known,
And in eternal epic measures, show
They are not yet forgotten here below.
And yet by us neglected! glory gloomed,
Thy name seems sealed apart, entombed,
Although our shouts to pigmies rise — no cries
To mark thy presence echo to the skies;
Farewell to Grecian heroes — silent is the lute,
And sets your sun without one Memnon bruit?

There was a time men gave no peace
To cheers for Athens, Bozzaris, Leonidas, and Greece!
And Canaris’ more-worshipped name was found
On ev’ry lip, in ev’ry heart around.
But now is changed the scene! On hist’ry’s page
Are writ o’er thine deeds of another age,

And thine are not remembered. — Greece, farewell!
The world no more thine heroes' deeds will tell.

Not that this matters to a man like thee!
To whom is left the dark blue open sea,
Thy gallant bark, that o'er the water flies,
And the bright planet guiding in clear skies;
All these remain, with accident and strife,
Hope, and the pleasures of a roving life,
Boon Nature's fairest prospects — land and main —
The noisy starting, glad return again;
The pride of freeman on a bounding deck
Which mocks at dangers and despises wreck,
And e'en if lightning-pinions cleave the sea,
'Tis all replete with joyousness to thee!

Yes, these remain! blue sky and ocean blue,
Thine eagles with one sweep beyond the view —
The sun in golden beauty ever pure,
The distance where rich warmth doth aye endure —
Thy language so mellifluously bland,
Mixed with sweet idioms from Italia's strand,
As Baya's streams to Samos' waters glide
And with them mingle in one placid tide.

Yes, these remain, and, Canaris! thy arms —
The sculptured sabre, faithful in alarms —
The broidered garb, the yataghan, the vest
Expressive of thy rank, to thee still rest!
And when thy vessel o'er the foaming sound
Is proud past storied coasts to blithely bound,
At once the point of beauty may restore
Smiles to thy lip, and smoothe thy brow once more.

G.W.M. REYNOLDS.

POLAND.

(“Seule au pied de la tour.”)

[IX., September, 1833.]

Alone, beneath the tower whence thunder forth
The mandates of the Tyrant of the North,
Poland’s sad genius kneels, absorbed in tears,
Bound, vanquished, pallid with her fears —
Alas! the crucifix is all that’s left
To her, of freedom and her sons bereft;
And on her royal robe foul marks are seen
Where Russian hectors’ scornful feet have been.
Anon she hears the clank of murd’rous arms, —
The swordsmen come once more to spread alarms!
And while she weeps against the prison walls,
And waves her bleeding arm until it falls,
To France she hopeless turns her glazing eyes,
And sues her sister’s succor ere she dies.

G.W.M. REYNOLDS.

INSULT NOT THE FALLEN.

(“Oh! n’insultez jamais une femme qui tombe.”)

[XIV., Sept. 6, 1835.]

I tell you, hush! no word of sneering scorn —
  True, fallen; but God knows how deep her sorrow.
Poor girl! too many like her only born
  To love one day — to sin — and die the morrow.
What know you of her struggles or her grief?
  Or what wild storms of want and woe and pain
Tore down her soul from honor? As a leaf
  From autumn branches, or a drop of rain
That hung in frailest splendor from a bough —
  Bright, glistening in the sunlight of God’s day —
So had she clung to virtue once. But now —
  See Heaven’s clear pearl polluted with earth’s clay!
The sin is yours — with your accursed gold —
  Man’s wealth is master — woman’s soul the slave!
Some purest water still the mire may hold.
  Is there no hope for her — no power to save?
Yea, once again to draw up from the clay
  The fallen raindrop, till it shine above,
Or save a fallen soul, needs but one ray
  Of Heaven’s sunshine, or of human love.

W.C.K. WILDE.

MORNING.

("L'aurore s'allume.")

[XX. a, December, 1834.]

Morning glances hither,
  Now the shade is past;
Dream and fog fly thither
  Where Night goes at last;
Open eyes and roses
As the darkness closes;
And the sound that grows is
  Nature walking fast.

Murmuring all and singing,
  Hark! the news is stirred,
Roof and creepers clinging,
  Smoke and nest of bird;
Winds to oak-trees bear it,
Streams and fountains hear it,
Every breath and spirit
  As a voice is heard.

All takes up its story,
  Child resumes his play,
Hearth its ruddy glory,
  Lute its lifted lay.
Wild or out of senses,
Through the world immense is
Sound as each commences
  Schemes of yesterday.

W.M. HARDINGE.

SONG OF LOVE.

("S'il est un charmant gazon.")

[XXII, Feb. 18, 1834.]

If there be a velvet sward
  By dewdrops pearly drest,
Where through all seasons fairies guard
  Flowers by bees carest,
Where one may gather, day and night,
Roses, honeysuckle, lily white,
I fain would make of it a site
  For thy foot to rest.

If there be a loving heart
  Where Honor rules the breast,
Loyal and true in every part,
  That changes ne'er molest,
Eager to run its noble race,
Intent to do some work of grace,
I fain would make of it a place
  For thy brow to rest.

And if there be of love a dream
  Rose-scented as the west,
Which shows, each time it comes, a gleam, —
  A something sweet and blest, —
A dream of which heaven is the pole,
A dream that mingles soul and soul,
I fain of it would make the goal
  Where thy mind should rest.

TORU DUTT.

SWEET CHARMER.

(“L’aube naît et ta porte est close.”)

[XXIII., February, 18 — .]

Though heaven’s gate of light uncloses,
  Thou stirr’st not — thou’rt laid to rest,
Waking are thy sister roses,
  One only dreamest on thy breast.
    Hear me, sweet dreamer!
      Tell me all thy fears,
    Trembling in song,
      But to break in tears.

Lo! to greet thee, spirits pressing,
  Soft music brings the gentle dove,
And fair light falleth like a blessing,
  While my poor heart can bring thee only love.
Worship thee, angels love thee, sweet woman?
  Yes; for that love perfects my soul.
None the less of heaven that my heart is human,
  Blent in one exquisite, harmonious whole.

H.B. FARNIE.

MORE STRONG THAN TIME.

(“Puisque j’ai mis ma lèvre à ta coupe.”)

[XXV., Jan. 1, 1835.]

Since I have set my lips to your full cup, my sweet,
  Since I my pallid face between your hands have laid,
Since I have known your soul, and all the bloom of it,
  And all the perfume rare, now buried in the shade;

Since it was given to me to hear one happy while,
  The words wherein your heart spoke all its mysteries,
Since I have seen you weep, and since I have seen you smile,
  Your lips upon my lips, and your gaze upon my eyes;

Since I have known upon my forehead glance and gleam,
  A ray, a single ray, of your star, veiled always,
Since I have felt the fall upon my lifetime’s stream,
  Of one rose-petal plucked from the roses of your days;

I now am bold to say to the swift-changing hours,
  Pass — pass upon your way, for I grow never old.
Flee to the dark abysm with all your fading flowers,
  One rose that none may pluck, within my heart I hold.

Your flying wings may smite, but they can never spill
  The cup fulfilled of love, from which my lips are wet.
My heart has far more fire than you have frost to chill,
  My soul more love than you can make my love forget.

A. LANG.

ROSES AND BUTTERFLIES.

("Roses et Papillons.")

[XXVII., Dec. 7, 1834.]

The grave receives us all:
  Ye butterflies and roses gay and sweet
Why do ye linger, say?
  Will ye not dwell together as is meet?
Somewhere high in the air
  Would thy wing seek a home 'mid sunny skies,
In mead or mossy dell —
  If there thy odors longest, sweetest rise.

Have where ye will your dwelling,
  Or breath or tint whose praise we sing;
Butterfly shining bright,
  Full-blown or bursting rosebud, flow'r or wing.
Dwell together ye fair,
  'Tis a boon to the loveliest given;
Perchance ye then may choose your home
  On the earth or in heaven.

W.C. WESTBROOK

A SIMILE.

(“Soyez comme l’oiseau.”)

[XXXIII. vi.]

Thou art like the bird
  That alights and sings
Though the frail spray bends —
  For he knows he has wings.

FANNY KEMBLE (BUTLER)

THE POET TO HIS WIFE.

(“À toi, toujours à toi.”)

[XXXIX., 1823]

To thee, all time to thee,
My lyre a voice shall be!
Above all earthly fashion,
  Above mere mundane rage,
Your mind made it my passion
  To write for noblest stage.

Whoe’er you be, send blessings to her — she
Was sister of my soul immortal, free!
My pride, my hope, my shelter, my resource,
When green hoped not to gray to run its course;
She was enthronèd Virtue under heaven’s dome,
My idol in the shrine of curtained home.

LES VOIX INTÉRIEURES. — 1840.

THE BLINDED BOURBONS.

(“Qui leur eût dit l’austère destineé?”)

[II. v., November, 1836.]

Who then, to them had told the Future’s story?
Or said that France, low bowed before their glory,
  One day would mindful be
Of them and of their mournful fate no more,
Than of the wrecks its waters have swept o’er
  The unremembering sea?

That their old Tuileries should see the fall
Of blazons from its high heraldic hall,
  Dismantled, crumbling, prone;
Or that, o’er yon dark Louvre’s architrave
A Corsican, as yet unborn, should grave
  An eagle, then unknown?

That gay St. Cloud another lord awaited,
Or that in scenes Le Nôtre’s art created
  For princely sport and ease,
Crimean steeds, trampling the velvet glade,
Should browse the bark beneath the stately shade
  Of the great Louis’ trees?

Fraser’s Magazine.

TO ALBERT DÜRER.

(“Dans les vieilles forêts.”)

[X., April 20, 1837.]

Through ancient forests — where like flowing tide
The rising sap shoots vigor far and wide,
Mounting the column of the alder dark
And silv’ring o’er the birch’s shining bark —
Hast thou not often, Albert Dürer, strayed
Pond’ring, awe-stricken — through the half-lit glade,
Pallid and trembling — glancing not behind
From mystic fear that did thy senses bind,
Yet made thee hasten with unsteady pace?
Oh, Master grave! whose musings lone we trace
Throughout thy works we look on reverently.
Amidst the gloomy umbrage thy mind’s eye
Saw clearly, ‘mong the shadows soft yet deep,
The web-toed faun, and Pan the green-eyed peep,
Who deck’d with flowers the cave where thou might’st rest,
Leaf-laden dryads, too, in verdure drest.
A strange weird world such forest was to thee,
Where mingled truth and dreams in mystery;
There leaned old ruminating pines, and there
The giant elms, whose boughs deformed and bare
A hundred rough and crooked elbows made;
And in this sombre group the wind had swayed,
Nor life — nor death — but life in death seemed found.
The cresses drink — the water flows — and round
Upon the slopes the mountain rowans meet,
And ‘neath the brushwood plant their gnarled feet,
Intwining slowly where the creepers twine.
There, too, the lakes as mirrors brightly shine,
And show the swan-necked flowers, each line by line.
Chimeras roused take stranger shapes for thee,

The glittering scales of mailèd throat we see,
And claws tight pressed on huge old knotted tree;
While from a cavern dim the bright eyes glare.
Oh, vegetation! Spirit! Do we dare
Question of matter, and of forces found
‘Neath a rude skin-in living verdure bound.
Oh, Master — I, like thee, have wandered oft
Where mighty trees made arches high aloft,
But ever with a consciousness of strife,
A surging struggle of the inner life.
Ever the trembling of the grass I say,
And the boughs rocking as the breezes play,
Have stirred deep thoughts in a bewild’ring way.
Oh, God! alone Great Witness of all deeds,
Of thoughts and acts, and all our human needs,
God only knows how often in such scenes
Of savage beauty under leafy screens,
I’ve felt the mighty oaks had spirit dower —
Like me knew mirth and sorrow — sentient power,
And whisp’ring each to each in twilight dim,
Had hearts that beat — and owned a soul from Him!

MRS. NEWTON CROSLAND

TO HIS MUSE.

("Puisqu'ici-bas tout âme.")

[XL, May 19, 1836.]

Since everything below,
  Doth, in this mortal state,
Its tone, its fragrance, or its glow
  Communicate;

Since all that lives and moves
  Upon the earth, bestows
On what it seeks and what it loves
  Its thorn or rose;

Since April to the trees
  Gives a bewitching sound,
And sombre night to grief gives ease,
  And peace profound;

Since day-spring on the flower
  A fresh'ning drop confers,
And the fresh air on branch and bower
  Its choristers;

Since the dark wave bestows
  A soft caress, imprest
On the green bank to which it goes
  Seeking its rest;

I give thee at this hour,
  Thus fondly bent o'er thee,
The best of all the things in dow'r
  That in me be.

Receive,-poor gift, ’tis true,
  Which grief, not joy, endears, —
My thoughts, that like a shower of dew,
  Reach thee in tears.

My vows untold receive,
  All pure before thee laid;
Receive of all the days I live
  The light or shade!

My hours with rapture fill’d,
  Which no suspicion wrongs;
And all the blandishments distill’d
  From all my songs.

My spirit, whose essay
  Flies fearless, wild, and free,
And hath, and seeks, to guide its way
  No star but thee.

No pensive, dreamy Muse,
  Who, though all else should smile,
Oft as thou weep’st, with thee would choose,
  To weep the while.

Oh, sweetest mine! this gift
  Receive;— ’tis throe alone; —
My heart, of which there’s nothing left
  When Love is gone!

Fraser’s Magazine.

THE COW.

("Devant la blanche ferme.")

[XV., May, 1837.]

Before the farm where, o'er the porch, festoon
Wild creepers red, and gaffer sits at noon,
Whilst strutting fowl display their varied crests,
And the old watchdog slumberously rests,
They half-attentive to the clarion of their king,
Resplendent in the sunshine op'ning wing —
There stood a cow, with neck-bell jingling light,
Superb, enormous, dappled red and white —
Soft, gentle, patient as a hind unto its young,
Letting the children swarm until they hung
Around her, under — rustics with their teeth
Whiter than marble their ripe lips beneath,
And bushy hair fresh and more brown
Than mossy walls at old gates of a town,
Calling to one another with loud cries
For younger imps to be in at the prize;
Stealing without concern but tremulous with fear
They glance around lest Doll the maid appear; —
Their jolly lips — that haply cause some pain,
And all those busy fingers, pressing now and 'gain,
The teeming udders whose small, thousand pores
Gush out the nectar 'mid their laughing roars,
While she, good mother, gives and gives in heaps,
And never moves. Anon there creeps
A vague soft shiver o'er the hide unmarred,
As sharp they pull, she seems of stone most hard.
Dreamy of large eye, seeks she no release,
And shrinks not while there's one still to appease.
  Thus Nature — refuge 'gainst the slings of fate!
Mother of all, indulgent as she's great!

Lets us, the hungered of each age and rank,
Shadow and milk seek in the eternal flank;
Mystic and carnal, foolish, wise, repair,
The souls retiring and those that dare,
Sages with halos, poets laurel-crowned,
All creep beneath or cluster close around,
And with unending greed and joyous cries,
From sources full, draw need’s supplies,
Quench hearty thirst, obtain what must eftsoon
Form blood and mind, in freest boon,
Respire at length thy sacred flaming light,
From all that greets our ears, touch, scent or sight —
Brown leaves, blue mountains, yellow gleams, green sod —
Thou undistracted still dost dream of God.

TORU DUTT.

MOTHERS.

("Regardez: les enfants.")

[XX., June, 1884.]

See all the children gathered there,
Their mother near; so young, so fair,
An eider sister she might be,
And yet she hears, amid their games,
The shaking of their unknown names
  In the dark urn of destiny.

She wakes their smiles, she soothes their cares,
On that pure heart so like to theirs,
  Her spirit with such life is rife
That in its golden rays we see,
Touched into graceful poesy,
  The dull cold commonplace of life.

Still following, watching, whether burn
The Christmas log in winter stern,
  While merry plays go round;
Or streamlets laugh to breeze of May
That shakes the leaf to break away —
  A shadow falling to the ground.

If some poor man with hungry eyes
Her baby's coral bauble spies,
  She marks his look with famine wild,
For Christ's dear sake she makes with joy
An alms-gift of the silver toy —
  A smiling angel of the child.

Dublin University Magazine

TO SOME BIRDS FLOWN AWAY.

(“Enfants! Oh! revenez!”)

[XXII, April, 1837]

Children, come back — come back, I say —
You whom my folly chased away
A moment since, from this my room,
With bristling wrath and words of doom!
What had you done, you bandits small,
With lips as red as roses all?
What crime? — what wild and hapless deed?
  What porcelain vase by you was split
To thousand pieces? Did you need
  For pastime, as you handled it,
Some Gothic missal to enrich
  With your designs fantastical?
  Or did your tearing fingers fall
On some old picture? Which, oh, which
Your dreadful fault? Not one of these;
Only when left yourselves to please
This morning but a moment here
  ’Mid papers tinted by my mind
You took some embryo verses near —
  Half formed, but fully well designed
To open out. Your hearts desire
Was but to throw them on the fire,
Then watch the tinder, for the sight
Of shining sparks that twinkle bright
As little boats that sail at night,
Or like the window lights that spring
From out the dark at evening.

’Twas all, and you were well content.
Fine loss was this for anger’s vent —

A strophe ill made midst your play,
Sweet sound that chased the words away
In stormy flight. An ode quite new,
With rhymes inflated — stanzas, too,
That panted, moving lazily,
  And heavy Alexandrine lines
That seemed to jostle bodily,
  Like children full of play designs
That spring at once from schoolroom’s form.
Instead of all this angry storm,
Another might have thanked you well
For saving prey from that grim cell,
That hollowed den ‘neath journals great,
  Where editors who poets flout
  With their demoniac laughter shout.
And I have scolded you! What fate
For charming dwarfs who never meant
  To anger Hercules! And I
Have frightened you! — My chair I sent
  Back to the wall, and then let fly
A shower of words the envious use —
“Get out,” I said, with hard abuse,
“Leave me alone — alone I say.”
Poor man alone! Ah, well-a-day,
What fine result — what triumph rare!
  As one turns from the coffin’d dead
So left you me: — I could but stare
  Upon the door through which you fled —
I proud and grave — but punished quite.
And what care you for this my plight! —
You have recovered liberty,
Fresh air and lovely scenery,
The spacious park and wished-for grass;
  The running stream, where you can throw
A blade to watch what comes to pass;
  Blue sky, and all the spring can show;
Nature, serenely fair to see;

The book of birds and spirits free,
God’s poem, worth much more than mine,
Where flowers for perfect stanzas shine —
Flowers that a child may pluck in play,
No harsh voice frightening it away.
And I’m alone — all pleasure o’er —
  Alone with pedant called “Ennui,”
For since the morning at my door
  Ennui has waited patiently.
That docto-r-London born, you mark,
One Sunday in December dark,
Poor little ones — he loved you not,
And waited till the chance he got
To enter as you passed away,
  And in the very corner where
You played with frolic laughter gay,
  He sighs and yawns with weary air.

What can I do? Shall I read books,
Or write more verse — or turn fond looks
Upon enamels blue, sea-green,
And white — on insects rare as seen
Upon my Dresden china ware?
Or shall I touch the globe, and care
To make the heavens turn upon
Its axis? No, not one — not one
Of all these things care I to do;
All wearies me — I think of you.
In truth with you my sunshine fled,
And gayety with your light tread —
Glad noise that set me dreaming still.
’Twas my delight to watch your will,
And mark you point with finger-tips
  To help your spelling out a word;
To see the pearls between your lips
  When I your joyous laughter heard;
Your honest brows that looked so true,

  And said “Oh, yes!” to each intent;
Your great bright eyes, that loved to view
  With admiration innocent
My fine old Sèvres; the eager thought
That every kind of knowledge sought;
The elbow push with “Come and see!”

Oh, certes! spirits, sylphs, there be,
And fays the wind blows often here;
The gnomes that squat the ceiling near,
In corners made by old books dim;
The long-backed dwarfs, those goblins grim
That seem at home ‘mong vases rare,
And chat to them with friendly air —
Oh, how the joyous demon throng
Must all have laughed with laughter long
To see you on my rough drafts fall,
My bald hexameters, and all
The mournful, miserable band,
And drag them with relentless hand
From out their box, with true delight
To set them each and all a-light,
And then with clapping hands to lean
Above the stove and watch the scene,
How to the mass deformed there came
A soul that showed itself in flame!

Bright tricksy children — oh, I pray
Come back and sing and dance away,
And chatter too — sometimes you may,
A giddy group, a big book seize —
Or sometimes, if it so you please,
With nimble step you’ll run to me
  And push the arm that holds the pen,
Till on my finished verse will be
  A stroke that’s like a steeple when
Seen suddenly upon a plain.

My soul longs for your breath again
To warm it. Oh, return — come here
With laugh and babble — and no fear
  When with your shadow you obscure
  The book I read, for I am sure,
Oh, madcaps terrible and dear,
That you were right and I was wrong.
But who has ne’er with scolding tongue
Blamed out of season. Pardon me!
You must forgive — for sad are we.

The young should not be hard and cold
And unforgiving to the old.
Children each morn your souls ope out
  Like windows to the shining day,
Oh, miracle that comes about,
  The miracle that children gay
Have happiness and goodness too,
Caressed by destiny are you,
  Charming you are, if you but play.
But we with living overwrought,
And full of grave and sombre thought,
Are snappish oft: dear little men,
We have ill-tempered days, and then,
Are quite unjust and full of care;
It rained this morning and the air
Was chill; but clouds that dimm’d the sky
Have passed. Things spited me, and why?
But now my heart repents. Behold
What ’twas that made me cross, and scold!
All by-and-by you’ll understand,
When brows are mark’d by Time’s stern hand;
Then you will comprehend, be sure,
When older — that’s to say, less pure.

The fault I freely own was mine.
But oh, for pardon now I pine!

Enough my punishment to meet,
You must forgive, I do entreat
With clasped hands praying — oh, come back,
Make peace, and you shall nothing lack.
See now my pencils — paper — here,
And pointless compasses, and dear
Old lacquer-work; and stoneware clear
Through glass protecting; all man’s toys
So coveted by girls and boys.
Great China monsters — bodies much
Like cucumbers — you all shall touch.
I yield up all! my picture rare
  Found beneath antique rubbish heap,
My great and tapestried oak chair
  I will from you no longer keep.
You shall about my table climb,
  And dance, or drag, without a cry
From me as if it were a crime.
  Even I’ll look on patiently
If you your jagged toys all throw
Upon my carved bench, till it show
The wood is torn; and freely too,
I’ll leave in your own hands to view,
My pictured Bible — oft desired —
But which to touch your fear inspired —
With God in emperor’s robes attired.

Then if to see my verses burn,
Should seem to you a pleasant turn,
Take them to freely tear away
Or burn. But, oh! not so I’d say,
If this were Méry’s room to-day.
That noble poet! Happy town,
Marseilles the Greek, that him doth own!
Daughter of Homer, fair to see,
Of Virgil’s son the mother she.
To you I’d say, Hold, children all,

Let but your eyes on his work fall;
These papers are the sacred nest
In which his crooning fancies rest;
To-morrow winged to Heaven they’ll soar,
  For new-born verse imprisoned still
In manuscript may suffer sore
  At your small hands and childish will,
Without a thought of bad intent,
Of cruelty quite innocent.
You wound their feet, and bruise their wings,
And make them suffer those ill things
That children’s play to young birds brings.

But mine! no matter what you do,
My poetry is all in you;
You are my inspiration bright
That gives my verse its purest light.
Children whose life is made of hope,
Whose joy, within its mystic scope,
Owes all to ignorance of ill,
You have not suffered, and you still
Know not what gloomy thoughts weigh down
The poet-writer weary grown.
What warmth is shed by your sweet smile!
How much he needs to gaze awhile
Upon your shining placid brow,
When his own brow its ache doth know;
With what delight he loves to hear
Your frolic play ‘neath tree that’s near,
Your joyous voices mixing well
With his own song’s all-mournful swell!
Come back then, children! come to me,
If you wish not that I should be
As lonely now that you’re afar
As fisherman of Etrétat,
Who listless on his elbow leans
Through all the weary winter scenes,

As tired of thought — as on Time flies —
And watching only rainy skies!

MRS. NEWTON CROSLAND.

MY THOUGHTS OF YE.

(“À quoi je songe?”)

[XXIIL, July, 1836.]

What do I dream of? Far from the low roof,
Where now ye are, children, I dream of you;
Of your young heads that are the hope and crown
Of my full summer, ripening to its fall.
Branches whose shadow grows along my wall,
Sweet souls scarce open to the breath of day,
Still dazzled with the brightness of your dawn.
I dream of those two little ones at play,
Making the threshold vocal with their cries,
Half tears, half laughter, mingled sport and strife,
Like two flowers knocked together by the wind.
Or of the elder two — more anxious thought —
Breasting already broader waves of life,
A conscious innocence on either face,
My pensive daughter and my curious boy.
Thus do I dream, while the light sailors sing,
At even moored beneath some steepy shore,
While the waves opening all their nostrils breathe
A thousand sea-scents to the wandering wind,
And the whole air is full of wondrous sounds,
From sea to strand, from land to sea, given back
Alone and sad, thus do I dream of you.
Children, and house and home, the table set,
The glowing hearth, and all the pious care
Of tender mother, and of grandsire kind;
And while before me, spotted with white sails,
The limpid ocean mirrors all the stars,
And while the pilot, from the infinite main,
Looks with calm eye into the infinite heaven,
I dreaming of you only, seek to scan

And fathom all my soul’s deep love for you —
Love sweet, and powerful, and everlasting —
And find that the great sea is small beside it.

Dublin University Magazine.

THE BEACON IN THE STORM.

("Quels sont ces bruits sourds?")

[XXIV., July 17, 1836.]

Hark to that solemn sound!
  It steals towards the strand. —
Whose is that voice profound
  Which mourns the swallowed land,
      With moans,
      Or groans,
  New threats of ruin close at hand?
It is Triton — the storm to scorn
Who doth wind his sonorous horn.

How thick the rain to-night!
  And all along the coast
The sky shows naught of light
  Is it a storm, my host?
      Too soon
      The boon
  Of pleasant weather will be lost
Yes, 'tis Triton, etc.

Are seamen on that speck
  Afar in deepening dark?
Is that a splitting deck
  Of some ill-fated bark?
      Fend harm!
      Send calm!
  O Venus! show thy starry spark!
Though 'tis Triton, etc.

The thousand-toothèd gale, —
 Adventurers too bold! —
Rips up your toughest sail

And tears your anchor-hold.
You forge
Through surge,
To be in rending breakers rolled.
While old Triton, etc.

Do sailors stare this way,
Cramped on the Needle’s sheaf,
To hail the sudden ray
Which promises relief?
Then, bright;
Shine, light!
Of hope upon the beacon reef!
Though ’tis Triton, etc.

LOVE’S TREACHEROUS POOL

(“Jeune fille, l’amour c’est un miroir.”)

[XXVI., February, 1835.]

Young maiden, true love is a pool all mirroring clear,
  Where coquettish girls come to linger in long delight,
For it banishes afar from the face all the clouds that besmear
  The soul truly bright;
But tempts you to ruffle its surface; drawing your foot
  To subtilest sinking! and farther and farther the brink
That vainly you snatch — for repentance, ’tis weed without root, —
  And struggling, you sink!

THE ROSE AND THE GRAVE.

(“La tombe dit à la rose.”)

[XXXI., June 3, 1837]

The Grave said to the rose
  ”What of the dews of dawn,
Love’s flower, what end is theirs?”
  ”And what of spirits flown,
The souls whereon doth close
  The tomb’s mouth unawares?”
The Rose said to the Grave.

The Rose said: “In the shade
From the dawn’s tears is made
A perfume faint and strange,
  Amber and honey sweet.”
  ”And all the spirits fleet
Do suffer a sky-change,
  More strangely than the dew,
  To God’s own angels new,”
The Grave said to the Rose.

A. LANG.

LES RAYONS ET LES OMBRES. — 1840.

HOLYROOD PALACE.

(“O palais, sois bénié.”)

[II., June, 1839.]

Palace and ruin, bless thee evermore!
Grateful we bow thy gloomy tow’rs before;
For the old King of France hath found in thee
That melancholy hospitality
Which in their royal fortune’s evil day,
Stuarts and Bourbons to each other pay.

Fraser’s Magazine.

THE HUMBLE HOME.

(“L’église est vaste et haute.”)

[IV., June 29, 1839.]

The Church is vast; its towering pride, its steeples loom on high;
The bristling stones with leaf and flower are sculptured wondrously;
  The portal glows resplendent with its “rose,”
And ‘neath the vault immense at evening swarm
Figures of angel, saint, or demon’s form,
  As oft a fearful world our dreams disclose.
But not the huge Cathedral’s height, nor yet its vault sublime,
Nor porch, nor glass, nor streaks of light, nor shadows deep with time;
  Nor massy towers, that fascinate mine eyes;
  No, ’tis that spot — the mind’s tranquillity —
  Chamber wherefrom the song mounts cheerily,
  Placed like a joyful nest well nigh the skies.

Yea! glorious is the Church, I ween, but Meekness dwelleth here;
Less do I love the lofty oak than mossy nest it bear;
  More dear is meadow breath than stormy wind:
And when my mind for meditation’s meant,
The seaweed is preferred to the shore’s extent, —
  The swallow to the main it leaves behind.

Author of “Critical Essays.”

THE EIGHTEENTH CENTURY.

("O dix-huitième siècle!")

[IV. vi]

  O Eighteenth Century! by Heaven chastised!
Godless thou livedst, by God thy doom was fixed.
Thou in one ruin sword and sceptre mixed,
  Then outraged love, and pity's claim despised.
Thy life a banquet — but its board a scaffold at the close,
Where far from Christ's beatic reign, Satanic deeds arose!
Thy writers, like thyself, by good men scorned —
  Yet, from thy crimes, renown has decked thy name,
  As the smoke emplumes the furnace flame,
A revolution's deeds have thine adorned!

Author of "Critical Essays."

STILL BE A CHILD.

(“O vous que votre âge défende”)

[IX., February, 1840.]

In youthful spirits wild,
  Smile, for all beams on thee;
Sport, sing, be still the child,
  The flower, the honey-bee.

Bring not the future near,
  For Joy too soon declines —
What is man’s mission here?
  Toil, where no sunlight shines!

Our lot is hard, we know;
  From eyes so gayly beaming,
Whence rays of beauty flow,
  Salt tears most oft are streaming.

Free from emotions past,
  All joy and hope possessing,
With mind in pureness cast,
  Sweet ignorance confessing.

Plant, safe from winds and showers,
  Heart with soft visions glowing,
In childhood’s happy hours
  A mother’s rapture showing.

Loved by each anxious friend,
  No carking care within —
When summer gambols end,
  My winter sports begin.

Sweet poesy from heaven
  Around thy form is placed,
A mother's beauty given,
  By father's thought is graced!

Seize, then, each blissful second,
  Live, for joy sinks in night,
And those whose tale is reckoned,
  Have had their days of light.

Then, oh! before we part,
  The poet's blessing take,
Ere bleeds that aged heart,
  Or child the woman make.

Dublin University Magazine.

THE POOL AND THE SOUL.

("Comme dans les étangs.")

[X., May, 1839.]

As in some stagnant pool by forest-side,
In human souls two things are oft descried;
The sky, — which tints the surface of the pool
With all its rays, and all its shadows cool;
The basin next, — where gloomy, dark and deep,
Through slime and mud black reptiles vaguely creep.

R.F. HODGSON

YE MARINERS WHO SPREAD YOUR SAILS.

(“Matelôts, vous déploirez les voiles.”)

[XVI., May 5, 1839.]

Ye mariners! ye mariners! each sail to the breeze unfurled,
In joy or sorrow still pursue your course around the world;
And when the stars next sunset shine, ye anxiously will gaze
Upon the shore, a friend or foe, as the windy quarter lays.

Ye envious souls, with spiteful tooth, the statue’s base will bite;
Ye birds will sing, ye bending boughs with verdure glad the sight;
The ivy root in the stone entwined, will cause old gates to fall;
The church-bell sound to work or rest the villagers will call.

Ye glorious oaks will still increase in solitude profound,
Where the far west in distance lies as evening veils around;
Ye willows, to the earth your arms in mournful trail will bend,
And back again your mirror’d forms the water’s surface send.

Ye nests will oscillate beneath the youthful progeny;
Embraced in furrows of the earth the germing grain will lie;
Ye lightning-torches still your streams will cast into the air,
Which like a troubled spirit’s course float wildly here and there.

Ye thunder-peals will God proclaim, as doth the ocean wave;
Ye violets will nourish still the flower that April gave;
Upon your ambient tides will be man’s sternest shadow cast;
Your waters ever will roll on when man himself is past.

All things that are, or being have, or those that mutely lie,
Have each its course to follow out, or object to descry;
Contributing its little share to that stupendous whole,
Where with man’s teeming race combined creation’s wonders roll.

The poet, too, will contemplate th’ Almighty Father’s love,
Who to our restless minds, with light and darkness from above,
Hath given the heavens that glorious urn of tranquil majesty,
Whence in unceasing stores we draw calm and serenity.

Author of “Critical Essays.”

ON A FLEMISH WINDOW-PANE.

(“J’aime le carillon dans tes cités antiques.”)

[XVIII., August, 1837.]

Within thy cities of the olden time
Dearly I love to list the ringing chime,
Thou faithful guardian of domestic worth,
Noble old Flanders! where the rigid North
A flush of rich meridian glow doth feel,
Caught from reflected suns of bright Castile.
The chime, the clinking chime! To Fancy’s eye —
Prompt her affections to personify —
It is the fresh and frolic hour, arrayed
In guise of Andalusian dancing maid,
Appealing by a crevice fine and rare,
As of a door oped in “th’ incorporal air.”
She comes! o’er drowsy roofs, inert and dull,
Shaking her lap, of silv’ry music full,
Rousing without remorse the drones abed,
Tripping like joyous bird with tiniest tread,
Quiv’ring like dart that trembles in the targe,
By a frail crystal stair, whose viewless marge
Bears her slight footfall, tim’rous half, yet free,
In innocent extravagance of glee
The graceful elf alights from out the spheres,
While the quick spirit — thing of eyes and ears —
As now she goes, now comes, mounts, and anon
Descends, those delicate degrees upon,
Hears her melodious spirit from step to step run on.

Fraser’s Magazine

THE PRECEPTOR.

(“Homme chauve et noir.”)

[XIX., May, 1839.]

A gruesome man, bald, clad in black,
Who kept us youthful drudges in the track,
Thinking it good for them to leave home care,
And for a while a harsher yoke to bear;
Surrender all the careless ease of home,
And be forbid from schoolyard bounds to roam;
For this with blandest smiles he softly asks
That they with him will prosecute their tasks;
Receives them in his solemn chilly lair,
The rigid lot of discipline to share.
At dingy desks they toil by day; at night
To gloomy chambers go uncheered by light,
Where pillars rudely grayed by rusty nail
Of heavy hours reveal the weary tale;
Where spiteful ushers grin, all pleased to make
Long scribbled lines the price of each mistake.
By four unpitying walls environed there
The homesick students pace the pavements bare.

E.E. FREWER

GASTIBELZA.

("Gastibelza, l'homme à la carabine.")

[XXII., March, 1837.]

Gastibelza, with gun the measure beating,
Would often sing:
"Has one o' ye with sweet Sabine been meeting,
As, gay, ye bring
Your songs and steps which, by the music,
Are reconciled —
Oh! this chill wind across the mountain rushing
Will drive me wild!

"You stare as though you hardly knew my lady —
Sabine's her name!
Her dam inhabits yonder cavern shady,
A witch of shame,
Who shrieks o' nights upon the Haunted Tower,
With horrors piled —
Oh! this chill wind, etc.

"Sing on and leap — enjoying all the favors
Good heaven sends;
She, too, was young — her lips had peachy savors
With honey blends;
Give to that hag — not always old — a penny,
Though crime-defiled —
Oh! this chill wind, etc.

"The queen beside her looked a wench uncomely,
When, near to-night,
She proudly stalked a-past the maids so homely,
In bodice tight
And collar old as reign of wicked Julian,

By fiend beguiled —
Oh! this chill wind, etc.

“The king himself proclaimed her peerless beauty
Before the court,
And held it were to win a kiss his duty
To give a fort,
Or, more, to sign away all bright Dorado,
Tho’ gold-plate tiled —
Oh! this chill wind, etc.

“Love her? at least, I know I am most lonely
Without her nigh;
I’m but a hound to follow her, and only
At her feet die.
I’d gayly spend of toilsome years a dozen —
A felon styled —
Oh! this chill wind, etc.

“One summer day when long — so long? I’d missed her,
She came anew,
To play i’ the fount alone but for her sister,
And bared to view
The finest, rosiest, most tempting ankle,
Like that of child —
Oh! this chill wind, etc.

“When I beheld her, I — a lowly shepherd —
Grew in my mind
Till I was Caesar — she that crownèd leopard
He crouched behind,
No Roman stern, but in her silken leashes
A captive mild —
Oh! this chill wind, etc.

“Yet dance and sing, tho’ night be thickly falling; —
In selfsame time
Poor Sabine heard in ecstasy the calling,

In winning rhyme,
Of Saldane’s earl so noble, ay, and wealthy,
Name e’er reviled —
Oh! this chill wind, etc.

“(Let me upon this bench be shortly resting,
So weary, I!)
That noble bore her smiling, unresisting,
By yonder high
And ragged road that snakes towards the summit
Where crags are piled —
Oh! this chill wind, etc.

“I saw her pass beside my lofty station —
A glance— ’twas all!
And yet I loathe my daily honest ration,
The air’s turned gall!
My soul’s in chase, my body chafes to wander —
My dagger’s filed —
Oh! this chill wind may change, and o’er the mountain
May drive me wild!”

HENRY L. WILLIAMS.

GUITAR SONG.

(“Comment, disaient-ils.”)

[XXIII., July 18, 1838.]

How shall we flee sorrow — flee sorrow? said he.
How, how! How shall we flee sorrow — flee sorrow? said he.
How — how — how? answered she.

How shall we see pleasure — see pleasure? said he.
How, how! How shall we see pleasure — see pleasure? said he.
Dream — dream — dream! answered she.

How shall we be happy — be happy? said he.
How, how! How shall we be happy — be happy? said he.
Love — love — love! whispered she.

EVELYN JERROLD

COME WHEN I SLEEP.

(“Oh, quand je dors.”)

[XXVII.]

Oh! when I sleep, come near my resting-place,
  As Laura came to bless her poet’s heart,
And let thy breath in passing touch my face —
      At once a space
        My lips will part.

And on my brow where too long weighed supreme
  A vision — haply spent now — black as night,
Let thy look as a star arise and beam —
      At once my dream
        Will seem of light.

Then press my lips, where plays a flame of bliss —
  A pure and holy love-light — and forsake
The angel for the woman in a kiss —
      At once, I wis,
        My soul will wake!

WM. W. TOMLINSON.

EARLY LOVE REVISITED.

(“O douleur! j’ai voulu savoir.”)

[XXXIV. i., October, 183-.]

I have wished in the grief of my heart to know
  If the vase yet treasured that nectar so clear,
And to see what this beautiful valley could show
  Of all that was once to my soul most dear.
In how short a span doth all Nature change,
  How quickly she smoothes with her hand serene —
And how rarely she snaps, in her ceaseless range,
  The links that bound our hearts to the scene.

Our beautiful bowers are all laid waste;
  The fir is felled that our names once bore;
Our rows of roses, by urchins’ haste,
  Are destroyed where they leap the barrier o’er.
The fount is walled in where, at noonday pride,
  She so gayly drank, from the wood descending;
In her fairy hand was transformed the tide,
  And it turned to pearls through her fingers wending

The wild, rugged path is paved with spars,
  Where erst in the sand her footsteps were traced,
When so small were the prints that the surface mars,
  That they seemed to smile ere by mine effaced.
The bank on the side of the road, day by day,
  Where of old she awaited my loved approach,
Is now become the traveller’s way
  To avoid the track of the thundering coach.

Here the forest contracts, there the mead extends,
  Of all that was ours, there is little left —
Like the ashes that wildly are whisked by winds,
  Of all souvenirs is the place bereft.

Do we live no more — is our hour then gone?
Will it give back naught to our hungry cry?
The breeze answers my call with a mocking tone,
The house that was mine makes no reply.

True! others shall pass, as we have passed,
As we have come, so others shall meet,
And the dream that our mind had sketched in haste,
Shall others continue, but never complete.
For none upon earth can achieve his scheme,
The best as the worst are futile here:
We awake at the selfsame point cf the dream —
All is here begun, and finished elsewhere.

Yes! others shall come in the bloom of the heart,
To enjoy in this pure and happy retreat,
All that nature to timid love can impart
Of solemn repose and communion sweet.
In our fields, in our paths, shall strangers stray,
In thy wood, my dearest, new lovers go lost,
And other fair forms in the stream shall play
Which of old thy delicate feet have crossed.

Author of “Critical Essays.”

SWEET MEMORY OF LOVE.

("Toutes les passions s'éloignent avec l'âge.")

[XXXIV. ii., October, 183-.]

As life wanes on, the passions slow depart,
  One with his grinning mask, one with his steel;
Like to a strolling troupe of Thespian art,
  Whose pace decreases, winding past the hill.
But naught can Love's all charming power efface,
  That light, our misty tracks suspended o'er,
In joy thou'rt ours, more dear thy tearful grace,
  The young may curse thee, but the old adore.

But when the weight of years bow down the head,
  And man feels all his energies decline,
His projects gone, himself tomb'd with the dead,
  Where virtues lie, nor more illusions shine,
When all our lofty thoughts dispersed and o'er,
  We count within our hearts so near congealed,
Each grief that's past, each dream, exhausted ore!
  As counting dead upon the battle-field.

As one who walks by the lamp's flickering blaze,
  Far from the hum of men, the joys of earth —
Our mind arrives at last by tortuous ways,
  At that drear gulf where but despair has birth.
E'en there, amid the darkness of that night,
  When all seems closing round in empty air,
Is seen through thickening gloom one trembling light!
  'Tis Love's sweet memory that lingers there!

Author of "Critical Essays."

THE MARBLE FAUN.

(“Il semblait grelotter.”)

[XXXVI., December, 1837.]

He seemed to shiver, for the wind was keen.
’Twas a poor statue underneath a mass
Of leafless branches, with a blackened back
And a green foot — an isolated Faun
In old deserted park, who, bending forward,
Half-merged himself in the entangled boughs,
Half in his marble settings. He was there,
Pensive, and bound to earth; and, as all things
Devoid of movement, he was there — forgotten.

Trees were around him, whipped by icy blasts —
Gigantic chestnuts, without leaf or bird,
And, like himself, grown old in that same place.
Through the dark network of their undergrowth,
Pallid his aspect; and the earth was brown.
Starless and moonless, a rough winter’s night
Was letting down her lappets o’er the mist.
This — nothing more: old Faun, dull sky, dark wood.

Poor, helpless marble, how I’ve pitied it!
Less often man — the harder of the two.

So, then, without a word that might offend
His ear deformed — for well the marble hears
The voice of thought — I said to him: “You hail
From the gay amorous age. O Faun, what saw you
When you were happy? Were you of the Court?

”Speak to me, comely Faun, as you would speak
To tree, or zephyr, or untrodden grass.
Have you, O Greek, O mocker of old days,

Have you not sometimes with that oblique eye
Winked at the Farnese Hercules? — Alone,
Have you, O Faun, considerately turned
From side to side when counsel-seekers came,
And now advised as shepherd, now as satyr? —
Have you sometimes, upon this very bench,
Seen, at mid-day, Vincent de Paul instilling
Grace into Gondi? — Have you ever thrown
That searching glance on Louis with Fontange,
On Anne with Buckingham; and did they not
Start, with flushed cheeks, to hear your laugh ring forth
From corner of the wood? — Was your advice
As to the thyrsis or the ivy asked,
When, in grand ballet of fantastic form,
God Phoebus, or God Pan, and all his court,
Turned the fair head of the proud Montespan,
Calling her Amaryllis? — La Fontaine,
Flying the courtiers' ears of stone, came he,
Tears on his eyelids, to reveal to you
The sorrows of his nymphs of Vaux? — What said
Boileau to you — to you — O lettered Faun,
Who once with Virgil, in the Eclogue, held
That charming dialogue? — Say, have you seen
Young beauties sporting on the sward? — Have you
Been honored with a sight of Molière
In dreamy mood? — Has he perchance, at eve,
When here the thinker homeward went, has he,
Who — seeing souls all naked — could not fear
Your nudity, in his inquiring mind,
Confronted you with Man?"

Under the thickly-tangled branches, thus
Did I speak to him; he no answer gave.

I shook my head, and moved myself away;
Then, from the copses, and from secret caves
Hid in the wood, methought a ghostly voice

Came forth and woke an echo in my souls
As in the hollow of an amphora.

”Imprudent poet,” thus it seemed to say,
“What dost thou here? Leave the forsaken Fauns
In peace beneath their trees! Dost thou not know,
Poet, that ever it is impious deemed,
In desert spots where drowsy shades repose —
Though love itself might prompt thee — to shake down
The moss that hangs from ruined centuries,
And, with the vain noise of throe ill-timed words,
To mar the recollections of the dead?”

Then to the gardens all enwrapped in mist
I hurried, dreaming of the vanished days,
And still behind me — hieroglyph obscure
Of antique alphabet — the lonely Faun
Held to his laughter, through the falling night.

I went my way; but yet — in saddened spirit
Pondering on all that had my vision crossed,
Leaves of old summers, fair ones of old time —
Through all, at distance, would my fancy see,
In the woods, statues; shadows in the past!

WILLIAM YOUNG

A LOVE FOR WINGED THINGS.

[XXXVII., April 12, 1840.]

My love flowed e’er for things with wings.
  When boy I sought for forest fowl,
And caged them in rude rushes’ mesh,
  And fed them with my breakfast roll;
So that, though fragile were the door,
  They rarely fled, and even then
Would flutter back at faintest call!

Man-grown, I charm for men.

BABY’S SEASIDE GRAVE.

(“Vieux lierre, frais gazon.”)

[XXXVIII., 1840.]

Brown ivy old, green herbage new;
  Soft seaweed stealing up the shingle;
An ancient chapel where a crew,
  Ere sailing, in the prayer commingle.
A far-off forest’s darkling frown,
  Which makes the prudent start and tremble,
Whilst rotten nuts are rattling down,
  And clouds in demon hordes assemble.

Land birds which twit the mews that scream
  Round walls where lolls the languid lizard;
Brine-bubbling brooks where fishes stream
  Past caves fit for an ocean wizard.
Alow, aloft, no lull — all life,
  But far aside its whirls are keeping,
As wishfully to let its strife
  Spare still the mother vainly weeping
  O’er baby, lost not long, a-sleeping.

LES CHÂTIMENTS. — 1853.

INDIGNATION!

(“Toi qu’aimais Juvénal.”)

[Nox (PRELUDE) ix., Jersey, November, 1852.]

Thou who loved Juvenal, and filed
  His style so sharp to scar imperial brows,
And lent the lustre lightening
  The gloom in Dante’s murky verse that flows —
Muse Indignation! haste, and help
  My building up before this roseate realm,
And its so fruitless victories,
  Whence transient shame Right’s prophets overwhelm,
So many pillories, deserved!
  That eyes to come will pry without avail,
Upon the wood impenetrant,
  And spy no glimmer of its tarnished tale.

IMPERIAL REVELS.

("Courtisans! attablés dans le splendide orgie.")

[Bk. I. x., Jersey, December, 1852.]

Cheer, courtiers! round the banquet spread —
  The board that groans with shame and plate,
Still fawning to the sham-crowned head
  That hopes front brazen turneth fate!
Drink till the comer last is full,
And never hear in revels' lull,
Grim Vengeance forging arrows fleet,
    Whilst I gnaw at the crust
    Of Exile in the dust —
But Honor makes it sweet!

Ye cheaters in the tricksters' fane,
  Who dupe yourself and trickster-chief,
In blazing cafés spend the gain,
  But draw the blind, lest at his thief
Some fresh-made beggar gives a glance
And interrupts with steel the dance!
But let him toilsomely tramp by,
    As I myself afar
    Follow no gilded car
In ways of Honesty.

Ye troopers who shot mothers down,
  And marshals whose brave cannonade
Broke infant arms and split the stone
  Where slumbered age and guileless maid —
Though blood is in the cup you fill,
Pretend it "rosy" wine, and still
Hail Cannon "King!" and Steel the "Queen!"
    But I prefer to sup

From Philip Sidney’s cup —
True soldier’s draught serene.

Oh, workmen, seen by me sublime,
When from the tyrant wrenched ye peace,
Can you be dazed by tinselled crime,
And spy no wolf beneath the fleece?
Build palaces where Fortunes feast,
And bear your loads like well-trained beast,
Though once such masters you made flee!
But then, like me, you ate
Food of a blessed fête —
The bread of Liberty!

H.L.W.

POOR LITTLE CHILDREN.

(“La femelle! elle est morte.”)

[Bk. I. xiii., Jersey, February, 1853.]

Mother birdie stiff and cold,
  Puss has hushed the other’s singing;
Winds go whistling o’er the wold, —
  Empty nest in sport a-flinging.
    Poor little birdies!

Faithless shepherd strayed afar,
  Playful dog the gadflies catching;
Wolves bound boldly o’er the bar,
  Not a friend the fold is watching —
    Poor little lambkins!

Father into prison fell,
  Mother begging through the parish;
Baby’s cot they, too, will sell, —
  Who will now feed, clothe and cherish?
    Poor little children!

APOSTROPHE TO NATURE.

(“O Soleil!”)

[Bk. II. iv., Anniversary of the Coup d’État, 1852.]

O Sun! thou countenance divine!
  Wild flowers of the glen,
Caves swoll’n with shadow, where sunshine
  Has pierced not, far from men;
Ye sacred hills and antique rocks,
  Ye oaks that worsted time,
Ye limpid lakes which snow-slide shocks
  Hurl up in storms sublime;
And sky above, unruflfed blue,
  Chaste rills that alway ran
From stainless source a course still true,
  What think ye of this man?

NAPOLEON “THE LITTLE.”

(“Ah! tu finiras bien par hurler!”)

[Bk. III. ii., Jersey, August, 1852.]

How well I knew this stealthy wolf would howl,
  When in the eagle talons ta’en in air!
Aglow, I snatched thee from thy prey — thou fowl —
  I held thee, abject conqueror, just where
All see the stigma of a fitting name
  As deeply red as deeply black thy shame!
And though thy matchless impudence may frame
  Some mask of seeming courage — spite thy sneer,
And thou assurest sloth and skunk: “It does not smart!”
  Thou feel’st it burning, in and in, — and fear
None will forget it till shall fall the deadly dart!

FACT OR FABLE?

(BISMARCK AND NAPOLEON III.)

("Un jour, sentant un royal appétit.")

[Bk. III. iii., Jersey, September, 1852.]

One fasting day, itched by his appetite,
  A monkey took a fallen tiger's hide,
  And, where the wearer had been savage, tried
To overpass his model. Scratch and bite
Gave place, however, to mere gnash of teeth and screams,
  But, as he prowled, he made his hearers fly
With crying often: "See the Terror of your dreams!"
  Till, for too long, none ventured thither nigh.
Left undisturbed to snatch, and clog his brambled den,
  With sleepers' bones and plumes of daunted doves,
And other spoil of beasts as timid as the men,
  Who shrank when he mock-roared, from glens and groves —
He begged his fellows view the crannies crammed with pelf
  Sordid and tawdry, stained and tinselled things,
As ample proof he was the Royal Tiger's self!
  Year in, year out, thus still he purrs and sings
Till tramps a butcher by — he risks his head —
  In darts the hand and crushes out the yell,
  And plucks the hide — as from a nut the shell —
He holds him nude, and sneers: "An ape you dread!"

H.L.W.

A LAMENT.

("Sentiers où l'herbe se balance.")

[Bk. III. xi., July, 1853.]

O paths whereon wild grasses wave!
  O valleys! hillsides! forests hoar!
Why are ye silent as the grave?
  For One, who came, and comes no more!

Why is thy window closed of late?
  And why thy garden in its sear?
O house! where doth thy master wait?
  I only know he is not here.

Good dog! thou watchest; yet no hand
  Will feed thee. In the house is none.
Whom weepest thou? child! My father. And
  O wife! whom weepest thou? The Gone.

Where is he gone? Into the dark. —
  O sad, and ever-plaining surge!
Whence art thou? From the convict-bark.
  And why thy mournful voice? A dirge.

EDWIN ARNOLD, C.S.I.

NO ASSASSINATION.

("Laissons le glaive à Rome.")

[Bk. III. xvi., October, 1852.]

Pray Rome put up her poniard!
  And Sparta sheathe the sword;
Be none too prompt to punish,
  And cast indignant word!
Bear back your spectral Brutus
  From robber Bonaparte;
Time rarely will refute us
  Who doom the hateful heart.

Ye shall be o'ercontented,
  My banished mates from home,
But be no rashness vented
  Ere time for joy shall come.
No crime can outspeed Justice,
  Who, resting, seems delayed —
Full faith accord the angel
  Who points the patient blade.

The traitor still may nestle
  In balmy bed of state,
But mark the Warder, watching
  His guardsman at his gate.
He wears the crown, a monarch —
  Of knaves and stony hearts;
But though they're blessed by Senates,
  None can escape the darts!

Though shored by spear and crozier,
  All know the arrant cheat,
And shun the square of pavement
  Uncertain at his feet!

Yea, spare the wretch, each brooding
  And secret-leaguers’ chief,
And make no pistol-target
  Of stars upon the thief.

The knell of God strikes seldom
  But in the aptest hour;
And when the life is sweetest,
  The worm will feel His power!

THE DESPATCH OF THE DOOM.

(“Pendant que dans l’auberge.”)

[Bk. IV. xiii., Jersey, November, 1852.]

While in the jolly tavern, the bandits gayly drink,
Upon the haunted highway, sharp hoof-beats loudly clink?
Yea; past scant-buried victims, hard-spurring sturdy steed,
A mute and grisly rider is trampling grass and weed,
And by the black-sealed warrant which in his grasp shines clear,
I known it is the Future — God’s Justicer is here!

THE SEAMAN’S SONG.

(“Adieu, patrie.”)

[Bk. V. ix., Aug. 1, 1852.]

Farewell the strand,
The sails expand
Above!
Farewell the land
We love!
Farewell, old home where apples swing!
Farewell, gay song-birds on the wing!

Farewell, riff-raff
Of Customs’ clerks who laugh
And shout:
”Farewell!” We’ll quaff
One bout
To thee, young lass, with kisses sweet!
Farewell, my dear — the ship flies fleet!

The fog shuts out the last fond peep,
As ‘neath the prow the cast drops weep.
Farewell, old home, young lass, the bird!
The whistling wind alone is heard:
Farewell! Farewell!

THE RETREAT FROM MOSCOW.

(“Il neigeait.”)

[Bk. V. xiii., Nov. 25-30, 1852.]

It snowed. A defeat was our conquest red!
For once the eagle was hanging its head.
Sad days! the Emperor turned slowly his back
On smoking Moscow, blent orange and black.
The winter burst, avalanche-like, to reign
Over the endless blanched sheet of the plain.
Nor chief nor banner in order could keep,
The wolves of warfare were ‘wildered like sheep.
The wings from centre could hardly be known
Through snow o’er horses and carts o’erthrown,
Where froze the wounded. In the bivouacs forlorn
Strange sights and gruesome met the breaking morn:
Mute were the bugles, while the men bestrode
Steeds turned to marble, unheeding the goad.
The shells and bullets came down with the snow
As though the heavens hated these poor troops below.
Surprised at trembling, though it was with cold,
Who ne’er had trembled out of fear, the veterans bold
Marched stern; to grizzled moustache hoarfrost clung
‘Neath banners that in leaden masses hung.

It snowed, went snowing still. And chill the breeze
Whistled upon the glassy endless seas,
Where naked feet on, on for ever went,
With naught to eat, and not a sheltering tent.
They were not living troops as seen in war,
But merely phantoms of a dream, afar
In darkness wandering, amid the vapor dim, —
A mystery; of shadows a procession grim,
Nearing a blackening sky, unto its rim.

Frightful, since boundless, solitude behold
Where only Nemesis wove, mute and cold,
A net all snowy with its soft meshes dense,
A shroud of magnitude for host immense;
Till every one felt as if left alone
In a wide wilderness where no light shone,
To die, with pity none, and none to see
That from this mournful realm none should get free.
Their foes the frozen North and Czar — That, worst.
Cannon were broken up in haste accurst
To burn the frames and make the pale fire high,
Where those lay down who never woke or woke to die.
Sad and commingled, groups that blindly fled
Were swallowed smoothly by the desert dread.

‘Neath folds of blankness, monuments were raised
O’er regiments. And History, amazed,
Could not record the ruin of this retreat,
Unlike a downfall known before or the defeat
Of Hannibal — reversed and wrapped in gloom!
Of Attila, when nations met their doom!
Perished an army — fled French glory then,
Though there the Emperor! he stood and gazed
At the wild havoc, like a monarch dazed
In woodland hoar, who felt the shrieking saw —
He, living oak, beheld his branches fall, with awe.
Chiefs, soldiers, comrades died. But still warm love
Kept those that rose all dastard fear above,
As on his tent they saw his shadow pass —
Backwards and forwards, for they credited, alas!
His fortune’s star! it could not, could not be
That he had not his work to do — a destiny?
To hurl him headlong from his high estate,
Would be high treason in his bondman, Fate.
But all the while he felt himself alone,
Stunned with disasters few have ever known.
Sudden, a fear came o’er his troubled soul,

What more was written on the Future’s scroll?
Was this an expiation? It must be, yea!
He turned to God for one enlightening ray.
“Is this the vengeance, Lord of Hosts?” he sighed,
But the first murmur on his parched lips died.
“Is this the vengeance? Must my glory set?”
A pause: his name was called; of flame a jet
Sprang in the darkness; — a Voice answered; “No!
Not yet.”

Outside still fell the smothering snow.
Was it a voice indeed? or but a dream?
It was the vulture’s, but how like the sea-bird’s scream.

TORU DUTT.

THE OCEAN’S SONG.

(“Nous nous promenions à Rozel-Tower.”)

[Bk. VI. iv., October, 1852.]

We walked amongst the ruins famed in story
  Of Rozel-Tower,
And saw the boundless waters stretch in glory
  And heave in power.

O ocean vast! we heard thy song with wonder,
  Whilst waves marked time.
“Appeal, O Truth!” thou sang’st with tone of thunder,
  “And shine sublime!

“The world’s enslaved and hunted down by beagles, —
  To despots sold,
Souls of deep thinkers, soar like mighty eagles,
  The Right uphold.

“Be born; arise; o’er earth and wild waves bounding
  Peoples and suns!
Let darkness vanish; — tocsins be resounding,
  And flash, ye guns!

“And you, — who love no pomps of fog, or glamour,
  Who fear no shocks,
Brave foam and lightning, hurricane and clamor,
  Exiles — the rocks!”

TORU DUTT

THE TRUMPETS OF THE MIND.

(“Sonnez, clairons de la pensée!”)

[Bk. VII. i., March 19, 1853.]

Sound, sound for ever, Clarions of Thought!

When Joshua ‘gainst the high-walled city fought,
He marched around it with his banner high,
His troops in serried order following nigh,
But not a sword was drawn, no shaft outsprang,
Only the trumpets the shrill onset rang.
At the first blast, smiled scornfully the king,
And at the second sneered, half wondering:
“Hop’st thou with noise my stronghold to break down?”
At the third round, the ark of old renown
Swept forward, still the trumpets sounding loud,
And then the troops with ensigns waving proud.
Stepped out upon the old walls children dark
With horns to mock the notes and hoot the ark.
At the fourth turn, braving the Israelites,
Women appeared upon the crenelated heights —
Those battlements embrowned with age and rust —
And hurled upon the Hebrews stones and dust,
And spun and sang when weary of the game.
At the fifth circuit came the blind and lame,
And with wild uproar clamorous and high
Railed at the clarion ringing to the sky.
At the sixth time, upon a tower’s tall crest,
So high that there the eagle built his nest,
So hard that on it lightning lit in vain,
Appeared in merriment the king again:
“These Hebrew Jews musicians are, meseems!”
He scoffed, loud laughing, “but they live on dreams.”
The princes laughed submissive to the king,

Laughed all the courtiers in their glittering ring,
And thence the laughter spread through all the town.

At the seventh blast — the city walls fell down.

TORU DUTT.

AFTER THE COUP D’ÊTAT.

(“Devant les trahisons.”)

[Bk. VII, xvi., Jersey, Dec. 2, 1852.]

Before foul treachery and heads hung down,
  I’ll fold my arms, indignant but serene.
Oh! faith in fallen things — be thou my crown,
  My force, my joy, my prop on which I lean:

Yes, whilst he’s there, or struggle some or fall,
  O France, dear France, for whom I weep in vain.
Tomb of my sires, nest of my loves — my all,
  I ne’er shall see thee with these eyes again.

I shall not see thy sad, sad sounding shore,
  France, save my duty, I shall all forget;
Amongst the true and tried, I’ll tug my oar,
  And rest proscribed to brand the fawning set.

O bitter exile, hard, without a term,
  Thee I accept, nor seek nor care to know
Who have down-truckled ‘mid the men deemed firm,
  And who have fled that should have fought the foe.

If true a thousand stand, with them I stand;
  A hundred? ’tis enough: we’ll Sylla brave;
Ten? put my name down foremost in the band;
  One? — well, alone — until I find my grave.

TORU DUTT.

PATRIA.

("Là-haut, qui sourit.")

[Bk. VII. vii., September, 1853.]

Who smiles there? Is it
A stray spirit,
Or woman fair?
  Sombre yet soft the brow!
  Bow, nations, bow;
O soul in air,
  Speak — what art thou?

In grief the fair face seems —
What means those sudden gleams?
Our antique pride from dreams
Starts up, and beams
Its conquering glance, —
To make our sad hearts dance,
And wake in woods hushed long
The wild bird's song.
Angel of Day!
Our Hope, Love, Stay,
Thy countenance
  Lights land and sea
  Eternally,
Thy name is France
  Or Verity.

Fair angel in thy glass
When vile things move or pass,
Clouds in the skies amass;
Terrible, alas!
Thy stern commands are then:
"Form your battalions, men,

The flag display!”
And all obey.
Angel of might
Sent kings to smite,
The words in dark skies glance,
  ”Mené, Mené,” hiss
  Bolts that never miss!
Thy name is France,
  Or Nemesis.

As halcyons in May,
O nations, in his ray
Float and bask for aye,
Nor know decay!
One arm upraised to heaven
Seals the past forgiven;
One holds a sword
To quell hell’s horde,
Angel of God!
Thy wings stretch broad
  As heaven’s expanse!
  To shield and free
  Humanity!
Thy name is France,
 Or Liberty!

THE UNIVERSAL REPUBLIC.

("Temps futurs.")

[Part "Lux," Jersey, Dec. 16-20, 1853.]

O vision of the coming time!
When man has 'scaped the trackless slime
  And reached the desert spring;
When sands are crossed, the sward invites
The worn to rest 'mid rare delights
  And gratefully to sing.

E'en now the eye that's levelled high,
Though dimly, can the hope espy
  So solid soon, one day;
For every chain must then be broke,
And hatred none will dare evoke,
  And June shall scatter May.

E'en now amid our misery
The germ of Union many see,
  And through the hedge of thorn,
Like to a bee that dawn awakes,
On, Progress strides o'er shattered stakes,
  With solemn, scathing scorn.

Behold the blackness shrink, and flee!
Behold the world rise up so free
  Of coroneted things!
Whilst o'er the distant youthful States,
Like Amazonian bosom-plates,
  Spread Freedom's shielding wings.

Ye, liberated lands, we hail!
Your sails are whole despite the gale!
Your masts are firm, and will not fail —

  The triumph follows pain!
Hear forges roar! the hammer clanks —
It beats the time to nations’ thanks —
  At last, a peaceful strain!

’Tis rust, not gore, that gnaws the guns,
And shattered shells are but the runs
  Where warring insects cope;
And all the headsman’s racks and blades
And pincers, tools of tyrants’ aids,
  Are buried with the rope.

Upon the sky-line glows i’ the dark
The Sun that now is but a spark;
  But soon will be unfurled —
The glorious banner of us all,
The flag that rises ne’er to fall,
  Republic of the World!

LES CONTEMPLATIONS. — 1830-56.

THE VALE TO YOU, TO ME THE HEIGHTS.

A FABLE.

[Bk. III. vi., October, 1846.]

A lion camped beside a spring, where came the Bird
    Of Jove to drink:
When, haply, sought two kings, without their courtier herd,
    The moistened brink,
Beneath the palm — they always tempt pugnacious hands —
    Both travel-sore;
But quickly, on the recognition, out flew brands
    Straight to each core;
As dying breaths commingle, o’er them rose the call
    Of Eagle shrill:
“Yon crownèd couple, who supposed the world too small,
    Now one grave fill!
Chiefs blinded by your rage! each bleachèd sapless bone
    Becomes a pipe
Through which siroccos whistle, trodden ‘mong the stone
    By quail and snipe.
Folly’s liege-men, what boots such murd’rous raid,
    And mortal feud?
I, Eagle, dwell as friend with Leo — none afraid —
    In solitude:
At the same pool we bathe and quaff in placid mood.
    Kings, he and I;
For I to him leave prairie, desert sands and wood,
    And he to me the sky.”

H.L.W.

CHILDHOOD.

("L'enfant chantait.")

[Bk. I. xxiii., Paris, January, 1835.]

The small child sang; the mother, outstretched on the low bed,
  With anguish moaned, — fair Form pain should possess not long;
For, ever nigher, Death hovered around her head:
  I hearkened there this moan, and heard even there that song.

The child was but five years, and, close to the lattice, aye
  Made a sweet noise with games and with his laughter bright;
And the wan mother, aside this being the livelong day
  Carolling joyously, coughed hoarsely all the night.

The mother went to sleep 'mong them that sleep alway;
  And the blithe little lad began anew to sing…
Sorrow is like a fruit: God doth not therewith weigh
  Earthward the branch strong yet but for the blossoming.

NELSON R. TYERMAN.

SATIRE ON THE EARTH.

(“Une terre au flanc maigre.”)

[Bk. III. xi., October, 1840.]

A clod with rugged, meagre, rust-stained, weather-worried face,
Where care-filled creatures tug and delve to keep a worthless race;
And glean, begrudgedly, by all their unremitting toil,
Sour, scanty bread and fevered water from the ungrateful soil;
Made harder by their gloom than flints that gash their harried hands,
And harder in the things they call their hearts than wolfish bands,
Perpetuating faults, inventing crimes for paltry ends,
And yet, perversest beings! hating Death, their best of friends!
Pride in the powerful no more, no less than in the poor;
Hatred in both their bosoms; love in one, or, wondrous! two!
Fog in the valleys; on the mountains snowfields, ever new,
That only melt to send down waters for the liquid hell,
In which, their strongest sons and fairest daughters vilely fell!
No marvel, Justice, Modesty dwell far apart and high,
Where they can feebly hear, and, rarer, answer victims’ cry.
At both extremes, unflinching frost, the centre scorching hot;
Land storms that strip the orchards nude, leave beaten grain to rot;
Oceans that rise with sudden force to wash the bloody land,
Where War, amid sob-drowning cheers, claps weapons in each hand.
And this to those who, luckily, abide afar —
This is, ha! ha! a star!

HOW BUTTERFLIES ARE BORN.

(“Comme le matin rit sur les roses.”)

[Bk. I. xii.]

The dawn is smiling on the dew that covers
The tearful roses — lo, the little lovers —
That kiss the buds and all the flutterings
In jasmine bloom, and privet, of white wings
That go and come, and fly, and peep, and hide
With muffled music, murmured far and wide!
Ah, Springtime, when we think of all the lays
That dreamy lovers send to dreamy Mays,
Of the proud hearts within a billet bound,
Of all the soft silk paper that men wound,
The messages of love that mortals write,
Filled with intoxication of delight,
Written in April, and before the Maytime
Shredded and flown, playthings for the winds’ playtime.
We dream that all white butterflies above,
Who seek through clouds or waters souls to love,
And leave their lady mistress to despair,
To flirt with flowers, as tender and more fair,
Are but torn love-letters, that through the skies
Flutter, and float, and change to Butterflies.

A. LANG.

HAVE YOU NOTHING TO SAY FOR YOURSELF?

(“Si vous n’avez rien à me dire.”)

[Bk. II. iv., May, 18 — .]

Speak, if you love me, gentle maiden!
  Or haunt no more my lone retreat.
If not for me thy heart be laden,
  Why trouble mine with smiles so sweet?

Ah! tell me why so mute, fair maiden,
  Whene’er as thus so oft we meet?
If not for me thy heart be, Aideen,
  Why trouble mine with smiles so sweet?

Why, when my hand unconscious pressing,
  Still keep untold the maiden dream?
In fancy thou art thus caressing
  The while we wander by the stream.

If thou art pained when I am near thee,
  Why in my path so often stray?
For in my heart I love yet fear thee,
  And fain would fly, yet fondly stay.

C.H. KENNY.

INSCRIPTION FOR A CRUCIFIX.

(“Vous qui pleurez, venez à ce Dieu.”)

[Bk. III. iv., March, 1842.]

Ye weepers, the Mourner o’er mourners behold!
Ye wounded, come hither — the Healer enfold!
Ye gloomy ones, brighten ‘neath smiles quelling care —
Or pass — for this Comfort is found ev’rywhere.

DEATH, IN LIFE.

(“Ceux-ci partent.”)

[Bk. III. v., February, 1843.]

We pass — these sleep
Beneath the shade where deep-leaved boughs
Bend o’er the furrows the Great Reaper ploughs,
And gentle summer winds in many sweep
Whirl in eddying waves
The dead leaves o’er the graves.

And the living sigh:
Forgotten ones, so soon your memories die.
Ye never more may list the wild bird’s song,
Or mingle in the crowded city-throng.
Ye must ever dwell in gloom,
‘Mid the silence of the tomb.

And the dead reply:
God giveth us His life. Ye die,
Your barren lives are tilled with tears,
For glory, ye are clad with fears.
Oh, living ones! oh, earthly shades!
We live; your beauty clouds and fades.

THE DYING CHILD TO ITS MOTHER.

(“Oh! vous aurez trop dit.”)

[Bk. III. xiv., April, 1843.]

Ah, you said too often to your angel
  There are other angels in the sky —
There, where nothing changes, nothing suffers,
  Sweet it were to enter in on high.

To that dome on marvellous pilasters,
  To that tent roofed o’er with colored bars,
That blue garden full of stars like lilies,
  And of lilies beautiful as stars.

And you said it was a place most joyous,
  All our poor imaginings above,
With the wingèd cherubim for playmates,
  And the good God evermore to love.

Sweet it were to dwell there in all seasons,
  Like a taper burning day and night,
Near to the child Jesus and the Virgin,
  In that home so beautiful and bright.

But you should have told him, hapless mother,
  Told your child so frail and gentle too,
That you were all his in life’s beginning,
  But that also he belonged to you.

For the mother watches o’er the infant,
  He must rise up in her latter days,
She will need the man that was her baby
  To stand by her when her strength decays.

Ah, you did not tell enough your darling
  That God made us in this lower life,
Woman for the man, and man for woman,
  In our pains, our pleasures and our strife.

So that one sad day, O loss, O sorrow!
  The sweet creature left you all alone;
’Twas your own hand hung the cage door open,
  Mother, and your pretty bird is flown.

BP. ALEXANDER.

EPITAPH.

("Il vivait, il jouait.")

[Bk. III. xv., May, 1843.]

He lived and ever played, the tender smiling thing.
What need, O Earth, to have plucked this flower from blossoming?
Hadst thou not then the birds with rainbow-colors bright,
  The stars and the great woods, the wan wave, the blue sky?
  What need to have rapt this child from her thou hadst placed him by —
Beneath those other flowers to have hid this flower from sight?

Because of this one child thou hast no more of might,
O star-girt Earth, his death yields thee not higher delight!
But, ah! the mother's heart with woe for ever wild,
  This heart whose sovran bliss brought forth so bitter birth —
  This world as vast as thou, even thou, O sorrowless Earth,
Is desolate and void because of this one child!

NELSON K. TYERMAN.

ST. JOHN.

("Un jour, le morne esprit.")

[Bk. VI. vii., Jersey, September, 1855.]

One day, the sombre soul, the Prophet most sublime
  At Patmos who aye dreamed,
And tremblingly perused, without the vast of Time,
  Words that with hell-fire gleamed,

Said to his eagle: "Bird, spread wings for loftiest flight —
  Needs must I see His Face!"
The eagle soared. At length, far beyond day and night,
  Lo! the all-sacred Place!

And John beheld the Way whereof no angel knows
  The name, nor there hath trod;
And, lo! the Place fulfilled with shadow that aye glows
  Because of very God.

NELSON R. TYERMAN.

THE POET’S SIMPLE FAITH.

You say, “Where goest thou?” I cannot tell,
And still go on. If but the way be straight,
It cannot go amiss! before me lies
Dawn and the Day; the Night behind me; that Suffices me; I break the bounds; I see,
And nothing more; believe, and nothing less.
My future is not one of my concerns.

PROF. E. DOWDEN.

I AM CONTENT.

(“J’habite l’ombre.”)

True; I dwell lone,
Upon sea-beaten cape,
Mere raft of stone;
Whence all escape
Save one who shrinks not from the gloom,
And will not take the coward’s leap i’ the tomb.

My bedroom rocks
With breezes; quakes in storms,
When dangling locks
Of seaweed mock the forms
Of straggling clouds that trail o’erhead
Like tresses from disrupted coffin-lead.

Upon the sky
Crape palls are often nailed
With stars. Mine eye
Has scared the gull that sailed
To blacker depths with shrillest scream,
Still fainter, till like voices in a dream.

My days become
More plaintive, wan, and pale,
While o’er the foam
I see, borne by the gale,
Infinity! in kindness sent —
To find me ever saying: “I’m content!”

LA LÉGENDE DES SIÈCLES.

CAIN.

(“Lorsque avec ses enfants Cain se fût enfui.”)

[Bk. II]

Then, with his children, clothed in skins of brutes,
Dishevelled, livid, rushing through the storm,
Cain fled before Jehovah. As night fell
The dark man reached a mount in a great plain,
And his tired wife and his sons, out of breath,
Said: “Let us lie down on the earth and sleep.”
Cain, sleeping not, dreamed at the mountain foot.
Raising his head, in that funereal heaven
He saw an eye, a great eye, in the night
Open, and staring at him in the gloom.
“I am too near,” he said, and tremblingly woke up
His sleeping sons again, and his tired wife,
And fled through space and darkness. Thirty days
He went, and thirty nights, nor looked behind;
Pale, silent, watchful, shaking at each sound;
No rest, no sleep, till he attained the strand
Where the sea washes that which since was Asshur.
“Here pause,” he said, “for this place is secure;
Here may we rest, for this is the world’s end.”
And he sat down; when, lo! in the sad sky,
The selfsame Eye on the horizon’s verge,
And the wretch shook as in an ague fit.
“Hide me!” he cried; and all his watchful sons,
Their finger on their lip, stared at their sire.
Cain said to Jabal (father of them that dwell
In tents): “Spread here the curtain of thy tent,”
And they spread wide the floating canvas roof,
And made it fast and fixed it down with lead.

“You see naught now,” said Zillah then, fair child
The daughter of his eldest, sweet as day.
But Cain replied, “That Eye — I see it still.”
And Jubal cried (the father of all those
That handle harp and organ): “I will build
A sanctuary;” and he made a wall of bronze,
And set his sire behind it. But Cain moaned,
“That Eye is glaring at me ever.” Henoch cried:
“Then must we make a circle vast of towers,
So terrible that nothing dare draw near;
Build we a city with a citadel;
Build we a city high and close it fast.”
Then Tubal Cain (instructor of all them
That work in brass and iron) built a tower —
Enormous, superhuman. While he wrought,
His fiery brothers from the plain around
Hunted the sons of Enoch and of Seth;
They plucked the eyes out of whoever passed,
And hurled at even arrows to the stars.
They set strong granite for the canvas wall,
And every block was clamped with iron chains.
It seemed a city made for hell. Its towers,
With their huge masses made night in the land.
The walls were thick as mountains. On the door
They graved: “Let not God enter here.” This done,
And having finished to cement and build
In a stone tower, they set him in the midst.
To him, still dark and haggard, “Oh, my sire,
Is the Eye gone?” quoth Zillah tremblingly.
But Cain replied: “Nay, it is even there.”
Then added: “I will live beneath the earth,
As a lone man within his sepulchre.
I will see nothing; will be seen of none.”
They digged a trench, and Cain said: “’Tis enow,”
As he went down alone into the vault;
But when he sat, so ghost-like, in his chair,

And they had closed the dungeon o’er his head,
The Eye was in the tomb and fixed on Cain.

Dublin University Magazine

BOAZ ASLEEP.

(“Booz s’était couché.”)

[Bk. II. vi.]

At work within his barn since very early,
  Fairly tired out with toiling all the day,
  Upon the small bed where he always lay
Boaz was sleeping by his sacks of barley.

Barley and wheat-fields he possessed, and well,
  Though rich, loved justice; wherefore all the flood
  That turned his mill-wheels was unstained with mud
And in his smithy blazed no fire of hell.

His beard was silver, as in April all
  A stream may be; he did not grudge a stook.
  When the poor gleaner passed, with kindly look,
Quoth he, “Of purpose let some handfuls fall.”

He walked his way of life straight on and plain,
  With justice clothed, like linen white and clean,
  And ever rustling towards the poor, I ween,
Like public fountains ran his sacks of grain.

Good master, faithful friend, in his estate
  Frugal yet generous, beyond the youth
  He won regard of woman, for in sooth
The young man may be fair — the old man’s great.

Life’s primal source, unchangeable and bright,
  The old man entereth, the day eterne;
  And in the young man’s eye a flame may burn,
But in the old man’s eye one seeth light.

As Jacob slept, or Judith, so full deep
  Slept Boaz ‘neath the leaves. Now it betided,
  Heaven’s gate being partly open, that there glided
A fair dream forth, and hovered o’er his sleep.

And in his dream to heaven, the blue and broad,
  Right from his loins an oak tree grew amain.
  His race ran up it far, like a long chain;
Below it sung a king, above it died a God.

Whereupon Boaz murmured in his heart,
  ”The number of my years is past fourscore:
  How may this be? I have not any more,
Or son, or wife; yea, she who had her part.

“In this my couch, O Lord! is now in Thine;
  And she, half living, I half dead within,
  Our beings still commingle and are twin,
It cannot be that I should found a line!

“Youth hath triumphal mornings; its days bound
  From night, as from a victory. But such
  A trembling as the birch-tree’s to the touch
Of winter is an eld, and evening closes round.

“I bow myself to death, as lone to meet
  The water bow their fronts athirst.” He said.
  The cedar feeleth not the rose’s head,
Nor he the woman’s presence at his feet!

For while he slept, the Moabitess Ruth
  Lay at his feet, expectant of his waking.
  He knowing not what sweet guile she was making;
She knowing not what God would have in sooth.

Asphodel scents did Gilgal’s breezes bring —
  Through nuptial shadows, questionless, full fast

  The angels sped, for momently there passed
A something blue which seemed to be a wing.

Silent was all in Jezreel and Ur —
  The stars were glittering in the heaven’s dusk meadows.
  Far west among those flowers of the shadows.
The thin clear crescent lustrous over her,

Made Ruth raise question, looking through the bars
  Of heaven, with eyes half-oped, what God, what comer
  Unto the harvest of the eternal summer,
Had flung his golden hook down on the field of stars.

BP. ALEXANDER.

SONG OF THE GERMAN LANZKNECHT

("Sonnex, clarions!")

[Bk. VI. vii.]

Flourish the trumpet! and rattle the drum!
The Reiters are mounted! the Reiters will come!

When our bullets cease singing
And long swords cease ringing
  On backplates of fearsomest foes in full flight,
We'll dig up their dollars
To string for girls' collars —
  They'll jingle around them before it is night!
      When flourish the trumpets, etc.

We're the Emperor's winners
Of right royal dinners,
  Where cities are served up and flanked by estates,
While we wallow in claret,
Knowing not how to spare it,
  Though beer is less likely to muddle our pates —
      While flourish the trumpets, etc.

Gods of battle! red-handed!
Wise it was to have banded
  Such arms as are these for embracing of gain!
Hearken to each war-vulture
Crying, "Down with all culture
  Of land or religion!" Hoch! to our refrain
      Of flourish the trumpets, etc.

Give us "bones of the devil"
To exchange in our revel
  The ingot, the gem, and yellow doubloon;
Coronets are but playthings —

We reck not who say things
  When the Reiters have ridden to death! none too soon! —
To flourish of trumpet and rattle of drum,
The Reiters will finish as firm as they come!

H.L.W.

KING CANUTE.

(“Un jour, Kanut mourut.”)

[Bk. X. i.]

King Canute died. Encoffined he was laid.
Of Aarhuus came the Bishop prayers to say,
And sang a hymn upon his tomb, and held
That Canute was a saint — Canute the Great,
That from his memory breathed celestial perfume,
And that they saw him, they the priests, in glory,
Seated at God’s right hand, a prophet crowned.

I.

Evening came,
And hushed the organ in the holy place,
And the priests, issuing from the temple doors,
Left the dead king in peace. Then he arose,
Opened his gloomy eyes, and grasped his sword,
And went forth loftily. The massy walls
Yielded before the phantom, like a mist.

There is a sea where Aarhuus, Altona,
And Elsinore’s vast domes and shadowy towers
Glass in deep waters. Over this he went
Dark, and still Darkness listened for his foot
Inaudible, itself being but a dream.
Straight to Mount Savo went he, gnawed by time,
And thus, “O mountain buffeted of storms,
Give me of thy huge mantle of deep snow
To frame a winding-sheet.” The mountain knew him,
Nor dared refuse, and with his sword Canute
Cut from his flank white snow, enough to make
The garment he desired, and then he cried,
“Old mountain! death is dumb, but tell me thou

The way to God." More deep each dread ravine
And hideous hollow yawned, and sadly thus
Answered that hoar associate of the clouds:
"Spectre, I know not, I am always here."
Canute departed, and with head erect,
All white and ghastly in his robe of snow,
Went forth into great silence and great night
By Iceland and Norway. After him
Gloom swallowed up the universe. He stood
A sovran kingdomless, a lonely ghost
Confronted with Immensity. He saw
The awful Infinite, at whose portal pale
Lightning sinks dying; Darkness, skeleton
Whose joints are nights, and utter Formlessness
Moving confusedly in the horrible dark
Inscrutable and blind. No star was there,
Yet something like a haggard gleam; no sound
But the dull tide of Darkness, and her dumb
And fearful shudder. "'Tis the tomb," he said,
"God is beyond!" Three steps he took, then cried:
'Twas deathly as the grave, and not a voice
Responded, nor came any breath to sway
The snowy mantle, with unsullied white
Emboldening the spectral wanderer.
Sudden he marked how, like a gloomy star,
A spot grew broad upon his livid robe;
Slowly it widened, raying darkness forth;
And Canute proved it with his spectral hands
It was a drop of blood.

R. GARNETT.

II.

But he saw nothing; space was black — no sound.
"Forward," said Canute, raising his proud head.
There fell a second stain beside the first,

Then it grew larger, and the Cimbrian chief
Stared at the thick vague darkness, and saw naught.
Still as a bloodhound follows on his track,
Sad he went on. ‘There fell a third red stain
On the white winding-sheet. He had never fled;
Howbeit Canute forward went no more,
But turned on that side where the sword arm hangs.
A drop of blood, as if athwart a dream,
Fell on the shroud, and reddened his right hand.
Then, as in reading one turns back a page,
A second time he changed his course, and turned
To the dim left. There fell a drop of blood.
Canute drew back, trembling to be alone,
And wished he had not left his burial couch.
But, when a blood-drop fell again, he stopped,
Stooped his pale head, and tried to make a prayer.
Then fell a drop, and the prayer died away
In savage terror. Darkly he moved on,
A hideous spectre hesitating, white,
And ever as he went, a drop of blood
Implacably from the darkness broke away
And stained that awful whiteness. He beheld
Shaking, as doth a poplar in the wind,
Those stains grow darker and more numerous:
Another, and another, and another.
They seem to light up that funereal gloom,
And mingling in the folds of that white sheet,
Made it a cloud of blood. He went, and went,
And still from that unfathomable vault
The red blood dropped upon him drop by drop,
Always, for ever — without noise, as though
From the black feet of some night-gibbeted corpse.
Alas! Who wept those formidable tears?
The Infinite! — Toward Heaven, of the good
Attainable, through the wild sea of night,
That hath not ebb nor flow, Canute went on,
And ever walking, came to a closed door,

That from beneath showed a mysterious light.
Then he looked down upon his winding-sheet,
For that was the great place, the sacred place,
That was a portion of the light of God,
And from behind that door Hosannas rang.
The winding-sheet was red, and Canute stopped.
This is why Canute from the light of day
Draws ever back, and hath not dared appear
Before the Judge whose face is as the sun.
This is why still remaineth the dark king
Out in the night, and never having power
To bring his robe back to its first pure state,
But feeling at each step a blood-drop fall,
Wanders eternally ‘neath the vast black heaven.

Dublin University Magazine

THE BOY-KING’S PRAYER.

(“Le cheval galopait toujours.”)

[Bk. XV. ii. 10.]

The good steed flew o’er river and o’er plain,
Till far away, — no need of spur or rein.
The child, half rapture, half solicitude,
Looks back anon, in fear to be pursued;
Shakes lest some raging brother of his sire
Leap from those rocks that o’er the path aspire.

On the rough granite bridge, at evening’s fall,
The white horse paused by Compostella’s wall,
(’Twas good St. James that reared those arches tall,)
Through the dim mist stood out each belfry dome,
And the boy hailed the paradise of home.

Close to the bridge, set on high stage, they meet
A Christ of stone, the Virgin at his feet.
A taper lighted that dear pardoning face,
More tender in the shade that wrapped the place,
And the child stayed his horse, and in the shine
Of the wax taper knelt down at the shrine.

“O, my good God! O, Mother Maiden sweet!”
He said, “I was the worm beneath men’s feet;
My father’s brethren held me in their thrall,
But Thou didst send the Paladin of Gaul,
O Lord! and show’dst what different spirits move
The good men and the evil; those who love
And those who love not. I had been as they,
But Thou, O God! hast saved both life and soul to-day.
I saw Thee in that noble knight; I saw
Pure light, true faith, and honor’s sacred law,
My Father, — and I learnt that monarchs must

Compassionate the weak, and unto all be just.
O Lady Mother! O dear Jesus! thus
Bowed at the cross where Thou didst bleed for us,
I swear to hold the truth that now I learn,
Leal to the loyal, to the traitor stern,
And ever just and nobly mild to be,
Meet scholar of that Prince of Chivalry;
And here Thy shrine bear witness, Lord, for me.”

The horse of Roland, hearing the boy tell
His vow, looked round and spoke: “O King, ’tis well!”
Then on the charger mounted the child-king,
And rode into the town, while all the bells ‘gan ring.

Dublin University Magazine

EVIRADNUS.

THE KNIGHT ERRANT.

(“Qu’est-ce que Sigismond et Ladislas ont dit.”)

[Bk. XV. iii. 1.]

I.

THE ADVENTURER SETS OUT.

What was it Sigismond and Ladisläus said?

I know not if the rock, or tree o’erhead,
Had heard their speech; — but when the two spoke low,
Among the trees, a shudder seemed to go
Through all their branches, just as if that way
A beast had passed to trouble and dismay.
More dark the shadow of the rock was seen,
And then a morsel of the shade, between
The sombre trees, took shape as it would seem
Like spectre walking in the sunset’s gleam.

It is not monster rising from its lair,
Nor phantom of the foliage and the air,
It is not morsel of the granite’s shade
That walks in deepest hollows of the glade.
’Tis not a vampire nor a spectre pale
But living man in rugged coat of mail.
It is Alsatia’s noble Chevalier,
Eviradnus the brave, that now is here.

The men who spoke he recognized the while
He rested in the thicket; words of guile
Most horrible were theirs as they passed on,
And to the ears of Eviradnus one —
One word had come which roused him. Well he knew
The land which lately he had journeyed through.

He down the valley went into the inn
Where he had left his horse and page, Gasclin.
The horse had wanted drink, and lost a shoe;
And now, “Be quick!” he said, “with what you do,
For business calls me, I must not delay.”
He strides the saddle and he rides away.

II.

EVIRADNUS.

Eviradnus was growing old apace,
The weight of years had left its hoary trace,
But still of knights the most renowned was he,
Model of bravery and purity.
His blood he spared not; ready day or night
To punish crime, his dauntless sword shone bright
In his unblemished hand; holy and white
And loyal all his noble life had been,
A Christian Samson coming on the scene.
With fist alone the gate he battered down
Of Sickingen in flames, and saved the town.
’Twas he, indignant at the honor paid
To crime, who with his heel an onslaught made
Upon Duke Lupus’ shameful monument,
Tore down, the statue he to fragments rent;
Then column of the Strasburg monster bore
To bridge of Wasselonne, and threw it o’er
Into the waters deep. The people round
Blazon the noble deeds that so abound
From Altorf unto Chaux-de-Fonds, and say,
When he rests musing in a dreamy way,
“Behold, ’tis Charlemagne!” Tawny to see
And hairy, and seven feet high was he,
Like John of Bourbon. Roaming hill or wood
He looked a wolf was striving to do good.
Bound up in duty, he of naught complained,

The cry for help his aid at once obtained.
Only he mourned the baseness of mankind,
And — that the beds too short he still doth find.
When people suffer under cruel kings,
With pity moved, he to them succor brings.
’Twas he defended Alix from her foes
As sword of Urraca — he ever shows
His strength is for the feeble and oppressed;
Father of orphans he, and all distressed!
Kings of the Rhine in strongholds were by him
Boldly attacked, and tyrant barons grim.
He freed the towns — confronting in his lair
Hugo the Eagle; boldly did he dare
To break the collar of Saverne, the ring
Of Colmar, and the iron torture thing
Of Schlestadt, and the chain that Haguenau bore.
Such Eviradnus was a wrong before,
Good but most terrible. In the dread scale
Which princes weighted with their horrid tale
Of craft and violence, and blood and ill,
And fire and shocking deeds, his sword was still
God’s counterpoise displayed. Ever alert
More evil from the wretched to avert,
Those hapless ones who ‘neath Heaven’s vault at night
Raise suppliant hands. His lance loved not the plight
Of mouldering in the rack, of no avail,
His battle-axe slipped from supporting nail
Quite easily; ’twas ill for action base
To come so near that he the thing could trace.
The steel-clad champion death drops all around
As glaciers water. Hero ever found
Eviradnus is kinsman of the race
Of Amadys of Gaul, and knights of Thrace,
He smiles at age. For he who never asked
For quarter from mankind — shall he be tasked
To beg of Time for mercy? Rather he
Would girdle up his loins, like Baldwin be.

Aged he is, but of a lineage rare;
The least intrepid of the birds that dare
Is not the eagle barbed. What matters age,
The years but fire him with a holy rage.
Though late from Palestine, he is not spent, —
With age he wrestles, firm in his intent.

III.

IN THE FOREST.

If in the woodland traveller there had been
That eve, who lost himself, strange sight he'd seen.
Quite in the forest's heart a lighted space
Arose to view; in that deserted place
A lone, abandoned hall with light aglow
The long neglect of centuries did show.
The castle-towers of Corbus in decay
Were girt by weeds and growths that had their way.
Couch-grass and ivy, and wild eglantine
In subtle scaling warfare all combine.
Subject to such attacks three hundred years,
The donjon yields, and ruin now appears,
E'en as by leprosy the wild boars die,
In moat the crumbled battlements now lie;
Around the snake-like bramble twists its rings;
Freebooter sparrows come on daring wings
To perch upon the swivel-gun, nor heed
Its murmuring growl when pecking in their greed
The mulberries ripe. With insolence the thorn
Thrives on the desolation so forlorn.
But winter brings revenges; then the Keep
Wakes all vindictive from its seeming sleep,
Hurls down the heavy rain, night after night,
Thanking the season's all-resistless might;
And, when the gutters choke, its gargoyles four

From granite mouths in anger spit and pour
Upon the hated ivy hour by hour.

As to the sword rust is, so lichens are
To towering citadel with which they war.
Alas! for Corbus — dreary, desolate,
And yet its woes the winters mitigate.
It rears itself among convulsive throes
That shake its ruins when the tempest blows.
Winter, the savage warrior, pleases well,
With its storm clouds, the mighty citadel, —
Restoring it to life. The lightning flash
Strikes like a thief and flies; the winds that crash
Sound like a clarion, for the Tempest bluff
Is Battle’s sister. And when wild and rough,
The north wind blows, the tower exultant cries
“Behold me!” When hail-hurling gales arise
Of blustering Equinox, to fan the strife,
It stands erect, with martial ardor rife,
A joyous soldier! When like yelping hound
Pursued by wolves, November comes to bound
In joy from rock to rock, like answering cheer
To howling January now so near —
“Come on!” the Donjon cries to blasts o’erhead —
It has seen Attila, and knows not dread.
Oh, dismal nights of contest in the rain
And mist, that furious would the battle gain,
‘The tower braves all, though angry skies pour fast
The flowing torrents, river-like and vast.
From their eight pinnacles the gorgons bay,
And scattered monsters, in their stony way,
Are growling heard; the rampart lions gnaw
The misty air and slush with granite maw,
The sleet upon the griffins spits, and all
The Saurian monsters, answering to the squall,
Flap wings; while through the broken ceiling fall
Torrents of rain upon the forms beneath,

Dragons and snak'd Medusas gnashing teeth
In the dismantled rooms. Like armored knight
The granite Castle fights with all its might,
Resisting through the winter. All in vain,
The heaven's bluster, January's rain,
And those dread elemental powers we call
The Infinite — the whirlwinds that appall —
Thunder and waterspouts; and winds that shake
As 'twere a tree its ripened fruit to take.
The winds grow wearied, warring with the tower,
The noisy North is out of breath, nor power
Has any blast old Corbus to defeat,
It still has strength their onslaughts worst to meet.
Thus, spite of briers and thistles, the old tower
Remains triumphant through the darkest hour;
Superb as pontiff, in the forest shown,
Its rows of battlements make triple crown;
At eve, its silhouette is finely traced
Immense and black — showing the Keep is placed
On rocky throne, sublime and high; east, west,
And north and south, at corners four, there rest
Four mounts; Aptar, where flourishes the pine,
And Toxis, where the elms grow green and fine;
Crobius and Bleyda, giants in their might,
Against the stormy winds to stand and fight,
And these above its diadem uphold
Night's living canopy of clouds unrolled.

The herdsman fears, and thinks its shadow creeps
To follow him; and superstition keeps
Such hold that Corbus as a terror reigns;
Folks say the Fort a target still remains
For the Black Archer — and that it contains
The cave where the Great Sleeper still sleeps sound.
The country people all the castle round
Are frightened easily, for legends grow
And mix with phantoms of the mind; we know

The hearth is cradle of such fantasies,
And in the smoke the cotter sees arise
From low-thatched but he traces cause of dread.
Thus rendering thanks that he is lowly bred,
Because from such none look for valorous deeds.
The peasant flies the Tower, although it leads
A noble knight to seek adventure there,
And, from his point of honor, dangers dare.

Thus very rarely passer-by is seen;
But — it might be with twenty years between,
Or haply less — at unfixed interval
There would a semblance be of festival.
A Seneschal and usher would appear,
And troops of servants many baskets bear.
Then were, in mystery, preparations made,
And they departed — for till night none stayed.
But ‘twixt the branches gazers could descry
The blackened hall lit up most brilliantly.
None dared approach — and this the reason why.

IV.

THE CUSTOM OF LUSACE.

When died a noble Marquis of Lusace
’Twas custom for the heir who filled his place
Before assuming princely pomp and power
To sup one night in Corbus’ olden tower.
From this weird meal he passed to the degree
Of Prince and Margrave; nor could ever he
Be thought brave knight, or she — if woman claim
The rank — be reckoned of unblemished fame
Till they had breathed the air of ages gone,
The funeral odors, in the nest alone
Of its dead masters. Ancient was the race;
To trace the upward stem of proud Lusace
Gives one a vertigo; descended they

From ancestor of Attila, men say;
Their race to him — through Pagans — they hark back;
Becoming Christians, race they thought to track
Through Lechus, Plato, Otho to combine
With Ursus, Stephen, in a lordly line.
Of all those masters of the country round
That were on Northern Europe's boundary found —
At first were waves and then the dykes were reared —
Corbus in double majesty appeared,
Castle on hill and town upon the plain;
And one who mounted on the tower could gain
A view beyond the pines and rocks, of spires
That pierce the shade the distant scene acquires;
A walled town is it, but 'tis not ally
Of the old citadel's proud majesty;
Unto itself belonging this remained.
Often a castle was thus self-sustained
And equalled towns; witness in Lombardy
Crama, and Plato too in Tuscany,
And in Apulia Barletta; — each one
Was powerful as a town, and dreaded none.
Corbus ranked thus; its precincts seemed to hold
The reflex of its mighty kings of old;
Their great events had witness in these walls,
Their marriages were here and funerals,
And mostly here it was that they were born;
And here crowned Barons ruled with pride and scorn;
Cradle of Scythian majesty this place.
Now each new master of this ancient race
A duty owed to ancestors which he
Was bound to carry on. The law's decree
It was that he should pass alone the night
Which made him king, as in their solemn sight.
Just at the forest's edge a clerk was met
With wine in sacred cup and purpose set,
A wine mysterious, which the heir must drink
To cause deep slumber till next day's soft brink.

Then to the castle tower he wends his way,
And finds a supper laid with rich display.
He sups and sleeps: then to his slumbering eyes
The shades of kings from Bela all arise.
None dare the tower to enter on this night,
But when the morning dawns, crowds are in sight
The dreamer to deliver, — whom half dazed,
And with the visions of the night amazed,
They to the old church take, where rests the dust
Of Borivorus; then the bishop must,
With fervent blessings on his eyes and mouth,
Put in his hands the stony hatchets both,
With which — even like death impartially —
Struck Attila, with one arm dexterously
The south, and with the other arm the north.

This day the town the threatening flag set forth
Of Marquis Swantibore, the monster he
Who in the wood tied up his wife, to be
Devoured by wolves, together with the bull
Of which with jealousy his heart was full.

Even when woman took the place of heir
The tower of Corbus claimed the supper there;
’Twas law — the woman trembled, but must dare.

V.

THE MARCHIONESS MAHAUD.

Niece of the Marquis — John the Striker named —
Mahaud to-day the marquisate has claimed.
A noble dame — the crown is hers by right:
As woman she has graces that delight.
A queen devoid of beauty is not queen,
She needs the royalty of beauty’s mien;
God in His harmony has equal ends
For cedar that resists, and reed that bends,

And good it is a woman sometimes rules,
Holds in her hand the power, and manners schools,
And laws and mind; — succeeding master proud,
With gentle voice and smile she leads the crowd,
The sombre human troop. But sweet Mahaud
On evil days had fallen; gentle, good,
Alas! she held the sceptre like a flower;
Timid yet gay, imprudent for the hour,
And careless too. With Europe all in throes,
Though twenty years she now already knows,
She has refused to marry, although oft
Entreated. It is time an arm less soft
Than hers — a manly arm — supported her;
Like to the rainbow she, one might aver,
Shining on high between the cloud and rain,
Or like the ewe that gambols on the plain
Between the bear and tiger; innocent,
She has two neighbors of most foul intent:
For foes the Beauty has, in life’s pure spring,
The German Emp’ror and the Polish King.

VI.

THE TWO NEIGHBORS.

The difference this betwixt the evil pair,
Faithless to God — for laws without a care —
One was the claw, the other one the will Controlling. Yet to mass they both went still,
And on the rosary told their beads each day.
But none the less the world believed that they
Unto the powers of hell their souls had sold.
Even in whispers men each other told
The details of the pact which they had signed
With that dark power, the foe of human kind;
In whispers, for the crowd had mortal dread
Of them so high, and woes that they had spread.

One might be vengeance and the other hate,
Yet lived they side by side, in powerful state
And close alliance. All the people near
From red horizon dwelt in abject fear,
Mastered by them; their figures darkly grand
Had ruddy reflex from the wasted land,
And fires, and towns they sacked. Besides the one,
Like David, poet was, the other shone
As fine musician — rumor spread their fame,
Declaring them divine, until each name
In Italy’s fine sonnets met with praise.
The ancient hierarch in those old days
Had custom strange, a now forgotten thing,
It was a European plan that King
Of France was marquis, and th’ imperial head
Of Germany was duke; there was no need
To class the other kings, but barons they,
Obedient vassals unto Rome, their stay.
The King of Poland was but simple knight,
Yet now, for once, had strange unwonted right,
And, as exception to the common state,
This one Sarmatian King was held as great
As German Emperor; and each knew how
His evil part to play, nor mercy show.
The German had one aim, it was to take
All land he could, and it his own to make.
The Pole already having Baltic shore,
Seized Celtic ports, still needing more and more.
On all the Northern Sea his crafts roused fear:
Iceland beheld his demon navy near.
Antwerp the German burnt; and Prussias twain
Bowed to the yoke. The Polish King was fain
To help the Russian Spotocus — his aid
Was like the help that in their common trade
A sturdy butcher gives a weaker one.
The King it is who seizes, and this done,
The Emp’ror pillages, usurping right

In war Teutonic, settled but by might.
The King in Jutland cynic footing gains,
The weak coerced, the while with cunning pains
The strong are duped. But ’tis a law they make
That their accord themselves should never break.
From Arctic seas to cities Transalpine,
Their hideous talons, curved for sure rapine,
Scrape o’er and o’er the mournful continent,
Their plans succeed, and each is well content.
Thus under Satan’s all paternal care
They brothers are, this royal bandit pair.
Oh, noxious conquerors! with transient rule
Chimera heads — ambition can but fool.
Their misty minds but harbor rottenness
Loathsome and fetid, and all barrenness —
Their deeds to ashes turn, and, hydra-bred,
The mystic skeleton is theirs to dread.
The daring German and the cunning Pole
Noted to-day a woman had control
Of lands, and watched Mahaud like evil spies;
And from the Emp’ror’s cruel mouth — with dyes
Of wrath empurpled — came these words of late:
“The empire wearies of the wallet weight
Hung at its back — this High and Low Lusace,
Whose hateful load grows heavier apace,
That now a woman holds its ruler’s place.”
Threatening, and blood suggesting, every word;
The watchful Pole was silent — but he heard.

Two monstrous dangers; but the heedless one
Babbles and smiles, and bids all care begone —
Likes lively speech — while all the poor she makes
To love her, and the taxes off she takes.
A life of dance and pleasure she has known —
A woman always; in her jewelled crown
It is the pearl she loves — not cutting gems,
For these can wound, and mark men’s diadems.

She pays the hire of Homer’s copyists,
And in the Courts of Love presiding, lists.

Quite recently unto her Court have come
Two men — unknown their names or native home,
Their rank or race; but one plays well the lute,
The other is a troubadour; both suit
The taste of Mahaud, when on summer eve,
‘Neath opened windows, they obtain her leave
To sing upon the terrace, and relate
The charming tales that do with music mate.
In August the Moravians have their fête,
But it is radiant June in which Lusace
Must consecrate her noble Margrave race.
Thus in the weird and old ancestral tower
For Mahaud now has come the fateful hour,
The lonely supper which her state decrees.
What matters this to flowers, and birds, and trees,
And clouds and fountains? That the people may
Still bear their yoke — have kings to rule alway?
The water flows, the wind in passing by
In murmuring tones takes up the questioning cry.

VII.

THE BANQUET HALL.

The old stupendous hall has but one door,
And in the dusk it seems that more and more
The walls recede in space unlimited.
At the far end there is a table spread
That in the dreary void with splendor shines;
For ceiling we behold but rafter lines.
The table is arranged for one sole guest,
A solitary chair doth near it rest,
Throne-like, ‘neath canopy that droopeth down
From the black beams; upon the walls are shown
The painted histories of the olden might,

The King of the Wends Thassilo’s stern fight
On land with Nimrod, and on ocean wide
With Neptune. Rivers too personified
Appear — the Rhine as by the Meuse betrayed,
And fading groups of Odin in the shade,
And the wolf Fenrir and the Asgard snake.
One might the place for dragons’ stable take.
The only lights that in the shed appear
Spring from the table’s giant chandelier
With seven iron branches — brought from hell
By Attila Archangel, people tell,
When he had conquered Mammon — and they say
That seven souls were the first flames that day.
This banquet hall looks an abyss outlined
With shadowy vagueness, though indeed we find
In the far depth upon the table spread
A sudden, strong, and glaring light is shed,
Striking upon the goldsmith’s burnished works,
And on the pheasants killed by traitor hawks.
Loaded the table is with viands cold,
Ewers and flagons, all enough of old
To make a love feast. All the napery
Was Friesland’s famous make; and fair to see
The dishes, silver-gilt and bordered round
With flowers; for fruit, here strawberries were found
And citrons, apples too, and nectarines.
The wooden bowls were carved in cunning lines
By peasants of the Murg, whose skilful hands
With patient toil reclaim the barren lands
And make their gardens flourish on a rock,
Or mountain where we see the hunters flock.
Gold fountain-cup, with handles Florentine,
Shows Acteons horned, though armed and booted fine,
Who fight with sword in hand against the hounds.
Roses and gladioles make up bright mounds
Of flowers, with juniper and aniseed;
While sage, all newly cut for this great need,

Covers the Persian carpet that is spread
Beneath the table, and so helps to shed
Around a perfume of the balmy spring.
Beyond is desolation withering.
One hears within the hollow dreary space
Across the grove, made fresh by summer’s grace,
The wind that ever is with mystic might
A spirit ripple of the Infinite.
The glass restored to frames to creak is made
By blustering wind that comes from neighboring glade.
Strange in this dream-like place, so drear and lone,
The guest expected should be living one!
The seven lights from seven arms make glow
Almost with life the staring eyes that show
On the dim frescoes — and along the walls
Is here and there a stool, or the light falls
O’er some long chest, with likeness to a tomb.
Yet was displayed amid the mournful gloom
Some copper vessels, and some crockery ware.
The door — as if it must, yet scarcely dare —
Had opened widely to the night’s fresh air.

No voice is heard, for man has fled the place;
But Terror crouches in the corners’ space,
And waits the coming guest. This banquet hall
Of Titans is so high, that he who shall
With wandering eye look up from beam to beam
Of the confused wild roof will haply seem
To wonder that the stars he sees not there.
Giants the spiders are, that weave with care
Their hideous webs, which float the joists amid,
Joists whose dark ends in griffins’ jaws are hid.
The light is lurid, and the air like death,
And dark and foul. Even Night holds its breath
Awhile. One might suppose the door had fear
To move its double leaves — their noise to hear.

VIII.

WHAT MORE WAS TO BE SEEN.

But the great hall of generations dead
Has something more sepulchral and more dread
Than lurid glare from seven-branched chandelier
Or table lone with stately daïs near —
Two rows of arches o’er a colonnade
With knights on horseback all in mail arrayed,
Each one disposed with pillar at his back
And to another vis-à-vis. Nor lack
The fittings all complete; in each right hand
A lance is seen; the armored horses stand
With chamfrons laced, and harness buckled sure;
The cuissarts’ studs are by their clamps secure;
The dirks stand out upon the saddle-bow;
Even unto the horses’ feet do flow
Caparisons, — the leather all well clasped,
The gorget and the spurs with bronze tongues hasped,
The shining long sword from the saddle hung,
The battle-axe across the back was flung.
Under the arm a trusty dagger rests,
Each spiked knee-piece its murderous power attests.
Feet press the stirrups — hands on bridle shown
Proclaim all ready, with the visors down,
And yet they stir not, nor is audible
A sound to make the sight less terrible.

Each monstrous horse a frontal horn doth bear,
If e’er the Prince of Darkness herdsman were,
These cattle black were his by surest right,
Like things but seen in horrid dreams of night.
The steeds are swathed in trappings manifold,
The armed knights are grave, and stern, and cold,
Terrific too; the clench’d fists seem to hold
Some frightful missive, which the phantom hands

Would show, if opened out at hell’s commands.
The dusk exaggerates their giant size,
The shade is awed — the pillars coldly rise.
Oh, Night! why are these awful warriors here?

Horses and horsemen that make gazers fear
Are only empty armor. But erect
And haughty mien they all affect
And threatening air — though shades of iron still.
Are they strange larvae — these their statues ill?
No. They are dreams of horror clothed in brass,
Which from profoundest depths of evil pass
With futile aim to dare the Infinite!
Souls tremble at the silent spectre sight,
As if in this mysterious cavalcade
They saw the weird and mystic halt was made
Of them who at the coming dawn of day
Would fade, and from their vision pass away.
A stranger looking in, these masks to see,
Might deem from Death some mandate there might be
At times to burst the tombs — the dead to wear
A human shape, and mustering ranks appear
Of phantoms, each confronting other shade.

Grave-clothes are not more grim and sombre made
Than are these helms; the deaf and sealed-up graves
Are not more icy than these arms; the staves
Of hideous biers have not their joints more strong
Than are the joinings of these legs; the long
Scaled gauntlet fingers look like worms that shine,
And battle robes to shroud-like folds incline.
The heads are skull-like, and the stony feet
Seem for the charnel house but only meet.
The pikes have death’s-heads carved, and seem to be
Too heavy; but the shapes defiantly
Sit proudly in the saddle — and perforce
The rider looks united to the horse!

The network of their mail doth clearly cross.
The Marquis’ mortar beams near Ducal wreath,
And on the helm and gleaming shield beneath
Alternate triple pearls with leaves displayed
Of parsley, and the royal robes are made
So large that with the knightly harness they
Seem to o’ermaster palfreys every way.
To Rome the oldest armor might be traced,
And men and horses’ armor interlaced
Blent horribly; the man and steed we feel
Made but one hydra with its scales of steel.
Yet is there history here. Each coat of mail
Is representant of some stirring tale.
Each delta-shaped escutcheon shines to show
A vision of the chief by it we know.
Here are the blood-stained Dukes’ and Marquis’ line,
Barbaric lords, who amid war’s rapine
Bore gilded saints upon their banners still
Painted on fishes’ skin with cunning skill.
Here Geth, who to the Slaves cried “Onward go,”
And Mundiaque and Ottocar — Plato
And Ladisläus Kunne; and Welf who bore
These words upon his shield his foes before;
“Nothing there is I fear.” Otho blear-eyed,
Zultan and Nazamustus, and beside
The later Spignus, e’en to Spartibor
Of triple vision, and yet more and more
As if a pause at every age were made,
And Antaeus’ fearful dynasty portrayed.

What do they here so rigid and erect?
What wait they for — and what do they expect?
Blindness fills up the helm ‘neath iron brows;
Like sapless tree no soul the hero knows.
Darkness is now where eyes with flame were fraught,
And thrice-bored visor serves for mask of naught.
Of empty void is spectral giant made,

And each of these all-powerful knights displayed
Is only rind of pride and murderous sin;
Themselves are held the icy grave within.
Rust eats the casques enamoured once so much
Of death and daring — which knew kiss-like touch
Of banner — mistress so august and dear —
But not an arm can stir its hinges here;
Behold how mute are they whose threats were heard
Like savage roar — whose gnashing teeth and word
Deadened the clarion’s tones; the helmets dread
Have not a sound, and all the armor spread,
The hauberks, that strong breathing seemed to sway,
Are stranded now in helplessness alway
To see the shadows, still prolonged, that seem
To take at night the image of a dream.

These two great files reach from the door afar
To where the table and the daïs are,
Leaving between their fronts a narrow lane.
On the left side the Marquises maintain
Their place, but the right side the Dukes retain,
And till the roof, embattled by Spignus,
But worn by time that even that subdues,
Shall fall upon their heads, these forms will stand
The grades confronting — one on either hand.
While in advance beyond, with haughty head —
As if commander of this squadron dread —
All waiting signal of the Judgment Day,
In stone was seen in olden sculptors’ way
Charlemagne the King, who on the earth had found
Only twelve knights to grace his Table Round.

The crests were an assembly of strange things,
Of horrors such as nightmare only brings.
Asps, and spread eagles without beak or feet,
Sirens and mermaids here and dragons meet,
And antlered stags and fabled unicorn,

And fearful things of monstrous fancy born.
Upon the rigid form of morion’s sheen
Winged lions and the Cerberus are seen,
And serpents winged and finned; things made to fright
The timid foe, alone by sense of sight.
Some leaning forward and the others back,
They looked a growing forest that did lack
No form of terror; but these things of dread
That once on barons’ helms the battle led
Beneath the giant banners, now are still,

As if they gaped and found the time but ill,
Wearied the ages passed so slowly by,
And that the gory dead no more did lie
Beneath their feet — pined for the battle-cry,
The trumpet’s clash, the carnage and the strife,
Yawning to taste again their dreadful life.
Like tears upon the palfreys’ muzzles were
The hard reflections of the metal there;
From out these spectres, ages past exhumed,
And as their shadows on the roof-beams loomed,
Cast by the trembling light, each figure wan
Seemed growing, and a monstrous shape to don,
So that the double range of horrors made
The darkened zenith clouds of blackest shade,
That shaped themselves to profiles terrible.

All motionless the coursers horrible,
That formed a legion lured by Death to war,
These men and horses masked, how dread they are!
Absorbed in shadows of the eternal shore,
Among the living all their tasks are o’er.
Silent, they seem all mystery to brave,
These sphinxes whom no beacon light can save
Upon the threshold of the gulf so near,
As if they faced the great enigma here;
Ready with hoofs, between the pillars blue

To strike out sparks, and combats to renew,
Choosing for battle-field the shades below,
Which they provoked by deeds we cannot know,
In that dark realm thought dares not to expound
False masks from heaven lowered to depths profound.

IX.

A NOISE ON THE FLOOR.

This is the scene on which now enters in
Eviradnus; and follows page Gasclin.

The outer walls were almost all decayed,
The door, for ancient Marquises once made —
Raised many steps above the courtyard near —
Commanded view of the horizon clear.
The forest looked a great gulf all around,
And on the rock of Corbus there were found
Secret and blood-stained precipices tall.
Duke Plato built the tower and banquet hall
Over great pits, — so was it Rumor said.
The flooring sounds ‘neath Eviradnus’ tread
Above abysses many.
”Page,” said he,
“Come here, your eyes than mine can better see,
For sight is woman-like and shuns the old;
Ah! he can see enough, when years are told,
Who backwards looks. But, boy, turn towards the glade
And tell me what you see.”
The boy obeyed,
And leaned across the threshold, while the bright,
Full moon shed o’er the glade its white, pure light.

“I see a horse and woman on it now,”
Said Gasclin, “and companions also show.”
“Who are they?” asked the seeker of sublime
Adventures. “Sir, I now can hear like chime

The sound of voices, and men’s voices too,
Laughter and talk; two men there are in view,
Across the road the shadows clear I mark
Of horses three.”
”Enough. Now, Gasclin, hark!”
Exclaimed the knight, “you must at once return
By other path than that which you discern,
So that you be not seen. At break of day
Bring back our horses fresh, and every way
Caparisoned; now leave me, boy, I say.”
The page looked at his master like a son,
And said, “Oh! if I might stay on,
For they are two.”

“Go — I suffice alone!”

X.

EVIRADNUS MOTIONLESS.

And lone the hero is within the hall,
And nears the table where the glasses all
Show in profusion; all the vessels there,
Goblets and glasses gilt, or painted fair,
Are ranged for different wines with practised care.
He thirsts; the flagons tempt; but there must stay
One drop in emptied glass, and ’twould betray
The fact that some one living had been here.
Straight to the horses goes he, pauses near
That which is next the table shining bright,
Seizes the rider — plucks the phantom knight
To pieces — all in vain its panoply
And pallid shining to his practised eye;
Then he conveys the severed iron remains
To corner of the hall where darkness reigns;
Against the wall he lays the armor low
In dust and gloom like hero vanquished now —
But keeping pond’rous lance and shield so old,

Mounts to the empty saddle, and behold!
A statue Eviradnus has become,
Like to the others in their frigid home.
With visor down scarce breathing seemed maintained
Throughout the hall a death-like silence reigned.

XI.

A LITTLE MUSIC.

Listen! like hum froth unseen nests we hear
A mirthful buzz of voices coming near,
Of footsteps — laughter — from the trembling trees.
And now the thick-set forest all receives
A flood of moonlight — and there gently floats
The sound of a guitar of Inspruck; notes
Which blend with chimes — vibrating to the hand —
Of tiny bell — where sounds a grain of sand.
A man’s voice mixes with the melody,
And vaguely melts to song in harmony.

”If you like we’ll dream a dream.
Let us mount on palfreys two;
Birds are singing, — let it seem
You lure me — and I take you.

”Let us start— ’tis eve, you see,
I’m thy master and thy prey.
My bright steed shall pleasure be;
Yours, it shall be love, I say.

”Journeying leisurely we go,
We will make our steeds touch heads,
Kiss for fodder, — and we so
Satisfy our horses’ needs.

”Come! the two delusive things
Stamp impatiently it seems,

Yours has heavenward soaring wings,
Mine is of the land of dreams.

”What’s our baggage? only vows,
Happiness, and all our care,
And the flower that sweetly shows
Nestling lightly in your hair.

”Come, the oaks all dark appear,
Twilight now will soon depart,
Railing sparrows laugh to hear
Chains thou puttest round my heart.

”Not my fault ‘twill surely be
If the hills should vocal prove,
And the trees when us they see,
All should murmur — let us love!

”Oh, be gentle! — I am dazed,
See the dew is on the grass,
Wakened butterflies amazed
Follow thee as on we pass.

”Envious night-birds open wide
Their round eyes to gaze awhile,
Nymphs that lean their urns beside
From their grottoes softly smile,

”And exclaim, by fancy stirred,
‘Hero and Leander they;
We in listening for a word
Let our water fall away.’

”Let us journey Austrian way,
With the daybreak on our brow;
I be great, and you I say
Rich, because we love shall know.

”Let us over countries rove,
On our charming steeds content,
In the azure light of love,
And its sweet bewilderment.

”For the charges at our inn,
You with maiden smiles shall pay;
I the landlord’s heart will win
In a scholar’s pleasant way.

”You, great lady — and I, Count —
Come, my heart has opened quite,
We this tale will still recount,
To the stars that shine at night.”

The melody went on some moments more
Among the trees the calm moon glistened o’er,
Then trembled and was hushed; the voice’s thrill
Stopped like alighting birds, and all was still.

XII.

GREAT JOSS AND LITTLE ZENO.

Quite suddenly there showed across the door,
Three heads which all a festive aspect wore.
Two men were there; and, dressed in cloth of gold,
A woman. Of the men one might have told
Some thirty years, the other younger seemed,
Was tall and fair, and from his shoulder gleamed
A gay guitar with ivy leaves enlaced.
The other man was dark, but pallid-faced
And small. At the first glance they seemed to be
But made of perfume and frivolity.
Handsome they were, but through their comely mien
A grinning demon might be clearly seen.
April has flowers where lurk the slugs between.

“Big Joss and little Zeno, pray come here;
Look now — how dreadful! can I help but fear!”
Madame Mahaud was speaker. Moonlight there
Caressingly enhanced her beauty rare,
Making it shine and tremble, as if she
So soft and gentle were of things that be
Of air created, and are brought and ta’en
By heavenly flashes. Now, she spoke again
“Certes, ’tis heavy purchase of a throne,
To pass the night here utterly alone.
Had you not slyly come to guard me now,
I should have died of fright outright I know.”
The moonbeams through the open door did fall,
And shine upon the figure next the wall.

Said Zeno, “If I played the Marquis part,
I’d send this rubbish to the auction mart;
Out of the heap should come the finest wine,
Pleasure and gala-fêtes, were it all mine.”
And then with scornful hand he touched the thing,
And made the metal like a soul’s cry ring.
He laughed — the gauntlet trembled at his stroke.
“Let rest my ancestors”— ’twas Mahaud spoke;
Then murmuring added she, “For you are much
Too small their noble armor here to touch.”

And Zeno paled, but Joss with laugh exclaimed,
“Why, all these good black men so grandly named
Are only nests for mice. By Jove, although
They lifelike look and terrible, we know
What is within; just listen, and you’ll hear
The vermins’ gnawing teeth, yet ’twould appear
These figures once were proudly named Otho,
And Ottocar, and Bela, and Plato.
Alas! the end’s not pleasant — puts one out;
To have been kings and dukes — made mighty rout —
Colossal heroes filling tombs with slain,

And, Madame, this to only now remain;
A peaceful nibbling rat to calmly pierce
A prince’s noble armor proud and fierce.”

“Sing, if you will — but do not speak so loud;
Besides, such things as these,” said fair Mahaud,
“In your condition are not understood.”
“Well said,” made answer Zeno, “’tis a place
Of wonders — I see serpents, and can trace
Vampires, and monsters swarming, that arise
In mist, through chinks, to meet the gazer’s eyes.”

Then Mahaud shuddered, and she said: “The wine
The Abbé made me drink as task of mine,
Will soon enwrap me in the soundest sleep —
Swear not to leave me — that you here will keep.”
“I swear,” cried Joss, and Zeno, “I also;
But now at once to supper let us go.”

XIII.

THEY SUP.

With laugh and song they to the table went.
Said Mahaud gayly: “It is my intent
To make Joss chamberlain. Zeno shall be
A constable supreme of high degree.”
All three were joyous, and were fair to see.
Joss ate — and Zeno drank; on stools the pair,
With Mahaud musing in the regal chair.
The sound of separate leaf we do not note —
And so their babble seemed to idly float,
And leave no thought behind. Now and again
Joss his guitar made trill with plaintive strain
Or Tyrolean air; and lively tales they told
Mingled with mirth all free, and frank, and bold.
Said Mahaud: “Do you know how fortunate
You are?” “Yes, we are young at any rate —

Lovers half crazy — this is truth at least.”
“And more, for you know Latin like a priest,
And Joss sings well.”
”Ah, yes, our master true,
Yields us these gifts beyond the measure due.”
“Your master! — who is he?” Mahaud exclaimed.
“Satan, we say — but Sin you’d think him named,”
Said Zeno, veiling words in raillery.
“Do not laugh thus,” she said with dignity;
“Peace, Zeno. Joss, you speak, my chamberlain.”
“Madame, Viridis, Countess of Milan,
Was deemed superb; Diana on the mount
Dazzled the shepherd boy; ever we count
The Isabel of Saxony so fair,
And Cleopatra’s beauty all so rare —
Aspasia’s, too, that must with theirs compare —
That praise of them no fitting language hath.
Divine was Rhodope — and Venus’ wrath
Was such at Erylesis’ perfect throat,
She dragged her to the forge where Vulcan smote
Her beauty on his anvil. Well, as much
As star transcends a sequin, and just such
As temple is to rubbish-heap, I say,
You do eclipse their beauty every way.
Those airy sprites that from the azure smile,
Peris and elfs the while they men beguile,
Have brows less youthful pure than yours; besides
Dishevelled they whose shaded beauty hides
In clouds.”
”Flatt’rer,” said Mahaud, “you but sing
Too well.”
Then Joss more homage sought to bring;
“If I were angel under heav’n,” said he,
“Or girl or demon, I would seek to be
By you instructed in all art and grace,
And as in school but take a scholar’s place.
Highness, you are a fairy bright, whose hand

For sceptre vile gave up your proper wand.”
Fair Mahaud mused — then said, “Be silent now;
You seem to watch me; little ’tis I know,
Only that from Bohemia Joss doth come,
And that in Poland Zeno hath his home.
But you amuse me; I am rich, you poor —
What boon shall I confer and make secure?
What gift? ask of me, poets, what you will
And I will grant it — promise to fulfil.”
“A kiss,” said Joss.
        “A kiss!” and anger fraught
Amazed at minstrel having such a thought —
While flush of indignation warmed her cheek.
“You do forget to whom it is you speak,”
She cried.
    ”Had I not known your high degree,
Should I have asked this royal boon,” said he,
“Obtained or given, a kiss must ever be.
No gift like king’s — no kiss like that of queen!”
Queen! And on Mahaud’s face a smile was seen.

XIV.

AFTER SUPPER.

But now the potion proved its subtle power,
And Mahaud’s heavy eyelids ‘gan to lower.
Zeno, with finger on his lip, looked on —
Her head next drooped, and consciousness was gone.
Smiling she slept, serene and very fair,
He took her hand, which fell all unaware.

“She sleeps,” said Zeno, “now let chance or fate
Decide for us which has the marquisate,
And which the girl.”

        Upon their faces now
A hungry tiger’s look began to show.

“My brother, let us speak like men of sense,”
Said Joss; “while Mahaud dreams in innocence,
We grasp all here — and hold the foolish thing —
Our Friend below to us success will bring.
He keeps his word; ’tis thanks to him I say,
No awkward chance has marred our plans to-day.
All has succeeded — now no human power
Can take from us this woman and her dower.
Let us conclude. To wrangle and to fight
For just a yes or no, or to prove right
The Arian doctrines, all the time the Pope
Laughs in his sleeve at you — or with the hope
Some blue-eyed damsel with a tender skin
And milkwhite dainty hands by force to win —
This might be well in days when men bore loss
And fought for Latin or Byzantine Cross;
When Jack and Rudolf did like fools contend,
And for a simple wench their valor spend —
When Pepin held a synod at Leptine,
And times than now were much less wise and fine.
We do no longer heap up quarrels thus,
But better know how projects to discuss.
Have you the needful dice?”

”Yes, here they wait
For us.”

“Who wins shall have the Marquisate;
Loser, the girl.”

“Agreed.”

”A noise I hear?”
“Only the wind that sounds like some one near —
Are you afraid?” said Zeno.

”Naught I fear
Save fasting — and that solid earth should gape.

Let’s throw and fate decide — ere time escape.”
Then rolled the dice.

“’Tis four.”

’Twas Joss to throw.
“Six! — and I neatly win, you see; and lo!
At bottom of this box I’ve found Lusace,
And henceforth my orchestra will have place;
To it they’ll dance. Taxes I’ll raise, and they
In dread of rope and forfeit well will pay;
Brass trumpet-calls shall be my flutes that lead,
Where gibbets rise the imposts grow and spread.”

Said Zeno, “I’ve the girl and so is best,”
“She’s beautiful,” said Joss.

”Yes, ’tis confess’d.”
“What shall you do with her?” asked Joss.

”I know.
Make her a corpse,” said Zeno; “marked you how
The jade insulted me just now! Too small
She called me — such the words her lips let fall.
I say, that moment ere the dice I threw
Had yawning Hell cried out, ‘My son, for you
The chance is open still: take in a heap
The fair Lusace’s seven towns, and reap
The corn, and wine, and oil of counties ten,
With all their people diligent, and then
Bohemia with its silver mines, and now
The lofty land whence mighty rivers flow
And not a brook returns; add to these counts
The Tyrol with its lovely azure mounts
And France with her historic fleurs-de-lis;
Come now, decide, what ’tis your choice must be?’
I should have answered, ‘Vengeance! give to me
Rather than France, Bohemia, or the fair

Blue Tyrol, I my choice, O Hell! declare
For government of darkness and of death,
Of grave and worms.’ Brother, this woman hath
As marchioness with absurdity set forth
To rule o’er frontier bulwarks of the north.
In any case to us a danger she,
And having stupidly insulted me
’Tis needful that she die. To blurt all out —
I know that you desire her; without doubt
The flame that rages in my heart warms yours;
To carry out these subtle plans of ours,
We have become as gypsies near this doll,
You as her page — I dotard to control —
Pretended gallants changed to lovers now.
So, brother, this being fact for us to know
Sooner or later, ‘gainst our best intent
About her we should quarrel. Evident
Is it our compact would be broken through.
There is one only thing for us to do,
And that is, kill her.”

”Logic very clear,”
Said musing Joss, “but what of blood shed here?”
Then Zeno stooped and lifted from the ground
An edge of carpet — groped until he found
A ring, which, pulled, an opening did disclose,
With deep abyss beneath; from it there rose
The odor rank of crime. Joss walked to see
While Zeno pointed to it silently.
But eyes met eyes, and Joss, well pleased, was fain
By nod of head to make approval plain.

XV.

THE OUBLIETTES.

If sulphurous light had shone from this vile well
One might have said it was a mouth of hell,

So large the trap that by some sudden blow
A man might backward fall and sink below.
Who looked could see a harrow's threatening teeth,
But lost in night was everything beneath.
Partitions blood-stained have a reddened smear,
And Terror unrelieved is master here.
One feels the place has secret histories
Replete with dreadful murderous mysteries,
And that this sepulchre, forgot to-day,
Is home of trailing ghosts that grope their way
Along the walls where spectre reptiles crawl.
"Our fathers fashioned for us after all
Some useful things," said Joss; then Zeno spoke:
"I know what Corbus hides beneath its cloak,
I and the osprey know the castle old,
And what in bygone times the justice bold."

"And are you sure that Mahaud will not wake?"
"Her eyes are closed as now my fist I make;
She is in mystic and unearthly sleep;
The potion still its power o'er her must keep."
"But she will surely wake at break of day?"
"In darkness."

        "What will all the courtiers say
When in the place of her they find two men?"
"To them we will declare ourselves — and then
They at our feet will fall."

                "Where leads this hole?"
"To where the crow makes feast and torrents roll
To desolation. Let us end it now."

These young and handsome men had seemed to grow
Deformed and hideous — so doth foul black heart
Disfigure man, till beauty all depart.
So to the hell within the human face
Transparent is. They nearer move apace;

And Mahaud soundly sleeps as in a bed.
“To work.”

Joss seizes her and holds her head
Supporting her beneath her arms, in his;
And then he dared to plant a monstrous kiss
Upon her rosy lips, — while Zeno bent
Before the massive chair, and with intent
Her robe disordered as he raised her feet;
Her dainty ankles thus their gaze to meet.
And while the mystic sleep was all profound,
The pit gaped wide like grave in burial ground.

XVI.

WHAT THEY ATTEMPT BECOMES DIFFICULT.

Bearing the sleeping Mahaud they moved now
Silent and bent with heavy step and slow.
Zeno faced darkness — Joss turned towards the light —
So that the hall to Joss was quite in sight.
Sudden he stopped — and Zeno, “What now!” called,
But Joss replied not, though he seemed appalled,
And made a sign to Zeno, who with speed
Looked back. Then seemed they changed to stone indeed.
For both perceived that in the vaulted hall
One of the grand old knights ranged by the wall
Descended from his horse. Like phantom he Moved with a horrible tranquillity.
Masked by his helm towards them he came; his tread
Made the floor tremble — and one might have said
A spirit of th’ abyss was here; between
Them and the pit he came — a barrier seen;
Then said, with sword in hand and visor down,
In measured tones that had sepulchral grown
As tolling bell, “Stop, Sigismond, and you,
King Ladisläus;” at those words, though few,

They dropped the Marchioness, and in such a way
That at their feet like rigid corpse she lay.

The deep voice speaking from the visor’s grate
Proceeded — while the two in abject state
Cowered low. Joss paled, by gloom and dread o’ercast,
And Zeno trembled like a yielding mast.
“You two who listen now must recollect
The compact all your fellow-men suspect.
’Tis this: ‘I, Satan, god of darkened sphere,
The king of gloom and winds that bring things drear,
Alliance make with my two brothers dear,
The Emperor Sigismond and Polish King
Named Ladisläus. I to surely bring
Aid and protection to them both alway,
And never to absent myself or say
I’m weary. And yet more — I, being lord
Of sea and land, to Sigismond award
The earth; to Ladisläus all the sea.
With this condition that they yield to me
When I the forfeit claim — the King his head,
But shall the Emperor give his soul instead.’”

Said Joss, “Is’t he? — Spectre with flashing eyes,
And art thou Satan come to us surprise?”
“Much less am I and yet much more.
Oh, kings of crimes and plots! your day is o’er,
But I your lives will only take to-day;
Beneath the talons black your souls let stay
To wrestle still.”

The pair looked stupefied
And crushed. Exchanging looks ’twas Zeno cried,
Speaking to Joss, “Now who — who can it be?”
Joss stammered, “Yes, no refuge can I see;
The doom is on us. But oh, spectre! say
Who are you?”

“I’m the judge.”

”Then mercy, pray.”
The voice replied: “God guides His chosen hand
To be th’ Avenger in your path to stand.
Your hour has sounded, nothing now indeed
Can change for you the destiny decreed,
Irrevocable quite. Yes, I looked on.
Ah! little did you think that any one
To this unwholesome gloom could knowledge bring
That Joss a kaiser was, and Zeno king.
You spoke just now — but why? — too late to plead.
The forfeit’s due and hope should all be dead.
Incurables! For you I am the grave.
Oh, miserable men! that naught can save.
Yes, Sigismond a kaiser is, and you
A king, O Ladisläus! — it is true.
You thought of God but as a wheel to roll
Your chariot on; you who have king’s control
O’er Poland and its many towns so strong.
You, Milan’s Duke, to whom at once belong
The gold and iron crowns. You, Emperor made
By Rome, a son of Hercules ’tis said;
And you of Spartibor. And your two crowns
Are shining lights; and yet your shadow frowns
From every mountain land to trembling sea.
You are at giddy heights twin powers to be
A glory and a force for all that’s great —
But ‘neath the purple canopy of state,
Th’ expanding and triumphant arch you prize,
‘Neath royal power that sacred veils disguise,
Beneath your crowns of pearls and jewelled stars,
Beneath your exploits terrible and wars,
You, Sigismond, have but a monster been,
And, Ladisläus, you are scoundrel seen.
Oh, degradation of the sceptre’s might
And swords — when Justice has a hand like night,

Foul and polluted; and before this thing,
This hydra, do the Temple’s hinges swing —
The throne becomes the haunt of all things base
Oh, age of infamy and foul disgrace!
Oh, starry heavens looking on the shame,
No brow but reddens with resentful flame —
And yet the silent people do not stir!
Oh, million arms! what things do you deter —
Poor sheep, whom vermin-majesties devour,
Have you not nails with strong desiring power
To rend these royalties, that you so cower?
But two are taken, — such as will amaze
E’en hell itself, when it on them shall gaze.
Ah, Sigismond and Ladisläus, you
Were once triumphant, splendid to the view,
Stifling with your prosperity — but now
The hour of retribution lays you low.
Ah, do the vulture and the crocodile
Shed tears! At such a sight I fain must smile.
It seems to me ’tis very good sometimes
That princes, conquerors stained with bandits’ crimes,
Sparkling with splendor, wearing crowns of gold,
Should know the deadly sweat endured of old,
That of Jehoshaphat; should sob and fear,
And after crime th’ unclean be brought to bear.
’Tis well — God rules — and thus it is that I
These masters of the world can make to lie
In ashes at my feet. And this was he
Who reigned — and this a Caesar known to be!
In truth, my old heart aches with very shame
To see such cravens with such noble name.
But let us finish — what has just passed here
Demands thick shrouding, and the time is near.
Th’ accursed dice that rolled at Calvary
You rolled a woman’s murder to decree
It was a dark disastrous game to play;
But not for me a moral to essay.

This moment to the misty grave is due,
And far too vile and little human you
To see your evil ways. Your fingers lack
The human power your shocking deeds to track.
What use in darkness mirror to uphold?
What use your doings to be now retold?
Drink of the darkness — greedy of the ill
To which from habit you’re attracted still,
Not recognizing in the draught you take
The stench that your atrocities must make.
I only tell you that this burdened age
Tires of your Highnesses, that soil its page,
And of your villanies — and this is why
You now must swell the stream that passes by
Of refuse filth. Oh, horrid scene to show
Of these young men and that young girl just now!
Oh! can you really be of human kind
Breathing pure air of heaven? Do we find
That you are men? Oh, no! for when you laid
Foul lips upon the mouth of sleeping maid,
You seemed but ghouls that had come furtively
From out the tombs; only a horrid lie
Your human shape; of some strange frightful beast
You have the soul. To darkness I at least
Remit you now. Oh, murderer Sigismond
And Ladisläus pirate, both beyond
Release — two demons that have broken ban!
Therefore ’tis time their empire over man
And converse with the living, should be o’er;
Tyrants, behold your tomb your eyes before;
Vampires and dogs, your sepulchre is here.
Enter.”

He pointed to the gulf so near.
All terrified upon their knees they fell.
“Oh! take us not in your dread realm to dwell,”
Said Sigismond. “But, phantom! do us tell

What thou wouldst have from us — we will obey.
Oh, mercy!— ’tis for mercy now we pray.”
“Behold us at your feet, oh, spectre dread!”
And no old crone in feebler voice could plead
Than Ladisläus did.

But not a word
Said now the figure motionless, with sword
In hand. This sovereign soul seemed to commune
With self beneath his metal sheath; yet soon
And suddenly, with tranquil voice said he,
“Princes, your craven spirit wearies me.
No phantom — only man am I. Arise!
I like not to be dreaded otherwise
Than with the fear to which I’m used; know me,
For it is Eviradnus that you see!”

XVII.

THE CLUB.

As from the mist a noble pine we tell
Grown old upon the heights of Appenzel,
When morning freshness breathes round all the wood,
So Eviradnus now before them stood,
Opening his visor, which at once revealed
The snowy beard it had so well concealed.
Thin Sigismond was still as dog at gaze,
But Ladisläus leaped, and howl did raise,
And laughed and gnashed his teeth, till, like a cloud
That sudden bursts, his rage was all avowed.
“’Tis but an old man after all!” he cried.

Then the great knight, who looked at both, replied,
“Oh, kings! an old man of my time can cope
With two much younger ones of yours, I hope.
To mortal combat I defy you both
Singly; or, if you will, I’m nothing loth

With two together to contend; choose here
From out the heap what weapon shall appear
Most fit. As you no cuirass wear, I see,
I will take off my own, for all must be
In order perfect — e'en your punishment."

Then Eviradnus, true to his intent,
Stripped to his Utrecht jerkin; but the while
He calmly had disarmed — with dexterous guile
Had Ladisläus seized a knife that lay
Upon the damask cloth, and slipped away
His shoes; then barefoot, swiftly, silently
He crept behind the knight, with arm held high.
But Eviradnus was of all aware,
And turned upon the murderous weapon there,
And twisted it away; then in a trice
His strong colossal hand grasped like a vice
The neck of Ladisläus, who the blade
Now dropped; over his eyes a misty shade
Showed that the royal dwarf was near to death.

"Traitor!" said Eviradnus in his wrath,
"I rather should have hewn your limbs away,
And left you crawling on your stumps, I say, —
But now die fast."

          Ghastly, with starting eyes,
The King without a cry or struggle dies.
One dead — but lo! the other stands bold-faced,
Defiant; for the knight, when he unlaced
His cuirass, had his trusty sword laid down,
And Sigismond now grasps it as his own.
The monster-youth laughed at the silv'ry beard,
And, sword in hand, a murderer glad appeared.
Crossing his arms, he cried, "'Tis my turn now!"
And the black mounted knights in solemn row
Were judges of the strife. Before them lay

The sleeping Mahaud — and not far away
The fatal pit, near which the champion knight
With evil Emperor must contend for right,
Though weaponless he was. And yawned the pit
Expectant which should be engulfed in it.

“Now we shall see for whom this ready grave,”
Said Sigismond, “you dog, whom naught can save!”
Aware was Eviradnus that if he
Turned for a blade unto the armory,
He would be instant pierced — what can he do?
The moment is for him supreme. But, lo!
He glances now at Ladisläus dead,
And with a smile triumphant and yet dread,
And air of lion caged to whom is shown
Some loophole of escape, he bends him down.

“Ha! ha! no other club than this I need!”
He cried, as seizing in his hands with speed
The dead King’s heels, the body lifted high,
Then to the frightened Emperor he came nigh,
And made him shake with horror and with fear,
The weapon all so ghastly did appear.
The head became the stone to this strange sling,
Of which the body was the potent string;
And while ’twas brandished in a deadly way,
The dislocated arms made monstrous play
With hideous gestures, as now upside down
The bludgeon corpse a giant force had grown.
“’Tis well!” said Eviradnus, and he cried,
“Arrange between yourselves, you two allied;
If hell-fire were extinguished, surely it
By such a contest might be all relit;
From kindling spark struck out from dead King’s brow,
Batt’ring to death a living Emperor now.”

And Sigismond, thus met and horrified,
Recoiled to near the unseen opening wide;
The human club was raised, and struck again * * *
And Eviradnus did alone remain
All empty-handed — but he heard the sound
Of spectres two falling to depths profound;
Then, stooping o’er the pit, he gazed below,
And, as half-dreaming now, he murmured low,
“Tiger and jackal meet their portion here,
’Tis well together they should disappear!”

XVIII.

DAYBREAK.

Then lifts he Mahaud to the ducal chair,
And shuts the trap with noiseless, gentle care;
And puts in order everything around,
So that, on waking, naught should her astound.

“No drop of blood the thing has cost,” mused he,
“And that is best indeed.”

                    But suddenly
Some distant bells clang out. The mountains gray
Have scarlet tips, proclaiming dawning day;
The hamlets are astir, and crowds come out —
Bearing fresh branches of the broom — about
To seek their Lady, who herself awakes
Rosy as morn, just when the morning breaks;
Half-dreaming still, she ponders, can it be
Some mystic change has passed, for her to see
One old man in the place of two quite young!
Her wondering eyes search carefully and long.
It may be she regrets the change: meanwhile,
The valiant knight salutes her with a smile,
And then approaching her with friendly mien,
Says, “Madam, has your sleep all pleasant been?”

MRS. NEWTON CROSLAND.

THE SOUDAN, THE SPHINXES, THE CUP, THE LAMP.

(“Zim-Zizimi, Soudan d’Égypte.”)

[Bk. XVI. i.]

Zim Zizimi — (of the Soudan of burnt Egypt,
  The Commander of Believers, a Bashaw
Whose very robes were from Asia’s greatest stript,
  More powerful than any lion with resistless paw)
A master weighed on by his immense splendor —
  Once had a dream when he was at his evening feast,
When the broad table smoked like a perfumed censer,
  And its grateful odors the appetite increased.
The banquet was outspread in a hall, high as vast,
  With pillars painted, and with ceiling bright with gold,
Upreared by Zim’s ancestors in the days long past,
  And added to till now worth a sum untold.
Howe’er rich no rarity was absent, it seemed,
  Fruit blushed upon the side-boards, groaning ‘neath rich meats,
With all the dainties palate ever dreamed
  In lavishness to waste — for dwellers in the streets
Of cities, whether Troy, or Tyre, or Ispahan,
  Consume, in point of cost, food at a single meal
Much less than what is spread before this crowned man —
  Who rules his couchant nation with a rod of steel,
And whose servitors’ chiefest arts it was to squeeze
  The world’s full teats into his royal helpless mouth.
Each hard-sought dainty that never failed to please,
  All delicacies, wines, from east, west, north or south,
Are plenty here — for Sultan Zizimi drinks wine
  In its variety, trying to find what never sates.
Laughs at the holy writings and the text divine,
  O’er which the humble dervish prays and venerates.
There is a common saying which holds often good:

  That cruel is he who is sparing in his cups.
That they are such as are most thirsty of man's blood —
  Yet he will see a slave beheaded whilst he sups.
But be this as it all may, glory gilds his reign,
  He has overrun Africa, the old and black;
Asia as well — holding them both beneath a rain
  Of bloody drops from scaffold, pyre, the stake, or rack,
To leave his empire's confines, one must run a race
  Far past the river Baxtile southward; in the north,
To the rude, rocky, barren land of Thrace,
  Yet near enough to shudder when great Zim is wroth.
Conquering in every field, he finds delight
  In battle-storms; his music is the shout of camps.
On seeing him the eagle speeds away in fright,
  Whilst hid 'mong rocks, the grisly wolf its victim champs.
Mysore's as well as Agra's rajah is his kin;
  The great sheiks of the arid sands confess him lord;
Omar, who vaunting cried: "Through me doth Allah win!"
  Was of his blood — a dreaded line of fire and sword.
The waters of Nagain, sands of Sahara warm,
  The Atlas and the Caucasus, snow-capped and lone,
Mecca, Marcatta, these were massed in part to form
  A portion of the giant shadow of Zim's throne.
Before his might, to theirs, as hardest rock to dust,
  There have recoiled a horde of savage, warlike chiefs,
Who have been into Afric's fiery furnace thrust —
  Its scorching heat to his rage greatest of reliefs.
There is no being but fears Zim; to him bows down
  Even the sainted Llama in the holy place;
And the wild Kasburder chieftain at his dark power
  Turns pale, and seeks a foeman of some lesser race.
Cities and states are bought and sold by Soudan Zim,
  Whose simple word their thousand people hold as law.
He ruins them at will, for what are men to him,
  More than to stabled cattle is the sheaf of straw?

The Soudan is not pleased, for he is e’er alone,
  For who may in his royal sports or joys be leagued.
He must never speak to any one in equal tones,
  But be by his own dazzling weightiness fatigued.
He has exhausted all the pastimes of the earth;
  In vain skilled men have fought with sword, the spear, or lance,
The quips and cranks most laughed at have to him no mirth;
  He gives a regal yawn as fairest women dance;
Music has outpoured all its notes, the soft and loud,
  But dully on his wearied ear its accents roll,
As dully as the praises of the servile crowd
  Who falsely sing the purity of his black soul.
He has had before his daïs from the prison brought
  Two thieves, whose terror makes their chains to loudly ring,
Then gaping most unkingly, he dismissed his slaves,
  And tranquilly, half rising, looked around to seek
In the weighty stillness — such as broods round graves —
  Something within his royal scope to which to speak.

The throne, on which at length his eyes came back to rest,
  Is upheld by rose-crowned Sphinxes, which lyres hold,
All cut in whitest marble, with uncovered breast,
  While their eyes contain that enigma never told.
Each figure has its title carved upon its head:
  Health, and Voluptuousness, Greatness, Joy, and Play,
With Victory, Beauty, Happiness, may be read,
  Adorning brands they wear unblushing in the day.

The Soudan cried: “O, Sphinxes, with the torch-like eye,
  I am the Conqueror — my name is high-arrayed
In characters like flame upon the vaulted sky,
  Far from oblivion’s reach or an effacing shade.
Upon a sheaf of thunderbolts I rest my arm,
  And gods might wish my exploits with them were their own.
I live — I am not open to the points of harm,
  And e’en my throne will be with age an altar-stone.
When the time comes for me to cast off earthly robe,

And enter — being Day — into the realms of light,
The gods will say, we call Zizimi from his globe
That we may have our brother nearer to our sight!
Glory is but my menial, Pride my own chained slave,
Humbly standing when Zizimi is in his seat.
I scorn base man, and have sent thousands to the grave.
They are but as a rushen carpet to my feet.
Instead of human beings, eunuchs, blacks, or mutes,
Be yours, oh, Sphinxes, with the glad names on your fronts!
The task, with voice attuned to emulate the flute's,
To charm the king, whose chase is man, and wars his hunts.

"Some portion of your splendor back on me reflect,
Sing out in praiseful chains of melodious links!
Oh, throne, which I with bloody spoils have so bedecked,
Speak to your lord! Speak you, the first rose-crested Sphinx!"

Soon on the summons, once again was stillness broke,
For the ten figures, in a voice which all else drowned,
Parting their stony lips, alternatively spoke —
Spoke clearly, with a deeply penetrative sound.

THE FIRST SPHINX.

So lofty as to brush the heavens' dome,
Upon the highest terrace of her tomb
Is Queen Nitrocis, thinking all alone,
Upon her line, long tenants of the throne,
Terrors, scourges of the Greeks and Hebrews,
Harsh and bloodthirsty, narrow in their views.
Against the pure scroll of the sky, a blot,
Stands out her sepulchre, a fatal spot
That seems a baneful breath around to spread.
The birds which chance to near it, drop down dead.
The queen is now attended on by shades,
Which have replaced, in horrid guise, her maids.
No life is here — the law says such as bore
A corpse alone may enter through yon door.

Before, behind, around the queen, her sight
Encounters but the same blank void of night.
Above, the pilasters are like to bars,
And, through their gaps, the dead look at the stars,
While, till the dawn, around Nitrocis’ bones,
Spectres hold council, crouching on the stones.

THE SECOND SPHINX.

Howe’er great is pharaoh, the magi, king,
Encompassed by an idolizing ring,
None is so high as Tiglath Pileser.
Who, like the God before whom pales the star,
Has temples, with a prophet for a priest,
Who serves up daily sacrilegious feast.
His anger there are none who dare provoke,
His very mildness is looked on as a yoke;
And under his, more feared than other rules,
He holds his people bound, like tamèd bulls.
Asia is banded with his paths of war;
He is more of a scourge than Attila.
He triumphs glorious — but, day by day,
The earth falls at his feet, piecemeal away;
And the bricks for his tomb’s wall, one by one,
Are being shaped — are baking in the sun.

THE THIRD SPHINX.

Equal to archangel, for one short while,
Was Nimroud, builder of tall Babel’s pile.
His sceptre reached across the space between
The sites where Sol to rise and set is seen.
Baal made him terrible to all alike,
The greatest cow’ring when he rose to strike.
Unbelief had shown in ev’ry eye,
Had any dared to say: “Nimroud will die!”
He lived and ruled, but is — at this time, where?
Winds blow free o’er his realm — a desert bare!

THE FOURTH SPHINX.

There is a statue of King Chrem of old,
Of unknown date and maker, but of gold.
How many grandest rulers in his day
Chrem pluckèd down, there are now none can say.
Whether he ruled with gentle hand or rough,
None know. He once was — no longer is — enough,
Crowned Time, whose seat is on a ruined mass,
Holds, and aye turns, a strange sand in his glass,
A sand scraped from the mould, brushed from the shroud
Of all passed things, mean, great, lowly, or proud.
Thus meting with the ashes of the dead
How hours of the living have quickly fled.
The sand runs, monarchs! the clepsydra weeps.
Wherefore? They see through future’s gloomy deeps,
Through the church wall, into the catacomb,
And mark the change when thrones do graves become.

THE FIFTH SPHINX.

To swerve the earth seemed from its wonted path
When marched the Four of Asia in their wrath,
And when they were bound slaves to Cyrus’ car,
The rivers shrank back from their banks afar.
“Who can this be,” was Nineveh’s appeal;
“Who dares to drag the gods at his car-wheel?”
The ground is still there that these wheel-rims tore —
The people and the armies are no more.

THE SIXTH SPHINX.

Never again Cambyses earth will tread.
He slept, and rotted, for his ghost had fled.
So long as sovereigns live, the subjects kneel,
Crouching like spaniels at their royal heel;
But when their might flies, they are shunned by all,
Save worms, which — human-like — still to them crawl

On Troy or Memphis, on Pyrrhus the Great,
Or on Psammeticus, alike falls fate.
Those who in rightful purple are arrayed,
The prideful vanquisher, like vanquished, fade.
Death grins as he the fallen man bestrides —
And less of faults than of his glories hides.

THE SEVENTH SPHINX.

The time is come for Belus' tomb to fall,
Long has been ruined its high granite wall;
And its cupola, sister of the cloud,
Has now to lowest mire its tall head bowed.
The herdsman comes to it to choose the stones
To build a hut, and overturns the bones,
From which he has just scared a jackal pack,
Waiting to gnaw them when he turns his back.
Upon this scene the night is doubly night,
And the lone passer vainly strains his sight,
Musing: Was Belus not buried near this spot?
The royal resting-place is now forgot.

THE EIGHTH SPHINX.

The inmates of the Pyramids assume
The hue of Rhamesis, black with the gloom.
A Jailer who ne'er needs bolts, bars, or hasps,
Is Death. With unawed hand a god he grasps,
He thrusts, to stiffen, in a narrow case,
Or cell, where struggling air-blasts constant moan;
Walling them round with huge, damp, slimy stone;
And (leaving mem'ry of bloodshed as drink,
And thoughts of crime as food) he stops each chink.

THE NINTH SPHINX.

Who would see Cleopatra on her bed?
Come in. The place is filled with fog like lead,

Which clammily has settled on the frame
Of her who was a burning, dazzling flame
To all mankind — who durst not lift their gaze,
And meet the brightness of her beauty’s rays.
Her teeth were pearls, her breath a rare perfume.
Men died with love on entering her room.
Poised ‘twixt the world and her — acme of joys!
Antony took her of the double choice.
The ice-cold heart that passion seldom warms,
Would find heat torrid in that queen’s soft arms.
She won without a single woman’s wile,
Illumining the earth with peerless smile.
Come in! — but muffle closely up your face,
No grateful scents have ta’en sweet odors’ place.

THE TENTH SPHINX.

What did the greatest king that e’er earth bore,
Sennacherib? No matter — he’s no more!
What were the words Sardanapalus said?
Who cares to hear — that ruler long is dead.

The Soudan, turning pale, stared at the TEN aghast.
  ”Before to-morrow’s night,” he said, “in dust to rest,
These walls with croaking images shall be downcast;
  I will not have fiends speak when angels are addressed.”
But while Zim at the Sphinxes clenched his hand and shook,
  The cup in which it seems the rich wine sweetly breathes,
The cup with jewels sparkling, met his lowered look,
  Dwelling on the rim which the rippling wine enwreathes.
“Ha! You!” Zim cried, “have often cleared my heated head
  Of heavy thoughts which your great lord have come to seek
And torture with their pain and weight like molten lead.
  Let us two — power, I — you, wine — together speak.”

THE CUP.

“Phur,” spoke the Cup, “O king, dwelt as Day’s god,
Ruled Alexandria with sword and rod.
He from his people drew force after force,
Leaving in ev’ry clime an army’s corse.
But what gained he by having, like the sea,
Flooded with human waves to enslave the free?
Where lies the good in having been the chief
In conquering, to cause a nation’s grief?
Darius, Assar-addon, Hamilcar;
Who have led men in legions out to war,
Or have o’er Time’s shade cast rays from their seat,
Or throngs in worship made their name repeat,
These were, but all the cup of life have drank;
Rising ‘midst clamor, they in stillness sank.
Death’s dart beat down the sword — the kings high reared,
Were brought full low — judges, like culprits, feared.
The body — when the soul had ceased its sway —
Was placed where earth upon it heavy lay,
While seek the mouldering bones rare oils anoint
Claw of tree’s root and tooth of rocky point.
Weeds thrive on them who made the world a mart
Of human flesh, plants force their joints apart.
No deed of eminence the greatest saves,
And of mausoleums make panthers caves.”

The Cup, Zim, in his fury, dashed upon the floor,
  Crying aloud for lights. Slaves, at his angry call,
In to him hastily, a candelabra bore,
  And set it, branching o’er the table, in the hall,
From whose wide bounds it hunted instantly the gloom.
  ”Ah, light!” exclaimed the Soudan, “welcome light, all hail!
Dull witnesses were yonder Sphinxes of this room;
  The Cup was always drunk, in wit did ever fail;
But you fling gleams forth brightly, dazzling as a torch;
  Vainly to quell your power all Night’s attempts are spent;
The murky, black-eyed clouds you eat away and scorch,
  Making where’er you spring to life an Orient.

To charm your lord give voice, thou spark of paradise!
  Speak forth against the Sphinxes' enigmatic word,
And 'gainst the Wine-Cup, with its sharp and biting spice!"

THE LAMP.

Oh, Crusher of Countless Cities, such as earth knew
Scarce once before him, Ninus (who his brother slew),
Was borne within the walls which, in Assyrian rite,
Were built to hide dead majesty from outer sight.
If eye of man the gift uncommon could assume,
And pierce the mass, thick, black as hearse's plume,
To where lays on a horrifying bed
What was King Ninus, now hedged round with dread,
'Twould see by what is shadow of the light,
A line of feath'ry dust, bones marble-white.
A shudder overtakes the pois'nous snakes
When they glide near that powder, laid in flakes.
Death comes at times to him — Life comes no more!
And sets a jug and loaf upon the floor.
He then with bony foot the corpse o'erturns,
And says: "It is I, Ninus! 'Tis Death who spurns!
I bring thee, hungry king, some bread and meat."
"I have no hands," Ninus replies. "Yet, eat!"

Zim pierced to the very quick by these repeated stabs,
  Sprang to his feet, while from him pealed a fearful shout,
And, furious, flung down upon the marble slabs
  The richly carved and golden Lamp, whose light went out —
Then glided in a form strange-shaped,
  In likeness of a woman, moulded in dense smoke,
Veiled in thick, ebon fog, in utter darkness draped,
  A glimpse of which, in short, one's inmost fears awoke.
Zim was alone with her, this Goddess of the Night.
  The massy walls of stone like vapor part and fade,
Zim, shuddering, tried to call guard or satellite,
  But as the figure grasped him firmly, "Come!" she said.

BP. ALEXANDER

A QUEEN FIVE SUMMERS OLD.

(“Elle est toute petite.”)

[Bk. XXVI.]

She is so little — in her hands a rose:
A stern duenna watches where she goes,
What sees Old Spain’s Infanta — the clear shine
Of waters shadowed by the birch and pine.
What lies before? A swan with silver wing,
The wave that murmurs to the branch’s swing,
Or the deep garden flowering below?
Fair as an angel frozen into snow,
The royal child looks on, and hardly seems to know.

As in a depth of glory far away,
Down in the green park, a lofty palace lay,
There, drank the deer from many a crystal pond,
And the starred peacock gemmed the shade beyond.
Around that child all nature shone more bright;
Her innocence was as an added light.
Rubies and diamonds strewed the grass she trode,
And jets of sapphire from the dolphins flowed.

Still at the water’s side she holds her place,
Her bodice bright is set with Genoa lace;
O’er her rich robe, through every satin fold,
Wanders an arabesque in threads of gold.
From its green urn the rose unfolding grand,
Weighs down the exquisite smallness of her hand.
And when the child bends to the red leafs tip,
Her laughing nostril, and her carmine lip,
The royal flower purpureal, kissing there,
Hides more than half that young face bright and fair,
So that the eye deceived can scarcely speak

Where shows the rose, or where the rose-red cheek.
Her eyes look bluer from their dark brown frame:
Sweet eyes, sweet form, and Mary’s sweeter name.
All joy, enchantment, perfume, waits she there,
Heaven in her glance, her very name a prayer.

Yet ‘neath the sky, and before life and fate,
Poor child, she feels herself so vaguely great.
With stately grace she gives her presence high
To dawn, to spring, to shadows flitting by,
To the dark sunset glories of the heaven,
And all the wild magnificence of even;
On nature waits, eternal and serene,
With all the graveness of a little queen.
She never sees a man but on his knee,
She Duchess of Brabant one day will be,
Or rule Sardinia, or the Flemish crowd
She is the Infanta, five years old, and proud.

Thus is it with kings’ children, for they wear
A shadowy circlet on their forehead fair;
Their tottering steps are towards a kingly chair.
Calmly she waits, and breathes her gathered flower
Till one shall cull for her imperial power.
Already her eye saith, “It is my right;”
Even love flows from her, mingled with affright.
If some one seeing her so fragile stand,
Were it to save her, should put forth his hand,
Ere he had made a step, or breathed a vow,
The scaffold’s shadow were upon his brow.
While the child laughs, beyond the bastion thick
Of that vast palace, Roman Catholic,
Whose every turret like a mitre shows,
Behind the lattice something dreadful goes.
Men shake to see a shadow from beneath
Passing from pane to pane, like vapory wreath,
Pale, black, and still it glides from room to room;

In the same spot, like ghost upon a tomb;
Or glues its dark brown to the casement wan,
Dim shade that lengthens as the night draws on.
Its step funereal lingers like the swing
Of passing bell— ’tis death, or else the king.
’Tis he, the man by whom men live and die;
But could one look beyond that phantom eye,
As by the wall he leans a little space,
And see what shadows fill his soul’s dark place,
Not the fair child, the waters clear, the flowers
Golden with sunset — not the birds, the bowers —
No; ‘neath that eye, those fatal brows that keep
The fathomless brain, like ocean, dark and deep,
There, as in moving mirage, should one find
A fleet of ships that go before the wind:
On the foamed wave, and ‘neath the starlight pale,
The strain and rattle of a fleet in sail,
And through the fog an isle on her white rock
Hearkening from far the thunder’s coming shock.

Still by the water’s edge doth silent stand
The Infanta with the rose-flower in her hand,
Caresses it with eyes as blue as heaven;
Sudden a breeze, such breeze as panting even
From her full heart flings out to field and brake,
Ruffles the waters, bids the rushes shake,
And makes through all their green recesses swell
The massive myrtle and the asphodel.
To the fair child it comes, and tears away
On its strong wing the rose-flower from the spray.
On the wild waters casts it bruised and torn,
And the Infanta only holds a thorn.
Frightened, perplexed, she follows with her eyes
Into the basin where her ruin lies,
Looks up to heaven, and questions of the breeze
That had not feared her highness to displease;
But all the pond is changed; anon so clear,

Now back it swells, as though with rage and fear;
A mimic sea its small waves rise and fall,
And the poor rose is broken by them all.
Its hundred leaves tossed wildly round and round
Beneath a thousand waves are whelmed and drowned;
It was a foundering fleet you might have said;
And the duenna with her face of shade, —
“Madam,” for she had marked her ruffled mind,
“All things belong to princes — but God’s wind.”

BP. ALEXANDER

SEA-ADVENTURERS’ SONG.

(“En partant du Golfe d’Otrante.”)

[Bk. XXVIII.]

We told thirty when we started
  From port so taut and fine,
But soon our crew were parted,
  Till now we number nine.

Tom Robbins, English, tall and straight,
  Left us at Aetna light;
He left us to investigate
  What made the mountain bright;
“I mean to ask Old Nick himself,
  (And here his eye he rolls)
If I can’t bring Newcastle pelf
  By selling him some coals!”

In Calabree, a lass and cup
  Drove scowling Spada wild:
She only held her finger up,
  And there he drank and smiled;
And over in Gaëta Bay,
  Ascanio — ashore
A fool! — must wed a widow gay
  Who’d buried three or four.

At Naples, woe! poor Ned they hanged —
  Hemp neckcloth he disdained —
And prettily we all were banged —
  And two more blades remained

To serve the Duke, and row in chains —
  Thank saints! ’twas not my cast!

We drank deliverance from pains —
  We who'd the ducats fast.

At Malta Dick became a monk —
  (What vineyards have those priests!)
And Gobbo to quack-salver sunk,
  To leech vile murrained beasts;
And lazy André, blown off shore,
  Was picked up by the Turk,
And in some harem, you be sure,
  Is forced at last to work.

Next, three of us whom nothing daunts,
  Marched off with Prince Eugene,
To take Genoa! oh, it vaunts
  Girls fit — each one — for queen!
Had they but promised us the pick,
  Perchance we had joined, all;
But battering bastions built of brick —
  Bah, give me wooden wall!

By Leghorn, twenty caravels
  Came 'cross our lonely sail —
Spinoza's Sea-Invincibles!
  But, whew! our shots like hail
Made shortish work of galley long
  And chubby sailing craft —
Our making ready first to close
  Sent them a-spinning aft.

Off Marseilles, ne'er by sun forsook
  We friends fell-to as foes!
For Lucca Diavolo mistook
  Angelo's wife for Rose,

And hang me! soon the angel slid
  The devil in the sea,

And would of lass likewise be rid —
  And so we fought it free!

At Palmas eight or so gave slip,
  Pescara to pursue,
And more, perchance, had left the ship,
  But Algiers loomed in view;
And here we cruised to intercept
  Some lucky-laden rogues,
Whose gold-galleons but slowly crept,
  So that we trounced the dogs!

And after making war out there,
  We made love at “the Gib.”
We ten — no more! we took it fair,
  And kissed the gov’nor’s “rib,”
And made the King of Spain our take,
  Believe or not, who cares?
I tell ye that he begged till black
  I’ the face to have his shares.

We’re rovers of the restless main,
  But we’ve some conscience, mark!
And we know what it is to reign,
  And finally did heark —
Aye, masters of the narrow Neck,
  We hearkened to our heart,
And gave him freedom on our deck,
  His town, and gold — in part.

My lucky mates for that were made
  Grandees of Old Castile,
And maids of honor went to wed,
  Somewhere in sweet Seville;

Not they for me were fair enough,
  And so his Majesty

Declared his daughter— ’tis no scoff!
  My beauteous bride should be.

“A royal daughter!” think of that!
  But I would never one.
I have a lass (I said it pat)
  Who’s not been bred like nun —
But, merry maid with eagle eye,
  It’s proud she smiles and bright,
And sings upon the cliff, to spy
  My ship a-heave in sight!

My Faenzetta has my heart!
  In Fiesoné she
The fairest! Nothing shall us part,
  Saving, in sooth, the Sea!
And that not long! its rolling wave
  And such breeze holding now
Will send me along to her I love —
  And so I made my bow.

We told thirty when we started
  From port so taut and fine,
But thus our crew were parted,
  And now we number nine.

THE SWISS MERCENARIES.

(“Lorsque le regiment des hallebardiers.”)

[Bk. XXXI.]

When the regiment of Halberdiers
  Is proudly marching by,
The eagle of the mountain screams
  From out his stormy sky;
Who speaketh to the precipice,
  And to the chasm sheer;
Who hovers o’er the thrones of kings,
  And bids the caitiffs fear.
King of the peak and glacier,
  King of the cold, white scalps —
He lifts his head, at that close tread,
  The eagle of the Alps.

O shame! those men that march below —
  O ignominy dire!
Are the sons of my free mountains
  Sold for imperial hire.
Ah! the vilest in the dungeon!
  Ah! the slave upon the seas —
Is great, is pure, is glorious,
  Is grand compared with these,
Who, born amid my holy rocks,
  In solemn places high,
Where the tall pines bend like rushes
  When the storm goes sweeping by;

Yet give the strength of foot they learned
  By perilous path and flood,
And from their blue-eyed mothers won,
  The old, mysterious blood;

The daring that the good south wind
  Into their nostrils blew,
And the proud swelling of the heart
  With each pure breath they drew;
The graces of the mountain glens,
  With flowers in summer gay;
And all the glories of the hills
  To earn a lackey’s pay.

Their country free and joyous —
  She of the rugged sides —
She of the rough peaks arrogant
  Whereon the tempest rides:
Mother of the unconquered thought
  And of the savage form,
Who brings out of her sturdy heart
  The hero and the storm:
Who giveth freedom unto man,
  And life unto the beast;
Who hears her silver torrents ring
  Like joy-bells at a feast;

Who hath her caves for palaces,
  And where her châlets stand —
The proud, old archer of Altorf,
  With his good bow in his hand.
Is she to suckle jailers?
  Shall shame and glory rest,
Amid her lakes and glaciers,
  Like twins upon her breast?
Shall the two-headed eagle,
  Marked with her double blow,
Drink of her milk through all those hearts
  Whose blood he bids to flow?

Say, was it pomp ye needed,
  And all the proud array

Of courtly joust and high parade
  Upon a gala day?
Look up; have not my valleys
  Their torrents white with foam —
Their lines of silver bullion
  On the blue hillocks of home?
Doth not sweet May embroider
  My rocks with pearls and flowers?
Her fingers trace a richer lace
  Than yours in all my bowers.

Are not my old peaks gilded
  When the sun arises proud,
And each one shakes a white mist plume
  Out of the thunder-cloud?
O, neighbor of the golden sky —
  Sons of the mountain sod —
Why wear a base king's colors
  For the livery of God?
O shame! despair! to see my Alps
  Their giant shadows fling
Into the very waiting-room
  Of tyrant and of king!

O thou deep heaven, unsullied yet,
  Into thy gulfs sublime —
Up azure tracts of flaming light —
  Let my free pinion climb;
Till from my sight, in that clear light,
  Earth and her crimes be gone —
The men who act the evil deeds —
  The caitiffs who look on.
Far, far into that space immense,
  Beyond the vast white veil,
Where distant stars come out and shine,
  And the great sun grows pale.

BP. ALEXANDER

THE CUP ON THE BATTLE-FIELD.

(“Mon pére, ce héros au sourire.”)

[Bk. XLIX. iv.]

My sire, the hero with the smile so soft,
And a tall trooper, his companion oft,
Whom he loved greatly for his courage high
And strength and stature, as the night drew nigh
Rode out together. The battle was done;
The dead strewed the field; long sunk was the sun.
It seemed in the darkness a sound they heard, —
Was it feeble moaning or uttered word?
’Twas a Spaniard left from the force in flight,
Who had crawled to the roadside after fight;
Shattered and livid, less live than dead,
Rattled his throat as hoarsely he said:
“Water, water to drink, for pity’s sake!
Oh, a drop of water this thirst to slake!”
My father, moved at his speech heart-wrung,
Handed the orderly, downward leapt,
The flask of rum at the holster kept.
“Let him have some!” cried my father, as ran
The trooper o’er to the wounded man, —
A sort of Moor, swart, bloody and grim;
But just as the trooper was nearing him,
He lifted a pistol, with eye of flame,
And covered my father with murd’rous aim.
The hurtling slug grazed the very head,
And the helmet fell, pierced, streaked with red,
And the steed reared up; but in steady tone:
“Give him the whole!” said my father, “and on!”

TORU DUTT

HOW GOOD ARE THE POOR.

(“Il est nuit. La cabane est pauvre.”)

[Bk. LII. iii.]

’Tis night — within the close stout cabin door,
  The room is wrapped in shade save where there fall
Some twilight rays that creep along the floor,
  And show the fisher’s nets upon the wall.

In the dim corner, from the oaken chest,
  A few white dishes glimmer; through the shade
Stands a tall bed with dusky curtains dressed,
  And a rough mattress at its side is laid.

Five children on the long low mattress lie —
  A nest of little souls, it heaves with dreams;
In the high chimney the last embers die,
  And redden the dark room with crimson gleams.

The mother kneels and thinks, and pale with fear,
  She prays alone, hearing the billows shout:
While to wild winds, to rocks, to midnight drear,
  The ominous old ocean sobs without.

Poor wives of fishers! Ah! ’tis sad to say,
  Our sons, our husbands, all that we love best,
Our hearts, our souls, are on those waves away,
  Those ravening wolves that know not ruth, nor rest.

Think how they sport with these beloved forms;
  And how the clarion-blowing wind unties
Above their heads the tresses of the storms:
  Perchance even now the child, the husband, dies.

For we can never tell where they may be
  Who, to make head against the tide and gale,
Between them and the starless, soulless sea
  Have but one bit of plank, with one poor sail.

Terrible fear! We seek the pebbly shore,
  Cry to the rising billows, “Bring them home.”
Alas! what answer gives their troubled roar,
  To the dark thought that haunts us as we roam.

Janet is sad: her husband is alone,
  Wrapped in the black shroud of this bitter night:

His children are so little, there is none
  To give him aid. “Were they but old, they might.”
Ah, mother! when they too are on the main,
How wilt thou weep: “Would they were young again!”

She takes his lantern— ’tis his hour at last
  She will go forth, and see if the day breaks,
And if his signal-fire be at the mast;
  Ah, no — not yet — no breath of morning wakes.

No line of light o’er the dark water lies;
  It rains, it rains, how black is rain at morn:
The day comes trembling, and the young dawn cries —
  Cries like a baby fearing to be born.

Sudden her humane eyes that peer and watch
  Through the deep shade, a mouldering dwelling find,
No light within — the thin door shakes — the thatch
  O’er the green walls is twisted of the wind,

Yellow, and dirty, as a swollen rill,
  ”Ah, me,” she saith, “here does that widow dwell;
Few days ago my good man left her ill:
  I will go in and see if all be well.”

She strikes the door, she listens, none replies,
  And Janet shudders. “Husbandless, alone,
And with two children — they have scant supplies.
  Good neighbor! She sleeps heavy as a stone.”

She calls again, she knocks, ’tis silence still;
  No sound — no answer — suddenly the door,
As if the senseless creature felt some thrill
  Of pity, turned — and open lay before.

She entered, and her lantern lighted all
  The house so still, but for the rude waves’ din.
Through the thin roof the plashing rain-drops fall,
  But something terrible is couched within.

* * * * *

“So, for the kisses that delight the flesh,
  For mother’s worship, and for children’s bloom,
For song, for smile, for love so fair and fresh,
  For laugh, for dance, there is one goal — the tomb.”

And why does Janet pass so fast away?
  What hath she done within that house of dread?
What foldeth she beneath her mantle gray?
  And hurries home, and hides it in her bed:
  With half-averted face, and nervous tread,
  What hath she stolen from the awful dead?

The dawn was whitening over the sea’s verge
  As she sat pensive, touching broken chords
Of half-remorseful thought, while the hoarse surge
  Howled a sad concert to her broken words.

“Ah, my poor husband! we had five before,
  Already so much care, so much to find,
For he must work for all. I give him more.
  What was that noise? His step! Ah, no! the wind.

“That I should be afraid of him I love!
  I have done ill. If he should beat me now,
I would not blame him. Did not the door move?
  Not yet, poor man.” She sits with careful brow
Wrapped in her inward grief; nor hears the roar
  Of winds and waves that dash against his prow,
Nor the black cormorant shrieking on the shore.

Sudden the door flies open wide, and lets
  Noisily in the dawn-light scarcely clear,
And the good fisher, dragging his damp nets,
  Stands on the threshold, with a joyous cheer.

“’Tis thou!” she cries, and, eager as a lover,
  Leaps up and holds her husband to her breast;
Her greeting kisses all his vesture cover;
  ”’Tis I, good wife!” and his broad face expressed

How gay his heart that Janet’s love made light.
  ”What weather was it?” “Hard.” “Your fishing?” “Bad.
The sea was like a nest of thieves to-night;
  But I embrace thee, and my heart is glad.

“There was a devil in the wind that blew;
  I tore my net, caught nothing, broke my line,
And once I thought the bark was broken too;
  What did you all the night long, Janet mine?”

She, trembling in the darkness, answered, “I!
  Oh, naught — I sew’d, I watch’d, I was afraid,
The waves were loud as thunders from the sky;
  But it is over.” Shyly then she said —

“Our neighbor died last night; it must have been
  When you were gone. She left two little ones,
So small, so frail — William and Madeline;
  The one just lisps, the other scarcely runs.”

The man looked grave, and in the corner cast
  His old fur bonnet, wet with rain and sea,
Muttered awhile, and scratched his head, — at last
  ”We have five children, this makes seven,” said he.

“Already in bad weather we must sleep
  Sometimes without our supper. Now! Ah, well —
’Tis not my fault. These accidents are deep;
  It was the good God’s will. I cannot tell.

“Why did He take the mother from those scraps,
  No bigger than my fist. ’Tis hard to read;
A learned man might understand, perhaps —
  So little, they can neither work nor need.

“Go fetch them, wife; they will be frightened sore,
  If with the dead alone they waken thus.
That was the mother knocking at our door,
  And we must take the children home to us.

“Brother and sister shall they be to ours,
  And they will learn to climb my knee at even;
When He shall see these strangers in our bowers,
  More fish, more food, will give the God of Heaven.

“I will work harder; I will drink no wine —
  Go fetch them. Wherefore dost thou linger, dear?
Not thus were wont to move those feet of thine.”
  She drew the curtain, saying, “They are here!”

BP. ALEXANDER

LA VOIX DE GUERNESEY.

MENTANA.

(VICTOR HUGO TO GARIBALDI.)

(“Ces jeunes gens, combien étaient-ils.”)

[LA VOIX DE GUERNESEY, December, 1868.]

I.

Young soldiers of the noble Latin blood,
How many are ye — Boys? Four thousand odd.
How many are there dead? Six hundred: count!
Their limbs lie strewn about the fatal mount,
Blackened and torn, eyes gummed with blood, hearts rolled
Out from their ribs, to give the wolves of the wold
A red feast; nothing of them left but these
Pierced relics, underneath the olive trees,
Show where the gin was sprung — the scoundrel-trap
Which brought those hero-lads their foul mishap.
See how they fell in swathes — like barley-ears!
Their crime? to claim Rome and her glories theirs;
To fight for Right and Honor; — foolish names!
Come — Mothers of the soil! Italian dames!
Turn the dead over! — try your battle luck!
(Bearded or smooth, to her that gave him suck
The man is always child) — Stay, here’s a brow
Split by the Zouaves’ bullets! This one, now,
With the bright curly hair soaked so in blood,
Was yours, ma donna! — sweet and fair and good.

The spirit sat upon his fearless face
Before they murdered it, in all the grace
Of manhood’s dawn. Sisters, here’s yours! his lips,
Over whose bloom the bloody death-foam slips,

Lisped house-songs after you, and said your name
In loving prattle once. That hand, the same
Which lies so cold over the eyelids shut,
Was once a small pink baby-fist, and wet
With milk beads from thy yearning breasts.

Take thou
Thine eldest, — thou, thy youngest born. Oh, flow
Of tears never to cease! Oh, Hope quite gone,
Dead like the dead! — Yet could they live alone —
Without their Tiber and their Rome? and be
Young and Italian — and not also free?
They longed to see the ancient eagle try
His lordly pinions in a modern sky.
They bore — each on himself — the insults laid
On the dear foster-land: of naught afraid,
Save of not finding foes enough to dare
For Italy. Ah; gallant, free, and rare
Young martyrs of a sacred cause, — Adieu!
No more of life — no more of love — for you!
No sweet long-straying in the star-lit glades
At Ave-Mary, with the Italian maids;
No welcome home!

II.

This Garibaldi now, the Italian boys
Go mad to hear him — take to dying — take
To passion for “the pure and high”; — God’s sake!
It’s monstrous, horrible! One sees quite clear
Society — our charge — must shake with fear,
And shriek for help, and call on us to act
When there’s a hero, taken in the fact.
If Light shines in the dark, there’s guilt in that!
What’s viler than a lantern to a bat?

III.

Your Garibaldi missed the mark! You see
The end of life’s to cheat, and not to be
Cheated: The knave is nobler than the fool!
Get all you can and keep it! Life’s a pool,
The best luck wins; if Virtue starves in rags,
I laugh at Virtue; here’s my money-bags!
Here’s righteous metal! We have kings, I say,
To keep cash going, and the game at play;
There’s why a king wants money — he’d be missed
Without a fertilizing civil list.
                Do but try
The question with a steady moral eye!
The colonel strives to be a brigadier,
The marshal, constable. Call the game fair,
And pay your winners! Show the trump, I say!
A renegade’s a rascal — till the day
They make him Pasha: is he rascal then?
What with these sequins? Bah! you speak to Men,
And Men want money — power — luck — life’s joy —
Those take who can: we could, and fobbed Savoy;
For those who live content with honest state,
They’re public pests; knock we ’em on the pate!
They set a vile example! Quick — arrest
That Fool, who ruled and failed to line his nest.
Just hit a bell, you’ll see the clapper shake —
Meddle with Priests, you’ll find the barrack wake —
Ah! Princes know the People’s a tight boot,
March ’em sometimes to be shot and to shoot,
Then they’ll wear easier. So let them preach
The righteousness of howitzers; and teach
At the fag end of prayer: “Now, slit their throats!
My holy Zouaves! my good yellow-coats!”
We like to see the Holy Father send
Powder and steel and lead without an end,
To feed Death fat; and broken battles mend.
So they!

IV.

But thou, our Hero, baffled, foiled,
The Glorious Chief who vainly bled and toiled.
The trust of all the Peoples — Freedom’s Knight!
The Paladin unstained — the Sword of Right!
What wilt thou do, whose land finds thee but jails!
The banished claim the banished! deign to cheer
The refuge of the homeless — enter here,
And light upon our households dark will fall
Even as thou enterest. Oh, Brother, all,
Each one of us — hurt with thy sorrows’ proof,
Will make a country for thee of his roof.
Come, sit with those who live as exiles learn:
Come! Thou whom kings could conquer but not yet turn.
We’ll talk of “Palermo”— “the Thousand” true,
Will tell the tears of blood of France to you;
Then by his own great Sea we’ll read, together,
Old Homer in the quiet summer weather,
And after, thou shalt go to thy desire
While that faint star of Justice grows to fire.

V.

Oh, Italy! hail your Deliverer,
Oh, Nations! almost he gave Rome to her!
Strong-arm and prophet-heart had all but come
To win the city, and to make it “Rome.”
Calm, of the antique grandeur, ripe to be
Named with the noblest of her history.
He would have Romanized your Rome — controlled
Her glory, lordships, Gods, in a new mould.
Her spirits’ fervor would have melted in
The hundred cities with her; made a twin
Vesuvius and the Capitol; and blended
Strong Juvenal’s with the soul, tender and splendid,
Of Dante — smelted old with new alloy —

Stormed at the Titans’ road full of bold joy
Whereby men storm Olympus. Italy,
Weep! — This man could have made one Rome of thee!

VI.

But the crime’s wrought! Who wrought it?
            Honest Man —
Priest Pius? No! Each does but what he can.
Yonder’s the criminal! The warlike wight
Who hides behind the ranks of France to fight,
Greek Sinon’s blood crossed thick with Judas-Jew’s,
The Traitor who with smile which true men woos,
Lip mouthing pledges — hand grasping the knife —
Waylaid French Liberty, and took her life.
Kings, he is of you! fit companion! one
Whom day by day the lightning looks upon
Keen; while the sentenced man triples his guard
And trembles; for his hour approaches hard.
Ye ask me “when?” I say soon! Hear ye not
Yon muttering in the skies above the spot?
Mark ye no coming shadow, Kings? the shroud
Of a great storm driving the thunder-cloud?
Hark! like the thief-catcher who pulls the pin,
God’s thunder asks to speak to one within!

VII.

And meanwhile this death-odor — this corpse-scent
Which makes the priestly incense redolent
Of rotting men, and the Te Deums stink —
Reeks through the forests — past the river’s brink,
O’er wood and plain and mountain, till it fouls
Fair Paris in her pleasures; then it prowls,
A deadly stench, to Crete, to Mexico,
To Poland — wheresoe’er kings’ armies go:
And Earth one Upas-tree of bitter sadness,
Opening vast blossoms of a bloody madness.

Throats cut by thousands — slain men by the ton!
Earth quite corpse-cumbered, though the half not done!
They lie, stretched out, where the blood-puddles soak,
Their black lips gaping with the last cry spoke.
“Stretched;” nay! sown broadcast; yes, the word is “sown.”
The fallows Liberty — the harsh wind blown
Over the furrows, Fate: and these stark dead
Are grain sublime, from Death’s cold fingers shed
To make the Abyss conceive: the Future bear
More noble Heroes! Swell, oh, Corpses dear!
Rot quick to the green blade of Freedom! Death!
Do thy kind will with them! They without breath,
Stripped, scattered, ragged, festering, slashed and blue,
Dangle towards God the arms French shot tore through
And wait in meekness, Death! for Him and You!

VIII.

Oh, France! oh, People! sleeping unabashed!
Liest thou like a hound when it was lashed?
Thou liest! thine own blood fouling both thy hands,
And on thy limbs the rust of iron bands,
And round thy wrists the cut where cords went deep.
Say did they numb thy soul, that thou didst sleep?
Alas! sad France is grown a cave for sleeping,
Which a worse night than Midnight holds in keeping,
Thou sleepest sottish — lost to life and fame —
While the stars stare on thee, and pale for shame.
Stir! rouse thee! Sit! if thou know’st not to rise;
Sit up, thou tortured sluggard! ope thine eyes!
Stretch thy brawn, Giant! Sleep is foul and vile!
Art fagged, art deaf, art dumb? art blind this while?
They lie who say so! Thou dost know and feel
The things they do to thee and thine. The heel
That scratched thy neck in passing — whose? Canst say?
Yes, yes, ’twas his, and this is his fête-day.
Oh, thou that wert of humankind — couched so —

A beast of burden on this dunghill! oh!
Bray to them, Mule! Oh, Bullock! bellow then!
Since they have made thee blind, grope in thy den!
Do something, Outcast One, that wast so grand!
Who knows if thou putt’st forth thy poor maimed hand,
There may be venging weapon within reach!
Feel with both hands — with both huge arms go stretch
Along the black wall of thy cellar. Nay,
There may be some odd thing hidden away?
Who knows — there may! Those great hands might so come
In course of ghastly fumble through the gloom,
Upon a sword — a sword! The hands once clasp
Its hilt, must wield it with a Victor’s grasp.

EDWIN ARNOLD, C.S.I.

LES CHANSONS DES RUES ET DES BOIS.

LOVE OF THE WOODLAND.

(“Orphée au bois du Caystre.”)

[Bk. I. ii.]

Orpheus, through the hellward wood
Hurried, ere the eve-star glowed,
For the fauns’ lugubrious hoots
Followed, hollow, from crookèd roots;
Aeschylus, where Aetna smoked,
Gods of Sicily evoked
With the flute, till sulphur taint
Dulled and lulled the echoes faint;
Pliny, soon his style mislaid,
Dogged Miletus’ merry maid,
As she showed eburnean limbs
All-multiplied by brooklet brims;
Plautus, see! like Plutus, hold
Bosomfuls of orchard-gold,
Learns he why that mystic core
Was sweet Venus’ meed of yore?
Dante dreamt (while spirits pass
As in wizard’s jetty glass)
Each black-bossed Briarian trunk
Waved live arms like furies drunk;
Winsome Will, ‘neath Windsor Oak,
Eyed each elf that cracked a joke
At poor panting grease-hart fast —
Obese, roguish Jack harassed;
At Versailles, Molière did court
Cues from Pan (in heron port,
Half in ooze, half treeward raised),
“Words so witty, that Boileau’s ‘mazed!”

Foliage! fondly you attract!
Dian’s faith I keep intact,
And declare that thy dryads dance
Still, and will, in thy green expanse!

SHOOTING STARS.

[FOR MY LITTLE CHILD ONLY.]

(“Tas de feux tombants.”)

[Bk. III. vii.]

See the scintillating shower!
  Like a burst from golden mine —
Incandescent coals that pour
  From the incense-bowl divine,
And around us dewdrops, shaken,
  Mirror each a twinkling ray
‘Twixt the flowers that awaken
  In this glory great as day.
Mists and fogs all vanish fleetly;
  And the birds begin to sing,
Whilst the rain is murm’ring sweetly
  As if angels echoing.
And, methinks, to show she’s grateful
  For this seed from heaven come,
Earth is holding up a plateful
  Of the birds and buds a-bloom!

L’ANNÉE TERRIBLE.

TO LITTLE JEANNE.

(“Vous eûtes donc hier un an.”)

[September, 1870.]

You’ve lived a year, then, yesterday, sweet child,
Prattling thus happily! So fledglings wild,
New-hatched in warmer nest ‘neath sheltering bough,
Chirp merrily to feel their feathers grow.
Your mouth’s a rose, Jeanne! In these volumes grand
Whose pictures please you — while I trembling stand
To see their big leaves tattered by your hand —
Are noble lines; but nothing half your worth,
When all your tiny frame rustles with mirth
To welcome me. No work of author wise
Can match the thought half springing to your eyes,
And your dim reveries, unfettered, strange,
Regarding man with all the boundless range
Of angel innocence. Methinks, ’tis clear
That God’s not far, Jeanne, when I see you here.

Ah! twelve months old: ’tis quite an age, and brings
Grave moments, though your soul to rapture clings,
You’re at that hour of life most like to heaven,
When present joy no cares, no sorrows leaven
When man no shadow feels: if fond caress
Round parent twines, children the world possess.
Your waking hopes, your dreams of mirth and love
From Charles to Alice, father to mother, rove;
No wider range of view your heart can take
Than what her nursing and his bright smiles make;
They two alone on this your opening hour
Can gleams of tenderness and gladness pour:

They two — none else, Jeanne! Yet ’tis just, and I,
Poor grandsire, dare but to stand humbly by.
You come — I go: though gloom alone my right,
Blest be the destiny which gives you light.

Your fair-haired brother George and you beside
Me play — in watching you is all my pride;
And all I ask — by countless sorrows tried —
The grave; o’er which in shadowy form may show
Your cradles gilded by the morning’s glow.

Pure new-born wonderer! your infant life
Strange welcome found, Jeanne, in this time of strife.
Like wild-bee humming through the woods your play,
And baby smiles have dared a world at bay:
Your tiny accents lisp their gentle charms
To mighty Paris clashing mighty arms.
Ah! when I see you, child, and when I hear
You sing, or try, with low voice whispering near,
And touch of fingers soft, my grief to cheer,
I dream this darkness, where the tempests groan,
Trembles, and passes with half-uttered moan.
For though these hundred towers of Paris bend,
Though close as foundering ship her glory’s end,
Though rocks the universe, which we defend;
Still to great cannon on our ramparts piled,
God sends His blessing by a little child.

MARWOOD TUCKER.

TO A SICK CHILD DURING THE SIEGE OF PARIS.

(“Si vous continuez toute pâle.”)

[November, 1870.]

If you continue thus so wan and white;
  If I, one day, behold
You pass from out our dull air to the light,
  You, infant — I, so old:
If I the thread of our two lives must see
  Thus blent to human view,
I who would fain know death was near to me,
  And far away for you;
If your small hands remain such fragile things;
  If, in your cradle stirred,
You have the mien of waiting there for wings,
  Like to some new-fledged bird;
Not rooted to our earth you seem to be.
  If still, beneath the skies,
You turn, O Jeanne, on our mystery
  Soft, discontented eyes!
If I behold you, gay and strong no more;
  If you mope sadly thus;
If you behind you have not shut the door,
  Through which you came to us;
If you no more like some fair dame I see
  Laugh, walk, be well and gay;
If like a little soul you seem to me
  That fain would fly away —
I’ll deem that to this world, where oft are blent
  The pall and swaddling-band,
You came but to depart — an angel sent
  To bear me from the land.

LUCY H. HOOPER.

THE CARRIER PIGEON.

(“Oh! qu’est-ce que c’est donc que l’Inconnu.”)

[January, 1871.]

Who then — oh, who, is like our God so great,
Who makes the seed expand beneath the mountain’s weight;
Who for a swallow’s nest leaves one old castle wall,
Who lets for famished beetles savory apples fall,
Who bids a pigmy win where Titans fail, in yoke,
And, in what we deem fruitless roar and smoke,
Makes Etna, Chimborazo, still His praises sing,
And saves a city by a word lapped ‘neath a pigeon’s wing!

TOYS AND TRAGEDY.

("Enfants, on vous dira plus tard.")

[January, 1871.]

In later years, they'll tell you grandpapa
  Adored his little darlings; for them did
His utmost just to pleasure them and mar
  No moments with a frown or growl amid
Their rosy rompings; that he loved them so
  (Though men have called him bitter, cold, and stern,)
That in the famous winter when the snow
  Covered poor Paris, he went, old and worn,
To buy them dolls, despite the falling shells,
At which laughed Punch, and they, and shook his bells.

MOURNING.

("Charle! ô mon fils!")

[March, 1871.]

Charles, Charles, my son! hast thou, then, quitted me?
  Must all fade, naught endure?
Hast vanished in that radiance, clear for thee,
  But still for us obscure?

My sunset lingers, boy, thy morn declines!
  Sweet mutual love we've known;
For man, alas! plans, dreams, and smiling twines
  With others' souls his own.

He cries, "This has no end!" pursues his way:
  He soon is downward bound:
He lives, he suffers; in his grasp one day
  Mere dust and ashes found.

I've wandered twenty years, in distant lands,
  With sore heart forced to stay:
Why fell the blow Fate only understands!
  God took my home away.

To-day one daughter and one son remain
  Of all my goodly show:
Wellnigh in solitude my dark hours wane;
  God takes my children now.

Linger, ye two still left me! though decays
  Our nest, our hearts remain;
In gloom of death your mother silent prays,
  I in this life of pain.

Martyr of Sion! holding Thee in sight,
  I’ll drain this cup of gall,
And scale with step resolved that dangerous height,
  Which rather seems a fall.

Truth is sufficient guide; no more man needs
  Than end so nobly shown.
Mourning, but brave, I march; where duty leads,
  I seek the vast unknown.

MARWOOD TUCKER.

THE LESSON OF THE PATRIOT DEAD.

("O caresse sublime.")

[April, 1871.]

Upon the grave's cold mouth there ever have caresses clung
For those who died ideally good and grand and pure and young;
Under the scorn of all who clamor: "There is nothing just!"
And bow to dread inquisitor and worship lords of dust;
Let sophists give the lie, hearts droop, and courtiers play the worm,
Our martyrs of Democracy the Truth sublime affirm!
And when all seems inert upon this seething, troublous round,
And when the rashest knows not best to flee ar stand his ground,
When not a single war-cry from the sombre mass will rush,
When o'er the universe is spread by Doubting utter hush,
Then he who searches well within the walls that close immure
Our teachers, leaders, heroes slain because they lived too pure,
May glue his ear upon the ground where few else came to grieve,
And ask the austere shadows: "Ho! and must one still believe?
Read yet the orders: 'Forward, march!' and 'charge!'" Then from the lime,
Which burnt the bones but left the soul (Oh! tyrants' useless crime!)
Will rise reply: "Yes!" "yes!" and "yes!" the thousand, thousandth time!

H.L.W.

THE BOY ON THE BARRICADE.

(“Sur une barricade.”)

[June, 1871.]

Like Casabianca on the devastated deck,
  In years yet younger, but the selfsame core.
Beside the battered barricado’s restless wreck,
  A lad stood splashed with gouts of guilty gore,
  But gemmed with purest blood of patriot more.

Upon his fragile form the troopers’ bloody grip
  Was deeply dug, while sharply challenged they:
“Were you one of this currish crew?” — pride pursed his lip,
  As firm as bandog’s, brought the bull to bay —
  While answered he: “I fought with others. Yea!”

“Prepare then to be shot! Go join that death-doomed row.”
  As paced he pertly past, a volley rang —
And as he fell in line, mock mercies once more flow
  Of man’s lead-lightning’s sudden scathing pang,
  But to his home-turned thoughts the balls but sang.

“Here’s half-a-franc I saved to buy my mother’s bread!” —
  The captain started — who mourns not a dear,
The dearest! mother!— “Where is she, wolf-cub?” he said
  Still gruffly. “There, d’ye see? not far from here.”
  ”Haste! make it hers! then back to swell their bier.”

He sprang aloof as springald from detested school,
  Or ocean-rover from protected port.
“The little rascal has the laugh on us! no fool
  To breast our bullets!” — but the scoff was short,
  For soon! the rogue is racing from his court;

And with still fearless front he faces them and calls:
"READY! but level low — she's kissed these eyes!"
From cooling hands of men each rifle falls,
And their gray officer, in grave surprise,
Life grants the lad whilst his last comrade dies.

Brave youth! I know not well what urged thy act,
Whether thou'lt pass in palace, or die rackt;
But then, shone on the guns, a sublime soul. —
A Bayard-boy's, bound by his pure parole!
Honor redeemed though paid by parlous price,
Though lost be sunlit sports, wild boyhood's spice,
The Gates, the cheers of mates for bright device!

Greeks would, whilom, have choicely clasped and circled thee,
Set thee the first to shield some new Thermopylae;
Thy deed had touched and tuned their true Tyrtaeus tongue,
And staged by Aeschylus, grouped thee grand gods among.

And thy lost name (now known no more) been gilt and graved
On cloud-kissed column, by the sweet south ocean laved.
From us no crown! no honors from the civic sheaf —
Purely this poet's tear-bejewelled, aye-green leaf!

H.L.W.

TO HIS ORPHAN GRANDCHILDREN.

("O Charles, je te sens près de moi.")

[July, 1871.]

I feel thy presence, Charles. Sweet martyr! down
  In earth, where men decay,
I search, and see from cracks which rend thy tomb,
  Burst out pale morning's ray.

Close linked are bier and cradle: here the dead,
  To charm us, live again:
Kneeling, I mourn, when on my threshold sounds
  Two little children's strain.

George, Jeanne, sing on! George, Jeanne, unconscious play!
  Your father's form recall,
Now darkened by his sombre shade, now gilt
  By beams that wandering fall.

Oh, knowledge! what thy use? did we not know
  Death holds no more the dead;
But Heaven, where, hand in hand, angel and star
  Smile at the grave we dread?

A Heaven, which childhood represents on earth.
  Orphans, may God be nigh!
That God, who can your bright steps turn aside
  From darkness, where I sigh.

All joy be yours, though sorrow bows me down!
  To each his fitting wage:
Children, I've passed life's span, and men are plagued
  By shadows at that stage.

Hath any done — nay, only half performed —
  The good he might for others?
Hath any conquered hatred, or had strength
  To treat his foes like brothers?

E’en he, who’s tried his best, hath evil wrought:
  Pain springs from happiness:
My heart has triumphed in defeat, my pulse
  Ne’er quickened at success.

I seemed the greater when I felt the blow:
  The prick gives sense of gain;
Since to make others bleed my courage fails,
  I’d rather bear the pain.

To grow is sad, since evils grow no less;
  Great height is mark for all:
The more I have of branches, more of clustering boughs,
  The ghastlier shadows fall.

Thence comes my sadness, though I grant your charms:
  Ye are the outbursting
Of the soul in bloom, steeped in the draughts
  Of nature’s boundless spring.

George is the sapling, set in mournful soil;
  Jeanne’s folding petals shroud
A mind which trembles at our uproar, yet
  Half longs to speak aloud.

Give, then, my children — lowly, blushing plants,
  Whom sorrow waits to seize —
Free course to instincts, whispering ‘mid the flowers,
  Like hum of murmuring bees.

Some day you’ll find that chaos comes, alas!
  That angry lightning’s hurled,

When any cheer the People, Atlas huge,
  Grim bearer of the world!

You’ll see that, since our fate is ruled by chance,
  Each man, unknowing, great,
Should frame life so, that at some future hour
  Fact and his dreamings meet.

I, too, when death is past, one day shall grasp
  That end I know not now;
And over you will bend me down, all filled
  With dawn’s mysterious glow.

I’ll learn what means this exile, what this shroud
  Enveloping your prime;
And why the truth and sweetness of one man
  Seem to all others crime.

I’ll hear — though midst these dismal boughs you sang —
  How came it, that for me,
Who every pity feel for every woe,
  So vast a gloom could be.

I’ll know why night relentless holds me, why
  So great a pile of doom:
Why endless frost enfolds me, and methinks
  My nightly bed’s a tomb:

Why all these battles, all these tears, regrets,
  And sorrows were my share;
And why God’s will of me a cypress made,
  When roses bright ye were.

MARWOOD TUCKER.

TO THE CANNON "VICTOR HUGO."

[Bought with the proceeds of Readings of "Les Châtiments" during the Siege of Paris.]

  Thou deadly crater, moulded by my muse,
Cast thou thy bronze into my bowed and wounded heart,
And let my soul its vengeance to thy bronze impart!

L’ART D’ÊTRE GRANDPÊRE.

THE CHILDREN OF THE POOR.

(“Prenez garde à ce petit être.”)

[LAUS PUER: POEM V.]

Take heed of this small child of earth;
  He is great: in him is God most high.
Children before their fleshly birth
  Are lights in the blue sky.

In our brief bitter world of wrong
  They come; God gives us them awhile.
His speech is in their stammering tongue,
  And His forgiveness in their smile.

Their sweet light rests upon our eyes:
  Alas! their right to joy is plain.
If they are hungry, Paradise
  Weeps, and if cold, Heaven thrills with pain.

The want that saps their sinless flower
  Speaks judgment on Sin’s ministers.
Man holds an angel in his power.
  Ah! deep in Heaven what thunder stirs.

When God seeks out these tender things,
  Whom in the shadow where we keep,
He sends them clothed about with wings,
  And finds them ragged babes that weep!

Dublin University Magazine.

THE EPIC OF THE LION.

(“Un lion avait pris un enfant.”)

[XIII.]

A Lion in his jaws caught up a child —
Not harming it — and to the woodland, wild
With secret streams and lairs, bore off his prey —
The beast, as one might cull a bud in May.
It was a rosy boy, a king’s own pride,
A ten-year lad, with bright eyes shining wide,
And save this son his majesty beside
Had but one girl, two years of age, and so
The monarch suffered, being old, much woe;
His heir the monster’s prey, while the whole land
In dread both of the beast and king did stand;
Sore terrified were all.

By came a knight
That road, who halted, asking, “What’s the fright?”
They told him, and he spurred straight for the site!
The beast was seen to smile ere joined they fight,
The man and monster, in most desperate duel,
Like warring giants, angry, huge, and cruel.
Stout though the knight, the lion stronger was,
And tore that brave breast under its cuirass,
Scrunching that hero, till he sprawled, alas!
Beneath his shield, all blood and mud and mess:
Whereat the lion feasted: then it went
Back to its rocky couch and slept content.
Sudden, loud cries and clamors! striking out
Qualm to the heart of the quiet, horn and shout
Causing the solemn wood to reel with rout.
Terrific was this noise that rolled before;
It seemed a squadron; nay, ’twas something more —

A whole battalion, sent by that sad king
With force of arms his little prince to bring,
Together with the lion’s bleeding hide.

Which here was right or wrong? Who can decide?
Have beasts or men most claim to live? God wots!
He is the unit, we the cipher-dots.
Ranged in the order a great hunt should have,
They soon between the trunks espy the cave.
“Yes, that is it! the very mouth of the den!”
The trees all round it muttered, warning men;
Still they kept step and neared it. Look you now,
Company’s pleasant, and there were a thou —
Good Lord! all in a moment, there’s its face!
Frightful! they saw the lion! Not one pace
Further stirred any man; but bolt and dart
Made target of the beast. He, on his part,
As calm as Pelion in the rain or hail,
Bristled majestic from the teeth to tail,
And shook full fifty missiles from his hide,
But no heed took he; steadfastly he eyed,
And roared a roar, hoarse, vibrant, vengeful, dread,
A rolling, raging peal of wrath, which spread,
Making the half-awakened thunder cry,
“Who thunders there?” from its black bed of sky.
This ended all! Sheer horror cleared the coast;
As fogs are driven by the wind, that valorous host
Melted, dispersed to all the quarters four,
Clean panic-stricken by that monstrous roar.
Then quoth the lion, “Woods and mountains, see,
A thousand men, enslaved, fear one beast free!”
He followed towards the hill, climbed high above,
Lifted his voice, and, as the sowers sow
The seed down wind, thus did that lion throw
His message far enough the town to reach:
“King! your behavior really passes speech!
Thus far no harm I’ve wrought to him your son;

But now I give you notice — when night's done,
I will make entry at your city-gate,
Bringing the prince alive; and those who wait
To see him in my jaws — your lackey-crew —
Shall see me eat him in your palace, too!"
Next morning, this is what was viewed in town:
Dawn coming — people going — some adown
Praying, some crying; pallid cheeks, swift feet,
And a huge lion stalking through the street.
It seemed scarce short of rash impiety
To cross its path as the fierce beast went by.
So to the palace and its gilded dome
With stately steps unchallenged did he roam;
He enters it — within those walls he leapt!
No man!

For certes, though he raged and wept,
His majesty, like all, close shelter kept,
Solicitous to live, holding his breath
Specially precious to the realm. Now death
Is not thus viewed by honest beasts of prey;
And when the lion found him fled away,
Ashamed to be so grand, man being so base,
He muttered to himself, "A wretched king!
'Tis well; I'll eat his boy!" Then, wandering,
Lordly he traversed courts and corridors,
Paced beneath vaults of gold on shining floors,
Glanced at the throne deserted, stalked from hall
To hall — green, yellow, crimson — empty all!
Rich couches void, soft seats unoccupied!
And as he walked he looked from side to side
To find some pleasant nook for his repast,
Since appetite was come to munch at last
The princely morsel! — Ah! what sight astounds
That grisly lounger?

In the palace grounds
An alcove on a garden gives, and there
A tiny thing — forgot in the general fear,
Lulled in the flower-sweet dreams of infancy,
Bathed with soft sunlight falling brokenly
Through leaf and lattice — was at that moment waking;
A little lovely maid, most dear and taking,
The prince's sister — all alone, undressed —
She sat up singing: children sing so best.
Charming this beauteous baby-maid; and so
The beast caught sight of her and stopped —

And then
Entered — the floor creaked as he stalked straight in.
Above the playthings by the little bed
The lion put his shaggy, massive head,
Dreadful with savage might and lordly scorn,
More dreadful with that princely prey so borne;
Which she, quick spying, "Brother, brother!" cried,
"Oh, my own brother!" and, unterrified,
She gazed upon that monster of the wood,
Whose yellow balls not Typhon had withstood,
And — well! who knows what thoughts these small heads hold?
She rose up in her cot — full height, and bold,
And shook her pink fist angrily at him.
Whereon — close to the little bed's white rim,
All dainty silk and laces — this huge brute
Set down her brother gently at her foot,
Just as a mother might, and said to her,
"Don't be put out, now! There he is, dear, there!"

EDWIN ARNOLD, C.S.I.

LES QUATRE VENTS DE L’ESPRIT.

ON HEARING THE PRINCESS ROYAL SING.

(“Dans ta haute demeure.”)

[Bk. III. ix., 1881.]

In thine abode so high
  Where yet one scarce can breathe,
Dear child, most tenderly
  A soft song thou dost wreathe.

Thou singest, little girl —
  Thy sire, the King is he:
Around thee glories whirl,
  But all things sigh in thee.

Thy thought may seek not wings
  Of speech; dear love’s forbidden;
Thy smiles, those heavenly things,
  Being faintly born, are chidden.

Thou feel’st, poor little Bride,
  A hand unknown and chill
Clasp thine from out the wide
  Deep shade so deathly still.

Thy sad heart, wingless, weak,
  Is sunk in this black shade
So deep, thy small hands seek,
  Vainly, the pulse God made.

Thou art yet but highness, thou
  That shaft be majesty:
Though still on thy fair brow
  Some faint dawn-flush may be,

Child, unto armies dear,
  Even now we mark heaven’s light
Dimmed with the fume and fear
  And glory of battle-might.

Thy godfather is he,
  Earth’s Pope, — he hails thee, child!
Passing, armed men you see
  Like unarmed women, mild.

As saint all worship thee;
  Thyself even hast the strong
Thrill of divinity
  Mingled with thy small song.

Each grand old warrior
  Guards thee, submissive, proud;
Mute thunders at thy door
  Sleep, that shall wake most loud.

Around thee foams the wild
  Bright sea, the lot of kings.
Happier wert thou, my child,
  I’ the woods a bird that sings!

NELSON R. TYERMAN.

MY HAPPIEST DREAM.

(“J’aime à me figure.”)

[Bk. III. vii. and viii.]

I love to look, as evening fails,
On vestals streaming in their veils,
Within the fane past altar rails,
  Green palms in hand.
My darkest moods will always clear
When I can fancy children near,
With rosy lips a-laughing — dear,
  Light-dancing band!

Enchanting vision, too, displayed,
That of a sweet and radiant maid,
Who knows not why she is afraid, —
  Love’s yet unseen!
Another — rarest ‘mong the rare —
To see the gaze of chosen fair
Return prolonged and wistful stare
  Of eager een.

But — dream o’er all to stir my soul,
And shine the brightest on the roll,
Is when a land of tyrant’s toll
  By sword is rid.
I say not dagger — with the sword
When Right enchampions the horde,
All in broad day — so that the bard
May sing the victor with the starred
  Bayard and Cid!

AN OLD-TIME LAY.

(“Jamais elle ne raille.”)

[Bk. III. xiii.]

  Where your brood seven lie,
  Float in calm heavenly,
  Life passing evenly,
Waterfowl, waterfowl! often I dream
    For a rest
    Like your nest,
    Skirting the stream.

  Shine the sun tearfully
  Ere the clouds clear fully,
  Still you skim cheerfully,
Swallow, oh! swallow swift! often I sigh
    For a home
    Where you roam
    Nearing the sky!

  Guileless of pondering;
  Swallow-eyes wandering;
  Seeking no fonder ring
Than the rose-garland Love gives thee apart!
    Grant me soon —
    Blessed boon!
    Home in thy heart!

JERSEY.

(“Jersey dort dans les flots.”)

[Bk. III. xiv., Oct. 8, 1854.]

Dear Jersey! jewel jubilant and green,
  ’Midst surge that splits steel ships, but sings to thee!
Thou fav’rest Frenchmen, though from England seen,
  Oft tearful to that mistress “North Countree”;
Returned the third time safely here to be,
I bless my bold Gibraltar of the Free.

Yon lighthouse stands forth like a fervent friend,
  One who our tempest buffets back with zest,
And with twin-steeple, eke our helmsman’s end,
  Forms arms that beckon us upon thy breast;
Rose-posied pillow, crystallized with spray,
Where pools pellucid mirror sunny ray.

A frigate fretting yonder smoothest sky,
  Like pauseless petrel poising o’er a wreck,
Strikes bright athwart the dearly dazzled eye,
  Until it lessens to scarce certain speck,
‘Neath Venus, sparkling on the agate-sprinkled beach,
  For fisher’s sailing-signal, just and true,
  Until Aurora frights her from the view.

In summer, steamer-smoke spreads as thy veil,
  And mists in winter sudden screen thy sight,
When at thy feet the galley-breakers wail
  And toss their tops high o’er the lofty flight
Of horrid storm-worn steps with shark-like bite,
That only ope to swallow up in spite.

L’ENVOY.

But penitent in calm, thou givest a balm,
  To many a man who’s felt thy rage,
And many a sea-bird — thanks be heard! —
  Thou shieldest — sea-bird — exiled bard and sage.

THEN, MOST, I SMILE.

("Il est un peu tard.")

[Bk. III. xxx., Oct. 30, 1854.]

Late it is to look so proud,
  Daisy queen! come is the gloom
Of the winter-burdened cloud! —
  "But, in winter, most I bloom!"

Star of even! sunk the sun!
  Lost for e'er the ruddy line;
And the earth is veiled in dun, —
  "Nay, in darkness, best I shine!"

O, my soul! art 'bove alarm,
  Quaffing thus the cup of gall —
Canst thou face the grave with calm? —
  "Yes, the Christians smile at all."

THE EXILE’S DESIRE.

(“Si je pouvais voir, O patrie!”)

[Bk. III. xxxvii.]

Would I could see you, native land,
Where lilacs and the almond stand
Behind fields flowering to the strand —
    But no!

Can I — oh, father, mother, crave
Another final blessing save
To rest my head upon your grave? —
    But no!

In the one pit where ye repose,
Would I could tell of France’s woes,
My brethren, who fell facing foes —
    But no!

Would I had — oh, my dove of light,
After whose flight came ceaseless night,
One plume to clasp so purely white. —
    But no!

Far from ye all — oh, dead, bewailed!
The fog-bell deafens me empaled
Upon this rock — I feel enjailed —
    Though free.

Like one who watches at the gate
Lest some shall ‘scape the doomèd strait.
I watch! the tyrant, howe’er late,
    Must fall!

THE REFUGEE’S HAVEN.

(“Vous voilà dans la froide Angleterre.”)

[Bk. III. xlvii., Jersey, Sept. 19, 1854.]

You may doubt I find comfort in England
  But, there, ’tis a refuge from dangers!
Where a Cromwell dictated to Milton,
  Republicans ne’er can be strangers!

VARIOUS PIECES.

TO THE NAPOLEON COLUMN.

[Oct. 9, 1830.]

When with gigantic hand he placed,
For throne, on vassal Europe based,
  That column’s lofty height —
Pillar, in whose dread majesty,
In double immortality,
  Glory and bronze unite!
Aye, when he built it that, some day,
Discord or war their course might stay,
  Or here might break their car;
And in our streets to put to shame
Pigmies that bear the hero’s name
  Of Greek and Roman war.
It was a glorious sight; the world
His hosts had trod, with flags unfurled,
  In veteran array;
Kings fled before him, forced to yield,
He, conqueror on each battlefield,
  Their cannon bore away.
Then, with his victors back he came;
All France with booty teemed, her name
  Was writ on sculptured stone;
And Paris cried with joy, as when
The parent bird comes home again
  To th’ eaglets left alone.
Into the furnace flame, so fast,
Were heaps of war-won metal cast,
  The future monument!
His thought had formed the giant mould,
And piles of brass in the fire he rolled,
  From hostile cannon rent.

When to the battlefield he came,
He grasped the guns spite tongues of flame,
  And bore the spoil away.
This bronze to France’s Rome he brought,
And to the founder said, “Is aught
  Wanting for our array?”
And when, beneath a radiant sun,
That man, his noble purpose done,
  With calm and tranquil mien,
Disclosed to view this glorious fane,
And did with peaceful hand contain
  The warlike eagle’s sheen.
Round thee, when hundred thousands placed,
As some great Roman’s triumph graced,
  The little Romans all;
We boys hung on the procession’s flanks,
Seeking some father in thy ranks,
  And loud thy praise did call.
Who that surveyed thee, when that day
Thou deemed that future glory ray
  Would here be ever bright;
Feared that, ere long, all France thy grave
From pettifoggers vain would crave
  Beneath that column’s height?

Author of “Critical Essays.”

CHARITY.

("Je suis la Charité.")

[February, 1837.]

"Lo! I am Charity," she cries,
  "Who waketh up before the day;
While yet asleep all nature lies,
  God bids me rise and go my way."

How fair her glorious features shine,
  Whereon the hand of God hath set
An angel's attributes divine,
  With all a woman's sweetness met.

Above the old man's couch of woe
  She bows her forehead, pure and even.
There's nothing fairer here below,
  There's nothing grander up in heaven,

Than when caressingly she stands
  (The cold hearts wakening 'gain their beat),
And holds within her holy hands
  The little children's naked feet.

To every den of want and toil
  She goes, and leaves the poorest fed;
Leaves wine and bread, and genial oil,
  And hopes that blossom in her tread,

And fire, too, beautiful bright fire,
  That mocks the glowing dawn begun,
Where, having set the blind old sire,
  He dreams he's sitting in the sun.

Then, over all the earth she runs,
  And seeks, in the cold mists of life,
Those poor forsaken little ones
  Who droop and weary in the strife.

Ah, most her heart is stirred for them,
  Whose foreheads, wrapped in mists obscure,
Still wear a triple diadem —
  The young, the innocent, the poor.

And they are better far than we,
  And she bestows a worthier meed;
For, with the loaf of charity,
  She gives the kiss that children need.

She gives, and while they wondering eat
  The tear-steeped bread by love supplied,
She stretches round them in the street
  Her arm that passers push aside.

If, with raised head and step alert,
  She sees the rich man stalking by,
She touches his embroidered skirt,
  And gently shows them where they lie.

She begs for them of careless crowd,
  Of earnest brows and narrow hearts,
That when it hears her cry aloud,
  Turns like the ebb-tide and departs.

O miserable he who sings
  Some strain impure, whose numbers fall
Along the cruel wind that brings
  Death to some child beneath his wall.

O strange and sad and fatal thing,
  When, in the rich man’s gorgeous hall,

The huge fire on the hearth doth fling
  A light on some great festival,

To see the drunkard smile in state,
  In purple wrapt, with myrtle crowned,
While Jesus lieth at the gate
  With only rags to wrap him round.

Dublin University Magazine

SWEET SISTER.

(“Vous qui ne savez pas combien l’enfance est belle.”)

Sweet sister, if you knew, like me,
The charms of guileless infancy,
No more you’d envy riper years,
Or smiles, more bitter than your tears.

But childhood passes in an hour,
As perfume from a faded flower;
The joyous voice of early glee
Flies, like the Halcyon, o’er the sea.

Enjoy your morn of early Spring;
Soon time maturer thoughts must bring;
Those hours, like flowers that interclimb,
Should not be withered ere their time.

Too soon you’ll weep, as we do now,
O’er faithless friend, or broken vow,
And hopeless sorrows, which our pride
In pleasure’s whirl would vainly hide.

Laugh on! unconscious of thy doom,
All innocence and opening bloom;
Laugh on! while yet thine azure eye
Mirrors the peace that reigns on high.

MRS. B. SOMERS.

THE PITY OF THE ANGELS.

("Un Ange vit un jour.")

[LA PITIÉ SUPREME VIII., 1881.]

When an angel of kindness
  Saw, doomed to the dark,
Men framed in his likeness,
  He sought for a spark —
Stray gem of God's glory
    That shines so serene —
  And, falling like lark,
To brighten our story,
    Pure Pity was seen.

THE SOWER.

Sitting in a porchway cool,
  Fades the ruddy sunlight fast,
Twilight hastens on to rule —
  Working hours are wellnigh past

Shadows shoot across the lands;
  But one sower lingers still,
Old, in rags, he patient stands, —
  Looking on, I feel a thrill.

Black and high his silhouette
  Dominates the furrows deep!
Now to sow the task is set,
  Soon shall come a time to reap.

Marches he along the plain,
  To and fro, and scatters wide
From his hands the precious grain;
  Moody, I, to see him stride.

Darkness deepens. Gone the light.
  Now his gestures to mine eyes
Are august; and strange — his height
  Seems to touch the starry skies.

TORU DUTT.

OH, WHY NOT BE HAPPY?

(“A quoi bon entendre les oiseaux?”)

[RUY BLAS, Act II.]

Oh, why not be happy this bright summer day,
‘Mid perfume of roses and newly-mown hay?
Great Nature is smiling — the birds in the air
Sing love-lays together, and all is most fair.
Then why not be happy
This bright summer day,
’Mid perfume of roses
And newly-mown hay?

The streamlets they wander through meadows so fleet,
Their music enticing fond lovers to meet;
The violets are blooming and nestling their heads
In richest profusion on moss-coated beds.
Then why not be happy
This bright summer day,
When Nature is fairest
And all is so gay?

LEOPOLD WRAY.

FREEDOM AND THE WORLD.

[Inscription under a Statue of the Virgin and Child, at Guernsey. — The poet sees in the emblem a modern Atlas, i.e., Freedom supporting the World.]

(“Le peuple est petit.”)

Weak is the People — but will grow beyond all other —
Within thy holy arms, thou fruitful victor-mother!
O Liberty, whose conquering flag is never furled —
Thou bearest Him in whom is centred all the World.

SERENADE.

(“Quand tu chantes.”)

When the voice of thy lute at the eve
  Charmeth the ear,
In the hour of enchantment believe
  What I murmur near.
That the tune can the Age of Gold
  With its magic restore.
Play on, play on, my fair one,
  Play on for evermore.

When thy laugh like the song of the dawn
  Riseth so gay
That the shadows of Night are withdrawn
  And melt away,
I remember my years of care
  And misgiving no more.
Laugh on, laugh on, my fair one,
  Laugh on for evermore.

When thy sleep like the moonlight above
  Lulling the sea,
Doth enwind thee in visions of love,
  Perchance, of me!
I can watch so in dream that enthralled me,
  Never before!
Sleep on, sleep on, my fair one!
  Sleep on for evermore.

HENRY F. CHORLEY.

AN AUTUMNAL SIMILE.

(“Les feuilles qui gisaient.”)

The leaves that in the lonely walks were spread,
Starting from off the ground beneath the tread,
    Coursed o’er the garden-plain;
Thus, sometimes, ‘mid the soul’s deep sorrowings,
Our soul a moment mounts on wounded wings,
    Then, swiftly, falls again.

TO CRUEL OCEAN.

Where are the hapless shipmen? — disappeared,
  Gone down, where witness none, save Night, hath been,
Ye deep, deep waves, of kneeling mothers feared,
  What dismal tales know ye of things unseen?
  Tales that ye tell your whispering selves between
  The while in clouds to the flood-tide ye pour;
  And this it is that gives you, as I ween,
  Those mournful voices, mournful evermore,
  When ye come in at eve to us who dwell on shore.

ESMERALDA IN PRISON.

(“Phoebus, n’est-il sur la terre?”)

[OPERA OF “ESMERALDA,” ACT IV., 1836.]

Phoebus, is there not this side the grave,
    Power to save
Those who’re loving? Magic balm
That will restore to me my former calm?
Is there nothing tearful eye
Can e’er dry, or hush the sigh?
I pray Heaven day and night,
As I lay me down in fright,
To retake my life, or give
All again for which I’d live!
Phoebus, hasten from the shining sphere
    To me here!
Hither hasten, bring me Death; then Love
May let our spirits rise, ever-linked, above!

LOVER’S SONG.

(“Mon âme à ton coeur s’est donnée.”)

[ANGELO, Act II., May, 1835.]

My soul unto thy heart is given,
  In mystic fold do they entwine,
So bound in one that, were they riven,
  Apart my soul would life resign.
Thou art my song and I the lyre;
Thou art the breeze and I the brier;
The altar I, and thou the fire;
  Mine the deep love, the beauty thine!
As fleets away the rapid hour
  While weeping — may
  My sorrowing lay
Touch thee, sweet flower.

ERNEST OSWALD COE.

A FLEETING GLIMPSE OF A VILLAGE.

(“Tout vit! et se pose avec grâce.”)

How graceful the picture! the life, the repose!
  The sunbeam that plays on the porchstone wide;
And the shadow that fleets o’er the stream that flows,
  And the soft blue sky with the hill’s green side.

Fraser’s Magazine.

LORD ROCHESTER’S SONG.

(“Un soldat au dur visage.”)

[CROMWELL, ACT I.]

“Hold, little blue-eyed page!”
  So cried the watchers surly,
Stern to his pretty rage
  And golden hair so curly —
“Methinks your satin cloak
  Masks something bulky under;
I take this as no joke —
  Oh, thief with stolen plunder!”

“I am of high repute,
  And famed among the truthful:
This silver-handled lute
  Is meet for one still youthful
Who goes to keep a tryst
  With her who is his dearest.
I charge you to desist;
  My cause is of the clearest.”

But guardsmen are so sharp,
  Their eyes are as the lynx’s:
“That’s neither lute nor harp —
  Your mark is not the minxes.
Your loving we dispute —
  That string of steel so cruel
For music does not suit —
  You go to fight a duel!”

THE BEGGAR’S QUATRAIN.

(“Aveugle comme Homère.”)

[Improvised at the Café de Paris.]

Blind, as was Homer; as Belisarius, blind,
  But one weak child to guide his vision dim.
The hand which dealt him bread, in pity kind —
  He’ll never see; God sees it, though, for him.

H.L.C., “London Society.”

THE QUIET RURAL CHURCH.

It was a humble church, with arches low,
  The church we entered there,
Where many a weary soul since long ago
  Had past with plaint or prayer.

Mournful and still it was at day’s decline,
  The day we entered there;
As in a loveless heart, at the lone shrine,
  The fires extinguished were.

Scarcely was heard to float some gentlest sound,
  Scarcely some low breathed word,
As in a forest fallen asleep, is found
  Just one belated bird.

A STORM SIMILE.

("Oh, regardez le ciel!")

[June, 1828.]

See, where on high the moving masses, piled
By the wind, break in groups grotesque and wild,
    Present strange shapes to view;
Oft flares a pallid flash from out their shrouds,
As though some air-born giant 'mid the clouds
    Sudden his falchion drew.

DRAMATIC PIECES.

THE FATHER’S CURSE.

(“Vous, sire, écoutez-moi.”)

[LE ROI S’AMUSE, Act I.]

M. ST. VALLIER (an aged nobleman, from whom King Francis I. decoyed his daughter, the famous beauty, Diana of Poitiers).

A king should listen when his subjects speak:
’Tis true your mandate led me to the block,
Where pardon came upon me, like a dream;
I blessed you then, unconscious as I was
That a king’s mercy, sharper far than death,
To save a father doomed his child to shame;
Yes, without pity for the noble race
Of Poitiers, spotless for a thousand years,
You, Francis of Valois, without one spark
Of love or pity, honor or remorse,
Did on that night (thy couch her virtue’s tomb),
With cold embraces, foully bring to scorn
My helpless daughter, Dian of Poitiers.
To save her father’s life a knight she sought,
Like Bayard, fearless and without reproach.
She found a heartless king, who sold the boon,
Making cold bargain for his child’s dishonor.
Oh! monstrous traffic! foully hast thou done!
My blood was thine, and justly, tho’ it springs
Amongst the best and noblest names of France;
But to pretend to spare these poor gray locks,
And yet to trample on a weeping woman,
Was basely done; the father was thine own,
But not the daughter! — thou hast overpassed
The right of monarchs! — yet ’tis mercy deemed.
And I perchance am called ungrateful still.
Oh, hadst thou come within my dungeon walls,

I would have sued upon my knees for death,
But mercy for my child, my name, my race,
Which, once polluted, is my race no more.
Rather than insult, death to them and me.
I come not now to ask her back from thee;
Nay, let her love thee with insensate love;
I take back naught that bears the brand of shame.
Keep her! Yet, still, amidst thy festivals,
Until some father’s, brother’s, husband’s hand
(‘Twill come to pass!) shall rid us of thy yoke,
My pallid face shall ever haunt thee there,
To tell thee, Francis, it was foully done!…

TRIBOULET (the Court Jester), sneering. The poor man raves.

ST. VILLIER. Accursed be ye both!
Oh Sire! ’tis wrong upon the dying lion
To loose thy dog! (Turns to Triboulet)
          And thou, whoe’er thou art,
That with a fiendish sneer and viper’s tongue
Makest my tears a pastime and a sport,
My curse upon thee! — Sire, thy brow doth bear
The gems of France! — on mine, old age doth sit;
Thine decked with jewels, mine with these gray hairs;
We both are Kings, yet bear a different crown;
And should some impious hand upon thy head
Heap wrongs and insult, with thine own strong arm
Thou canst avenge them! God avenges mine!

FREDK. L. SLOUS.

PATERNAL LOVE.

(“Ma fille! ô seul bonheur.”)

[LE ROI S’AMUSE, Act II]

My child! oh, only blessing Heaven allows me!
Others have parents, brothers, kinsmen, friends,
A wife, a husband, vassals, followers,
Ancestors, and allies, or many children.
I have but thee, thee only. Some are rich;
Thou art my treasure, thou art all my riches.
And some believe in angels; I believe
In nothing but thy soul. Others have youth,
And woman’s love, and pride, and grace, and health;
Others are beautiful; thou art my beauty,
Thou art my home, my country and my kin,
My wife, my mother, sister, friend — my child!
My bliss, my wealth, my worship, and my law,
My Universe! Oh, by all other things
My soul is tortured. If I should ever lose thee —
Horrible thought! I cannot utter it.
Smile, for thy smile is like thy mother’s smiling.
She, too, was fair; you have a trick like her,
Of passing oft your hand athwart your brow
As though to clear it. Innocence still loves
A brow unclouded and an azure eye.
To me thou seem’st clothed in a holy halo,
My soul beholds thy soul through thy fair body;
E’en when my eyes are shut, I see thee still;
Thou art my daylight, and sometimes I wish
That Heaven had made me blind that thou might’st be
The sun that lighted up the world for me.

FANNY KEMBLE-BUTLER.

THE DEGENERATE GALLANTS.

("Mes jeunes cavaliers.")

[HERNANI, Act I., March, 1830.]

What business brings you here, young cavaliers?
Men like the Cid, the knights of bygone years,
Rode out the battle of the weak to wage,
Protecting beauty and revering age.
Their armor sat on them, strong men as true,
Much lighter than your velvet rests on you.
Not in a lady's room by stealth they knelt;
In church, by day, they spoke the love they felt.
They kept their houses' honor bright from rust,
They told no secret, and betrayed no trust;
And if a wife they wanted, bold and gay,
With lance, or axe, or falchion, and by day,
Bravely they won and wore her. As for those
Who slip through streets when honest men repose,
With eyes turned to the ground, and in night's shade
The rights of trusting husbands to invade;
I say the Cid would force such knaves as these
To beg the city's pardon on their knees;
And with the flat of his all-conquering blade
Their rank usurped and 'scutcheon would degrade.
Thus would the men of former times, I say,
Treat the degenerate minions of to-day.

LORD F. LEVESON GOWER (1ST EARL OF ELLESMERE.)

THE OLD AND THE YOUNG BRIDEGROOM.

(“L’homme auquel on vous destina.”)

[HERNANI, Act I.]

Listen. The man for whom your youth is destined,
Your uncle, Ruy de Silva, is the Duke
Of Pastrana, Count of Castile and Aragon.
For lack of youth, he brings you, dearest girl,
Treasures of gold, jewels, and precious gems,
With which your brow might outshine royalty;
And for rank, pride, splendor, and opulence,
Might many a queen be envious of his duchess!
Here is one picture. I am poor; my youth
I passed i’ the woods, a barefoot fugitive.
My shield, perchance, may bear some noble blazons
Spotted with blood, defaced though not dishonored.
Perchance I, too, have rights, now veiled in darkness, —
Rights, which the heavy drapery of the scaffold
Now hides beneath its black and ample folds;
Rights which, if my intent deceive me not,
My sword shall one day rescue. To be brief: —
I have received from churlish Fortune nothing
But air, light, water, — Nature’s general boon.
Choose, then, between us two, for you must choose; —
Say, will you wed the duke, or follow me?

DONNA SOL. I’ll follow you.

HERN. What, ‘mongst my rude companions,
Whose names are registered in the hangman’s book?
Whose hearts are ever eager as their swords,
Edged by a personal impulse of revenge?
Will you become the queen, dear, of my band?
Will you become a hunted outlaw’s bride?

When all Spain else pursued and banished me, —
In her proud forests and air-piercing mountains,
And rocks the lordly eagle only knew,
Old Catalonia took me to her bosom.
Among her mountaineers, free, poor, and brave,
I ripened into manhood, and, to-morrow,
One blast upon my horn, among her hills,
Would draw three thousand of her sons around me.
You shudder, — think upon it. Will you tread
The shores, woods, mountains, with me, among men
Like the dark spirits of your haunted dreams, —
Suspect all eyes, all voices, every footstep, —
Sleep on the grass, drink of the torrent, hear
By night the sharp hiss of the musket-ball
Whistling too near your ear, — a fugitive
Proscribed, and doomed mayhap to follow me
In the path leading to my father’s scaffold?

DONNA SOL. I’ll follow you.

HERN. This duke is rich, great, prosperous,
No blot attaches to his ancient name.
He is all-powerful. He offers you
His treasures, titles, honors, with his hand.

DONNA SOL. We will depart to-morrow. Do not blame
What may appear a most unwomanly boldness.

CHARLES SHERRY.

THE SPANISH LADY'S LOVE.

DONNA SOL to HERNANI.

("Nous partirons demain.")

[HERNANI, ACT I.]

To mount the hills or scaffold, we go to-morrow:
Hernani, blame me not for this my boldness.
Art thou mine evil genius or mine angel?
I know not, but I am thy slave. Now hear me:
Go where thou wilt, I follow thee. Remain,
And I remain. Why do I thus? I know not.
I feel that I must see thee — see thee still —
See thee for ever. When thy footstep dies,
It is as if my heart no more would beat;
When thou art gone, I am absent from myself;
But when the footstep which I love and long for Strikes on mine ear again — then I remember
I live, and feel my soul return to me.

G. MOIR.

THE LOVER’S SACRIFICE.

(“Fuyons ensemble.”)

[HERNANI, Act II.]

DONNA SOL. Together let us fly!

HERNANI. Together? No! the hour is past for flight.
Dearest, when first thy beauty smote my sight,
I offered, for the love that bade me live,
Wretch that I was, what misery had to give:
My wood, my stream, my mountain. Bolder grown,
By thy compassion to an outlaw shown,
The outlaw’s meal beneath the forest shade,
The outlaw’s couch far in the greenwood glade,
I offered. Though to both that couch be free,
I keep the scaffold block reserved for me.

DONNA SOL. And yet you promised?

HERNANI (falls on his knee.) Angel! in this hour,
Pursued by vengeance and oppressed by power —
Even in this hour when death prepares to close
In shame and pain a destiny of woes —
Yes, I, who from the world proscribed and cast,
Have nursed one dark remembrance of the past,
E’en from my birth in sorrow’s garment clad,
Have cause to smile and reason to be glad;
For you have loved the outlaw and have shed
Your whispered blessings on his forfeit head.

DONNA SOL. Let me go with you.

HERNANI. No! I will not rend
From its fair stem the flower as I descend.
Go — I have smelt its perfume. Go — resume

All that this grasp has brushed away of bloom.
Wed the old man, — believe that ne’er we met;
I seek my shade — be happy, and forget!

LORD F. LEVESON GOWER (1ST EARL OF ELLESMERE).

THE OLD MAN'S LOVE.

("Dérision! que cet amour boiteux.")

[HERNANI, Act III.]

O mockery! that this halting love
That fills the heart so full of flame and transport,
Forgets the body while it fires the soul!
If but a youthful shepherd cross my path,
He singing on the way — I sadly musing,
He in his fields, I in my darksome alleys —
Then my heart murmurs: "O, ye mouldering towers!
Thou olden ducal dungeon! O how gladly
Would I exchange ye, and my fields and forests,
Mine ancient name, mine ancient rank, my ruins —
My ancestors, with whom I soon shall lie,
For his thatched cottage and his youthful brow!"
His hair is black — his eyes shine forth like thine.
Him thou might'st look upon, and say, fair youth,
Then turn to me, and think that I am old.
And yet the light and giddy souls of cavaliers
Harbor no love so fervent as their words bespeak.
Let some poor maiden love them and believe them,
Then die for them — they smile. Aye! these young birds,
With gay and glittering wing and amorous song,
Can shed their love as lightly as their plumage.
The old, whose voice and colors age has dimmed,
Flatter no more, and, though less fair, are faithful.
When we love, we love true. Are our steps frail?
Our eyes dried up and withered? Are our brows
Wrinkled? There are no wrinkles in the heart.
Ah! when the graybeard loves, he should be spared;
The heart is young — that bleeds unto the last.
I love thee as a spouse, — and in a thousand
Other fashions, — as sire, — as we love

The morn, the flowers, the overhanging heavens.
Ah me! when day by day I gaze upon thee,
Thy graceful step, thy purely-polished brow,
Thine eyes' calm fire, — I feel my heart leap up,
And an eternal sunshine bathe my soul.
And think, too! Even the world admires,
When age, expiring, for a moment totters
Upon the marble margin of a tomb,
To see a wife — a pure and dove-like angel —
Watch over him, soothe him, and endure awhile
The useless old man, only fit to die;
A sacred task, and worthy of all honor,
This latest effort of a faithful heart;
Which, in his parting hour, consoles the dying,
And, without loving, wears the look of love.
Ah! thou wilt be to me this sheltering angel,
To cheer the old man's heart — to share with him
The burden of his evil years; — a daughter
In thy respect, a sister in thy pity.

DONNA SOL. My fate may be more to precede than follow.
My lord, it is no reason for long life
That we are young! Alas! I have seen too oft
The old clamped firm to life, the young torn thence;
And the lids close as sudden o'er their eyes
As gravestones sealing up the sepulchre.

G. MOIR.

THE ROLL OF THE DE SILVA RACE.

("Celui-ci, des Silvas, c'est l'aîné.")

[HERNANI, Act III.]

In that reverend face
Behold the father of De Silva's race,
Silvius; in Rome he filled the consul's place
Three times (your patience for such honored names).
This second was Grand Master of St. James
And Calatrava; his strong limbs sustained
Armor which ours would sink beneath. He gained
Thirty pitched battles, and took, as legends tell,
Three hundred standards from the Infidel;
And from the Moorish King Motril, in war,
Won Antiquera, Suez, and Nijar;
And then died poor. Next to him Juan stands,
His son; his plighted hand was worth the hands
Of kings. Next Gaspar, of Mendoza's line —
Few noble stems but chose to join with mine:
Sandoval sometimes fears, and sometimes woos
Our smiles; Manriquez envies; Lara sues;
And Alancastre hates. Our rank we know:
Kings are but just above us, dukes below.
Vasquez, who kept for sixty years his vow —
Greater than he I pass. This reverend brow,
This was my sire's — the greatest, though the last:
The Moors his friend had taken and made fast —
Alvar Giron. What did my father then?
He cut in stone an image of Alvar,
Cunningly carved, and dragged it to the war;
He vowed a vow to yield no inch of ground
Until that image of itself turned round;
He reached Alvar — he saved him — and his line

Was old De Silva’s, and his name was mine —
Ruy Gomez.

King CARLOS. Drag me from his lurking-place
The traitor!

[DON RUY leads the KING to the portrait behind which HERNANI is hiding.]

Sire, your highness does me grace.
This, the last portrait, bears my form and name,
And you would write this motto on the frame!
“This last, sprung from the noblest and the best,
Betrayed his plighted troth, and sold his guest!”

LORD F. LEVESON GOWER (1ST EARL OF ELLESMERE)

THE LOVERS' COLLOQUY.

("Mon duc, rien qu'un moment.")

[HERNANI, Act V.]

One little moment to indulge the sight
With the rich beauty of the summer's night.
The harp is hushed, and, see, the torch is dim, —
Night and ourselves together. To the brim
The cup of our felicity is filled.
Each sound is mute, each harsh sensation stilled.
Dost thou not think that, e'en while nature sleeps,
Some power its amorous vigils o'er us keeps?
No cloud in heaven; while all around repose,
Come taste with me the fragrance of the rose,
Which loads the night-air with its musky breath,
While everything is still as nature's death.
E'en as you spoke — and gentle words were those
Spoken by you, — the silver moon uprose;
How that mysterious union of her ray,
With your impassioned accents, made its way
Straight to my heart! I could have wished to die
In that pale moonlight, and while thou wert by.

HERNANI. Thy words are music, and thy strain of love
Is borrowed from the choir of heaven above.

DONNA SOL. Night is too silent, darkness too profound
Oh, for a star to shine, a voice to sound —
To raise some sudden note of music now
Suited to night.

HERN. Capricious girl! your vow
Was poured for silence, and to be released
From the thronged tumult of the marriage feast.

DONNA SOL. Yes; but one bird to carol in the field, —
A nightingale, in mossy shade concealed, —
A distant flute, — for music’s stream can roll
To soothe the heart, and harmonize the soul, —
O! ’twould be bliss to listen.

[Distant sound of a horn, the signal that HERNANI must go to DON RUY, who, having saved his life, had him bound in a vow to yield it up.]

LORD F. LEVESON GOWER (1ST EARL OF ELLESMERE).

CROMWELL AND THE CROWN.

(“Ah! je le tiens enfin.”)

[CROMWELL, Act II., October, 1827.]

THURLOW communicates the intention of Parliament to offer CROMWELL the crown.

  CROMWELL. And is it mine? And have my feet at length
Attained the summit of the rock i’ the sand?

THURLOW. And yet, my lord, you have long reigned.

  CROM. Nay, nay!
Power I have ‘joyed, in sooth, but not the name.
Thou smilest, Thurlow. Ah, thou little know’st
What hole it is Ambition digs i’ th’ heart
What end, most seeming empty, is the mark
For which we fret and toil and dare! How hard
With an unrounded fortune to sit down!
Then, what a lustre from most ancient times
Heaven has flung o’er the sacred head of kings!
King — Majesty — what names of power! No king,
And yet the world’s high arbiter! The thing
Without the word! no handle to the blade!
Away — the empire and the name are one!
Alack! thou little dream’st how grievous ’tis,
Emerging from the crowd, and at the top
Arrived, to feel that there is something still Above our heads; something, nothing! no matter —
That word is everything.

LEITCH RITCHIE.

MILTON’S APPEAL TO CROMWELL.

(“Non! je n’y puis tenir.”)

[CROMWELL, Act III. sc. iv.]

Stay! I no longer can contain myself,
But cry you: Look on John, who bares his mind
To Oliver — to Cromwell, Milton speaks!
Despite a kindling eye and marvel deep
A voice is lifted up without your leave;
For I was never placed at council board
To speak my promptings. When awed strangers come
Who’ve seen Fox-Mazarin wince at the stings
In my epistles — and bring admiring votes
Of learned colleges, they strain to see
My figure in the glare — the usher utters,
“Behold and hearken! that’s my Lord Protector’s
Cousin — that, his son-in-law — that next” — who cares!
Some perfumed puppet! “Milton?” “He in black —
Yon silent scribe who trims their eloquence!”
Still ‘chronicling small-beer,’ — such is my duty!
Yea, one whose thunder roared through martyr bones
Till Pope and Louis Grand quaked on their thrones,
And echoed “Vengeance for the Vaudois,” where
The Sultan slumbers sick with scent of roses.
He is but the mute in this seraglio —
“Pure” Cromwell’s Council!
But to be dumb and blind is overmuch!
Impatient Issachar kicks at the load!
Yet diadems are burdens painfuller,
And I would spare thee that sore imposition.
Dear brother Noll, I plead against thyself!
Thou aim’st to be a king; and, in thine heart,
What fool has said: “There is no king but thou?”
For thee the multitude waged war and won —

The end thou art of wrestlings and of prayer,
Of sleepless watch, long marches, hunger, tears
And blood prolifically spilled, homes lordless,
And homeless lords! The mass must always suffer
That one should reign! the collar's but newly clamp'd,
And nothing but the name thereon is changed —
Master? still masters! mark you not the red
Of shame unutterable in my sightless white?
Still hear me, Cromwell, speaking for your sake!
These fifteen years, we, to you whole-devoted,
Have sought for Liberty — to give it thee?
To make our interests your huckster gains?
The king a lion slain that you may flay,
And wear the robe — well, worthily — I say't,
For I will not abase my brother!
No! I would keep him in the realm serene,
My own ideal of heroes! loved o'er Israel,
And higher placed by me than all the others!
And such, for tinkling titles, hollow haloes
Like that around yon painted brow — thou! thou!
Apostle, hero, saint-dishonor thyself!
And snip and trim the flag of Naseby-field
As scarf on which the maid-of-honor's dog
Will yelp, some summer afternoon! That sword
Shrink into a sceptre! brilliant bauble! Thou,
Thrown on a lonely rock in storm of state,
Brain-turned by safety's miracle, thou risest
Upon the tott'ring stone whilst ocean ebbs,
And, reeking of no storms to come to-morrow,
Or to-morrow — deem that a certain pedestal
Whereon thou'lt be adored for e'er — e'en while
It shakes — o'ersets the rider! Tremble, thou!
For he who dazzles, makes men Samson-blind,
Will see the pillars of his palace kiss
E'en at the whelming ruin! Then, what word
Of answer from your wreck when I demand
Account of Cromwell! glory of the people

Smothered in ashes! through the dust thou'lt hear;
"What didst thou with thy virtue?" Will it respond:
"When battered helm is doffed, how soft is purple
On which to lay the head, lulled by the praise
Of thousand fluttering fans of flatterers!
Wearied of war-horse, gratefully one glides
In gilded barge, or in crowned, velvet car,
From gay Whitehall to gloomy Temple Bar—"
(Where — had you slipt, that head were bleaching now!
And that same rabble, splitting for a hedge,
Had joined their rows to cheer the active headsman;
Perchance, in mockery, they'd gird the skull
With a hop-leaf crown! Bitter the brewing, Noll!)
Are crowns the end-all of ambition? Remember
Charles Stuart! and that they who make can break!
This same Whitehall may black its front with crape,
And this broad window be the portal twice
To lead upon a scaffold! Frown! or laugh!
Laugh on as they did at Cassandra's speech!
But mark — the prophetess was right! Still laugh,
Like the credulous Ethiop in his faith in stars!
But give one thought to Stuart, two for yourself!
In his appointed hour, all was forthcoming —
Judge, axe, and deathsman veiled! and my poor eyes
Descry — as would thou saw'st! — a figure veiled,
Uplooming there — afar, like sunrise, coming!
With blade that ne'er spared Judas 'midst free brethren!
Stretch not the hand of Cromwell for the prize
Meant not for him, nor his! Thou growest old,
The people are ever young! Like her i' the chase
Who drave a dart into her lover, embowered,
Piercing the incense-clouds, the popular shaft
May slay thee in a random shot at Tyranny!
Man, friend, remain a Cromwell! in thy name,
Rule! and if thy son be worthy, he and his,
So rule the rest for ages! be it grander thus
To be a Cromwell than a Carolus.

No lapdog combed by wantons, but the watch
Upon the freedom that we won! Dismiss
Your flatterers — let no harpings, no gay songs
Prevent your calm dictation of good laws
To guard, to fortify, and keep enlinked
England and Freedom! Be thine old self alone!
And make, above all else accorded me,
My most desired claim on all posterity,
That thou in Milton’s verse wert foremost of the free!

FIRST LOVE.

(“Vous êtes singulier.”)

[MARION DELORME, Act I., June, 1829, played 1831.]

MARION (smiling.) You’re strange, and yet I love you thus.

DIDIER. You love me?
Beware, nor with light lips utter that word.
You love me! — know you what it is to love
With love that is the life-blood in one’s veins,
The vital air we breathe, a love long-smothered,
Smouldering in silence, kindling, burning, blazing,
And purifying in its growth the soul.
A love that from the heart eats every passion
But its sole self; love without hope or limit,
Deep love that will outlast all happiness;
Speak, speak; is such the love you bear me?

MARION. Truly.

DIDIER. Ha! but you do not know how I love you!
The day that first I saw you, the dark world
Grew shining, for your eyes lighted my gloom.
Since then, all things have changed; to me you are
Some brightest, unknown creature from the skies.
This irksome life, ‘gainst which my heart rebelled,
Seems almost fair and pleasant; for, alas!
Till I knew you wandering, alone, oppressed,
I wept and struggled, I had never loved.

FANNY KEMBLE-BUTLER.

THE FIRST BLACK FLAG.

(“Avez-vous oui dire?”)

[LES BURGRAVES, Part I., March, 1843.]

JOB. Hast thou ne’er heard men say
That, in the Black Wood, ‘twixt Cologne and Spire,
Upon a rock flanked by the towering mountains,
A castle stands, renowned among all castles?
And in this fort, on piles of lava built,
A burgrave dwells, among all burgraves famed?
Hast heard of this wild man who laughs at laws —
Charged with a thousand crimes — for warlike deeds
Renowned — and placed under the Empire’s ban
By the Diet of Frankfort; by the Council
Of Pisa banished from the Holy Church;
Reprobate, isolated, cursed — yet still
Unconquered ‘mid his mountains and in will;
The bitter foe of the Count Palatine
And Treves’ proud archbishop; who has spurned
For sixty years the ladder which the Empire
Upreared to scale his walls? Hast heard that he
Shelters the brave — the flaunting rich man strips —
Of master makes a slave? That here, above
All dukes, aye, kings, eke emperors — in the eyes
Of Germany to their fierce strife a prey,
He rears upon his tower, in stern defiance,
A signal of appeal to the crushed people,
A banner vast, of Sorrow’s sable hue,
Snapped by the tempest in its whirlwind wrath,
So that kings quiver as the jades at whips?
Hast heard, he touches now his hundredth year —
And that, defying fate, in face of heaven,
On his invincible peak, no force of war
Uprooting other holds — nor powerful Cæsar —

Nor Rome — nor age, that bows the pride of man —
Nor aught on earth — hath vanquished, or subdued,
Or bent this ancient Titan of the Rhine,
The excommunicated Job?

Democratic Review.

THE SON IN OLD AGE.

(“Ma Regina, cette noble figure.”)

[LES BURGRAVES, Part II.]

Thy noble face, Regina, calls to mind
My poor lost little one, my latest born.
He was a gift from God — a sign of pardon —
That child vouchsafed me in my eightieth year!
I to his little cradle went, and went,
And even while ’twas sleeping, talked to it.
For when one’s very old, one is a child!
Then took it up and placed it on my knees,
And with both hands stroked down its soft, light hair —
Thou wert not born then — and he would stammer
Those pretty little sounds that make one smile!
And though not twelve months old, he had a mind.
He recognized me — nay, knew me right well,
And in my face would laugh — and that child-laugh,
Oh, poor old man! ’twas sunlight to my heart.
I meant him for a soldier, ay, a conqueror,
And named him George. One day — oh, bitter thought!
The child played in the fields. When thou art mother,
Ne’er let thy children out of sight to play!
The gypsies took him from me — oh, for what?
Perhaps to kill him at a witch’s rite.
I weep! — now, after twenty years — I weep
As if ‘twere yesterday. I loved him so!
I used to call him “my own little king!”
I was intoxicated with my joy
When o’er my white beard ran his rosy hands,
Thrilling me all through.

Foreign Quarterly Review.

THE EMPEROR’S RETURN.

(“Un bouffon manquait à cette fête.”)

[LES BURGRAVES, Part II.]

The EMPEROR FREDERICK BARBAROSSA, believed to be dead, appearing as a beggar among the Rhenish nobility at a castle, suddenly reveals himself.

HATTO. This goodly masque but lacked a fool!
First gypsy; next a beggar; — good! Thy name?

BARBAROSSA. Frederick of Swabia, Emperor of Almain.

ALL. The Red Beard?

BARBAROSSA. Aye, Frederick, by my mountain birthright Prince
O’ th’ Romans, chosen king, crowned emperor,
Heaven’s sword-bearer, monarch of Burgundy
And Arles — the tomb of Karl I dared profane,
But have repented me on bended knees
In penance ‘midst the desert twenty years;
My drink the rain, the rocky herbs my food,
Myself a ghost the shepherds fled before,
And the world named me as among the dead.
But I have heard my country call — come forth,
Lifted the shroud — broken the sepulchre.
This hour is one when dead men needs must rise.
Ye own me? Ye mind me marching through these vales
When golden spur was ringing at my heel?
Now know me what I am, your master, earls!
Brave knights you deem! You say, “The sons we are
Of puissant barons and great noblemen,
Whose honors we prolong.” You do prolong them?
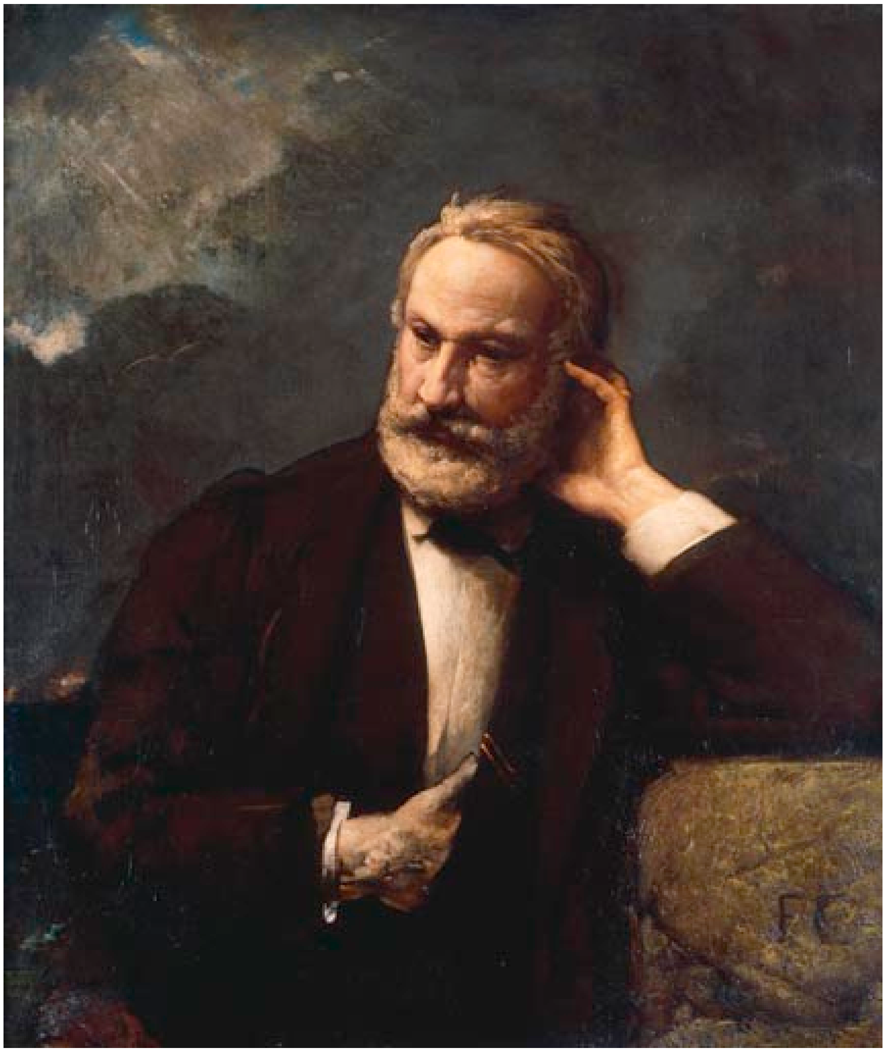
Your sires were soldiers brave, not prowlers base,
Rogues, miscreants, felons, village-ravagers!

They made great wars, they rode like heroes forth,
And, worthy, won broad lands and towers and towns,
So firmly won that thirty years of strife
Made of their followers dukes, their leaders kings!
While you! like jackal and the bird of prey,
Who lurk in copses or ‘mid muddy beds —
Crouching and hushed, with dagger ready drawn,
Hide in the noisome marsh that skirts the way,
Trembling lest passing hounds snuff out your lair!
Listen at eventide on lonesome path
For traveller’s footfall, or the mule-bell’s chime,
Pouncing by hundreds on one helpless man,
To cut him down, then back to your retreats —
You dare to vaunt your sires? I call your sires,
Bravest of brave and greatest ‘mid the great,
A line of warriors! you, a pack of thieves!

Athenaeum.

ODES ET BALLADES

Published in 1827, this collection of poems contains youthful works composed from 1822 to 1827. The theme of the poems ranges from monarchist to Catholic persuasions.



Victor Hugo by François Chifflart, 1868

TABLE DES MATIERES

Préface de 1822

Préface de 1823

Préface de 1824

Préface de 1826

Préface de 1828

Préface de 1853

LIVRE PREMIER

ODE PREMIÈRE
ODE DEUXIÈME
ODE TROISIÈME
ODE QUATRIÈME
ODE CINQUIÈME
ODE SIXIÈME
ODE SEPTIÈME
ODE HUITIÈME
ODE NEUVIÈME
ODE DIXIÈME
ODE ONZIÈME

LIVRE DEUXIÈME

ODE PREMIÈRE
ODES
ODE DEUXIÈME
ODE TROISIÈME
ODE QUATRIÈME
ODE CINQUIÈME
ODE SIXIÈME
ODE SEPTIÈME
ODE HUITIÈME

ODE NEUVIÈME
ODE DIXIÈME

LIVRE TROISIÈME

ODE PREMIÈRE
ODE DEUXIÈME
ODE TROISIÈME
ODE QUATRIÈME
ODE CINQUIÈME
ODE SIXIÈME
ODE SEPTIÈME
ODE HUITIÈME

LIVRE QUATRIÈME

ODE PREMIÈRE
ODE DEUXIÈME
ODE TROISIÈME
ODE QUATRIÈME
ODE CINQUIÈME
ODE SIXIÈME
ODE SEPTIÈME
ODE HUITIÈME
ODE NEUVIÈME
ODE DIXIÈME
ODE ONZIÈME
ODE DOUZIÈME
ODE TREIZIÈME
ODE QUATORZIÈME
ODE QUINZIÈME
ODE SEIZIÈME
ODE DIX-SEPTIÈME
ODE DIX-HUITIÈME

LIVRE CINQUIÈME

ODE PREMIÈRE
ODE DEUXIÈME
ODE TROISIÈME

ODE QUATRIÈME
ODE CINQUIÈME
ODE SIXIÈME
ODE SEPTIÈME
ODE HUITIÈME
ODE NEUVIÈME
ODE DIXIÈME
ODE ONZIÈME
ODE DOUZIÈME
ODE TREIZIÈME
ODE QUATORZIÈME
ODE QUINZIÈME
ODE SEIZIÈME
ODE DIX-SEPTIÈME
ODE DIX-HUITIÈME
ODE DIX-NEUVIÈME
ODE VINGTIÈME
ODE VINGT ET UNIÈME
ODE VINGT-DEUXIÈME
ODE VINGT-TROISIÈME
ODE VINGT-QUATRIÈME
ODE VINGT-CINQUIÈME

BALLADES

BALLADE PREMIÈRE
BALLADE DEUXIÈME
BALLADE TROISIÈME
BALLADE QUATRIÈME
BALLADE CINQUIÈME
BALLADE SIXIÈME
BALLADE SEPTIÈME
BALLADE HUITIÈME
BALLADE NEUVIÈME
BALLADE DIXIÈME
BALLADE ONZIÈME
BALLADE DOUZIÈME
BALLADE TREIZIÈME

BALLADE QUATORZIÈME
BALLADE QUINZIÈME

Préface de 1822

Il y a deux intentions dans la publication de ce livre, l’intention littéraire et l’intention politique; mais, dans la pensée de l’auteur, la dernière est la conséquence de la première, car l’histoire des hommes ne présente de poésie que jugée du haut des idées monarchiques et des croyances religieuses. On pourra voir dans l’arrangement de ces Odes une division qui, néanmoins, n’est pas méthodiquement tracée. Il a semblé à l’auteur que les émotions d’une âme n’étaient pas moins fécondes pour la poésie que les révolutions d’un empire. Au reste, le domaine de la poésie est illimité. Sous le monde réel, il existe un monde idéal, qui se montre resplendissant à l’œil de ceux que des méditations graves ont accoutumés à voir dans les choses plus que les choses. Les beaux ouvrages de poésie en tout genre, soit en vers, soit en prose, qui ont honoré notre siècle, ont révélé cette vérité, à peine soupçonnée auparavant, que la poésie n’est pas dans la forme des idées, mais dans les idées elles-mêmes. La poésie, c’est tout ce qu’il y a d’intime dans tout.

Les changements survenus dans les évènements rendent nécessaire de rappeler que les Odes II, VI, VII, VIII et XV de ce recueil ont été publiées successivement depuis l’année 1819.

Préface de 1823

Il est permis peut-être aujourd’hui à l’auteur d’ajouter à ce peu de lignes quelques autres observations sur le but qu’il s’est proposé en composant ces Odes. Convaincu que tout écrivain, dans quelque sphère que s’exerce son esprit, doit avoir pour objet principal d’être utile, et espérant qu’une intention honorable lui ferait pardonner la témérité de ses essais, il a tenté de solenniser quelques-uns de ceux des principaux souvenirs de notre époque qui peuvent être des leçons pour les sociétés futures. Il a adopté, pour consacrer ces évènements, la forme de l’Ode, parce que c’était sous cette forme que les inspirations des premières poëtes apparaissaient jadis aux premiers peuples. Cependant l’Ode française, généralement accusée de froideur et de monotonie, paraissait peu propre à retracer ce que les trente dernières années de notre histoire présentent de touchant et de terrible, de sombre et d’éclatant, de monstrueux et de merveilleux. L’auteur de ce recueil, en réfléchissant sur cet obstacle, a cru découvrir que cette froideur n’était point dans l’essence de l’Ode, mais seulement dans la forme que lui ont jusqu’ici donnée les poëtes lyriques. Il lui a semblé que la cause de cette monotonie était dans l’abus des apostrophes, des exclamations, des prosopopées et autres figures véhémentes que l’on prodiguait dans l’Ode; moyens de chaleur qui glacent lorsqu’ils sont trop multipliés, et étourdissent au lieu d’émouvoir. Il a donc pensé que si l’on plaçait le mouvement de l’Ode dans les idées plutôt que dans les mots, si de plus on en asseyait la composition sur une idée fondamentale quelconque qui fût appropriée au sujet, et dont le développement s’appuyât dans toutes ses parties sur le développement de l’évènement qu’elle raconterait, en substituant aux couleurs usées et fausses de la mythologie païenne les couleurs neuves et vraies de la théogonie chrétienne, on pourrait jeter dans l’Ode quelque chose de l’intérêt du drame, et lui faire parler en outre ce langage austère, consolant et religieux, dont a besoin une vieille société qui sort, encore toute chancelante, des saturnales de l’athéisme et de l’anarchie. Voilà ce que l’auteur de ce livre a tenté, mais sans se flatter du succès; voilà ce qu’il ne pouvait dire à la première édition de son recueil, de peur que l’exposé de ses doctrines ne parût la défense de ses ouvrages. Il peut, aujourd’hui que ses Odes ont subi l’épreuve hasardeuse de la publication, livrer au lecteur la pensée qui les a inspirées, et qu’il a eu la satisfaction de voir déjà, sinon approuvée, du moins comprise en partie. Au reste, ce qu’il désire avant tout, c’est qu’on ne lui croie pas la prétention de frayer une route ou de créer un genre. La plupart des idées qu’il vient d’énoncer s’appliquent principalement à la première partie de ce recueil; mais le lecteur pourra, sans que nous nous étendions davantage, remarquer dans le reste le même but littéraire et un semblable système de composition. Nous arrêterons ici ces observations préliminaires qui exigeraient un volume de développements, et auxquelles on ne fera peut-être pas attention; mais il faut toujours parler comme si l’on devait être entendu, écrire comme si l’on devait être lu, et penser comme si l’on devait être médité.

La première édition de ce recueil d’odes était suivie de trois poëmes de différents genres qui n’entraient pas dans le but de cette publication et que l’on a cru devoir supprimer. Cette seconde édition est augmentée de deux odes nouvelles, “Louis XVII” et “Jéhovah”.

Préface de 1824

Voici de nouvelles preuves pour ou contre le système de composition lyrique indiqué ailleurs par l'auteur de ces Odes. Ce n'est pas sans une défiance extrême qu'il les présente à l'examen des gens de goût; car, s'il croit à des théories nées d'études consciencieuses et de méditations assidues, d'un autre côté, il croît fort peu à son talent. Il prie donc les hommes éclairés de vouloir bien ne pas étendre jusqu'à ses principes littéraires l'arrêt qu'ils seront sans doute fondés à prononcer contre ses essais poétiques. Aristote n'est-il pas innocent des tragédies de l'abbé d'Aubignac?

Cependant, malgré son obscurité, il a déjà eu la douleur de voir ses principes littéraires, qu'il croyait irréprochables, calomniés ou du moins mal interprétés. C'est ce qui détermine aujourd'hui à fortifier cette publication nouvelle d'une déclaration simple et loyale, laquelle le mette à l'abri de tout soupçon d'hérésie dans la querelle qui divise aujourd'hui le public lettré. Il y a maintenant deux partis dans la littérature comme dans l'état; et la guerre poétique ne paraît pas devoir être moins acharnée que la guerre sociale n'est furieuse. Les deux camps semblent plus impatients de combattre que de traiter. Ils s'obstinent à ne vouloir point parler la même langue; ils n'ont d'autre langage que le mot d'ordre à l'intérieur et le cri de guerre à l'extérieur: ce n'est pas le moyen de s'entendre.

Quelques voix importantes néanmoins se sont élevées, depuis quelque temps, parmi les clameurs des deux armées. Des conciliateurs se sont présentés avec de sages paroles entre les deux fronts d'attaque. Ils seront peut-être les premiers immolés, mais n'importe! C'est dans leurs rangs que l'auteur de ce livre veut être placé, dût-il y être confondu. Il discutera sinon avec la même autorité, du moins avec la même bonne foi. Ce n'est pas qu'il ne s'attende aux imputations les plus étranges, aux accusations les plus singulières. Dans le trouble où sont les esprits, le danger de parler est plus grand encore que celui de se taire; mais, quand il s'agit d'éclairer et d'être éclairé, il faut regarder où est le devoir, et non où est le péril; il se résigne donc. Il agitera, sans hésitation, les questions les plus délicates, et, comme le petit enfant thébain, il osera secouer la peau du lion.

Et d'abord, pour donner quelques dignité à cette discussion impartiale, dans laquelle il cherche la lumière bien plus qu'il ne l'apporte, il répudie tous ces termes de convention que les partis se rejettent réciproquement comme des ballons vides, signes sans signification, expressions sans expression, mots vagues que chacun définit au besoin de ses haines ou de ses préjugés, et qui ne servent de raisons qu'à ceux qui n'en ont pas. Pour lui, il ignore profondément ce que c'est que le "genre classique" et que le "genre romantique". Selon une femme de génie, qui, la première, a prononcé le mot de "littérature romantique" en France, "cette division se rapporte aux deux grandes ères du monde, celle qui a précédé l'établissement du christianisme et celle qui l'a suivi." D'après le sens littéral de cette explication, il semble que le "Paradis perdu" serait un poème "classique" et la "Henriade" une œuvre "romantique". Il ne paraît pas rigoureusement démontré que les deux mots importés par Mme de Staël soient aujourd'hui compris de cette façon.

En littérature, comme en toute chose, il n'y a que le bon et le mauvais, le beau et le difforme, le vrai et le faux. Or, sans établir ici de comparaisons qui exigeraient des restrictions et des développements, le "beau" dans Shakespeare est tout aussi classique (si "classique" signifie digne d'être étudié) que le "beau" dans Racine; et le "faux" dans Voltaire est tout aussi romantique (si "romantique" veut dire mauvais) que le "faux" dans Calderon. Ce sont là de ces vérités naïves qui ressemblent plus encore à des pléonasmes qu'à des axiomes; mais où n'est-on pas obligé de descendre pour convaincre l'entêtement et pour déconcerter la mauvaise foi?

On objectera peut-être ici que les deux mots de guerre ont depuis quelque temps changé encore d'acception, et que certains critiques sont convenus d'honorer désormais du nom de "classique" toute production de l'esprit antérieure à notre époque, tandis que la qualification de "romantique" serait spécialement restreinte à cette littérature qui grandit et se développe avec le dix-neuvième siècle. Avant d'examiner en quoi cette littérature est propre à notre siècle, on demande en quoi elle peut avoir mérité ou encouru une désignation exceptionnelle. Il est reconnu que chaque littérature s'empreint plus ou moins profondément du ciel, des mœurs et de l'histoire du peuple dont elle est l'expression. Il y a donc autant de littératures diverses qu'il y a de société différentes. David, Homère, Virgile, Le Tasse, Milton et Corneille, ces hommes dont chacun représente une poésie et une nation, n'ont de commun entre eux que le génie. Chacun d'eux a exprimé et a fécondé la pensée publique dans son pays et dans son temps. Chacun d'eux a créé pour sa sphère sociale un monde d’idées et de sentiments approprié au mouvement et à l’étendue de cette sphère. Pourquoi donc envelopper d’une désignation vague et collective ces créations, qui, pour être toutes animées de la même âme, la vérité, n’en sont pas moins dissemblables et souvent contraires dans leurs formes, dans leurs éléments et dans leurs natures? pourquoi, en même temps, cette contradiction bizarre de décerner à une autre littérature, expression imparfaite encore d’une époque encore incomplète, l’honneur ou l’outrage d’une qualification également vague, mais exclusive, qui la sépare des littératures qui l’ont précédée? Comme si elle ne pouvait être pesée que dans l’autre plateau de la balance! comme si elle ne devait être inscrite que sur le revers du livre des fastes littéraires! D’où lui vient ce nom de romantique? Est-ce que vous lui avez découvert quelque rapport bien évident et bien intime avec la langue “romance” ou “romane”? Alors expliquez-vous; examinons la valeur de cette allégation; prouvez d’abord qu’elle est fondée; il vous restera ensuite à démontrer qu’elle n’est pas insignifiante.

Mais on se garde fort aujourd’hui d’entamer de ce côté une discussion qui pourrait n’enfanter que le “ridiculus mus”; on veut laisser à ce mot de “romantique” un certain vague fantastique et indéfinissable qui en redouble l’horreur. Aussi tous les anathèmes lancés contre d’illustres écrivains et poëtes contemporains peuvent-ils se réduire à cette argumentation: “ – Nous condamnons la littérature du dix-neuvième siècle, parce qu’elle est “romantique… - Et pourquoi est-elle “romantique”? - Parce qu’elle est la littérature du dix-neuvième siècle.” – On ose affirmer ici, après un mûr examen, que l’évidence d’un tel raisonnement ne paraît pas absolument incontestable.

Abandonnons enfin cette question de mots, qui ne peut suffire qu’aux esprits superficiels dont elle est le risible labeur. Laissons en paix la procession des rhéteurs et des pédagogues apporter gravement de l’eau claire au tonneau vide. Souhaitons longue haleine à tous ces pauvres Sisyphes essoufflés, qui vont roulant et roulant sans cesse leur pierre au haut d’une butte;

Palus inamabilis undâ
Alligat, et novies Styx interfusa coercet.

Passons, et abordons la question de choses, car la frivole querelle des “romantiques” et des “classiques” n’est que la parodie d’une importante discussion qui occupe aujourd’hui les esprits judicieux et les âmes méditatives. Quittons donc la “Batrachomyomachie” pour l’”Iliade”. Ici, du moins les adversaires peuvent espérer de s’entendre, parce qu’ils en sont dignes. Il y a une discordance absolue entre les rats et les grenouilles, tandis qu’un intime rapport de noblesse et de grandeur existe entre Achille et Hector.

Il faut en convenir, un mouvement vaste et profond travaille intérieurement la littérature de ce siècle. Quelques hommes distingués s’en étonnent, et il n’y a précisément dans tout cela d’étonnant que leur surprise. En effet, si, après une révolution politique qui a frappé la société dans toutes ses sommités et dans toutes ses racines, qui a touché à toutes les gloires et à toutes les infamies, qui a tout désuni et tout mêlé, au point d’avoir dressé l’échafaud à l’abri de la tente, et mis la hache sous la garde du glaive; après une commotion effrayante qui n’a rien laissé dans le cœur des hommes qu’elle n’ait remué, rien dans l’ordre des choses qu’elle n’ait déplacé; si, disons-nous, après un si prodigieux évènement, nul changement n’apparaissait dans l’esprit et dans le caractère d’un peuple, n’est-ce pas alors qu’il faudrait s’étonner, et d’un étonnement sans bornes? – Ici se présente une objection spécieuse et déjà développée avec une conviction respectable par des hommes de talent et d’autorité. C’est précisément, disent-ils, parce que cette “révolution littéraire” est le résultat de notre “révolution politique” que nous en déplorons le triomphe, que nous en condamnons les œuvres. – Cette conséquence ne paraît pas juste. La littérature actuelle peut être en partie le “résultat” de la révolution, sans en être l’ “expression”. La société, telle que l’avait faite la révolution, a eu sa littérature, hideuse et inepte comme elle. Cette littérature et cette société sont mortes ensemble et ne revivront plus. L’ordre renaît de toutes parts dans les institutions; il renaît également dans les lettres. La religion consacre la liberté, nous avons des citoyens. La foi épure l’imagination, nous avons des poëtes. La vérité revient partout, dans les mœurs, dans les lois, dans les arts. La littérature nouvelle est vraie. Et qu’importe qu’elle soit le résultat de la révolution? La moisson est-elle moins belle, parce qu’elle a mûri sur le volcan? Quel rapport trouvez-vous entre les laves qui ont consumé votre maison et l’épi de blé qui vous nourrit?

Les plus grands poëtes du monde sont venus après de grandes calamités publiques. Sans parler des chantres sacrés, toujours inspirés par des malheurs passés ou futurs, nous voyons Homère apparaître après la chute de Troie et les catastrophes de l’Argolide; Virgile, après le triumvirat. Jeté au milieu des discordes des Guelfes et des Gibelins, Dante avait été proscrit avant d’être poëte. Milton rêvait Satan chez Cromwell. Le meurtre de Henri IV précéda Corneille, Racine, Molière, Boileau, avaient assisté aux orages de la Fronde. Après la révolution française, Chateaubriand s’élève, et la proportion est gardée.

Et ne nous étonnons point de cette liaison remarquable entre les grandes époques politiques et les belles époques littéraires. La marche sombre et imposante des évènements par lesquels le pouvoir d’en haut se manifeste aux pouvoirs d’ici-bas, l’unité éternelle de leur cause, l’accord solennel de leurs résultats, ont quelque chose qui frappe profondément la pensée. Ce qu’il y a de sublime et d’immortel dans l’homme se réveille comme en sursaut, au bruit de toutes ces voix merveilleuses qui avertissent de Dieu. L’esprit des peuples, en un religieux silence, entend longtemps retentir de catastrophe en catastrophe la parole mystérieuse qui témoigne dans les ténèbres:

Admonet, et magna testatur voce per umbras.

Quelques âmes choisies recueillent cette parole et s’en fortifient. Quand elle a cessé de tonner dans les évènements, elles la font éclater dans leurs inspirations, et c’est ainsi que les enseignements célestes se continuent par des chants. Telle est la mission du génie; ses élus sont “ces sentinelles laissées par le Seigneur sur les tours de Jérusalem, et qui ne se tairont ni jour, ni nuit.”

La littérature présente, telle que l’on créée les Chateaubriand, les Staël, les La Mennais, n’appartient donc en rien à la révolution. De même que les écrits sophistiques et déréglés des Voltaire, des Diderot et des Helvétius ont été d’avance l’expression des innovations sociales écloses dans la décrépitude du dernier siècle, la littérature actuelle, que l’on attaque avec tant d’instinct d’un côté, et si peu de sagacité de l’autre, est l’expression anticipée de la société religieuse et monarchique qui sortira sans doute du milieu de tant d’anciens débris, de tant de ruines récentes. Il faut le dire et le redire, ce n’est pas un besoin de nouveauté qui tourmente les esprits, c’est un besoin de vérité; et il est immense.

Ce besoin de vérité, la plupart des écrivains supérieurs de l’époque tendent à le satisfaire. Le goût, qui n’est autre chose que l’”autorité” en littérature, leur a enseigné que leurs ouvrages, vrais pour le fond, devaient être également vrais dans la forme; sous ce rapport, ils ont fait faire un pas à la poésie. Les écrivains des autres peuples et des autres temps, même les admirables poëtes du grand siècle, ont trop souvent oublié, dans l’exécution, le principe de vérité dont ils vivifiaient leur composition. On rencontre fréquemment dans leurs plus beaux passages des détails empruntés à des mœurs, à des religions ou à des époques trop étrangères au sujet. Ainsi l’”horloge” qui, au grand amusement de Voltaire, désigne au Brutus de Shakespeare l’heure où il doit frapper César, cette “horloge”, qui existait, comme on voit, bien avant qu’il y eût des horlogers, se retrouve, au milieu d’une brillante description des dieux mythologiques, placée par Boileau “à la main du TEMPS”. Le “canon”, dont Calderon arme les soldats d’Héraclius et Milton les archanges des ténèbres, est tiré, dans l’”Ode sur Namur” par “dix mille vaillans ALCIDES” qui en font “pétiller les remparts”. Et certes, puisque les “Alcides” du législateur du Parnasse tirent du canon, le “Satan” de Milton peut, à toute force, considérer cet anachronisme comme de “bonne guerre”. Si dans un siècle littéraire encore barbare, le père Lemoyne, auteur d’un poëme de “Saint Louis”, fait sonner “les vespres siciliennes” par les “cors des noires Euménides”, un âge éclairé nous montre J.-B. Rousseau envoyant (dans son “Ode au comte de Luc”, dont le mouvement lyrique est fort remarquable) un “PROPHETE fidèle jusque chez les DIEUX interroger le Sort”; et en trouvant fort ridicules les “Néréides” dont Camoëns obsède les compagnons de Gama, on désirerait, dans le célèbre “Passage du Rhin” de Boileau, voir autre chose que des “naïades craintives” fuir devant Louis, par la grâce de Dieu, roi de France et de Navarre, accompagné de ses maréchaux-des-camps-et-armées.

Des citations de ce genre se prolongeraient à l’infini, mais il est inutile de les multiplier. Se de pareilles fautes de vérité se présentent fréquemment dans nos meilleurs auteurs, il faut se garder de leur en faire un crime. Ils auraient pu sans doute se borner à étudier les formes pures des divinités grecques, sans leur emprunter leurs attributs païens. Lorsqu’à Rome on voulut convertir en “Saint Pierre” un “Jupiter Olympien”, on commença du moins par ôter au maître du tonnerre l’aigle qu’il foulait sous ses pieds. Mais quand on considère les immenses services rendus à la langue et aux lettres par nos premiers grands poëtes, on s’humilie devant leur génie, et on ne se sent pas la force de leur reprocher un défaut de goût. Certainement ce défaut a été bien funeste, puisqu’il a introduit en France je ne sais quel genre faux, qu’on a fort bien nommé le “genre scholastique”, genre qui est au “classique” ce que la superstition et le fanatisme sont à la religion, et qui ne contre-balance aujourd’hui le triomphe de la vraie poésie que par l’autorité respectable des illustres maîtres chez lesquels il trouve malheureusement des modèles. On a rassemblé ci-dessus quelques exemples pareils entre eux de ce faux goût, empruntés à la fois aux écrivains les plus opposés, à ceux que les scholastiques appellent “classiques” et à ceux qu’ils qualifient de “romantiques”; on espère par là faire voir que si Calderon a pu pécher par excès d’ignorance, Boileau a pu faillir aussi par excès de science; et que si, lorsqu’on étudie les écrits de ce dernier, on doit suivre religieusement les règles imposées au langage par le critique, il faut en même temps se garder scrupuleusement d’adopter les fausses couleurs employées quelquefois par le poëte.

Et remarquons, en passant, que, si la littérature du grand siècle de Louis le Grand eût invoqué le christianisme au lieu d’adorer les dieux païens, si ses poëtes eussent été ce qu’étaient ceux des temps primitifs, des prêtres chantant les grandes choses de leur religion et de leur patrie, le triomphe des doctrines sophistiques du dernier siècle eût été beaucoup plus difficile, peut-être même impossible. Aux premières attaques des novateurs, la religion et la morale se fussent réfugiées dans le sanctuaire des lettres, sous la garde de tant de grands hommes. Le goût national, accoutumé à ne point séparer les idées de religion et de poésie, eût répudié tout essai de poésie irréligieuse, et flétri cette monstruosité non moins comme un sacrilège littéraire que comme un sacrilège social. Qui peut calculer ce qui fût arrivé de la “philosophie” si la cause de Dieu, défendue en vain par la vertu, eût été aussi plaidée par le génie? Mais la France n’eut pas ce bonheur; ses poëtes nationaux étaient presque tous des poëtes païens; et notre littérature était plutôt l’expression d’une société idolâtre et démocratique que d’une société monarchique et chrétienne. Aussi les philosophes parvinrent-ils, en moins d’un siècle, à chasser des cœurs une religion qui n’était pas dans les esprits.

C’est surtout à réparer le mal fait par les sophistes que doit s’attacher aujourd’hui le poëte. Il doit marcher devant les peuples comme une lumière et leur montrer le chemin. Il doit les ramener à tous les grands principes d’ordre, de morale et d’honneur; et, pour que sa puissance leur soit douce, il faut que toutes les fibres du cœur humain vibrent sous ses doigts comme les cordes d’une lyre. Il ne sera jamais l’écho d’aucune parole, si ce n’est de celle de Dieu. Il se rappellera toujours ce que ses prédécesseurs ont trop oublié, que lui aussi il a une religion et une patrie. Ses chants célébreront sans cesse les gloires et les infortunes de son pays, les austérités et les ravissements de son culte, afin que ses aïeux et ses contemporains recueillent quelque chose de son génie et de son âme, et que, dans la postérité, les autres peuples ne disent pas de lui: “Celui-là chantait dans une terre barbare.”

In quâ scribebat, barbara terra fuit!

Février 1824

Préface de 1826

Pour la première fois, l’auteur de ce recueil de compositions lyriques, dont les “Odes et Ballades” forment le troisième volume, a cru devoir séparer les genres de ces compositions par une division marquée.

Il continue à comprendre sous le titre d’”Odes” toute inspiration purement religieuse, tout étude purement antique, toute traduction d’un évènement contemporain ou d’une impression personnelle. Les pièces qu’il intitule “Ballades” ont un caractère différent; ce sont des esquisses d’un genre capricieux: tableaux, rêves, scènes, récits, légendes superstitieuses, traditions populaires. L’auteur, en les composant, a essayé de donner quelque idée de ce que pouvaient être les poëmes des premiers troubadours du moyen-âge, de ces rapsodes chrétiens qui n’avaient au monde que leur épée et leur guitare, et s’en allaient de château en château, payant l’hospitalité avec des chants.

S’il n’y avait beaucoup de trop de pompe dans ces expressions, l’auteur dirait, pour compléter son idée, qu’il a mis plus de son âme dans les “Odes”, plus de son imagination dans les “Ballades”.

Au reste, il n’attache pas à ces classifications plus d’importance qu’elles n’en méritent. Beaucoup de personnes, dont l’opinion est grave, ont dit que ses “Odes” n’étaient pas des odes; soit. Beaucoup d’autres diront sans doute, avec non moins de raison, que ses “Ballades” ne sont pas des ballades; passe encore. Qu’on leur donne tel autre titre qu’on voudra; l’auteur y souscrit d’avance.

A cette occasion, mais en laissant absolument de côté ses propres ouvrages, si imparfaits et si incomplets, il hasardera quelques réflexions.

On entend tous les jours, à propos de productions littéraires, parler de le “dignité” de tel guerre, des “convenances” de tel autre, des “limites” de celui-ci, des “latitudes” de celui-là; la “tragédie” interdit ce que le “roman” permet; la “chanson” tolère ce que l’”ode” défend, etc. l’auteur de ce livre a le malheur de ne rien comprendre à tout cela; il y cherche des choses et n’y voit que des mots; il lui semble que ce qui est réellement beau et vrai est beau et vrai partout; que ce qui est dramatique dans un roman sera dramatique sur la scène; que ce qui est lyrique dans un couplet sera lyrique dans une strophe; qu’enfin et toujours la seule distinction véritable dans les œuvres de l’esprit est celle du bon et du mauvais. La pensée est une terre vierge et féconde dont les productions veulent croître librement, et, pour ainsi dire, au hasard, sans se classer, sans s’aligner en plates-bandes comme les bouquets dans un jardin classique de Le Nôtre, ou comme les fleurs du langage dans un traité de rhétorique.

Il ne faut pas croire pourtant que cette liberté doive produire le désordre; bien au contraire. Développons notre idée. Comparez un moment au jardin royal de Versailles, bien nivelé, bien taillé, bien nettoyé, bien ratissé, bien sablé, tout plein de petites cascades, de petits bassins, de petits bosquets, de tritons de bronze folâtrant en cérémonie sur des océans pompés à grands frais dans la Seine, de faunes de marbre courtisant les dryades allégoriquement renfermées dans une multitude d’ifs coniques, de lauriers cylindriques, d’orangers sphériques, de myrtes elliptiques, et d’autres arbres dont la forme naturelle, trop triviale sans doute, a été gracieusement corrigée par la serpette du jardinier; comparez ce jardin si vanté à une forêt primitive du Nouveau-Monde, avec ses arbres géants, ses hautes herbes, sa végétation profonde, ses mille oiseaux de mille couleurs, ses larges avenues où l’ombre et la lumière ne se jouent que sur de la verdure, ses sauvages harmonies, ses grands fleuves qui charrient des îles de fleurs, ses immenses cataractes qui balancent des arcs-en-ciel! Nous ne dirons pas: Où est la magnificence? où est la grandeur? où est la beauté? mais simplement: Où est l’ordre? où est le désordre? Là, des eaux captives ou détournées de leurs cours, ne jaillissant que pour croupir; des dieux pétrifiés; des arbres transplantés de leur sol natal, arrachés de leur climat, privés même de leur forme, de leurs fruits, et forcés de subir les grotesques caprices de la serpe et du cordeau; partout enfin l’ordre naturel contrarié, interverti, bouleversé, détruit. Ici, au contraire, tout obéit à une loi invariable; un Dieu semble vivre en tout. Les gouttes d’eau suivent leur pente et font des fleuves, qui feront des mers; les semences choisissent leur terrain et produisent une forêt. Chaque plante, chaque arbuste, chaque arbre naît dans sa saison, croît en son lieu, produit son fruit, meurt à son temps. La ronce même y est belle. Nous le demandons encore: Où est l’ordre?

Choisissez donc du chef-d’œuvre du jardinage ou de l’œuvre de la nature, de ce qui est beau de convention ou de ce qui est beau sans les règles, d’une littérature artificielle ou d’une poésie originale!

On nous objectera que la forêt vierge cache dans ses magnifiques solitudes mille animaux dangereux, et que les bassins marécageux du jardin français recèlent tout au plus quelques bêtes insipides. C’est un malheur sans doute; mais, à tout prendre, nous aimons mieux un crocodile qu'un crapaud; nous préférons une barbarie de Shakespeare à une ineptie de Campistron.

Ce qu'il est très important de fixer, c'est qu'en littérature comme en politique l'ordre se concilie merveilleusement avec la liberté; il en est même le résultat. Au reste, il faut bien se garder de confondre l'ordre avec la régularité. La régularité ne s'attache qu'à la forme extérieure; l'ordre résulte du fond même des choses, de la disposition intelligente des éléments intimes d'un sujet. La régularité est une combinaison matérielle et purement humaine; l'ordre est pour ainsi dire divin. Ces deux qualités si diverses dans leur essence marchent fréquemment l'une sans l'autre. Une cathédrale gothique présente un ordre admirable dans sa naïve irrégularité; nos édifices français modernes, auxquels on a si gauchement appliqué l'architecture grecque ou romaine, n'offrent qu'un désordre régulier. Un homme ordinaire pourra toujours faire un ouvrage régulier; il n'y a que les grands esprits qui sachent ordonner une composition. Le créateur, qui voit de haut, ordonne; l'imitateur, qui regarde de près, régularise; le premier procède selon la loi de sa nature, le dernier suivant les règles de son école. L'art est une inspiration pour l'un; il n'est qu'une science pour l'autre. En deux mots, et nous ne nous opposons pas à ce qu'on juge d'après cette observation les deux littératures dites "classique" et "romantique", la régularité est le goût de la médiocrité, l'ordre est le goût du génie.

Il est bien entendu que la liberté ne doit jamais être l'anarchie; que l'originalité ne peut en aucun cas servir de prétexte à l'incorrection. Dans une œuvre littéraire, l'exécution doit être d'autant plus irréprochable que la conception est plus hardie. Si vous voulez avoir raison autrement que les autres, vous devez avoir dix fois raison. Plus on dédaigne la rhétorique, plus il sied de respecter la grammaire. On ne doit détrôner Aristote que pour faire régner Vaugelas, et il faut aimer l'"Art poétique" de Boileau, sinon pour les préceptes, du moins pour le style. Un écrivain qui a quelque souci de la postérité cherchera sans cesse à purifier sa diction, sans effacer toutefois le caractère particulier par lequel son expression révèle l'individualité de son esprit. Le néologisme n'est d'ailleurs qu'une triste ressource pour l'impuissance. Des fautes de langue ne rendront jamais une pensée, et le style est comme le cristal: sa pureté fait son éclat.

L'auteur de ce recueil développera peut-être ailleurs tout ce qui n'est ici qu'indiqué. Qu'il lui soit permis de déclarer, avant de terminer, que l'esprit d’imitation, recommandé par d’autres comme le salut des écoles, lui a toujours paru le fléau de l’art, et il ne condamnerait pas moins l’imitation qui s’attache aux écrivains dits “romantiques” que celle dont on poursuit les auteurs dits “classiques”. Celui qui imite un poëte “romantique” devient nécessairement un “classique”, puisqu’il imite. Que vous soyez l’écho de Racine ou le reflet de Shakespeare, vous n’êtes toujours qu’un écho et qu’un reflet. Quand vous viendriez à bout de calquer exactement un homme de génie, il vous manquera toujours son originalité, c’est-à-dire son génie. Admirons les grands maîtres, ne les imitons pas. Faisons autrement. Si nous réussissons, tant mieux; si nous échouons, qu’importe? Il existe certaines eaux qui, si vous y plongez une fleur, un fruit, un oiseau, ne vous les rendent, au bout de quelque temps, que revêtus d’une épaisse croûte de pierre, sous laquelle on devine encore, il est vrai, leur forme primitive, mais le parfum, la saveur, la vie, ont disparu. Les pédantesques enseignements, les préjugés scholastiques, la contagion de la routine, la manie d’imitation, produisent le même effet. Si vous y ensevelissez vos facultés natives, votre imagination, votre pensée, elles n’en sortiront pas. Ce que vous en retirerez conservera bien peut-être quelque apparence d’esprit, de talent, de génie, mais ce sera pétrifié.

A entendre des écrivains qui se proclament “classiques”, celui-là s’écarte de la route du vrai et du beau qui ne suit pas servilement les vestiges que d’autres y ont imprimés avant lui. Erreur! ces écrivains confondent la routine avec l’art; ils prennent l’ornière pour le chemin.

Le poëte ne doit avoir qu’un modèle, la nature; qu’un guide, la vérité. Il ne doit pas écrire avec ce qui a été écrit, mais avec son âme et avec son cœur. De tous les livres qui circulent entre les mains des hommes, deux seuls doivent être étudiés par lui, Homère et la Bible. C’est que ces deux libres vénérables, les premiers de tous par leur date et par leur valeur, presque aussi anciens que le monde, sont eux-mêmes deux mondes pour la pensée. On y retrouve en quelque sorte la création toute entière considérée sous son double aspect, dans Homère par le génie de l’homme, dans la Bible par l’esprit de Dieu.

Août 1826

Préface de 1828

Ce recueil n'avait été jusqu'ici publié que sous le format in-18, en trois volumes. Pour fondre ces trois volumes en deux tomes dans la présente réimpression, divers changements dans la disposition des matières ont été nécessaires; on a tâché que ces changements fussent des améliorations.

Chacun des trois volumes des précédents éditions représentait la manière de l'auteur à trois moments, et pour ainsi dire à trois âges différents; car, sa méthode consistant à amender son esprit plutôt qu'à retravailler ses livres, et, comme il l'a dit ailleurs, "à corriger un ouvrage dans un autre ouvrage", on conçoit que chacun des écrits qu'il publie peut, et c'est là sans doute leur seul mérite, offrir une physionomie particulière à ceux qui ont du goût pour certaines études de langue et de style, et qui aiment à relever, dans les œuvres d'un écrivain, les dates de sa pensée.

Il était donc peut-être nécessaire d'observer quelque ordre dans la fusion des trois volumes in-18 en deux in-8°.

Une distinction toute naturelle se présentait d'abord, celle des poëmes qui se rattachent par un côté quelconque à l'histoire de nos jours, et des poëmes qui y sont étrangers. Cette double division répond à chacun des deux volumes de la présente édition. Ainsi le premier volume contient toutes les Odes relatives à des évènements ou à des personnages contemporains; les pièces d'un sujet capricieux composent le second. Des subdivisions ont ensuite semblé utiles. Les Odes historiques, qui constituent le premier volume, et qui offrent sous un côté le développement de la pensée de l'auteur dans un espace de dix années (1818-1828), ont été partagées en trois livres. Chacun de ces livres répond à un des volumes des précédentes éditions, et renferme, dans leur ancien classement, les Odes politiques que ce volume contenait. Ces trois livres sont respectivement l'un à l'autre comme étaient entre eux les trois volumes. Le second corrige le premier; le troisième corrige le second. Ainsi le petit nombre de personnes que ce genre d'études intéresse pourra comparer, et pour la forme et pour le fond, les trois manières de l'auteur à trois époques différentes, rapprochées, et en quelque sorte confrontées dans le même volume. On conviendra peut-être qu'il y a quelque bonne foi, quelque désintéressement à faciliter de cette façon les dissections de la critique.

Le deuxième volume contient le quatrième et le cinquième livre des Odes, l’un consacré aux sujets de fantaisie, l’autre à des traductions d’impressions personnelles. Les Ballades complètent ce volume, qui, de cette manière, est, comme l’autre, divisé en trois sections. Les poëmes sont le plus souvent rangés par ordre de dates.

Pour en finir de ces détails, peut-être inutiles et à coup sûr minutieux, nous ferons observer que les préfaces qui avaient accompagné les trois recueils aux époques de leur publications ont été imprimées, avec celle-ci, également par ordre de dates. On pourra remarquer, dans les idées qui y sont avancées, une progression de liberté qui n’est ni sans signification ni sans enseignement.

Enfin dix pièces nouvelles, sans compter l’”Ode à la colonne de la place Vendôme”, ont été ajoutées à la présente édition.

Il faut tout dire. Les modifications apportées à ce recueil ne se bornent pas peut-être à ces changements matériels. Quelque puérile que paraisse à l’auteur l’habitude de faire “des corrections” érigée en système, il est très loin d’avoir fui, ce qui serait aussi un système non moins fâcheux, les corrections qui lui ont paru importantes; mais il a fallu pour cela qu’elles se présentassent naturellement, invinciblement, comme d’elles-mêmes, et en quelque sorte avec le caractère de l’inspiration. Ainsi, bon nombre de vers se sont trouvés refaits, bon nombre de strophes remaniées, remplacées ou ajoutées. Au reste, tout cela ne valait peut-être pas plus la peine d’être fait que d’être dit.

C’aurait sans doute été plutôt ici le lieu d’agiter quelques-unes des hautes questions de langue, de style, de versification, et particulièrement de rhythme, qu’un recueil de poésie lyrique française au dix-neuvième siècle peut et doit soulever. Mais il est rare que de semblables dissertations ne ressemblent pas plus ou moins à des apologies. L’auteur s’en abstiendra donc ici, en se réservant d’exposer ailleurs les idées qu’il a pu recueillir sur ces matières, et, qu’on lui pardonne la présomption de ces paroles, de dire ce qu’il croit que l’art lui a appris. En attendant, il appelle sur ces questions l’attention de tous les critiques qui comprennent quelque chose au mouvement progressif de la pensée humaine, qui ne cloîtrent pas l’art dans les poétiques et les règles, et qui ne concentrent pas toute la poésie d’une nation dans un genre, dans une école, dans un siècle hermétiquement fermé.

Au reste, ces idées sont de jour en jour mieux comprises. Il est admirable de voir quels pas de géant l’art fait et fait faire. Une forte école s’élève, une génération forte croît dans l’ombre pour elle. Tous les principes que cette époque a posés, pour le monde des intelligences comme pour le monde des affaires, amènent déjà rapidement leurs conséquences. Espérons qu’un jour le dix-neuvième siècle, politique et littéraire, pourra être résumé d’un mot: la liberté dans l’ordre, la liberté dans l’art.

Août 1828

Préface de 1853

L’histoire s’extasie volontiers sur Michel Ney, qui, né tonnelier, devint maréchal de France, et sur Murat, qui, né garçon d’écurie, devint roi. L’obscurité de leur point de départ leur est comptée comme un titre de plus à l’estime, et rehausse l’éclat du point d’arrivée.

De toutes les échelles qui vont de l’ombre à la lumière, la plus méritoire et la plus difficile à gravir, certes, c’est celle-ci: être né aristocrate et royaliste, et devenir démocrate.

Monter d’une échoppe à un palais, c’est rare et beau, si vous voulez; monter de l’erreur à la vérité, c’est plus rare et c’est plus beau. Dans la première de ces deux ascensions, à chaque pas qu’on a fait, on a gagné quelque chose et augmenté son bien-être, sa puissance et sa richesse; dans l’autre ascension, c’est tout le contraire. Dans cette âpre lutte contre les préjugés sucés avec le lait, dans cette lente et rude élévation du faux au vrai, qui fait en quelque sorte de la vie d’un homme et du développement d’une conscience le symbole abrégé du progrès humain, à chaque échelon qu’on a franchi, on a dû payer d’un sacrifice matériel son accroissement moral, abandonner quelque intérêt, dépouiller quelque vanité, renoncer aux biens et aux honneurs du monde, risquer sa fortune, risque son foyer, risquer sa vie. Aussi, ce labeur accompli, est-il permis d’en être fier; et – s’il est vrai que Murat aurait pu montrer avec quelque orgueil son fouet de postillon à côté de son sceptre de roi, et dire: Je suis parti de là! – c’est avec un orgueil plus légitime, certes, et avec une conscience plus satisfaite, qu’on peut montrer ces odes royalistes d’enfant et d’adolescent à côté des poëmes et des livres démocratiques de l’homme fait; cette fierté est permis, nous le pensons, surtout lorsque, l’ascension faite, on a trouvé au sommet de l’échelle de lumière la proscription, et qu’on peut dater cette préface de l’exil.

Jersey. – Juillet 1853

LIVRE PREMIER

1818 - 1822

Vox clamabat in deserto.

ODE PREMIÈRE

LE POETE DANS LES REVOLUTIONS

à M. Alexandre Soumet

Mourir sans vider mon carquois!
Sans percer, sans fouler, sans pétrir dans leur fange
Ces bourreaux barbouilleurs de lois!
ANDRÉ CHÉNIER, Iambes.

“ Le vent chasse loin des campagnes
Le gland tombé des rameaux verts;
Chêne, il le bat sur les montagnes;
Esquif, il le bat sur les mers.
Jeune homme, ainsi le sort nous presse.
Ne joins pas, dans ta folle ivresse,
Les maux du monde à tes malheurs;
Gardons, coupables et victimes,
Nos remords pour nos propres crimes,
Nos pleurs pour nos propres douleurs! “

Quoi! mes chants sont-ils téméraires?
Faut-il donc, en ces jours d’effroi,
Rester sourd aux cris de ses frères!
Ne souffrir jamais que pour soi?
Non, le poète sur la terre
Console, exilé volontaire,
Les tristes humains dans leurs fers;
Parmi les peuples en délire,
Il s’élance, armé de sa lyre,
Comme Orphée au sein des enfers!

“ Orphée aux peines éternelles
Vint un moment ravir les morts;
Toi, sur les têtes criminelles,

Tu chantes l’hymne du remords.
Insensé! quel orgueil t’entraîne?
De quel droit viens-tu dans l’arène
Juger sans avoir combattu?
Censeur échappé de l’enfance,
Laisse vieillir ton innocence,
Avant de croire à ta vertu! “

Quand le crime, Python perfide,
Brave, impuni, le frein des lois,
La Muse devient l’Euménide,
Apollon saisit son carquois!
Je cède au Dieu qui me rassure;
J’ignore à ma vie encor pure
Quels maux le sort veut attacher;
Je suis sans orgueil mon étoile;
L’orage déchire la voile:
La voile sauve le nocher.

“ Les hommes vont aux précipices!
Tes chants ne les sauveront pas.
Avec eux, loin des cieux propices,
Pourquoi donc égarer tes pas?
Peux-tu, dès tes jeunes années,
Sans briser d’autres destinées,
Rompre la chaîne de tes jours?
Epargne ta vie éphémère;
Jeune homme, n’as-tu pas de mère?
Poète, n’as-tu pas d’amours? “

Eh bien! à mes terrestres flammes,
Si je meurs, les cieux vont s’ouvrir.
L’amour chaste agrandit les âmes,
Et qui sait aimer sait mourir.
Le Poète, en des temps de crime,
Fidèle aux justes qu’on opprime,
Célèbre, imite les héros;

Il a, jaloux de leur martyre,
Pour les victimes une lyre,
Une tête pour les bourreaux!

“ On dit que jadis le Poète,
Chantant des jours encor lointains,
Savait à la terre inquiète
Révéler ses futurs destins.
Mais toi, que peux-tu pour le monde?
Tu partages sa nuit profonde;
Le ciel se voile et veut punir;
Les lyres n’ont plus de prophète,
Et la Muse, aveugle et muette,
Ne sait plus rien de l’avenir! “

Le mortel qu’un Dieu même anime
Marche à l’avenir, plein d’ardeur;
C’est en s’élançant dans l’abîme
Qu’il en sonde la profondeur.
Il se prépare au sacrifice;
Il sait que le bonheur du vice
Par l’innocent est expié;
Prophète à son jour mortuaire,
La prison est son sanctuaire,
Et l’échafaud est son trépied!

“ Que n’es-tu né sur les rivages
Des Abbas et des Cosroës,
Aux rayons d’un ciel sans nuages,
Parmi le myrte et l’aloès!
Là, sourd aux maux que tu déplores,
Le poète voit ses aurores
Se lever sans trouble et sans pleurs;
Et la colonne, chère aux sages,
Porte aux vierges ses doux messages
Où l’amour parle avec des fleurs! “

Qu’un autre au céleste martyre
Préfère un repos sans honneur!
La gloire est le but où j’aspire;
On n’y va point par le bonheur.
L’alcyon, quand l’Océan gronde,
Craint que les vents ne troublent l’onde
Où se berce son doux sommeil;
Mais pour l’aiglon, fils des orages,
Ce n’est qu’à travers les nuages
Qu’il prend son vol vers le soleil!

ODE DEUXIÈME

LA VENDÉE

à M. le vicomte de Chateaubriand

Ave, Cæsar, morituri te salutant.

I

“ Qui de nous, en posant une urne cinéraire,
N’a trouvé quelque ami pleurant sur un cercueil?
Autour du froid tombeau d’une épouse ou d’un frère,
Qui de nous n’a mené le deuil? “
— Ainsi sur les malheurs de la France éplorée
Gémissait la Muse sacrée
Qui nous montra le ciel ouvert,
Dans ces chants où, planant sur Rome et sur Palmyre,
Sublime, elle annonçait les douceurs du martyre
Et l’humble bonheur du désert!

Depuis, à nos tyrans rappelant tous leurs crimes,
Et vouant aux remords ces coeurs sans repentirs,
Elle a dit: “ En ces temps la France eut des victimes;
Mais la Vendée eut des martyrs! “
— Déplorable Vendée, a-t-on séché tes larmes?
Marches-tu, ceinte de tes armes,
Au premier rang de nos guerriers?
Si l’Honneur, si la Foi n’est pas un vain fantôme,
Montre-moi quels palais ont remplacé le chaume
De tes rustiques chevaliers!

Hélas! tu te souviens des jours de ta misère!
Des flots de sang baignaient tes sillons dévastés,
Et le pied des coursiers n’y foulait de poussière
Que la cendre de tes cités.

Ceux-là qui n’avaient pu te vaincre avec l’épée
Semblaient, dans leur rage trompée,
Implorer l’enfer pour appui
Et, roulant sur la plaine en torrents de fumée,
Le vaste embrasement poursuivait ton armée,
Qui ne fuyait que devant lui!

II

La Loire vit alors, sur ses plages désertes,
S’assembler les tribus des vengeurs de nos rois,
Peuple qui ne pleurait, fier de ses nobles pertes,
Que sur le Trône et sur la Croix.
C’étaient quelques vieillards fuyant leurs toits en flammes,
C’étaient des enfants et des femmes,
Suivis d’un reste de héros;
Au milieu d’eux marchait leur Patrie exilée,
Car ils ne laissaient plus qu’une terre peuplée
De cadavres et de bourreaux.

On dit qu’en ce moment, dans un divin délire,
Un vieux prêtre parut parmi ces fiers soldats,
Comme un saint, chargé d’ans, qui parle du martyre
Aux nobles anges des combats;
Tranquille, en proclamant de sinistres présages,
Les souvenirs des anciens âges
S’éveillaient dans son coeur glacé;
Et, racontant le sort qu’ils devaient tous attendre,
La voix de l’avenir semblait se faire entendre
Dans ses discours pleins du passé.

III

“ Au-delà du Jourdain, après quarante années,
Dieu promit une terre aux enfants d’Israël;
Au-delà de ces flots, après quelques journées,
Le Seigneur vous promet le ciel.

Ces bords ne verront plus vos phalanges errantes.
Dieu, sur des plaines dévorantes,
Vous prépare un tombeau lointain;
Votre astre doit s’éteindre, à peine à son aurore;
Mais Samson expirant peut ébranler encore
Les colonnes du Philistin!

“ Vos guerriers périront. Mais, toujours invincibles,
S’ils ne peuvent punir, ils sauront se venger;
Car ils verront encor fuir ces soldats terribles,
Devant qui fuyait l’étranger!
Vous ne mourrez pas tous sous des bras intrépides;
Les uns, sur des nefs homicides,
Seront jetés aux flots mourants;
Ceux-là promèneront des os sans sépulture,
Et cacheront leurs morts sous une terre obscure,
Pour les dérober aux vivants!

“ Et vous, Ô jeune Chef, ravi par la victoire
Aux hasards de Mortagne, aux périls de Saumur,
L’honneur de vous frapper dans un combat sans gloire
Rendra célèbre un bras obscur.
Il ne sera donné qu’à bien peu de nos frères
De revoir, après tant de guerres,
La place où furent leurs foyers;
Alors, ornant son toit de ses armes oisives,
Chacun d’eux attendra que Dieu donne à nos rives
Les lys, qu’il préfère aux lauriers.

“ Vendée, Ô noble terre! Ô ma triste patrie!
Tu dois payer bien cher le retour de tes rois!
Avant que sur nos bords croisse la fleur chérie,
Ton sang l’arrosera deux fois.
Mais aussi, lorsqu’un jour l’Europe réunie
De l’arbre de la tyrannie
Aura brisé les rejetons,
Tous les rois vanteront leurs camps, leur flotte immense,

Et, seul, le Roi Chrétien mettra dans la balance
L’humble glaive des vieux Bretons!

“ Grand Dieu! - Si toutefois, après ces jours d’ivresse,
Blessant le coeur aigri du héros oublié,
Une voix insultante offrait à sa détresse
Les dons ingrats de la pitié;
Si sa mère, et sa veuve, et sa fille, éplorées,
S’arrêtaient, de faim dévorées,
Au seuil d’un favori puissant,
Rappelant à celui qu’implore leur misère,
Qu’elles n’ont plus ce fils, cet époux et ce père
Qui croyait leur léguer son sang;

“ Si, pauvre et délaissé, le citoyen fidèle,
Lorsqu’un traître enrichi se rirait de sa foi,
Entendait au sénat calomnier son zèle
Par celui qui jugea son roi;
Si, pour comble d’affronts, un magistrat injuste,
Déguisant sous un nom auguste
L’abus d’un insolent pouvoir,
Venait, de vils soupçons chargeant sa noble tête,
Lui demander ce fer, sa première conquête, -
Peut-être son dernier espoir;

“ Qu’il se résigne alors. - Par ses crimes prospères
L’impie heureux insulte au fidèle souffrant;
Mais que le juste pense aux forfaits de nos pères,
Et qu’il songe à son Dieu mourant.
Le Seigneur veut parfois le triomphe du vice,
Il veut aussi, dans sa justice
Que l’innocent verse des pleurs;
Souvent, dans ses desseins, Dieu suit d’étranges voies,
Lui qui livre Satan aux infernales joies,
Et Marie aux saintes douleurs! “

IV

Le vieillard s’arrêta. Sans croire à son langage,
Ils quittèrent ces bords, pour n’y plus revenir;
Et tous croyaient couvert des ténèbres de l’âge
L’esprit qui voyait l’avenir! -
Ainsi, faible en soldats, mais fort en renommée,
Ce débris d’une illustre armée
Suivait sa bannière en lambeaux;
Et ces derniers Français, que rien ne put défendre,
Loin de leur temple en deuil et de leur chaume en cendre,
Allaient conquérir des tombeaux!

ODE TROISIÈME

LES VIERGES DE VERDUN

Le prêtre portera l'étole blanche et noire
Lorsque les saints flambeaux pour vous s'allumeront;
Et, de leurs longs cheveux voilant leurs fronts d'ivoire,
Les jeunes filles pleureront.
A. GUIRAUD.

I

Pourquoi m'apportez-vous ma lyre,
Spectres légers? - que voulez-vous?
Fantastiques beautés, ce lugubre sourire
M'annonce-t-il votre courroux?
Sur vos écharpes éclatantes
Pourquoi flotte à longs plis ce crêpe menaçant?
Pourquoi sur des festons ces chaînes insultantes,
Et ces roses, teintes de sang?

Retirez-vous: rentrez dans les sombres abîmes...
Ah! que me montrez-vous?... quels sont ces trois tombeaux?
Quel est ce char affreux, surchargé de victimes?
Quels sont ces meurtriers, couverts d'impurs lambeaux?
J'entends des chants de mort, j'entends des cris de fête.
Cachez-moi le char qui s'arrête!...
Un fer lentement tombe à mes regards troublés; -
J'ai vu couler du sang... Est-il bien vrai, parlez,
Qu'il ait rejailli sur ma tête?
Venez-vous dans mon âme éveiller le remord?
Ce sang... je n'en suis point coupable!
Fuyez, vierges; fuyez, famille déplorable...
Lorsque vous n'étiez plus, je n'étais pas encor!
Qu'exigez-vous de moi? J'ai pleuré vos misères;
Dois-je donc expier les crimes de mes pères?

Pourquoi troublez-vous mon repos?
Pourquoi m'apportez-vous ma lyre frémissante?
Demandez-vous des chants à ma voix innocente,
Et des remords à vos bourreaux?

II

Sous des murs entourés de cohortes sanglantes,
Siège le sombre tribunal.
L'accusateur se lève, et ses lèvres tremblantes
S'agitent d'un rire infernal.
C'est Tinville: on le voit, au nom de la patrie,
Convier aux forfaits cette horde flétrie
D'assassins, juges à leur tour;
Le besoin du sang le tourmente;
Et sa voix homicide à la hache fumante
Désigne les têtes du jour.

Il parle: - ses licteurs vers l'enceinte fatale
Traînent les malheureux que sa fureur signale;
Les portes devant eux s'ouvrent avec fracas;
Et trois vierges, de grâce et de pudeur parées,
De leurs compagnes entourées,
Paraissent parmi les soldats.
Le peuple, qui se tait, frémit de son silence;
Il plaint son esclavage en plaignant leurs malheurs,
Et repose sur l'innocence
Ses regards las du crime et troublés par ses pleurs.

Eh quoi! quand ces beautés, lâchement accusées,
Vers ces juges de mort s'avançaient dans les fers,
Ces murs n'ont pas, croulant sous leurs voûtes brisées,
Rendu les monstres aux enfers!
Que faisaient nos guerriers?... Leur vaillance trompée
Prêtait au vil couteau le secours de l'épée;
Ils sauvaient ces bourreaux qui souillaient leurs combats.
Hélas! un même jour, jour d'opprobre et de gloire,

Voyait Moreau monter au char de la victoire.
Et son père au char du trépas!

Quand nos chefs, entourés des armes étrangères,
Couvrant nos cyprès de lauriers,
Vers Paris lentement reportaient leurs bannières,
Frédéric sur Verdun dirigeait ses guerriers.
Verdun, premier rempart de la France opprimée,
D’un roi libérateur crut saluer l’armée.
En vain tonnaient d’horribles lois;
Verdun se revêtit de sa robe de fête,
Et, libre de ses fers, vint offrir sa conquête
Au monarque vengeur des rois.

Alors, Vierges, vos mains (ce fut là votre crime!)
Des festons de la joie ornèrent les vainqueurs.
Ah! pareilles à la victime,
La hache à vos regards se cachait sous des fleurs.
Ce n’est pas tout; hélas! sans chercher la vengeance,
Quand nos bannis, bravant la mort et l’indigence,
Combattaient nos tyrans encor mal affermis,
Vos nobles coeurs ont plaint de si nobles misères;
Votre or a secouru ceux qui furent nos frères
Et n’étaient pas nos ennemis!

Quoi! ce trait glorieux, qui trahit leur belle âme,
Sera donc l’arrêt de leur mort!
Mais non, l’Accusateur, que leur aspect enflamme,
Tressaille d’un honteux transport.
Il veut, Vierges, au prix d’un affreux sacrifice,
En taisant vos bienfaits, vous ravir au supplice;
Il croit vos chastes coeurs par la crainte abattus.
Du mépris qui le couvre acceptez le partage,
Souillez-vous d’un forfait, l’infâme aréopage
Vous absoudra de vos vertus!

Répondez-moi, Vierges timides;

Qui, d’un si noble orgueil arma ces yeux si doux?
Dites, qui fit rouler dans vos regards humides
Les pleurs généreux du courroux?
Je le vois à votre courage:
Quand l’oppresseur qui vous outrage
N’eût pas offert la honte en offrant son bienfait,
Coupables de pitié pour des Français fidèles,
Vous n’auriez pas voulu, devant des lois cruelles,
Nier un si noble forfait!

C’en est donc fait; déjà sous la lugubre enceinte
A retenti l’arrêt dicté par la fureur.
Dans un muet murmure, étouffé par la crainte,
Le peuple, qui l’écoute, exhale son horreur.
Regagnez des cachots les sinistres demeures,
Ô Vierges! encor quelques heures...
Ah! priez sans effroi, votre âme est sans remord.
Coupez ces longues chevelures,
Où la main d’une mère enlaçait des fleurs pures,
Sans voir qu’elle y mêlait les pavots de la mort!

Bientôt ces fleurs encor pareront votre tête;
Les anges vous rendront ces symboles touchants;
Votre hymne de trépas sera l’hymne de fête
Que les Vierges du ciel rediront dans leurs chants.
Vous verrez près de vous, dans ces choeurs d’innocence,
Charlotte, autre Judith, qui vous vengea d’avance;
Cazotte; Elisabeth, si malheureuse en vain;
Et Sombreuil, qui trahit par ses pâleurs soudaines
Le sang glacé des morts circulant dans ses veines;
Martyres, dont l’encens plaît au Martyr divin!

III

Ici, devant mes yeux erraient des lueurs sombres
Des visions troublaient mes sens épouvantés;
Les Spectres sur mon front balançaient dans les ombres

De longs linceuls ensanglantés.
Les trois tombeaux, le char, les échafauds funèbres,
M’apparurent dans les ténèbres;
Tout rentra dans la nuit des siècles révolus;
Les vierges avaient fui vers la naissante aurore;
Je me retrouvai seul, et je pleurais encore
Quand ma lyre ne chantait plus!

ODE QUATRIÈME

QUIBERON

Pudor inde et miseratio. TACITE.

I

Par ses propres fureurs le Maudit se dévoile,
Dans le Démon vainqueur on voit l'ange proscrit;
L'anathème éternel, qui poursuit son étoile,
Dans ses succès même est écrit.
Il est, lorsque des cieux nous oublions la voie,
Des jours, que Dieu sans doute envoie
Pour nous rappeler les enfers;
Jours sanglants qui, voués au triomphe du crime,
Comme d'affreux rayons échappés de l'abîme,
Apparaissent sur l'univers.

Poètes qui toujours, loin du siècle où nous sommes,
Chantres des pleurs sans fin et des maux mérités,
Cherchez des attentats tels que la voix des hommes
N'en ait point encor racontés,
Si quelqu'un vient à vous vantant la jeune France,
Nos exploits, notre tolérance,
Et nos temps féconds en bienfaits,
Soyez contents; lisez nos récentes histoires,
Evoquez nos vertus, interrogez nos gloires:
Vous pourrez choisir des forfaits!

Moi, je n'ai point reçu de la Muse funèbre
Votre lyre de bronze, Ô chantres des remords!
Mais je voudrais flétrir les bourreaux qu'on célèbre,
Et venger la cause des morts.
Je voudrais, un moment, troublant l'impur Génie,
Arrêter sa gloire impunie

Qu’on pousse à l’immortalité;
Comme autrefois un grec, malgré les vents rapides,
Seul, retint de ses bras, de ses dents intrépides,
L’esquif sur les mers emporté!

II

Quiberon vit jadis, sur son bord solitaire,
Des Français assaillis s’apprêter à mourir,
Puis, devant les deux chefs, l’airain fumant se taire,
Et les rangs désarmés s’ouvrir.
Pour sauver ses soldats l’un d’eux offrit sa tête;
L’autre accepta cette conquête,
De leur traité gage inhumain;
Et nul guerrier ne crut sa promesse frivole,
Car devant les drapeaux, témoins de leur parole,
Tous deux s’étaient donné la main!

La phalange fidèle alors livra ses armes.
Ils marchaient; une armée environnait leurs pas,
Et le peuple accourait, en répandant des larmes,
Voir ces preux, sauvés du trépas.
Ils foulaient en vaincus les champs de leurs ancêtres;
Ce fut un vieux temple, sans prêtres,
Qui reçut ces vengeurs des rois;
Mais l’humble autel manquait à la pieuse enceinte,
Et, pour se consoler, dans cette prison sainte,
Leurs yeux en vain cherchaient la croix.

Tous prièrent ensemble, et, d’une voix plaintive,
Tous, se frappant le sein, gémirent à genoux.
Un seul ne pleurait pas dans la tribu captive:
C’était lui qui mourait pour tous;
C’était Sombreuil, leur chef; jeune et plein d’espérance,
L’heure de son trépas s’avance;
Il la salue avec ferveur.
Le supplice, entouré des apprêts funéraires,

Est beau pour un chrétien qui, seul, va pour ses frères
Expirer, semblable au Sauveur.

“ Oh! cessez, disait-il, ces larmes, ces reproches,
Guerriers; votre salut prévient tant de douleurs!
Combien à votre mort vos amis et vos proches,
Hélas! auraient versé de pleurs!
Je romps avec vos fers mes chaînes éphémères;
À vos épouses, à vos mères,
Conservez vos jours précieux.
On vous rendra la paix, la liberté, la vie;
Tout ce bonheur n’a rien que mon coeur vous envie;
Vous, ne m’enviez pas les cieux. “

Le sinistre tambour sonna l’heure dernière,
Les bourreaux étaient prêts; on vit Sombreuil partir.
La soeur ne fut point là pour leur ravir le frère, -
Et le héros devint martyr.
L’exhortant de la voix et de son saint exemple,
Un évêque, exilé du temple,
Le suivit au funeste lieu;
Afin que le vainqueur vît, dans son camp rebelle,
Mourir, près d’un soldat à son prince fidèle,
Un prêtre fidèle à son Dieu!

III

Vous pour qui s’est versé le sang expiatoire,
Bénissez le Seigneur, louez l’heureux Sombreuil;
Celui qui monte au ciel, brillant de tant de gloire,
N’a pas besoin de chants de deuil!
Bannis, on va vous rendre enfin une patrie;
Captifs, la liberté chérie
Se montre à vous dans l’avenir.
Oui, de vos longs malheurs chantez la fin prochaine;
Vos prisons vont s’ouvrir, on brise votre chaîne;
Chantez! votre exil va finir.

En effet, - des cachots la porte à grand bruit roule,
Un étendard paraît, qui flotte ensanglanté;
Des chefs et des soldats l'environnent en foule,
En invoquant la Liberté!
“ Quoi! disaient les captifs, déjà l'on nous délivre!... “
Quelques-uns s'empressent de suivre
Les bourreaux devenus meilleurs.
“ Adieu, leur criait-on, adieu, plus de souffrance;
Nous nous reverrons tous, libres, dans notre France! “
Ils devaient se revoir ailleurs.

Bientôt, jusqu'aux prisons des captifs en prières,
Arrive un sourd fracas, par l'échÔ répété:
C'étaient leurs fiers vainqueurs qui délivraient leurs frères,
Et qui remplissaient leur traité!
Sans troubler les proscrits, ce bruit vint les surprendre;
Aucun d'eux ne savait comprendre
Qu'on pût se jouer des serments;
Ils disaient aux soldats: “ Votre foi nous protège; “
Et, pour toute réponse, un lugubre cortège
Les traîna sur des corps fumants!

Le jour fit place à l'ombre et la nuit à l'aurore,
Hélas! et, pour mourir traversant la cité,
Les crédules proscrits passaient, passaient encore,
Aux yeux du peuple épouvanté!
Chacun d'eux racontait, brûlant d'un saint délire,
À ses compagnons de martyre
Les malheurs qu'il avait soufferts;
Tous succombaient sans peur, sans faste, sans murmure,
Regrettant seulement qu'il fallût un parjure,
Pour les immoler dans les fers.

À coups multipliés la hache abat les chênes.
Le vil chasseur, dans l'antre ignoré du soleil,
Égorge lentement le lion dont ses chaînes

Ont surpris le noble sommeil.
On massacra longtemps la tribu sans défense.
À leur mort assistait la France,
Jouet des bourreaux triomphants;
Comme jadis, aux pieds des idoles impures,
Tour à tour, une veuve, en de longues tortures,
Vit expirer ses sept enfants.

C'étaient là les vertus d'un Sénat qu'on nous vante!
Le sombre Esprit du mal sourit en le créant;
Mais ce corps aux cent bras, fort de notre épouvante,
En son sein portait son néant.
Le colosse de fer s'est dissous dans la fange.
L'Anarchie, alors que tout change,
Pense voir ses oeuvres durer;
Mais ce Pygmalion, dans ses travaux frivoles,
Ne peut donner la vie aux horribles idoles
Qu'il se fait pour les adorer.

IV

On dit que, de nos jours, viennent, versant des larmes,
Prier au champ fatal où ces preux sont tombés,
Les vierges, les soldats fiers de leurs jeunes armes,
Et les vieillards lents et courbés.
Du ciel sur les bourreaux appelant l'indulgence,
Là, nul n'implore la vengeance,
Tous demandent le repentir;
Et chez ces vieux Bretons, témoins de tant de crimes,
Le pèlerin, qui vient invoquer les victimes,
Souvent lui-même est un martyr!

ODE CINQUIÈME

LOUIS XVII

Capet, éveille-toi!

I

En ce temps-là, du ciel les portes d'or s'ouvrirent;
Du Saint des Saints ému les feux se découvrirent;
Tous les cieux un moment brillèrent dévoilés;
Et les élus voyaient, lumineuses phalanges,
Venir une jeune âme entre de jeunes anges
Sous les portiques étoilés.
C'était un bel enfant qui fuyait de la terre; -
Son oeil bleu du malheur portait le signe austère;
Ses blonds cheveux flottaient sur ses traits pâlissants;
Et les vierges du ciel, avec des chants de fête,
Aux palmes du Martyre unissaient sur sa tête
La couronne des innocents.

II

On entendit des voix qui disaient dans la nue:
—" Jeune ange, Dieu sourit à ta gloire ingénue;
Viens, rentre dans ses bras pour ne plus en sortir;
Et vous, qui du Très-Haut racontez les louanges,
Séraphins, prophètes, archanges,
Courbez-vous, c'est un Roi; chantez, c'est un Martyr! "

—" Où donc ai-je régné? demandait la jeune ombre.
Je suis un prisonnier, je ne suis point un roi.
Hier je m'endormis au fond d'une tour sombre.
Où donc ai-je régné? Seigneur, dites-le moi.
Hélas! mon père est mort d'une mort bien amère;
Ses bourreaux, Ô mon Dieu, m'ont abreuvé de fiel;

Je suis un orphelin; je viens chercher ma mère,
Qu’en mes rêves j’ai vue au ciel. “

Les anges répondaient:—” Ton Sauveur te réclame.
Ton Dieu d’un monde impie a rappelé ton âme.
Fuis la terre insensée où l’on brise la Croix,
Où jusque dans la mort descend le Régicide,
Où le Meurtre, d’horreurs avide,
Fouille dans les tombeaux pour y chercher des rois! “

—” Quoi! de ma lente vie ai-je achevé le reste?
Disait-il; tous mes maux, les ai-je enfin soufferts?
Est-il vrai qu’un geôlier, de ce rêve céleste,
Ne viendra pas demain m’éveiller dans mes fers?
Captif, de mes tourments cherchant la fin prochaine,
J’ai prié; Dieu veut-il enfin me secourir?
Oh! n’est-ce pas un songe? a-t-il brisé ma chaîne?
Ai-je eu le bonheur de mourir?

“ Car vous ne savez point quelle était ma misère!
Chaque jour dans ma vie amenait des malheurs;
Et, lorsque je pleurais, je n’avais pas de mère
Pour chanter à mes cris, pour sourire à mes pleurs.
D’un châtiment sans fin languissante victime,
De ma tige arraché comme un tendre arbrisseau,
J’étais proscrit bien jeune, et j’ignorais quel crime
J’avais commis dans mon berceau.

“ Et pourtant, écoutez: bien loin dans ma mémoire,
J’ai d’heureux souvenirs avant ces temps d’effroi;
J’entendais en dormant des bruits confus de gloire,
Et des peuples joyeux veillaient autour de moi.
Un jour tout disparut dans un sombre mystère;
Je vis fuir l’avenir à mes destins promis;
Je n’étais qu’un enfant, faible et seul sur la terre,
Hélas! et j’eus des ennemis!

“ Ils m’ont jeté vivant sous des murs funéraires;
Mes yeux voués aux pleurs n’ont plus vu le soleil;
Mais vous que je retrouve, anges du ciel, mes frères,
Vous m’avez visité souvent dans mon sommeil.
Mes jours se sont flétris dans leurs mains meurtrières,
Seigneur, mais les méchants sont toujours malheureux;
Oh! ne soyez pas sourd comme eux à mes prières,
Car je viens vous prier pour eux. “

Et les anges chantaient:— “L’arche à toi se dévoile,
Suis-nous; sur ton beau front nous mettrons une étoile.
Prends les ailes d’azur des chérubins vermeils;
Tu viendras avec nous bercer l’enfant qui pleure,
Ou, dans leur brûlante demeure,
D’un souffle lumineux rajeunir les soleils! “

III

Soudain le choeur cessa, les élus écoutèrent;
Il baissa son regard par les larmes terni;
Au fond des cieux muets les mondes s’arrêtèrent,
Et l’éternelle voix parla dans l’infini:
“ Ô roi! je t’ai gardé loin des grandeurs humaines.
Tu t’es réfugié du trône dans les chaînes.
Va, mon fils, bénis tes revers.
Tu n’as point su des rois l’esclavage suprême,
Ton front du moins n’est pas meurtri du diadème,
Si tes bras sont meurtris de fers.

“ Enfant, tu t’es courbé sous le poids de la vie;
Et la terre, pourtant, d’espérance et d’envie
Avait entouré ton berceau!
Viens, ton Seigneur lui-même eut ses douleurs divines,
Et mon Fils, comme toi, Roi couronné d’épines,
Porta le sceptre de roseau! “

ODE SIXIÈME

LE RÉTABLISSEMENT DE LA STATUE DE HENRI IV

Accingunt omnes operi, pedibusque rotarum Subjiciunt lapsus, et stupea vincula collo Intendunt... Pueri circum innuptæque puellæ Sacra canunt, funemque manu contingere gaudent! VIRGILE.

I

Je voyais s’élever, dans le lointain des âges,
Ces monuments, espoir de cent rois glorieux;
Puis je voyais crouler les fragiles images
De ces fragiles demi-dieux.
Alexandre, un pêcheur des rives du Pirée
Foule ta statue ignorée,
Sur le pavé du Parthénon;
Et les premiers rayons de la naissante aurore
En vain dans le désert interrogent encore
Les muets débris de Memnon.

Ont-ils donc prétendu, dans leur esprit superbe,
Qu’un bronze inanimé dût les rendre immortels?
Demain le temps peut-être aura caché sous l’herbe
Leurs imaginaires autels.
Le proscrit à son tour peut remplacer l’idole;
Des piédestaux du Capitole
Sylla détrône Marius.
Aux outrages du sort insensé qui s’oppose!
Le sage, de l’affront dont frémit Théodose,
Sourit avec Démétrius.

D’un héros toutefois l’image auguste et chère
Hérite du respect qui payait ses vertus;
Trajan domine encor les champs que de Tibère
Couvrent les temples abattus.

Souvent, lorsqu'en l'horreur des discordes civiles,
La terreur planait sur les villes,
Aux cris des peuples révoltés,
Un héros, respirant dans le marbre immobile,
Arrêtait tout à coup par son regard tranquille
Les factieux épouvantés!

II

Eh quoi! sont-ils donc loin, ces jours de notre histoire
Où Paris sur son prince osa lever son bras?
Où l'aspect de Henri, ses vertus, sa mémoire,
N'ont pu désarmer des ingrats?
Que dis-je? ils ont détruit sa statue adorée.
Hélas! cette horde égarée
Mutilait l'airain renversé;
Et cependant, des morts souillant le saint asile,
Leur sacrilège main demandait à l'argile
L'empreinte de son front glacé.

Voulaient-ils donc jouir d'un portrait plus fidèle
Du héros dont leur haine a payé les bienfaits?
Voulaient-ils, réprouvant leur fureur criminelle,
Le rendre à nos yeux satisfaits?
Non; mais c'était trop peu de briser son image;
Ils venaient encor, dans leur rage,
Briser son cercueil outragé;
Tel, troublant le désert d'un rugissement sombre,
Le tigre, en se jouant, cherche à dévorer l'ombre
Du cadavre qu'il a rongé.

Assis près de la Seine, en mes douleurs amères,
Je me disais: “ La Seine arrose encore Ivry,
Et les flots sont passés où, du temps de nos pères,
Se peignaient les traits de Henri.
Nous ne verrons jamais l'image vénérée
D'un roi qu'à la France éplorée

Enleva sitôt le trépas;
Sans saluer Henri nous irons aux batailles,
Et l’étranger viendra chercher dans nos murailles
Un héros qu’il n’y verra pas! “

III

Où courez-vous? - Quel bruit naît, s’élève et s’avance?
Qui porte ces drapeaux, signe heureux de nos rois?
Dieu! quelle masse au loin semble, en sa marche immense,
Broyer la terre sous son poids?
Répondez... Ciel! c’est lui! je vois sa noble tête...
Le peuple, fier de sa conquête,
Répète en choeur son nom chéri.
Ô ma lyre! tais-toi dans la publique ivresse;
Que seraient tes concerts près des chants d’allégresse
De la France aux pieds de Henri?

Par mille bras traîné, le lourd colosse roule.
Ah! volons, joignons-nous à ces efforts pieux.
Qu’importe si mon bras est perdu dans la foule!
Henri me voit du haut des cieux.
Tout un peuple a voué ce bronze à ta mémoire,
Ô chevalier, rival en gloire
Des Bayard et des Duguesclin!
De l’amour des français reçois la noble preuve,
Nous devons ta statue au denier de la veuve,
À l’obole de l’orphelin.

N’en doutez pas, l’aspect de cette image auguste
Rendra nos maux moins grands; notre bonheur plus doux;
Ô Français! louez Dieu, vous voyez un roi juste,
Un Français de plus parmi vous.
Désormais, dans ses yeux, en volant à la gloire,
Nous viendrons puiser la victoire;
Henri recevra notre foi;
Et quand on parlera de ses vertus si chères,

Nos enfants n’iront pas demander à nos pères
Comment souriait le bon Roi!

IV

Jeunes amis, dansez autour de cette enceinte;
Mêlez vos pas joyeux, mêlez vos heureux chants.
Henri, car sa bonté dans ses traits est empreinte,
Bénira vos transports touchants.
Près des vains monuments que des tyrans s’élèvent,
Qu’après de longs siècles achèvent
Les travaux d’un peuple opprimé,
Qu’il est beau, cet airain où d’un roi tutélaire
La France aime à revoir le geste populaire
Et le regard accoutumé!

Que le fier conquérant de la Perse avilie,
Las de léguer ses traits à de frêles métaux,
Menace, dans l’accès de sa vaste folie,
D’imposer sa forme à l’Athos;
Qu’un Pharaon cruel, superbe en sa démence,
Couvre d’un obélisque immense
Le grand néant de son cercueil;
Son nom meurt, et bientôt l’ombre des Pyramides
Pour l’étranger, perdu dans ces plaines arides,
Est le seul bienfait de l’orgueil!

Un jour (mais repoussons tout présage funeste!)
Si des ans ou du sort les coups encor vainqueurs
Brisaient de notre amour le monument modeste,
Henri, tu vivrais dans nos coeurs;
Cependant que du Nil les montagnes altières,
Cachant cent royales poussières,
Du monde inutile fardeau,
Du temps et de la mort attestent le passage,
Et ne sont déjà plus, à l’oeil ému du sage,
Que la ruine d’un tombeau.

ODE SEPTIÈME

LA MORT DU DUC DE BERRY

Le Meurtre, d’une main violente, brise les liens les plus sacrés; la Mort vient enlever le jeune homme florissant, et le Malheur s’approche comme un ennemi rusé au milieu des jours de fête. SCHILLER.

I

Modérons les transports d’une ivresse insensée;
Le passage est bien court de la joie aux douleurs;
La mort aime à poser sa main lourde et glacée
Sur des fronts couronnés de fleurs.
Demain, souillés de cendre, humbles, courbant nos têtes,
Le vain souvenir de nos fêtes
Sera pour nous presque un remords;
Nos jeux seront suivis des pompes sépulcrales;
Car chez nous, malheureux! l’hymne des Saturnales
Sert de prélude au chant des Morts.

II

Fuis les banquets, fais trêve à ton joyeux délire,
Paris, triste cité! détourne tes regards
Vers le cirque où l’on voit aux accords de la lyre
S’unir les prestiges des arts.
Choeurs, interrompez-vous; cessez, danses légères;
Qu’on change en torches funéraires
Ces feux purs, ces brillants flambeaux; -
Dans cette enceinte, auprès d’une couche sanglante,
J’entends un prêtre saint dont la voix chancelante
Dit la prière des tombeaux!

Sous ces lambris, frappés des éclats de la joie,
Près d’un lit où soupire un mourant étendu,

D’une famille auguste, au désespoir en proie,
Je vois le cortège éperdu.
C’est un père à genoux, c’est un frère en alarmes,
Une soeur qui n’a point de larmes
Pour calmer ses sombres douleurs;
Car ses affreux revers ont, dès son plus jeune âge,
Dans ses yeux, enflammés d’un si mâle courage,
Tari la source de ses pleurs.

Sur l’échafaud, aux cris d’un sénat sanguinaire,
Sa mère est morte en reine et son père en héros;
Elle a vu dans les fers périr son jeune frère,
Et n’a pu trouver des bourreaux.
Et, quand des rois ligués la main brisa ses chaînes,
Longtemps, sur des rives lointaines,
Elle a fui nos bords désolés;
Elle a revu la France, après tant de misères,
Pour apprendre, en rentrant au palais de ses pères,
Que ses maux n’étaient pas comblés!

Plus loin, c’est une épouse... Oh! qui peindra ses craintes,
Sa force, ses doux soins, son amour assidu?
Hélas! et qui dira ses lamentables plaintes,
Quand tout espoir sera perdu?
Quels étaient nos transports, ô vierge de Sicile,
Quand naguère à ta main docile
Berry joignit sa noble main!
Devais-tu donc, princesse, en touchant ce rivage,
Voir sitôt succéder le crêpe du veuvage
Au chaste voile de l’hymen?

Berry, quand nous vantions ta paisible conquête,
Nos chants ont réveillé le dragon endormi;
L’Anarchie en grondant a relevé sa tête,
Et l’enfer même en a frémi.
Elle a rugi; soudain, du milieu des ténèbres,
Clément poussa des cris funèbres,

Ravaillac agita ses fers;
Et le monstre, étendant ses deux ailes livides,
Aux applaudissements des ombres régicides,
S’envola du fond des enfers!

Le démon, vers nos bords tournant son vol funeste,
Voulut, brisant ces lys qu’il flétrit tant de fois,
Épuiser d’un seul coup le déplorable reste
D’un sang, trop fertile en bons rois.
Longtemps le sbire obscur qu’il arma pour son crime,
Rêveur, autour de la victime
Promena ses affreux loisirs;
Enfin le ciel permet que son voeu s’accomplisse;
Pleurons tous, car le meurtre a choisi pour complice
Le tumulte de nos plaisirs!

Le fer brille... un cri part: guerriers, volez aux armes!
C’en est fait; la duchesse accourt en pâlissant;
Son bras soutient Berry, qu’elle arrose de larmes,
Et qui l’inonde de son sang.
Dressez un lit funèbre: est-il quelque espérance?...
Hélas! un lugubre silence
A condamné son triste époux.
Assistez-le, madame, en ce moment horrible;
Les soins cruels de l’art le rendront plus terrible,
Les vôtres le rendront plus doux.

Monarque en cheveux blancs, hâte-toi, le temps presse;
Un Bourbon va rentrer au sein de ses aïeux;
Viens, accours vers ce fils, l’espoir de ta vieillesse;
Car ta main doit fermer ses yeux!
Il a béni sa fille, à son amour ravie;
Puis, des vanités de sa vie
Il proclame un noble abandon;
Vivant, il pardonna ses maux à la patrie;
Et son dernier soupir, digne du Dieu qu’il prie,
Est encore un cri de pardon.

Mort sublime! ô regrets! vois sa grande âme, et pleure,
Porte au ciel tes clameurs, ô peuple désolé.
Tu l'as trop peu connu; c'est à sa dernière heure
Que le héros s'est révélé.
Pour consoler la veuve, apportez l'orpheline;
Donnez sa fille à Caroline,
La nature encore a ses droits,
Mais, quand périt l'espoir d'une tige féconde,
Qui pourra consoler, dans sa terreur profonde,
La France, veuve de ses rois?

À l'horrible récit, quels cris expiatoires
Vont pousser nos guerriers, fameux par leur valeur!
L'Europe, qu'ébranlait le bruit de leurs victoires,
Va retentir de leur douleur.
Mais toi, que diras-tu, chère et noble Vendée?
Si longtemps de sang inondée,
Tes regrets seront superflus;
Et tu seras semblable à la mère accablée,
Qui s'assied sur sa couche et pleure inconsolée,
Parce que son enfant n'est plus!

Bientôt vers Saint-Denis, désertant nos murailles,
Au bruit sourd des clairons, peuple, prêtres, soldats,
Nous suivrons à pas lents le char des funérailles,
Entouré des chars des combats.
Hélas! jadis souillé par des mains téméraires,
Saint-Denis, où dormaient ses pères,
A vu déjà bien des forfaits;
Du moins, puisse, à l'abri des complots parricides,
Sous ces murs profanés, parmi ces tombes vides,
Sa cendre reposer en paix!

III

D'Enghien s'étonnera, dans les célestes sphères,

De voir sitôt l'ami, cher à ses jeunes ans,
À qui le vieux Condé, prêt à quitter nos terres,
Léguait ses devoirs bienfaisants.
À l'aspect de Berry, leur dernière espérance,
Des rois que révère la France
Les ombres frémiront d'effroi;
Deux héros gémiront sur leurs races éteintes,
Et le vainqueur d' Ivry viendra mêler ses plaintes
Aux pleurs du vainqueur de Rocroy.

Ainsi, Bourbon, au bruit du forfait sanguinaire,
On te vit vers d'Artois accourir désolé;
Car tu savais les maux que laisse au coeur d'un père
Un fils avant l'âge immolé.
Mais bientôt, chancelant dans ta marche incertaine,
L'affreux souvenir de Vincenne
Vint s'offrir à tes sens glacés;
Tu pâlis; et d'Artois, dans la douleur commune,
Sembla presque oublier sa récente infortune,
Pour plaindre tes revers passés.

Et toi, veuve éplorée, au milieu de l'orage
Attends des jours plus doux, espère un sort meilleur;
Prends ta soeur pour modèle, et puisse ton courage
Être aussi grand que ton malheur!
Tu porteras comme elle une urne funéraire;
Comme elle, au sein du sanctuaire,
Tu gémiras sur un cercueil;
L'Hydre des factions, qui, par des morts célèbres,
A marqué pour ta soeur tant d'époques funèbres,
Te fait aussi ton jour de deuil!

IV

Pourtant, ô frêle appui de la tige royale,
Si Dieu par ton secours signale son pouvoir,
Tu peux sauver la France, et de l'Hydre infernale

Tromper encor l’affreux espoir.
Ainsi, quand le Serpent, auteur de tous les crimes,
Vouait d’avance aux noirs abîmes
L’homme que son forfait perdit,
Le Seigneur abaissa sa farouche arrogance;
Une femme apparut, qui, faible et sans défense,
Brisa du pied son front maudit!

ODE HUITIÈME

LA NAISSANCE DU DUC DE BORDEAUX

Le ciel ... prodigue en leur faveur les miracles. La postérité de Joseph rentre dans la terre de Gessen; et cette conquête, due aux larmes des vainqueurs, ne coûte pas une larme aux vaincus. CHATEAUBRIAND, Martyrs.

I

Savez-vous, voyageur, pourquoi, dissipant l'ombre,
D'innombrables clartés brillent dans la nuit sombre?
Quelle immense vapeur rougit les cieux couverts?
Et pourquoi mille cris, frappant la nue ardente,
Dans la ville, au loin rayonnante,
Comme un concert confus, s'élèvent dans les airs?

II

Ô joie! ô triomphe! ô mystère!
Il est né, l'Enfant glorieux,
L'Ange que promit à la terre
Un Martyr partant pour les cieux!
L'avenir voilé se révèle.
Salut à la flamme nouvelle
Qui ranime l'ancien flambeau!
Honneur à ta première aurore,
Ô jeune lys qui viens d'éclore,
Tendre fleur qui sors d'un tombeau!

C'est Dieu qui l'a donné, le Dieu de la prière:
La cloche, balancée aux tours du sanctuaire,
Comme aux jours du repos, y rappelle nos pas.
C'est Dieu qui l'a donné, le Dieu de la victoire! -
Chez les vieux martyrs de la gloire
Les canons ont tonné, comme au jour des combats.

Ce bruit, si cher à ton oreille,
Joint aux voix des temples bénis,
N'a-t-il donc rien qui te réveille,
Ô toi qui dors à Saint-Denis?
Lève-toi! Henri doit te plaire
Au sein du berceau populaire;
Accours! ô père triomphant!
Enivre sa lèvre trompée,
Et viens voir si ta grande épée
Pèse aux mains du royal enfant.

Hélas! il est absent, il est au sein des justes.
Sans doute, en ce moment, de ses aïeux augustes
Le cortège vers lui s'avance consolé:
Car il rendit, mourant sous des coups parricides,
Un héros à leurs tombes vides,
Une race de rois à leur trône isolé.

Parmi tous ces nobles fantômes,
Qu'il élève un front couronné,
Qu'il soit fier dans les saints royaumes,
Le père du roi nouveau-né!
Une race longue et sublime
Sort de l'immortelle victime;
Tel un fleuve mystérieux,
Fils d'un mont frappé du tonnerre,
De son cours fécondant la terre,
Cache sa source dans les cieux!

Honneur au rejeton qui deviendra la tige!
Henri, nouveau Joas, sauvé par un prodige,
À l'ombre de l'autel croîtra vainqueur du sort;
Un jour, de ses vertus notre France embellie,
À ses soeurs, comme Cornélie,
Dira: Voilà mon fils, c'est mon plus beau trésor.

III

Ô toi, de ma pitié profonde
Reçois l’hommage solennel,
Humble objet des regards du monde
Privé du regard paternel!
Puisses-tu, né dans la souffrance,
Et de ta mère et de la France
Consoler la longue douleur!
Que le bras divin t’environne,
Et puisse, ô Bourbon! la couronne
Pour toi ne pas être un malheur!

Oui, souris, orphelin, aux larmes de ta mère!
Écarte, en te jouant, ce crêpe funéraire
Qui voile ton berceau des couleurs du cercueil;
Chasse le noir passé qui nous attriste encore;
Sois à nos yeux comme une aurore!
Rends le jour et la joie à notre ciel en deuil.

Ivre d’espoir, ton roi lui-même,
Consacrant le jour où tu nais,
T’impose, avant le saint baptême,
Le baptême du Béarnais.
La Veuve t’offre à l’Orpheline;
Vers toi, conduit par l’Héroïne,
Vient ton Aïeul en cheveux blancs;
Et la foule, bruyante et fière,
Se presse à ce Louvre, où naguère,
Muette, elle entrait à pas lents.

Guerriers, peuple, chantez; Bordeaux, lève ta tête,
Cité qui, la première, aux jours de la conquête,
Rendue aux fleurs de lys, as proclamé ta foi.
Et toi, que le martyr aux combats eût guidée,
Sors de ta douleur, ô Vendée!
Un roi naît pour la France, un soldat naît pour toi.

IV

Rattachez la nef à la rive:
La Veuve reste parmi nous,
Et de sa patrie adoptive
Le ciel lui semble enfin plus doux.
L'espoir à la France l'enchaîne;
Aux champs où fut frappé le chêne
Dieu fait croître un frêle roseau.
L'amour retient l'humble colombe;
Il faut prier sur une tombe,
Il faut veiller sur un berceau.

Dis, qu'irais-tu chercher au lieu qui te vit naître,
Princesse? Parthénope outrage son vieux maître:
L'étranger, qu'attiraient des bords exempts d'hivers,
Voit Palerme en fureur, voit Messine en alarmes,
Et, plaignant la Sicile en armes,
De ce funèbre Éden fuit les sanglantes mers!

Mais que les deux Volcans s'éveillent!
Que le souffle du Dieu jaloux
Des sombres géants qui sommeillent
Rallume enfin l'ardent courroux;
Devant les flots brûlants des laves,
Que seront ces hautains esclaves,
Ces chefs d'un jour, ces grands soldats?
Courage! ô vous, vainqueurs sublimes! -
Tandis que vous marchez aux crimes,
La terre tremble sous vos pas!

Reste au sein des français, ô fille de Sicile!
Ne fuis pas, pour des bords d'où le bonheur s'exile,
Une terre où le lys se relève immortel;
Où du peuple et des rois l'union salutaire
N'est point cet hymen adultère

Du trône et des partis, des camps et de l’autel.

V

Nous, ne craignons plus les tempêtes!
Bravons l’horizon menaçant:
Les forfaits qui chargeaient nos têtes
Sont rachetés par l’innocent!
Quand les nochers, dans la tourmente,
Jadis voyaient l’onde écumante
Entrouvrir leur frêle vaisseau,
Sûrs de la clémence éternelle,
Pour sauver la nef criminelle
Ils y suspendaient un berceau.

ODE NEUVIÈME

LE BAPTÊME DU DUC DE BORDEAUX

Sinite parvulos venire ad me. - Venerunt reges. ÉVANGILE.

I

“ Oh! disaient les peuples du monde,
Les derniers temps sont-ils venus?
Nos pas, dans une nuit profonde,
Suivent des chemins inconnus.
Où va-t-on? dans la nuit perfide,
Quel est ce fanal qui nous guide,
Tous courbés sous un bras de fer?
Est-il propice? est-il funeste?
Est-ce la colonne céleste?
Est-ce une flamme de l’enfer?

“ Les tribus des chefs se divisent;
Les troupeaux chassent les pasteurs;
Et les sceptres des rois se brisent
Devant les faisceaux des préteurs.
Les trônes tombent; l’autel croule;
Les factions naissent en foule
Sur les bords des deux Océans;
Et les ambitions serviles,
Qui dormaient comme des reptiles,
Se lèvent comme des géants.

“ Ah! malheur! nous avons fait gloire,
Hélas! d’attentats inouïs,
Tels qu’en cherche en vain la mémoire
Dans les siècles évanouis.
Malheur! tous nos forfaits l’appellent,
Tous les signes nous le révèlent,

Le jour des arrêts solennels.
L’homme est digne enfin des abîmes;
Et rien ne manque à ses longs crimes
Que les châtiments éternels. “

Le Très-Haut a pris leur défense,
Lorsqu’ils craignaient son abandon;
L’homme peut épuiser l’offense,
Dieu n’épuise pas le pardon.
Il mène au repentir l’impie;
Lui-même, pour nous, il expie
L’oubli des lois qu’il nous donna;
Pour lui seul il reste sévère;
C’est la Victime du Calvaire
Qui fléchit le Dieu du Sina!

II
Par un autre berceau sa main nous sauve encore!
Le monde du bonheur n’ose entrevoir l’aurore,
Quoique Dieu des méchants ait puni les défis,
Et, troublant leurs conseils, dispersant leurs phalanges,
Nous ait donné l’un de ses Anges,
Comme aux antiques jours il nous donna son Fils.

Tel, lorsqu’il sort vivant du gouffre de ténèbres,
Le Prophète voit fuir les visions funèbres!
La terre est sous ses pas, le jour luit à ses yeux;
Mais lui, tout ébloui de la flamme éternelle,
Longtemps à sa vue infidèle
La lueur de l’enfer voile l’éclat des cieux.

Peuples, ne doutez pas! chantez votre victoire.
Un sauveur naît, vêtu de puissance et de gloire;
Il réunit le glaive et le sceptre en faisceau;
Des leçons du malheur naîtront nos jours prospères,
Car de soixante Rois, ses pères,
Les ombres sans cercueils veillent sur son berceau!

Son nom seul a calmé nos tempêtes civiles;
Ainsi qu’un bouclier il a couvert les villes.
La révolte et la haine ont déserté nos murs.
Tel du jeune lion, qui lui-même s’ignore,
Le premier cri, paisible encore,
Fait de l’antre royal fuir cent monstres impurs.

III

Quel est cet Enfant débile
Qu’on porte aux sacrés parvis?
Toute une foule immobile
Le suit de ses yeux ravis;
Son front est nu, ses mains tremblent,
Ses pieds, que des noeuds rassemblent,
N’ont point commencé de pas;
La faiblesse encor l’enchaîne;
Son regard ne voit qu’à peine
Et sa voix ne parle pas.

C’est un Roi parmi les hommes;
En entrant dans le saint lieu,
Il devient ce que nous sommes;
C’est un homme aux pieds de Dieu.
Cet enfant est notre joie;
Dieu pour sauveur nous l’envoie;
Sa loi l’abaisse aujourd’hui.
Les Rois, qu’arme son tonnerre,
Sont tout par lui sur la terre,
Et ne sont rien devant lui.

Que tout tremble et s’humilie.
L’orgueil mortel parle en vain;
Le Lion royal se plie
Au joug de l’Agneau divin.
Le Père, entouré d’étoiles,

Vers l’Enfant, faible et sans voiles,
Descend, sur les vents porté;
L’Esprit-Saint de feux l’inonde;
Il n’est encor né qu’au monde,
Qu’il naisse à l’éternité!

Marie, aux rayons modestes,
Heureuse et priant toujours,
Guide les Vierges célestes
Vers son vieux temple aux deux tours.
Toutes les saintes Armées,
Parmi les soleils semées,
Suivent son char triomphant;
La Charité les devance,
La Foi brille, et l’Espérance
S’assied près de l’humble Enfant!

IV

Jourdain! te souvient-il de ce qu’ont vu tes rives?
Naguère un pèlerin près de tes eaux captives
Vint s’asseoir et pleura, pareil en sa ferveur
À ces Preux qui jadis, terrible et saint cortège,
Ravirent au joug sacrilège
Ton onde baptismale et le tombeau sauveur!

Ce chrétien avait vu, dans la France usurpée,
Trône, autel, chartes, lois, tomber sous une épée,
Les vertus sans honneur, les forfaits impunis;
Et lui, des vieux, croisés cherchait l’ombre sublime,
Et, s’exilant près de Solime,
Aux lieux où Dieu mourut pleurait ses Rois bannis!

L’eau du saint fleuve emplit sa gourde voyageuse;
Il partit; il revit notre rive orageuse,
Ignorant quel bonheur attendait son retour,
Et qu’à l’enfant des rois, du fond de l’Arabie,

Il apportait, nouveau Tobie,
Le remède divin qui rend l'aveugle au jour.

Qu'il soit fier dans ses flots, le fleuve des prophètes!
Peuples, l'eau du salut est présente à nos fêtes;
Le ciel sur cet Enfant a placé sa faveur;
Qu'il reçoive les eaux que reçut Dieu lui-même;
Et qu'à l'onde de son baptême,
Le monde rassuré reconnaisse un Sauveur!

À vous, comme à Clovis, prince, Dieu se révèle.
Soyez du temple saint la colonne nouvelle.
Votre âme en vain du lys enlace la blancheur;
Quittez l'orgueil du rang, l'orgueil de l'innocence;
Dieu vous offre, dans sa puissance,
La piscine du pauvre et la croix du pécheur.

V

L'Enfant, quand du Seigneur sur lui brille l'aurore,
Ignore le martyre et sourit à la croix;
Mais un autre baptême, hélas! attend encore
Le front infortuné des Rois. -
Des jours viendront, jeune homme, où ton âme troublée,
Du fardeau d'un peuple accablée,
Frémira d'un effroi pieux,
Quand l'évêque sur toi répandra l'huile austère,
Formidable présent qu'aux maîtres de la terre
La colombe apporta des cieux.

Alors, ô Roi chrétien! au Seigneur sois semblable;
Sache être grand par toi, comme il est grand par lui;
Car le sceptre devient un fardeau redoutable
Dès qu'on veut s'en faire un appui.
Un vrai Roi sur sa tête unit toutes les gloires;
Et si, dans ses justes victoires,
Par la mort il est arrêté,

Il voit, comme Bayard, une croix dans son glaive,
Et ne fait, quand le ciel à la terre l’enlève,
Que changer d’immortalité!

À LA MUSE

Je vais, ô Muse! où tu m’envoies!
Je ne sais que verser des pleurs;
Mais qu’il soit fidèle à leurs joies,
Ce luth fidèle à leurs douleurs!
Ma voix, dans leur récente histoire,
N’a point, sur des tons de victoire,
Appris à louer le Seigneur.
Ô Rois, victimes couronnées!
Lorsqu’on chante vos destinées,
On sait mal chanter le bonheur.

ODE DIXIÈME

VISION

à M. le comte Gaspard de Pons

7. Quia defecimus in irâ tuâ, et in furore tuÔ turbati sumus;
8. Posuisti iniquitates nostras in conspectu tuo, sæculum nostrum in illuminatione vultus tui;
9. Quoniam omnes dies nostri defecerunt, et in ira tuâ defecimus. PSAUME LXXXIX.

Parce que nous sommes tombés dans votre colère, et que nous avons été troublés dans votre fureur;
Vous avez placé nos iniquités en votre présence, et notre siècle dans la lumière de votre face;
Puisque tous nos jours ont failli, et que nous sommes tombés dans votre colère!

Voici ce qu'ont dit les Prophètes,
Aux jours où ces hommes pieux
Voyaient en songe sur leurs têtes
L'Esprit-Saint descendre des cieux:
“ Dès qu'un siècle, éteint pour le monde,
Redescend dans la nuit profonde,
De gloire ou de honte chargé,
Il va répondre et comparaître
Devant le Dieu qui le fit naître,
Seul juge qui n'est pas jugé. “

Or écoutez, fils de la terre,
Vil peuple à la tombe appelé,
Ce qu'en un rêve solitaire
La vision m'a révélé. -
C'était dans la cité flottante,
De joie et de gloire éclatante,

Où le jour n’a pas de soleil,
D’où sortit la première aurore,
Et d’où résonneront encore
Les clairons du dernier réveil!

Adorant l’Essence inconnue,
Les Saints, les Martyrs glorieux
Contemplaient, sous l’ardente nue,
Le Triangle mystérieux!
Près du trône où dort le tonnerre
Parut un Spectre centenaire
Par l’Ange des Français conduit;
Et l’Ange, vêtu d’un long voile,
Était pareil à l’humble étoile
Qui mène au ciel la sombre nuit.

Dans les cieux et dans les abîmes
Une Voix alors s’entendit,
Qui, jusque parmi ses victimes,
Fit trembler l’Archange maudit.
Le char des Séraphins fidèles,
Semé d’yeux, brillant d’étincelles,
S’arrêta sur son triple essieu;
Et la roue, aux flammes bruyantes,
Et les quatre ailes tournoyantes
Se turent au souffle de Dieu.

LA VOIX

Déjà du Livre séculaire
La page a dix-sept fois tourné;
Le gouffre attend que ma colère
Te pardonne ou t’ait condamné!
Approche: - je tiens la balance:
Te voilà nu dans ma présence,
Siècle innocent ou criminel.
Faut-il que ton souvenir meure?

Réponds: un siècle est comme une heure
Devant mon regard éternel.

LE SIÈCLE

J’ai, dans mes pensers magnanimes
Tout divisé, tout réuni;
J’ai soumis à mes lois sublimes
Et l’Immuable et l’Infini;
J’ai pesé tes volontés mêmes...

LA VOIX

Fantôme, arrête! tes blasphèmes
Troublent mes Saints d’un juste effroi;
Sors de ton orgueilleuse ivresse;
Doute aujourd’hui de ta sagesse;
Car tu ne peux douter de moi.

Fier de tes aveugles sciences,
N’as-tu pas ri, dans tes clameurs,
Et de mon être et des croyances
Qui gardent les lois et les moeurs?
De la mort souillant le mystère,
N’as-tu pas effrayé la terre
D’un crime aux humains inconnu?
Des Rois, avant les temps célestes,
N’as-tu pas réveillé les restes?

LE SIÈCLE

Ô Dieu! votre jour est venu!

LA VOIX

Pleure, ô Siècle! D’abord timide,
L’erreur grandit comme un géant;

L’athée invite au régicide;
Le chaos est fils du néant.
J’aimais une terre lointaine;
Un Roi bon, une belle Reine,
Conduisaient son peuple joyeux,
Je bénissais leurs jours augustes
Réponds, qu’as-tu fait de ces justes?

LE SIÈCLE

Seigneur, je les vois dans vos cieux.

LA VOIX

Oui, l’épouvante enfin t’éclaire!
C’est moi qui marque leur séjour
Aux réprouvés de ma colère,
Comme aux élus de mon amour.
Qu’un rayon tombe de ma face,
Soudain tout s’anime ou s’efface,
Tout naît ou retourne au tombeau.
Mon souffle, propice ou terrible,
Allume l’incendie horrible,
Comme il éteint le pur flambeau!

Que l’oubli muet te dévore!

LE SIÈCLE

Seigneur, votre bras s’est levé;
Seigneur, le maudit vous implore!

LA VOIX

Non; tais-toi, Siècle réprouvé!

LE SIÈCLE

Eh bien donc! l’Âge qui va naître
Absoudra mes forfaits peut-être
Par des forfaits plus odieux! “

Ici gémit l’humble Espérance,
Et le bel Ange de la France
De son aile voila ses yeux.

LA VOIX

Va, ma main t’ouvre les abîmes;
Un siècle nouveau prend l’essor,
Mais, loin de t’absoudre, ses crimes,
Maudit! t’accuseront encor. “

Et, comme l’ouragan qui gronde
Chasse à grand bruit jusque sur l’onde
Le flocon vers les mers jeté;
Longtemps la Voix inexorable
Poursuit le Siècle coupable,
Qui tombait dans l’Éternité.

ODE ONZIÈME

BUONAPARTE

De Deo.

I

Quand la terre engloutit les cités qui la couvrent;
Que le vent sème au loin un poison voyageur;
Quand l'ouragan mugit; quand des monts brûlants s'ouvrent;
C'est le réveil du Dieu vengeur.
Et si, lassant enfin les clémences célestes,
Le monde à ces signes funestes
Ose répondre en les bravant,
Un homme alors, choisi par la main qui foudroie,
Des aveugles fléaux ressaisissant la proie,
Paraît, comme un fléau vivant!

Parfois, élus maudits de la fureur suprême,
Entre les nations des hommes sont passés,
Triomphateurs longtemps armés de l'anathème, -
Par l'anathème renversés!
De l'esprit de Nemrod héritiers formidables,
Ils ont sur les peuples coupables
Régné par la flamme et le fer;
Et dans leur gloire impie, en désastres féconde,
Ces envoyés du ciel sont apparus au monde,
Comme s'ils venaient de l'enfer!

II

Naguère, de lois affranchie,
Quand la Reine des nations
Descendit de la monarchie,
Prostituée aux factions,

On vit, dans ce chaos fétide,
Naître de l’hydre régicide
Un despote, empereur d’un camp.
Telle souvent la mer qui gronde
Dévore une plaine féconde
Et vomit un sombre volcan.

D’abord, troublant du Nil les hautes catacombes,
Il vint, chef populaire, y combattre en courant,
Comme pour insulter des tyrans dans leurs tombes,
Sous sa tente de conquérant. -
Il revint pour régner sur ses compagnons d’armes.
En vain l’auguste France en larmes
Se promettait des jours plus beaux;
Quand des vieux pharaons il foulait la couronne,
Sourd à tant de néant, ce n’était qu’un grand trône
Qu’il rêvait sur leurs grands tombeaux!

Un sang royal teignit sa pourpre usurpatrice;
Un guerrier fut frappé par ce guerrier sans foi;
L’anarchie, à Vincenne, admira son complice, -
Au Louvre elle adora son roi.
Il fallut presque un Dieu pour consacrer cet homme.
Le Prêtre-Monarque de Rome
Vint bénir son front menaçant;
Car, sans doute en secret effrayé de lui-même,
Il voulait recevoir son sanglant diadème
Des mains d’où le pardon descend.

III

Lorsqu’il veut, le Dieu secourable,
Qui livre au méchant le pervers,
Brise le jouet formidable
Dont il tourmentait l’univers.
Celui qu’un instant il seconde
Se dit le seul maître du monde;

Fier, il s’endort dans son néant;
Enfin, bravant la loi commune,
Quand il croit tenir sa fortune,
Le fantôme échappe au géant.

IV

Dans la nuit des forfaits, dans l’éclat des victoires,
Cet homme, ignorant Dieu qui l’avait envoyé,
De cités en cités promenant ses prétoires,
Marchait, sur sa gloire appuyé.
Sa dévorante armée avait, dans son passage,
Asservi les fils de Pélage
Devant les fils de Galgacus;
Et, quand dans leurs foyers il ramenait ses braves,
Aux fêtes qu’il vouait à ces vainqueurs esclaves,
Il invitait les rois vaincus!

Dix empires conquis devinrent ses provinces.
Il ne fut pas content dans son orgueil fatal. -
Il ne voulait dormir qu’en une cour de princes,
Sur un trône continental!
Ses aigles, qui volaient sous vingt cieux parsemées,
Au nord, de ses longues armées
Guidèrent l’immense appareil;
Mais là parut l’écueil de sa course hardie.
Les peuples sommeillaient: un sanglant incendie
Fut l’aurore du grand réveil!

Il tomba Roi; - puis, dans sa route,
Il voulut, fantôme ennemi,
Se relever, afin sans doute
De ne plus tomber à demi.
Alors, loin de sa tyrannie,
Pour qu’une effrayante harmonie
Frappât l’orgueil anéanti,
On jeta ce captif suprême

Sur un rocher, débris lui-même
De quelque ancien monde englouti!

Là, se refroidissant comme un torrent de lave,
Gardé par ses vaincus, chassé de l'univers,
Ce reste d'un tyran, en s'éveillant esclave,
N'avait fait que changer de fers.
Des trônes restaurés écoutant la fanfare,
Il brillait de loin comme un phare,
Montrant l'écueil au nautonier.
Il mourut. - Quand ce bruit éclata dans nos villes,
Le monde respira dans les fureurs civiles,
Délivré de son prisonnier!

Ainsi l'orgueil s'égare en sa marche éclatante,
Colosse né d'un souffle et qu'un regard abat. -
Il fit du glaive un sceptre, et du trône une tente.
Tout son règne fut un combat.
Du fléau qu'il portait lui-même tributaire,
Il tremblait, prince de la terre;
Soldat, on vantait sa valeur.
Retombé dans son coeur comme dans un abîme,
Il passa par la gloire, il passa par le crime,
Et n'est arrivé qu'au malheur.

V

Peuples, qui poursuivez d'hommages
Les victimes et les bourreaux,
Laissez-le fuir seul dans les âges; -
Ce ne sont point là les héros!
Ces faux dieux, que leur siècle encense,
Dont l'avenir hait la puissance,
Vous trompent dans votre sommeil;
Tels que ces nocturnes aurores
Où passent de grands météores,
Mais que ne suit pas le soleil.

LIVRE DEUXIÈME

Nos canimus surdis.

ODE PREMIÈRE

À MES

ODES

... Tentanda via est qua me quoque possim. Tollere humo, victorque virum volitare per ora. VIRGILE.

I

Mes odes, c’est l’instant de déployer vos ailes.
Cherchez d’un même essor les voûtes immortelles;
Le moment est propice... Allons!
La foudre en grondant vous éclaire,
Et la tempête populaire
Se livre au vol des aquilons.

Pour qui rêva longtemps le jour du sacrifice,
Oui, l’heure où vient l’orage est une heure propice;
Mais moi, sous un ciel calme et pur,
Si j’avais, fortuné génie,
Dans la lumière et l’harmonie
Vu flotter vos robes d’azur;

Si nul profanateur n’eût touché vos offrandes;
Si nul reptile impur sur vos chastes guirlandes,
N’eût traîné ses noeuds flétrissants;
Si la terre, à votre passage,
N’eût exhalé d’autre nuage
Que la vapeur d’un doux encens;

J’aurais béni la muse et chanté ma victoire.
J’aurais dit au poète, élancé vers la gloire:
“ Ô ruisseau! qui cherches les mers,
Coule vers l’océan du monde
Sans craindre d’y mêler ton onde;
Car ses flots ne sont pas amers. “

II

Heureux qui de l’oubli ne fuit point les ténèbres!
Heureux qui ne sait pas combien d’échos funèbres
Le bruit d’un nom fait retentir!
Et si la gloire est inquiète!
Et si la palme du poète
Est une palme de martyr!

Sans craindre le chasseur, l’orage ou le vertige,
Heureux l’oiseau qui plane et l’oiseau qui voltige!
Heureux qui ne veut rien tenter!
Heureux qui suit ce qu’il doit suivre!
Heureux qui ne vit que pour vivre,
Qui ne chante que pour chanter!

III

Vous! ô mes chants, adieu! cherchez votre fumée!
Bientôt, sollicitant ma porte refermée,
Vous pleurerez, au sein du bruit,
Ce temps où, cachés sous des voiles,
Vous étiez pareils aux étoiles
Qui ne brillent que pour la nuit;

Quand, tour à tour, prenant et rendant la balance,
Quelques amis, le soir, vous jugeaient en silence,
Poètes, par la lyre émus,
Qui fuyaient la ville sonore,
Et transplantaient les fleurs d’Isaure
Dans les jardins d’Académus.

Comme un ange porté sur ses ailes dorées,
Vous veniez, murmurant des paroles sacrées;
Pour abattre et pour relever,
Vous disiez, dans votre délire,
Tout ce que peut chanter la lyre,
Tout ce que l’âme peut rêver.

Disputant un prix noble en une sainte arène,
Vous laissiez tout l'Olympe aux fils de l'Hippocrène,
Rivaux de votre ardent essor;
Ainsi que l'amant d'Atalante,
Pour rendre leur course plus lente,
Vous leur jetiez les pommes d'or.

On vous voyait, suivis de sylphes et de fées,
Liant d'anciens faisceaux à nos jeunes trophées,
Chanter les camps et leurs travaux,
Ou pousser des cris prophétiques,
Ou demander aux temps gothiques
Leurs vieux contes, toujours nouveaux.

Souvent vos luths pieux consolaient les couronnes,
Et du haut du trépied vous défendiez les trônes;
Souvent, appuis de l'innocent,
Comme un tribut expiatoire,
Vous mêliez, pour fléchir l'histoire,
Une larme à des flots de sang.

IV

C'en est fait maintenant, pareils aux hirondelles,
Partez; qu'un même but vous retrouve fidèles.
Et moi, pourvu qu'en vos combats
De votre foi nul coeur ne doute,
Et qu'une âme en secret écoute
Ce que vous lui direz tout bas;

Pourvu, quand sur les flots en vingt courants contraires
L'ouragan chassera vos voiles téméraires,
Qu'un seul ami, plaignant mon sort,
Vous voyant battus de l'orage,
Pose un fanal sur le rivage,
S'afflige, et vous souhaite un port;

D’un oeil moins désolé je verrai vos naufrages.
Mais le temps presse, allez! rassemblez vos courages.
Il faut combattre les méchants.
C’est un sceptre aussi que la lyre!
Dieu, dont nos âmes sont l’empire,
A mis un pouvoir dans les chants.

V

Le poète, inspiré lorsque la terre ignore,
Ressemble à ces grands monts que la nouvelle aurore
Dore avant tous à son réveil,
Et qui, longtemps vainqueurs de l’ombre,
Gardent jusque dans la nuit sombre
Le dernier rayon du soleil.

ODE DEUXIÈME

L'HISTOIRE

Ferrea vox. VIRGILE.

I

Le sort des nations, comme une mer profonde,
A ses écueils cachés et ses gouffres mouvants.
Aveugle qui ne voit, dans les destins du monde,
Que le combat des flots sous la lutte des vents!

Un souffle immense et fort domine ces tempêtes.
Un rayon du ciel plonge à travers cette nuit.
Quand l'homme aux cris de mort mêle le cri des fêtes,
Une secrète voix parle dans ce vain bruit.

Les siècles tour à tour, ces gigantesques frères,
Différents par leur sort, semblables dans leurs voeux,
Trouvent un. but pareil par des routes contraires,
Et leurs fanaux divers brillent des mêmes feux.

II

Muse, il n'est point de temps que tes regards n'embrassent;
Tu suis dans l'avenir leur cercle solennel;
Car les jours, et les ans, et les siècles ne tracent
Qu'un sillon passager dans le fleuve éternel.

Bourreaux, n'en doutez pas; n'en doutez pas, victimes!
Elle porte en tous lieux son immortel flambeau,
Plane au sommet des monts, plonge au fond des abîmes,
Et souvent fonde un temple où manquait un tombeau.

Elle apporte leur palme aux héros qui succombent,

Du char des conquérants brise le frêle essieu,
Marche en rêvant au bruit des empires qui tombent,
Et dans tous les chemins montre le pas de Dieu!

Du vieux palais des temps elle pose le faîte;
Les siècles à sa voix viennent se réunir;
Sa main, comme un captif honteux de sa défaite,
Traîne tout le passé jusque dans l’avenir.

Recueillant les débris du monde en ses naufrages,
Son oeil de mers en mers suit le vaste vaisseau,
Et sait tout voir ensemble, aux deux bornes des âges,
Et la première tombe et le dernier berceau!

ODE TROISIÈME

LA BANDE NOIRE

Voyageur obscur, mais religieux, au travers des ruines de la patrie... je priais. CH. NODIER.

I

“ Ô murs! ô créneaux! ô tourelles!
Remparts! fossés aux ponts mouvants!
Lourds faisceaux de colonnes frêles!
Fiers châteaux! modestes couvents!
Cloîtres poudreux, salles antiques,
Où gémissaient les saints cantiques,
Où riaient les banquets joyeux!
Lieux où le coeur met ses chimères!
Églises où priaient nos mères,
Tours où combattaient nos aïeux!

“ Parvis où notre orgueil s’enflamme!
Maisons de Dieu! manoirs des rois!
Temples que gardait l’oriflamme,
Palais que protégeait la croix!
Réduits d’amour! arcs de victoires!
Vous qui témoignez de nos gloires,
Vous qui proclamez nos grandeurs!
Chapelles, donjons, monastères!
Murs voilés de tant de mystères!
Murs brillants de tant de splendeurs!

“ Ô débris! ruines de France
Que notre amour en vain défend,
Séjours de joie ou de souffrance,
Vieux monuments d’un peuple enfant!
Restes, sur qui le temps s’avance!

De l’Armorique à la Provence,
Vous que l’honneur eut pour abri!
Arceaux tombés! voûtes brisées!
Vestiges des races passées!
Lit sacré d’un fleuve tari!

“ Oui, je crois, quand je vous contemple,
Des héros entendre l’adieu;
Souvent, dans les débris du temple,
Brille comme un rayon du dieu.
Mes pas errants cherchent la trace
De ces fiers guerriers dont l’audace
Faisait un trône d’un pavois;
Je demande, oubliant les heures,
Au vieil écho de leurs demeures
Ce qui lui reste de leur voix.

“ Souvent ma muse aventurière,
S’enivrant de rêves soudains,
Ceignit la cuirasse guerrière
Et l’écharpe des paladins;
S’armant d’un fer rongé de rouille,
Elle déroba leur dépouille
Aux lambris du long corridor;
Et, vers des régions nouvelles,
Pour hâter son coursier sans ailes,
Osa chausser l’éperon d’or.

“ J’aimais le manoir dont la route
Cache dans les bois ses détours,
Et dont la porte sous la voûte
S’enfonce entre deux larges tours;
J’aimais l’essaim d’oiseaux funèbres
Qui sur les toits, dans les ténèbres,
Vient grouper ses noirs bataillons,
Ou, levant des voix sépulcrales,
Tournoie en mobiles spirales

Autour des légers pavillons.

“ J’aimais la tour, verte de lierre,
Qu’ébranle la cloche du soir;
Les marches de la croix de pierre
Où le voyageur vient s’asseoir;
L’église veillant sur les tombes,
Ainsi qu’on voit d’humbles colombes
Couver les fruits de leur amour;
La citadelle crénelée,
Ouvrant ses bras sur la vallée,
Comme les ailes d’un vautour.

“ J’aimais le beffroi des alarmes;
La cour où sonnaient les clairons;
La salle où, déposant leurs armes,
Se rassemblaient les hauts barons;
Les vitraux éclatants ou sombres;
Le caveau froid où, dans les ombres,
Sous des murs que le temps abat,
Les preux, sourds au vent qui murmure,
Dorment, couchés dans leur armure,
Comme la veille d’un combat.

“ Aujourd’hui, parmi les cascades,
Sous le dôme des bois touffus,
Les piliers, les sveltes arcades,
Hélas! penchent leurs fronts confus;
Les forteresses écroulées,
Par la chèvre errante foulées,
Courbent leurs têtes de granit;
Restes qu’on aime et qu’on vénère!
L’aigle à leurs tours suspend son aire,
L’hirondelle y cache son nid.

“ Comme cet oiseau de passage,
Le poète, dans tous les temps,

Chercha, de voyage en voyage,
Les ruines et le printemps.
Ces débris, chers à la patrie,
Lui parlent de chevalerie;
La gloire habite leurs néants;
Les héros peuplent ces décombres; -
Si ce ne sont plus que des ombres,
Ce sont des ombres de géants!

“ Ô Français! respectons ces restes!
Le ciel bénit les fils pieux
Qui gardent, dans leurs jours funestes,
L’héritage de leurs aïeux.
Comme une gloire dérobée,
Comptons chaque pierre tombée;
Que le temps suspende sa loi;
Rendons les Gaules à la France,
Les souvenirs à l’espérance,
Les vieux palais au jeune roi!... “

II

— Tais-toi, lyre! Silence, ô lyre du poète!
Ah! laisse en paix tomber ces débris glorieux
Au gouffre où nul ami, dans sa douleur muette,
Ne les suivra longtemps des yeux!
Témoins que les vieux temps ont laissés dans notre âge,
Gardiens d’un passé qu’on outrage,
Ah! fuyez ce siècle ennemi!
Croulez, restes sacrés, ruines solennelles!
Pourquoi veiller encor, dernières sentinelles
D’un camp, pour jamais endormi?

Ou plutôt, - que du temps la marche soit hâtée.
Quoi donc! n’avons-nous point parmi nous ces héros
Qui chassèrent les rois de leur tombe insultée,
Que les morts ont eu pour bourreaux?

Honneur à ces vaillants que notre orgueil renomme!
Gloire à ces braves! Sparte et Rome
Jamais n’ont vu d’exploits plus beaux!
Gloire! ils ont triomphé de ces funèbres pierres,
Ils ont brisé des os, dispersé des poussières!
Gloire! ils ont proscrit des tombeaux!

Quel Dieu leur inspira ces travaux intrépides?
Tout joyeux du néant par leurs soins découvert,
Peut-être ils ne voulaient que des sépulcres vides,
Comme ils n’avaient qu’un ciel désert?
Ou, domptant les respects dont la mort nous fascine,
Leur main peut-être, en sa racine,
Frappait quelque auguste arbrisseau;
Et, courant en espoir à d’autres hécatombes,
Leur sublime courage, en attaquant ces tombes,
S’essayait à vaincre un berceau?...

Qu’ils viennent maintenant, que leur foule s’élance,
Qu’ils se rassemblent tous, ces soldats aguerris!
Voilà des ennemis dignes de leur vaillance:
Des ruines et des débris.
Qu’ils entrent sans effroi sous ces portes ouvertes;
Qu’ils assiègent ces tours désertes;
Un tel triomphe est sans dangers.
Mais qu’ils n’éveillent pas les preux de ces murailles;
Ces ombres qui jadis ont gagné des batailles
Les prendraient pour des étrangers!

Ce siècle entre les temps veut être solitaire.
Allons! frappez ces murs, des ans encor vainqueurs.
Non, qu’il ne reste rien des vieux jours sur la terre;
Il n’en reste rien dans nos coeurs.
Cet héritage immense, où nos gloires s’entassent,
Pour les nouveaux peuples qui passent,
Est trop pesant à soutenir;
Il retarde leurs pas, qu’un même élan ordonne.

Que nous fait le passé? Du temps que Dieu nous donne
Nous ne gardons que l’avenir.

Qu’on ne nous vante plus nos crédules ancêtres!
Ils voyaient leurs devoirs où nous voyons nos droits.
Nous avons nos vertus. Nous égorgeons les prêtres,
Et nous assassinons les rois. -
Hélas! il est trop vrai, l’antique honneur de France,
La Foi, soeur de l’humble Espérance,
Ont fui notre âge infortuné;
Des anciennes vertus le crime a pris la place;
Il cache leurs sentiers, comme la ronce efface
Le seuil d’un temple abandonné.

Quand de ses souvenirs la France dépouillée,
Hélas! aura perdu sa vieille majesté,
Lui disputant encor quelque pourpre souillée,
Ils riront de sa nudité!
Nous, ne profanons point cette mère sacrée;
Consolons sa gloire éplorée,
Chantons ses astres éclipsés.
Car notre jeune muse, affrontant l’anarchie,
Ne veut pas secouer sa bannière, blanchie
De la poudre des temps passés.

ODE QUATRIÈME

À MON PÈRE

Domestica facta. HORACE.

I

Quoi! toujours une lyre et jamais une épée!
Toujours d’un voile obscur ma vie enveloppée!
Point d’arène guerrière à mes pas éperdus!...
Mais jeter ma colère en strophes cadencées!
Consumer tous mes jours en stériles pensées,
Toute mon âme en chants perdus!

Et cependant, livrée aux tyrans qu’elle brave,
La Grèce aux rois chrétiens montre sa croix esclave!
Et l’Espagne à grands cris appelle nos exploits!
Car elle a de l’erreur connu l’ivresse amère;
Et, comme un orphelin qu’on arrache à sa mère,
Son vieux trône a perdu l’appui des vieilles lois.

Je rêve quelquefois que je saisis ton glaive,
Ô mon père! et je vais, dans l’ardeur qui m’enlève,
Suivre au pays du Cid nos glorieux soldats,
Ou faire dire aux fils de Sparte révoltée
Qu’un Français, s’il ne put rendre aux Grecs un Tyrtée,
Leur sut rendre un Léonidas.

Songes vains! Mais du moins ne crois pas que ma muse
Ait pour tes compagnons des chants quelle refuse,
Mon père! le poète est fidèle aux guerriers.
Des honneurs immortels il revêt la victoire;
Il chante sur leur vie; et l’amant de la gloire
Comme toutes les fleurs aime tous les lauriers.

II

Ô français! des combats la palme vous décore:
Courbés sous un tyran, vous étiez grands encore.
Ce Chef prodigieux par vous s’est élevé;
Son immortalité sur vos gloires se fonde,
Et rien n’effacera des annales du monde
Son nom, par vos glaives gravé.

Ajoutant une page à toutes les histoires,
Il attelait des Rois au char de ses victoires.
Dieu dans sa droite aveugle avait mis le trépas.
L’univers haletait sous son poids formidable;
Comme ce qu’un enfant a tracé sur le sable,
Les empires confus s’effaçaient sous ses pas.

Flatté par la fortune, il fut puni par elle.
L’imprudent confiait son destin vaste et frêle
À cet orgueil, toujours sur la terre expié.
Où donc, en sa folie, aspirait ta pensée,
Malheureux! qui voulais, dans ta route insensée,
Tous les trônes pour marchepied?

Son jour vint: on le vit, vers la France alarmée,
Fuir, traînant après lui comme un lambeau d’armée,
Chars, coursiers et soldats, pressés de toutes parts.
Tel, en son vol immense atteint du plomb funeste,
Le grand aigle, tombant de l’empire céleste,
Sème sa trace au loin de son plumage épars.

Qu’il dorme maintenant dans son lit de poussière!
On ne voit plus, autour de sa couche guerrière,
Vingt courtisans royaux épier son réveil;
L’Europe, si longtemps sous son bras palpitante,
Ne compte plus, assise aux portes de sa tente,
Les heures de son noir sommeil.

Reprenez, ô Français! votre gloire usurpée.
Assez dans tant d’exploits on n’a vu qu’une épée!
Assez de la louange il fatigua la voix!
Mesurez la hauteur du géant sur la poudre.
Quel aigle ne vaincrait, armé de votre foudre?
Et qui ne serait grand, du haut de vos pavois?

L’étoile de Brennus luit encor sur vos têtes.
La Victoire eut toujours des Français à ses fêtes.
La paix du monde entier dépend de leur repos.
Sur les pas des Moreau, des Condé, des Xaintrailles,
Ce peuple glorieux dans les champs de batailles
A toujours usé ses drapeaux.

III

Toi, mon père, ployant ta tente voyageuse,
Conte-nous les écueils de ta route orageuse,
Le soir, d’un cercle étroit en silence entouré.
Si d’opulents trésors ne sont plus ton partage,
Va, tes fils sont contents de ton noble héritage:
Le plus beau patrimoine est un nom révéré.

Pour moi, puisqu’il faut voir, et mon coeur en murmure,
Pendre aux lambris poudreux ta vénérable armure;
Puisque ton étendard dort près de ton foyer,
Et que, sous l’humble abri de quelques vieux portiques,
Le coursier, qui m’emporte aux luttes poétiques,
Laisse rouiller ton char guerrier;

Lègue à mon luth obscur l’éclat de ton épée;
Et du moins qu’à ma voix, de ta vie occupée,
Ce beau souvenir prête un charme solennel.
Je dirai tes combats aux muses attentives,
Comme un enfant joyeux, parmi ses soeurs craintives,
Traîne, débile et fier, le glaive paternel.

ODE CINQUIÈME

LE REPAS LIBRE

aux rois de l’Europe

Il y avait à Rome un antique usage: la veille de l’exécution des condamnés à mort, on leur donnait, à la porte de la prison, un repas public appelé le Repas libre. CHATEAUBRIAND, les Martyrs.

I

Lorsqu’à l’antique Olympe immolant l’Évangile,
Le préteur, appuyant d’un tribunal fragile
Ses temples odieux,
Livide, avait proscrit des chrétiens pleins de joie,
Victimes qu’attendaient, acharnés sur leur proie,
Les tigres et les dieux;

Rome offrait un festin à leur élite sainte;
Comme si, sur les bords du calice d’absinthe
Versant un peu de miel,
Sa pitié des martyrs ignorait l’énergie,
Et voulait consoler par une folle orgie
Ceux qu’appelait le ciel.

La pourpre recevait ces convives austères:
Le falerne écumait dans de larges cratères
Ceints de myrtes fleuris;
Le miel d’Hybla dorait les vins de Malvoisie,
Et, dans les vases d’or, les parfums de l’Asie
Lavaient leurs pieds meurtris.

Un art profond, mêlant les tributs des trois mondes,
Dévastait les forêts et dépeuplait les ondes
Pour ce libre repas;

On eût dit qu’épuisant la prodigue nature,
Sybaris conviait aux banquets d’Épicure
Ces élus du trépas.

Les tigres cependant s’agitaient dans leur chaîne;
Les léopards captifs de la sanglante arène
Cherchaient le noir chemin;
Et bientôt, moins cruels que les femmes de Rome,
Ces monstres s’étonnaient d’être applaudis par l’homme,
Baignés de sang humain.

On jetait aux lions les confesseurs, les prêtres.
Telle une main sénile à de dédaigneux maîtres
Offre un mets savoureux.
Lorsqu’au pompeux banquet siégeait leur saint conclave,
La pâle mort, debout, comme un muet esclave,
Se tenait derrière eux.

II

Ô rois! comme un festin s’écoule votre vie.
La coupe des grandeurs, que le vulgaire envie,
Brille dans votre main:
Mais au concert joyeux de la fête éphémère
Se mêle le cri sourd du tigre populaire
Qui vous attend demain!

ODE SIXIÈME

LA LIBERTÉ

Christus nos liberavit.

I

Quand l’impie a porté l’outrage au sanctuaire,
Tout fuit le temple en deuil, de splendeur dépouillé;
Mais le prêtre fidèle, à genoux sur la pierre,
Prodigue plus d’encens, répand plus de prière,
Courbe plus bas son front devant l’autel souillé.

II

Non, sur nos tristes bords, ô belle voyageuse!
Soeur auguste des rois, fille sainte de Dieu,
Liberté! pur flambeau de la gloire orageuse,
Non, je ne t’ai point dit adieu!
Car mon luth est de ceux dont les voix importunes
Pleurent toutes les infortunes,
Bénissent toutes les vertus,
Mes hymnes dévoués ne traînent point la chaîne
Du vil gladiateur, mais ils vont dans l’arène,
Du linceul des martyrs vêtus.

Dans l’âge où le coeur porte un souffle magnanime,
Où l’homme à l’avenir jette un défi sublime
Et montre à sa menace un sourire hardi;
Avant l’heure où périt la fleur de l’espérance,
Quand l’âme, lasse de souffrance,
Passe du frais matin à l’aride midi;

Je disais: “ Ô salut, vierge aimable et sévère!
Le monde, ô Liberté, suit tes nobles élans;

Comme une jeune épouse il t’aime, et te révère
Comme une aïeule en cheveux blancs!
Salut! tu sais, de l’âme écartant les entraves,
Descendre au cachot des esclaves
Plutôt qu’au palais des tyrans;
Aux concerts du Cédron mêlant ceux du Permesse,
Ta voix douce a toujours quelque illustre promesse
Qu’entendent les héros mourants. “

Je disais. Souriant à mon ivresse austère,
Je vis venir à moi les sages de la terre:
“ Voici la Liberté! plus de sang! plus de pleurs!
Les peuples réveillés s’inclinent devant elle.
Viens, ô son jeune amant! car voici l’Immortelle!... “
Et j’accourus, portant des palmes et des fleurs.

III

Ô Dieu! leur Liberté, c’était un monstre immense,
Se nommant Vérité parce qu’il était nu,
Balbutiant les cris de l’aveugle démence,
Et l’aveu du vice ingénu!
La fable eût pu donner à ses fureurs impies
L’ongle flétrissant des harpies
Et les mille bras d’AEgéon.
La dépouille de Rome ornait l’impure idole.
Le vautour remplaçait l’aigle à son Capitole.
L’Enfer peuplait son Panthéon.

Le Supplice hagard, la Torture écumante,
Lui conduisaient la Mort comme une heureuse amante.
Le monstre aux pieds foulait tout un peuple innocent;
Et les sages menteurs, aux paroles divines,
Soutenaient ses pas lourds, quand, parmi les ruines,
Il chancelait, ivre de sang!

Mêlant les lois de Sparte aux fêtes de Sodome,

Dans tous les attentats cherchant tous les fléaux,
Par le néant de l’âme il croyait grandir l’homme,
Et réveillait le vieux chaos.
Pour frapper leur couronne osant frapper leur tête,
Des rois, perdus dans la tempête,
Il brisait le trône avili;
Et, de l’éternité lui laissant quelque reste,
Daignait à Dieu, muet dans son exil céleste,
Offrir un échange d’oubli!

IV

Et les sages disaient: “ Gloire à notre sagesse!
Voici les jours de Rome et les temps de la Grèce!
Nations, de vos Rois brisez l’indigne frein.
Liberté! N’ayez plus de maîtres que vous-même:
Car nous tenons de toi notre pouvoir suprême,
Sois donc heureux et libre, ô peuple souverain!... “

Tyrans adulateurs! caresses mensongères!
Ô honte!... Asie, Afrique, où sont tous vos sultans?
Que leurs sceptres sont doux, et leurs chaînes légères,
Près de ces bourreaux insultants!
Rends gloire, ô foule abjecte en tes fers assoupie,
Au vil monstre d’Éthiopie,
Par un fer jaloux mutilé!
Gloire aux muets cachés au harem du Prophète!
Gloire à l’esclave obscur, qui leur livre sa tête,
Du moins en silence immolé!

Le sultan, sous des murs de jaspe et de porphyre,
Jetant à cent beautés un dédaigneux sourire,
Foule la pourpre et l’or, et l’ambre et le corail;
Et de loin, en passant, le peuple peut connaître
Où sont les plaisirs de son maître,
À la tête, qui pend aux portes du sérail.

Peuple heureux! éveillant la révolte hardie,
Parmi ses toits troublés, dans l’ombre, bien souvent
L’inquiet janissaire égare l’incendie
Sur l’aile bruyante du vent.
Peuple heureux! d’un vizir sa vie est le domaine;
Un poison, que la mort promène,
Flétrit son rivage infecté;
L’esclavage le courbe au joug de l’épouvante.
Peuple trois fois heureux! divins sages qu’on vante,
Il n’a pas votre Liberté!

V

Ô France! c’est au ciel qu’en nos jours de colère
A fui la Liberté, mère des saints exploits;
Il faut, pour réfléchir cet astre tutélaire,
Que, pur dans tous ses flots, le fleuve populaire
Coule à l’ombre du trône appuyé sur les lois.

Un dieu du joug du mal a délivré le monde.
Parmi les opprimés il vint prendre son rang;
Rois! - en voeux fraternels sa parole est féconde;
Peuple! - il fut pauvre, humble et souffrant.
La Liberté sourit à toutes les victimes,
À tous les dévouements sublimes,
Sauveurs des états secourus;
À ses yeux la Vendée est soeur des Thermopyles:
Et le même laurier, dans les mêmes asiles,
Unit Malesherbe et Codrus.

VI

Quand l’impie a porté l’outrage au sanctuaire,
Tout fuit le temple en deuil, de splendeur dépouillé;
Mais le prêtre fidèle, assis dans la poussière,
Prodigue plus d’encens, répand plus de prière,
Courbe plus bas son front devant l’autel souillé.

ODE SEPTIÈME

LA GUERRE D'ESPAGNE

Sine clade victor.

I

Oh! que la Royauté, puissante et vénérable,
Fille, aux cheveux blanchis, des âges révolus,
Perçant de ses clartés leur nuit impénétrable,
Où tant d'astres ne brillent plus;
Soumettant l'aigle au cygne et l'autour aux colombes;
S'élevant de tombes en tombes;
Géant, que grandit son fardeau;
Consacrant sur l'autel le fer dont elle est ceinte,
Et mêlant les rayons de l'auréole sainte
Aux fleurons du royal bandeau;

Oh! que la Royauté, peuples, est douce et belle! -
À force de bienfaits elle achète ses droits.
Son bras fort, quand bouillonne une foule rebelle,
Couvre les sceptres d'une croix.
Ce colosse d'airain, de ses mains séculaires,
Dans les nuages populaires
Lève un phare aux feux éclatants;
Et, liant au passé l'avenir qu'il féconde,
Pose à la fois ses pieds, en vain battus de l'onde,
Sur les deux rivages du temps.

II

Aussi, que de malheurs suprêmes
Elle impose aux infortunés,
Qui, sous le joug des diadèmes,
Courbèrent leurs fronts condamnés!

Il faut que leur coeur soit sublime.
Affrontant la foudre et l’abîme,
Leur nef ne doit pas fuir l’écueil.
Un roi, digne de la couronne,
Ne sait pas descendre du trône,
Mais il sait descendre au cercueil.

Il faut, comme un soldat, qu’un prince ait une épée,
Il faut, des factions quand l’astre impur a lui,
Que nuit et jour, bravant leur attente trompée,
Un glaive veille auprès de lui;
Ou que de son armée il se fasse un cortège;
Que son fier palais se protège
D’un camp au front étincelant;
Car de la Royauté la Guerre est la compagne:
On ne peut te briser, sceptre de Charlemagne,
Sans briser le fer de Roland!

III

Roland! - N’est-il pas vrai, noble élu de la guerre,
Que ton ombre, éveillée aux cris de nos guerriers,
Aux champs de Roncevaux lorsqu’ils passaient naguère,
Les prit pour d’anciens chevaliers?
Car le héros, assis sur sa tombe célèbre,
Les voyait, vers les bords de l’Èbre
Déployant leur vol immortel,
Du haut des monts, pareils à l’aigle ouvrant ses ailes,
Secouer, pour chasser de nouveaux infidèles,
L’éclatant cimier de Martel!

Mais un autre héros encore,
Pélage, l’effroi des tyrans,
Pélage, autre vainqueur du Maure,
Dans les cieux saluait nos rangs;
Au char où notre gloire brille,
Il attelait de la Castille

Le vieux lion fier et soumis;
Répétant notre cri d’alarmes,
Il mêlait sa lance à nos armes,
Et sa voix nous disait: Amis!

IV

Des pas d’un conquérant l’Espagne encor fumante
Pleurait, prostituée à notre Liberté,
Entre les bras sanglants de l’effroyable amante,
Sa royale virginité.
Ce peuple altier, chargé de despotes vulgaires,
Maudissait, épuisé de guerres,
Le monstre en ses champs accouru;
Si las des vils tribuns et des tyrans serviles,
Que lui-même appelait l’étranger dans ses villes,
Sans frémir d’être secouru!

Les français sont venus: - du Rhin jusqu’au Bosphore,
Peuples de l’aquilon, du couchant, du midi,
Pourquoi, vous dont le front, que l’effroi trouble encore,
Se courba sous leur pied hardi;
Nations, de la veille à leur chaîne échappées,
Qu’on vit tomber sous leurs épées,
Ou qui par eux avez vécu;
Empires, potentats, cités, royaumes, princes!
Pourquoi, puissants états, qui fûtes nos provinces,
Me demander s’ils ont vaincu?

Ils ont appris à l’anarchie
Ce que pèse le fer gaulois;
Mais par eux l’Espagne affranchie
Ne peut rougir de leurs exploits;
Tous les peuples, que Dieu seconde,
Quand l’hydre, en désastre féconde,
Tourne vers eux son triple dard,
Ont, ligués contre sa furie,

Le temple pour même patrie,
La croix pour commun étendard.

V

Pourtant, que désormais Madrid taise à l’histoire
Des succès trop longtemps par son orgueil redits,
Et le royal captif que l’ingrate victoire
Dans ses murs envoya jadis.
Cadix nous a vengés de l’affront de Pavie.
À l’ombre d’un héros ravie
La gloire a rendu tous ses droits;
Oubliant quel Français a porté ses entraves,
La fière Espagne a vu si les mains de nos braves
Savent briser les fers des rois!

Préparez, Castillans, des fêtes solennelles,
Des murs de Saragosse aux champs d’Almonacid.
Mêlez à nos lauriers vos palmes fraternelles;
Chantez Bayard - chantons le Cid!
Qu’au vieil Escurial le vieux Louvre réponde;
Que votre drapeau se confonde
À nos drapeaux victorieux;
Que Gadès édifie un autel sur sa plage!
Que de lui-même, aux monts d’où se leva Pélage,
S’allume un feu mystérieux!

Pour témoigner de leurs paroles,
Où sont ces nouveaux Décius?
Le brasier attend les Scévoles!
Le gouffre attend les Curtius!
Quoi! traînant leurs fronts dans la poudre,
Tous, de Bourbon, qui tient la foudre,
Embrassent les sacrés genoux!... -
Ah! la victoire est généreuse,
Leur cause inique est malheureuse,
Ils sont vaincus, ils sont absous!

VI

Un Bourbon pour punir ne voudrait pas combattre.
Le droit de son triomphe est toujours le pardon.
Pourtant des factions que son bras vient d’abattre,
Il éteint le dernier brandon.
Oh! de combien de maux, peuples, il vous délivre!
Hélas! à quels forfaits se livre
Le monstre, à ses pieds frémissant!
Nous qui l’avons vaincu, nous fûmes sa conquête.
Nous savons, lorsque tombe une royale tête,
Combien il en coule de sang!

Ô nos guerriers, venez! vos mères sont contentes!
Vos bras, terreur du monde, en deviennent l’appui.
Assez on vit crouler de trônes sous vos tentes!
Relevez les rois aujourd’hui.
Dieu met sur votre char son arche glorieuse;
Votre tente victorieuse
Est son tabernacle immortel;
Des saintes légions votre étendard dispose;
Il veut que votre casque à sa droite repose
Entre les vases de l’autel!

VII

C’en est fait; loin de l’espérance
Chassant le crime épouvanté,
Les cieux commettent à la France
La garde de la Royauté.
Son génie, éclairant les trames,
Luit comme la lampe aux sept flammes,
Cachée aux temples du Jourdain;
Gardien des trônes qu’il relève,
Son glaive est le céleste glaive
Qui flamboie aux portes d’Éden!

ODE HUITIÈME

À L’ARC DE TRIOMPHE DE L’ÉTOILE

Non deficit alter. VIRGILE.

I

La France a des palais, des tombeaux, des portiques,
De vieux châteaux tout pleins de bannières antiques,
Héroïques joyaux conquis dans les dangers;
Sa pieuse valeur, prodigue en fiers exemples,
Pour parer ces superbes temples,
Dépouille les camps étrangers.

On voit dans ses cités, de monuments peuplées,
Rome et ses dieux, Memphis et ses noirs mausolées;
Le lion de Venise en leurs murs a dormi;
Et quand, pour embellir nos vastes Babylones,
Le bronze manque à ses colonnes,
Elle en demande à l’ennemi!

Lorsque luit aux combats son armure enflammée,
Son oriflamme auguste et de lys parsemée
Chasse les escadrons ainsi que des troupeaux;
Puis elle offre aux vaincus des dons après les guerres,
Et, comme des hochets vulgaires,
Y mêle leurs propres drapeaux.

II

Arc triomphal! la foudre, en terrassant ton maître,
Semblait avoir frappé ton front encore à naître.
Par nos exploits nouveaux te voilà relevé!
Car on n’a pas voulu, dans notre illustre armée,
Qu’il fût de notre renommée

Un monument inachevé!

Dis aux siècles le nom de leur chef magnanime.
Qu’on lise sur ton front que nul laurier sublime
À des glaives français ne peut se dérober.
Lève-toi jusqu’aux cieux, portique de victoire!
Que le géant de notre gloire
Puisse passer sans se courber!

ODE NEUVIÈME

LA MORT DE MADEMOISELLE DE SOMBREUIL

Sunt lacrymæ rerum. VIRGILE.

I

Lyre! encore un hommage à la vertu qui t’aime!
Assez tu dérobas des hymnes d’anathème
Au funèbre Isaïe, au triste Ézéchiel!
Pour consoler les morts, pour pleurer les victimes,
Lyre, il faut de ces chants sublimes
Dont tous les échos sont au ciel.

Elle aussi, Dieu l’a rappelée!... -
Les cieux nous enviaient Sombreuil;
Ils ont repris leur exilée;
Nous tous, bannis, traînons le deuil.
Répondez, a-t-on vu son ombre
S’évanouir dans la nuit sombre,
Ou fuir vers le jour immortel?
La vit-on monter ou descendre?
Où déposerons-nous sa cendre?
Est-ce à la tombe? est-ce à l’autel?

Ne pleurez pas, prions: les saints l’ont réclamée;
Prions: adorez-la, vous qui l’avez aimée!
Elle est avec ses soeurs, anges purs et charmants,
Ces vierges qui, jadis, sur la croix attachées,
Ou, comme au sein des fleurs sur des brasiers couchées,
S’endormirent dans les tourments.

Sa vie était un pur mystère
D’innocence et de saints remords;
Cette âme a passé sur la terre

Entre les vivants et les morts.
Souvent, hélas! l’infortunée,
Comme si de sa destinée
La mort eût rompu le lien,
Sentit, avec des terreurs vaines,
Se glacer dans ses pâles veines
Un sang, qui n’était pas le sien!

II

Ô jour! où le trépas perdit son privilège,
Où, rachetant un meurtre au prix d’un sacrilège,
Le sang des morts coula dans son sein virginal!
Entre l’impur breuvage et le fer parricide,
Les bourreaux poursuivaient l’héroïne timide
D’une insulte funèbre et d’un rire infernal!

Son triomphe est dans son supplice.
Elle a, levant ses yeux au ciel,
Bu le sang au même calice
Où Jésus mourant but le fiel.
Oh! que d’amour dans ce courage!...
Mais, quand périrent dans l’orage
Ses parents, que la France a plaints,
Pour consoler l’auguste fille
Dieu lui confia sa famille
Et de veuves et d’orphelins.

III

Car il lui fut donné de survivre au martyre: -
Elle fut sur nos bords, d’où la foi se retire,
Comme un rayon du soir resté sur l’horizon;
Dieu la marqua d’un signe entre toutes les femmes,
Et voulut dans son champ, où glanent si peu d’âmes,
Laisser cet épi mûr de la sainte moisson.

Elle était heureuse, ici même!
Du bras dont il venge ses droits,
Le Seigneur soutient ceux qu’il aime,
Et les aide à porter la croix.
Il montre, en visions étranges,
À Jacob l’échelle des anges,
À Saül les antres d’Endor;
Sa main mystérieuse et sainte,
Sait cacher le miel dans l’absinthe,
Et la cendre dans les fruits d’or.

Sa constante équité n’est jamais assoupie;
Le méchant, sous la pourpre où son bonheur s’expie,
Envie un toit de chaume au fidèle abattu;
Et, quand l’impie heureux, bercé sur des abîmes,
Se crée un enfer de ses crimes,
Le juste en pleurs se fait un ciel de sa vertu.

On dit qu’en dépouillant la vie
Elle parut la regretter,
Et jeta des regards d’envie
Sur les fers qu’elle allait quitter.
“ — Ô mon Dieu! retardez mon heure.
Loin de la vallée où l’on pleure,
Suis-je digne de m’envoler?
Ce n’est pas la mort que j’implore,
Seigneur; je puis souffrir encore,
Et je veux encor consoler.

“ Je pars; ayez pitié de ceux que j’abandonne!
Quel amour leur rendra l’amour que je leur donne?
Pourquoi du saint bonheur sitôt me couronner?
Laissez mon âme encor sur leurs maux se répandre;
Je n’aurai plus au ciel d’opprimés à défendre,
Ni d’oppresseurs à pardonner! “

Il faut donc que le juste meure! -

En vain, dans ses regrets nommés,
Ont passé devant sa demeure
Tous ses pauvres accoutumés.
Maintenant, ô fils des chaumières!
Payez son aumône en prières;
Suivez-la d’un pieux adieu,
Orphelins, veuves déplorables,
Vous tous, faibles et misérables,
Images augustes de Dieu!

IV

Ô Dieu! ne reprends pas ceux que ta flamme anime.
Si la vertu s’en va, que deviendra le crime?
Où pourront du méchant se reposer les yeux?
N’enlève pas au monde un espoir salutaire.
Laisse des justes sur la terre!
N’as-tu donc pas, Seigneur, assez d’anges aux cieux?

ODE DIXIÈME

LE DERNIER CHANT

Ô muse, qui daignas me soutenir dans une carrière aussi longue que périlleuse, retourne maintenant aux célestes demeures!... Adieu! consolatrice de mes jours, toi qui partageas mes plaisirs, et bien plus souvent mes douleurs! CHATEAUBRIAND, les Martyrs.

Et toi, dépose aussi la lyre!
Qu'importe le Dieu qui t'inspire
À ces mortels vains et grossiers?
On en rit quand ta main l'encense.
Brise donc ce luth sans puissance!
Descends de ce char sans coursiers!

— Oh! qu'il est saint et pur le transport du poète,
Quand il voit en espoir, bravant la mort muette,
Du voyage des temps sa gloire revenir!
Sur les âges futurs, de sa hauteur sublime
Il se penche, écoutant son lointain souvenir;
Et son nom, comme un poids jeté dans un abîme,
Éveille mille échos au fond de l'avenir.

Je n'ai point cette auguste joie,
Les siècles ne sont point ma proie;
La gloire ne dit pas mon rang.
Ma muse, en l'orage qui gronde,
Est tombée au courant du monde,
Comme un lys aux flots d'un torrent.

Pourtant, ma douce muse est innocente et belle.
L'astre de Bethléem a des regards pour elle:
J'ai suivi l'humble étoile, aux rois pasteurs pareil.
Le Seigneur m'a donné le don de sa parole,
Car son peuple l'oublie en un lâche sommeil;

Et, soit que mon luth pleure, ou menace, ou console,
Mes chants volent à Dieu, comme l'aigle au soleil.

Mon âme à sa source embrasée
Monte de pensée en pensée;
Ainsi du ruisseau précieux
Où l'Arabe altéré s'abreuve,
La goutte d'eau passe au grand fleuve,
Du fleuve aux mers, des mers aux cieux.

Mais, ô fleurs sans parfums, foyers sans étincelles,
Hommes! l'air parmi vous manque à mes larges ailes.
Votre monde est borné, votre souffle est mortel!
Les lyres sont pour vous comme des voix vulgaires.
Je m'enivre d'absinthe: enivrez-vous de miel.
Bien: - aimez vos amours et guerroyez vos guerres,
Vous, dont l'oeil mort se ferme à tout rayon du ciel!

Sans éveiller d'écho sonore
J'ai haussé ma voix faible encore;
Et ma lyre aux fibres d'acier
A passé sur ces âmes viles,
Comme sur le pavé des villes
L'ongle résonnant du coursier.

En vain j'ai fait gronder la vengeance éternelle;
En vain j'ai, pour fléchir leur âme criminelle,
Fait parler le pardon par la voix des douleurs.
Du haut des cieux tonnants, mon austère pensée,
Sur cette terre ingrate où germent les malheurs,
Tombant, pluie orageuse ou propice rosée,
N'a point flétri l'ivraie et fécondé des fleurs.

Du tombeau tout franchit la porte.
L'homme, hélas! que le temps emporte,
En vain contre lui se débat.
Rien de Dieu ne trompe l'attente;

Et la vie est comme une tente
Où l’on dort avant le combat.

Voilà, tristes mortels, ce que leur âme oublie!
L’urne des ans pour tous n’est pas toujours remplie.
Mais qu’ils passent en paix sous le ciel outragé!
Qu’ils jouissent des jours dans leurs frêles demeures!
Quand dans l’éternité leur sort sera plongé,
Les insensés en vain s’attacheront aux heures,
Comme aux débris épars d’un vaisseau submergé.

Adieu donc ce luth qui soupire!
Muse, ici tu n’as plus d’empire,
Ô muse, aux concerts immortels!
Fuis la foule qui te contemple;
Referme les voiles du temple;
Rends leur ombre aux chastes autels.

Je vous rapporte, ô Dieu! le rameau d’espérance. -
Voici le divin glaive et la céleste lance:
J’ai mal atteint le but où j’étais envoyé.
Souvent, des vents jaloux jouet involontaire,
L’aiglon suspend son vol, à peine déployé;
Souvent, d’un trait de feu cherchant en vain la terre,
L’éclair remonte au ciel sans avoir foudroyé.

LIVRE TROISIÈME

Le temps, qui dérobe à la jeunesse ses années, m’en a déjà ravi vingt-trois sur son aile. Mes jours s’écoulent à longs flots... Mais, quelle que soit mon intelligence, étendue ou bornée, précoce ou tardive, elle sera toujours mesurée au but vers lequel m’entraîne le temps, me guide le ciel; car j’userai sans cesse de moi-même sous l’oeil de celui qui me donne ma tâche, de mon divin Créateur. MILTON, Sonnet.

ODE PREMIÈRE

À M. ALPHONSE DE L.

Or, sachant ces choses, nous venons enseigner aux hommes la crainte de Dieu. II COR., V.

I

Pourtant je m'étais dit: “ Abritons mon navire.
Ne livrons plus ma voile au vent qui la déchire.
Cachons ce luth. Mes chants peut-être auraient vécu!...
Soyons comme un soldat qui revient sans murmure
Suspendre à son chevet un vain reste d'armure,
Et s'endort, vainqueur ou vaincu! “

Je ne demandais plus à la muse que j'aime
Qu'un seul chant pour ma mort, solennel et suprême!
Le Poète avec joie au tombeau doit s'offrir;
S'il ne souriait pas au moment où l'on pleure,
Chacun lui dirait: “ Voici l'heure!
Pourquoi ne pas chanter, puisque tu vas mourir? “

C'est que la mort n'est pas ce que la foule en pense!
C'est l'instant où notre âme obtient sa récompense,
Où le fils exilé rentre au sein paternel.
Quand nous penchons près d'elle une oreille inquiète,
La voix du trépassé, que nous croyons muette,
A commencé l'hymne éternel!

II

Plus tôt que je n'ai dû, je reviens dans la lice;
Mais tu le veux, ami! ta muse est ma complice;
Ton bras m'a réveillé; c'est toi qui m'as dit: “ Va!
Dans la mêlée encor jetons ensemble un gage.

De plus en plus elle s’engage.
Marchons, et confessons le nom de Jéhova! “

J’unis donc à tes chants quelques chants téméraires.
Prends ton luth immortel: nous combattrons en frères
Pour les mêmes autels et les mêmes foyers.
Montés au même char, comme un couple homérique,
Nous tiendrons, pour lutter dans l’arène lyrique,
Toi la lance, moi les coursiers.

Puis, pour faire une part à la faiblesse humaine,
Je ne sais quelle pente au combat me ramène.
J’ai besoin de revoir ce que j’ai combattu,
De jeter sur l’impie un dernier anathème,
De te dire, à toi, que je t’aime,
Et de chanter encore un hymne à la vertu!

III

Ah! nous ne sommes plus au temps où le poète
Parlait au ciel en prêtre, à la terre en prophète!
Que Moïse, Isaïe, apparaisse en nos champs,
Les peuples qu’ils viendront juger, punir, absoudre,
Dans leurs yeux pleins d’éclairs méconnaîtront la foudre
Qui tonne en éclats dans leurs chants.

Vainement ils iront s’écriant dans les villes:
“ Plus de rébellions! plus de guerres civiles!
Aux autels du Veau-d’Or pourquoi danser toujours?
Dagon va s’écrouler; Baal va disparaître.
Le Seigneur a dit à son prêtre:
“ Pour faire pénitence ils n’ont que peu de jours! “

“ Rois, peuples, couvrez-vous d’un sac souillé de cendre!
Bientôt sur la nuée un juge doit descendre.
Vous dormez! que vos yeux daignent enfin s’ouvrir.
Tyr appartient aux flots, Gomorrhe à l’incendie.

Secouez le sommeil de votre âme engourdie,
Et réveillez-vous pour mourir!

“ Ah! malheur au puissant qui s’enivre en des fêtes,
Riant de l’opprimé qui pleure, et des prophètes!
Ainsi que Balthazar, ignorant ses malheurs,
Il ne voit pas aux murs de la salle bruyante
Les mots qu’une main flamboyante
Trace en lettres de feu parmi les noeuds de fleurs!

“ Il sera rejeté comme ce noir Génie,
Effrayant par sa gloire et par son agonie,
Qui tomba jeune encor, dont ce siècle est rempli.
Pourtant Napoléon du monde était le faîte.
Ses pieds éperonnés des rois pliaient la tête,
Et leur tête gardait le pli.

“ Malheur donc! - Malheur même au mendiant qui frappe,
Hypocrite et jaloux, aux portes du satrape!
À l’esclave en ses fers! au maître en son château!
À qui, voyant marcher l’innocent aux supplices,
Entre deux meurtriers complices,
N’étend point sous ses pas son plus riche manteau!

“ Malheur à qui dira: Ma mère est adultère!
À qui voile un coeur vil sous un langage austère!
À qui change en blasphème un serment effacé!
Au flatteur médisant, reptile à deux visages!
À qui s’annoncera sage entre tous les sages!
Oui, malheur à cet insensé!

“ Peuples, vous ignorez le Dieu qui vous fit naître!
Et pourtant vos regards le peuvent reconnaître
Dans vos biens, dans vos maux, à toute heure, en tout lieu!
Un Dieu compte vos jours, un Dieu règne en vos fêtes!
Lorsqu’un chef vous mène aux conquêtes,
Le bras qui vous entraîne est poussé par un Dieu!

“ À sa voix, en vos temps de folie et de crime,
Les Révolutions ont ouvert leur abîme.
Les justes ont versé tout leur sang précieux;
Et les peuples, troupeau qui dormait sous le glaive,
Ont vu, comme Jacob, dans un étrange rêve,
Des anges remonter aux cieux!

“ Frémissez donc! Bientôt, annonçant sa venue,
Le clairon de l’Archange entrouvrira la nue.
Jour d’éternels tourments! jour d’éternel bonheur,
Resplendissant d’éclairs, de rayons, d’auréoles,
Dieu vous montrera vos idoles,
Et vous demandera: - Qui donc est le Seigneur?

“ La trompette, sept fois sonnant dans les nuées,
Poussera jusqu’à lui, pâles, exténuées,
Les races, à grands flots se heurtant dans la nuit;
Jésus appellera sa mère virginale;
Et la porte céleste, et la porte infernale,
S’ouvriront ensemble avec bruit!

“ Dieu vous dénombrera d’une voix solennelle.
Les rois se courberont sous le vent de son aile.
Chacun lui portera son espoir, ses remords.
Sous les mers, sur les monts, au fond des catacombes,
À travers le marbre des tombes,
Son souffle remûra la poussière des morts!

“ Ô siècle! arrache-toi de tes pensers frivoles.
L’air va bientôt manquer dans l’espace où tu voles!
Mortels! gloire, plaisirs, biens, tout est vanité!
À quoi pensez-vous donc, vous qui dans vos demeures
Voulez voir en riant entrer toutes les heures?...
L’Éternité! l’Éternité! “

IV

Nos sages répondront:—” Que nous veulent ces hommes?
Ils ne sont pas du monde et du temps dont nous sommes.
Ces poètes sont-ils nés au sacré vallon?
Où donc est leur Olympe? où donc est leur Parnasse?
Quel est leur Dieu qui nous menace?
A-t-il le char de Mars? A-t-il l’arc d’Apollon?

“ S’ils veulent emboucher le clairon de Pindare,
N’ont-ils pas Hiéron, la fille de Tyndare,
Castor, Pollux, l’Élide et les Jeux des vieux temps;
L’arène où l’encens roule en longs flots de fumée,
La roue aux rayons d’or, de clous d’airain semée,
Et les quadriges éclatants?

“ Pourquoi nous effrayer de clartés symboliques?
Nous aimons qu’on nous charme en des chants bucoliques,
Qu’on y fasse lutter Ménalque et Palémon.
Pour dire l’avenir à notre âme débile,
On a l’écumante Sibylle,
Que bat à coups pressés l’aile d’un noir démon.

“ Pourquoi dans nos plaisirs nous suivre comme une ombre?
Pourquoi nous dévoiler dans sa nudité sombre
L’affreux sépulcre, ouvert devant nos pas tremblants?
Anacréon, chargé du poids des ans moroses,
Pour songer à la mort se comparait aux roses
Qui mouraient sur ses cheveux blancs.

“ Virgile n’a jamais laissé fuir de sa lyre
Des vers qu’à Lycoris son Gallus ne pût lire.
Toujours l’hymne d’Horace au sein des ris est né;
Jamais il n’a versé de larmes immortelles:
La poussière des cascatelles
Seule a mouillé son luth, de myrtes couronné! “

V

Voilà de quels dédains leurs âmes satisfaites
Accueilleraient, ami, Dieu même et ses prophètes!
Et puis, tu les verrais, vainement irrité,
Continuer, joyeux, quelque festin folâtre,
Ou pour dormir aux sons d’une lyre idolâtre
Se tourner de l’autre côté.

Mais qu’importe! accomplis ta mission sacrée.
Chante, juge, bénis; ta bouche est inspirée!
Le Seigneur en passant t’a touché de sa main;
Et, pareil au rocher qu’avait frappé Moïse,
Pour la foule au désert assise,
La poésie en flots s’échappe de ton sein!

Moi, fussé-je vaincu, j’aimerai ta victoire.
Tu le sais, pour mon coeur, ami de toute gloire,
Les triomphes d’autrui ne sont pas un affront.
Poète, j’eus toujours un chant pour les poètes;
Et jamais le laurier qui pare d’autres têtes
Ne jeta d’ombre sur mon front!

Souris même à l’envie amère et discordante.
Elle outrageait Homère, elle attaquait le Dante.
Sous l’arche triomphale elle insulte au guerrier.
Il faut bien que ton nom dans ses cris retentisse;
Le temps amène la justice:
Laisse tomber l’orage et grandir ton laurier!

VI

Telle est la majesté de tes concerts suprêmes,
Que tu sembles savoir comment les anges mêmes
Sur les harpes du ciel laissent errer leurs doigts!
On dirait que Dieu même, inspirant ton audace,
Parfois dans le désert t’apparaît face à face,
Et qu’il te parle avec la voix!

ODE DEUXIÈME

À M. DE CHATEAUBRIAND

On ne tourmente pas les arbres stériles et desséchés; ceux-là seulement sont battus de pierres dont le front est couronné de fruits d’or. ABENHAMED.

I

Il est, Chateaubriand, de glorieux navires
Qui veulent l’ouragan plutôt que les zéphires.
Il est des astres, rois des cieux étincelants,
Mondes volcans jetés parmi les autres mondes,
Qui volent dans les nuits profondes,
Le front paré des feux qui dévorent leurs flancs.

Le génie a partout des symboles sublimes.
Ses plus chers favoris sont toujours des victimes,
Et doivent aux revers l’éclat que nous aimons;
Une vie éminente est sujette aux orages;
La foudre a des éclats, le ciel a des nuages
Qui ne s’arrêtent qu’aux grands monts!

Oui, tout grand coeur a droit aux grandes infortunes;
Aux âmes que le sort sauve des lois communes
C’est un tribut d’honneur par la terre payé.
Le grand homme en souffrant s’élève au rang des justes.
La gloire en ses trésors augustes
N’a rien qui soit plus beau qu’un laurier foudroyé!

II

Aussi, dans une cour, dis-moi, qu’allais-tu faire?
N’es-tu pas, noble enfant d’une orageuse sphère,
Que nul malheur n’étonne et ne trouve en défaut,
De ces amis des rois, rares dans les tempêtes,

Qui, ne sachant flatter qu’au péril de leurs têtes,
Les courtisent sur l’échafaud?

Ce n’est pas lorsqu’un trône a retrouvé le faîte,
Ce n’est pas dans les temps de puissance et de fête,
Que la faveur des cours sur de tels fronts descend.
Il faut l’onde en courroux, l’écueil et la nuit sombre
Pour que le pilote qui sombre
Jette au phare sauveur un oeil reconnaissant.

Va, c’est en vain déjà qu’aux cours de la conquête
Une main de géant a pesé sur ta tête;
Et, chaque fois qu’au gouffre entraînée à grands pas,
La tremblante patrie errait au gré du crime,
Elle eut pour s’appuyer au penchant de l’abîme
Ton front qui ne se courbe pas!

III

À ton tour soutenu par la France unanime,
Laisse donc s’accomplir ton destin magnanime!
Chacun de tes revers pour ta gloire est compté.
Quand le sort t’a frappé, tu lui dois rendre grâce,
Toi qu’on voit à chaque disgrâce
Tomber plus haut encor que tu n’étais monté!

ODE TROISIÈME

LES FUNÉRAILLES DE LOUIS XVIII

Ces changements lui sont peu difficiles; c’est l’oeuvre de la droite du Très-Haut. PS. LXXVI, 10.

I

La foule, au seuil d’un temple en priant est venue.
Mères, enfants, vieillards, gémissent réunis;
Et l’airain qu’on balance ébranle dans la nue
Les hauts clochers de Saint-Denis.
Le sépulcre est troublé dans ses mornes ténèbres.
La Mort, de ces couches funèbres,
Resserre les rangs incomplets.
Silence au noir séjour que le trépas protège! -
Le Roi Chrétien, suivi de son dernier cortège,
Entre dans son dernier palais.

II

Un autre avait dit: “ De ma race
Ce grand tombeau sera le port;
Je veux, aux rois que je remplace,
Succéder jusque dans la mort.
Ma dépouille ici doit descendre!
C’est pour faire place à ma cendre
Qu’on dépeupla ces noirs caveaux.
Il faut un nouveau maître au monde:
À ce sépulcre, que je fonde,
Il faut des ossements nouveaux.

“ Je promets ma poussière à ces voûtes funestes.
À cet insigne honneur ce temple a seul des droits;
Car je veux que le ver qui rongera mes restes

Ait déjà dévoré des rois.
Et lorsque mes neveux, dans leur fortune altière,
Domineront l’Europe entière,
Du Kremlin à l’Escurial,
Ils viendront tour à tour dormir dans ces lieux sombres,
Afin que je sommeille, escorté de leurs ombres,
Dans mon linceul impérial! “

Celui qui disait ces paroles
Croyait, soldat audacieux,
Voir, en magnifiques symboles,
Sa destinée écrite aux cieux.
Dans ses étreintes foudroyantes,
Son aigle aux serres flamboyantes
Eût étouffé l’aigle romain;
La Victoire était sa compagne;
Et le globe de Charlemagne
Était trop léger pour sa main.

Eh bien! des potentats ce formidable maître
Dans l’espoir de sa mort par le ciel fut trompé.
De ses ambitions c’est la seule peut-être
Dont le but lui soit échappé.
En vain tout secondait sa marche meurtrière;
En vain sa gloire incendiaire
En tous lieux portait son flambeau;
Tout chargé de faisceaux, de sceptres, de couronnes,
Ce vaste ravisseur d’empires et de trônes
Ne put usurper un tombeau!

Tombé sous la main qui châtie,
L’Europe le fit prisonnier.
Premier roi de sa dynastie,
Il en fut aussi le dernier.
Une île où grondent les tempêtes
Reçut ce géant des conquêtes,
Tyran que nul n’osait juger,

Vieux guerrier qui, dans sa misère,
Dut l’obole de Bélisaire
À la pitié de l’étranger.

Loin du sacré tombeau qu’il s’arrangeait naguère,
C’est là que, dépouillé du royal appareil,
Il dort enveloppé de son manteau de guerre,
Sans compagnon de son sommeil.
Et, tandis qu’il n’a plus de l’empire du monde
Qu’un noir rocher battu de l’onde,
Qu’un vieux saule battu du vent,
Un roi longtemps banni, qui fit nos jours prospères,
Descend au lit de mort où reposaient ses pères,
Sous la garde du Dieu vivant.

III

C’est qu’au gré de l’humble qui prie,
Le Seigneur, qui donne et reprend,
Rend à l’Exilé sa patrie,
Livre à l’exil le Conquérant!
Dieu voulait qu’il mourût en France,
Ce Roi, si grand dans la souffrance,
Qui des douleurs portait le sceau,
Pour que, victime consolée,
Du seuil noir de son mausolée,
Il pût voir encor son berceau.

IV

Oh! qu’il s’endorme en paix dans la nuit funéraire!
N’a-t-il pas oublié ses maux pour nos malheurs?
Ne nous lègue-t-i1 pas à son généreux frère,
Qui pleure en essuyant nos pleurs?
N’a-t-i1 pas, dissipant nos rêves politiques,
De notre âge et des temps antiques
Proclamé l’auguste traité?

Loi sage qui, domptant la fougue populaire,
Donne aux sujets égaux un maître tutélaire,
Esclave de leur liberté!

Sur nous un Roi Chevalier veille.
Qu'il conserve l'aspect des cieux!
Que nul bruit de longtemps n'éveille
Ce sépulcre silencieux!
Hélas! le démon régicide,
Qui, du sang des Bourbons avide,
Paya de meurtres leurs bienfaits,
A comblé d'assez de victimes
Ces murs, dépeuplés par des crimes,
Et repeuplés par des forfaits!

Qu'il sache que jamais la couronne ne tombe!
Ce haut sommet échappe à son fatal niveau.
Le supplice où des rois le corps mortel succombe
N'est pour eux qu'un sacre nouveau.
Louis, chargé de fers par des mains déloyales,
Dépouillé des pompes royales,
Sans cour, sans guerriers, sans hérauts,
Gardant sa royauté devant la hache même,
Jusque sur l'échafaud prouva son droit suprême,
En faisant grâce à ses bourreaux!

V

De Saint-Denis, de Sainte-Hélène,
Ainsi je méditais le sort,
Sondant d'une vue incertaine
Ces grands mystères de la mort.
Qui donc êtes-vous, Dieu superbe?
Quel bras jette les tours sous l'herbe,
Change la pourpre en vil lambeau?
D'où vient votre souffle terrible?
Et quelle est la main invisible

Qui garde les clefs du tombeau?

ODE QUATRIÈME

LE SACRE DE CHARLES X

Os superbum conticescat,
Simplex fides acquiescat
Dei magisterio.

Que l’orgueil se taise, que la simple foi contemple l’exercice du pouvoir de Dieu. PROSE, Prières du sacre.

I

L’orgueil depuis trente ans est l’erreur de la terre.
C’est lui qui sous les droits étouffa le devoir;
C’est lui qui dépouilla de son divin mystère
Le sanctuaire du pouvoir.
L’orgueil enfanta seul nos fureurs téméraires,
Et ces lois dont tant de nos frères
Ont subi l’arrêt criminel,
Et ces règnes sanglants, et ces hideuses fêtes,
Où, sur un échafaud se proclamant prophètes,
Des bourreaux créaient l’Éternel!

En vain, pour dissiper cette ingrate folie,
Les leçons du Seigneur sur nous ont éclaté;
Dans les faits merveilleux que notre siècle oublie,
En vain Dieu s’est manifesté!
En vain un conquérant, aux ailes enflammées,
A rempli du bruit des armées
Le monde en ses fers engourdi;
Des peuples obstinés l’aveuglement vulgaire
N’a point vu quelle main poussait ses chars de guerre
Du Septentrion au Midi!

II

Qui jamais de Clovis surpassa l’insolence,
Peuples? dans son orgueil il plaçait son appui.
Ne mettant que le monde et lui dans la balance,
Il crut qu’elle penchait sous lui.
Il bravait de vingt rois les armes épuisées;
Des nations s’étaient brisées
Sur ce Sicambre audacieux;
Sur la terre à ses yeux rien n’était redoutable:
Il fallut, pour courber cette tête indomptable,
Qu’une colombe vînt des cieux!

Peuples! au même autel elle est redescendue!
Elle vient, échappée aux profanations,
Comme elle a de Clovis fléchi l’âme éperdue,
Vaincre l’orgueil des nations.
Que le siècle à son tour comme un roi s’humilie.
De la voix qui réconcilie
L’oracle est enfin entendu;
La royauté, longtemps veuve de ses couronnes,
De la chaîne d’airain qui lie au ciel les trônes
A retrouvé l’anneau perdu.

III

Naguère on avait vu les tyrans populaires,
Attaquant le passé comme un vieil ennemi,
Poursuivre, sous l’abri des marbres séculaires,
Le trésor gardé par Remy.
Du pontife endormi profanant le front pâle,
De sa tunique épiscopale
Ils déchirèrent les lambeaux;
Car ils bravaient la mort dans sa majesté sainte;
Et les vieillards souvent s’écriaient, pleins de crainte:
“ Que leur ont donc fait les tombeaux? “

Mais, trompant des vautours la fureur criminelle,

Dieu garda sa colombe au lys abandonné.
Elle va sur un roi poser encor son aile:
Ce bonheur à Charles est donné!
Charles sera sacré suivant l’ancien usage,
Comme Salomon, le roi sage,
Qui goûta les célestes mets,
Quand Sadoch et Nathan d’un baume l’arrosèrent,
Et, s’approchant de lui, sur le front le baisèrent,
En disant: “ Qu’il vive à jamais! “

IV

Le vieux pays des Francs, parmi ses métropoles,
Compte une église illustre, où venaient tous nos rois,
De ce pas triomphant dont tremblent les deux pôles,
S’humilier devant la Croix.
Le peuple en racontait cent prodiges antiques:
Ce temple a des voûtes gothiques,
Dont les saints aimaient les détours;
Un séraphin veillait à ses portes fermées;
Et les anges du ciel, quand passaient leurs armées,
Plantaient leurs drapeaux sur ses tours!

C’est là que pour la fête on dresse des trophées.
L’or, la moire et l’azur parent les noirs piliers,
Comme un de ces palais où voltigeaient les fées,
Dans les rêves des chevaliers.
D’un trône et d’un autel les splendeurs s’y répondent;
Des festons de flambeaux confondent
Leurs rayons purs dans le saint lieu;
Le lys royal s’enlace aux arches tutélaires;
Le soleil, à travers les vitraux circulaires,
Mêle aux fleurs des roses de feu.

V

Voici que le cortège à pas égaux s’avance.

Le pontife aux guerriers demande CHARLES DIX.
L’autel de Reims revoit l’oriflamme de France
Retrouvée aux murs de Cadix.
Les cloches dans les airs tonnent; le canon gronde;
Devant l’aîné des rois du monde
Tout un peuple tombe à genoux;
Mille cris de triomphe en sons confus se brisent;
Puis le roi se prosterne, et les évêques disent:
“ Seigneur, ayez pitié de nous!

“ Celui qui vient en pompe à l’autel du Dieu juste,
C’est l’héritier nouveau du vieux droit de Clovis,
Le chef des Douze Pairs, que son appel auguste
Convoque en ces sacrés parvis.
Ses preux, quand de sa voix leur oreille est frappée,
Touchent le pommeau de l’épée,
Et l’ennemi pâlit d’effroi;
Lorsque ses légions rentrent après la guerre,
Leur marche pacifique ébranle encor la terre:
Ô Dieu! prenez pitié du Roi!

“ Car vous êtes plus grand que la grandeur des hommes!
Nous vous louons, Seigneur, nous vous confessons Dieu!
Vous nous placez au faîte, et dès que nous y sommes,
À la vie il faut dire adieu!
Vous êtes Sabaoth, le Dieu de la victoire!
Les chérubins, remplis de gloire,
Vous ont proclamé Saint trois fois;
Dans votre éternité le temps se précipite;
Vous tenez dans vos mains le monde qui palpite
Comme un passereau sous nos doigts! “

VI

Le Roi dit: “ Nous jurons, comme ont juré nos pères,
De rendre à nos sujets paix, amour, équité;
D’aimer, aux mauvais jours comme en des temps prospères,

La Charte de leur liberté.
Nous vivrons dans la foi par nos aïeux chérie.
Des Ordres de chevalerie
Nous suivrons le chemin étroit.
Pour sauver l’opprimé nos pas seront agiles.
Ainsi nous le jurons sur les saints Évangiles:
Que Dieu soit en aide au bon droit! “

Montjoie et Saint-Denis! - Voilà que Clovis même
Se lève pour l’entendre; et les deux saints guerriers,
Charlemagne et Louis, portant pour diadème
Une auréole de lauriers;
Et Charles sept, guidé par Jeanne encor ravie;
Et François premier, dont Pavie
Trouva l’armure sans défaut;
Et du dernier Martyr l’héroïque fantôme,
Ce Roi, deux fois sacré pour un double royaume,
À l’autel et sur l’échafaud!

Devant ces grands témoins de la grandeur française,
Le Saint-Chrême de Charle a rajeuni les droits.
Il reçoit, sans faiblir, cette couronne où pèse
La gloire de soixante rois.
L’Archevêque bénit l’Épée héréditaire,
Et le Sceptre, et la Main austère
Dont nul signe n’est démenti;
Puis il plonge à leur tour dans le divin calice
Ces Gants, qu’un roi jamais n’a jetés dans la lice,
Sans qu’un monde en ait retenti!

VII

Entre, ô peuple! - Sonnez, clairons, tambours, fanfare!
Le prince est sur le trône; il est grand et sacré!
Sur la foule ondoyante il brille comme un phare
Des flots d’une mer entouré.
Mille chantres des airs, du peuple heureuse image,

Mêlant leur voix et leur plumage,
Croisent leur vol sous les arceaux;
Car les Francs, nos aïeux, croyaient voir dans la nue
Planer la Liberté, leur mère bien connue,
Sur l'aile errante des oiseaux.

Le voilà Prêtre et Roi! - De ce titre sublime
Puisque le double éclat sur sa couronne a lui,
Il faut qu'il sacrifie. Où donc est la Victime? -
La Victime, c'est encor lui!
Ah! pour les Rois français qu'un sceptre est formidable!
Ils guident ce peuple indomptable,
Qui des peuples règle l'essor;
Le monde entier gravite et penche sur leur trône;
Mais aussi l'indigent, que cherche leur aumône,
Compte leurs jours comme un trésor!

VIII

PRIÈRE

Ô Dieu! garde à jamais ce roi qu'un peuple adore!
Romps de ses ennemis les flèches et les dards,
Qu'ils viennent du couchant, qu'ils viennent de l'aurore,
Sur des coursiers ou sur des chars!
Charles, comme au Sina, t'a pu voir face à face!
Du moins qu'un long bonheur efface
Ses bien longues adversités.
Qu'ici-bas des élus il ait l'habit de fête.
Prête à son front royal deux rayons de ta tête;
Mets deux anges à ses côtés!

ODE CINQUIÈME

AU COLONEL G.-A. GUSTAFFSON

Habet sua sidera tellus. Ancienne devise.

I

Ce siècle, jeune encore, est déjà pour l’histoire
Presque une éternité de malheurs et de gloire.
Tous ceux qu’il a vus naître ont vieilli dans vingt ans.
Il semble, tant sa place est vaste en leur mémoire,
Qu’il ne peut achever ses destins éclatants
Sans fermer avec lui le grand cercle des temps.

Chez des peuples fameux, en des jours qu’on renomme,
Pour un siècle de gloire il suffisait d’un homme.
Le nôtre a déjà vu passer bien des flambeaux!
Il peut lutter sans crainte avec Athène et Rome:
Que lui fait la grandeur des âges les plus beaux?
Il les domine tous, rien que par ses tombeaux!

À peine il était né, que d’Enghien sur la poudre
Mourut, sous un arrêt que rien ne peut absoudre.
Il vit périr Moreau; Byron, nouveau Rhiga.
Il vit des cieux vengés tomber avec sa foudre
Cet aigle dont le vol douze ans se fatigua
Du Caire au Capitole et du Tage au Volga!

—” Qu’importe? dit la foule. Ah! laissons les tempêtes
Naître, grossir, tonner sur ces sublimes têtes;
Pourvu que chaque jour amène son festin,
Que toujours le soleil rayonne pour nos fêtes,
Et qu’on nous laisse en paix couler notre destin,
Oublier jusqu’au soir, dormir jusqu’au matin!

“ Que le crime s’élève et que l’innocent tombe,
Qu’importe? - Des héros sont morts? paix à leur tombe!
Et nous-mêmes?... qui sait si demain nous vivrons?
Quand nous aurons atteint le terme où tout succombe,
Nous dirons: Le temps passe! et nous ignorerons
Quels vents ont amené l’orage sur nos fronts. “

II

Ce ne sont point là tes paroles,
Toi dont nul n’a jamais douté,
Toi qui sans relâche t’immoles
Au culte de la Vérité!
Victime, et vengeur des victimes,
Ton coeur aux dévouements sublimes
S’offrit en tout temps, en tout lieu;
Toute ta vie est un exemple,
Et ta grande âme est comme un temple
D’où ne sort que la voix d’un Dieu!

Il suffit de ton témoignage
Pour que tout mortel, incliné,
Aille rendre un public hommage
À ce qu’il avait profané.
Ta bouche, pareille au temps même,
N’a besoin que d’un mot suprême
Pour récompenser ou punir;
Et, parlant plus haut dans notre âge
Que la flatterie et l’outrage,
Dicte l’histoire à l’avenir!

Puisqu’il n’est plus d’autres miracles
Que les hommes nés parmi nous,
Tu succèdes aux vieux oracles
Que l’on écoutait à genoux.
À ta voix, qui juge les races,
Nos demi-dieux changent de places;

Comme, à des chants mystérieux,
Quand la nuit déroulait ses voiles,
Jadis on voyait les étoiles
Descendre ou monter dans les cieux!

Pour mériter ce rang auguste
Aux vertus par le ciel offert,
Qui plus que lui fut noble et juste?
Et qui, surtout, a plus souffert?
Cet homme a payé tant de gloire
Par des malheurs que la mémoire
Ne peut rappeler sans effroi;
C’est un enfant des Scandinaves,
C’est Gustave, fils des Gustaves;
C’est un exilé; c’est un roi!

III

Il avait un ami dans ses fraîches années,
Comme lui tout empreint du sceau des destinées.
C’est ce jeune d’Enghien qui fut assassiné!
Gustave à ce forfait se jeta sur ses armes;
Mais, quand il vit l’Europe insensible à ses larmes,
Calme et stoïque, il dit: “ Pourquoi donc suis-je né?

“ Puisque du meurtrier les nations vassales
Courbent leurs fronts tremblants sous ses mains colossales;
Puisque sa volonté des princes est la loi;
Puisqu’il est le soleil qui domine leur sphère;
Sur un trône aujourd’hui je n’ai plus rien à faire,
Moi qui voudrais régner en roi! “

Il céda. - Dieu montrait, par cet exemple insigne,
Qu’il refuse parfois la victoire au plus digne;
Que plus tard, pour punir, il apparaît soudain;
Qu’il fait seul ici-bas tomber ce qu’il élève;
Et que, pour balancer Bonaparte et son glaive,

Il fallait déjà plus que le sceptre d’Odin!

Gustave, jeune encor, quitta le diadème,
Pour que rien ne manquât à sa grandeur suprême;
Et, tant que de l’Europe, en proie aux longs revers,
Sous les pas du géant vacilla l’équilibre,
Plus haut que tous les rois il leva son front libre,
Échappé du trône et des fers!

IV

Combien d’un tel exil diffère
Le malheur du tyran banni,
Lorsqu’au fond de l’autre hémisphère
Il tomba, confus et puni!
Quand sous la haine universelle
L’usurpateur enfin chancelle,
Dans sa chute il est insulté;
En vain il lutte, opiniâtre,
Et de sa pourpre de théâtre
Rien ne reste à sa nudité!

Sa morne infortune est pareille
À la mer aux bords détestés,
Dont l’eau morte à jamais sommeille
Sur de fastueuses cités.
Ce lac, noir vengeur de leurs crimes,
Du ciel, qui maudit ses abîmes,
Ne peut réfléchir les tableaux;
Et l’oeil cherche en vain quelque dôme
De l’éblouissante Sodome,
Sous les ténèbres de ses flots.

Gustave! âme forte et loyale!
Si parfois, d’un bras raffermi,
Tu reprends ta robe royale,
C’est pour couvrir quelque ennemi.

Dans ta retraite que j’envie,
Tu portes sur ta noble vie
Un souvenir calme et sans fiel;
Reine, comme toi sans asile,
La Vertu, que la terre exile,
Dans ton grand coeur retrouve un ciel!

V

Ah! laisse croître l’herbe en tes cours solitaires!
Que t’importe, au milieu de tes pensers austères,
Qu’on n’ose, de nos jours, saluer un héros;
Et que, chez d’autres rois, puissants, heureux encore,
Une foule de chars ébranle dès l’aurore
Les grands pavés de marbre et l’azur des vitraux!

Tu règnes cependant! tu règnes sur toute âme
Dont ce siècle glacé n’a pas éteint la flamme;
Sur tout coeur né pour croire, aimer et secourir;
Sur tous ces chevaliers que tant d’oubli protège,
Étranges courtisans dont le rare cortège
N’accourt au seuil des rois qu’à l’heure d’y mourir!

En tous lieux où la foi, l’honneur et le génie
Rendent un libre hommage à la vertu bannie,
Ton nom règne, entouré d’un éclat immortel.
Par un beau dévouement toute vie animée,
Toute gloire nouvelle, en notre âge allumée,
Est un flambeau de plus brûlant sur ton autel!

Ni maître! ni sujet! - Seul homme sur la terre
Qui d’un pouvoir humain ne soit pas tributaire,
Dieu seul sur tes destins a de suprêmes droits;
Et, comme la comète aux clartés vagabondes
Marche libre à travers les soleils et les mondes,
Tu passes à côté des peuples et des rois!

ODE SIXIÈME

LES DEUX ÎLES

Dites-moi d’où il est venu, je vous dirai où il est allé. E. H.

I

Il est deux îles dont un monde
Sépare les deux Océans,
Et qui de loin dominent l’onde,
Comme des têtes de géants.
On devine, en voyant leurs cimes,
Que Dieu les tira des abîmes
Pour un formidable dessein;
Leur front de coups de foudre fume,
Sur leurs flancs nus la mer écume,
Des volcans grondent dans leur sein.

Ces îles, où le flot se broie
Entre des écueils décharnés,
Sont comme deux vaisseaux de proie,
D’une ancre éternelle enchaînés.
La main qui de ces noirs rivages
Disposa les sites sauvages,
Et d’effroi les voulut couvrir,
Les fit si terribles, peut-être,
Pour que Bonaparte y pût naître,
Et Napoléon y mourir!

“ - Là fut son berceau! - Là sa tombe! “
Pour les siècles, c’en est assez.
Ces mots, qu’un monde naisse ou tombe,
Ne seront jamais effacés.
Sur ces îles à l’aspect sombre
Viendront, à l’appel de son ombre,

Tous les peuples de l’avenir;
Les foudres qui frappent leurs crêtes,
Et leurs écueils, et leurs tempêtes,
Ne sont plus que son souvenir!

Loin de nos rives, ébranlées
Par les orages de son sort,
Sur ces deux îles isolées
Dieu mit sa naissance et sa mort;
Afin qu’il pût venir au monde
Sans qu’une secousse profonde
Annonçât son premier moment;
Et que sur son lit militaire,
Enfin, sans remuer la terre,
Il pût expirer doucement!

II

Comme il était rêveur au matin de son âge!
Comme il était pensif au terme du voyage!
C’est qu’il avait joui de son rêve insensé;
Du trône et de la gloire il savait le mensonge;
Il avait vu de près ce que c’est qu’un tel songe,
Et quel est le néant d’un avenir passé!

Enfant, des visions, dans la Corse, sa mère,
Lui révélaient déjà sa couronne éphémère,
Et l’aigle impérial planant sur son pavois;
Il entendait d’avance, en sa superbe attente,
L’hymne qu’en toute langue, aux portes de sa tente,
Son peuple universel chantait tout d’une voix:

III

ACCLAMATION

“ Gloire à Napoléon! gloire au maître suprême!

Dieu même a sur son front posé le diadème.
Du Nil au Borysthène il règne triomphant.
Les rois, fils de cent rois, s’inclinent quand il passe,
Et dans Rome il ne voit d’espace
Que pour le trône d’un enfant!

“ Pour porter son tonnerre aux villes effrayées,
Ses aigles ont toujours les ailes déployées.
Il régit le Conclave, il commande au Divan.
Il mêle à ses drapeaux, de sang toujours humides,
Des croissants pris aux Pyramides,
Et la croix d’or du grand Yvan!

“ Le Mamelouk bronzé, le Goth plein de vaillance,
Le Polonais, qui porte une flamme à sa lance,
Prêtent leur force aveugle à ses ambitions.
Ils ont son voeu pour loi, pour foi sa renommée.
On voit marcher dans son armée
Tout un peuple de nations!

“ Sa main, s’il touche un but où son orgueil aspire,
Fait à quelque soldat l’aumône d’un empire,
Ou fait veiller des rois au seuil de son palais,
Pour qu’il puisse, en quittant les combats ou les fêtes,
Dormir en paix dans ses conquêtes,
Comme un pêcheur sur ses filets!

“ Il a bâti si haut son aire impériale,
Qu’il nous semble habiter cette sphère idéale
Où jamais on n’entend un orage éclater!
Ce n’est plus qu’à ses pieds que gronde la tempête;
Il faudrait, pour frapper sa tête,
Que la foudre pût remonter! “

IV

La foudre remonta! - Renversé de son aire,

Il tomba, tout fumant de cent coups de tonnerre.
Les rois punirent leur tyran.
On l’exposa vivant sur un roc solitaire;
Et le géant captif fut remis par la terre
À la garde de l’océan.

Oh! comme à Sainte-Hélène il dédaignait sa vie,
Quand le soir il voyait, avec un oeil d’envie,
Le soleil fuir sous l’horizon,
Et qu’il s’égarait seul sur le sable des grèves,
Jusqu’à ce qu’un Anglais, l’arrachant de ses rêves,
Le ramenât dans sa prison!

Comme avec désespoir ce prince de la guerre
S’entendait accuser par tous ceux qui naguère
Divinisaient son bras vainqueur!
Car des peuples ligués la clameur solennelle
Répondait à la voix implacable, éternelle,
Qui se lamentait dans son coeur!

V

IMPRÉCATION

“ Honte! opprobre! malheur! anathème! vengeance!
Que la terre et les cieux frappent d’intelligence!
Enfin nous avons vu le colosse crouler!
Que puissent retomber sur ses jours, sur sa cendre,
Tous les pleurs qu’il a fait répandre,
Tout le sang qu’il a fait couler!

“ Qu’à son nom, du Volga, du Tibre, de la Seine,
Des murs de l’Alhambra, des fossés de Vincenne,
De Jaffa, du Kremlin qu’il brûla sans remords,
Des plaines du carnage et des champs de victoire,
Tonne, comme un écho de sa fatale gloire,
La malédiction des morts!

“ Qu’il voie autour de lui se presser ses victimes!
Que tout ce peuple, en foule échappé des abîmes,
Innombrable, annonçant les secrets du cercueil,
Mutilé par le fer, sillonné par la foudre,
Heurtant confusément des os noircis de poudre,
Lui fasse un Josaphat de Sainte-Hélène en deuil!

“ Qu’il vive pour mourir tous les jours, à toute heure!
Que le fier conquérant baisse les yeux, et pleure!
Sachant sa gloire à peine et riant de ses droits,
Des geôliers ont chargé d’une chaîne glacée
Cette main qui s’était lassée
À courber la tête des rois!

“ Il crut que sa fortune, en victoires féconde,
Vaincrait le souvenir du peuple roi du monde;
Mais Dieu vient, et d’un souffle éteint son noir flambeau,
Et ne laisse au rival de l’éternelle Rome
Que ce qu’il faut de place et de temps à tout homme
Pour se coucher dans le tombeau.

“ Ces mers auront sa tombe, et l’oubli la devance.
En vain à Saint-Denis il fit parer d’avance
Un sépulcre de marbre et d’or étincelant;
Le ciel n’a pas voulu que de royales ombres
Vissent, en revenant pleurer sous ces murs sombres,
Dormir dans leur tombeau son cadavre insolent! “

VI

Qu’une coupe vidée est amère! et qu’un rêve,
Commencé dans l’ivresse, avec terreur s’achève!
Jeune, on livre à l’espoir sa crédule raison;
Mais on frémit plus tard, quand l’âme est assouvie,
Hélas! et qu’on revoit sa vie
De l’autre bord de l’horizon!

Ainsi, quand vous passez au pied d’un mont sublime,
Longtemps en conquérant vous admirez sa cime,
Et ses pics, que jamais les ans n’humilieront,
Ses forêts, vert manteau qui pend aux rocs sauvages,
Et ces couronnes de nuages
Qui s’amoncellent sur son front!

Montez donc, et tentez ces zones inconnues! -
Vous croyiez fuir aux cieux... vous vous perdez aux nues!
Le mont change à vos yeux d’aspect et de tableaux;
C’est un gouffre, obscurci de sapins centenaires,
Où les torrents et les tonnerres
Croisent des éclairs et des flots!

VII

Voilà l’image de la gloire:
D’abord, un prisme éblouissant,
Puis un miroir expiatoire,
Où la pourpre paraît du sang!
Tour à tour puissante, asservie,
Voilà quel double aspect sa vie
Offrit à ses âges divers.
Il faut à son nom deux histoires:
Jeune, il inventait ses victoires;
Vieux, il méditait ses revers.

En Corse, à Sainte-Hélène encore,
Dans les nuits d’hiver, le nocher,
Si quelque orageux météore
Brille au sommet d’un noir rocher,
Croit voir le sombre capitaine,
Projetant son ombre lointaine,
Immobile, croiser ses bras;
Et dit que, pour dernière fête,
Il vient régner dans la tempête,

Comme il régnait dans les combats!

VIII

S’il perdit un empire, il aura deux patries,
De son seul souvenir illustres et flétries,
L’une aux mers d’Annibal, l’autre aux mers de Vasco;
Et jamais, de ce siècle attestant la merveille,
On ne prononcera son nom, sans qu’il n’éveille
Aux bouts du monde un double écho!

Telles, quand une bombe ardente, meurtrière,
Décrit dans un ciel noir sa courbe incendiaire,
Se balance au-dessus des murs épouvantés,
Puis, comme un vautour chauve, à la serre cruelle,
Qui frappe en s’abattant la terre de son aile,
Tombe, et fouille à grand bruit le pavé des cités;

Longtemps après sa chute, on voit fumer encore
La bouche du mortier, large, noire et sonore,
D’où monta pour tomber le globe au vol pesant,
Et la place où la bombe, éclatée en murailles,
Mourut, en vomissant la mort de ses entrailles,
Et s’éteignit en embrasant!

ODE SEPTIÈME

À LA COLONNE DE LA PLACE VENDÔME

Parva magnis.

I

Ô monument vengeur! trophée indélébile!
Bronze qui, tournoyant sur ta base immobile,
Sembles porter au ciel ta gloire et ton néant;
Et, de tout ce qu'a fait une main colossale,
Seul es resté debout; - ruine triomphale
De l'édifice du géant!

Débris du Grand Empire et de la Grande Armée,
Colonne, d'où si haut parle la renommée!
Je t'aime: l'étranger t'admire avec effroi.
J'aime tes vieux héros, sculptés par la Victoire,
Et tous ces fantômes de gloire
Qui se pressent autour de toi.

J'aime à voir sur tes flancs, colonne étincelante,
Revivre ces soldats qu'en leur onde sanglante
Ont roulés le Danube, et le Rhin, et le Pô!
Tu mets comme un guerrier le pied sur ta conquête.
J'aime ton piédestal d'armures, et ta tête
Dont le panache est un drapeau!

Au bronze de Henri mon orgueil te marie.
J'aime à vous voir tous deux, honneur de la patrie,
Immortels, dominant nos troubles passagers,
Sortir, signes jumeaux d'amour et de colère,
Lui, de l'épargne populaire,
Toi, des arsenaux étrangers!

Que de fois, tu le sais, quand la nuit sous ses voiles
Fait fuir la blanche lune ou trembler les étoiles,
Je viens, triste, évoquer tes fastes devant moi;
Et, d’un oeil enflammé dévorant ton histoire,
Prendre, convive obscur, ma part de tant de gloire,
Comme un pâtre au banquet d’un Roi!

Que de fois j’ai cru voir, ô Colonne française,
Ton airain ennemi rugir dans la fournaise!
Que de fois, ranimant tes combattants épars,
Heurtant sur tes parois leurs armes dérouillées,
J’ai ressuscité ces mêlées
Qui t’assiègent de toutes parts!

Jamais, ô monument, même ivres de leur nombre,
Les étrangers sans peur n’ont passé sous ton ombre.
Leurs pas n’ébranlent point ton bronze souverain.
Quand le sort une fois les poussa vers nos rives,
Ils n’osaient étaler leurs parades oisives
Devant tes batailles d’airain!

II

Mais quoi! n’entends-je point, avec de sourds murmures,
De ta base à ton front bruire les armures?
Colonne! il m’a semblé qu’éblouissant mes yeux,
Tes bataillons cuivrés cherchaient à redescendre...
Que tes demi-dieux, noirs d’une héroïque cendre,
Interrompaient soudain leur marche vers les cieux!

Leur voix mêlait des noms à leur vieille devise:
“TARENTE, REGGIO, DALMATIE et TRÉVISE!”
Et leurs aigles, sortant de leur puissant sommeil,
Suivaient d’un bec ardent cette aigle à double tête,
Dont l’oeil, ami de l’ombre où son essor s’arrête,
Se baisse à leur regard, comme aux feux du soleil!

Qu’est-ce donc? - Et pourquoi, bronze envié de Rome,
Vois-je tes légions frémir comme un seul homme?
Quel impossible outrage à ta hauteur atteint?
Qui donc a réveillé ces ombres immortelles,
Ces aigles qui, battant ta base de leurs ailes,
Dans leur ongle captif pressent leur foudre éteint?

III

Je comprends: - l’étranger, qui nous croit sans mémoire,
Veut, feuillet par feuillet, déchirer notre histoire,
Écrite avec du sang, à la pointe du fer. -
Ose-t-il, imprudent! heurter tant de trophées?
De ce bronze, forgé de foudres étouffées,
Chaque étincelle est un éclair!

Est-ce Napoléon qu’il frappe en notre armée?
Veut-il, de cette gloire en tant de lieux semée,
Disputer l’héritage à nos vieux généraux?
Pour un fardeau pareil il a la main débile:
L’empire d’Alexandre et les armes d’Achille
Ne se partagent qu’aux héros.

Mais non: l’Autrichien, dans sa fierté qu’il dompte,
Est content si leurs noms ne disent que sa honte.
Il fait de sa défaite un titre à nos guerriers,
Et, craignant des vainqueurs moins que des feudataires,
Il pardonne aux fleurons de nos ducs militaires,
Si ce ne sont que des lauriers.

Bronze! Il n’a donc jamais, fier pour une victoire,
Subi de tes splendeurs l’aspect expiatoire?
D’où vient tant de courage à cet audacieux?
Croit-il impunément toucher à nos annales?
Et comment donc lit-il ces pages triomphales
Que tu déroules dans les cieux?

Est-ce un langage obscur à ses regards timides?
Eh! qu'il s'en fasse instruire au pied des Pyramides,
À Vienne, au vieux Kremlin, au morne Escurial!
Qu'il en parle à ces Rois, cour dorée et nombreuse,
Qui naguère peuplait d'une tente poudreuse
Le vestibule impérial!

IV

À quoi pense-t-il donc, l'étranger qui nous brave?
N'avions-nous pas hier l'Europe pour esclave?
Nous, subir de son joug l'indigne talion!
Non! au champ du combat nous pouvons reparaître.
On nous a mutilés; mais le temps a peut-être
Fait croître l'ongle du lion.

De quel droit viennent-ils découronner nos gloires?
Les Bourbons ont toujours adopté des victoires.
Nos rois t'ont défendu d'un ennemi tremblant,
Ô trophée! à leurs pieds tes palmes se déposent;
Et si tes quatre aigles reposent,
C'est à l'ombre du drapeau blanc.

Quoi! le globe est ému de volcans électriques;
Derrière l'océan grondent les Amériques;
Stamboul rugit; Hellé remonte aux jours anciens;
Lisbonne se débat aux mains de l'Angleterre...
Seul, le vieux peuple franc s'indigne que la terre
Tremble à d'autres pas que les siens!

Prenez garde, étrangers: - nous ne savons que faire!
La paix nous berce en vain dans son oisive sphère,
L'arène de la guerre a pour nous tant d'attrait!
Nous froissons dans nos mains, hélas! inoccupées,
Des lyres, à défaut d'épées!
Nous chantons, comme on combattrait!

Prenez garde! - La France, où grandit un autre âge,
N'est pas si morte encor qu'elle souffre un outrage!
Les partis pour un temps voileront leur tableau.
Contre une injure, ici, tout s'unit, tout se lève,
Tout s'arme, et la Vendée aiguisera son glaive
Sur la pierre de Waterloo.

Vous dérobez des noms! - Quoi donc! faut-il qu'on aille
Lever sur tous vos champs des titres de bataille?
Faut-il, quittant ces noms par la valeur trouvés,
Pour nos gloires, chez vous, chercher d'autres baptêmes?
Sur l'airain de vos canons mêmes
Ne sont-ils point assez gravés?

L'étranger briserait le blason de la France!
On verrait, enhardi par notre indifférence,
Sur nos fiers écussons tomber son vil marteau!
Ah!... comme ce Romain qui remuait la terre,
Vous portez, ô Français! et la paix et la guerre
Dans le pli de votre manteau.

Votre aile en un moment touche, à sa fantaisie,
L'Afrique par Cadix et par Moscou l'Asie.
Vous chassez en courant Anglais, Russes, Germains;
Les tours croulent devant vos trompettes fatales;
Et de toutes les capitales
Vos drapeaux savent les chemins.

Quand leur destin se pèse avec vos destinées,
Toutes les nations s'inclinent détrônées.
La gloire pour vos noms n'a point assez de bruit.
Sans cesse autour de vous les états se déplacent.
Quand votre astre paraît, tous les autres s'effacent;
Quand vous marchez, l'univers suit!

Que l'Autriche en rampant de noeuds vous environne,
Les deux géants de France ont foulé sa couronne!

L’histoire, qui des temps ouvre le Panthéon,
Montre empreints aux deux fronts du vautour d’Allemagne
La sandale de Charlemagne,
L’éperon de Napoléon.

Allez! - Vous n’avez plus l’aigle qui de son aire
Sur tous les fronts trop hauts portait votre tonnerre;
Mais il vous reste encor l’oriflamme et les lys.
Mais c’est le Coq gaulois qui réveille le monde;
Et son cri peut promettre à votre nuit profonde
L’aube du soleil d’Austerlitz!

V

C’est moi qui me tairais.! Moi qu’enivrait naguère
Mon nom saxon, mêlé parmi des cris de guerre!
Moi, qui suivais le vol d’un drapeau triomphant!
Qui, joignant aux clairons ma voix entrecoupée,
Eus pour premier hochet le noeud d’or d’une épée!
Moi, qui fus un soldat quand j’étais un enfant!

Non, Frères! non, Français de cet âge d’attente!
Nous avons tous grandi sur le seuil de la tente.
Condamnés à la paix, aiglons bannis des cieux,
Sachons du moins, veillant aux gloires paternelles,
Garder de tout affront, jalouses sentinelles,
Les armures de nos aïeux!

ODE HUITIÈME

FIN

Ubi defuit orbis.

I

Ainsi d’un peuple entier je feuilletais l’histoire!
Livre fatal de deuil, de grandeur, de victoire.
Et je sentais frémir mon luth contemporain,
Chaque fois que passait un grand nom, un grand crime,
Et que l’une sur l’autre, avec un bruit sublime,
Retombaient les pages d’airain.

Fermons-le maintenant, ce livre formidable.
Cessons d’interroger ce sphinx inabordable
Qui le garde en silence, à la fois monstre et dieu.
L’énigme qu’il propose échappe à bien des lyres;
Il n’en écrit le mot sur le front des empires
Qu’en lettres de sang et de feu.

II

Ne cherchons pas ce mot. - Alors, pourquoi, poète,
Ne t’endormais-tu pas sur ta lyre muette?
Pourquoi la mettre au jour et la prostituer?
Pourquoi ton chant sinistre et ta voix insensée?... -
C’est qu’il fallait à ma pensée
Tout un grand peuple à remuer.

Des révolutions j’ouvrais le gouffre immonde?
C’est qu’il faut un chaos à qui veut faire un monde.
C’est qu’une grande voix dans ma nuit m’a parlé.
C’est qu’enfin je voulais, menant au but la foule,
Avec le siècle qui s’écoule

Confronter le siècle écoulé.

Le génie a besoin d’un peuple que sa flamme
Anime, éclaire, échauffe, embrase comme une âme.
Il lui faut tout un monde à régir en tyran.
Dès qu’il a pris son vol du haut de la falaise,
Pour que l’ouragan soit à l’aise,
Il n’a pas trop de l’océan!

C’est là qu’il peut ouvrir ses ailes; là, qu’il gronde
Sur un abîme large et sur une eau profonde;
C’est là qu’il peut bondir, géant capricieux,
Et tournoyer, debout dans l’orage qui tombe,
D’un pied s’appuyant sur la trombe,
Et d’un bras soutenant les cieux!

LIVRE QUATRIÈME

Spiritus flat ubi vuit.

ODE PREMIÈRE

LE POÈTE

Muse! contemple ta victime! LAMARTINE, L’Enthousiasme.

I

Qu’il passe en paix, au sein d’un monde qui l’ignore,
L’auguste infortuné que son âme dévore!
Respectez ses nobles malheurs;
Fuyez, ô plaisirs vains, son existence austère;
Sa palme qui grandit, jalouse et solitaire,
Ne peut croître parmi vos fleurs.

Il souffre assez de maux, sans y joindre vos joies!
Chaque pas qui l’enfonce en de sublimes voies,
Par une douleur est compté.
Il pleure sa jeunesse avant l’âge envolée,
Sa vie, humble roseau, qui se courbe accablée
Du poids de l’immortalité.

Il pleure, ô belle enfance, et ta grâce et tes charmes,
Et ton rire innocent et tes naïves larmes,
Ton bonheur doux et turbulent,
Et, loin des vastes cieux, l’aile que tu reposes,
Et, dans les jeux bruyants, ta couronne de roses
Que flétrirait son front brûlant!

Il accuse et son siècle, et ses chants, et sa lyre,
Et la coupe enivrante où, trompant son délire,
La gloire verse tant de fiel,
Et ses voeux, poursuivant des promesses funestes,
Et son coeur, et la Muse, et tous ces dons célestes,
Hélas! qui ne sont pas le ciel!

II

Ah! si du moins, couché sur le char de la vie,
L’hymne de son triomphe et les cris de l’envie
Passaient sans troubler son sommeil!
S’il pouvait dans l’oubli préparer sa mémoire!
Ou, voilé de rayons, se cacher dans sa gloire,
Comme un ange dans le soleil!

Mais sans cesse il faut suivre, en la commune arène,
Le flot qui le repousse et le flot qui l’entraîne!
Les hommes troublent son chemin!
Sa voix grave se perd dans leurs vaines paroles,
Et leur fol orgueil mêle à leurs jouets frivoles
Le spectre qui pèse à sa main!

Pourquoi traîner ce roi si loin de ses royaumes?
Qu’importe à ce géant un cortège d’atomes!
Fils du monde, c’est vous qu’il fuit.
Que fait à l’immortel votre éphémère empire?
Sans les chants de sa voix, sans les sons de sa lyre,
N’avez-vous point assez de bruit?

III

Laissez-le dans son ombre où descend la lumière.
Savez-vous qu’une Muse, épurant sa poussière,
Y charme en secret ses ennuis?
Et que, laissant pour lui les éternelles fêtes,
La colombe du Christ et l’aigle des Prophètes
Souvent y visitent ses nuits?

Sa veille redoutable, en ses visions saintes,
Voit les soleils naissants et les sphères éteintes
Passer en foule au fond du ciel;
Et, suivant dans l’espace un choeur brûlant d’archanges,
Cherche, aux mondes lointains, quelles formes étranges

Y revêt l’Être universel.

Savez-vous que ses yeux ont des regards de flamme?
Savez-vous que le voile, étendu sur son âme,
Ne se lève jamais en vain?
De lumière dorée et de flammes rougie,
Son aile, en un instant, de l’infernale orgie
Peut monter au banquet divin.

Laissez donc loin de vous, ô mortels téméraires,
Celui que le Seigneur marqua, parmi ses frères,
De ce signe funeste et beau,
Et dont l’oeil entrevoit plus de mystères sombres
Que les morts effrayés n’en lisent, dans les ombres,
Sous la pierre de leur tombeau!

IV

Un jour vient dans sa vie, où la Muse elle-même,
D’un sacerdoce auguste armant son luth suprême,
L’envoie au monde ivre de sang,
Afin que, nous sauvant de notre propre audace,
Il apporte d’en haut à l’homme qui menace
La prière du Tout-Puissant.

Un formidable esprit descend dans sa pensée.
Il paraît; et soudain, en éclairs élancée,
Sa parole luit comme un feu.
Les peuples prosternés en foule l’environnent;
Sina mystérieux, les foudres le couronnent,
Et son front porte tout un Dieu!

ODE DEUXIÈME

LA LYRE ET LA HARPE

à M. Alph. De L.

Alternis dicetis, amant alterna Camoenae. VIRGILE.

Et caepit loqui, prout Spiritus Sanctus dabat loqui. ACT. APOST.

LA LYRE

Dors, ô fils d'Apollon! ses lauriers te couronnent,
Dors en paix! Les neuf Soeurs t'adorent comme un roi;
De leurs choeurs nébuleux les Songes t'environnent;
La lyre chante auprès de toi!

LA HARPE

Éveille-toi, jeune homme, enfant de la misère!
Un rêve ferme au jour tes regards obscurcis,
Et pendant ton sommeil, un indigent, ton frère,
À ta porte en vain s'est assis!

LA LYRE

Ton jeune âge est cher à la Gloire.
Enfant, la Muse ouvrit tes yeux,
Et d'une immortelle mémoire
Couronna ton nom radieux.
En vain Saturne te menace;
Va, l'Olympe est né du Parnasse,
Les poètes ont fait les dieux!

LA HARPE

Homme, une femme fut ta mère;
Elle a pleuré sur ton berceau;
Souffre donc. Ta vie éphémère
Brille et tremble, ainsi qu’un flambeau.
Dieu, ton maître, a d’un signe austère
Tracé ton chemin sur la terre,
Et marqué ta place au tombeau.

LA LYRE

Chante! Jupiter règne et l’univers l’implore;
Vénus embrase Mars d’un souris gracieux;
Iris brille dans l’air, dans les champs brille Flore;
Chante: Les immortels, du couchant à l’aurore,
En trois pas parcourent les Cieux.

LA HARPE

Prie! Il n’est qu’un vrai Dieu, juste dans sa clémence,
Par la fuite des temps sans cesse rajeuni.
Tout s’achève dans lui, par lui tout recommence;
Son être emplit le monde ainsi qu’une âme immense;
L’Éternel vit dans l’Infini.

LA LYRE

Ta douce Muse à fuir t’invite.
Cherche un abri calme et serein;
Les mortels, que le sage évite,
Subissent le siècle d’airain.
Viens; près de tes Lares tranquilles,
Tu verras de loin dans les villes
Mugir la Discorde aux cent voix.
Qu’importe à l’heureux solitaire
Que l’autan dévaste la terre,
S’il ne fait qu’agiter ses bois!

LA HARPE

Dieu, par qui tout forfait s’expie,
Marche avec celui qui le sert.
Apparais dans la foule impie,
Tel que Jean, qui vint du désert.
Va donc, parle aux peuples du monde;
Dis-leur la tempête qui gronde,
Révèle le juge irrité;
Et, pour mieux frapper leur oreille,
Que ta voix s’élève, pareille
À la rumeur d’une cité!

LA LYRE

L’Aigle est l’oiseau du Dieu qu’avant tous on adore.
Du Caucase à l’Athos l’Aigle planant dans l’air,
Roi du feu qui féconde et du feu qui dévore,
Contemple le soleil et vole sur l’éclair!

LA HARPE

La Colombe descend du ciel qui la salue.
Et, voilant l’Esprit-Saint sous son regard de feu,
Chère au Vieillard choisi comme à la Vierge élue,
Porte un rameau dans l’arche, annonce au monde un Dieu!

LA LYRE

Aime! Eros règne à Gnide, à l’Olympe, au Tartare.
Son flambeau de Sestos allume le doux phare,
Il consume Ilion par la main de Pâris.
Toi, fuis de belle en belle, et change avec leurs charmes.
L’Amour n’enfante que des larmes;
Les Amours sont frères des Ris!

LA HARPE

L’Amour divin défend de la Haine infernale.
Cherche pour ton coeur pur une âme virginale;
Chéris-la, Jéhovah chérissait Israël.
Deux êtres que dans l’ombre unit un saint mystère
Passent en s’aimant sur la terre,
Comme deux exilés du ciel!

LA LYRE

Jouis! c’est au fleuve des ombres
Que va le fleuve des vivants.
Le sage, s’il a des jours sombres,
Les laisse aux dieux, les jette aux vents.
Enfin, comme un pale convive,
Quand la mort imprévue arrive,
De sa couche il lui tend la main;
Et, riant de ce qu’il ignore,
S’endort dans la nuit sans aurore,
En rêvant un doux lendemain!

LA HARPE

Soutiens ton frère qui chancelle,
Pleure si tu le vois souffrir;
Veille avec soin, prie avec zèle,
Vis en songeant qu’il faut mourir.
Le pécheur croit, lorsqu’il succombe,
Que le néant est dans la tombe,
Comme il est dans la volupté;
Mais quand l’ange impur le réclame,
Il s’épouvante d’être une âme,
Et frémit de l’Éternité!

Le poète écoutait, à peine à son aurore,
Ces deux lointaines voix qui descendaient du ciel;
Et plus tard il osa parfois, bien faible encore,

Dire à l’écho du Pinde un hymne du Carmel.

ODE TROISIÈME

MOÏSE SUR LE NIL

à Mme Amable Tastu

En ce même temps, la fille de Pharaon vint au fleuve pour se baigner, accompagnée de ses filles, qui marchaient le long du bord de l’eau. Exode.

“ Mes soeurs, l’onde est plus fraîche aux premiers feux du jour!
Venez: le moissonneur repose en son séjour;
La rive est solitaire encore;
Memphis élève à peine un murmure confus;
Et nos chastes plaisirs, sous ces bosquets touffus,
N’ont d’autre témoin que l’aurore.

“ Au palais de mon père on voit briller les arts;
Mais ces bords pleins de fleurs charment plus mes regards
Qu’un bassin d’or ou de porphyre;
Ces chants aériens sont mes concerts chéris;
Je préfère aux parfums qu’on brûle en nos lambris
Le souffle embaumé du zéphire!

“ Venez: l’onde est si calme et le ciel est si pur!
Laissez sur ces buissons flotter les plis d’azur
De vos ceintures transparentes;
Détachez ma couronne et ces voiles jaloux;
Car je veux aujourd’hui folâtrer avec vous,
Au sein des vagues murmurantes.

“ Hâtons-nous... Mais parmi les brouillards du matin,
Que vois-je? - Regardez à l’horizon lointain...
Ne craignez rien, filles timides!
C’est sans doute, par l’onde entraîné vers les mers,
Le tronc d’un vieux palmier qui, du fond des déserts,
Vient visiter les Pyramides.

“ Que dis-je? Si j’en crois mes regards indécis,
C’est la barque d’Hermès ou la conque d’Isis,
Que pousse une brise légère.
Mais non; c’est un esquif où, dans un doux repos,
J’aperçois un enfant qui dort au sein des flots,
Comme on dort au sein de sa mère.

“ Il sommeille; et, de loin, à voir son lit flottant,
On croirait voir voguer sur le fleuve inconstant
Le nid d’une blanche colombe.
Dans sa couche enfantine il erre au gré du vent;
L’eau le balance, il dort, et le gouffre mouvant
Semble le bercer dans sa tombe!

“ Il s’éveille: accourez, ô vierges de Memphis!
Il crie... Ah! quelle mère a pu livrer son fils
Au caprice des flots mobiles?
Il tend les bras; les eaux grondent de toute part.
Hélas! contre la mort il n’a d’autre rempart
Qu’un berceau de roseaux fragiles.

“ Sauvons-le... - C’est peut-être un enfant d’Israël.
Mon père les proscrit; mon père est bien cruel
De proscrire ainsi l’innocence!
Faible enfant! ses malheurs ont ému mon amour,
Je veux être sa mère: il me devra le jour,
S’il ne me doit pas la naissance. “

Ainsi parlait Iphis, l’espoir d’un roi puissant,
Alors qu’aux bords du Nil son cortège innocent
Suivait sa course vagabonde;
Et ces jeunes beautés qu’elle effaçait encor,
Quand la Fille des Rois quittait ses voiles d’or,
Croyaient voir la Fille de l’Onde.

Sous ses pieds délicats déjà le flot frémit.

Tremblante, la pitié vers l’enfant qui gémit
La guide en sa marche craintive;
Elle a saisi l’esquif! Fière de ce doux poids,
L’orgueil sur son beau front, pour la première fois,
Se mêle à la pudeur naïve.

Bientôt, divisant l’onde et brisant les roseaux,
Elle apporte à pas lents l’enfant sauvé des eaux
Sur le bord de l’arène humide;
Et ses soeurs tour à tour, au front du nouveau-né,
Offrant leur doux sourire à son oeil étonné,
Déposaient un baiser timide!

Accours, toi qui, de loin, dans un doute cruel,
Suivais des yeux ton fils sur qui veillait le ciel;
Viens ici comme une étrangère;
Ne crains rien: en pressant Moïse entre tes bras,
Tes pleurs et tes transports ne te trahiront pas,
Car Iphis n’est pas encor mère!

Alors, tandis qu’heureuse et d’un pas triomphant,
La vierge au roi farouche amenait l’humble enfant,
Baigné des larmes maternelles,
On entendait en choeur, dans les cieux étoilés,
Des anges, devant Dieu de leurs ailes voilés,
Chanter les lyres éternelles.

“ Ne gémis plus, Jacob, sur la terre d’exil;
Ne mêle plus tes pleurs aux flots impurs du Nil:
Le Jourdain va t’ouvrir ses rives.
Le jour enfin approche où vers les champs promis
Gessen verra s’enfuir, malgré leurs ennemis,
Les tribus si longtemps captives.

“ Sous les traits d’un enfant délaissé sur les flots,
C’est l’élu du Sina, c’est le roi des fléaux,
Qu’une vierge sauve de l’onde.

Mortels, vous dont l’orgueil méconnaît l’Éternel,
Fléchissez: un berceau va sauver Israël,
Un berceau doit sauver le monde! “

ODE QUATRIÈME

LE DÉVOUEMENT

In urbi omne mortalium genus vis pestilentiae depopulabatur, nulla coeli intemperie quae occurreret oculis. Sed domus corporibus exanimis, itinera funeribus complebantur; non sexus, non aetas periculo vacua. TACITE.

Dans la ville, la peste dévorait tout ce qui meurt; aucun nuage dans le ciel ne s’offrait aux yeux; mais les maisons étaient pleines de corps sans vie, les voies de funérailles. Ni le sexe ni l’âge n’étaient exempts du péril.

I

Je rends grâce au Seigneur: il m’a donné la vie!
La vie est chère à l’homme, entre les dons du ciel;
Nous bénissons toujours le Dieu qui nous convie
Au banquet d’absinthe et de miel.
Un noeud de fleurs se mêle aux fers qui nous enlacent;
Pour vieillir parmi ceux qui passent,
Tout homme est content de souffrir;
L’éclat du jour nous plaît; l’air des cieux nous enivre.
Je rends grâce au Seigneur: - c’est le bonheur de vivre
Qui fait la gloire de mourir!

Malheureux le mortel qui meurt, triste victime,
Sans qu’un frère sauvé vive par son trépas,
Sans refermer sur lui, comme un Romain sublime,
Le gouffre où se perdent ses pas!
Infortuné le peuple, en proie à l’anathème,
Qui voit, se consumant lui-même,
Périr son nom et son orgueil,
Sans que toute la terre à sa chute s’incline,
Sans qu’un beau souvenir reste sur sa ruine,
Comme un flambeau sur un cercueil!

II

Quand Dieu, las de forfaits, se lève en sa colère,
Il suscite un Fléau formidable aux cités,
Qui laisse après sa fuite un effroi séculaire
Aux murs, longtemps inhabités.
D’un vil germe, ignoré des peuples en démence,
Un Géant pâle, un Spectre immense
Sort et grandit au milieu d’eux;
Et la Ville veut fuir, mais le Monstre fidèle,
Comme un horrible époux, la couvre de son aile,
Et l’étreint de ses bras hideux!

Le peuple en foule alors sous le mal qui fermente
Tombe, ainsi qu’en nos champs la neige aux blancs flocons;
Tout succombe, et partout la mort qui s’alimente
Renaît des cadavres féconds.
Le monstre l’une à l’autre enchaîne ses victimes;
Il les traîne aux mêmes abîmes;
Il se repaît de leurs lambeaux;
Et, parmi les bûchers, le deuil et les décombres,
Les vivants sans abris, tels que d’impures ombres,
Errent loin des morts sans tombeaux.

Quand le cirque s’ouvrait, aux jours des funérailles,
Tous les Romains en paix, par leurs licteurs couverts,
Voyaient de loin lutter les captifs des batailles,
Livrés aux tigres des déserts.
Ainsi dans leur effroi les nations s’assemblent;
Un long cri monte aux cieux qui tremblent,
Au loin de mers en mers porté.
Le monde armé, craignant l’Hydre aux ailes rapides,
Garde sous leur fléau ces mourants homicides,
Et les menace, épouvanté!

III

Alors n’est-il pas vrai, sybarites des villes,
Que les jeux sont plus doux, et les plaisirs meilleurs,
Lorsqu’un mal plus affreux que les haines civiles
Sème en d’autres murs les douleurs?
Loin des couches de feu qu’infecte un germe immonde,
Qu’avec charme l’enfant du monde
Sur un lit parfumé s’endort!
Et qu’on savoure mieux l’air natal de la vie,
Quand tout un peuple en deuil, qui pleure et nous envie,
Respire ailleurs un vent de mort!

Chacun reste absorbé dans un cercle éphémère.
La mère embrasse en paix l’enfant qui lui sourit,
Sans s’informer des lieux où le sein d’une mère
Est mortel au fils qu’il nourrit!
Quelque pitié vulgaire au fond des coeurs s’éveille,
Entre les fêtes de la veille
Et les fêtes du lendemain;
Car tels sont les humains, plaindre les importune.
Ils passent à côté d’une grande infortune,
Sans s’arrêter sur le chemin.

IV

Quelques hommes pourtant, qu’un feu secret anime,
Se lèvent de la foule, et chacun dans leurs yeux
Cherche quel beau destin, quel avenir sublime
Rayonne sur leurs fronts joyeux. -
Un triomphe éclatant peut-être les réclame?
Quel espoir enivre leur âme?
Quel bien? quel trésor? quel honneur?... -
Ainsi toujours, hélas! dans ce monde stérile,
Si la vertu paraît, à son aspect tranquille
Nous la prenons pour le bonheur!

Ô peuples! ces mortels, qu’un Dieu guide et seconde,
Vont d’un pas assuré, d’un regard radieux,

Combattre le fléau devant qui fuit le monde:
Adressez-leur vos longs adieux.
Et vous, ô leurs parents, leurs épouses, leurs mères!
Contenez vos larmes amères;
Laissez les victimes s’offrir;
Ne les poursuivez pas de plaintes téméraires;
Devaient-ils préférer aucun d’entre leurs frères
À ceux pour qui l’on peut mourir?

Bientôt s’ouvre pour eux la cité solitaire.
Mille spectres vivants les appellent en pleurs,
Surpris qu’il soit encore un. mortel sur la terre
Qui vienne au cri de leurs douleurs.
Ils parlent; et déjà leur voix rassure et guide
Ces peuples qu’un fléau livide
Pousse au tombeau d’un bras de fer,
Et le monstre, attaqué dans les murs qu’il opprime,
Frémit comme Satan, quand, sauveur et victime,
Un Dieu parut dans son enfer!

Ils contemplent de près l’hydre non assouvie.
Pour ravir ses secrets résignés à leur sort,
Leur art audacieux lui dispute la vie,
Ou l’interroge dans la mort.
Quand leurs secours sont vains, leur prière console.
Le mourant croit à leur parole
Que le ciel ne peut démentir;
Et si le trépas même, enfin, frappe leur tête,
De l’apôtre serein l’humble voix ne s’arrête
Qu’au dernier souffle du martyr!

V

Ô mortels trop heureux! qui pourrait vous atteindre,
Vous qui domptez la mort en affrontant ses coups?
Lorsqu’en vous admirant la foule ose vous plaindre
Je vous suis de mes pleurs jaloux.

Infortuné! jamais, victime volontaire,
Je n’irai, pour. sauver la terre,
Braver un fléau dévorant,
Ni, calmant par mes soins ses douleurs meurtrières,
Mêler ma plainte amie et mes saintes prières
Aux soupirs impurs d’un mourant!

Hélas! ne puis-je aussi m’immoler pour mes frères?
N’est-il plus d’opprimés? n’est-il plus de bourreaux?
Sur quel noble échafaud, dans quels murs funéraires
Chercher le trépas des héros?
Oui, que brisant mon corps, la torture sanglante,
Sur la croix, à ma soif brûlante
Offre le breuvage de fiel;
Fier et content, Seigneur, je dirai vos louanges;
Car l’ange du martyre est le plus beau des anges
Qui portent les âmes au ciel!

ODE CINQUIÈME

À L’ACADÉMIE DES JEUX FLORAUX

At mihi jam puero coelestia sacra placebant,
Inque suum furtim musa trahebat opus. OVIDE.

Vous dont le poétique empire
S’étend des bords du Rhône aux rives de l’Adour,
Vous dont l’art tout-puissant n’est qu’un joyeux délire,
Rois des combats du chant, rois des jeux de la lyre,
Ô maîtres du savoir d’amour!

Aussi belle qu’à sa naissance,
Votre muse se rit des ans et des douleurs;
Le temps semble en passant respecter son enfance;
Et la gloire, à ses yeux se voilant d’innocence,
Cache ses lauriers sous des fleurs.

Salut! - Enfant, j’ai pour ma mère
Cueilli quelques rameaux dans vos sacrés bosquets,
Votre main s’est offerte à ma main téméraire;
Étranger, vous m’avez accueilli comme un frère,
Et fait asseoir dans vos banquets.

Parmi les juges de l’arène
L’athlète fut admis, vainqueur bien faible encor.
Jamais pourtant, errant sur les monts de Pyrène,
Il n’avait réveillé de belle suzeraine
Aux sons hospitaliers du cor.

D’une fée, aux lointaines sphères,
Jamais il n’avait dit les magiques jardins;
Ni, le soir, pour charmer des dames peu sévères,
Conté, près du foyer, les exploits des trouvères,
Et les amours des paladins.

D’autres, d’une voix immortelle,
Vous peindront d’heureux jours en de joyeux accords.
Moi, la douleur m’éprouve, et mes chants viennent d’elle.
Je souffre et je console, et ma muse fidèle
Se souvient de ceux qui sont morts!

ODE SIXIÈME

LE GÉNIE

à M. Le Vicomte de Chateaubriand

Les circonstances ne forment pas les hommes; elles les montrent: elles dévoilent, pour ainsi dire, la royauté du Génie, dernière ressource des peuples éteints. Ces rois qui n'en ont pas le nom, mais qui règnent véritablement par la force du caractère et la grandeur des pensées, sont élus par les événements auxquels ils doivent commander. Sans ancêtres et sans postérité, seuls de leur race, leur mission remplie ils disparaissent en laissant à l'avenir des ordres qu'il exécutera fidèlement. F. DE LA MENNAIS.

I

Malheur à l'enfant de la terre,
Qui, dans ce monde injuste et vain,
Porte en son âme solitaire
Un rayon de l'esprit divin!
Malheur à lui! l'impure envie
S'acharne sur sa noble vie,
Semblable au Vautour éternel,
Et, de son triomphe irritée,
Punit ce nouveau Prométhée
D'avoir ravi le feu du ciel!

La Gloire, fantôme céleste,
Apparaît de loin à ses yeux;
Il subit le pouvoir funeste
De son sourire impérieux!
Ainsi l'oiseau, faible et timide,
Veut en vain fuir l'hydre perfide
Dont l'oeil le charme et le poursuit,
Il voltige de cime en cime,

Puis il accourt, et meurt victime
Du doux regard qui l'a séduit.

Ou, s'il voit luire enfin l'aurore
Du jour, promis à ses efforts;
Vivant, si son front se décore
Du laurier, qui croît pour les morts;
L'erreur, l'ignorance hautaine,
L'injure impunie et la haine
Usent les jours de l'immortel.
Du malheur imposant exemple,
La Gloire l'admet dans son temple,
Pour l'immoler sur son autel!

II

Pourtant, fallût-il être en proie
À l'injustice, à la douleur,
Qui n'accepterait avec joie
Le génie, au prix du malheur?
Quel mortel, sentant dans son âme
S'éveiller la céleste flamme
Que le temps ne saurait ternir,
Voudrait, redoutant sa victoire,
Au sein d'un bonheur sans mémoire,
Fuir son triste et noble avenir?

Chateaubriand, je t'en atteste,
Toi qui, déplacé parmi nous,
Reçus du ciel le don funeste
Qui blesse notre orgueil jaloux:
Quand ton nom doit survivre aux âges,
Que t'importe, avec ses outrages,
À toi, géant, un peuple nain?
Tout doit un tribut au génie.
Eux, ils n'ont que la calomnie:
Le serpent n'a que son venin.

Brave la haine empoisonnée;
Le nocher rit des flots mouvants,
Lorsque sa poupe couronnée
Entre au port, à l'abri des vents.
Longtemps ignoré dans le monde,
Ta nef a lutté contre l'onde
Souvent prête à l'ensevelir;
Ainsi jadis le vieil Homère
Errait inconnu sur la terre,
Qu'un jour son nom devait remplir.

III

Jeune encor, quand des mains du crime
La France en deuil reçut des fers,
Tu fuis: le souffle qui t'anime
S'éveilla dans l'autre univers.
Contemplant ces vastes rivages,
Ces grands fleuves, ces bois sauvages,
Aux humains tu disais adieu;
Car dans ces lieux que l'homme ignore
Du moins ses pas n'ont point encore
Effacé les traces de Dieu.

Tu vins, dans un temps plus tranquille,
Fouler cette terre des arts
Où croît le laurier de Virgile,
Où tombent les murs des Césars.
Tu vis la Grèce humble et domptée:
Hélas! il n'est plus de Tyrtée
Chez ces peuples, jadis si grands;
Les grecs courbent leurs fronts serviles,
Et le rocher des Thermopyles
Porte les tours de leurs tyrans!

Ces cités, que vante l'histoire,

Pleurent leurs enfants aguerris;
Le vieux souvenir de leur gloire
N'habite plus que leurs débris.
Les dieux ont fui: dans les prairies,
Adieu les blanches théories!
Plus de jeux, plus de saints concerts!
Adieu les fêtes fraternelles!
L'airain, qui gronde aux Dardanelles,
Trouble seul les temples déserts.

Mais si la Grèce est sans prestiges,
Tu savais des lieux solennels
Où sont de plus sacrés vestiges,
Des monuments plus éternels,
Une tombe pleine de vie,
Et Jérusalem asservie
Qu'un pacha foule sans remord,
Et le bédouin, fils du Numide,
Et Carthage, et la Pyramide,
Tente immobile de la mort!

Enfin, au foyer de tes pères,
Tu vins, rapportant pour trésor
Tes maux aux rives étrangères,
Et les hautes leçons du sort.
Tu déposas ta douce lyre:
Dès lors, la raison qui t'inspire
Au sénat parla par ta voix;
Et la Liberté rassurée
Confia sa cause sacrée
À ton bras, défenseur des Rois.

Dans cette arène où l'on t'admire,
Sois fier d'avoir tant combattu,
Honoré du double martyre
Du génie et de la vertu.
Poursuis, remplis notre espérance;

Sers ton prince, éclaire la France,
Dont les destins vont s’accomplir.
L’Anarchie, altière et servile,
Pâlit devant ton front tranquille
Qu’un tyran n’a point fait pâlir.

Que l’envie, aux pervers unie,
Te poursuive de ses clameurs,
Ton noble essor, fils du Génie,
T’enlève à ces vaines rumeurs;
Tel l’oiseau du Cap des Tempêtes
Voit les nuages sur nos têtes
Rouler leurs flots séditieux;
Pour lui, loin des bruits de la terre,
Bercé par son vol solitaire,
Il va s’endormir dans les cieux!

ODE SEPTIÈME

LA FILLE D’O-TAÏTI

Que fait-il donc, celui que sa douleur attend?
Sans doute il n’arrive pas, celui qu’elle aime tant.
ALFRED DE VIGNY, Dolorida.

“ Oh! dis-moi, tu veux fuir? et la voile inconstante
Va bientôt de ces bords t’enlever à mes yeux?
Cette nuit j’entendais, trompant ma douce attente,
Chanter les matelots qui repliaient leur tente.
Je pleurais à leurs cris joyeux.

“ Pourquoi quitter notre île? En ton île étrangère,
Les cieux sont-ils plus beaux? a-t-on moins de douleurs?
Les tiens, quand tu mourras, pleureront-ils leur frère?
Couvriront-ils tes os du plane funéraire
Dont on ne cueille pas les fleurs?

“ Te souvient-il du jour où les vents salutaires
T’amenèrent vers nous pour la première fois?
Tu m’appelas de loin sous nos bois solitaires,
Je ne t’avais point vu jusqu’alors sur nos terres,
Et pourtant je vins à ta voix.

“ Oh! j’étais belle alors; mais les pleurs m’ont flétrie.
Reste, ô jeune étranger! ne me dis pas adieu.
Ici, nous parlerons de ta mère chérie;
Tu sais que je me plais aux chants de ta patrie,
Comme aux louanges de ton Dieu.

“ Tu rempliras mes jours; à toi je m’abandonne.
Que t’ai-je fait pour fuir? Demeure sous nos cieux.
Je guérirai tes maux, je serai douce et bonne,
Et je t’appellerai du nom que l’on te donne

Dans le pays de tes aïeux!

“ Je serai, si tu veux, ton esclave fidèle,
Pourvu que ton regard brille à mes yeux ravis.
Reste, ô jeune étranger! reste, et je serai belle.
Mais tu n’aimes qu’un temps, comme notre hirondelle;
Moi, je t’aime comme je vis.

“ Hélas! tu veux partir. - Aux monts qui t’ont vu naître,
Sans doute quelque vierge espère ton retour.
Eh bien! daigne avec toi m’emmener, ô mon maître!
Je lui serai soumise, et l’aimerai peut-être,
Si ta joie est dans son amour!

“ Loin de mes vieux parents, qu’un tendre orgueil enivre,
Du bois où dans tes bras j’accourus sans effroi,
Loin des fleurs, des palmiers, je ne pourrai plus vivre.
Je mourrais seule ici. Va, laisse-moi te suivre,
Je mourrai du moins près de toi.

“ Si l’humble bananier accueillit ta venue,
Si tu m’aimas jamais, ne me repousse pas.
Ne t’en va pas sans moi dans ton île inconnue,
De peur que ma jeune âme, errante dans la nue,
N’aille seule suivre tes pas! “

Quand le matin dora les voiles fugitives,
En vain on la chercha sous son dôme léger;
On ne la revit plus dans les bois, sur les rives.
Pourtant la douce vierge, aux paroles plaintives,
N’était pas avec l’étranger.

ODE HUITIÈME

L’HOMME HEUREUX

à M. Ulric Guttinguer

Beatus qui non prosper!

“ Je vous abhorre, ô dieux! Hélas! Si jeune encore,
Je puis déjà ce que je veux!
Accablé de vos dons, ô dieux, je vous abhorre.
Que vous ai-je donc fait pour combler tous mes voeux?

“ Du détroit de Léandre aux colonnes d’Alcide,
Mes vaisseaux parcourent les mers;
Mon palais engloutit, ainsi qu’un gouffre avide,
Les trésors des cités et les fruits des déserts.

“ Je dors au bruit des eaux, au son lointain des lyres,
Sur un lit aux pieds de vermeil;
Et sur mon front brûlant appelant les zéphires,
Dix vierges de l’Indus veillent pour mon sommeil.

“ Je laisse, en mes banquets, à l’ingrat parasite
Des mets que repousse ma main;
Et, dans les plats dorés, ma faim que rien n’excite
Dédaigne des poissons nourris de sang humain.

“ Aux bords du Tibre, aux monts qui vomissent les laves,
J’ai des jardins délicieux;
Mes domaines, partout couverts de mes esclaves,
Fatiguent mes coursiers, importunent mes yeux!

“ Je vois les grands me craindre et César me sourire;
Je protège les suppliants;
J’ai des pavés de marbre et des bains de porphyre;

Mon char est salué d’un peuple de clients.

“ Je m’ennuie au forum, je m’ennuie aux arènes;
Je demande à tous: Que fait-on?
Je fais jeter par jour un esclave aux murènes,
Et je m’amuse à peine à ce jeu de Caton.

“ Les femmes de l’Europe et celles de l’Asie
Touchent peu mon coeur déjà mort;
Dans une coupe d’or l’ennui me rassasie,
Et le pauvre qui pleure est jaloux de mon sort!

“ D’implacables faveurs me poursuivant sans cesse,
Vous m’avez flétri dans ma fleur,
Dieux! donnez l’espérance à ma froide jeunesse;
Je vous rends tous ces biens pour un peu de bonheur. “

Dans le temple, traînant sa langueur opulente,
Ainsi parlait Celsus de sa couche indolente.
Il blasphémait ses dieux; et, bénissant le ciel,
Un martyr expirait devant l’impur autel!

ODE NEUVIÈME

L’ÂME

Je ne sais quel destin trouble l’esprit des mortels; semblables à des cylindres, ils roulent çà et là, accablés d’une infinité de maux... Mais prends courage, la race des hommes est divine; lorsque, dépouillé de ton corps, tu t’élèveras dans les régions éthérées, la mort n’aura plus sur toi de pouvoir, tu seras un dieu immortel et incorruptible. Vers dorés de Pythagore.

I

Fils du ciel, je fuirai les honneurs de la terre;
Dans mon abaissement je mettrai mon orgueil;
Je suis le roi banni, superbe et solitaire,
Qui veut le trône ou le cercueil.
Je hais le bruit du monde, et je crains sa poussière.
La retraite, paisible et fière,
Réclame un coeur indépendant;
Je ne veux point d’esclave, et ne veux point de maître;
Laissez-moi rêver seul au désert de mon être: -
J’y cherche le buisson ardent.

Toi, qu’aux douleurs de l’homme un Dieu caché convie,
Compagne sous les cieux de l’humble humanité,
Passagère immortelle, esclave de la vie,
Et reine de l’éternité,
Âme! aux instants heureux comme aux heures funèbres,
Rayonne au fond de mes ténèbres,
Règne sur mes sens combattus;
Oh! de ton sceptre d’or romps leur chaîne fatale,
Et nuit et jour, pareille à l’antique vestale,
Veille au feu sacré des vertus.

Est-ce toi dont le souffle a visité ma lyre,
Ma lyre, chaste soeur des harpes de Sion;

Et qui viens dans ma nuit, avec un doux sourire,
Comme une belle vision?
Sur mes terrestres fers, ô vierge glorieuse,
Pose l’aile mystérieuse
Qui t’emporte au ciel dévoilé.
Viens-tu m’apprendre, écho de la voix infinie,
Quelque secret d’amour, de joie ou d’harmonie,
Que les anges t’ont révélé?

II

Vis-tu ces temps d’innocence,
Où, quand rien n’était maudit,
Dieu, content de sa puissance,
Fit le monde et s’applaudit?
Vis-tu, dans ces jours prospères,
Du jeune aïeul de nos pères
Ève enchanter le réveil,
Et, dans la sainte phalange,
Au front du premier archange
Luire le premier soleil?

Vis-tu, des torrents de l’être,
Parmi de brûlants sillons,
Les astres, joyeux de naître,
S’échapper en tourbillons;
Quand Dieu, dans sa paix féconde,
Penché de loin sur le monde,
Contemplait ces grands tableaux,
Lui, centre commun des âmes,
Foyer de toutes les flammes,
Océan de tous les flots?

III

Suivais-tu du Seigneur la marche solennelle,
Lorsque l’Esprit porta la parole éternelle

De l’abîme des eaux aux régions du feu;
Au jour où, menaçant la terre virginale,
Comme, d’un char léger pressant l’ardent essieu,
Un roi vaincu refuse une lutte inégale,
Le Chaos éperdu s’enfuyait devant Dieu?

As-tu vu, loin des cieux, châtiant ses complices,
Le Roi du mal, armé du sceptre des supplices,
Dans le gouffre où jamais la terreur ne s’endort?
Lieu funèbre, où, pleurant les songes de la terre,
Le crime se réveille, enfantant le remord,
Et qu’un Dieu visita, revêtu de mystère,
Quand d’enfer en enfer il poursuivit la Mort?

IV

Montre-moi l’Éternel, donnant, comme un royaume,
Le temps à l’éphémère et l’espace à l’atome;
Le vide obscur, des nuits tombeau silencieux;
Les foudres se croisant dans leur sphère tonnante,
Et la comète rayonnante,
Tramant sa chevelure éparse dans les cieux.

Mon esprit sur ton aile, ô puissante compagne,
Vole de fleur en fleur, de montagne en montagne,
Remonte aux champs d’azur d’où l’homme fut banni,
Du secret éternel lève le voile austère;
Car il voit plus loin que la terre;
Ma pensée est un monde errant dans l’infini.

V

Mais la vie, ô mon âme! a des pièges dans l’ombre.
Sois le guerrier captif qui garde sa prison,
Des feux de l’ennemi compte avec soin le nombre,
Et, sous le jour brûlant ainsi qu’en la nuit sombre,
Surveille au loin tout l’horizon.

Je ne suis point celui qu'une ardeur vaine enflamme,
Qui refuse à son coeur un amour chaste et saint,
Porte à Dagon l'encens que Jéhovah réclame,
Et, voyageur sans guide, erre autour de son âme,
Comme autour d'un cratère éteint.

Il n'ose, offrant à Dieu sa nudité parée,
Flétrir les fleurs d'Eden d'un souffle criminel;
Fils banni, qui, tramant sa misère ignorée,
Mendie et pleure, assis sur la borne sacrée
De l'héritage paternel.

Et les anges entre eux disent: " Voilà l'impie!
Il a bu des faux biens le philtre empoisonneur;
Devant le juste heureux que son crime s'expie;
Dieu rejette son âme! elle s'est assoupie
Durant la veille du Seigneur. "

Toi, - puisses-tu bientôt, secouant ma poussière,
Retourner radieuse au radieux séjour!
Tu remonteras pure à la source première,
Et, comme le soleil emporte sa lumière,
Tu n'emporteras que l'amour!

VI

Malheureux l'insensé dont la vue asservie
Ne sent point qu'un esprit s'agite dans la vie!
Mortel, il reste sourd à la voix du tombeau;
Sa pensée est sans aile et son coeur est sans flamme;
Car il marche, ignorant son âme,
Tel qu'un aveugle errant qui porte un vain flambeau.

ODE DIXIÈME

LE CHANT DE L’ARÈNE

Généreux Grecs, voilà les prix que remporteront les vainqueurs. HOMÈRE.

L’athlète, vainqueur dans l’arène,
Est en honneur dans la cité;
    Son nom, sans que le temps l’entraîne,
    Par les peuples est répété,
    Depuis cette plage inféconde
    Où dort sur la borne du monde
    L’Hiver, vieillard au dur sommeil,
    Jusqu’aux lieux où, quand naît l’aurore,
    On entend, sous l’onde sonore,
    Hennir les coursiers du Soleil.

    Voici la fête d’Olympie!
    Tressez l’acanthe et le laurier!
    Que les dieux confondent l’impie!
    Que l’antique audace assoupie
    Se réveille au coeur du guerrier!

    Venez, vous que la gloire enchaîne!
    Voyez les prêtres d’Apollon,
    Pour votre victoire prochaine,
    Ravir des couronnes au chêne
    Qui jadis a vaincu Milon!

    Venez de Corinthe et de Crète,
    De Tyr aux tissus précieux,
    De Scylla, que bat la tempête,
    Et d’Athos, où l’aigle s’arrête
    Pour voir de plus haut dans les cieux!

    Venez de l’île des Colombes,

Venez des mers de l’Archipel,
De Rhode, aux riches hécatombes,
Dont les guerriers jusqu’en leurs tombes
De Bellone entendent l’appel!

Venez du palais centenaire
Dont Cécrops a fondé la tour;
D’Argos, de Sparte qu’on vénère;
De Lemnos où naît le tonnerre,
D’Amathonte où naquit l’amour!

Les temples saints, les gynécées,
Chargés de verdoyant festons,
Tels que de jeunes fiancées,
Sous des guirlandes enlacées,
Ont caché leurs chastes frontons.

Les Archontes et les Éphores
Dans le stade se sont assis;
Les vierges et les canéphores
Ont purifié les amphores
Suivant les rites d’Éleusis.

On a consulté la Pythie,
Et ceux qui parlent en rêvant.
À l’heure où s’éveille Clytie,
D’un vautour fauve de Scythie
On a jeté la plume au vent.

Le vainqueur de la course agile
Recevra deux trépieds divins,
Et la coupe, agreste et fragile,
Dont Bacchus a touché l’argile,
Lorsqu’il goûta les premiers vins.

Celui dont le disque mobile
Renversera les trois faisceaux,

Aura cette urne indélébile,
Que sculpta d’une main habile
Phlégon, du pays de Naxos.

Juges de la gloire innocente,
Nous offrons au lutteur ardent
Une chlamyde éblouissante
De Sydon, qui, riche et puissante,
Joint le caducée au trident.

Lutteurs, discoboles, athlètes,
Réparez vos forces au bain;
Puis venez vaincre dans nos fêtes,
Afin d’obtenir des poètes
Un chant sur le mode thébain!

L’athlète, vainqueur dans l’arène,
Est en honneur dans la cité;
Son nom, sans que le temps l’entraîne,
Par les peuples est répété,
Depuis cette plage inféconde
Où dort sur la borne du monde
L’Hiver, vieillard au dur sommeil,
Jusqu’aux lieux où, quand naît l’aurore,
On entend sous l’onde sonore
Hennir les coursiers du Soleil.

ODE ONZIÈME

LE CHANT DU CIRQUE

Panem et circenses! JUVÉNAL.

César, empereur magnanime,
Le monde, à te plaire unanime,
À tes fêtes doit concourir!
Éternel héritier d’Auguste,
Salut! prince immortel et juste,
César! sois salué par ceux qui vont mourir!

Seul entre tous les rois, César aux dieux de Rome
Peut en libations offrir le sang de l’homme.
À nos solennités nous invitons la Mort.
De monstres pour nos jeux nous dépeuplons le monde;
Nous mêlons dans le cirque, où fume un sang immonde,
Les tigres d’Hyrcanie aux barbares du Nord.

Des colosses d’airain, des vases de porphyre,
Des ancres, des drapeaux que gonfle le zéphyre,
Parent du champ fatal les murs éblouissants;
Les parfums chargent l’air d’un odorant nuage,
Car le peuple romain aime que le carnage
Exhale ses vapeurs parmi des flots d’encens.

Des portes tout à coup les gonds d’acier g émissent.
La foule entre en froissant les grilles qui frémissent;
Les panthères dans l’ombre ont tressailli d’effroi,
Et, poussant mille cris qu’un long bruit accompagne,
Comme un fleuve épandu de montagne en montagne,
De degrés en degrés roule le peuple-roi.

Les deux chaises d’ivoire ont reçu les édiles.
L’hippopotame informe et les noirs crocodiles

Nagent autour du cirque en un large canal;
Dans leurs cages de fer les cinq cents lions grondent;
Les vestales en choeur, dont les chants se répondent,
Apportent l’autel chaste et le feu virginal.

L’oeil ardent, le sein nu, l’impure courtisane
Près du foyer sacré pose un trépied profane.
On voile de cyprès l’autel des suppliants.
À travers leur cortège et de rois et d’esclaves,
Les sénateurs, vêtus d’augustes laticlaves,
Dans la foule, de loin, comptent tous leurs clients.

Chaque vierge est assise auprès d’une matrone.
À la voix des tribuns, on voit autour du trône
Les soldats du prétoire en cercle se ranger;
Les prêtres de Cybèle entonnent la louange;
Et, sur de vils tréteaux, les histrions du Gange
Chantent, en attendant ceux qui vont s’égorger.

Les voilà!... - Tout le peuple applaudit et menace
Ces captifs, que César d’un bras puissant ramasse
Des temples de Manès aux antres d’ Irmensul.
Ils entrent tour à tour, et le licteur les nomme;
Vil troupeau, que la mort garde aux plaisirs de Rome,
Et que d’un fer brûlant a marqué le consul!

On découvre en leurs rangs, à leur tête penchée,
Des Juifs, traînant partout une honte cachée;
Plus loin, d’altiers Gaulois que nul péril n’abat;
Et d’infâmes Chrétiens, qui, dépouillés d’armures,
Refusant aux bourreaux leurs chants ou leurs murmures,
Vont souffrir sans orgueil et mourir sans combat.

Bientôt, quand rugiront les bêtes échappées,
Les murs, tout hérissés de piques et d’épées,
Livreront cette proie entière à leur fureur.
Du trône de César la pourpre orne le faîte,

Afin qu’un jour plus doux, durant l’ardente fête,
Flatte les yeux divins du clément empereur.

César, empereur magnanime,
Le monde, à te plaire unanime,
À tes fêtes doit concourir!
Éternel héritier d’Auguste,
Salut! prince immortel et juste,
César! sois salué par ceux qui vont mourir!

ODE DOUZIÈME

LE CHANT DU TOURNOI

Servants d’amour, regardez doucement
Aux échafauds anges de paradis;
Lors jouterez fort et joyeusement,
Et vous serez honorés et chéris.
Ancienne ballade.

Largesse, ô chevaliers! largesse aux suivants d’armes!
Venez tous! soit qu’au sein des jeux ou des alarmes,
Votre écu de Milan porte le vert dragon,
Le manteau noir d’Agra, semé de blanches larmes,
La fleur de lys de France, ou la croix d’Aragon.

Déjà la lice est ouverte;
Les clercs en ont fait le tour;
La bannière blanche et verte
Flotte au front de chaque tour;
La foule éclate en paroles:
Les légères banderoles
Se mêlent en voltigeant;
Et le héros du portique
Sur l’or de sa dalmatique
Suspend le griffon d’argent.

Les maisons peuplent leur faîte;
Au loin gronde le beffroi;
Tout nous promet une fête
Digne des regards du roi.
La reine, à ce jour suprême,
A de son épargne même
Consacré douze deniers,
Et pour l’embellir encore,
Racheté des fers du Maure

Douze chrétiens prisonniers.

Or, comme la loi l’ordonne,
Chevaliers au coeur loyal,
Avant que le clairon sonne,
Écoutez l’édit royal!
Car, sans l’entendre en silence,
Celui qui saisit la lance
N’a plus qu’un glaive maudit.
Croyez ces conseils prospères!
C’est ce qu’ont dit à nos pères
Ceux à qui Dieu l’avait dit!

D’abord, des saintes louanges
Chantez les versets bénis,
Chantez Jésus, les Archanges,
Et monseigneur saint Denis!
Jurez sur les Évangiles
Que, si vos bras sont fragiles,
Rien ne ternit votre honneur;
Que vous pourrez, s’il se lève,
Montrer au roi votre glaive,
Comme votre âme au Seigneur!

D’un saint touchez la dépouille!
Jurez, comtes et barons,
Que nulle fange ne souille
L’or pur de vos éperons!
Que de ses vassaux fidèles,
Dans ses noires citadelles,
Nul de vous n’est le bourreau!
Que, du sort bravant l’épreuve,
Pour l’orphelin et la veuve
Votre épée est sans fourreau!

Preux que l’honneur accompagne,
N’oubliez pas les vertus

Des vieux pairs de Charlemagne,
Des vieux champions d’Artus!
Malheur au vainqueur sans gloire,
Qui doit sa lâche victoire
À de hideux nécromants!
Honte au guerrier sans vaillance
Qui combat la noble lance
Avec d’impurs talismans!

Un jour, sur les murs funestes
De son infâme château,
On voit pendre ses vils restes
Aux bras d’un sanglant poteau;
Éternisant ses supplices,
Les enchanteurs, ses complices,
Dans les ombres déchaînés,
Parmi d’affreux sortilèges
À leurs festins sacrilèges
Mêlent ses os décharnés!

Mais gloire au guerrier austère!
Gloire au pieux châtelain!
Chaque belle sans mystère
Brode son nom sur le lin.
Le mélodieux trouvère
À son glaive, qu’on révère,
Consacre un chant immortel;
Dans sa tombe est une fée;
Et l’on donne à son trophée
Pour piédestal un autel.

Donc, en vos âmes courtoises,
Gravez, pairs et damoisels,
La loi des joutes gauloises
Et des galants carrousels!
Par les juges de l’épée,
Par leur belle détrompée,

Les félons seront honnis.
Leur opprobre est sans refuges;
Ceux qui condamnent les juges
Par les dames sont punis!

Largesse, ô chevaliers! largesse aux suivants d’armes!
Venez tous! soit qu’au sein des jeux ou des alarmes,
Votre écu de Milan porte le vert dragon,
Le manteau noir d’Agra, semé de blanches larmes,
La fleur de lys de France, ou la croix d’Aragon.

ODE TREIZIÈME

L'ANTÉCHRIST

Après que les mille ans seront accomplis, Satan sera délié; il sortira de sa prison, et il séduira les nations qui sont aux quatre coins du monde, Gog et Magog. SAINT JEAN, Apocalypse.

I

Il viendra, - quand viendront les dernières ténèbres;
Que la source des jours tarira ses torrents;
Qu'on verra les soleils, au front des nuits funèbres,
Pâlir comme des yeux mourants;
Quand l'abîme inquiet rendra des bruits dans l'ombre;
Que l'enfer comptera le nombre
De ses soldats audacieux;
Et qu'enfin le fardeau de la suprême voûte
Fera, comme un vieux char tout poudreux de sa route,
Crier l'axe affaibli des cieux.

Il viendra, - quand la mère, au fond de ses entrailles,
Sentira tressaillir son fruit épouvanté;
Quand nul ne suivra plus les saintes funérailles
Du juste, en sa tombe attristé;
Lorsqu'approchant des mers sans lit et sans rivages,
L'homme entendra gronder, sous le vaisseau des âges,
La vague de l'éternité.

Il viendra, - quand l'orgueil, et le crime, et la haine,
De l'antique Alliance enfreint le voeu;
Quand les peuples verront, craignant leur fin prochaine,
Du monde décrépit se détacher la chaîne;
Les astres se heurter dans leurs chemins de feu;
Et dans le ciel, - ainsi qu'en ses salles oisives
Un hôte se promène, attendant ses convives, -

Passer et repasser l’ombre immense de Dieu.

II

Parmi les nations il luira comme un signe.
Il viendra des captifs dissiper la rançon;
Le Seigneur l’enverra pour dévaster la vigne,
Et pour disperser la moisson.
Les peuples ne sauront, dans leur stupeur profonde,
Si ses mains dans quelque autre monde
Ont porté le sceptre ou les fers;
Et dans leurs chants de deuil et leurs hymnes de fête,
Ils se demanderont si les feux de sa tête
Sont des rayons ou des éclairs.

Tantôt ses traits au ciel emprunteront leurs charmes;
Tel qu’un ange, vêtu de radieuses armes,
Tout son corps brillera de reflets éclatants,
Et ses yeux souriront, baignés de douces larmes,
Comme la jeune aurore au front du beau printemps.

Tantôt, hideux amant de la nuit solitaire,
Noir dragon, déployant l’aile aux ongles de fer,
Pâle, et s’épouvantant de son propre mystère,
Du sein profané de la terre
Ses pas feront monter les vapeurs de l’enfer.

La nature entendra sa voix miraculeuse.
Son souffle emportera les cités aux déserts;
Il guidera des vents la course nébuleuse;
Il aura des chars dans les airs;
Il domptera la flamme, il marchera sur l’onde;
On verra l’arène inféconde
Sous ses pieds de fleurs s’émailler;
Et les astres sur lui descendre en auréole;
Et les morts tressaillir au bruit de sa parole,
Comme s’ils allaient s’éveiller!

Fleuve aux flots débordés, volcan aux noires laves,
Il n’aura point d’amis pour avoir plus d’esclaves;
Il pèsera sur tous de toute sa hauteur;
Le monde, où passera le funeste fantôme,
Paraîtra sa conquête et non pas son royaume;
Il ne sera qu’un maître où Dieu fut un pasteur.

Il semblera, courbé sur la terre asservie,
Porter un autre poids, vivre d’une autre vie.
Il ne pourra vieillir, il ne pourra changer.
Les fleurs que nous cueillons pour lui seront flétries;
Sans tendresse et sans foi, dans toutes nos patries
Il sera comme un étranger.

Son attente jamais ne sera l’espérance;
Battu de ses désirs comme d’un flot des mers,
Sa science en secret envîra l’ignorance,
Et n’aura que des fruits amers.
Il bravera l’arrêt suspendu sur sa tête
Calme, comme avant la tempête,
Et muet, comme après la mort;
Et son coeur ne sera qu’une arène insensible
Où, dans le noir combat d’un hymen impossible,
Le Crime étreindra le Remord!

Du temps prêt à finir il saisira le reste.
Son bras du dernier port éteindra le fanal!
Dieu, qui combla de maux son envoyé céleste,
Accablera de biens le Messie infernal.
Couché sur ses plaisirs ainsi que sur des proies,
Ses yeux n’exprimeront, durant son vain pouvoir,
Que la honte cachée au sein des fausses joies,
Et l’orgueil qui se lève au fond du désespoir.

De l’enfer aux mortels apportant les messages,
Sa main, semant l’erreur au champ de la raison,

Mêlera dans sa coupe, où boiront les faux sages,
Les venins aux parfums et le miel au poison.
Comme un funèbre mur, entre le ciel et l’homme
Il osera placer un effroyable adieu;
Ses forfaits n’auront pas de langue qui les nomme;
Et l’athée effrayé dira: Voilà mon Dieu!

III

Enfin, quand ce héraut du suprême mystère
Aura de crime en crime usé ses noirs destins,
Que la sainte vertu, que la foi salutaire
Trouveront tous les coeurs éteints;
Quand du signe du meurtre et du sceau des supplices
Il aura marqué ses complices;
Que son troupeau sera compté;
Il quittera la vie ainsi qu’une demeure,
Et son règne ici-bas n’aura pour dernière heure
Que l’heure de l’éternité.

ODE QUATORZIÈME

ÉPITAPHE

Hic praeteritos commemora dies, aeternos meditare.

Jeune ou vieux, imprudent ou sage,
Toi qui, de cieux en cieux errant comme un nuage,
Suis l'instinct d'un plaisir ou l'appel d'un besoin,
Voyageur, où vas-tu si loin? -
N'est-ce donc pas ici le but de ton voyage?

La Mort, qui partout pose un pied victorieux,
A couvert mes splendeurs d'ombres expiatoires.
Mon nom même a subi son voile injurieux;
Et le morne oubli cache à ton oeil curieux
S'il est dans mon néant quelqu'une de tes gloires.

Passant, comme toi j'ai passé.
Le fleuve est revenu se perdre dans sa source.
Fais silence; assieds-toi sur ce marbre brisé.
Pose un instant le poids qui fatigue ta course:
J'eus de même un fardeau qu'ici j'ai déposé.

Si tu veux du repos, si tu cherches de l'ombre,
Ta couche est prête, accours! loin du bruit on y dort.
Si ton fragile esquif lutte sur la mer sombre,
Viens, c'est ici l'écueil; viens, c'est ici le port!

Ne sens-tu rien ici dont tressaille ton âme?
Rien, qui borne tes pas d'un cercle impérieux?
Sur l'asile qui te réclame,
Ne lis-tu pas ton nom en mots mystérieux?

Éphémère histrion qui sait son rôle à peine,
Chaque homme, ivre d'audace ou palpitant d'effroi,

Sous le sayon du pâtre ou la robe du roi,
Vient passer à son tour son heure sur la scène.

Ne foule pas les morts d’un pied indifférent:
Comme moi, dans leur ville il te faudra descendre;
L’homme de jour en jour s’en va pâle et mourant,
Et tu ne sais quel vent doit emporter ta cendre.

Mais devant moi ton coeur à peine est agité!
Quoi donc! pas un soupir! pas même une prière!
Tout ton néant te parle, et n’est point écouté!

Tu passes! - en effet, qu’importe cette pierre?
Que peut cacher la tombe à ton oeil attristé?
Quelques os desséchés, un reste de poussière,
Rien peut-être, - et l’éternité!

ODE QUINZIÈME

UN CHANT DE FÊTE DE NÉRON

À M. le comte Alfred de V.

Nescio quid molle atque facetum. HORACE.

Amis! l'ennui nous tue, et le sage l'évite!
Venez tous admirer la fête où vous invite
Néron, César, Consul pour la troisième fois;
Néron, maître du monde et dieu de l'harmonie,
Qui, sur le mode d'Ionie,
Chante, en s'accompagnant de la lyre à dix voix!

Que mon joyeux appel sur l'heure vous rassemble!
Jamais vous n'aurez eu tant de plaisirs ensemble,
Chez Pallas l'affranchi, chez le grec Agénor;
Ni dans ces gais festins, d'où s'exilait la gêne,
Où l'austère Sénèque, en louant Diogène,
Buvait le falerne dans l'or;

Ni lorsque sur le Tibre, Aglaé, de Phalère,
Demi-nue, avec nous voguait dans sa galère,
Sous des tentes d'Asie aux brillantes couleurs;
Ni quand, au son des luths, le préfet des Bataves
Jetait aux lions vingt esclaves,
Dont on avait caché les chaînes sous des fleurs!

Venez, Rome à vos yeux va brûler, - Rome entière!
J'ai fait sur cette tour apporter ma litière
Pour contempler la flamme en bravant ses torrents.
Que sont les vains combats des tigres et de l'homme?
Les sept monts aujourd'hui sont un grand cirque, où Rome
Lutte avec les feux dévorants.

C’est ainsi qu’il convient au maître de la terre
De charmer son ennui profond et solitaire!
Il doit lancer parfois la foudre, comme un dieu!
Mais, venez, la nuit tombe et la fête commence.
Déjà l’Incendie, hydre immense,
Lève son aile sombre et ses langues de feu!

Voyez-vous? voyez-vous? sur sa proie enflammée,
Il déroule en courant ses replis de fumée;
Il semble caresser ces murs qui vont périr;
Dans ses embrassements les palais s’évaporent...
— Oh! que n’ai-je aussi, moi, des baisers qui dévorent,
Des caresses qui font mourir!

Écoutez ces rumeurs, voyez ces vapeurs sombres,
Ces hommes dans les feux errant comme des ombres,
Ce silence de mort par degrés renaissant!
Les colonnes d’airain, les portes d’or s’écroulent!
Des fleuves de bronze qui roulent
Portent des flots de flamme au Tibre frémissant!

Tout périt! jaspe, marbre, et porphyre, et statues,
Malgré leurs noms divins dans la cendre abattues.
Le fléau triomphant vole au gré de mes voeux,
Il va tout envahir dans sa course agrandie,
Et l’Aquilon joyeux tourmente l’incendie,
Comme une tempête de feux.

Fier Capitole, adieu! - Dans les feux qu’on excite,
L’aqueduc de Sylla semble un pont du Cocyte.
Néron le veut: ces tours, ces dômes tomberont.
Bien: sur Rome, à la fois, partout, la flamme gronde!
— Rends-lui grâces, Reine du monde:
Vois quel beau diadème il attache à ton front!

Enfant, on me disait que les voix sibyllines
Promettaient l’avenir aux murs des sept collines,

Qu’aux pieds de Rome, enfin, mourrait le temps dompté,
Que son astre immortel n’était qu’à son aurore... -
Mes amis! dites-moi combien d’heures encore
Peut durer son éternité?

Qu’un incendie est beau lorsque la nuit est noire!
Érostrate lui-même eût envié ma gloire.
D’un peuple à mes plaisirs qu’importent les douleurs?
Il fuit: de toutes parts le brasier l’environne... -
Otez de mon front ma couronne,
Le feu qui brûle Rome en flétrirait les fleurs.

Quand le sang rejaillit sur vos robes de fête,
Amis, lavez la tache avec du vin de Crète;
L’aspect du sang n’est doux qu’au regard des méchants.
Couvrons un jeu cruel de voluptés sublimes.
Malheur à qui se plaît au cri de ses victimes! -
Il faut l’étouffer dans des chants.

Je punis cette Rome et je me venge d’elle!
Ne poursuit-elle pas d’un encens infidèle
Tour à tour Jupiter et ce Christ odieux?
Qu’enfin à leur niveau sa terreur me contemple!
Je veux avoir aussi mon temple,
Puisque ces vils Romains n’ont point assez de dieux.

J’ai détruit Rome, afin de la fonder plus belle.
Mais que sa chute au moins brise la croix rebelle!
Plus de chrétiens! allez, exterminez-les tous!
Que Rome de ses maux punisse en eux les causes;
Exterminez!... - Esclave! apporte-moi des roses,
Le parfum des roses est doux!

ODE SEIZIÈME

LA DEMOISELLE

Un rien sait l'animer; curieuse et volage,
Elle va parcourant tous les objets flatteurs,
Sans se fixer jamais, non plus que sur les fleurs
Les zéphyrs vagabonds, doux rivaux des abeilles,
Ou le baiser ravi sur des lèvres vermeilles.
ANDRÉ CHÉNIER.

Quand la demoiselle dorée
S'envole au départ des hivers,
Souvent sa robe diaprée,
Souvent son aile est déchirée
Aux mille dards des buissons verts.

Ainsi, jeunesse vive et frêle,
Qui, t'égarant de tous côtés,
Voles où ton instinct t'appelle,
Souvent tu déchires ton aile
Aux épines des voluptés.

ODE DIX-SEPTIÈME

À MON AMI S.-B.

Perseverando. DEVISE DES DUCIE.

L’aigle, c’est le génie! oiseau de la tempête,
Qui des monts les plus hauts cherche le plus haut faîte;
Dont le cri fier, du jour chante l’ardent réveil;
Qui ne souille jamais sa serre dans la fange,
Et dont l’oeil flamboyant incessamment échange
Des éclairs avec le soleil.

Son nid n’est pas un nid de mousse; c’est une aire,
Quelque rocher, creusé par un coup de tonnerre,
Quelque brèche d’un pic, épouvantable aux yeux,
Quelque croulant asile, aux flancs des monts sublimes,
Qu’on voit, battu des vents, pendre entre deux abîmes,
Le noir précipice et les cieux!

Ce n’est pas l’humble ver, les abeilles dorées,
La verte demoiselle aux ailes bigarrées
Qu’attendent ses petits, béants, de faim pressés;
Non! c’est l’oiseau douteux, qui dans la nuit végète;
C’est l’immonde lézard, c’est le serpent qu’il jette,
Hideux, aux aiglons hérissés.

Nid Royal! palais sombre, et que d’un flot de neige
La roulante avalanche en bondissant assiège!
Le génie y nourrit ses fils avec amour,
Et, tournant au soleil leurs yeux remplis de flammes,
Sous son aile de feu couve de jeunes âmes,
Qui prendront des ailes un jour!

Pourquoi donc t’étonner, Ami, si sur ta tête,
Lourd de foudres, déjà le nuage s’arrête?

Si quelque impur reptile en ton nid se débat?
Ce sont tes premiers jeux, c’est ta première fête:
Pour vous autres aiglons, chaque heure a sa tempête,
Chaque festin est un combat.

Rayonne, il en est temps! et, s’il vient un orage,
En prisme éblouissant change le noir nuage.
Que ta haute pensée accomplisse sa loi.
Viens, joins ta main de frère à ma main fraternelle.
Poète, prends ta lyre; aigle, ouvre ta jeune aile;
Étoile, étoile, lève-toi!

La brume de ton aube, Ami, va se dissoudre.
Fais-toi connaître, aiglon, du soleil, de la foudre.
Viens arracher un nom par tes chants inspirés;
Viens; cette gloire, en butte à tant de traits vulgaires,
Ressemble aux fiers drapeaux qu’on rapporte des guerres,
Plus beaux quand ils sont déchirés!

Vois l’astre chevelu qui, royal météore,
Roule, en se grossissant des mondes qu’il dévore;
Tel, ô jeune géant, qui t’accrois tous les jours,
Tel ton génie ardent, loin des routes tracées,
Entraînant dans son cours des mondes de pensées,
Toujours marche et grandit toujours!

ODE DIX-HUITIÈME

JÉHOVAH

Domini enim sunt cardines terræ, et posuit super eos orbem. CANT. ANNAE, I.

Jéhovah est le maître des deux pôles, et sur eux il faut tourner le monde. JOSEPH DE MAISTRE, Soirées de Saint-Pétersbourg.

Gloire à Dieu seul! son nom rayonne en ses ouvrages!
Il porte dans sa main l’univers réuni;
Il mit l’éternité par delà tous les âges,
Par delà tous les cieux il jeta l’infini.

Il a dit au chaos sa parole féconde,
Et d’un mot de sa voix laissé tomber le monde!
L’archange auprès de lui compte les nations;
Quand, des jours et des lieux franchissant les espaces,
Il dispense aux siècles leurs races,
Et mesure leur temps aux générations!

Rien n’arrête en son cours sa puissance prudente.
Soit que son souffle immense, aux ouragans pareil,
Pousse de sphère en sphère une comète ardente,
Ou dans un coin du monde éteigne un vieux soleil!

Soit qu’il sème un volcan sous l’océan qui gronde,
Courbe ainsi que des flots le front altier des monts,
Ou de l’enfer troublé touchant la voûte immonde,
Au fond des mers de feu chasse les noirs démons!

Oh! la création se meut dans ta pensée,
Seigneur! tout suit la voie en tes desseins tracée;
Ton bras jette un rayon au milieu des hivers,
Défend la veuve en pleurs du publicain avide,

Ou dans un ciel lointain, séjour désert du vide,
Crée en passant un univers!

L’homme n’est rien sans lui, l’homme, débile proie,
Que le malheur dispute un moment au trépas.
Dieu lui donne le deuil ou lui reprend la joie.
Du berceau vers la tombe il a compté ses pas.

Son nom, que des élus la harpe d’or célèbre,
Est redit par les voix de l’univers sauvé;
Et lorsqu’il retentit dans son écho funèbre,
L’enfer maudit son roi par les cieux réprouvé!

Oui, les anges, les saints, les sphères étoilées,
Et les âmes des morts devant toi rassemblées,
Ô Dieu! font de ta gloire un concert solennel;
Et tu veux bien que l’homme, être humble et périssable,
Marchant dans la nuit sur le sable,
Mêle un chant éphémère à cet hymne éternel!

Gloire à Dieu seul! son nom rayonne en ses ouvrages,
Il porte dans sa main l’univers réuni;
Il mit l’éternité par delà tous les âges,
Par delà tous les cieux il jeta l’infini!

LIVRE CINQUIÈME

Prend-moy tel que je suy. Devise des Ély.

ODE PREMIÈRE

PREMIER SOUPIR

C’est que j’ai rencontré des regards dont la flamme
Semble avec mes regards ou briller ou mourir,
Et cette âme, soeur de mon âme,
Hélas! que j’attendais pour aimer et souffrir.
ÉMILE DESCHAMPS.

Sois heureuse, ô ma douce amie,
Salue en paix la vie et jouis des beaux jours;
Sur le fleuve du temps mollement endormie,
Laisse les flots suivre leur cours!

Va, le sort te sourit encore,
Le ciel ne peut vouloir, dissipe tout effroi,
Qu’un jour triste succède à ta joyeuse aurore.
Le ciel doit m’écouter quand pour toi je l’implore.
Notre avenir commun ne pèse que sur moi!
Bientôt tu peux m’être ravie:
Peut-être, loin de toi, demain j’irai languir.
Quoi, déjà tout est sombre, et fatal dans ma vie!
J’ai dû t’aimer, je dois te fuir!

Puis, - hélas! sur mon front que le malheur retombe!
Il faudra qu’à l’absence, à de nouveaux désirs,
Un sentiment bien doux succombe:
Tu m’oublîras dans les plaisirs,
Je me souviendrai dans la tombe.

Oui, je mourrai; déjà ma lyre est en deuil.
Jeune, je m’éteindrai, laissant peu de mémoire,
Sans peur; puisque de front j’ai contemplé la gloire,
Je puis voir de près le cercueil.
L’Élysée immortel est près des noirs royaumes,

Et la gloire et la mort ne sont que deux fantômes,
En habits de fête ou de deuil!

Sois heureuse, ô ma douce amie,
Jouis en paix de tes beaux jours;
Sur le fleuve du temps mollement endormie,
Laisse les flots suivre leur cours!

ODE DEUXIÈME

REGRET

Il s’est trouvé parfois, comme pour faire voir
Que du bonheur en nous est encor le pouvoir,
Deux âmes s’élevant sur les plaines du monde,
Toujours l’une pour l’autre existence féconde,
Puissantes à sentir avec un feu pareil,
Double et brûlant rayon né d’un même soleil,
Vivant comme un seul être, intime et pur mélange,
Semblables dans leur vol aux deux ailes d’un ange,
Ou telles que des nuits les jumeaux radieux
D’un fraternel éclat illuminent les cieux.
Si l’homme a séparé leur ardeur mutuelle,
C’est alors que l’on voit, et rapide et fidèle,
Chacune, de la foule écartant l’épaisseur,
Traverser l’univers et voler à sa soeur.
ALFRED DE VIGNY, Héléna.

Oui, le bonheur bien vite a passé dans ma vie!
On le suit; dans ses bras on se livre au sommeil;
Puis, comme cette vierge aux champs crétois ravie,
On se voit seul à son réveil.

On le cherche de loin dans l’avenir immense;
On lui crie: “ Oh! reviens, compagnon de mes jours. “
Et le plaisir accourt; mais sans remplir l’absence
De celui qu’on pleure toujours.

Moi, si l’impur plaisir m’offre sa vaine flamme,
Je lui dirai: “ Va, fuis, et respecte mon sort:
Le bonheur a laissé le regret dans mon âme;
Mais toi, tu laisses le remord! “

Pourtant je ne dois point troubler votre délire,

Amis; je veux paraître ignorer les douleurs;
Je souris avec vous, je vous cache ma lyre
Lorsqu’elle est humide de pleurs!

Chacun de vous peut-être, en son coeur solitaire,
Sous des ris passagers étouffe un long regret;
Hélas! nous souffrons tous ensemble sur la terre,
Et nous souffrons tous en secret!

Tu n’as qu’une colombe, à tes lois asservie;
Tu mets tous tes amours, vierge, dans une fleur.
Mais à quoi bon? La fleur passe comme la vie,
L’oiseau fuit comme le bonheur!

On est honteux des pleurs; on rougit de ses peines,
Des innocents chagrins, des souvenirs touchants;
Comme si nous n’étions sous les terrestres chaînes
Que pour la joie et pour les chants!

Hélas! il m’a donc fui sans me laisser de trace,
Mais pour le retenir j’ai fait ce que j’ai pu,
Ce temps où le bonheur brille, et soudain s’efface,
Comme un sourire interrompu!

ODE TROISIÈME

AU VALLON DE CHERIZY

Factus sum peregrinus... et quaesivi qui simul contristaretur, et non fuit. PS. LXVIII.
Perfide gressus meos semitis tuis. PS. XVI.

Je suis devenu voyageur... et j’ai cherché qui s’affligerait avec moi, et nul n’est venu.

Permets à mes pas de suivre ta trace.

Le voyageur s’assied sous votre ombre immobile,
Beau vallon; triste et seul, il contemple en rêvant
L’oiseau qui fuit l’oiseau, l’eau que souille un reptile,
Et le jonc qu’agite le vent!

Hélas! l’homme fuit l’homme; et souvent avant l’âge
Dans un coeur noble et pur se glisse le malheur;
Heureux l’humble roseau qu’alors un prompt orage
En passant brise dans sa fleur!

Cet orage, ô vallon, le voyageur l’implore.
Déjà las de sa course, il est bien loin encore
Du terme où ses maux vont finir;
Il voit devant ses pas, seul pour se soutenir,
Aux rayons nébuleux de sa funèbre aurore,
Le grand désert de l’avenir!

De dégoûts en dégoûts il va traîner sa vie.
Que lui font ces faux biens qu’un faux orgueil envie?
Il cherche un coeur fidèle, ami de ses douleurs;
Mais en vain: nuls secours n’aplaniront sa voie,
Nul parmi les mortels ne rira de sa joie,
Nul ne pleurera de ses pleurs!

Son sort est l’abandon; et sa vie isolée

Ressemble au noir cyprès qui croît dans la vallée.
Loin de lui, le lys vierge ouvre au jour son bouton;
Et jamais, égayant son ombre malheureuse,
Une jeune vigne amoureuse
À ses sombres rameaux n'enlace un vert feston.

Avant de gravir la montagne,
Un moment au vallon le voyageur a fui.
Le silence du moins répond à son ennui.
Il est seul dans la foule: ici, douce compagne,
La solitude est avec lui!

Isolés comme lui, mais plus que lui tranquilles,
Arbres, gazons, riants asiles,
Sauvez ce malheureux du regard des humains!
Ruisseaux, livrez vos bords, ouvrez vos flots dociles
À ses pieds qu'a souillés la fange de leurs villes,
Et la poudre de leurs chemins!

Ah! laissez-lui chanter, consolé sous vos ombres,
Ce long songe idéal de nos jours les plus sombres,
La vierge au front si pur, au sourire si beau!
Si pour l'hymen d'un jour c'est en vain qu'il l'appelle,
Laissez du moins rêver à son âme immortelle
L'éternel hymen du tombeau!

La terre ne tient point sa pensée asservie;
Le bel espoir l'enlève au triste souvenir;
Deux ombres désormais dominent sur sa vie:
L'une est dans le passé, l'autre dans l'avenir!

Oh! dis, quand viendras-tu? quel Dieu va te conduire,
Être charmant et doux, vers celui que tu plains?
Astre ami, quand viendras-tu luire,
Comme un soleil nouveau, sur ses jours orphelins?

Il ne t'obtiendra point, chère et noble conquête,

Au prix de ces vertus qu’il ne peut oublier;
Il laisse au gré du vent le jonc courber sa tête;
Il sera le grand chêne, et devant la tempête
Il saura rompre et non plier.

Elle approche, il la voit; mais il la voit sans crainte.
Adieu, flots purs, berceaux épais,
Beau vallon où l’on trouve un écho pour sa plainte,
Bois heureux où l’on souffre en paix!

Heureux qui peut au sein du vallon solitaire,
Naître, vivre et mourir dans le champ paternel!
Il ne connaît rien de la terre,
Et ne voit jamais que le ciel!

ODE QUATRIÈME

À TOI

Sub umbra alarum tuarum protege me. PS. XVI.
Couvre-moi de l’ombre de tes ailes.

Lyre longtemps oisive, éveillez-vous encore.
Il se lève, et nos chants le salueront toujours,
Ce jour que son doux nom décore,
Ce jour sacré parmi les jours!

Ô Vierge! à mon enfance un Dieu t’a révélée,
Belle et pure; et rêvant mon sort mystérieux,
Comme une blanche étoile aux nuages mêlée,
Dès mes plus jeunes ans je te vis dans mes cieux!

Je te disais alors: “ Ô toi, mon espérance,
Viens, partage un bonheur qui ne doit pas finir. “
Car de ma vie encor, dans ces jours d’ignorance,
Le passé n’avait point obscurci l’avenir.

Ce doux penchant devint une indomptable flamme;
Et je pleurai ce temps, écoulé sans retour,
Où la vie était pour mon âme
Le songe d’un enfant que berce un vague amour.

Aujourd’hui, réveillant sa victime endormie,
Sombre, au lieu du bonheur que j’avais tant rêvé,
Devant mes yeux, troublés par l’espérance amie,
Avec un rire affreux le malheur s’est levé!

Quand seul dans cette vie, hélas! d’écueils semée,
Il faut boire le fiel dont le calice est plein,
Sans les pleurs de sa bien-aimée
Que reste-t-il à l’orphelin?

Si les heureux d’un jour parent de fleurs leurs têtes,
Il fuit, souillé de cendre et vêtu de lambeaux;
Et pour lui la coupe des fêtes
Ressemble à l’urne des tombeaux!

Il est chez les vivants comme une lampe éteinte.
Le monde en ses douleurs se plaît à l’exiler,
Seulement vers le ciel il élève sans crainte
Ses yeux, chargés de pleurs qui ne peuvent couler.

Mais toi, console-moi, viens, consens à me suivre,
Arrache de mon sein le trait envenimé,
Daigne vivre pour moi, pour toi laisse-moi vivre,
J’ai bien assez souffert, Vierge, pour être aimé!

Oh! de ton doux sourire embellis-moi la vie!
Le plus grand des bonheurs est encor dans l’amour.
La lumière à jamais ne me fut point ravie,
Viens, je suis dans la nuit, mais je puis voir le jour!

Mes chants ne cherchent pas une illustre mémoire;
Et s’il faut me courber sous ce fatal honneur,
Ne crains rien, ton époux ne veut pas que sa gloire
Retentisse dans son bonheur.

Goûtons du chaste hymen le charme solitaire.
Que la félicité nous cache à tous les yeux.
Le serpent couché sur la terre
N’entend pas deux oiseaux qui volent dans les cieux!

Mais si ma jeune vie, à tant de flots livrée,
Si mon destin douteux t’inspire un juste effroi,
Alors fuis, toi qui fus mon épouse adorée; -
Toi qui fus ma mère, attends-moi.

Bientôt j’irai dormir d’un sommeil sans alarmes,

Heureux si, dans la nuit dont je serai couvert,
Un oeil indifférent donne en passant des larmes
À mon luth oublié, sur mon tombeau désert!

Toi, que d’aucun revers les coups n’osent t’atteindre,
Et puisses-tu jamais, gémissant à ton tour,
Ne regretter celui qui mourut sans se plaindre,
Et qui t’aimait de tant d’amour!

ODE CINQUIÈME

LA CHAUVE-SOURIS

Que me veux-tu? Un ange planait sur mon coeur, et tu l’as effrayé... Viens donc, je te chanterai des chansons que les esprits des cimetières m’ont apprises. MATURIN, Bertram.

Oui, je te reconnais, je t’ai vu dans mes songes,
Triste oiseau! mais sur moi vainement tu prolonges
Les cercles inégaux de ton vol ténébreux;
Des spectres réveillés porte ailleurs les messages;
Va, pour craindre tes noirs présages;
Je ne suis point coupable et ne suis point heureux!

Attends qu’enfin la vierge, à mon sort asservie,
Que le ciel comme un ange envoya dans ma vie,
De ma longue espérance ait couronné l’orgueil;
Alors tu reviendras, troublant la douce fête,
Joyeuse, déployer tes ailes sur ma tête,
Ainsi que deux voiles de deuil!

Soeur du hibou funèbre et de l’orfraie avide,
Mêlant le houx lugubre au nénuphar livide,
Les filles de Satan t’invoquent sans remords;
Fuis l’abri qui me cache et l’air que je respire;
De ton ongle hideux ne touche pas ma lyre,
De peur de réveiller des morts!

La nuit, quand les démons dansent sous le ciel sombre,
Tu suis le choeur magique en tournoyant dans l’ombre.
L’hymne infernal t’invite au conseil malfaisant.
Fuis! car un doux parfum sort de ces fleurs nouvelles;
Fuis, il faut à tes mornes ailes
L’air du tombeau natal et la vapeur du sang.

Qui t’amène vers moi? Viens-tu de ces collines
Où la lune s’enfuit sur de blanches ruines?
Son front est, comme toi, sombre dans sa pâleur.
Tes yeux dans leur route incertaine
Ont donc suivi les feux de ma lampe lointaine?
Attiré par la gloire, ainsi vient le malheur!

Sors-tu de quelque tour qu’habite le Vertige,
Nain bizarre et cruel, qui sur les monts voltige,
Prête aux feux du marais leur errante rougeur,
Rit dans l’air, des grands pins courbe en criant les cimes,
Et chaque soir, rôdant sur le bord des abîmes,
Jette aux vautours du gouffre un pâle voyageur?

En vain autour de moi ton vol qui se promène
Sème une odeur de tombe et de poussière humaine;
Ton aspect m’importune et ne peut m’effrayer.
Fuis donc, fuis, ou demain je livre aux yeux profanes
Ton corps sombre et velu, tes ailes diaphanes,
Dont le pâtre conteur orne son noir foyer.

Des enfants se joueront de ta dent furieuse;
Une vierge viendra, tremblante et curieuse,
De son rire craintif t’effrayer à grand bruit;
Et le jour te verra, dans le ciel exilée,
À mille oiseaux joyeux mêlée,
D’un vol aveugle et lourd chercher en vain la nuit!

ODE SIXIÈME

LE NUAGE

J’erre au hasard, en tous lieux, d’un mouvement plus doux que la sphère de la lune. SHAKESPEARE.

Ce beau nuage, ô Vierge, aux hommes est pareil.
Bientôt tu le verras, grondant sur notre tête,
Aux champs de la lumière amasser la tempête,
Et leur rendre en éclairs les rayons du soleil.

Oh! qu’un ange longtemps d’un souffle salutaire
Le soutienne en son vol, tel que l’ont vu tes yeux!
Car s’il descend vers nous, le nuage des cieux
N’est plus qu’un brouillard sur la terre.

Vois, pour orner le soir, ce matin il est né.
L’astre géant, fécond en splendeurs inconnues,
Change en cortège ardent l’amas jaloux des nues:
Le génie est plus grand d’envieux couronné!

La tempête qui fuit d’un orage est suivie:
L’âme a peu de beaux jours; mais, dans son ciel obscur,
L’amour, soleil divin, peut dorer d’un feu pur
Le nuage errant de la vie.

Hélas! ton beau nuage aux hommes est pareil.
Bientôt tu le verras, grondant sur notre tête,
Aux champs de la lumière amasser la tempête,
Et leur rendre en éclairs les rayons du soleil!

ODE SEPTIÈME

LE CAUCHEMAR

Oh! j’ai fait un songe!... Il est au-dessus des facultés de l’homme de dire ce qu’était mon songe... L’oeil de l’homme n’a jamais vu, l’oreille de l’homme n’a jamais ouï, la main de l’homme ne peut jamais tâter, ni ses sens concevoir, ni sa langue exprimer en paroles ce qu’était mon rêve. SHAKESPEARE.

Sur mon sein haletant, sur ma tête inclinée,
Écoute, cette nuit il est venu s’asseoir;
Posant sa main de plomb sur mon âme enchaînée,
Dans l’ombre il la montrait, comme une fleur fanée,
Aux spectres qui naissent le soir.

Ce monstre aux éléments prend vingt formes nouvelles,
Tantôt d’une eau dormante il lève son front bleu;
Tantôt son rire éclate en rouges étincelles;
Deux éclairs sont ses yeux, deux flammes sont ses ailes;
Il vole sur un lac de feu!

Comme d’impurs miroirs, des ténèbres mouvantes
Répètent son image en cercle autour de lui;
Son front confus se perd dans des vapeurs vivantes;
Il remplit le sommeil de vagues épouvantes,
Et laisse à l’âme un long ennui.

Vierge! ton doux repos n’a point de noir mensonge.
La nuit d’un pas léger court sur ton front vermeil.
Jamais jusqu’à ton coeur un rêve affreux ne plonge;
Et quand ton âme au ciel s’envole comme un songe,
Un ange garde ton sommeil!

ODE HUITIÈME

LE MATIN

Moriturus moriturae.

Le voile du matin sur les monts se déploie.
Vois, un rayon naissant blanchit la vieille tour;
Et déjà dans les cieux s’unit avec amour,
    Ainsi que la gloire à la joie,
    Le premier chant des bois aux premiers feux du jour.

    Oui, souris à l’éclat dont le ciel se décore! -
    Tu verras, si demain le cercueil me dévore,
    Luire à tes yeux en pleurs un soleil aussi beau,
    Et les mêmes oiseaux chanter la même aurore,
    Sur mon noir et muet tombeau!

    Mais dans l’autre horizon l’âme alors est ravie.
    L’avenir sans fin s’ouvre à l’être illimité.
    Au matin de l’éternité,
    On se réveille de la vie,
    Comme d’une nuit sombre ou d’un rêve agité!

ODE NEUVIÈME

MON ENFANCE

Voilà que tout cela est passé... Mon enfance n’est plus; elle est morte pour ainsi dire, quoique je vive encore. SAINT AUGUSTIN, Confessions.

I

J’ai des rêves de guerre en mon âme inquiète;
J’aurais été soldat, si je n’étais poète.
Ne vous étonnez point que j’aime les guerriers!
Souvent, pleurant sur eux, dans ma douleur muette,
J’ai trouvé leur cyprès plus beau que nos lauriers.

Enfant, sur un tambour ma crèche fut posée.
Dans un casque pour moi l’eau sainte fut puisée.
Un soldat, m’ombrageant d’un belliqueux faisceau,
De quelque vieux lambeau d’une bannière usée
Fit les langes de mon berceau.

Parmi les chars poudreux, les armes éclatantes,
Une muse des camps m’emporta sous les tentes;
Je dormis sur l’affût des canons meurtriers;
J’aimai les fiers coursiers, aux crinières flottantes,
Et l’éperon froissant les rauques étriers.

J’aimai les forts tonnants, aux abords difficiles;
Le glaive nu des chefs guidant les rangs dociles;
La vedette, perdue en un bois isolé;
Et les vieux bataillons qui passaient dans les villes,
Avec un drapeau mutilé.

Mon envie admirait, et le hussard rapide,
Parant de gerbes d’or sa poitrine intrépide,
Et le panache blanc des agiles lanciers,

Et les dragons, mêlant sur leur casque gépide
Le poil taché du tigre aux crins noirs des coursiers.

Et j’accusais mon âge: - “ Ah! dans une ombre obscure,
Grandir, vivre! laisser refroidir sans murmure
Tout ce sang jeune et pur, bouillant chez mes pareils,
Qui dans un noir combat, sur l’acier d’une armure,
Coulerait à flots si vermeils! “

Et j’invoquais la guerre, aux scènes effrayantes;
Je voyais en espoir, dans les plaines bruyantes,
Avec mille rumeurs d’hommes et de chevaux,
Secouant à la fois leurs ailes foudroyantes,
L’un sur l’autre à grands cris fondre deux camps rivaux.

J’entendais le son clair des tremblantes cymbales,
Le roulement des chars, le sifflement des balles,
Et de monceaux de morts semant leurs pas sanglants,
Je voyais se heurter, au loin, par intervalles
Les escadrons étincelants!

II

Avec nos camps vainqueurs, dans l’Europe asservie
J’errai, je parcourus la terre avant la vie;
Et, tout enfant encor, les vieillards recueillis
M’écoutaient racontant, d’une bouche ravie,
Mes jours si peu nombreux et déjà si remplis!

Chez dix peuples vaincus je passai sans défense,
Et leur respect craintif étonnait mon enfance;
Dans l’âge où l’on est plaint, je semblais protéger
Quand je balbutiais le nom chéri de France,
Je faisais pâlir l’étranger.

Je visitai cette île, en noirs débris féconde,
Plus tard, premier degré d’une chute profonde.

Le haut Cenis, dont l’aigle aime les rocs lointains,
Entendit, de son antre où l’avalanche gronde,
Ses vieux glaçons crier sous mes pas enfantins.

Vers l’Adige et l’Arno je vins des bords du Rhône.
Je vis de l’Occident l’auguste Babylone,
Rome, toujours vivante au fond de ses tombeaux,
Reine du monde encor sur un débris de trône,
Avec une pourpre en lambeaux.

Puis Turin, puis Florence aux plaisirs toujours prête,
Naple, aux bords embaumés, où le printemps s’arrête
Et que Vésuve en feu couvre d’un dais brûlant,
Comme un guerrier jaloux qui, témoin d’une fête,
Jette au milieu des fleurs son panache sanglant.

L’Espagne m’accueillit, livrée à la conquête.
Je franchis le Bergare, où mugit la tempête;
De loin, pour un tombeau, je pris l’Escurial;
Et le triple aqueduc vit s’incliner ma tête
Devant son front impérial.

Là, je voyais les feux des haltes militaires
Noircir les murs croulants des villes solitaires;
La tente, de l’église envahissait le seuil;
Les rires des soldats, dans les saints monastères,
Par l’écho répétés, semblaient des cris de deuil.

III

Je revins, rapportant de mes courses lointaines
Comme un vague faisceau de lueurs incertaines.
Je rêvais, comme si j’avais, durant mes jours,
Rencontré sur mes pas les magiques fontaines
Dont l’onde enivre pour toujours.

L’Espagne me montrait ses couvents, ses bastilles;

Burgos, sa cathédrale aux gothiques aiguilles;
Irun, ses toits de bois; Vittoria, ses tours;
Et toi, Valladolid, tes palais de familles,
Fiers de laisser rouiller des chaînes dans leurs cours.

Mes souvenirs germaient dans mon âme échauffée;
J’allais chantant des vers d’une voix étouffée;
Et ma mère, en secret observant tous mes pas,
Pleurait et souriait, disant: “ C’est une fée
Qui lui parle, et qu’on ne voit pas! “

ODE DIXIÈME

À G......Y

O rus! Virgile.

Il est pour tout mortel, soit que, loin de l’envie,
Un astre aux rayons purs illumine sa vie;
Soit qu’il suive à pas lents un cercle de douleurs,
Et, regrettant quelque ombre à son amour ravie,
Veille auprès de sa lampe, et répande des pleurs;

Il est des jours de paix, d’ivresse et de mystère,
Où notre coeur savoure un charme involontaire,
Où l’air vibre, animé d’ineffables accords,
Comme si l’âme heureuse entendait de la terre
Le bruit vague et lointain de la cité des morts.

Souvent ici, domptant mes douleurs étouffées,
Mon bonheur s’éleva comme un château de fées,
Avec ses murs de nacre, aux mobiles couleurs,
Ses tours, ses portes d’or, ses pièges, ses trophées,
Et ses fruits merveilleux, et ses magiques fleurs.

Puis soudain tout fuyait: sur d’informes décombres
Tour à tour à mes yeux passaient de pâles ombres;
D’un crêpe nébuleux le ciel était voilé;
Et de spectres en deuil peuplant ces déserts sombres,
Un tombeau dominait le palais écroulé.

Vallon! j’ai bien souvent laissé dans ta prairie,
Comme une eau murmurante, errer ma rêverie;
Je n’oublierai jamais ces fugitifs instants;
Ton souvenir sera, dans mon âme attendrie,
Comme un son triste et doux qu’on écoute longtemps!

ODE ONZIÈME

Hoc erat in votis! Horace.

Lorsque j’étais enfant: - “ Viens, me disait la Muse,
Viens voir le beau génie assis sur mon autel!
Il n’est dans mes trésors rien que je te refuse,
Soit que l’altier clairon ou l’humble cornemuse
Attendent ton souffle immortel.

“ Mais fuis d’un monde étroit l’impure turbulence;
Là, rampent les ingrats, là, règnent les méchants.
Sur un luth inspiré lorsqu’une âme s’élance,
Il faut que, l’écoutant dans un chaste silence,
L’écho lui rende tous ses chants!

“ Choisis quelque désert pour y cacher ta vie,
Dans une ombre sacrée emporte ton flambeau.
Heureux qui, loin des pas d’une foule asservie,
Dérobant ses concerts aux clameurs de l’envie,
Lègue sa gloire à son tombeau!

“ L’horizon de ton âme est plus haut que la terre.
Mais cherche à ta pensée un monde harmonieux,
Où tout, en l’exaltant, charme ton coeur austère,
Où des saintes clartés, que nulle ombre n’altère,
Le doux reflet suive tes yeux.

“ Qu’il soit un frais vallon, ton paisible royaume,
Où parmi l’églantier, le saule et le glaïeul,
Tu penses voir parfois, errant comme un fantôme,
Ces magiques palais qui naissent sous le chaume,
Dans les beaux contes de l’aïeul.

“ Qu’une tour en ruine, au flanc de la montagne,
Pende, et jette son ombre aux flots d’un lac d’azur.

Le soir qu’un feu de pâtre, au fond de la campagne,
Comme un ami dont l’oeil de loin nous accompagne,
Perce le crépuscule obscur.

“ Quand, guidant sur le lac deux rames vagabondes,
Le ciel, dans ce miroir, t’offrira ses tableaux,
Qu’une molle nuée, en déroulant ses ondes,
Montre à tes yeux, baissés sur les vagues profondes,
Des flots se jouant dans les flots.

“ Que, visitant parfois une île solitaire
Et des bords ombragés de feuillages mouvants,
Tu puisses, savourant ton exil volontaire,
En silence épier s’il est quelque mystère
Dans le bruit des eaux et des vents.

“ Qu’à ton réveil joyeux, les chants des jeunes mères
T’annoncent et l’enfance, et la vie et le jour.
Qu’un ruisseau passe auprès de tes fleurs éphémères,
Comme entre les doux soins et les tendres chimères
Passent l’espérance et l’amour.

“ Qu’il soit dans la contrée un souvenir fidèle
De quelque bon seigneur, de hauteur dépourvu,
Ami de l’indigence et toujours aimé d’elle;
Et que chaque vieillard, le citant pour modèle,
Dise: Vous ne l’avez pas vu!

“ Loin du monde surtout mon culte te réclame.
Sois le Prophète ardent, qui vit le ciel ouvert,
Dont l’oeil, au sein des nuits, brillait comme une flamme,
Et qui, de l’Esprit Saint ayant rempli son âme,
Allait, parlant dans le désert! “

Tu le disais, ô Muse! Et la cité bruyante
Autour de moi pourtant mêle ses mille voix!
Muse! et je ne fuis pas la sphère tournoyante

Où le sort, agitant la foule imprévoyante,
Meut tant de destins à la fois!

C’est que, pour m’amener au terme où tout aspire,
Il m’est venu du ciel un guide au front joyeux;
Pour moi, l’air le plus pur est l’air qu’elle respire;
Je vois tous mes bonheurs, Muse, dans son sourire,
Et tous mes rêves dans ses yeux!

ODE DOUZIÈME

ENCORE À TOI

Ahora y siempre. Devise des Pomfret.

À toi! toujours à toi! Que chanterait ma lyre?
À toi l'hymne d'amour! à toi l'hymne d'hymen!
Quel autre nom pourrait éveiller mon délire?
Ai-je appris d'autres chants? sais-je un autre chemin?

C'est toi, dont le regard éclaire ma nuit sombre;
Toi, dont l'image luit sur mon sommeil joyeux;
C'est toi qui tiens ma main quand je marche dans l'ombre,
Et les rayons du ciel me viennent de tes yeux!

Mon destin est gardé par ta douce prière:
Elle veille sur moi, quand mon ange s'endort;
Lorsque mon coeur entend ta voix modeste et fière,
Au combat de la vie il provoque le sort.

N'est-il pas dans le ciel de voix qui te réclame?
N'es-tu pas une fleur étrangère à nos champs?
Soeur des vierges du ciel, ton âme est pour mon âme
Le reflet de leurs feux et l'écho de leurs chants!

Quand ton oeil noir et doux me parle et me contemple,
Quand ta robe m'effleure avec un léger bruit,
Je crois avoir touché quelque voile du temple,
Je dis comme Tobie: Un ange est dans ma nuit!

Lorsque de mes douleurs tu chassas le nuage,
Je compris qu'à ton sort mon sort devait s'unir,
Pareil au saint pasteur, lassé d'un long voyage,
Qui vit vers la fontaine une vierge venir!

Je t’aime comme un être au-dessus de ma vie,
Comme une antique aïeule aux prévoyants discours,
Comme une soeur craintive, à mes maux asservie,
Comme un dernier enfant, qu’on a dans ses vieux jours.

Hélas! je t’aime tant qu’à ton nom seul je pleure,
Je pleure, car la vie est si pleine de maux!
Dans ce morne désert tu n’as point de demeure,
Et l’arbre où l’on s’assied lève ailleurs ses rameaux.

Mon Dieu! mettez la paix et la joie auprès d’elle.
Ne troublez pas ses jours, ils sont à vous, Seigneur!
Vous devez la bénir, car son âme fidèle
Demande à la vertu le secret du bonheur.

ODE TREIZIÈME

SON NOM

Nomen aut numen.

Le parfum d’un lis pur, l’éclat d’une auréole,
La dernière rumeur du jour,
La plainte d’un ami qui s’afflige et console,
L’adieu mystérieux de l’heure qui s’envole,
Le doux bruit d’un baiser d’amour,

L’écharpe aux sept couleurs que l’orage en la nue
Laisse, comme un trophée, au soleil triomphant,
L’accent inespéré d’une voix reconnue,
Le voeu le plus secret d’une vierge ingénue,
Le premier rêve d’un enfant,

Le chant d’un choeur lointain, le soupir qu’à l’aurore
Rendait le fabuleux Memnon,
Le murmure d’un son qui tremble et s’évapore...
Tout ce que la pensée a de plus doux encore,
Ô lyre, est moins doux que son nom!

Prononce-le tout bas, ainsi qu’une prière,
Mais que dans tous nos chants il résonne à la fois!
Qu’il soit du temple obscur la secrète lumière!
Qu’il soit le mot sacré qu’au fond du sanctuaire
Redit toujours la même voix!

Ô mes amis! avant qu’en paroles de flamme,
Ma muse, égarant son essor,
Ose aux noms profanés qu’un vain orgueil proclame,
Mêler ce chaste nom, que l’amour dans mon âme
A caché, comme un saint trésor,

Il faudra que le chant de mes hymnes fidèles
Soit comme un de ces chants qu’on écoute à genoux;
Et que l’air soit ému de leurs voix solennelles,
Comme si, secouant ses invisibles ailes,
Un ange passait près de nous!

ODE QUATORZIÈME

ACTIONS DE GRÂCES

Ceux qui auront semé dans les larmes moissonneront dans l’allégresse. SALOMON, Ps, CXXV, 5.

Vous avez dans le port poussé ma voile errante;
Ma tige a refleuri de sève et de verdeur;
Seigneur, je vous bénis! de ma lampe mourante
Votre souffle vivant rallume la splendeur.

Surpris par l’ouragan comme un aiglon sans ailes,
Qui tombe du grand chêne au pied de l’arbrisseau,
Faible enfant, du malheur j’ai su les lois cruelles.
L’orage m’assaillit voguant dans mon berceau.

Oui, la vie a pour moi commencé dès l’enfance,
Quoique le ciel jamais n’ait foudroyé de fleurs,
Et qu’il ne veuille pas qu’un être sans défense
Mêle à ses premiers jours l’amertume des pleurs.

La jeunesse en riant m’apporta ses mensonges,
Son avenir de gloire, et d’amour, et d’orgueil;
Mais quand mon coeur brûlant poursuivait ces beaux songes,
Hélas!je m’éveillai dans la nuit d’un cercueil.

Alors je m’exilai du milieu de mes frères.
Calme, car ma douleur n’était pas le remords,
J’accompagnai de loin les pompes funéraires:
L’hymne de l’orphelin est écouté des morts.

L’oeil tourné vers le ciel, je marchais dans l’abîme;
Bien souvent, de mon sort bravant l’injuste affront,
Les flammes ont jailli de ma pensée intime,
Et la langue de feu descendit sur mon front.

Mon esprit de Pathmos connut le saint délire,
L’effroi qui le précède et l’effroi qui le suit;
Et mon âme était triste, et les chants de ma lyre
Étaient comme ces voix qui pleurent dans la nuit.

J’ai vu sans murmurer la fuite de ma joie,
Seigneur; à l’abandon vous m’aviez condamné.
J’ai, sans plainte, au désert tenté la triple voie;
Et je n’ai pas maudit le jour où je suis né.

Voici la vérité qu’au monde je révèle:
Du ciel dans mon néant je me suis souvenu.
Louez Dieu! la brebis vient quand l’agneau l’appelle;
J’appelais le Seigneur, le Seigneur est venu.

Il m’a dit: “ Va, mon fils, ma loi n’est pas pesante!
Toi qui, dans la nuit même, as suivi mes chemins,
Tu ceindras des heureux la robe éblouissante;
Parmi les innocents tu laveras tes mains. “

Je ne veux plus de loin t’offrir ma vie obscure,
Gloire, immortel reflet de l’éternel flambeau,
Du génie en son cours trace éclatante et pure,
Ou rayon merveilleux, émané d’un tombeau!

Un ange sur mon coeur ploie aujourd’hui ses ailes.
Pour Elle un orphelin n’est pas un étranger;
Les heures de mes jours à ses côtés sont belles:
Car son joug est aimable et son fardeau léger.

Vous avez dans le port poussé ma voile errante;
Ma tige a refleuri de sève et de verdeur;
Seigneur, je vous bénis! de ma lampe mourante
Votre souffle vivant rallume la splendeur.

ODE QUINZIÈME

À MES AMIS

Ô combien est heureux celui qui, solitaire,
Ne va point mendiant de ce sot populaire
L'appui ni la faveur; qui, paisible, s'étant
Retiré de la cour et du monde inconstant,
Ne s'entremêlant point des affaires publiques,
Ne s'assujettissant aux plaisirs tyranniques
D'un seigneur inconstant, et ne vivant qu'à soi,
Est lui-même sa cour, son seigneur et son roi!
JEAN DE LA TAILLE.

Sans monter au char de victoire,
Meurt le poète créateur;
Son siècle est trop près de sa gloire
Pour en mesurer la hauteur.
C'est Bélisaire au Capitole:
La foule court à quelque idole,
Et jette en passant une obole
Au mendiant triomphateur.

Amis, dans ma douce retraite
À tous vos maux je dis adieu.
Là, ma vie est molle et secrète:
J'ai des autels pour chaque dieu.
Le myrte, qu'au laurier j'enchaîne,
Y croît sous l'ombrage du chêne;
J'y mets Horace avec Mécène,
Et Corneille sans Richelieu.

Là, dans l'ombre descend ma muse,
À l'oeil fier, aux traits ingénus,
Image éclatante et confuse
Des anges à l'homme inconnus.

Ses rayons cherchent le mystère:
Son aile, chaste et solitaire,
Jamais ne permet à la terre
D’effleurer ses pieds blancs et nus.

Là, je cache un hymen prospère;
Et, sur mon seuil hospitalier,
Parfois tu t’assieds, ô mon père!
Comme un antique chevalier;
Ma famille est ton humble empire;
Et mon fils, avec un sourire,
Dort aux sons de ma jeune lyre,
Bercé dans ton vieux bouclier.

ODE SEIZIÈME

À L’OMBRE D’UN ENFANT

Qui es in caelis.

Ô! parmi les soleils, les sphères, les étoiles,
Les portiques d’azur, les palais de saphir,
Parmi les saints rayons, parmi les sacrés voiles
Qu’agite un éternel zéphyr!

Dans le torrent d’amour où toute âme se noie,
Où s’abreuve de feux le séraphin brûlant;
Dans l’orbe flamboyant qui sans cesse tournoie
Autour du trône étincelant!

Parmi les jeux sans fin des âmes enfantines;
Quand leurs soins, d’un vieil astre, égaré dans les cieux,
Avec de longs efforts et des voix argentines,
Guident les chancelants essieux;

Ou lorsqu’entre ses bras quelque vierge ravie
Les prend, d’un saint baiser leur imprime le sceau,
Et rit, leur demandant si l’aspect de la vie
Les effrayait dans leur berceau;

Ou qu’enfin, dans son arche éclatante et profonde,
Rangeant de cieux en cieux son cortège ébloui,
Jésus, pour accomplir ce qui fut dit au monde,
Les place le plus près de lui;

Ô! dans ce monde auguste où rien n’est éphémère,
Dans ces flots de bonheur que ne trouble aucun fiel,
Enfant! loin du sourire et des pleurs de ta mère,
N’es-tu pas orphelin au ciel?

ODE DIX-SEPTIÈME

À UNE JEUNE FILLE

Pourquoi te plaindre, tendre fille? Tes jours n'appartiennent-ils pas à ta première jeunesse? Daïno lithuanien.

Vous qui ne savez pas combien l'enfance est belle,
Enfant! n'enviez point notre âge de douleurs,
Où le coeur tour à tour est esclave et rebelle,
Où le rire est souvent plus triste que vos pleurs.

Votre âge insouciant est si doux qu'on l'oublie!
Il passe, comme un souffle au vaste champ des airs,
Comme une voix joyeuse en fuyant affaiblie,
Comme un alcyon sur les mers.

Oh! ne vous hâtez point de mûrir vos pensées!
Jouissez du matin, jouissez du printemps;
Vos heures sont des fleurs l'une à l'autre enlacées;
Ne les effeuillez pas plus vite que le temps.

Laissez venir les ans! Le destin vous dévoue,
Comme nous, aux regrets, à la fausse amitié,
À ces maux sans espoir que l'orgueil désavoue,
À ces plaisirs qui font pitié!

Riez pourtant! du sort ignorez la puissance;
Riez! n'attristez pas votre front gracieux,
Votre oeil d'azur, miroir de paix et d'innocence,
Qui révèle votre âme et réfléchit les cieux!

ODE DIX-HUITIÈME

AUX RUINES DE MONTFORT-L'AMAURY

La voyez-vous croître,
La tour du vieux cloître,
Et le grand mur noir
Du royal manoir?
ALFRED DE VIGNY.

I

Je vous aime, ô débris! et surtout quand l'automne
Prolonge en vos échos sa plainte monotone.
Sous vos abris croulants je voudrais habiter,
Vieilles tours, que le temps l'une vers l'autre incline,
Et qui semblez de loin sur la haute colline,
Deux noirs géants prêts à lutter.

Lorsque d'un pas rêveur foulant les grandes herbes,
Je monte jusqu'à vous, restes forts et superbes!
Je contemple longtemps vos créneaux meurtriers,
Et la tour octogone et ses briques rougies,
Et mon oeil, à travers vos brèches élargies,
Voit jouer des enfants où mouraient des guerriers.

Écartez de vos murs ceux que leur chute amuse!
Laissez le seul poète y conduire sa muse,
Lui qui donne du moins une larme au vieux fort;
Et, si l'air froid des nuits sous vos arceaux murmure,
Croit qu'une ombre a froissé la gigantesque armure
D'Amaury, comte de Montfort!

II

Là, souvent je m'assieds, aux jours passés fidèle

Sur un débris qui fut un mur de citadelle.
Je médite longtemps, en mon coeur replié;
Et la ville, à mes pieds, d’arbres enveloppée,
Étend ses bras en croix et s’allonge en épée,
Comme le fer d’un preux dans la plaine oublié.

Mes yeux errent, du pied de l’antique demeure.
Sur les bois éclairés ou sombres, suivant l’heure,
Sur l’église gothique, hélas! prête à crouler,
Et je vois, dans le champ où la mort nous appelle,
Sous l’arcade de pierre et devant la chapelle,
Le sol immobile onduler.

Foulant créneaux, ogives, écussons, astragales,
M’attachant comme un lierre aux pierres inégales,
Au faîte des grands murs je m’élève parfois;
Là je mêle des chants au sifflement des brises;
Et, dans les cieux profonds suivant ses ailes grises,
Jusqu’à l’aigle effrayé j’aime à lancer ma voix!

Là quelquefois j’entends le luth doux et sévère
D’un ami qui sait rendre aux vieux temps un trouvère.
Nous parlons des héros, du ciel, des chevaliers,
De ces âmes en deuil dans le monde orphelines;
Et le vent qui se brise à l’angle des ruines
Gémit dans les hauts peupliers!

ODE DIX-NEUVIÈME

LE VOYAGE

... Je veux que mon retour
Te paraisse bien long. Je veux que nuit et jour
Tu m'aimes. (Nuit et jour, hélas! je me tourmente!)
Présente au milieu d'eux, sois seule, sois absente.
Dors en pensant à moi, rêve-moi près de toi,
Ne vois que moi sans cesse, et sois toute avec moi!
ANDRÉ CHÉNIER.

I

Le cheval fait sonner son harnois qu'il secoue,
Et l'éclair du pavé va jaillir sous la roue:
Il faut partir, adieu! de ton coeur inquiet
Chasse la crainte amère, adieu! point de faiblesse!
Mais quoi! le char s'ébranle et m'emporte, et te laisse...
Hélas! j'ai cru qu'il t'oubliait!

Oh! suis-le bien longtemps d'une oreille attentive!
Ne t'en va pas avant d'avoir, triste et pensive,
Écouté des coursiers s'évanouir le bruit!
L'un à l'autre déjà l'espace nous dérobe;
Je ne vois plus de loin flotter ta blanche robe,
Et toi, tu n'entends plus rouler le char qui fuit!...

Quoi! plus même un vain bruit! plus même une vaine ombre!
L'absence a sur mon âme étendu sa nuit sombre;
C'en est fait; chaque pas m'y plonge plus avant,
Et dans cet autre enfer, plein de douleurs amères,
De tourments insensés, d'angoisses, de chimères,
Me voilà descendu vivant!

II

Que faire maintenant de toutes mes pensées,
De mon front, qui dormait dans tes mains enlacées,
De tout ce que j’entends, de tout ce que je vois?
Que faire de mes maux, sans toi pleins d’amertume,
De mes yeux dont la flamme à tes regards s’allume,
De ma voix qui ne sait parler qu’après ta voix?

Et mon oeil tour à tour, distrait, suit dans l’espace
Chaque arbre du chemin qui paraît et qui passe,
Les bois verts, le flot d’or de la jaune moisson,
Et les monts, et du soir l’étincelante étoile,
Et les clochers aigus, et les villes que voile
Un dais de brume à l’horizon!

Qu’importent les bois verts, la moisson, la colline,
Et l’astre qui se lève et l’astre qui décline,
Et la plainte et les monts, si tu ne les vois pas?
Que me font ces châteaux, ruines féodales,
Si leur donjon moussu n’entend point sur ses dalles
Tes pas légers courir à côté de mes pas?

Ainsi donc aujourd’hui, demain, après encore,
Il faudra voir sans toi naître et mourir l’aurore,
Sans toi! sans ton sourire et ton regard joyeux;
Sans t’entendre marcher près de moi quand je rêve;
Sans que ta douce main, quand mon front se soulève,
Se pose en jouant sur mes yeux!

Pourtant, il faut encore, à tant d’ennuis en proie,
Dans mes lettres du soir t’envoyer quelque joie,
Dire: “ Console-toi, le calme m’est rendu! “;
Quand je crains chaque instant qui loin de toi s’écoule,
Et qu’inventant des maux qui t’assiègent en foule,
Chaque heure est sur ma tête un glaive suspendu!

III

Que fais-tu maintenant? Près du foyer sans doute
La carte est déployée, et ton oeil suit ma route;
Tu dis: “ Où peut-il être? - Ah, qu’il trouve en tous lieux
De tendres soins, un coeur qui l’estime et qui l’aime,
Et quelque bonne hôtesse, ayant, comme moi-même,
Un être cher sous d’autres cieux!

Comme il s’éloigne vite, hélas! J’en suis certaine,
Il a déjà franchi cette ville lointaine,
Ces forêts, ce vieux pont d’un grand exploit témoin;
Peut-être en ce moment il roule en ces vallées,
Par une croix sinistre aux passants signalées,
Où, l’an dernier... Pourvu qu’il soit déjà plus loin! “

Et mon père, essuyant une larme qui brille,
T’invite en souriant à sourire à ta fille:
“ Rassurez-vous! bientôt nous le reverrons tous.
Il rit, il est tranquille, il visite à cette heure
De quelque vieux héros la tombe ou la demeure;
Il prie à quelque autel pour vous.

Car, vous le savez bien, ma fille, il aime encore
Ces créneaux, ces portails qu’un art naïf décore;
Il nous a dit souvent, assis à vos côtés,
L’ogive chez les Goths de l’Orient venue,
Et la flèche romane aiguisant dans la nue
Ses huit angles de pierre en écailles sculptés! “

IV

Et puis le Vétéran, à ta douleur trompée,
Conte sa vie errante, et nos grands coups d’épée,
Et quelque ancien combat du Tage ou du Tésin,
Et l’empereur, du siècle imposante merveille, -
Tout en baissant sa voix de peur qu’elle n’éveille
Ton enfant qui dort sur ton sein!

ODE VINGTIÈME

PROMENADE

Voici les lieux chers à ma rêverie,
voici les prés dont j'ai chanté les fleurs...
AMABLE TASTU, la Lyre égarée

Ceins le voile de gaze aux pudiques couleurs,
Où la féconde aiguille a semé tant de fleurs!
Viens respirer sous les platanes;
Couvre-toi du tissu, trésor de Cachemir,
Qui peut-être a caché le poignard d'un émir,
Ou le sein jaloux des sultanes.

Aux lueurs du couchant vois fumer les hameaux.
La vapeur monte et passe; ainsi s'en vont nos maux,
Gloire, ambition, renommée!
Nous brillons tour à tour, jouets d'un fol espoir:
Tel ce dernier rayon, ce dernier vent du soir
Dore et berce un peu de fumée.

A l'heure où le jour meurt à l'horizon lointain,
Qu'il m'est doux, près d'un coeur qui bat pour mon destin
D'égarer mes pas dans la plaine!
Qu'il m'est doux, près de toi d'errer libre d'ennuis,
Quand tu mêles, pensive, à la brise des nuits
Le parfum de ta douce haleine!

C'est pour un tel bonheur, dès l'enfance rêvé,
Que j 'ai longtemps souffert et que j'ai tout bravé!
Dans nos temps de fureurs civiles,
Je te dois une paix que rien ne peut troubler.
Plus de vide en mes jours! Pour moi tu sais peupler
Tous les déserts, même les villes!

Chaque étoile à son tour vient apparaître au ciel.
Tels, quand un grand festin d’ambroisie et de miel
Embaume une riche demeure,
Souvent sur le velours et le damas soyeux,
On voit les plus hâtifs des convives joyeux
S’asseoir au banquet avant l’heure.

Vois, - c’est un météore! il éclate et s’éteint.
Plus d’un grand homme aussi, d’un mal secret atteint,
Rayonne et descend dans la tombe.
Le vulgaire l’ignore et suit le tourbillon;
Au laboureur courbé le soir sur le sillon,
Qu’importe l’étoile qui tombe!

Ah! tu n’es point ainsi, toi dont les nobles pleurs
De toute âme sublime honorent les malheurs!
Toi qui gémis sur le poète!
Toi qui plains la victime et surtout les bourreaux!
Qui visites souvent la tombe des héros,
Silencieuse, et non muette!

Si quelque ancien château, devant tes pas distraits,
Lève son donjon noir sur les noires forêts,
Bien loin de la ville importune, Tu t’arrêtes soudain; et ton oeil tour à tour
Cherche et perd à travers les créneaux de la tour
Le pâle croissant de la lune.

C’est moi qui t’inspirai d’aimer ces vieux piliers,
Ces temples où jadis les jeunes chevaliers
Priaient, armés par leur marraine;
Ces palais où parfois le poète endormi
A senti sur sa bouche entrouverte à demi
Tomber le baiser d’une reine.

Mais rentrons; vois le ciel d’ombres s’environner;
Déjà le frêle esquif qui nous doit ramener

Sur les eaux du lac étincelle;
Cette barque ressemble à nos jours inconstants
Qui flottent dans la nuit sur l’abîme des temps;
Le gouffre porte la nacelle!

La vie à chaque instant fuit vers l’éternité;
Et le corps, sur la terre où l’âme l’a quitté,
Reste comme un fardeau frivole.
Ainsi quand meurt la rose, aux royales couleurs,
Sa feuille, que l’aurore en vain baigne de pleurs,
Tombe, et son doux parfum s’envole!

ODE VINGT ET UNIÈME

À RAMON, DUC DE BENAV.

Par la bora de su herida. GUILLEN DE CASTRO.

Hélas! j ‘ai compris ton sourire,
Semblable au ris du condamné,
Quand le mot qui doit le proscrire
À son oreille a résonné!
En pressant ta main convulsive,
J’ai compris ta douleur pensive,
Et ton regard morne et profond,
Qui, pareil à l’éclair des nues,
Brille sur des mers inconnues,
Mais ne peut en montrer le fond.

“ Pourquoi faut-il donc qu’on me plaigne,
M’as-tu dit, je n’ai pas gémi?
Jamais de mes pleurs je ne baigne
La main d’un frère ou d’un ami!
Je n’en ai pas. Puisqu’à ma vie
La joie est pour toujours ravie,
Qu’on m’épargne au moins la pitié!
Je paye assez mon infortune
Pour que nulle voix importune
N’ose en réclamer la moitié!

“ D’ailleurs, vaut-elle tant de larmes?
Appelle-t-on cela malheur? -
Oui! ce qui pour l’homme a des charmes
Pour moi n’a qu’ennuis et douleur.
Sur mon passé rien ne surnage
Des vains rêves de mon jeune âge
Que le sort chaque jour dément;
L’amour éteint pour moi sa flamme;

Et jamais la voix d’une femme
Ne dira mon nom doucement!

“Jamais d’enfants! jamais d’épouse!
Nul coeur près du mien n’a battu;
Jamais une bouche jalouse
Ne m’a demandé: D’où viens-tu?
Point d’espérance qui me reste!
Mon avenir sombre et funeste
Ne m’offre que des jours mauvais;
Dans cet horizon de ténèbres
Ont passé vingt spectres funèbres,
Jamais l’ombre que je rêvais!

“ Ma tête ne s’est point courbée;
Mais la main du sort ennemi
Est plus lourdement retombée
Sur mon front toujours raffermi.
À la jeunesse qui s’envole,
À la gloire, au plaisir frivole,
J’ai dit l’adieu fier de Caton
Toutes fleurs pour moi sont fanées;
Mais c’est l’ordre des destinées;
Et si je souffre, qu’en sait-on?

“ Esclaves d’une loi fatale,
Sachons taire les maux soufferts.
Pourquoi veux-tu donc que j ‘étale
La meurtrissure de mes fers?
Aux yeux que la misère effraie,
Qu’importe ma secrète plaie?
Passez, je dois vivre isolé;
Vos voix ne sont qu’un bruit sonore;
Passez tous! j ‘aime mieux encore
Souffrir que d’être consolé!

“ Je n’appartiens plus à la vie.

Qu’importe si parfois mes yeux,
Soit qu’on me plaigne ou qu’on m’envie,
Lancent un feu sombre ou joyeux!
Qu’importe, quand la coupe est vide,
Que ses bords, sur la lèvre avide,
Laissent encore un goût amer!
A-t-il vaincu le flot qui gronde,
Le vaisseau qui, perdu sous l’onde,
Lève encor son mât sur la mer?

“ Qu’importe mon deuil solitaire?
D’autres coulent des jours meilleurs.
Qu’est-ce que le bruit de la terre?
Un concert de ris et de pleurs.
Je veux, comme tous les fils d’Ève,
Sans qu’une autre main le soulève,
Porter mon fardeau jusqu’au soir;
À la foule qui passe et tombe,
Qu’importe au seuil de quelle tombe
Mon ombre un jour ira s’asseoir! “

Ainsi, quand tout bas tu soupires,
De ton coeur partent des sanglots,
Comme un son s’échappe des lyres,
Comme un murmure sort des flots!
Va, ton infortune est ta gloire!
Les fronts marqués par la victoire
Ne se couronnent pas de fleurs.
De ton sein la joie est bannie;
Mais tu sais bien que le génie
Prélude à ses chants par des pleurs.

Comme un soc de fer, dès l’aurore,
Fouille le sol de son tranchant,
Et l’ouvre, et le sillonne encore,
Aux derniers rayons du couchant;
Sur chaque heure qui t’est donnée

Revient l’infortune acharnée,
Infatigable à t’obséder;
Mais si de son glaive de flamme
Le malheur déchire ton âme,
Ami, c’est pour la féconder!

ODE VINGT-DEUXIÈME

LE PORTRAIT D’UNE ENFANT

à Mlle J.-D. de M.

Quand je voy tant de couleurs
Et de fleurs
Qui esmaillent un nuage,
Je pense voir le beau teint
Qui est peint
Si vermeil en son visage.

Quand te sens parmi les prez
Diaprez,
Les fleurs dont la terre est pleine,
Lors te fais croire à mes sens
Que te sens
La douceur de son haleine.
RONSARD.

Oui, ce front, ce sourire et cette fraîche joue,
C’est bien l’enfant qui pleure et joue,
Et qu’un esprit du ciel défend!
De ses doux traits, ravis à la Sainte phalange,
C’est bien le délicat mélange;
Poète, j ‘y crois voir un ange,
Père, j’y trouve mon enfant.

On devine à ses yeux pleins d’une pure flamme,
Qu’au paradis, d’où vient son âme,
Elle a dit un récent adieu.
Son regard, rayonnant d’une joie éphémère,
Semble en suivre encor la chimère,
Et revoir dans sa douce mère
L’humble mère de l’Enfant-Dieu!

On dirait qu’elle écoute un choeur de voix célestes,
Que, de loin, des vierges modestes
Elle entend l’appel gracieux;
À son joyeux regard, à son naïf sourire,
On serait tenté de lui dire:
— Jeune ange, quel fut ton martyre,
Et quel est ton nom dans les cieux?

II

Ô toi dont le pinceau me la fit si touchante,
Tu me la peins, je te la chante!
Car tes nobles travaux vivront;
Une force virile à ta grâce est unie;
Tes couleurs sont une harmonie;
Et dans ton enfance, un Génie
Mît une flamme sur ton front!

Sans doute quelque fée, à ton berceau venue,
Des sept couleurs que dans la nue
Suspend le prisme aérien,
Des roses de l’aurore humide et matinale,
Des feux de l’aube boréale,
Fit une palette idéale
Pour ton pinceau magicien!

ODE VINGT-TROISIÈME

À MADAME LA COMTESSE A. H.

Sur ma lyre, l’autre fois
Dans un bois,
Ma main préludait à peine,
Une colombe descend
En passant,
Blanche sur le luth d’ébène.

Mais au lieu d’accords touchants,
De doux chants,
La colombe gémissante me demande par pitié
Sa moitié,
Sa moitié loin d’elle absente.
SAINTE.BEUVE.

Oh! quel que soit le rêve, ou paisible, ou joyeux,
Qui dans l’ombre à cette heure illumine tes yeux,
C’est le bonheur qu’il te signale;
Loin des bras d’un époux qui n’est encor qu’amant,
Dors tranquille, ma soeur! passe-la doucement,
Ta dernière nuit virginale!

Dors: nous prierons pour toi, jusqu’à ce beau matin!
Tu devais être à nous, et c’était ton destin,
Et rien ne pouvait t’y soustraire.
Oui, la voix de l’autel va te nommer ma soeur;
Mais ce n’est que l’écho d’une voix de mon coeur
Qui déjà me nommait ton frère.

Dors, cette nuit encor, d’un sommeil pur et doux!
Demain, serments, transports, caresses d’un époux,
Festins que la joie environne,
Et soupirs inquiets dans ton sein renaissant,

Quand une main fera de ton front rougissant
Tomber la tremblante couronne!

Ah! puisse dès demain se lever sur tes jours
Un bonheur qui jamais ne s’éclipse, et toujours
Brille, plus beau qu’un rêve même!
Vers le ciel étoilé laisse monter nos voeux.
Dors en paix cette nuit où nous veillons tous deux,
Moi qui te chante, et lui qui t’aime!

ODE VINGT-QUATRIÈME

PLUIE D'ÉTÉ

L'aubépine et l'églantin,
Et le thym,
L'oeillet, le lys et les roses,
En cette belle saison,
À foison
Montrent leurs robes écloses.

Le gentil rossignolet,
Doucelet,
Découpe, dessous l'ombrage,
Mille fredons babillards.
Frétillards,
Aux doux sons de son ramage.
RÉMI BELLEAU.

Que la soirée est fraîche et douce!
Oh! viens! il a plu ce matin;
Les humides tapis de mousse
Verdissent tes pieds de satin.
L'oiseau vole sous les feuillées,
Secouant ses ailes mouillées;
Pauvre oiseau que le ciel bénit!
Il écoute le vent bruire,
Chante, et voit des gouttes d'eau luire,
Comme des perles, dans son nid.

La pluie a versé ses ondées;
Le ciel reprend son bleu changeant;
Les terres luisent fécondées
Comme sous un réseau d'argent.
Le petit ruisseau de la plaine,
Pour une heure enflé, roule et traîne

Brins d’herbe, lézards endormis,
Court, et précipitant son onde
Du haut d’un caillou qu’il inonde,
Fait des Niagaras aux fourmis!

Tourbillonnant dans ce déluge,
Des insectes sans avirons,
Voguent pressés, frêle refuge!
Sur des ailes de moucherons;
D’autres pendent, comme à des îles,
À des feuilles, errants asiles;
Heureux, dans leur adversité,
Si, perçant les flots de sa cime,
Une paille au bord de l’abîme
Retient leur flottante cité!

Les courants ont lavé le sable;
Au soleil montent les vapeurs,
Et l’horizon insaisissable
Tremble et fuit sous leurs plis trompeurs.
On voit seulement sous leurs voiles,
Comme d’incertaines étoiles,
Des points lumineux scintiller,
Et les monts, de la brume enfuie,
Sortir, et, ruisselants de pluie,
Les toits d’ardoise étinceler.

Viens errer dans la plaine humide.
À cette heure nous serons seuls.
Mets sur mon bras ton bras timide;
Viens, nous prendrons par les tilleuls.
Le soleil rougissant décline
Avant de quitter la colline,
Tourne un moment tes yeux pour voir,
Avec ses palais, ses chaumières,
Rayonnants des mêmes lumières,
La ville d’or sur le ciel noir.

Oh! vois voltiger les fumées
Sur les toits de brouillards baignés!
Là, sont des épouses aimées,
Là, des coeurs doux et résignés.
La vie, hélas! dont on s’ennuie,
C’est le soleil après la pluie. -
Le voilà qui baisse toujours!
De la ville, que ses feux noient,
Toutes les fenêtres flamboient
Comme des yeux au front des tours.

L’arc-en-ciel! l’arc-en-ciel! Regarde. -
Comme il s’arrondit pur dans l’air!
Quel trésor le Dieu bon nous garde
Après le tonnerre et l’éclair!
Que de fois, sphères éternelles,
Mon âme a demandé ses ailes,
Implorant quelque Ithuriel,
Hélas! pour savoir à quel monde
Mène cette courbe profonde,
Arche immense d’un pont du ciel!

ODE VINGT-CINQUIÈME

RÊVES

En la amena soledad
de aquesta apacible estancia,
bellisimo laberinto
de árboles, flores, y plantas,
Podeis dexarme, dexando
conmigo, que ellos me bastan
por campania, los libros
que os mande sacar de casa;
que yo, en tanto que Antioquia
celebra con fiestas tantas
la fabrica de esse templo,
que oy à Jupiter consagra,
...
huyendo del gran bullicio,
que hay en sus calles, y plazas,
passar estudiando quiero
la edad que al dia le falta.
CALDERON, El Mágico prodigioso.

I

Amis, loin de la ville,
Loin des palais de roi,
Loin de la cour servile,
Loin de la foule vile,
Trouvez-moi, trouvez-moi,

Aux champs où l’âme oisive
Se recueille en rêvant,
Sur une obscure rive
Où du monde n’arrive
Ni le flot, ni le vent,

Quelque asile sauvage,
Quelque abri d’autrefois,
Un port sur le rivage,
Un nid sous le feuillage,
Un manoir dans les bois!

Trouvez-le-moi bien sombre,
Bien calme, bien dormant,
Couvert d’arbres sans nombre,
Dans le silence et l’ombre,
Caché profondément!

Que là, sur toute chose,
Fidèle à ceux qui m’ont,
Mon vers plane, et se pose
Tantôt sur une rose,
Tantôt sur un grand mont.

Qu’il puisse avec audace,
De tout noeud détaché,
D’un vol que rien ne lasse,
S’égarer dans l’espace
Comme un oiseau lâché.

II

Qu’un songe au ciel m’enlève,
Que plein d’ombre et d’amour,
Jamais il ne s’achève,
Et que la nuit je rêve
À mon rêve du jour!

Aussi blanc que la voile
Qu’à l’horizon je voi,
Qu’il recèle une étoile,
Et qu’il soit comme un voile

Entre la vie et moi!

Que la muse qui plonge
En ma nuit pour briller,
Le dore et le prolonge,
Et de l’éternel songe
Craigne de m’éveiller!

Que toutes mes pensées
Viennent s’y déployer,
Et s’asseoir, empressées,
Se tenant embrassées,
En cercle à mon foyer.

Qu’à mon rêve enchaînées,
Toutes, l’oeil triomphant,
Le bercent inclinées,
Comme des soeurs aînées
Bercent leur frère enfant!

III

On croit sur la falaise,
On croit dans les forêts,
Tant on respire à l’aise,
Et tant rien ne nous pèse,
Voir le ciel de plus près!

Là, tout est comme un rêve;
Chaque voix a des mots,
Tout parle, un chant s’élève
De l’onde sur la grève,
De l’air dans les rameaux.

C’est une voix profonde,
Un choeur universel,
C’est le globe qui gronde,

C’est le roulis du monde
Sur l’océan du ciel.

C’est l’écho magnifique
Des voix de Jéhova,
C’est l’hymne séraphique
Du monde pacifique
Où va ce qui s’en va;

Où, sourde aux cris de femmes,
Aux plaintes, aux sanglots,
L’âme se mêle aux âmes,
Comme la flamme aux flammes,
Comme le flot aux flots!

IV

Ce bruit vaste, à toute heure,
On l’entend au désert.
Paris, folle demeure,
Pour cette voix qui pleure
Nous donne un vain concert.

Oh! la Bretagne antique!
Quelque roc écumant!
Dans la forêt celtique
Quelque donjon gothique!
Pourvu que seulement

La tour hospitalière
Où je pendrai mon nid,
Ait, vieille chevalière,
Un panache de lierre
Sur son front de granit!

Pourvu que, blasonnée
D’un écusson altier,

La haute cheminée,
Béante, illuminée,
Dévore un chêne entier!

Que, l’été, la charmille
Me dérobe un ciel bleu;
Que l’hiver ma famille,
Dans l’âtre assise, brille
Toute rouge au grand feu!

Dans les bois, mes royaumes,
Si le soir l’air bruit,
Qu’il semble, à voir leurs dômes,
Des têtes de fantôme
Se heurtant dans la nuit!

Que des vierges, abeilles
Dont les cieux sont remplis,
Viennent sur moi, vermeilles,
Secouer dans mes veilles
Leur robe à mille plis!

Qu’avec des voix plaintives,
Les ombres des héros
Repassent fugitives,
Blanches sous mes ogives,
Sombres sur mes vitraux!

V

Si ma muse envolée
Porte son nid si cher
Et sa famille ailée
Dans la salle écroulée
D’un vieux baron de fer;

C’est que j’aime ces âges

Plus beaux, sinon meilleurs,
Que nos siècles plus sages;
À leurs débris sauvages
Je m’attache, et d’ailleurs

L’hirondelle enlevée
Par son vol sur la tour,
Parfois, des vents sauvée,
Choisit pour sa couvée
Un vieux nid de vautour.

Sa famille humble et douce,
Souvent, en se jouant,
Du bec remue et pousse,
Tout brisé sur la mousse,
L’oeuf de l’oiseau géant.

Dans les armes antiques
Mes vers ainsi joûront,
Et remuant des piques,
Riront, nains fantastiques,
De grands casques au front!

VI

Ainsi, noués en gerbe,
Reverdiront mes jours
Dans le donjon superbe,
Comme une touffe d’herbe
Dans les brèches des tours.

Mais, donjon ou chaumière,
Du monde délié,
Je vivrai de lumière,
D’extase et de prière,
Oubliant, oublié!

BALLADES

Renouvelle aussi
Toute vieille pensée.
JOACHIM DU BELLAY

BALLADE PREMIÈRE

UNE FÉE

...La reine Mab m’a visité. C’est elle
Qui fait dans le sommeil veiller l’âme immortelle.
ÉMILE DESCHAMPS, Roméo et Juliette.

Que ce soit Urgèle ou Morgane,
J’aime, en un rêve sans effroi,
Qu’une fée, au corps diaphane,
Ainsi qu’une fleur qui se fane, Vienne pencher son front sur moi.

C’est elle dont le luth d’ivoire
Me redit, sur un mâle accord,
Vos contes, qu’on n’oserait croire,
Bons paladins, si votre histoire
N’était plus merveilleuse encor.

C’est elle, aux choses qu’on révère
Qui m’ordonne de m’allier,
Et qui veut que ma main sévère
Joigne la harpe du trouvère
Au gantelet du chevalier.

Dans le désert qui me réclame,
Cachée en tout ce que je vois,
C’est elle qui fait, pour mon âme,
De chaque rayon une flamme,
Et de chaque bruit une voix;

Elle, - qui dans l’onde agitée
Murmure en sortant du rocher;
Et, de me plaire tourmentée,
Suspend la cigogne argentée
Au faîte aigu du noir clocher;

Quand, l’hiver, mon foyer pétille,
C’est elle qui vient s’y tapir,
Et me montre, au ciel qui scintille,
L’étoile qui s’éteint et brille,
Comme un oeil prêt à s’assoupir;

Qui, lorsqu’en des manoirs sauvages
J’erre, cherchant nos vieux berceaux,
M’environnant de mille images,
Comme un bruit du torrent des âges,
Fait mugir l’air sous les arceaux;

Elle, - qui, la nuit, quand je veille,
M’apporte de confus abois,
Et pour endormir mon oreille,
Dans le calme du soir, éveille
Un cor lointain au fond des bois!

Que ce soit Urgèle ou Morgane,
J’aime, en un rêve sans effroi,
Qu’une fée, au corps diaphane,
Ainsi qu’une fleur qui se fane,
Vienne pencher son front sur moi!

BALLADE DEUXIÈME

LE SYLPHE

Le vent, le froid et l’orage
Contre l’enfant faisaient rage.
— Ouvrez, dit-il, je suis nu!
LA FONTAINE, Imitation d’Anacréon.

“ Toi, qu’en ces murs, pareille aux rêveuses Sylphides,
Ce vitrage éclairé montre à mes yeux avides,
Jeune fille, ouvre-moi! Voici la nuit, j ‘ai peur,
La nuit, qui, peuplant l’air de figures livides,
Donne aux âmes des morts des robes de vapeur!

“ Vierge, je ne suis point de ces pèlerins sages
Qui font de longs récits après de longs voyages;
Ni de ces paladins, qu’aime et craint la beauté,
Dont le cor, éveillant les varlets et les pages,
Porte un appel de guerre à l’hospitalité.

“ Je n’ai ni lourd bâton, ni lance redoutée,
Point de longs cheveux noirs, point de barbe argentée,
Ni d’humble chapelet, ni de glaive vainqueur.
Mon souffle, dont une herbe est à peine agitée,
N’arrache au cor des preux qu’un murmure moqueur.

“ Je suis l’enfant de l’air, un sylphe, moins qu’un rêve,
Fils du printemps qui naît, du matin qui se lève,
L’hôte du clair foyer, durant les nuits d’hiver,
L’esprit que la lumière à la rosée enlève,
Diaphane habitant de l’invisible éther.

“ Ce soir un couple heureux, d’une voix solennelle,
Parlait tout bas d’amour et de flamme éternelle.
J’entendais tout; près d’eux je m’étais arrêté

Ils ont dans un baiser pris le bout de mon aile,
Et la nuit est venue avant ma liberté.

“ Hélas! il est trop tard pour rentrer dans ma rose!
Châtelaine, ouvre-moi, car ma demeure est close.
Recueille un fils du jour, égaré dans la nuit;
Permets, jusqu’à demain, qu’en ton lit je repose;
Je tiendrai peu de place et ferai peu de bruit.

“ Mes frères ont suivi la lumière éclipsée,
Ou les larmes du soir dont l’herbe est arrosée;
Les lys leur ont ouvert leurs calices de miel;
Où fuir?... Je ne vois plus de gouttes de rosée,
Plus de fleurs dans les champs! plus de rayons au ciel!

“ Damoiselle, entends-moi, de peur que la Nuit sombre,
Comme en un grand filet, ne me prenne en son ombre,
Parmi les spectres blancs et les fantômes noirs,
Les démons, dont l’enfer même ignore le nombre,
Les hiboux du sépulcre et l’autour des manoirs!

“ Voici l’heure où les morts dansent d’un pied débile.
La lune au pâle front les regarde, immobile;
Et le hideux vampire, ô comble de frayeur!
Soulevant d’un bras fort une pierre inutile,
Traîne en sa tombe ouverte un tremblant fossoyeur.

“ Bientôt, nains monstrueux, noirs de poudre et de cendre,
Dans leur gouffre sans fond les Gnomes vont descendre.
Le follet fantastique erre sur les roseaux.
Au frais Ondin s’unit l’ardente Salamandre,
Et de bleuâtres feux se croisent sur les eaux.

“ Oh!... Si pour amuser son ennui taciturne,
Un mort, parmi ses os, m’enfermait dans son urne!
Si quelque nécromant, riant de mon effroi,
Dans la tour, d’où minuit lève sa voix nocturne,

Liait mon vol paisible au sinistre beffroi!

“ Que ta fenêtre s’ouvre!... Ah! si tu me repousses,
Il me faudra chercher quelques vieux nids de mousses,
À des lézards troublés livrer de grands combats...
Ouvre!... mes yeux sont purs, mes paroles sont douces
Comme ce qu’à sa belle un amant dit tout bas.

“ Et je suis si joli! Si tu voyais mes ailes
Trembler aux feux du jour, transparentes et frêles!...
J’ai la blancheur des lys où, le soir, nous fuyons;
Et les roses, nos soeurs, se disputent entr’elles
Mon souffle de parfums et mon corps de rayons.

“ Je veux qu’un rêve heureux te révèle ma gloire.
Près de moi (ma Sylphide en garde la mémoire),
Les papillons sont lourds, les colibris sont laids,
Quand, roi vêtu d’azur, et de nacre et de moire,
Je vais de fleurs en fleurs visiter mes palais.

“ J’ai froid: l’ombre me glace, et vainement je pleure.
Si je pouvais t’offrir, pour m’ouvrir ta demeure,
Ma goutte de rosée ou mes corolles d’or!
Mais non: je n’ai plus rien, il faudra que je meure.
Chaque soleil me donne et me prend mon trésor.

“ Que veux-tu qu’en dormant je t’apporte en échange?
L’écharpe d’une fée, ou le voile d’un ange?...
J’embellirai ta nuit des prestiges du jour!
Ton sommeil passera, sans que ton bonheur change,
Des beaux songes du ciel aux doux rêves d’amour.

“ Mais mon haleine en vain ternit la vitre humide!
Ô Vierge, crois-tu donc que, dans la nuit perfide,
La voix du Sylphe errant cache un amant trompeur?
Ne me crains pas, c’est moi qui suis faible et timide,
Et Si j ‘avais une ombre, hélas! j’en aurais peur. “

Il pleurait. - Tout à coup devant la tour antique,
S’éleva, murmurant comme un appel mystique,
Une voix... ce n’était sans doute qu’un esprit!
Bientôt parut la dame à son balcon gothique: -
On ne sait si ce fut au Sylphe qu’elle ouvrit.

BALLADE TROISIÈME

LA GRAND-MÈRE

To die - to sleep.
SHAKESPEARE

“ Dors-tu?... réveille-toi, mère de notre mère!
D’ordinaire en dormant ta bouche remuait;
Car ton sommeil souvent ressemble à ta prière.
Mais, ce soir, on dirait la madone de pierre;
Ta lèvre est immobile et ton souffle est muet.

“ Pourquoi courber ton front plus bas que de coutume.
Quel mal avons-nous fait, pour ne plus nous chérir?
Vois, la lampe pâlit, l’âtre scintille et fume;
Si tu ne parles pas, le feu qui se consume,
Et la lampe, et nous deux, nous allons tous mourir!

“ Tu nous trouveras morts près de la lampe éteinte.
Alors, que diras-tu quand tu t’éveilleras?
Tes enfants à leur tour seront sourds à ta plainte.
Pour nous rendre la vie, en invoquant ta sainte,
Il fraudra bien longtemps nous serrer dans tes bras!

“ Donne-nous donc tes mains dans nos mains réchauffées.
Chante-nous quelque chant de pauvre troubadour.
Dis-nous ces chevaliers qui, servis par les fées,
Pour bouquets à leur dame apportaient des trophées,
Et dont le cri de guerre était un nom d’amour.

“ Disnous quel divin signe est funeste aux fantômes;
Quel ermite dans l’air vit Lucifer volant;
Quel rubis étincelle au front du roi des Gnomes;
Et si le noir démon craint plus, dans ses royaumes,
Les psaumes de Turpin que le fer de Roland.

“ Ou, montre-nous ta Bible et les belles images,
Le ciel d’or, les saints bleus, les saintes à genoux,
L’enfant-Jésus, la crèche, et le boeuf, et les mages;
Fais-nous lire du doigt, dans le milieu des pages,
Un peu de ce latin, qui parle à Dieu de nous.

“ Mère!... - Hélas! par degrés s’affaisse la lumière,
L’ombre joyeuse danse autour du noir foyer,
Les esprits vont peut-être entrer dans la chaumière...
Oh! sors de ton sommeil, interromps ta prière;
Toi qui nous rassurais, veux-tu nous effrayer?

“ Dieu! que tes bras sont froids! rouvre les yeux... Naguère
Tu nous parlais d’un monde, où nous mènent nos pas,
Et de ciel, et de tombe, et de vie éphémère,
Tu parlais de la mort... dis-nous, ô notre mère!
Qu’est-ce donc que la mort? - Tu ne nous réponds pas! “

Leur gémissante voix longtemps se plaignit seule.
La jeune aube parut sans réveiller l’aïeule.
La cloche frappa l’air de ses funèbres coups;
Et, le soir, un passant, par la porte entrouverte
Vit, devant le saint livre et la couche déserte,
Les deux petits enfants qui priaient à genoux.

BALLADE QUATRIÈME

À TRILBY, LE LUTIN D’ARGAIL

À vous, ombre légère,
Qui d’aile passagère
Par le monde volez,
Et d’un sifflant murmure
L’ombrageuse verdure
Doucement esbranlez;

J’offre ces violettes,
Ces lys et ces fleurettes.
Et ces roses ici,
Ces vermeillettes roses,
Tout fraischement escloses
Et ces oeillets aussi.
Vieille chanson.

C’est toi, Lutin! - Qui t’amène?
Sur ce rayon du couchant
Es-tu venu? Ton haleine
Me caresse en me touchant!
À mes yeux tu te révèles.
Tu m’inondes d’étincelles!
Et tes frémissantes ailes
Ont un bruit doux comme un chant.

Ta voix, de soupirs mêlée,
M’apporte un accent connu.
Dans ma cellule isolée,
Beau Trilby, sois bienvenu!
Ma demeure hospitalière
N’a point d’humble batelière
Dont ta bouche familière
Baise le sein demi-nu!

Viens-tu, dans l’âtre perfide,
Chercher mon Follet qui fuit,
Et ma Fée et ma Sylphide,
Qui me visitent sans bruit,
Et m’apportent, empressées,
Sur leurs ailes nuancées,
Le jour de douces pensées,
Et de doux rêves la nuit!

Viens-tu pas voir mes Ondines
Ceintes d’algue et de glaïeul?
Mes Nains, dont les voix badines
N’osent parler qu’à moi seul?
Viens-tu réveiller mes Gnomes?
Poursuivre en l’air les atomes,
Et lutiner mes Fantômes
En jouant dans leur linceul?

Hélas! fuis! - Ces lieux que j’aime
N’ont plus ces hôtes chéris!
Des cruels à l’anathème
Ont livré tous mes Esprits!
Mon Ondine est étouffée;
Et comme un double trophée,
Leurs mains ont cloué ma Fée
Près de ma Chauve-Souris!

Mes Spectres, mes Nains si frêles,
Quand leur courroux gronde encor,
N’osent plus sur les tourelles
S’appeler au son du cor;
Ma cour magique, en alarmes,
A fui leurs pesantes armes;
Ils ont de mon Sylphe en larmes
Arraché les ailes d’or!

Toi-même, crains leur tonnerre,
Crains un combat inégal,
Plus que la voix centenaire
Qui jadis vengea Dougal,
Dont la cabane fumeuse
Voit, durant la nuit brumeuse,
Sur une roche écumeuse,
S’asseoir l’ombre de Fingal!

Celui qui de ta montagne
T’a rapporté dans nos champs,
Eut comme toi pour compagne
L’Espérance aux voeux touchants.
Longtemps la France, sa mère,
Vit fuir sa jeunesse amère
Dans l’exil, où comme Homère,
Il n’emportait que ses chants!

À la fois triste et sublime,
Grave en son vol gracieux,
Le Poète aime l’abîme
Où fuit l’aigle audacieux,
Le parfum des fleurs mourantes,
L’or des comètes errantes,
Et les cloches murmurantes
Qui se plaignent dans les cieux!

Il aime un désert sauvage
Où rien ne borne ses pas;
Son coeur, pour fuir l’esclavage,
Vit plus loin que le trépas.
Quand l’opprimé le réclame,
Des peuples il devient l’âme;
Il est pour eux une flamme
Que le tyran n’éteint pas.

Tel est Nodier, le poète! -

Va, dis à ce noble ami
Que ma tendresse inquiète
De tes périls a frémi;
Dis-lui bien qu’il te surveille;
De tes jeux charme sa veille,
Enfant! Et lorsqu’il sommeille,
Dors sur son front endormi!

N’erre pas à l’aventure!
Car on en veut aux Trilbys.
Crains les maux et la torture
Que mon doux Sylphe a subis.
S’ils te prenaient, quelle gloire!
Ils souilleraient d’encre noire,
Hélas! ton manteau de moire,
Ton aigrette de rubis!

Ou, pour danser avec Faune,
Contraignant tes pas tremblants,
Leurs Satyres au pied jaune,
Leurs vieux Sylvains pétulants
Joindraient tes mains enchaînées
Aux vieilles mains décharnées
De leurs Naïades fanées,
Mortes depuis deux mille ans!

BALLADE CINQUIÈME

LE GÉANT

Les nuées du ciel elles-mêmes craignent que je ce vienne chercher mes ennemis dans leur sein...
MOTTENABBI.

Ô guerriers! je suis né dans le pays des Gaules.
Mes aïeux franchissaient le Rhin comme un ruisseau,
Ma mère me baigna dans la neige des pôles
Tout enfant, et mon père, aux robustes épaules,
De trois grandes peaux d’ours décora mon berceau.

Car mon père était fort! L’âge à présent l’enchaîne.
De son front tout ridé tombent ses cheveux blancs.
Il est faible; il est vieux. Sa fin est si prochaine,
Qu’à peine il peut encor déraciner un chêne
Pour soutenir ses pas tremblants!

C’est moi qui le remplace! et j’ai sa javeline,
Ses boeufs, son arc de fer, ses haches, ses colliers;
Moi! qui peux, succédant au vieillard qui décline,
Les pieds dans le vallon, m’asseoir sur la colline,
Et de mon souffle au loin courber les peupliers!

À peine adolescent, sur les Alpes sauvages,
De rochers en rochers je m’ouvrais des chemins;
Ma tête ainsi qu’un mont arrêtait les nuages;
Et souvent, dans les cieux épiant leurs passages,
J’ai pris des aigles dans mes mains!

Je combattais l’orage, et ma bruyante haleine
Dans leur vol anguleux éteignait les éclairs;
Ou, joyeux, devant moi chassant quelque baleine,
L’océan à mes pas ouvrait sa vaste plaine,

Et mieux que l’ouragan mes jeux troublaient les mers!

J’errais, je poursuivais d’une atteinte trop sûre
Le requin dans les flots, dans les airs l’épervier;
L’ours, étreint dans mes bras, expirait sans blessure,
Et j’ai souvent, l’hiver, brisé dans leur morsure
Les dents blanches du loup-cervier!

Ces plaisirs enfantins pour moi n’ont plus de charmes.
J’aime aujourd’hui la guerre et son mâle appareil,
Les malédictions des familles en larmes,
Les camps, et le soldat, bondissant dans ses armes,
Qui vient du cri d’alarme égayer mon réveil!

Dans la poudre et le sang, quand l’ardente Mêlée
Broie et roule une armée en bruyants tourbillons,
Je me lève, je suis sa course échevelée,
Et, comme un cormoran fond sur l’onde troublée,
Je plonge dans les bataillons!

Ainsi qu’un moissonneur parmi des gerbes mûres,
Dans les rangs écrasés, seul debout, j’apparais.
Leurs clameurs dans ma voix se perdent en murmures;
Et mon poing désarmé martèle les armures
Mieux qu’un chêne noueux choisi dans les forêts.

Je marche toujours nu. Ma valeur souveraine
Rit des soldats de fer dont vos camps sont peuplés.
Je n’emporte au combat que ma pique de frêne,
Et ce casque léger que traîneraient sans peine
Dix taureaux au joug accouplés.

Sans assiéger les forts d’échelles inutiles,
Des chaînes de leurs ponts je brise les anneaux.
Mieux qu’un bélier d’airain je bats leurs murs fragiles.
Je lutte corps à corps avec les tours des villes.
Pour combler les fossés j’arrache les créneaux.

Ô! quand mon tour viendra de suivre mes victimes,
Guerriers! ne laissez pas ma dépouille au corbeau;
Ensevélissez-moi parmi des monts sublimes,
Afin que l’étranger cherche en voyant leurs cimes
Quelle montagne est mon tombeau!

BALLADE SIXIÈME

LA FIANCÉE DU TIMBALIER

à M. J. F.

Douce est la mort qui vient en bien aimant!
DESPORTES, Sonnet.

“ Monseigneur le duc de Bretagne
A, pour les combats meurtriers,
Convoqué de Nantes à Mortagne,
Dans la plaine et sur la montagne,
L’arrière-ban de ses guerriers.

“ Ce sont des barons dont les armes
Ornent des forts ceints d’un fossé;
Des preux vieillis dans les alarmes,
Des écuyers, des hommes d’armes;
L’un d’entre eux est mon fiancé.

“ Il est parti pour l’Aquitaine
Comme timbalier, et pourtant
On le prend pour un capitaine,
Rien qu’à voir sa mine hautaine,
Et son pourpoint, d’or éclatant!

“ Depuis ce jour, l’effroi m’agite.
J’ai dit, joignant son sort au mien:
Ma patronne, sainte Brigitte,
Pour que jamais il ne le quitte,
Surveillez son ange gardien!

“ J’ai dit à notre abbé: Messire,
Priez bien pour tous nos soldats! -
Et, comme on sait qu’il le désire,

J’ai brûlé trois cierges de cire
Sur la châsse de saint Gildas.

“ À Notre-Dame de Lorette
J’ai promis, dans mon noir chagrin,
D’attacher sur ma gorgerette,
Fermée à la vue indiscrète,
Les coquilles du pèlerin.

“ Il n’a pu, par d’amoureux gages,
Absent, consoler mes foyers;
Pour porter les tendres messages,
La vassale n’a point de pages,
Le vassal n’a pas d’écuyers.

“ Il doit aujourd’hui de la guerre
Revenir avec monseigneur;
Ce n’est plus un amant vulgaire;
Je lève un front baissé naguère,
Et mon orgueil est du bonheur!

“ Le duc triomphant nous rapporte
Son drapeau dans les camps froissé;
Venez tous sous la vieille porte
Voir passer la brillante escorte,
Et le prince, et mon fiancé,

“ Venez voir pour ce jour de fête
Son cheval caparaçonné,
Qui sous son poids henrtit, s’arrête,
Et marche en secouant la tête,
De plumes rouges couronné!

“ Mes soeurs, à vous parer si lentes,
Venez voir près de mon vainqueur
Ces timbales étincelantes
Qui sous sa main toujours tremblantes

Sonnent et font bondir le coeur!

“ Venez surtout le voir lui-même
Sous le manteau que j’ai brodé.
Qu’il sera beau! c’est lui que j’aime!
Il porte comme un diadème
Son casque de crins inondé!

“ L’Égyptienne sacrilège,
M’attirant derrière un pilier,
M’a dit hier (Dieu nous protège!)
Qu’à la fanfare du cortège
Il manquerait un timbalier.

“ Mais j’ai tant prié, que j’espère!
Quoique, me montrant de la main
Un sépulcre, son noir repaire,
La vieille aux regards de vipère,
M’ait dit: Je t’attends là demain!

“ Volons! plus de noires pensées!
Ce sont les tambours que j ‘entends.
Voici les dames entassées,
Les tentes de pourpre dressées,
Les fleurs et les drapeaux flottants!

“ Sur deux rangs le cortège ondoie
D’abord, les piquiers aux pas lourds;
Puis, sous l’étendard qu’on déploie,
Les barons, en robe de soie,
Avec leurs toques de velours.

“ Voici les chasubles des prêtres;
Les hérauts sur un blanc coursier.
Tous, en souvenir des ancêtres,
Portent l’écusson de leurs maîtres,
Peint sur leur corselet d’acier.

“ Admirez l’armure persane
Des Templiers, craints de l’enfer;
Et, sous la longue pertuisane,
Les archers venus de Lausanne,
Vêtus de buffle, armés de fer.

“ Le duc n’est pas loin ses bannières
Flottent parmi les chevaliers;
Quelques enseignes prisonnières,
Honteuses, passent les dernières... -
— Mes soeurs! voici les timbaliers!... “

Elle dit, et sa vue errante
Plonge, hélas! dans les rangs pressés;
Puis, dans la foule indifférente,
Elle tomba, froide et mourante...
— Les timbaliers étaient passés.

BALLADE SEPTIÈME

LA MÊLÉE

Les armées s’ébranlent, le choc est terrible, les combattants sont terribles, les blessures sont terribles, la mêlée est terrible. GONZALO BERCEO, la Bataille de Simancas.

Pâtre! change de route. - Au pied de ces collines
Vois onduler deux rangs d’épaisses javelines;
Vois ces deux bataillons l’un vers l’autre marchant;
Au signal de leurs chefs que divise la haine,
Ils se sont pour combattre arrêtés dans la plaine.
Écoute ces clameurs... tu frémis c’est leur chant!

“ Accourez tous, oiseaux de proie,
Aigles, hiboux, Vautours, corbeaux!
Volez! Volez tous pleins de joie
À ces champs comme à des tombeaux!
Que l’ennemi sous notre glaive
Tombe avec le jour qui s’achève!
Les psaumes du soir sont finis.
Le prêtre, qui suit leurs bannières,
Leur a dit leurs vêpres dernières,
Et le nôtre nous a bénis! “

Halbert, baron normand, Ronan, prince de Galles,
Vont mesurer ici leurs forces presqu ‘égales;
Les Normands sont adroits; les Gallois sont ardents.
Ceux-là viennent chargés d’une armure sonore;
Ceux-ci font, pour couvrir leur front sauvage encore,
De la gueule des loups un casque armé de dents!

“ Que nous fait la plainte des veuves,
Et de l’orphelin gémissant?
Demain nous laverons aux fleuves

Nos bras teints de fange et de sang.
Serrons nos rangs, brûlons nos tentes!
Que nos trompettes éclatantes
Glacent l’ennemi méprisé!
En vain leurs essaims se déroulent;
Dans chacun des sillons qu’ils foulent
Leur sépulcre est déjà creusé! “

Le signal est donné. - Parmi des flots de poudre,
Leurs pas courts et pressés roulent comme la foudre... -
Comme deux chevaux noirs qui dévorent le frein,
Comme deux grands taureaux luttant dans les vallées,
Les deux masses de fer, à grand bruit ébranlées,
Brisent d’un même choc leur double front d’airain.

“ Allons, guerriers! la charge sonne!
Courrez, frappez, c’est le moment!
Aux sons de la trompe saxonne,
Aux accords du clairon normand!
Dagues, hallebardes, épées,
Pertuisanes de sang trempées,
Haches, poignards à deux tranchants,
Parmi les cuirasses froissées,
Mêlez vos pointes hérissées,
Comme la ronce dans les champs! “

Où est donc le soleil? - Il luit dans la fumée
Comme un bouclier rouge en la forge enflammée.
Dans les vapeurs de sang on voit briller le fer;
La vallée au loin semble une fournaise ardente;
On dirait qu’au milieu de la plaine grondante
S’est ouverte soudain la bouche de l’enfer.

“ Le jeu des héros se prolonge,
Les rangs s’enfoncent dans les rangs,
Le pied des combattants se plonge
Dans la blessure des mourants.

Avançons! avançons! courage!
Le fantassin mord avec rage
Le poitrail de fer du coursier;
Les chevaux blanchissants frissonnent,
Et les masses d’armes résonnent
Sur leurs caparaçons d’acier!

Noir chaos de coursiers, d’hommes, d’armes heurtées!
Les Gallois, tout couverts de peaux ensanglantées,
Se roulent sur le dard des écus meurtriers;
À mourir sur leurs morts obstinés et fidèles,
Ils semblent assiéger comme des citadelles
Les cavaliers normands sur leurs grands destriers.

“ Que ceux qui brisent leur épée
Luttent des ongles et des dents,
S’ils veulent fuir la faim trompée
Des loups autour de nous rôdants!
Point de prisonniers! point d’esclaves!
S’il faut mourir, mourrons en braves
Sur nos compagnons immolés.
Que demain le jour, s’il se lève,
Voie encor des tronçons de glaive
Étreints par nos bras mutilés!... “

Viens, berger: la nuit tombe, et plus de sang ruisselle;
De coups plus furieux chaque armure étincelle;
Les chevaux éperdus se dérobent aux mors.
Viens, laissons achever cette lutte brûlante.
Ces hommes acharnés à leur tache sanglante
Se reposeront tous demain, vainqueurs ou morts!

BALLADE HUITIÈME

LES DEUX ARCHERS

à M. Louis Boulanger

Dames, oyez un conte lamentable.
BAÏF.

C’était l’instant funèbre où la nuit est si sombre,
Qu’on tremble à chaque pas de réveiller dans l’ombre
Un démon, ivre encor du banquet des sabbats;
Le moment où, liant à peine sa prière,
Le voyageur se hâte à travers la clairière;
C’était l’heure où l’on parle bas!

Deux francs archers passaient au fond de la vallée,
Là-bas! où vous voyez une tour isolée,
Qui, lorsqu’en Palestine allaient mourir nos rois,
Fut bâtie en trois nuits, au dire de nos pères,
Par un ermite saint qui remuait les pierres
Avec le signe de la croix.

Tous deux, sans craindre l’heure, en ce lieu taciturne
Allumèrent un feu pour leur repas nocturne;
Puis ils vinrent s’asseoir en déposant leur cor,
Sur un saint de granit, dont l’image grossière,
Les mains jointes, le front couché dans la poussière,
Avait l’air de prier encor.

Cependant sur la tour, les monts, les bois antiques,
L’ardent foyer jetait des clartés fantastiques;
Les hiboux s’effrayaient au fond des vieux manoirs;
Et les chauves-souris que tout sabbat réclame,
Volaient, et par moments épouvantaient la flamme
De leur grande aile aux ongles noirs!

Le plus vieux des archers alors dit au plus jeune:
“ Portes-tu le cilice? - Observes-tu le jeûne? “
Reprit l’autre, et leur rire accompagna leur voix.
D’autres rires de loin tout à coup s’entendirent.
Le val était désert, l’ombre épaisse; ils se dirent:
“ C’est l’écho qui rit dans les bois. “

Soudain à leurs regards une lueur rampante
En bleuâtres sillons sur la hauteur serpente;
Les deux blasphémateurs, hélas! sans s’effrayer,
Jetèrent au brasier d’autres branches de chênes,
Disant: “ C’est, au miroir des cascades prochaines
Le reflet de notre foyer. “

Or cet écho (d’effroi qu’ici chacun s’incline!)
C’était Satan, riant tout haut sur la colline!
Ce reflet, émané du corps de Lucifer,
C’était le pâle jour qu’il traîne en nos ténèbres,
Le rayon sulfureux qu’en des songes funèbres
Il nous apporte de l’enfer!

Aux profanes éclats de leur coupable joie,
Il était accouru comme un loup vers sa proie.
Sur les archers dans l’ombre erraient ses yeux ardents.
—” Riez et blasphémez dans vos heures oisives.
Moi, je ferai passer vos bouches convulsives
Du rire au grincement de dents! “

À l’aube du matin, un peu de cendre éteinte
D’un pied large et fourchu portait l’étrange empreinte.
Le val fut tout le jour désert, silencieux.
Mais, au lieu du foyer, à minuit même, un pâtre
Vit soudain apparaître une flamme bleuâtre
Qui ne montait pas vers les cieux!

Dès qu’au sol attachée elle rampa livide,

De longs rires soudain éclatant dans le vide,
Glacèrent le berger d’un grand effroi saisi;
Il ne vit point Satan et ceux de l’autre monde,
Et ne put concevoir, dans sa terreur profonde,
Ce qu’ils souffraient pour rire ainsi!

Dès lors, toutes les nuits, aux monts, aux bois antiques,
L’ardent foyer jeta ses clartés fantastiques;
Des rires effrayaient les hiboux des manoirs;
Et les chauves-souris que tout sabbat réclame,
Volaient, et par moments épouvantaient la flamme
De leur grande aile aux ongles noirs.

Rien, avant le rayon de l’aube matinale,
Enfants, rien n’éteignait cette flamme infernale.
Si l’orage, à grands flots tombant, grondait dans l’air,
Les rires éclataient aussi haut que la foudre,
La flamme en tournoyant s’élançait de la poudre,
Comme pour s’unir à l’éclair!

Mais enfin une nuit, Vêtu de scapulaire,
Se leva du Vieux saint le marbre séculaire;
Il fit trois pas, armé de son rameau bénit;
De l’effrayant prodige effrayant exorciste,
De ses lèvres de pierre il dit: “ Que Dieu m’assiste! “
En ouvrant ses bras de granit!

Alors tout s’éteignit, flammes, rires, phosphore,
Tout! et le lendemain, on trouva dès l’aurore
Les deux gens d’armes morts sur la statue assis;
On les ensevelit; et, suivant sa promesse,
Le seigneur du hameau, pour fonder une messe,
Légua trois deniers parisis.

Si quelque enseignement se cache en cette histoire,
Qu’importe! il ne faut pas la juger, mais la croire.
La croire! Qu’ai-je dit? ces temps sont loin de nous!

Ce n’est plus qu’à demi qu’on se livre aux croyances.
Nul, dans notre âge aveugle et vain de ses sciences,
Ne sait plier les deux genoux!

BALLADE NEUVIÈME

L’AVEU DU CHATELAIN

Pource aimez-moy, cependant qu’estes belle.
RONSARD.

Écoute-moi, Madeleine!
L’hiver a quitté la plaine
Qu’hier il glaçait encor.
Viens dans ces bois d’où ma suite
Se retire, au loin conduite
Par les sons errants du cor!

Viens! on dirait, Madeleine,
Que le Printemps, dont l’haleine
Donne aux roses leurs couleurs,
A cette nuit, pour te plaire,
Secoué sur la bruyère
Sa robe pleine de fleurs!

Si j ‘étais, ô Madeleine,
L’agneau dont la blanche laine
Se démêle sous tes doigts!...
Si j’étais l’oiseau qui passe,
Et que poursuit dans l’espace
Un doux appel de ta voix!...

Si j’étais, ô Madeleine,
L’ermite de Tombelaine
Dans son pieux tribunal,
Quand ta bouche à son oreille
De tes péchés de la veille
Livre l’aveu virginal!...

Si j’avais, ô Madeleine,

L’oeil du nocturne phalène,
Lorsqu’au sommeil tu te rends,
Et que son aile indiscrète
De ta cellule secrète
Bat les vitraux transparents;

Quand ton sein, ô Madeleine,
Sort du corset de baleine,
Libre enfin du velours noir;
Quand, de peur de te voir nue.
Tu jettes, fille ingénue,
Ta robe sur ton miroir!

Si tu voulais, Madeleine,
Ta demeure serait pleine
De pages et de vassaux;
Et ton splendide oratoire
Déroberait sous la moire
La pierre de ses arceaux!...

Si tu voulais, Madeleine,
Au lieu de la marjolaine
Qui pare ton chaperon,
Tu porterais la couronne
De comtesse ou de baronne,
Dont la perle est le fleuron!

Si tu voulais, Madeleine,
Je te ferais châtelaine;
Je suis le comte Roger;
Quitte pour moi ces chaumières,
À moins que tu ne préfères
Que je me fasse berger!

BALLADE DIXIÈME

À UN PASSANT

LA CHASSE DU BURGRAVE *

Au soleil couchant
Toi qui vas cherchant
Fortune,
Prends garde de choir:
La terre, le soir,
Est brune.

L’océan trompeur
Couvre de vapeur
La dune.
Vois: à l’horizon,
Aucune maison!
Aucune!

Maint voleur te suit;
La chose est, la nuit,
Commune.
Les dames des bois
Nous gardent parfois
Rancune.

Elles vont errer;
Crains d’en rencontrer
Quelqu’une.
Les lutins de l’air
Vont danser au clair
De lune.
La Chanson du fou.

Voyageur qui, la nuit, sur le pavé sonore

De ton chien inquiet passes accompagné,
Après le jour brûlant, pourquoi marcher encore?
Où mènes-tu si tard ton cheval résigné?

La nuit! - Ne crains-tu pas d’entrevoir la stature
Du brigand dont un sabre a chargé la ceinture?
Ou qu’un de ces vieux loups près des routes rôdants,
Qui du fer des coursiers méprisent l’étincelle,
D’un bond brusque et soudain s’attachant à ta selle,
Ne mêle à ton sang noir l’écume de ses dents?

Ne crains-tu pas surtout qu’un follet à cette heure
N’allonge sous tes pas le chemin qui te leurre,
Et ne te fasse, hélas! ainsi qu’aux anciens jours,
Rêvant quelque logis dont la vitre scintille
Et le faisan doré par l’âtre qui pétille,
Marcher vers des clartés qui reculent toujours?

Crains d’aborder la plaine où le sabbat s’assemble,
Où les démons hurlants viennent danser ensemble;
Ces murs maudits par Dieu, par Satan profanés,
Ce magique château dont l’enfer sait l’histoire,
Et qui, désert le jour, quand tombe la nuit noire
Enflamme ses vitraux dans l’ombre illuminés!

Voyageur isolé, qui t’éloignes si vite,
De ton chien inquiet la nuit accompagné,
Après le jour brûlant, quand le repos t’invite,
Où mènes-tu si tard ton cheval résigné?

BALLADE ONZIÈME

LA CHASSE DU BURGRAVE

à Paul

Un vieux faune en riait dans sa grotte sauvage.
SEGRAIS.

“ Daigne protéger notre chasse,
Châsse
De monseigneur saint-Godefroi,
Roi!

“ Si tu fais ce que je désire,
Sire,
Nous t’édifîrons un tombeau,
Beau;

“ Puis je te donne un cor d’ivoire,
Voire
Un dais neuf à pans de velours,
Lourds,

“ Avec dix chandelles de cire,
Sire!
Donc, te prions à deux genoux,
Nous,

“ Nous qui, né de bons gentilshommes,
Sommes
Le Seigneur burgrave Alexis
Six! “ -

Voilà ce que dit le burgrave,
Grave,

Au tombeau de saint-Godefroi
Froid.

—” Mon page, emplis mon escarcelle,
Selle
Mon cheval de Calatrava;
Va!

“ Piqueur, va convier le comte,
Conte
Que ma meute aboie en mes cours.
Cours!

“Archers, mes compagnons de fêtes,
Faites
Votre épieu lisse et vos cornets
Nets.

“Nous ferons ce soir une chère
Chère;
Vous n’y recevrez, maître-queux,
Qu’eux.

“ En chasse, amis! je vous invite.
Vite!
En chasse! allons courre les cerfs,
Serfs! “

Il part, et madame Isabelle,
Belle,
Dit gaiement du haut des remparts
— Pars!

Tous les chasseurs sont dans la plaine,
Pleine
D’ardents seigneurs, de sénéchaux
Chauds.

Ce ne sont que baillis et prêtres,
Reitres
Qui savent traquer à pas lourds
L’ours,

Dames en brillants équipages,
Pages,
Fauconniers, clercs, et peu bénins
Nains.

En chasse! - Le maître en personne
Sonne.
Fuyez! voici les paladins,
Daims.

Il n’est pour vous comte d’empire
Pire
Que le vieux burgrave Alexis
Six!

Fuyez! - Mais un cerf dans l’espace
Passe,
Et disparaît comme l’éclair,
Clair!

“ Taïaut les chiens, taïaut les hommes!
Sommes
D’argent et d’or paieront sa chair
Cher!

“ Mon château pour ce cerf! - Marraine,
Reine
Des beaux sylphes et des follets
Laids!

“ Donne-moi son bois pour trophée,

Fée!
Mère du brave, et du chasseur
Soeur!

“ Tout ce qu’un prêtre à sa madone
Donne,
Moi, je te le promets ici,
Si

“ Notre main, ta serve et sujette,
Jette
Ce beau cerf qui s’enfuit là-bas
Bas! “

Du Chasseur Noir craignant l’injure,
Jure
Le vieux burgrave haletant,
Tant

Que déjà sa meute qui jappe
Happe,
Et fête le pauvre animal
Mal.

Il fuit. La bande malévole
Vole
Sur sa trace, et par le plus court
Court.

Adieu clos, plaines diaprées,
Prées,
Vergers fleuris, jardins sablés,
Blés!

Le cerf, s’échappant de plus belle,
Bêle;
Un bois à sa course est ouvert,

Vert.

Il entend venir sur ses traces
Races
De chiens dont vous seriez jaloux,
Loups;

Piqueurs, ardentes haquenées,
Nées
De ces étalons aux longs crins
Craints,

Leurs flancs, que de blancs harnois ceignent,
Saignent
Des coups fréquents des éperons
Prompts.

Le cerf, que le son de la trompe
Trompe,
Se jette dans les bois épais... -
Paix!

Hélas, en vain!... la meute cherche,
Cherche,
Et là tu retentis encor,
Cor!

Où fuir? dans le lac! Il s’y plonge,
Longe
Le bord où maint buisson rampant
Pend.

Ah! dans les eaux du lac agreste
Reste!
Hélas! pauvre cerf aux abois,
Bois!

Contre toi la fanfare ameute
Meute,
Et veneurs sonnant du hautbois...
Bois!

Les archers sournois qui t’attendent
Tendent
Leurs arcs dans l’épaisseur du bois!...
Bois!

Ils sont avides de carnage;
Nage!
C’est ton seul espoir désormais;
Mais

L’essaim, que sa chair palpitante
Tente,
Après lui dans le lac profond
Fond.

Il sort. - Plus d’espoir qui te leurre!
L’heure
Vient où pour toi tout est fini.
Ni

Tes pieds vifs, ni saint Marc de Leyde,
L’aide
Du cerf qu’un chien, à demi-mort,
Mord,

Ne te sauveront des morsures
Sûres
Des limiers ardents de courroux,
Roux.

Vois ces chiens qu’un serf bas et lâche
Lâche,

Vois les épieux à férir prêts,
Près!

Meurs donc! la fanfare méchante
Chante
Ta chute au milieu des clameurs.
Meurs!

Et ce soir, sur les délectables
Tables,
Tu feras un excellent mets;
Mais

On t’a vengé. - Fille d’Autriche
Triche
Quand l’hymen lui donne un barbon
Bon.

Or, sans son hôte le bon comte
Compte;
Il revient, quoique fatigué,
Gai.

Et tandis que ton sang ruisselle,
Celle
Qu’épousa le comte Alexis
Six,

Sur le front ridé du burgrave,
Grave,
Pauvre cerf, des rameaux aussi;
Si

Qu’au burg vous rentrez à la brune,
Brune,
Après un jour si hasardeux,
Deux!

BALLADE DOUZIÈME

LE PAS D’ARMES DU ROI JEAN

Plus de six cents lances y furent brisées; on se battit à pied et à cheval, à la barrière, à coups d’épée et de pique, où partout les tenants et les assaillants ne firent rien qui ne répondît à la haute estime qu’ils s’étaient déjà acquise; ce qui fit éclater ces tournois doublement. Enfin, au dernier, un gentilhomme nommé de Fontaines, beau-frère de Chandiou, grand prévôt des maréchaux, fut blessé à mort; et au second encore, Saint-Aubin, autre gentilhomme, fut tué d’un coup de lance. Ancienne chronique.

Çà, qu’on selle,
Écuyer,
Mon fidèle
Destrier.
Mon coeur ploie
Sous la joie,
Quand je broie,
L’étrier.

Par saint Gille,
Viens-nous-en,
Mon agile
Alezan;
Viens, écoute,
Par la route,
Voir la joute
Du Roi Jean.

Qu’un gros carme
Chartrier
Ait pour arme
L’encrier;
Qu’une fille,
Sous la grille,

S’égosille
À prier;

Nous qui sommes,
De par Dieu,
Gentilshommes
De haut lieu,
Il faut faire
Bruit sur terre,
Et la guerre
N’est qu’un jeu.

Ma vieille âme
Enrageait;
Car ma lame,
Que rongeait
Cette rouille
Qui la souille,
En quenouille
Se changeait.

Cette ville,
Aux longs cris,
Qui profile
Son front gris,
Des toits frêles,
Cent tourelles,
Clochers grêles,
C’est Paris!

Quelle foule,
Par mon sceau!
Qui s’écoule
En ruisseau,
Et se rue,
Incongrue,
Par la rue,

Saint-Marceau.

Notre-Dame!
Que c’est beau!
Sur mon âme
De corbeau,
Voudrais être
Clerc ou prêtre
Pour y mettre
Mon tombeau!

Les quadrilles,
Les chansons
Mêlent filles
Et garçons.
Quelles fêtes!
Que de têtes
Sur les faîtes
Des maisons!

Un maroufle,
Mis à neuf,
Joue et souffle
Comme un boeuf,
Une marche
De Luzarche
Sur chaque arche
Du Pont-Neuf.

Le vieux Louvre! -
Large et lourd,
Il ne s’ouvre
Qu’au grand jour,
Emprisonne
La couronne,
Et bourdonne
Dans sa tour.

Los aux dames!
Au roi los!
Vois les flammes
Du champ clos,
Où la foule,
Qui s’écroule,
Hurle et roule
À grands flots!

Sans attendre,
Çà, piquons!
L’oeil bien tendre,
Attaquons
De nos selles
Les donzelles,
Roses, belles,
Aux balcons.

Saulx-Tavane
Le ribaud
Se pavane,
Et Chabot
Qui ferraille,
Bossu, raille
Mons Fontraille
Le pied-bot.

Là-bas, Serge
Qui fit voeu
D’aller vierge
Au saint lieu;
Là, Lothaire,
Duc sans terre
Sauveterre,
Diable et dieu.

Le vidame
De Conflans
Suit sa dame
À pas lents,
Et plus d’une
S’importune
De la brune
Aux bras blancs.

Là-haut brille,
Sur ce mur,
Yseult, fille
Au front pur;
Là-bas, seules,
Force aïeules
Portant gueules
Sur azur.

Dans la lice,
Vois encor
Berthe, Alice,
Léonor,
Dame Irène,
Ta marraine,
Et la reine
Toute en or.

Dame Irène
Parle ainsi;
— Quoi! la reine
Triste ici!
Son altesse
Dit: — Comtesse,
J’ai tristesse et souci.

On commence!
Le beffroi!

Coups de lance,
Cris d’effroi!
On se forge,
On s’égorge,
Par saint George!
Par le roi!

La cohue,
Flot de fer,
Frappe, hue,
Remplit l’air,
Et, profonde,
Tourne et gronde,
Comme une onde
Sur la mer!

Dans la plaine
Un éclair
Se promène
Vaste et clair;
Quels mélanges!
Sang et franges!
Plaisirs d’anges!
Bruit d’enfer!

Sus, ma bête,
De façon
Que je fête
Ce grison!
Je te baille
Pour ripaille
Plus de paille,
Plus de son

Qu’un gros frère,
Gai, friand,
Ne peut faire,

Mendiant,
Par les places
Où tu passes,
De grimaces
En priant!

Dans l’orage,
Lys courbé,
Un beau page
Est tombé.
Il se pâme,
Il rend l’âme;
Il réclame
Un abbé.

La fanfare
Aux sons d’or,
Qui t’effare,
Sonne encor
Pour sa chute;
Triste lutte
De la flûte
Et du cor!

Moines, vierges,
Porteront
De grands cierges
Sur son front;
Et dans l’ombre
Du lieu sombre,
Deux yeux d’ombre
Pleureront

Car madame
Isabeau
Suit son âme
Au tombeau.

Que d’alarmes!
Que de larmes!... -
Un pas d’armes,
C’est très beau!

Çà, mon frère,
Viens, rentrons
Dans notre aire
De barons.
Va plus vite,
Car au gîte
Qui t’invite,
Trouverons,

Toi, l’avoine
Du matin,
Moi, le moine
Augustin,
Ce saint homme,
Suivant Rome,
Qui m’assomme
De latin,

Et rédige
En romain
Tout prodige
De ma main,
Qu’à ma charge
Il émarge
Sur un large
Parchemin.

Un vrai sire
Châtelain
Laisse écrire
Le vilain;
Sa main digne,

Quand il signe,
Égratigne
Le vélin.

BALLADE TREIZIÈME

LA LÉGENDE DE LA NONNE

à M. Louis Boulanger

Acabòse vuestrÔ bien
Y vuestros males nÔ acaban.
Reproches al Rey Rodrigo.

Venez, vous dont l’oeil étincelle
Pour entendre une histoire encor,
Approchez: je vous dirai celle
De doña Padilla del Flor.
Elle était d’Alanje, où s’entassent
Les collines et les halliers. -
Enfants, voici des boeufs qui passent,
Cachez vos rouges tabliers!

Il est des filles à Grenade,
Il en est à Séville aussi,
Qui, pour la moindre sérénade,
À l’amour demandent merci;
Il en est que d’abord embrassent,
Le soir, de hardis cavaliers. -
Enfants, voici des boeufs qui passent,
Cachez vos rouges tabliers!

Ce n’est pas sur ce ton frivole
Qu’il faut parler de Padilla,
Car jamais prunelle espagnole
D’un feu plus chaste ne brilla;
Elle fuyait ceux qui pourchassent
Les filles sous les peupliers. -
Enfants, voici des boeufs qui passent,
Cachez vos rouges tabliers!

Rien ne touchait ce coeur farouche,
Ni doux soins, ni propos joyeux;
Pour un mot d’une belle bouche,
Pour un signe de deux beaux yeux,
On sait qu’il n’est rien que ne fassent
Les seigneurs et les bacheliers. -
Enfants, voici des boeufs qui passent,
Cachez vos rouges tabliers!

Elle prit le voile à Tolède
Au grand soupir des gens du lieu,
Comme si, quand on n’est pas laide,
On avait droit d’épouser Dieu.
Peu s’en fallut que ne pleurassent
Les soudards et les écoliers. -
Enfants, voici des boeufs qui passent,
Cachez vos rouges tabliers!

Mais elle disait: “ Loin du monde,
Vivre et prier pour les méchants!
Quel bonheur! quelle paix profonde
Dans la prière et dans les chants!
Là, si les démons nous menacent,
Les anges sont nos boucliers! “ -
Enfants, voici des boeufs qui passent,
Cachez vos rouges tabliers!

Or, la belle à peine cloîtrée
Amour en son coeur s’installa
Un fier brigand de la contrée
Vint alors et dit: Me voilà!
Quelquefois les brigands surpassent
En audace les chevaliers. -
Enfants, voici des boeufs qui passent,
Cachez vos rouges tabliers!

Il était laid: des traits austères,
La main plus rude que le gant;
Mais l’amour a bien des mystères,
Et la nonne aima le brigand.
On voit des biches qui remplacent
Leurs beaux cerfs par des sangliers. -
Enfants, voici des boeufs qui passent,
Cachez vos rouges tabliers!

Pour franchir la sainte limite,
Pour approcher du saint couvent,
Souvent le brigand d’un ermite
Prenait le cilice, et souvent
La cotte de maille où s’enchâssent
Les croix noires des Templiers. -
Enfants, voici des boeufs qui passent,
Cachez vos rouges tabliers!

La nonne osa, dit la chronique,
Au brigand par l’enfer conduit,
Aux pieds de Sainte Véronique
Donner un rendez-vous la nuit,
À l’heure où les corbeaux croassent,
Volant dans l’ombre par milliers. -
Enfants, voici des boeufs qui passent,
Cachez vos rouges tabliers!

Padilla voulait, anathème!
Oubliant sa vie en un jour,
Se livrer, dans l’église même,
Sainte à l’enfer, vierge à l’amour,
Jusqu’à l’heure pâle où s’effacent
Les cierges sur les chandeliers. -
Enfants, voici des boeufs qui passent,
Cachez vos rouges tabliers!

Or quand, dans la nef descendue

La nonne appela le bandit,
Au lieu de la voix attendue,
C’est la foudre qui répondit.
Dieu voulu que ses coups frappassent
Les amants par Satan liés. -
Enfants, voici des boeufs qui passent,
Cachez vos rouges tabliers!

Aujourd’hui, des fureurs divines
Le pâtre enflammant ses récits,
Vous montre au penchant des ravines
Quelques tronçons de murs noircis,
Deux clochers que les ans crevassent,
Dont l’abri tuerait ses béliers. -
Enfants, voici des boeufs qui passent,
Cachez vos rouges tabliers!

Quand la nuit, du cloître gothique
Brunissant les portails béants,
Change à l’horizon fantastique
Les deux clochers en deux géants;
À l’heure où les corbeaux croassent,
Volant dans l’ombre par milliers... -
Enfants, voici des boeufs qui passent,
Cachez vos rouges tabliers!

Une nonne, avec une lampe,
Sort d’une cellule à minuit;
Le long des murs le spectre rampe,
Un autre fantôme le suit;
Des chaînes sur leurs pieds s’amassent,
De lourds carcans sont leurs colliers. -
Enfants, voici des boeufs qui passent,
Cachez vos rouges tabliers!

La lampe vient, s’éclipse, brille,
Sous les arceaux court se cacher,

Puis tremble derrière une grille,
Puis scintille au bout d’un clocher;
Et ses rayons dans l’ombre tracent
Des fantômes multipliés. -
Enfants, voici des boeufs qui passent,
Cachez vos rouges tabliers!

Les deux spectres qu’un feu dévore,
Traînant leur suaire en lambeaux,
Se cherchent pour s’unir encore,
En trébuchant sur des tombeaux;
Leurs pas aveugles s’embarrassent
Dans les marches des escaliers. -
Enfants, voici des boeufs qui passent,
Cachez vos rouges tabliers!

Mais ce sont des escaliers fées,
Qui sous eux s’embrouillent toujours;
L’un est aux caves étouffées,
Quand l’autre marche au front des tours;
Sous leurs pieds, sans fin se déplacent
Les étages et les paliers. -
Enfants, voici des boeufs qui passent,
Cachez vos rouges tabliers!

Élevant leurs voix sépulcrales,
Se cherchant les bras étendus,
Ils vont... Les magiques spirales
Mêlent leurs pas toujours perdus;
Ils s’épuisent et se harassent
En détours, sans cesse oubliés. -
Enfants, voici des boeufs qui passent,
Cachez vos rouges tabliers!

La pluie alors, à larges gouttes,
Bat les vitraux frêles et froids;
Le vent siffle aux brèches des voûtes;

Une plainte sort des beffrois;
On entend des soupirs qui glacent,
Des rires d'esprits familiers. -
Enfants, voici des boeufs qui passent,
Cachez vos rouges tabliers!

Une voix faible, une voix haute,
Disent: " Quand finiront les jours?
Ah! nous souffrons par notre faute;
Mais l'éternité, c'est toujours!
Là, les mains des heures se lassent
À retourner les sabliers... " -
Enfants, voici des boeufs qui passent,
Cachez vos rouges tabliers!

L'enfer, hélas! ne peut s'éteindre.
Toutes les nuits, dans ce manoir,
Se cherchent sans jamais s'atteindre
Une ombre blanche, un spectre noir,
Jusqu'à l'heure pâle où s'effacent
Les cierges sur les chandeliers. -
Enfants, voici des boeufs qui passent,
Cachez vos rouges tabliers!

Si, tremblant à ces bruits étranges,
Quelque nocturne voyageur,
En se signant demande aux anges
Sur qui sévit le Dieu vengeur,
Des serpents de feu qui s'enlacent
Tracent deux noms sur les piliers. -
Enfants, voici des boeufs qui passent,
Cachez vos rouges tabliers!

Cette histoire de la novice
Saint Ildefonse, abbé, voulut
Qu'afin de préserver du vice
Les vierges qui font leur salut

Les prieures la racontassent
Dans tous les couvents réguliers. -
Enfants, voici des boeufs qui passent,
Cachez vos rouges tabliers!

BALLADE QUATORZIÈME

LA RONDE DU SABBAT

à M. Charles N.

Hic chorus ingens
... Colit orgia.
AVIENUS.

Voyez devant les murs de ce noir monastère
La lune se voiler, comme pour un mystère!
L’esprit de minuit passe, et, répandant l’effroi,
Douze fois se balance au battant du beffroi.
Le bruit ébranle l’air, roule, et longtemps encore
Gronde, comme enfermé sous la cloche sonore,
Le silence retombe avec l’ombre... Écoutez!
Qui pousse ces clameurs? qui jette ces clartés?
Dieu! les voûtes, les tours, les portes découpées,
D’un long réseau de feu semblent enveloppées,
Et l’on entend l’eau sainte, où trempe un buis bénit,
Bouillonner à grands flots dans l’urne de granit!...
À nos patrons du ciel recommandons nos âmes!
Parmi les rayons bleus, parmi les rouges flammes,
Avec des cris, des chants, des soupirs, des abois,
Voilà que de partout, des eaux, des monts, des bois,
Les larves, les dragons, les vampires, les gnomes,
Des monstres dont l’enfer rêve seul les fantômes,
La sorcière, échappée aux sépulcres déserts,
Volant sur le bouleau qui siffle dans les airs,
Les nécromants, parés de tiares mystiques
Où brillent flamboyants les mots cabalistiques,
Et les graves démons, et les lutins rusés,
Tous, par les toits rompus, par les portails brisés,
Par les vitraux détruits que mille éclairs sillonnent,
Entrent dans le vieux cloître où leurs flots tourbillonnent!

Debout au milieu d’eux, leur prince Lucifer
Cache un front de taureau sous la mitre de fer;
La chasuble a voilé son aile diaphane,
Et sur l’autel croulant il pose ûn pied profane.
Ô terreur! Les voilà qui chantent dans ce lieu
Où veille incessamment l’oeil éternel de Dieu.
Les mains cherchent les mains... Soudain la ronde immense,
Comme un ouragan sombre, en tournoyant commence.
À l’oeil qui n’en pourrait embrasser le contour,
Chaque hideux convive apparaît à son tour;
On croirait voir l’enfer tourner dans les ténèbres
Son zodiaque affreux, plein de signes funèbres.
Tous volent, dans le cercle emportés à la fois.
Satan règle du pied les éclats de leur voix;
Et leurs pas, ébranlant les arches colossales,
Troublent les morts couchés sous le pavé des salles.

“ Mêlons-nous sans choix!
Tandis que la foule
Autour de lui roule,
Satan joyeux foule
L’autel et la croix.
L’heure est solennelle.
La flamme éternelle
Semble, sur son aile,
La pourpre des rois! “

Et leurs pas, ébranlant les arches colossales,
Troublent les morts couchés sous le pavé des salles.

“ Oui, nous triomphons!
Venez, soeurs et frères,
De cent points contraires;
Des lieux funéraires,
Des antres profonds.
L’enfer vous escorte;
Venez en cohorte

Sur des chars qu’emporte
Le vol des griffons! “

Et leurs pas, ébranlant les arches colossales,
Troublent les morts couchés sous le pavé des salles.

“ Venez sans remords,
Nains aux pieds de chèvre,
Goules, dont la lèvre
Jamais ne se sèvre
Du sang noir des morts!
Femmes infernales,
Accourez rivales!
Pressez vos cavales
Qui n’ont point de mors! “

Et leurs pas, ébranlant les arches colossales,
Troublent les morts couchés sous le pavé des salles.

“ Juifs, par Dieu frappés,
Zingaris, Bohèmes,
Chargés d’anathèmes,
Follets, spectres blêmes
La nuit échappés,
Glissez sur la brise,
Montez sur la frise
Du mur qui se brise,
Volez, ou rampez! “

Et leurs pas, ébranlant les arches colossales,
Troublent les morts couchés sous le pavé des salles.

“ Venez, boucs méchants,
Psylles aux corps grêles,
Aspioles frêles,
Comme un flot de grêles,
Fondre dans ces champs!

Plus de discordance!
Venez en cadence
Élargir la danse,
Répéter les chants! “

Et leurs pas, ébranlant les arches colossales,
Troublent les morts couchés sous le pavé des salles.

“ Qu’en ce beau moment
Les clercs en magie
Brûlent dans l’orgie
Leur barbe rougie
D’un sang tout fumant;
Que chacun envoie
Au feu quelque proie,
Et sous ses dents broie
Un pâle ossement! “

Et leurs pas, ébranlant les arches colossales,
Troublent les morts couchés sous le pavé des salles.

“ Riant au saint lieu,
D’une voix hardie,
Satan parodie
Quelque psalmodie
Selon saint Matthieu,
Et dans la chapelle
Où son roi l’appelle,
Un démon épelle
Le livre de Dieu!

Et leurs pas, ébranlant les arches colossales,
Troublent les morts couchés sous le pavé des salles.

“ Sorti des tombeaux,
Que dans chaque stalle
Un faux moine étale

La robe fatale
Qui brûle ses os,
Et qu’un noir lévite
Attache bien vite
La flamme maudite
Aux sacrés flambeaux! “

Et leurs pas, ébranlant les arches colossales,
Troublent les morts couchés sous le pavé des salles. ~

“ Satan vous verra!
De vos mains grossières
Parmi des poussières,
Écrivez, sorcières
ABRACADABRA!
Volez, oiseaux fauves,
Dont les ailes chauves
Aux ciels des alcôves
Suspendent Smarra! “

Et leurs pas, ébranlant les arches colossales,
Troublent les morts couchés sous le pavé des salles.

“ Voici le signal! -L’enfer nous réclame
Puisse un jour toute âme
N’avoir d’autre flamme
Que son noir fanal!
Puisse notre ronde,
Dans l’ombre profonde,
Enfermer le monde
D’un cercle infernal! “

L’aube pâle a blanchi les arches colossales.
Il fuit, l’essaim confus des démons dispersés!
Et les morts rendôrmis sous le pavé des salles,
Sur leurs chevets poudreux posent leurs fronts glacés.

BALLADE QUINZIÈME

LA FÉE ET LA PÉRI

Leur ombre vagabonde, a travers le feuillage,
Frémira; sur les vents ou sur quelque nuage,
Tu les verras descendre; ou, du sein de la mer
S'élevant comme un songe, étinceler dans l'air;
Et leur voix, toujours tendre et doucement plaintive,
Caresser en fuyant ton oreille attentive.
ANDRÉ CHÉNIER.

I

Enfants! Si vous mouriez, gardez bien qu'un esprit
De la route des cieux ne détourne votre âme!
Voici ce qu'autrefois un vieux sage m'apprit: -
Quelques démons, sauvés de l'éternelle flamme,
Rebelles moins pervers que l'Archange proscrit,
Sur la terre, où le feu, l'onde ou l'air les réclame,
Attendent, exilés, le jour de Jésus-Christ.
Il en est qui, bannis des célestes phalanges,
Ont de si douces voix qu'on les prend pour des anges.
Craignez-les: pour mille ans exclus du paradis,
Ils vous entraîneraient, enfants, au purgatoire! -
Ne me demandez pas d'où me vient cette histoire;
Nos pères l'ont contée; et moi, je la redis.

II

LA PÉRI

Où vas-tu donc jeune âme?... Écoute!
Mon palais pour toi veut s'ouvrir.
Suis-moi, des cieux quitte la route;
Hélas! tu t'y perdrais sans doute,

Nouveau-né, qui viens de mourir!

Tu pourras jouer à toute heure
Dans mes beaux jardins aux fruits d’or;
Et de ma riante demeure
Tu verras ta mère qui pleure
Près de ton berceau, tiède encor.

Des Péris je suis la plus belle:
Mes soeurs règnent où naît le jour;
Je brille en leur troupe immortelle,
Comme, entre les fleurs, brille celle
Que l’on cueille en rêvant d’amour,

Mon front porte un ruban de soie;
Mes bras de rubis sont couverts;
Quand mon vol ardent se déploie,
L’aile de pourpre qui tournoie
Roule trois yeux de flamme ouverts.

Plus blanc qu’une lointaine voile,
Mon corps n’en a point la pâleur;
En quelque lieu qu’il se dévoile,
Il l’éclaire comme une étoile,
Il l’embaume comme une fleur!

LA FÉE

Viens, bel enfant! je suis la Fée.
Je règne aux bords où le soleil
Au sein de l’onde réchauffée,
Se plonge éclatant et vermeil.
Les peuples d’Occident m’adorent
Les vapeurs de leur ciel se dorent,
Lorsque je passe en les touchant;
Reine des ombres léthargiques,
Je bâtis mes palais magiques

Dans les nuages du couchant.

Mon aile bleue est diaphane:
L’essaim des Sylphes enchantés
Croit voir sur mon dos, quand je plane,
Frémir deux rayons argentés.
Ma main luit, rose et transparente;
Mon souffle est la brise odorante
Qui, le soir, erre dans les champs;
Ma chevelure est radieuse,
Et ma bouche mélodieuse
Mêle un sourire à tous ses chants!

J’ai des grottes de coquillages;
J’ai des tentes de rameaux verts;
C’est moi que bercent les feuillages,
Moi que berce le flot des mers.
Si tu me suis, ombre ingénue,
Je puis t’apprendre où va la nue,
Te montrer d’où viennent les eaux;
Viens, sois ma compagne nouvelle,
Si tu veux que je te révèle
Ce que dit la voix des oiseaux.

III

LA PÉRI

Ma sphère est l’Orient, région éclatante,
Où le soleil est beau comme un roi dans sa tente!
Son disque s’y promène en un ciel toujours pur.
Ainsi, portant l’émir d’une riche contrée,
Aux sons de la flûte sacrée,
Vogue un navire d’or sur une mer d’azur.

Tous les dons ont comblé la zone orientale.
Dans tout autre climat, par une loi fatale,

Près des fruits savoureux croissent les fruits amers;
Mais Dieu, qui pour l'Asie a des yeux moins austères,
Y donne plus de fleurs aux terres,
Plus d'étoiles aux cieux, plus de perles aux mers!

Mon royaume s'étend depuis ces catacombes
Qui paraissent des monts et ne sont que des tombes,
Jusqu'à ce mur qu'un peuple ose en vain assiéger,
Qui, tel qu'une ceinture où le Cathay respire,
Environnant tout un empire,
Garde dans l'univers comme un monde étranger!

J'ai de vastes cités qu'en tous lieux on admire,
Lahore aux champs fleuris; Golconde; Cachemire;
La guerrière Damas; la royale Ispahan;
Bagdad, que ses remparts couvrent comme une armure;
Alep dont l'immense murmure
Semble au pâtre lointain le bruit d'un Océan.

Mysore est sur son trône une reine placée;
Médine aux mille tours, d'aiguilles hérissée,
Avec ses fléches d'or, ses kiosques brillants,
Est comme un bataillon, arrêté dans les plaines,
Qui, parmi ses tentes hautaines,
Élève une forêt de dards étincelants.

On dirait qu'au désert, Thèbes, debout encore,
Attend son peuple entier, absent depuis l'aurore.
Madras a deux cités dans ses larges contours.
Plus loin brille Delhy, la ville sans rivales,
Et sous ses portes triomphales
Douze éléphants de front passent avec leurs tours.

Bel enfant! viens errer, parmi tant de merveilles
Sur ces toits pleins de fleurs ainsi que des corbeilles,
Dans le camp vagabond des Arabes ligués.
Viens; nous verrons danser les jeunes bayadères,

Le soir, lorsque les dromadaires
Près du puits du désert s’arrêtent fatigués.

Là, sous de verts figuiers, sous d’épais sycomores,
Luit le dôme d’étain du minaret des Maures;
La pagode de nacre au toit rose et changeant;
La tour de porcelaine aux clochettes dorées,
Et, dans les jonques azurées,
Le palanquin de pourpre aux longs rideaux d’argent.

J’écarterai pour toi les rameaux du platane
Qui voile dans son bain la rêveuse sultane;
Viens, nous rassurerons contre un ingrat oubli
La vierge, qui, tirnide, ouvrant la nuit sa porte,
Écoute si le vent lui porte
La voix qu’elle préfère au chant du bengali.

L’Orient fut jadis le paradis du monde. -
Un printemps éternel de ses roses l’inonde,
Et ce vaste hémisphère est un riant jardin.
Toujours autour de nous sourit la douce joie;
Toi qui gémis, suis notre voie:
Que t’importe le Ciel, quand je t’ouvre l’Eden?

LA FÉE

L’Occident nébuleux est ma patrie heureuse.
Là, variant dans l’air sa forme vaporeuse,
Fuit la blanche nuée, ... et de loin bien souvent
Le mortel isolé qui, radieux ou sombre,
Poursuit un songe ou pleure une ombre,
Assis, la contemple en rêvant!

Car il est des douceurs pour les âmes blessées
Dans les brumes du lac sur nos bois balancées,
Dans nos monts où l’hiver semble à jamais s’asseoir;
Dans l’étoile, pareille à l’espoir solitaire,

Qui vient, quand le jour fuit la terre,
Mêler son orient au soir.

Nos cieux voilés plairont à ta douleur amère,
Enfant, que Dieu retire et qui pleures ta mère!
Viens, l'écho des vallons, les soupirs du ruisseau,
Et la voix des forêts au bruit des vents unie,
Te rendront la vague harmonie
Qui t'endormait dans ton berceau!

Crains des bleus horizons le cercle monotone.
Les brouillards, les vapeurs, le nuage qui tonne,
Tempèrent le soleil dans nos cieux parvenu;
Et l'oeil voit au loin fuir leurs lignes nébuleuses,
Comme des flottes merveilleuses
Qui viennent d'un monde inconnu!

C'est pour moi que les vents font, sur nos mers bruyantes
Tournoyer l'air et l'onde en trombes foudroyantes;
La tempête à mes chants suspend son vol fatal;
L'arc-en-ciel pour mes pieds, qu'un or fluide arrose,
Comme un pont de nacre, se pose sur les cascades de cristal.
Du moresque Aihambra j 'ai les frêles portiques;
J'ai la grotte enchantée aux piliers basaltiques,
Où la mer de Staffa brise un flot inégal;
Et j'aide le pêcheur, roi des vagues brumeuses,
À bâtir ses huttes fumeuses
Sur les vieux palais de Fingal.

Épouvantant les nuits d'une trompeuse aurore,
Là, souvent à ma voix un rouge météore
Croise en voûte de feu ses gerbes dans les airs;
Et le chasseur, debout sur la roche pendante,
Croit voir une comète ardente
Baignant ses flammes dans les mers!

Viens, jeune âme, avec moi, de mes soeurs obéie,

Peupler de gais follets la morose abbaye;
Mes nains et mes géants te suivront à ma voix;
Viens, troublant de ton cor les monts inaccessibles,
Guider ces meutes invisibles
Qui la nuit chassent dans nos bois.

Tu verras les barons, sous leurs tours féodales,
De l’humble pèlerin détachant les sandales;
Et les sombres créneaux d’écussons décorés;
Et la dame tout bas priant, pour un beau page,
Quelque mystérieuse image
Peinte sur des vitraux dorés.

C’est nous qui, visitant les gothiques églises,
Ouvrons leur nef sonore au murmure des brises;
Quand la lune du tremble argente les rameaux,
Le pâtre voit dans l’air, avec des chants mystiques,
Folâtrer nos choeurs fantastiques
Autour du clocher des hameaux.

De quels enchantements l’Occident se décore!
Viens, le ciel est bien loin, ton aile est faible encore!
Oublie en notre empire un voyage fatal.
Un charme s’y révèle aux lieux les plus sauvages;
Et l’étranger dit nos rivages
Plus doux que le pays natal!

IV

Et l’enfant hésitait, et déjà moins rebelle
Écoutait des esprits l’appel fallacieux;
La terre qu’il fuyait semblait pourtant si belle! -
Soudain il disparut à leur vue infidèle...
Il avait entrevu les cieux!

TABLE DES MATIERES

LES ORIENTALES

This collection of poems was written and published by Hugo in 1829. Composed of forty-one poems, of which 36 date back to 1828, the book is notable for its Philhellenism and respect for all things related to Ancient Greece.

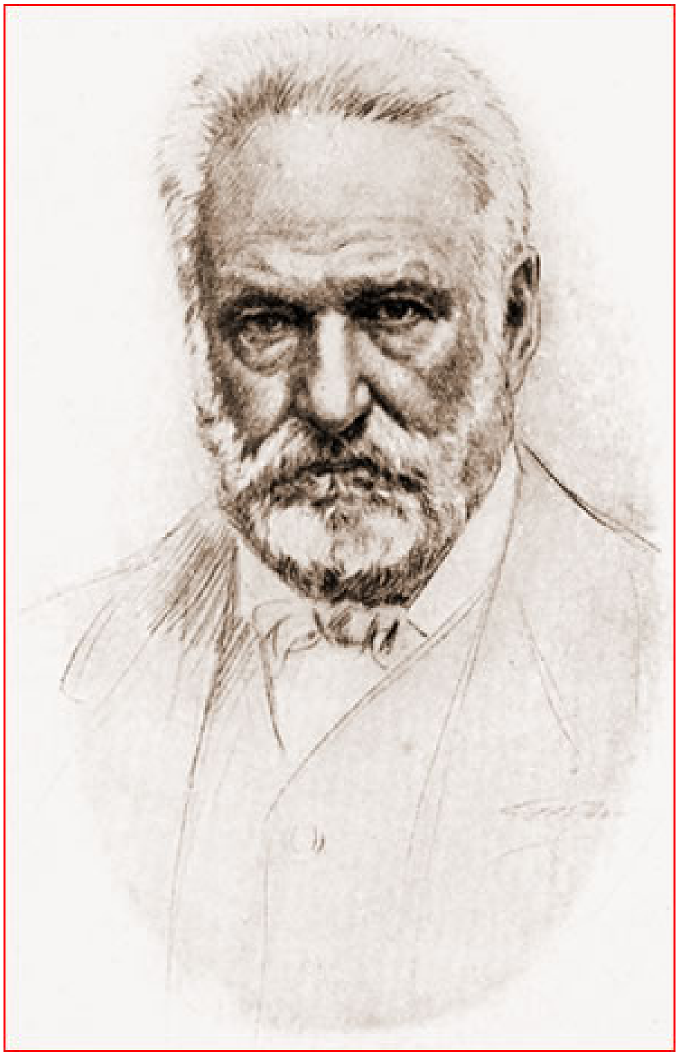

TABLE DES MATIERES

I
II
III
IV
V
VI
VII
VIII
IX
X
XI
XII
XIII
XIV
XV
XVI
XVII
XVIII
XIX
XX
XXI
XXII
XXIII
XXIV
XXV
XXVI
XXVII
XXVIII
XXIX
XXX
XXXI
XXXII
XXXIII
XXXIV

XXXV
XXXVI
XXXVII
XXXVIII
XXXIX
XL
XLI

I

LE FEU DU CIEL

24. Alors le Seigneur fit descendre du ciel sur Sodome et sur Gomorrhe une pluie de soufre et de feu.
25. Et il perdit ces villes avec tous leurs habitant, tout le pays à l’entour avec ceux qui l’habitaient, et tout ce qui avait quelque verdeur sur la terre.
Genèse

I

La voyez-vous passer, la nuée au flanc noir?
Tantôt pâle, tantôt rouge et splendide à voir,
Morne comme un été stérile?
On croit voir à la fois, sur le vent de la nuit,
Fuir toute la fumée ardente et tout le bruit
De l’embrasement d’une ville.

D’où vient-elle? des cieux, de la mer ou des monts?
Est-ce le char de feu qui porte les démons
À quelque planète prochaine?
Ô terreur! de son sein, chaos mystérieux,
D’où vient que par moments un éclair furieux
Comme un long serpent se déchaîne?

II

La mer! partout la mer! des flots, des flots encor.
L’oiseau fatigue en vain son inégal essor.
Ici les flots, là-bas les ondes;
Toujours des flots sans fin par des flots repoussés;
L’oeil ne voit que des flots dans l’abîme entassés
Rouler sous les vagues profondes.

Parfois de grands poissons, à fleur d’eau voyageant,
Font reluire au soleil leurs nageoires d’argent,
Ou l’azur de leurs larges queues.
La mer semble un troupeau secouant sa toison:
Mais un cercle d’airain ferme au loin l’horizon;
Le ciel bleu se mêle aux eaux bleues.

— Faut-il sécher ces mers? dit le nuage en feu.
— Non! - Il reprit son vol sous le souffle de Dieu.

III

Un golfe aux vertes collines
Se mirant dans le flot clair! -
Des buffles, des javelines,
Et des chants joyeux dans l’air! -
C’était la tente et la crèche,
La tribu qui chasse et pêche,
Qui vit libre, et dont la flèche
Jouterait avec l’éclair.

Pour ces errantes familles
Jamais l’air ne se corrompt.
Les enfants, les jeunes filles,
Les guerriers dansaient en rond,
Autour d’un feu sur la grève,
Que le vent courbe et relève,
Pareils aux esprits qu’en rêve
On voit tourner sur son front.

Les vierges aux seins d’ébène,
Belles comme les beaux soirs,
Riaient de se voir à peine
Dans le cuivre des miroirs;
D’autres, joyeuses comme elles,
Faisaient jaillir des mamelles
De leurs dociles chamelles

Un lait blanc sous leurs doigts noirs.

Les hommes, les femmes nues
Se baignaient au gouffre amer. -
Ces peuplades inconnues,
Où passaient-elles hier? -
La voix grêle des cymbales,
Qui fait hennir les cavales,
Se mêlait par intervalles
Aux bruits de la grande mer.

La nuée un moment hésita dans l'espace.
— Est-ce là? - Nul ne sait qui lui répondit: — Passe!

IV

L'Égypte! - Elle étalait, toute blonde d'épis,
Ses champs, bariolés comme un riche tapis,
Plaines que des plaines prolongent;
L'eau vaste et froide au nord, au sud le sable ardent
Se dispute l'Égypte: elle rit cependant
Entre ces deux mers qui la rongent.

Trois monts bâtis par l'homme au loin perçaient les cieux
D'un triple angle de marbre, et dérobaient aux yeux
Leurs bases de cendre inondées;
Et de leur faîte aigu jusqu'aux sables dorés,
Allaient s'élargissant leurs monstrueux degrés,
Faits pour des pas de six coudées.

Un sphinx de granit rose, un dieu de marbre vert,
Les gardaient, sans qu'il fût vent de flamme au désert
Qui leur fît baisser la paupière.
Des vaisseaux au flanc large entraient dans un grand port.
Une ville géante, assise sur le bord,
Baignait dans l'eau ses pieds de pierre.

On entendait mugir le semoun meurtrier,
Et sur les cailloux blancs les écailles crier
Sous le ventre des crocodiles.
Les obélisques gris s’élançaient d’un seul jet.
Comme une peau de tigre, au couchant s’allongeait
Le Nil jaune, tacheté d’îles.

L’astre-roi se couchait. Calme, à l’abri du vent,
La mer réfléchissait ce globe d’or vivant,
Ce monde, âme et flambeau du nôtre;
Et dans le ciel rougeâtre et dans les flots vermeils,
Comme deux rois amis, on voyait deux soleils
Venir au-devant l’un de l’autre.

— Où faut-il s’arrêter? dit la nuée encor.
— Cherche! dit une voix dont trembla le Thabor.

V

Du sable, puis du sable!
Le désert! noir chaos
Toujours inépuisable
En monstres, en fléaux!
Ici rien ne s’arrête.
Ces monts à jaune crête,
Quand souffle la tempête,
Roulent comme des flots!

Parfois, de bruits profanes
Troublant ce lieu sacré,
Passent les caravanes
D’Ophir ou de Membré.
L’oeil de loin suit leur foule,
Qui sur l’ardente houle
Ondule et se déroule
Comme un serpent marbré.

Ces solitudes mornes,
Ces déserts sont à Dieu:
Lui seul en sait les bornes,
En marque le milieu.
Toujours plane une brume
Sur cette mer qui fume,
Et jette pour écume
Une cendre de feu.

— Faut-il changer en lac ce désert? dit la nue.
— Plus loin! dit l’autre voix du fond des cieux venue.

VI

Comme un énorme écueil sur les vagues dressé,
Comme un amas de tours, vaste et bouleversé,
Voici Babel, déserte et sombre.
Du néant des mortels prodigieux témoin,
Aux rayons de la lune, elle couvrait au loin
Quatre montagnes de son ombre.

L’édifice écroulé plongeait aux lieux profonds.
Les ouragans captifs sous ses larges plafonds
Jetaient une étrange harmonie.
Le genre humain jadis bourdonnait à l’entour,
Et sur le globe entier Babel devait un jour
Asseoir sa spirale infinie.

Ses escaliers devaient monter jusqu’au zénith.
Chacun des plus grands monts à ses flancs de granit
N’avait pu fournir qu’une dalle.
Et des sommets nouveaux d’autres sommets chargés
Sans cesse surgissaient aux yeux découragés
Sur sa tête pyramidale.

Les boas monstrueux, les crocodiles verts,
Moindres que des lézards sur ses murs entrouverts,

Glissaient parmi les blocs superbes;
Et, colosses perdus dans ses larges contours,
Les palmiers chevelus, pendant au front des tours,
Semblaient d’en bas des touffes d’herbes.

Des éléphants passaient aux fentes de ses murs;
Une forêt croissait sous ses piliers obscurs
Multipliés par la démence;
Des essaims d’aigles roux et de vautours géants
Jour et nuit tournoyaient à ses porches béants,
Comme autour d’une ruche immense.

— Faut-il l’achever? dit la nuée en courroux. —
Marche! — Seigneur, dit-elle, où donc m’emportez-vous?

VII

Voilà que deux cités, étranges, inconnues,
Et d’étage en étage escaladant les nues,
Apparaissent, dormant dans la brume des nuits,
Avec leurs dieux, leur peuple, et leurs chars, et leurs bruits.
Dans le même vallon c’étaient deux soeurs couchées.
L’ombre baignait leurs tours par la lune ébauchées;
Puis l’oeil entrevoyait, dans le chaos confus,
Aqueducs, escaliers, piliers aux larges fûts,
Chapiteaux évasés; puis un groupe difforme
D’éléphants de granit portant un dôme énorme;
Des colosses debout, regardant autour d’eux
Ramper des monstres nés d’accouplements hideux;
Des jardins suspendus, pleins de fleurs et d’arcades,
Où la lune jetait son écharpe aux cascades;
Des temples où siégeaient sur de riches carreaux
Cent idoles de jaspe à têtes de taureaux;
Des plafonds d’un seul bloc couvrant de vastes salles,
Où, sans jamais lever leurs têtes colossales,
Veillaient, assis en cercle, et se regardant tous,
Des dieux d’airain, posant leurs mains sur leurs genoux.

Ces rampes, ces palais, ces sombres avenues
Où partout surgissaient des formes inconnues,
Ces ponts, ces aqueducs, ces arcs, ces rondes tours,
Effrayaient l'oeil perdu dans leurs profonds détours;
On voyait dans les cieux, avec leurs larges ombres,
Monter comme des caps ces édifices sombres,
Immense entassement de ténèbres voilé!
Le ciel à l'horizon scintillait étoilé,
Et, sous les mille arceaux du vaste promontoire,
Brillait comme à travers une dentelle noire.

Ah! villes de l'enfer, folles dans leurs désirs!
Là, chaque heure inventait de monstrueux plaisirs,
Chaque toit recelait quelque mystère immonde,
Et, comme un double ulcère, elles souillaient le monde.

Tout dormait cependant: au front des deux cités,
À peine encor glissaient quelques pâles clartés,
Lampes de la débauche, en naissant disparues,
Derniers feux des festins oubliés dans les rues,
De grands angles de murs, par la lune blanchis,
Coupaient l'ombre, ou tremblaient dans une eau réfléchis.
Peut-être on entendait vaguement dans les plaines
S'étouffer des baisers, se mêler des haleines,
Et les deux villes soeurs, lasses des feux du jour,
Murmurer mollement d'une étreinte d'amour!

Et le vent, soupirant sous le frais sycomore,
Allait tout parfumé de Sodome à Gomorrhe.
C'est alors que passa le nuage noirci,
Et que la voix d'en haut lui cria: — C'est ici!

VIII

La nuée éclate!
La flamme écarlate
Déchire ses flancs,

L’ouvre comme un gouffre,
Tombe en flots de soufre
Aux palais croulants,
Et jette, tremblante,
Sa lueur sanglante
Sur leurs frontons blancs!

Gomorrhe! Sodome!
De quel brûlant dôme
Vos murs sont couverts!
L’ardente nuée
Sur vous s’est ruée,
Ô peuples pervers!
Et ses larges gueules
Sur vos têtes seules
Soufflent leurs éclairs!

Ce peuple s’éveille,
Qui dormait la veille
Sans penser à Dieu.
Les grands palais croulent;
Mille chars qui roulent
Heurtent leur essieu;
Et la foule accrue,
Trouve en chaque rue
Un fleuve de feu.

Sur ces tours altières,
Colosses de pierres
Trop mal affermis,
Abondent dans l’ombre
Des mourants sans nombre
Encore endormis.
Sur des murs qui pendent
Ainsi se répandent
De noires fourmis!

Se peut-il qu’on fuie
Sous l’horrible pluie?
Tout périt, hélas!
Le feu qui foudroie
Bat les ponts qu’il broie,
Crève les toits plats,
Roule, tombe, et brise
Sur la dalle grise
Ses rouges éclats!

Sous chaque étincelle
Grossit et ruisselle
Le feu souverain.
Vermeil et limpide,
Il court plus rapide
Qu’un cheval sans frein;
Et l’idole infâme,
Croulant dans la flamme,
Tord ses bras d’airain!

Il gronde, il ondule,
Du peuple incrédule
Bat les tours d’argent;
Son flot vert et rose,
Que le soufre arrose,
Fait, en les rongeant,
Luire les murailles
Comme les écailles
D’un lézard changeant.

Il fond comme cire
Agate, porphyre,
Pierres du tombeau,
Ploie, ainsi qu’un arbre,
Le géant de marbre
Qu’ils nommaient Nabo,
Et chaque colonne

Brûle et tourbillonne
Comme un grand flambeau.

En vain quelques mages
Portent les images
Des dieux du haut lieu;
En vain leur roi penche
Sa tunique blanche
Sur le soufre bleu;
Le flot qu'il contemple
Emporte leur temple
Dans ses plis de feu!

Plus loin il charrie
Un palais, où crie
Un peuple à l'étroit;
L'onde incendiaire
Mord l'îlot de pierre
Qui fume et décroît,
Flotte à sa surface,
Puis fond et s'efface
Comme un glaçon froid!

Le grand-prêtre arrive
Sur l'ardente rive
D'où le reste a fui.
Soudain sa tiare
Prend feu comme un phare,
Et pâle, ébloui,
Sa main qui l'arrache
À son front s'attache,
Et brûle avec lui.

Le peuple, hommes, femmes,
Court... Partout les flammes
Aveuglent les yeux;
Des deux villes mortes

Assiégeant les portes
À flots furieux,
La foule maudite
Croit voir, interdite,
L’enfer dans les cieux!

IX

On dit qu’alors, ainsi que pour voir un supplice
Un vieux captif se dresse aux murs de sa prison,
On vit de loin Babel, leur fatale complice,
Regarder par-dessus les monts de l’horizon.

On entendit, durant cet étrange mystère,
Un grand bruit qui remplit le monde épouvanté,
Si profond qu’il troubla, dans leur morne cité,
Jusqu’à ces peuples sourds qui vivent sous la terre.

X

Le feu fut sans pitié! Pas un des condamnés
Ne put fuir de ces murs brûlant et calcinés.
Pourtant, ils levaient leurs mains viles,
Et ceux qui s’embrassaient dans un dernier adieu,
Terrassés, éblouis, se demandaient quel dieu
Versait un volcan sur leurs villes.

Contre le feu vivant, contre le feu divin,
De larges toits de marbre ils s’abritaient en vain.
Dieu sait atteindre qui le brave.
Ils invoquaient leurs dieux; mais le feu qui punit
Frappait ces dieux muets dont les yeux de granit
Soudain fondaient en pleurs de lave!

Ainsi tout disparut sous le noir tourbillon,
L’homme avec la cité, l’herbe avec le sillon!
Dieu brûla ces mornes campagnes;

Rien ne resta debout de ce peuple détruit,
Et le vent inconnu qui souffla cette nuit
Changea la forme des montagnes.

XI

Aujourd’hui le palmier qui croît sur le rocher
Sent sa feuille jaunie et sa tige sécher
À cet air qui brûle et qui pèse.
Ces villes ne sont plus; et, miroir du passé,
Sur leurs débris éteints s’étend un lac glacé,
Qui fume comme une fournaise!

II

CANARIS

Lorsqu’un vaisseau vaincu dérive en pleine mer;
Que ses voiles carrées
Pendent le long des mâts, par les boulets de fer
Largement déchirées;

Qu’on n’y voit que des morts tombés de toutes parts,
Ancres, agrès, voilures,
Grands mâts rompus, traînant leurs cordages épars
Comme des chevelures;

Que le vaisseau, couvert de fumée et de bruit,
Tourne ainsi qu’une roue;
Qu’un flux et qu’un reflux d’hommes roule et s’enfuit
De la poupe à la proue;

Lorsqu’à la voix des chefs nul soldat ne répond;
Que la mer monte et gronde;
Que les canons éteints nagent dans l’entrepont,
S’entrechoquant dans l’onde;

Qu’on voit le lourd colosse ouvrir au flot marin
Sa blessure béante,
Et saigner, à travers son armure d’airain,
La galère géante;

Qu’elle vogue au hasard, comme un corps palpitant,
La carène entrouverte,
Comme un grand poisson mort, dont le ventre flottant
Argente l’onde verte;

Alors gloire au vainqueur! Son ancre noir s’abat
Sur la nef qu’il foudroie;

Tel un aigle puissant pose, après le combat,
Son ongle sur sa proie!

Puis, il pend au grand mât, comme au front d’une tour,
Son drapeau que l’air ronge,
Et dont le reflet d’or dans l’onde, tour à tour,
S’élargit et s’allonge.

Et c’est alors qu’on voit les peuples étaler
Les couleurs les plus fières,
Et la pourpre, et l’argent, et l’azur onduler
Aux plis de leurs bannières.

Dans ce riche appareil leur orgueil insensé
Se flatte et se repose,
Comme si le flot noir, par le flot effacé,
En gardait quelque chose!

Malte arborait sa croix; Venise, peuple-roi,
Sur ses poupes mouvantes,
L’héraldique lion qui fait rugir d’effroi
Les lionnes vivantes.

Le pavillon de Naple est éclatant dans l’air,
Et quand il se déploie
On croit voir ondoyer de la poupe à la mer
Un flot d’or et de soie.

Espagne peint aux plis des drapeaux voltigeant
Sur ses flottes avares,
Léon aux lions d’or, Castille aux tours d’argent,
Les chaînes des Navarres.

Rome a les clefs; Milan, l’enfant qui hurle encor
Dans les dents de la guivre;
Et les vaisseaux de France ont des fleurs de lis d’or
Sur leurs robes de cuivre.

Stamboul la turque autour du croissant abhorré
Suspend trois blanches queues;
L’Amérique enfin libre étale un ciel doré
Semé d’étoiles bleues.

L’Autriche a l’aigle étrange, aux ailerons dressés,
Qui, brillant sur la moire,
Vers les deux bouts du monde à la fois menacés
Tourne une tête noire.

L’autre aigle au double front, qui des czars suit les lois,
Son antique adversaire,
Comme elle regardant deux mondes à la fois,
En tient un dans sa serre.

L’Angleterre en triomphe impose aux flots amers
Sa splendide oriflamme,
Si riche qu’on prendrait son reflet dans les mers
Pour l’ombre d’une flamme.

C’est ainsi que les rois font aux mâts des vaisseaux
Flotter leurs armoiries,
Et condamnent les nefs conquises sur les eaux
À changer de patries.

Ils traînent dans leurs rangs ces voiles dont le sort
Trompa les destinées,
Tout fiers de voir rentrer plus nombreuses au port
Leurs flottes blasonnées.

Aux navires captifs toujours ils appendront
Leurs drapeaux de victoire,
Afin que le vaincu porte écrite à son front
Sa honte avec leur gloire!

Mais le bon Canaris, dont un ardent sillon

Suit la barque hardie,
Sur les vaisseaux qu’il prend, comme son pavillon,
Arbore l’incendie!

III

LES TÊTES DU SÉRAIL

O horrible! o horrible! most horrible!
Shakespeare, Hamlet.

On a cru devoir réimprimer cette ode telle qu’elle a été composée et publiée en juin 1826, à l’époque du désastre de Missolonghi. Il est important de se rappeler, en la lisant, que tous les journaux d’Europe annoncèrent alors la mort de Canaris, tué dans son brûlot par une bombe turque, devant la ville qu’il venait secourir. Depuis, cette nouvelle fatale a été heureusement démentie.

I

Le dôme obscur des nuits, semé d’astres sans nombre,
Se mirait dans la mer resplendissante et sombre;
La riante Stamboul, le front d’étoiles voilé,
Semblait, couchée au bord du golfe qui l’inonde,
Entre les feux du ciel et les reflets de l’onde,
Dormir dans un globe étoilé.

On eût dit la cité dont les esprits nocturnes
Bâtissent dans les airs les palais taciturnes,
À voir ses grands harems, séjours des longs ennuis,
Ses dômes bleus, pareils au ciel qui les colore,
Et leurs mille croissants, que semblaient faire éclore
Les rayons du croissant des nuits.

L’oeil distinguait les tours par leurs angles marquées,
Les maisons aux toits plats, les flèches des mosquées,
Les moresques balcons en trèfles découpés,
Les vitraux, se cachant sous des grilles discrètes,
Et les palais dorés, et comme des aigrettes
Les palmiers sur leur front groupés.

Là, de blancs minarets dont l’aiguille s’élance
Tels que des mâts d’ivoire armés d’un fer de lance;
Là, des kiosques peints; là, des fanaux changeants;
Et sur le vieux sérail, que ses hauts murs décèlent,
Cent coupoles d’étain, qui dans l’ombre étincellent
Comme des casques de géants!

II

Le sérail...! Cette nuit il tressaillait de joie.
Au son des gais tambours, sur des tapis de soie,
Les sultanes dansaient sous son lambris sacré;
Et, tel qu’un roi couvert de ses joyaux de fête,
Superbe, il se montrait aux enfants du prophète,
De six mille têtes paré!

Livides, l’oeil éteint, de noirs cheveux chargés,
Ces têtes couronnaient, sur les créneaux rangées,
Les terrasses de rose et de jasmins en fleur:
Triste comme un ami, comme lui consolante,
La lune, astre des morts, sur leur pâleur sanglante
Répandait sa douce pâleur.

Dominant le sérail, de la porte fatale
Trois d’entre elles marquaient l’ogive orientale;
Ces têtes, que battait l’aile du noir corbeau,
Semblaient avoir reçu l’atteinte meurtrière,
L’une dans les combats, l’autre dans la prière,
La dernière dans le tombeau.

On dit qu’alors, tandis qu’immobiles comme elles,
Veillaient stupidement les mornes sentinelles,
Les trois têtes soudain parlèrent; et leurs voix
Ressemblaient à ces chants qu’on entend dans les rêves,
Aux bruits confus du flot qui s’endort sur les grèves,
Du vent qui s’endort dans les bois!

III
La première voix

“ Où suis-je...? mon brûlot! à la voile! à la rame!
Frères, Missolonghi fumante nous réclame,
Les Turcs ont investi ses remparts généreux.
Renvoyons leurs vaisseaux à leurs villes lointaines,
Et que ma torche, ô capitaines!
Soit un phare pour vous, soit un foudre pour eux!

“ Partons! Adieu Corinthe et son haut promontoire,
Mers dont chaque rocher porte un nom de victoire,
Écueils de l’Archipel sur tous les flots semés,
Belles îles, des cieux et du printemps chéries,
Qui le jour paraissez des corbeilles fleuries,
La nuit, des vases parfumés!

“ Adieu, fière patrie, Hydra, Sparte nouvelle!
Ta jeune liberté par des chants se révèle;
Des mâts voilent tes murs, ville de matelots!
Adieu! j’aime ton île où notre espoir se fonde,
Tes gazons caressés par l’onde,
Tes rocs battus d’éclairs et rongés par les flots!

“ Frères, si je reviens, Missolonghi sauvée,
Qu’une église nouvelle au Christ soit élevée.
Si je meurs, si je tombe en la nuit sans réveil,
Si je verse le sang qui me reste à répandre,
Dans une terre libre allez porter ma cendre,
Et creusez ma tombe au soleil!

“ Missolonghi! - Les Turcs! - Chassons, ô camarades,
Leurs canons de ses forts, leurs flottes de ses rades.
Brûlons le capitan sous son triple canon.
Allons! que des brûlots l’ongle ardent se prépare.
Sur sa nef, si je m’en empare,

C’est en lettres de feu que j’écrirai mon nom.

“ Victoire! amis...! - Ô ciel! de mon esquif agile
Une bombe en tombant brise le pont fragile...
Il éclate, il tournoie, il s’ouvre aux flots amers!
Ma bouche crie en vain, par les vagues couverte!
Adieu! je vais trouver mon linceul d’algue verte,
Mon lit de sable au fond des mers.

“ Mais non! Je me réveille enfin...! Mais quel mystère?
Quel rêve affreux...! mon bras manque à mon cimeterre.
Quel est donc près de moi ce sombre épouvantail?
Qu’entends-je au loin...? des choeurs... sont-ce des voix de femmes?
Des chants murmurés par des âmes?
Ces concerts...! suis-je au ciel? - Du sang... c’est le sérail!

IV
La deuxième voix

“ Oui, Canaris, tu vois le sérail et ma tête
Arrachée au cercueil pour orner cette fête.
Les Turcs m’ont poursuivi sous mon tombeau glacé.
Vois! ces os desséchés sont leur dépouille opime:
Voilà de Botzaris ce qu’au sultan sublime
Le ver du sépulcre a laissé!

“ Écoute: Je dormais dans le fond de ma tombe,
Quand un cri m’éveilla: Missolonghi succombe!
Je me lève à demi dans la nuit du trépas;
J’entends des canons sourds les tonnantes volées,
Les clameurs aux clameurs mêlées,
Les chocs fréquents du fer, le bruit pressé des pas.

“ J’entends, dans le combat qui remplissait la ville,
Des voix crier: “ Défends d’une horde servile,
Ombre de Botzaris, tes Grecs infortunés! “
Et moi, pour m’échapper, luttant dans les ténèbres,

J’achevais de briser sur les marbres funèbres
Tous mes ossements décharnés.

“ Soudain, comme un volcan, le sol s’embrase et gronde... -
Tout se tait; - et mon oeil ouvert pour l’autre monde
Voit ce que nul vivant n’eût pu voir de ses yeux.
De la terre, des flots, du sein profond des flammes,
S’échappaient des tourbillons d’âmes
Qui tombaient dans l’abîme ou s’envolaient aux cieux!

“ Les Musulmans vainqueurs dans ma tombe fouillèrent;
Ils mêlèrent ma tête aux vôtres qu’ils souillèrent.
Dans le sac du Tartare on les jeta sans choix.
Mon corps décapité tressaillit d’allégresse;
Il me semblait, ami, pour la Croix et la Grèce
Mourir une seconde fois.

“ Sur la terre aujourd’hui notre destin s’achève.
Stamboul, pour contempler cette moisson du glaive,
Vile esclave, s’émeut du Fanar aux Sept-Tours;
Et nos têtes, qu’on livre aux publiques risées,
Sur l’impur sérail exposées,
Repaissent le sultan, convive des vautours!

“ Voilà tous nos héros! Costas le palicare;
Christo, du mont Olympe; Hellas, des mers d’Icare;
Kitzos, qu’aimait Byron, le poète immortel;
Et cet enfant des monts, notre ami, notre émule,
Mayer, qui rapportait aux fils de Thrasybule
La flèche de Guillaume Tell!

“ Mais ces morts inconnus, qui dans nos rangs stoïques
Confondent leurs fronts vils à des fronts héroïques,
Ce sont des fils maudits d’Eblis et de Satan,
Des Turcs, obscur troupeau, foule au sabre asservie,
Esclaves dont on prend la vie,
Quand il manque une tête au compte du sultan!

“ Semblable au Minotaure inventé par nos pères,
Un homme est seul vivant dans ces hideux repaires,
Qui montrent nos lambeaux aux peuples à genoux;
Car les autres témoins de ces fêtes fétides,
Ses eunuques impurs, ses muets homicides,
Ami, sont aussi morts que nous.

“ Quels sont ces cris...? - C’est l’heure où ses plaisirs infâmes
Ont réclamé nos soeurs, nos filles et nos femmes.
Ces fleurs vont se flétrir à son souffle inhumain.
Le tigre impérial, rugissant dans sa joie,
Tour à tour compte chaque proie,
Nos vierges cette nuit, et nos têtes demain! “

V
La troisième voix

“ Ô mes frères! Joseph, évêque, vous salue.
Missolonghi n’est plus! À sa mort résolue,
Elle a fui la famine et son venin rongeur.
Enveloppant les Turcs dans son malheur suprême,
Formidable victime, elle a mis elle-même
La flamme à son bûcher vengeur.

“ Voyant depuis vingt jours notre ville affamée,
J’ai crié: “ Venez tous; il est temps, peuple, armée!
Dans le saint sacrifice il faut nous dire adieu.
Recevez de mes mains, à la table céleste,
Le seul aliment qui nous reste,
Le pain qui nourrit l’âme et la transforme en dieu!”

“ Quelle communion! Des mourants immobiles,
Cherchant l’hostie offerte à leurs lèvres débiles,
Des soldats défaillants, mais encor redoutés,
Des femmes, des vieillards, des vierges désolées,
Et sur le sein flétri des mères mutilées

Des enfants de sang allaités!

“ La nuit vint, on partit; mais les Turcs dans les ombres
Assiégèrent bientôt nos morts et nos décombres.
Mon église s’ouvrit à leurs pas inquiets.
Sur un débris d’autel, leur dernière conquête,
Un sabre fit rouler ma tête...
J’ignore quelle main me frappa: je priais.

“ Frères, plaignez Mahmoud! Né dans sa loi barbare,
Des hommes et de Dieu son pouvoir le sépare.
Son aveugle regard ne s’ouvre pas au ciel.
Sa couronne fatale, et toujours chancelante,
Porte à chaque fleuron une tête sanglante;
Et peut-être il n’est pas cruel!

“ Le malheureux, en proie, aux terreurs implacables,
Perd pour l’éternité ses jours irrévocables.
Rien ne marque pour lui les matins et les soirs.
Toujours l’ennui! Semblable aux idoles qu’ils dorent,
Ses esclaves de loin l’adorent,
Et le fouet d’un spahi règle leurs encensoirs.

“ Mais pour vous tout est joie, honneur, fête, victoire.
Sur la terre vaincus, vous vaincrez dans l’histoire.
Frères, Dieu vous bénit sur le sérail fumant.
Vos gloires par la mort ne sont pas étouffées:
Vos têtes sans tombeaux deviennent vos trophées;
Vos débris sont un monument!

“ Que l’apostat surtout vous envie! Anathème
Au chrétien qui souilla l’eau sainte du baptême!
Sur le livre de vie en vain il fut compté:
Nul ange ne l’attend dans les cieux où nous sommes;
Et son nom, exécré des hommes,
Sera, comme un poison, des bouches rejeté!

“ Et toi, chrétienne Europe, entends nos voix plaintives.
Jadis, pour nous sauver, saint Louis vers nos rives
Eût de ses chevaliers guidé l’arrière-ban.
Choisis enfin, avant que ton Dieu ne se lève,
De Jésus et d’Omar, de la croix et du glaive,
De l’auréole et du turban. “

VI

Oui, Botzaris, Joseph, Canaris, ombres saintes,
Elle entendra vos voix, par le trépas éteintes;
Elle verra le signe empreint sur votre front;
Et soupirant ensemble un chant expiatoire,
À vos débris sanglants portant leur double gloire,
Sur la harpe et le luth les deux Grèces diront:

“ Hélas! vous êtes saints et vous êtes sublimes,
Confesseurs, demi-dieux, fraternelles victimes!
Votre bras aux combats s’est longtemps signalé;
Morts, vous êtes tous trois souillés par des mains viles.
Voici votre Calvaire après vos Thermopyles;
Pour tous les dévouements votre sang a coulé!

“ Ah! si l’Europe en deuil, qu’un sang si pur menace,
Ne suit jusqu’au sérail le chemin qu’il lui trace,
Le Seigneur la réserve à d’amers repentirs.
Marin, prêtre, soldat, nos autels vous demandent;
Car l’Olympe et le Ciel à la fois vous attendent,
Pléiade de héros! Trinité de martyrs! “

IV

ENTHOUSIASME

Allons, jeune homme! allons, marche...!
André Chénier.

En Grèce! en Grèce! adieu, vous tous! il faut partir!
Qu’enfin, après le sang de ce peuple martyr,
Le sang vil des bourreaux ruisselle!
En Grèce, ô mes amis! vengeance! liberté!
Ce turban sur mon front! ce sabre à mon côté!
Allons! ce cheval, qu’on le selle!

Quand partons-nous? ce soir! demain serait trop long.
Des armes! des chevaux! un navire à Toulon!
Un navire, ou plutôt des ailes!
Menons quelques débris de nos vieux régiments,
Et nous verrons soudain ces tigres ottomans
Fuir avec des pieds de gazelles!

Commande-nous, Fabvier, comme un prince invoqué!
Toi qui seul fus au poste où les rois ont manqué,
Chef des hordes disciplinées,
Parmi les grecs nouveaux ombre d’un vieux Romain,
Simple et brave soldat, qui dans ta rude main
D’un peuple as pris les destinées!

De votre long sommeil éveillez-vous là-bas,
Fusils français! et vous, musique des combats,
Bombes, canons, grêles cymbales!
Éveillez-vous, chevaux au pied retentissant,
Sabres, auxquels il manque une trempe de sang,
Longs pistolets gorgés de balles!

Je veux voir des combats, toujours au premier rang!

Voir comment les spahis s’épanchent en torrent
Sur l’infanterie inquiète;
Voir comment leur damas, qu’emporte leur coursier,
Coupe une tête au fil de son croissant d’acier!
Allons...! - mais quoi, pauvre poète,

Où m’emporte moi-même un accès belliqueux?
Les vieillards, les enfants m’admettent avec eux!
Que suis-je? - Esprit qu’un souffle enlève.
Comme une feuille morte échappée aux bouleaux,
Qui sur une onde en pente erre de flots en flots,
Mes jours s’en vont de rêve en rêve.

Tout me fait songer: l’air, les prés, les monts, les bois.
J’en ai pour tout un jour des soupirs d’un hautbois,
D’un bruit de feuilles remuées;
Quand vient le crépuscule, au fond d’un vallon noir,
J’aime un grand lac d’argent, profond et clair miroir
Où se regardent les nuées.

J’aime une lune, ardente et rouge comme l’or,
Se levant dans la brume épaisse, ou bien encor
Blanche au bord d’un nuage sombre;
J’aime ces chariots lourds et noirs, qui la nuit,
Passant devant le seuil des fermes avec bruit,
Font aboyer les chiens dans l’ombre.

V

NAVARIN

Hélas! hélas! nos vaisseaux
Hélas! hélas! sont détruits!
ESCHYLE, les Perses.

I

Canaris! Canaris! pleure! cent vingt vaisseaux!
Pleure! une flotte entière! - Où donc, démon des eaux,
Où donc était ta main hardie?
Se peut-il que sans toi l'Ottoman succombât?
Pleure comme Crillon exilé d'un combat:
Tu manquais à cet incendie!

Jusqu'ici, quand parfois la vague de tes mers
Soudain s'ensanglantait, comme un lac des enfers,
D'une lueur large et profonde,
Si quelque lourd navire éclatait à nos yeux,
Couronné tout à coup d'une aigrette de feux,
Comme un volcan s'ouvrant dans l'onde;

Si la lame roulait turbans, sabres courbés,
Voiles, tentes, croissants des mâts rompus tombés,
Vestiges de flotte et d'armée,
Pelisses de vizirs, sayons de matelots,
Rebuts stigmatisés de la flamme et des flots,
Blancs d'écume et noirs de fumée;

Si partait de ces mers d'Égine ou d'Iolchos
Un bruit d'explosion, tonnant dans mille échos,
Et roulant au loin dans l'espace,
L'Europe se tournait vers le rouge Orient;
Et, sur la poupe assis, le nocher souriant

Disait: — C’est Canaris qui passe!

Jusqu’ici, quand brûlaient au sein des flots fumants
Les capitans-pachas avec leurs armements,
Leur flotte dans l’ombre engourdie,
On te reconnaissait à ce terrible jeu;
Ton brûlot expliquait tous ces vaisseaux en feu;
Ta torche éclairait l’incendie!

Mais pleure aujourd’hui, pleure, on s’est battu sans toi!
Pourquoi, sans Canaris, sur ces flottes, pourquoi
Porter la guerre et ses tempêtes?
Du Dieu qui garde Hellé n’est-il plus le bras droit?
On aurait dû l’attendre! Et n’est-il pas de droit
Convive de toutes ces fêtes?

II

Console-toi: la Grèce est libre.
Entre les bourreaux, les mourants,
L’Europe a remis l’équilibre;
Console-toi: plus de tyrans!
La France combat: le sort change.
Souffre que sa main qui vous venge
Du moins te dérobe en échange
Une feuille de ton laurier.
Grèces de Byron et d’Homère,
Toi, notre soeur, toi, notre mère,
Chantez! si votre voix amère
Ne s’est pas éteinte à crier.

Pauvre Grèce! qu’elle était belle
Pour être couchée au tombeau!
Chaque vizir, de la rebelle
S’arrachait un sacré lambeau.
Où la fable mit ses Ménades,
Où l’amour eut ses sérénades,

Grondaient les sombres canonnades
Sapant les temples du vrai Dieu;
Le ciel de cette terre aimée
N’avait, sous sa voûte embaumée,
De nuages que la fumée
De toutes ses villes en feu.

Voilà six ans qu’ils l’ont choisie!
Six ans qu’on voyait accourir
L’Afrique au secours de l’Asie
Contre un peuple instruit à mourir!
Ibrahim, que rien ne modère,
Vole de l’Isthme au Belvédère,
Comme un faucon qui n’a plus d’aire,
Comme un loup qui règne au bercail;
Il court où le butin le tente,
Et lorsqu’il retourne à sa tente,
Chaque fois sa main dégouttante
Jette des têtes au sérail!

III

Enfin! - C’est Navarin, la ville aux maisons peintes,
La ville aux dômes d’or, la blanche Navarin,
Sur la colline assise entre les térébinthes,
Qui prête son beau golfe aux ardentes étreintes
De deux flottes heurtant leurs carènes d’airain.

Les voilà toutes deux! - La mer en est chargée,
Prête à noyer leurs feux, prête à boire leur sang.
Chacune par son dieu semble au combat rangée:
L’une s’étend en croix sur les flots allongée;
L’autre ouvre ses bras lourds et se courbe en croissant.

Ici l’Europe: enfin l’Europe qu’on déchaîne!
Avec ses grands vaisseaux voguant comme des tours.
Là, l’Égypte des Turcs, cette Asie africaine,

Ces vivaces forbans, mal tués par Duquesne,
Qui mit en vain le pied sur ces nids de vautours!

IV

Écoutez! - Le canon gronde.
Il est temps qu’on lui réponde.
Le patient est le fort.
Éclatent donc les bordées!
Sur ces nefs intimidées,
Frégates, jetez la mort!
Et qu’au souffle de vos bouches,
Fondent ces vaisseaux farouches,
Broyés aux rochers du port!

La bataille enfin s’allume:
Tout à la fois tonne et fume.
La mort vole où nous frappons.
Là, tout brûle pêle-mêle.
Ici, court le brûlot frêle,
Qui jette aux mâts ses crampons,
Et, comme un chacal dévore
L’éléphant qui lutte encore,
Ronge un navire à trois ponts.

— L’abordage! l’abordage! -
On se suspend au cordage;
On s’élance des haubans.
La poupe heurte la proue.
La mêlée a dans sa roue
Rameurs courbés sur leurs bancs,
Fantassins pleurant la terre,
L’épée et le cimeterre,
Les casques et les turbans!

La vergue aux vergues s’attache;
La torche insulte à la hache;

Tout s’attaque en même temps.
Sur l’abîme la mort nage.
Épouvantable carnage!
Champs de bataille flottants,
Qui, battus de cent volées,
S’écroulent sous les mêlées,
Avec tous leurs combattants!

V

Lutte horrible! Ah! quand l’homme, à l’étroit sur la terre,
Jusque sur l’Océan précipite la guerre,
Le sol tremble sous lui, tandis qu’il se débat.
La mer, la grande mer joue avec ses batailles.
Vainqueurs, vaincus, à tous elle ouvre ses entrailles:
Le naufrage éteint le combat.

Ô spectacle! Tandis que l’Afrique grondante
Bat nos puissants vaisseaux de sa flotte imprudente,
Qu’elle épuise à leurs flancs sa rage et ses efforts,
Chacun d’eux, géant fier, sur ces hordes bruyantes,
Ouvrant à temps égaux ses gueules foudroyantes,
Vomit tranquillement la mort de tous ses bords!

Tout s’embrase: voyez! l’eau de cendre est semée,
Le vent aux mâts en flamme arrache la fumée,
Le feu sur les tillacs s’abat en ponts mouvants.
Déjà brûlent les nefs: déjà, sourde et profonde,
La flamme en leurs flancs noirs ouvre un passage à l’onde;
Déjà, sur les ailes des vents,

L’incendie, attaquant la frégate amirale,
Déroule autour de mâts son ardente spirale,
Prend les marins hurlants dans ses brûlants réseaux,
Couronne de ses jets la poupe inabordable,
Triomphe, et jette au loin un reflet formidable
Qui tremble, élargissant ses cercles sur les eaux!

VI

Où sont, enfants du Caire,
Ces flottes qui naguère
Emportaient à la guerre
Leurs mille matelots?
Ces voiles, où sont-elles,
Qu’armaient les infidèles,
Et qui prêtaient leurs ailes
À l’ongle des brûlots?

Où sont tes mille antennes,
Et tes hunes hautaines,
Et tes fiers capitaines,
Armada du sultan?
Ta ruine commence,
Toi qui, dans ta démence,
Battais les mers, immense
Comme Léviathan!

Le capitan qui tremble
Voit éclater ensemble
Ces chébecs que rassemble
Alger ou Tetuan.
Le feu vengeur embrasse
Son vaisseau dont la masse
Soulève, quand il passe,
Le fond de l’Océan.

Sur les mers irritées,
Dérivent, démâtées,
Nefs par les nefs heurtées,
Yachts aux mille couleurs,
Galères capitanes,
Caïques et tartanes
Qui portaient aux sultanes

Des têtes et des fleurs!

Adieu, sloops intrépides,
Adieu, jonques rapides,
Qui sur les eaux limpides
Berçaient les icoglans!
Adieu la goélette
Dont la vague reflète
Le flamboyant squelette,
Noir dans les feux sanglants!

Adieu, la barcarolle
Dont l’humble banderole
Autour des vaisseaux vole,
Et qui, peureuse, fuit,
Quand du souffle des brises
Les frégates surprises,
Gonflant leurs voiles grises,
Déferlent à grand bruit!

Adieu, la caravelle
Qu’une voile nouvelle
Aux yeux de loin révèle;
Adieu, le dogre ailé,
Le brick dont les amures
Rendent de sourds murmures,
Comme un amas d’armures
Par le vent ébranlé.

Adieu, la brigantine
Dont la voile latine
Du flot qui se mutine
Fend les vallons amers!
Adieu, la balancelle
Qui sur l’onde chancelle,
Et, comme une étincelle,
Luit sur l’azur des mers!

Adieu, lougres difformes,
Galéaces énormes,
Vaisseaux de toutes formes,
Vaisseaux de tous climats,
L’yole aux triples flammes,
Les mahonnes, les prames,
La felouque à six rames,
La polacre à deux mâts!

Chaloupes canonnières!
Et lanches marinières
Où flottaient les bannières
Du pacha souverain!
Bombardes que la houle,
Sur son front qui s’écroule,
Soulève, emporte et roule
Avec un bruit d’airain!

Adieu, ces nefs bizarres,
Caraques et gabarres,
Qui de leurs cris barbares
Troublaient Chypre et Délos!
Que sont donc devenues
Ces galères chenues?
La mer les jette aux nues,
Le ciel les rend aux flots!

VII

Silence! Tout est fait: tout retombe à l’abîme.
L’écume des hauts mâts a recouvert la cime.
Des vaisseaux du sultan les flots se sont joués.
Quelques-uns, bricks rompus, prames désemparées,
Comme l’algue des eaux qu’apportent les marées,
Sur la grève noircie expirent échoués.

Ah! c’est une victoire! - Oui, l’Afrique défait,
Le vrai Dieu sous ses pieds foulant le faux prophète,
Les tyrans, les bourreaux criant grâce! à leur tour,
Ceux qui meurent enfin sauvés par ceux qui règnent,
Hellé lavant ses flancs qui saignent,
Et six ans vengés dans un jour!

Depuis assez longtemps les peuples disaient: “ Grèce!
Grèce! Grèce! tu meurs. Pauvre peuple en détresse,
À l’horizon en feu chaque jour tu décrois.
En vain, pour te sauver, patrie illustre et chère,
Nous réveillons le prêtre endormi dans sa chaire,
En vain nous mendions une armée à nos rois.

“ Mais les rois restent sourds, les chaires sont muettes.
Ton nom n’échauffe ici que des coeurs de poètes.
À la gloire, à la vie on demande tes droits?
À la croix grecque, Hellé, ta valeur se confie...
C’est un peuple qu’on crucifie!
Qu’importe, hélas! sur quelle croix?

“ Tes dieux s’en vont aussi. Parthénon, Propylées,
Murs de Grèce, ossements des villes mutilées,
Vous devenez une arme aux mains des mécréants.
Pour battre ses vaisseaux du haut des Dardanelles,
Chacun de vos débris, ruines solennelles,
Donne un boulet de marbre à leurs canons géants! “

Qu’on change cette plainte en joyeuse fanfare!
Une rumeur surgit de l’Isthme jusqu’au Phare.
Regardez ce ciel noir plus beau qu’un ciel serein.
Le vieux colosse turc sur l’Orient retombe,
La Grèce est libre, et dans la tombe
Byron applaudit Navarin.

Salut, donc, Albion, vieille reine des ondes!
Salut, aigle des Czars, qui planes sur deux mondes!

Gloire à nos fleurs de lis, dont l’éclat est si beau!
L’Angleterre aujourd’hui reconnaît sa rivale.
Navarin la lui rend. Notre gloire navale
À cet embrasement rallume son flambeau.

Je te retrouve, Autriche! - Oui, la voilà, c’est elle!
Non, pas ici, mais là, - dans la flotte infidèle.
Parmi les rangs chrétiens en vain on te chercha.
Nous surprenons, honteuse et la tête penchée,
Ton aigle au double front cachée
Sous les crinières d’un pacha!

C’est bien ta place, Autriche! - On te voyait naguère
Briller près d’Ibrahim, ce Tamerlan vulgaire;
Tu dépouillais les morts qu’il foulait en passant;
Tu l’admirais, mêlée aux eunuques serviles,
Promenant au hasard sa torche dans les villes,
Horrible, et n’éteignant le feu qu’avec du sang.

Tu préférais ces feux aux clartés de l’aurore.
Aujourd’hui qu’à leur tour la flamme enfin dévore
Ses noirs vaisseaux, vomis des ports égyptiens,
Rouvre les yeux, regarde, Autriche abâtardie!
Que dis-tu de cet incendie?
Est-il aussi beau que les siens?

VI

CRI DE GUERRE DU MUFTI

Hierro, despierta te! CRI DE GUERRE DES ALMOGAVARES
Fer, réveille-toi

En guerre les guerriers! Mahomet! Mahomet!
Les chiens mordent les pieds du lion qui dormait,
Ils relèvent leur tête infâme.
Écrasez, ô croyants du prophète divin,
Ces chancelants soldats qui s’enivrent de vin,
Ces hommes qui n’ont qu’une femme!

Meure la race franque et ses rois détestés!
Spahis, timariots, allez, courez, jetez
À travers les sombres mêlées
Vos sabres, vos turbans, le bruit de votre cor,
Vos tranchants étriers, larges triangles d’or,
Vos cavales échevelées!

Qu’Othman, fils d’Ortogrul, vive en chacun de vous.
Que l’un ait son regard et l’autre son courroux.
Allez, allez, ô capitaines!
Et nous te reprendrons, ville aux dômes d’azur,
Molle Setiniah, qu’en leur langage impur
Les barbares nomment Athènes!

VII

LA DOULEUR DU PACHA

Séparé de tout ce qui m’était cher, je me consume solitaire et désolé. BYRON.

— Qu’a donc l’ombre d’Allah? disait l’humble derviche;
Son aumône est bien pauvre et son trésor bien riche!
Sombre, immobile, avare, il rit d’un rire amer.
A-t-il donc ébréché le sabre de son père?
Ou bien de ses soldats autour de son repaire
Vu rugir l’orageuse mer?

— Qu’a-t-il donc le pacha, le vizir des armées?
Disaient les bombardiers, leurs mèches allumées.
Les imams troublent-ils cette tête de fer?
A-t-il du ramadan rompu le jeûne austère?
Lui font-ils voir en rêve, aux bornes de la terre,
L’ange Azraël debout sur le pont de l’enfer?

— Qu’a-t-il donc? murmuraient les icoglans stupides.
Dit-on qu’il ait perdu, dans les courants rapides,
Le vaisseau des parfums qui le font rajeunir?
Trouve-t-on à Stamboul sa gloire assez ancienne?
Dans les prédictions de quelque égyptienne
A-t-il vu le muet venir?

— Qu’a donc le doux sultan? demandaient les sultanes.
A-t-il avec son fils surpris sous les platanes
Sa brune favorite aux lèvres de corail?
A-t-on souillé son bain d’une essence grossière?
Dans le sac du fellah, vidé sur la poussière,
Manque-t-il quelque tête attendue au sérail?

— Qu’a donc le maître? ainsi s’agitent les esclaves.

Tous se trompent. - Hélas! si, perdu pour ses braves,
Assis, comme un guerrier qui dévore un affront,
Courbé comme un vieillard sous le poids des années,
Depuis trois longues nuits et trois longues journées,
Il croise ses mains sur son front,

Ce n'est pas qu'il ait vu la révolte infidèle,
Assiégeant son harem comme une citadelle,
Jeter jusqu'à sa couche un sinistre brandon;
Ni d'un père en sa main s'émousser le vieux glaive;
Ni paraître Azraël; ni passer dans un rêve
Les muets bigarrés armés du noir cordon.

Hélas! l'ombre d'Allah n'a pas rompu le jeûne;
La sultane est gardée, et son fils est trop jeune;
Nul vaisseau n'a subi d'orages importuns;
Le tartare avait bien sa charge accoutumée;
Il ne manque au sérail, solitude embaumée,
Ni les têtes ni les parfums.

Ce ne sont pas non plus les villes écroulées,
Les ossements humains noircissant les vallées,
La Grèce incendiée, en proie aux fils d'Omar,
L'orphelin, ni la veuve, et ses plaintes amères,
Ni l'enfance égorgée aux yeux des pauvres mères,
Ni la virginité marchandée au bazar;

Non, non, ce ne sont pas ces figures funèbres,
Qui, d'un rayon sanglant luisant dans les ténèbres,
En passant dans son âme ont laissé le remord.
Qu'a-t-il donc ce pacha, que la guerre réclame,
Et qui, triste et rêveur, pleure comme une femme?...
Son tigre de Nubie est mort.

VIII

CHANSONS DE PIRATES

Nous emmenions en esclavage
Cent chrétiens, pêcheurs de corail;
Nous recrutions pour le sérail
Dans tous les moûtiers du rivage.
En mer, les hardis écumeurs!
Nous allions de Fez à Catane...
Dans la galère capitane
Nous étions quatre-vingts rameurs.

On signale un couvent à terre.
Nous jetons l’ancre près du bord.
À nos yeux s’offre tout d’abord
Une fille du monastère.
Prés des flots, sourde à leurs rumeurs,
Elle dormait sous un platane...
Dans la galère capitane
Nous étions quatre-vingts rameurs.

— La belle fille, il faut vous taire,
Il faut nous suivre. Il fait bon vent.
Ce n’est que changer de couvent.
Le harem vaut le monastère.
Sa hautesse aime les primeurs,
Nous vous ferons mahométane...
Dans la galère capitane
Nous étions quatre-vingts rameurs.

Elle veut fuir vers sa chapelle.
— Osez-vous bien, fils de Satan?
— Nous osons, dit le capitan.
Elle pleure, supplie, appelle.
Malgré sa plainte et ses clameurs,

On l’emporta dans la tartane...
Dans la galère capitane
Nous étions quatre-vingts rameurs.

Plus belle encor dans sa tristesse,
Ses yeux étaient deux talismans.
Elle valait mille tomans;
On la vendit à sa hautesse.
Elle eut beau dire: Je me meurs!
De nonne elle devint sultane...
Dans la galère capitane
Nous étions quatre-vingts rameurs.

IX

LA CAPTIVE

Si je n’étais captive,
J’aimerais ce pays,
Et cette mer plaintive,
Et ces champs de maïs,
Et ces astres sans nombre,
Si le long du mur sombre
N’étincelait dans l’ombre
Le sabre des spahis.

Je ne suis point tartare
Pour qu’un eunuque noir
M’accorde ma guitare,
Me tienne mon miroir.
Bien loin de ces Sodomes,
Au pays dont nous sommes,
Avec les jeunes hommes
On peut parler le soir.

Pourtant j’aime une rive
Où jamais des hivers
Le souffle froid n’arrive
Par les vitraux ouverts,
L’été, la pluie est chaude,
L’insecte vert qui rôde
Luit, vivante émeraude,
Sous les brins d’herbe verts.

Smyrne est une princesse
Avec son beau chapel;
L’heureux printemps sans cesse
Répond à son appel,
Et, comme un riant groupe

De fleurs dans une coupe,
Dans ses mers se découpe
Plus d’un frais archipel.

J’aime ces tours vermeilles,
Ces drapeaux triomphants,
Ces maisons d’or, pareilles
À des jouets d’enfants;
J’aime, pour mes pensées
Plus mollement bercées,
Ces tentes balancées
Au dos des éléphants.

Dans ce palais de fées,
Mon coeur, plein de concerts,
Croit, aux voix étouffées
Qui viennent des déserts,
Entendre les génies
Mêler les harmonies
Des chansons infinies
Qu’ils chantent dans les airs!

J’aime de ces contrées
Les doux parfums brûlants,
Sur les vitres dorées
Les feuillages tremblants,
L’eau que la source épanche
Sous le palmier qui penche,
Et la cigogne blanche
Sur les minarets blancs.

J’aime en un lit de mousses
Dire un air espagnol,
Quand mes compagnes douces,
Du pied rasant le sol,
Légion vagabonde
Où le sourire abonde,

Font tournoyer leur ronde
Sous un rond parasol.

Mais surtout, quand la brise
Me touche en voltigeant,
La nuit j’aime être assise,
Être assise en songeant,
L’oeil sur la mer profonde,
Tandis que, pâle et blonde,
La lune ouvre dans l’onde
Son éventail d’argent.

X

CLAIR DE LUNE.

La lune était sereine et jouait sur les flots. -
La fenêtre enfin libre est ouverte à la brise,
La sultane regarde, et la mer qui se brise,
Là-bas, d’un flot d’argent brode les noirs îlots.

De ses doigts en vibrant s’échappe la guitare.
Elle écoute... Un bruit sourd frappe les sourds échos.
Est-ce un lourd vaisseau turc qui vient des eaux de Cos,
Battant l’archipel grec de sa rame tartare?

Sont-ce des cormorans qui plongent tour à tour,
Et coupent l’eau, qui roule en perles sur leur aile?
Est-ce un djinn qui là-haut siffle d’une voix grêle,
Et jette dans la mer les créneaux de la tour?

Qui trouble ainsi les flots près du sérail des femmes?
Ni le noir cormoran, sur la vague bercé,
Ni les pierres du mur, ni le bruit cadencé
Du lourd vaisseau, rampant sur l’onde avec des rames.

Ce sont des sacs pesants, d’où partent des sanglots.
On verrait, en sondant la mer qui les promène,
Se mouvoir dans leurs flancs comme une forme humaine...
La lune était sereine et jouait sur les flots.

XI

LE VOILE

Avez-vous prié Dieu ce soir, Desdemona? SHAKESPEARE.

LA SOEUR
Qu’avez-vous, qu’avez-vous, mes frères?
Vous baissez des fronts soucieux.
    Comme des lampes funéraires,
    Vos regards brillent dans vos yeux.
    Vos ceintures sont déchirées;
    Déjà trois fois, hors de l’étui,
    Sous vos doigts, à demi tirées,
    Les lames des poignards ont lui.

    LE FRÈRE AÎNÉ
    N’avez-vous pas levé votre voile aujourd’hui?

    LA SOEUR
    Je revenais du bain, mes frères,
    Seigneurs, du bain je revenais,
    Cachée aux regards téméraires
    Des Giaours et des Albanais.
    En passant près de la mosquée
    Dans mon palanquin recouvert,
    L’air de midi m’a suffoquée:
    Mon voile un instant s’est ouvert.

    LE SECOND FRÈRE
    Un homme alors passait? un homme en caftan vert?

    LA SOEUR
    Oui..., peut-être..., mais son audace
    N’a point vu mes traits dévoilés...
    Mais vous vous parlez à voix basse,

À voix basse vous vous parlez.
Vous faut-il du sang? sur votre âme,
Mes frères, il n’a pu me voir.
Grâce! tuerez-vous une femme,
Faible et nue en votre pouvoir?

LE TROISIÈME FRÈRE
Le soleil était rouge à son coucher ce soir!

LA SOEUR
Grâce! qu’ai-je fait? grâce! grâce!
Dieu! quatre poignards dans mon flanc!
Ah! par vos genoux que j’embrasse...
Ô mon voile! ô mon voile blanc!
Ne fuyez pas mes mains qui saignent,
Mes frères, soutenez mes pas!
Car sur mes regards qui s’éteignent
S’étend un voile de trépas.

LE QUATRIÈME FRÈRE
C’en est un que du moins tu ne lèveras pas!

XII

LA SULTANE FAVORITE

Perfide comme l’onde. SHAKESPEARE.

N’ai-je pas pour toi, belle juive,
Assez dépeuplé mon sérail?
Souffre qu’enfin le reste vive:
Faut-il qu’un coup de hache suive
Chaque coup de ton éventail?

Repose-toi, jeune maîtresse;
Fais grâce au troupeau qui me suit.
Je te fais sultane et princesse:
Laisse en paix tes compagnes, cesse
D’implorer leur mort chaque nuit.

Quand à ce penser tu t’arrêtes
Tu viens plus tendre à mes genoux;
Toujours je comprends dans les fêtes
Que tu vas demander des têtes
Quand ton regard devient plus doux.

Ah! jalouse entre les jalouses!
Si belle avec ce coeur d’acier!
Pardonne à mes autres épouses.
Voit-on que les fleurs des pelouses
Meurent à l’ombre du rosier?

Ne suis-je pas à toi? qu’importe,
Quand sur toi mes bras sont fermés,
Que cent femmes qu’un feu transporte
Consument en vain à ma porte
Leur souffle en soupirs enflammés?

Dans leur solitude profonde,
Laisse-les t’envier toujours;
Vois-les passer comme fuit l’onde;
Laisse-les vivre: à toi le monde,
À toi mon trône, à toi mes jours!

À toi tout mon peuple qui tremble!
À toi Stamboul qui, sur ce bord
Dressant mille flèches ensemble,
Se berce dans la mer, et semble
Une flotte à l’ancre qui dort!

À toi, jamais à tes rivales,
Mes spahis aux rouges turbans,
Qui, se suivant sans intervalles,
Volent courbés sur leurs cavales
Comme des rameurs sur leurs bancs!

À toi Bassora, Trébizonde,
Chypre où de vieux noms sont gravés,
Fez où la poudre d’or abonde,
Mosul où trafique le monde,
Erzeroum aux chemins pavés!

À toi Smyrne et ses maisons neuves,
Où vient blanchir le flot amer!
Le Gange redouté des veuves!
Le Danube qui par cinq fleuves
Tombe échevelé dans la mer!

Dis, crains-tu les filles de Grèce?
Les lys pâles de Damanhour?
Ou l’oeil ardent de la négresse
Qui, comme une jeune tigresse,
Bondit rugissante d’amour?

Que m’importe, juive adorée,

Un sein d’ébène, un front vermeil!
Tu n’es point blanche ni cuivrée:
Mais il semble qu’on t’a dorée
Avec un rayon de soleil.

N’appelle donc plus la tempête,
Princesse, sur ces humbles fleurs;
Jouis en paix de ta conquête,
Et n’exige pas qu’une tête
Tombe avec chacun de tes pleurs!

Ne songe plus qu’aux frais platanes
Au bain mêlé d’ambre et de nard,
Au golfe où glissent les tartanes...
Il faut au sultan des sultanes;
Il faut des perles au poignard!

XIII

LE DERVICHE

Quand la perte d'un mortel est écrite dans le livre fatal de la destinée, quoi qu'il fasse, il n'échappera jamais à son funeste avenir; la mort le poursuit partout; elle le surprend même dans son lit, suce de ses lèvres avides son sang et l'emporte sur ses épaules. PANAGO SOUTZO.

Un jour Ali passait: les têtes les plus hautes
Se courbaient au niveau des pieds de ses arnautes.
Tout le peuple disait: Allah!
Un derviche soudain, cassé par l'âge aride,
Fendit la foule, prit son cheval par la bride,
Et voici comme il lui parla:

“ Ali-Tépéléni, lumière des lumières,
Qui sièges au divan sur les marches premières,
Dont le grand nom toujours grandit,
Écoute-moi, vizir de ces guerriers sans nombre,
Ombre du padischah qui de Dieu même est l'ombre,
Tu n'es qu'un chien et qu'un maudit!

“ Un flambeau du sépulcre à ton insu t'éclaire.
Comme un vase trop plein tu répands ta colère
Sur tout un peuple frémissant;
Tu brilles sur leurs fronts comme une faux dans l'herbe,
Et tu fais un ciment à ton palais superbe
De leurs os broyés dans leur sang.

“ Mais ton jour vient. Il faut, dans Janina qui tombe,
Que sous tes pas enfin croule et s'ouvre ta tombe!
Dieu te garde un carcan de fer
Sous l'arbre du seglin chargé d'âmes impies
Qui sur ses rameaux noirs frissonnent accroupies,
Dans la nuit du septième enfer!

“ Ton âme fuira nue! au livre de tes crimes
Un démon te lira les noms de tes victimes;
Tu les verras autour de toi,
Ces spectres, teints du sang qui n’est plus dans leurs veines,
Se presser, plus nombreux que les paroles vaines
Que balbutiera ton effroi!

“ Ceci t’arrivera, sans que ta forteresse
Ou ta flotte te puisse aider, dans ta détresse,
De sa rame ou de son canon;
Quand même Ali-Pacha, comme le juif immonde,
Pour tromper l’ange noir qui l’attend hors du monde,
En mourant changerait de nom! “

Ali sous sa pelisse avait un cimeterre,
Un tromblon tout chargé, s’ouvrant comme un cratère,
Trois longs pistolets, un poignard:
Il écouta le prêtre et lui laissa tout dire,
Pencha son front rêveur, puis avec un sourire
Donna sa pelisse au vieillard.

XIV

LE CHÂTEAU FORT

À quoi pensent ces flots qui baisent sans murmure
Les flancs de ce rocher luisant comme une armure?
Quoi donc! n'ont-ils pas vu, dans leur propre miroir,
Que ce roc, dont le pied déchire leurs entrailles,
A sur sa tête un fort, ceint de blanches murailles,
Roulé comme un turban autour de son front noir?

Que font-ils? à qui donc gardent-ils leur colère?
Allons! acharne-toi sur ce cap séculaire,
Ô mer! trêve un moment aux pauvres matelots!
Ronge, ronge ce roc! qu'il chancelle, qu'il penche,
Et tombe enfin, avec sa forteresse blanche,
La tête la première, enfoncé dans les flots!

Dis, combien te faut-il de temps, ô mer fidèle,
Pour jeter bas ce roc avec sa citadelle?
Un jour? un an? un siècle..? au nid du criminel
Précipite toujours ton eau jaune de sable!
Que t'importe le temps, ô mer intarissable?
Un siècle est comme un flot dans ton gouffre éternel.

Engloutis cet écueil! que ta vague l'efface
Et sur son front perdu toujours passe et repasse!
Que l'algue aux verts cheveux dégrade ses contours!
Que, sur son flanc couché, dans ton lit sombre il dorme!
Qu'on n'y distingue plus sa forteresse informe!
Que chaque flot emporte une pierre à ses tours!

Afin que rien n'en reste au monde, et qu'on respire
De ne plus voir la tour d'Ali, pacha d'Épire;
Et qu'un jour, côtoyant les bords qu'Ali souilla,
Si le marin de Cos dans la mer ténébreuse

Voit un grand tourbillon dont le centre se creuse,
Aux passagers muets il dise: c’était là!

XV

MARCHE TURQUE

Là - Allah! - Ellàllah!
Il n’y a pas d’autre Dieu que Dieu. KORAN.

Ma dague d’un sang noir à mon côté ruisselle,
Et ma hache est pendue à l’arçon de ma selle.

J’aime le vrai soldat, effroi de Bélial:
Son turban évasé rend son front plus sévère;
Il baise avec respect la barbe de son père,
Il voue à son vieux sabre un amour filial,
Et porte un doliman percé dans les mêlées
De plus de coups que n’a de taches étoilées
La peau du tigre impérial.

Ma dague d’un sang noir à mon côté ruisselle,
Et ma hache est pendue à l’arçon de ma selle.

Un bouclier de cuivre à son bras sonne et luit,
Rouge comme la lune au milieu d’une brume;
Son cheval hennissant mâche un frein blanc d’écume;
Un long sillon de poudre en sa course le suit.
Quand il passe au galop sur le pavé sonore,
On fait silence, on dit: C’est un cavalier maure!
Et chacun se retourne au bruit.

Ma dague d’un sang noir à mon côté ruisselle,
Et ma hache est pendue à l’arçon de ma selle.

Quand dix mille Giaours viennent au son du cor,
Il leur répond; il vole, et d’un souffle farouche
Fait jaillir la terreur du clairon qu’il embouche,
Tue, et parmi les morts sent croître son essor,

Rafraîchit dans leur sang son caftan écarlate,
Et pousse son coursier qui se lasse, et le flatte
Pour en égorger plus encor!

Ma dague d’un sang noir à mon côté ruisselle,
Et ma hache est pendue à l’arçon de ma selle.

J’aime s’il est vainqueur, quand s’est tu le tambour,
Qu’il ait sa belle esclave aux paupières arquées,
Et, laissant les imams qui prêchent aux mosquées
Boire du vin la nuit, qu’il en boive au grand jour!
J’aime, après le combat, que sa voix enjouée
Rie, et des cris de guerre encor tout enrouée,
Chante les houris et l’amour!

Ma dague d’un sang noir à mon côté ruisselle,
Et ma hache est pendue à l’arçon de ma selle.

Qu’il soit grave, et rapide à venger un affront;
Qu’il aime mieux savoir le jeu du cimeterre
Que tout ce qu’à vieillir on apprend sur la terre;
Qu’il ignore quel jour les soleils s’éteindront,
Quand rouleront les mers sur les sables arides;
Mais qu’il soit brave et jeune, et préfère à des rides
Des cicatrices sur son front.

Ma dague d’un sang noir à mon côté ruisselle,
Et ma hache est pendue à l’arçon de ma selle.

Tel est, comparadgis, spahis, timariots,
Le vrai guerrier croyant! mais celui qui se vante,
Et qui tremble au moment de semer l’épouvante,
Qui le dernier arrive aux camps impériaux,
Qui, lorsque d’une ville on a forcé la porte,
Ne fait pas, sous le poids du butin qu’il rapporte,
Plier l’essieu des chariots;

Ma dague d’un sang noir à mon côté ruisselle,
Et ma hache est pendue à l’arçon de ma selle.

Celui qui d’une femme aime les entretiens;
Celui qui ne sait pas dire dans une orgie
Quelle est d’un beau cheval la généalogie;
Qui cherche ailleurs qu’en soi force, amis et soutiens,
Sur de soyeux divans se couche avec mollesse,
Craint le soleil, sait lire, et par scrupule laisse
Tout le vin de Chypre aux chrétiens;

Ma dague d’un sang noir à mon côté ruisselle,
Et ma hache est pendue à l’arçon de ma selle.

Celui-là, c’est un lâche, et non pas un guerrier.
Ce n’est pas lui qu’on voit dans la bataille ardente
Pousser un fier cheval, à la housse pendante,
Le sabre en main, debout sur le large étrier;
Il n’est bon qu’à presser des talons une mule,
En murmurant tout bas quelque vaine formule,
Comme un prêtre qui va prier!

Ma dague d’un sang noir à mon côté ruisselle,
Et ma hache est pendue à l’arçon de ma selle.

XVI

LA BATAILLE PERDUE

Sur la plus haute colline
Il monte, et sa javeline
Soutenant ses membres lourds,
Il voit son armée en fuite
Et de sa tente détruite
Pendre en lambeaux le velours.
Ém. Deschamps Rodrigue pendant la bataille.

“ Allah! qui me rendra ma formidable armée,
Émirs, cavalerie au carnage animée,
Et ma tente, et mon camp, éblouissant à voir,
Qui la nuit allumait tant de feux qu’à leur nombre,
On eût dit que le ciel sur la colline sombre
Laissait ses étoiles pleuvoir?

“ Qui me rendra mes beys aux flottantes pelisses?
Mes fiers timariots, turbulentes milices?
Mes khans bariolés? mes rapides spahis?
Et mes bédouins hâlés, venus des Pyramides,
Qui riaient d’effrayer les laboureurs timides,
Et poussaient leurs chevaux par les champs de maïs?

“ Tous ces chevaux, à l’oeil de flamme, aux jambes grêles,
Qui volaient dans les blés comme des sauterelles,
Quoi, je ne verrai plus, franchissant les sillons,
Leurs troupes, par la mort en vain diminuées,
Sur les carrés pesants s’abattant par nuées,
Couvrir d’éclairs les bataillons!

“ Ils sont morts: dans le sang traînent leurs belles housses;
Le sang souille et noircit leur croupe aux taches rousses;
L’éperon s’userait sur leur flanc arrondi

Avant de réveiller leurs pas jadis rapides,
Et près d’eux sont couchés leurs maîtres intrépides
Qui dormaient à leur ombre aux halles de midi!

“ Allah! qui me rendra ma redoutable armée?
La voilà par les champs tout entière semée,
Comme l’or d’un prodigue épars sur le pavé.
Quoi! chevaux, cavaliers, Arabes et Tartares,
Leurs turbans, leur galop, leurs drapeaux, leurs fanfares,
C’est comme si j’avais rêvé!

“ Ô mes vaillants soldats et leurs coursiers fidèles!
Leur voix n’a plus de bruit et leurs pieds n’ont plus d’ailes.
Ils ont oublié tout, et le sabre et le mors.
De leurs corps entassés cette vallée est pleine:
Voilà pour bien longtemps une sinistre plaine!
Ce soir, l’odeur du sang: demain, l’odeur des morts.

“ Quoi! c’était une armée, et ce n’est plus qu’une ombre!
Ils se sont bien battus! de l’aube à la nuit sombre,
Dans le cercle fatal ardents à se presser.
Les noirs linceuls des nuits sur l’horizon se posent.
Les braves ont fini: maintenant ils reposent,
Et les corbeaux vont commencer.

“ Déjà, passant leur bec entre leurs plumes noires,
Du fond des bois, du haut des chauves promontoires,
Ils accourent: des morts ils rongent les lambeaux;
Et cette armée, hier formidable et suprême,
Cette puissante armée, hélas! ne peut plus même
Effaroucher un aigle et chasser des corbeaux!

“ Oh! si j’avais encor cette armée immortelle,
Je voudrais conquérir des mondes avec elle;
Je la ferais régner sur les rois ennemis;
Elle serait ma soeur, ma dame et mon épouse.
Mais que fera la mort, inféconde et jalouse,

De tant de braves endormis?

“ Que n’ai-je été frappé! que n’a sur la poussière
Roulé mon vert turban avec ma tête altière!
Hier j’étais puissant; hier trois officiers,
Immobiles et fiers sur leur selle tigrée,
Portaient, devant le seuil de ma tente dorée,
Trois panaches ravis aux croupes des coursiers.

“ Hier j’avais cent tambours tonnant à mon passage;
J’avais quarante agas contemplant mon visage,
Et d’un sourcil froncé tremblant dans leurs palais.
Au lieu des lourds pierriers qui dorment sur les proues,
J’avais de beaux canons, roulant sur quatre roues,
Avec leurs canonniers anglais.

“ Hier j’avais des châteaux; j’avais de belles villes;
Des Grecques par milliers à vendre aux juifs serviles;
J’avais de grands harems et de grands arsenaux.
Aujourd’hui, dépouillé, vaincu, proscrit, funeste,
Je fuis... De mon empire, hélas! rien ne me reste;
Allah! je n’ai plus même une tour à créneaux!

“ Il faut fuir, moi, pacha, moi, vizir à trois queues!
Franchir l’horizon vaste et les collines bleues,
Furtif, baissant les yeux, presque tendant la main,
Comme un voleur qui fuit troublé dans les ténèbres,
Et croit voir des gibets dressant leurs bras funèbres
Dans tous les arbres du chemin! “

Ainsi parlait Reschid, le soir de sa défaite.
Nous eûmes mille Grecs tués à cette fête.
Mais le vizir fuyait, seul, ce champ meurtrier.
Rêveur, il essuyait son rouge cimeterre;
Deux chevaux près de lui du pied battaient la terre,
Et, vides, sur leurs flancs sonnaient les étriers.

XVII

LE RAVIN

... alte fosse che vallan quella terra sconsolata. DANTE.

Un ravin de ces monts coupe la noire crête;
Comme si, voyageant du Caucase au Cédar,
    Quelqu’un de ces Titans que nul rempart n’arrête
    Avait fait passer sur la tête
    La roue immense de son char.

    Hélas! combien de fois, dans nos temps de discorde,
    Des flots de sang chrétien et de sang mécréant,
    Baignant le cimeterre et la miséricorde,
    Ont changé tout à coup en torrent qui déborde
    Cette ornière d’un char géant!

XVIII

L’ENFANT

O horror! horror! horror! SHAKESPEARE. Macbeth

Les Turcs ont passé là: tout est ruine et deuil.
Chio, l’île des vins, n’est plus qu’un sombre écueil,
Chio, qu’ombrageaient les charmilles,
Chio, qui dans les flots reflétait ses grands bois,
Ses coteaux, ses palais, et le soir quelquefois
Un choeur dansant de jeunes filles.

Tout est désert: mais non, seul près des murs noircis,
Un enfant aux yeux bleus, un enfant grec, assis,
Courbait sa tête humiliée;
Il avait pour asile, il avait pour appui
Une blanche aubépine, une fleur, comme lui
Dans le grand ravage oubliée.

Ah! pauvre enfant, pieds nus sur les rocs anguleux!
Hélas! pour essuyer les pleurs de tes yeux bleus
Comme le ciel et comme l’onde,
Pour que dans leur azur, de larmes orageux,
Passe le vif éclair de la joie et des jeux,
Pour relever ta tète blonde,

Que veux-tu? bel enfant, que te faut-il donner
Pour rattacher gaîment et gaîment ramener
En boucles sur ta blanche épaule
Ces cheveux qui du fer n’ont pas subi l’affront,
Et qui pleurent épars autour de ton beau front,
Comme les feuilles sur le saule?

Qui pourrait dissiper tes chagrins nébuleux?
Est-ce d’avoir ce lis, bleu comme tes yeux bleus,

Qui d’Iran borde le puits sombre?
Ou le fruit du tuba, de cet arbre si grand,
Qu’un cheval au galop met toujours en courant,
Cent ans à sortir de son ombre?

Veux-tu, pour me sourire, un bel oiseau des bois,
Qui chante avec un chant plus doux que le hautbois,
Plus éclatant que les cymbales?
Que veux-tu? fleur, beau fruit ou l’oiseau merveilleux?
— Ami, dit l’enfant grec, dit l’enfant aux yeux bleus,
Je veux de la poudre et des balles.

XIX

SARA LA BAIGNEUSE

Le soleil et les vents, dans ces bocages sombres,
Des feuilles sur son front faisaient flotter les ombres.
ALFRED DE VIGNY

Sara, belle d’indolence,
Se balance
Dans un hamac, au-dessus
Du bassin d’une fontaine
Toute pleine
D’eau puisée à l’Ilyssus;

Et la frêle escarpolette
Se reflète
Dans le transparent miroir,
Avec la baigneuse blanche
Qui se penche,
Qui se penche pour se voir.

Chaque fois que la nacelle
Qui chancelle,
Passe à fleur d’eau dans son vol,
On voit sur l’eau qui s’agite
Sortir vite
Son beau pied et son beau col.

Elle bat d’un pied timide
L’onde humide
Qui ride son clair tableau,
Du beau pied rougit l’albâtre;
La folâtre,
Rit de la fraîcheur de l’eau.

Reste ici caché: demeure!
Dans une heure,
D’un oeil ardent tu verras
Sortir du bain l’ingénue,
Toute nue,
Croisant ses mains sur ses bras!

Car c’est un astre qui brille
Qu’une fille
Qui sort d’un bain au flot clair,
Cherche s’il ne vient personne,
Et frissonne,
Toute mouillée au grand air!

Elle est là, sous la feuillée,
Éveillée
Au moindre bruit de malheur;
Et rouge, pour une mouche
Qui la touche,
Comme une grenade en fleur.

On voit tout ce que dérobe
Voile ou robe;
Dans ses yeux d’azur en feu,
Son regard que rien ne voile
Est l’étoile
Qui brille au fond d’un ciel bleu.

L’eau sur son corps qu’elle essuie
Roule en pluie,
Comme sur un peuplier;
Comme si, gouttes à gouttes,
Tombaient toutes
Les perles de son collier.

Mais Sara la nonchalante
Est bien lente

À finir ses doux ébats;
Toujours elle se balance
En silence,
Et va murmurant tout bas:

“ Oh! si j’étais capitane,
Ou sultane,
Je prendrais des bains ambrés,
Dans un bain de marbre jaune,
Prés d’un trône,
Entre deux griffons dorés!

“ J’aurais le hamac de soie
Qui se ploie
Sous le corps prêt à pâmer;
J’aurais la molle ottomane
Dont émane
Un parfum qui fait aimer.

“ Je pourrais folâtrer nue,
Sous la nue,
Dans le ruisseau du jardin,
Sans craindre de voir dans l’ombre
Du bois sombre
Deux yeux s’allumer soudain.

“ Il faudrait risquer sa tête
Inquiète,
Et tout braver pour me voir,
Le sabre nu de l’heyduque,
Et l’eunuque
Aux dents blanches, au front noir!

“ Puis, je pourrais, sans qu’on presse
Ma paresse,
Laissez avec mes habits
Traîner sur les larges dalles

Mes sandales
De drap brodé de rubis. “

Ainsi se parle en princesse,
Et sans cesse
Se balance avec amour,
La jeune fille rieuse,
Oublieuse
Des promptes ailes du jour.

L’eau, du pied de la baigneuse
Peu soigneuse,
Rejaillit sur le gazon,
Sur sa chemise plissée,
Balancée
Aux branches d’un vert buisson.

Et cependant des campagnes
Ses compagnes
Prennent toutes le chemin.
Voici leur troupe frivole
Qui s’envole
En se tenant par la main.

Chacune, en chantant comme elle,
Passe, et mêle
Ce reproche à sa chanson:
— Oh! la paresseuse fille
Qui s’habille
Si tard un jour de moisson!

XX

ATTENTE

Esperaba, desperada.

Monte, écureuil, monte au grand chêne,
Sur la branche des cieux prochaine,
Qui plie et tremble comme un jonc.
Cigogne, aux vieilles tours fidèle,
Oh! vole! et monte à tire-d’aile
De l’église à la citadelle,
Du haut clocher au grand donjon.

Vieux aigle, monte de ton aire
À la montagne centenaire
Que blanchit l’hiver éternel;
Et toi qu’en ta couche inquiète
Jamais l’aube ne vit muette,
Monte, monte, vive alouette,
Vive alouette, monte au ciel!

Et maintenant, du haut de l’arbre,
Des flèches de la tour de marbre,
Du grand mont, du ciel enflammé,
À l’horizon, parmi la brume,
Voyez-vous flotter une plume,
Et courir un cheval qui fume,
Et revenir mon bien-aimé?

XXI

LAZZARA

Et cette femme était fort belle. Rois, XI, 2.

Comme elle court! voyez! - par les poudreux sentiers,
Par les gazons tout pleins de touffes d’églantiers,
Par les blés où le pavot brille,
Par les chemins perdus, par les chemins frayés,
Par les monts, par les bois, par les plaines, voyez
Comme elle court, la jeune fille!

Elle est grande, elle est svelte, et quand, d’un pas joyeux,
Sa corbeille de fleurs sur la tête, à nos yeux
Elle apparaît vive et folâtre,
À voir sur son beau front s’arrondir ses bras blancs,
On croirait voir de loin, dans nos temples croulants,
Une amphore aux anses d’albâtre.

Elle est jeune et rieuse, et chante sa chanson.
Et, pieds nus, près du lac, de buisson en buisson,
Poursuit les vertes demoiselles.
Elle lève sa robe et passe les ruisseaux.
Elle va, court, s’arrête, et vole, et les oiseaux
Pour ses pieds donneraient leurs ailes.

Quand le soir, pour la danse on va se réunir,
À l’heure où l’on entend lentement revenir
Les grelots du troupeau qui bêle,
Sans chercher quels atours à ses traits conviendront,
Elle arrive, et la fleur qu’elle attache à son front
Nous semble toujours la plus belle.

Certes, le vieux Omer, pacha de Négrepont,
Pour elle eût tout donné, vaisseaux à triple pont,

Foudroyantes artilleries,
Harnois de ses chevaux, toisons de ses brebis,
Et son rouge turban de soie, et ses habits
Tout ruisselants de pierreries;

Et ses lourds pistolets, ses tromblons évasés,
Et leurs pommeaux d’argent par sa main rude usés,
Et ses sonores espingoles,
Et son courbe damas, et, don plus riche encor,
La grande peau de tigre où pend son carquois d’or,
Hérissé de flèches mogoles.

Il eût donné sa housse et son large étrier;
Donné tous ses trésors avec le trésorier;
Donné ses trois cents concubines;
Donné ses chiens de chasse aux colliers de vermeil;
Donné ses Albanais, brûlés par le soleil,
Avec leurs longues carabines.

Il eût donné les Francs, les Juifs et leur rabbin;
Son kiosque rouge et vert, et ses salles de bain
Aux grands pavés de mosaïque;
Sa haute citadelle aux créneaux anguleux;
Et sa maison d’été qui se mire aux flots bleus
D’un golfe de Cyrénaïque.

Tout! jusqu’au cheval blanc, qu’il élève au sérail,
Dont la sueur à flots argente le poitrail;
Jusqu’au frein que l’or damasquine;
Jusqu’à cette Espagnole, envoi du dey d’Alger,
Qui soulève, en dansant son fandango léger,
Les plis brodés de sa basquine!

Ce n’est point un pacha, c’est un klephte à l’oeil noir
Qui l’a prise, et qui n’a rien donné pour l’avoir;
Car la pauvreté l’accompagne;
Un klephte a pour tous biens l’air du ciel, l’eau des puits,

Un bon fusil bronzé par la fumée, et puis
La liberté sur la montagne.

XXII

VOEU

Ainsi qu'on choisit une rose
Dans les guirlandes de Sarons,
Choisissez une vierge éclose
Parmi les lis de vos vallons.
LAMARTINE.

Si j'étais la feuille que roule
L'aile tournoyante du vent,
Qui flotte sur l'eau qui s'écoule,
Et qu'on suit de l'oeil en rêvant;

Je me livrerais, fraîche encore,
De la branche me détachant,
Au zéphyr qui souffle à l'aurore,
Au ruisseau qui vient du couchant.

Plus loin que le fleuve, qui gronde,
Plus loin que les vastes forêts,
Plus loin que la gorge profonde,
Je fuirais, je courrais, j'irais!

Plus loin que l'antre de la louve,
Plus loin que le bois des ramiers,
Plus loin que la plaine où l'on trouve
Une fontaine et trois palmiers;

Par delà ces rocs qui répandent
L'orage en torrent dans les blés,
Par delà ce lac morne, où pendent
Tant de buissons échevelés;

Plus loin que les terres arides
Du chef maure au large ataghan,
Dont le front pâle a plus de rides
Que la mer un jour d’ouragan.

Je franchirais comme la flèche
L’étang d’Arta, mouvant miroir,
Et le mont dont la cime empêche
Corinthe et Mykos de se voir.

Comme par un charme attirée,
Je m’arrêterais au matin
Sur Mykos, la ville carrée,
La ville aux coupoles d’étain.

J’irais chez la fille du prêtre,
Chez la blanche fille à l’oeil noir,
Qui le jour chante à sa fenêtre,
Et joue à sa porte le soir.

Enfin, pauvre feuille envolée,
Je viendrais, au gré de mes voeux,
Me poser sur son front, mêlée
Aux boucles de ses blonds cheveux;

Comme une perruche au pied leste
Dans le blé jaune, ou bien encor
Comme, dans un jardin céleste,
Un fruit vert sur un arbre d’or.

Et là, sur sa tète qui penche,
Je serais, fût-ce peu d’instants,
Plus fière que l’aigrette blanche
Au front étoilé des sultans.

XXIII

LA VILLE PRISE

La flamme par ton ordre, ô Roi, luit et dévore.
De ton peuple en grondant elle étouffe les cris,
Et, rougissant les toits comme une sombre aurore,
Semble en son vol joyeux danser sur leurs débris.

Le meurtre aux mille bras comme un géant se lève;
Les palais embrasés se changent en tombeaux;
Pères, femmes, époux, tout tombe sous le glaive;
Autour de la cité s’appellent les corbeaux.

Les mères ont frémi; les vierges palpitantes,
Ô calife! ont pleuré leurs jeunes ans flétris,
Et les coursiers fougueux ont traîné hors des tentes
Leurs corps vivants, de coups et de baisers meurtris.

Vois d’un vaste linceul la ville enveloppée;
Vois! quand ton bras puissant passe, il fait tout plier.
Les prêtres qui priaient ont péri par l’épée,
Jetant leur livre saint comme un vain bouclier.

Les tout petits enfants, écrasés sous les dalles,
Ont vécu; de leur sang le fer s’abreuve encor...
Ton peuple baise, ô Roi, la poudre des sandales
Qu’à ton pied glorieux attache un cercle d’or!

XXIV

ADIEUX DE L’HÔTESSE ARABE

Puisque rien ne t’arrête en cet heureux pays,
Ni l’ombre du palmier, ni le jaune maïs,
Ni le repos, ni l’abondance,
Ni de voir à ta voix battre le jeune sein
De nos soeurs, dont, les soirs, le tournoyant essaim
Couronne un coteau de sa danse,

Adieu, voyageur blanc! J’ai sellé de ma main,
De peur qu’il ne te jette aux pierres du chemin,
Ton cheval à l’oeil intrépide;
Ses pieds fouillent le sol, sa croupe est belle à voir,
Ferme, ronde et luisante ainsi qu’un rocher noir
Que polit une onde rapide.

Tu marches donc sans cesse! Oh! que n’es-tu de ceux
Qui donnent pour limite à leurs pieds paresseux
Leur toit de branches ou de toiles!
Qui, rêveurs, sans en faire, écoutent les récits,
Et souhaitent, le soir, devant leur porte assis,
De s’en aller dans les étoiles!

Si tu l’avais voulu, peut-être une de nous,
Ô jeune homme, eût aimé te servir à genoux
Dans nos huttes toujours ouvertes;
Elle eût fait, en berçant ton sommeil de ses chants,
Pour chasser de ton front les moucherons méchants,
Un éventail de feuilles vertes.

Mais tu pars! - Nuit et jour, tu vas seul et jaloux.
Le fer de ton cheval arrache aux durs cailloux
Une poussière d’étincelles;
À ta lance qui passe et dans l’ombre reluit,

Les aveugles démons qui volent dans la nuit
Souvent ont déchiré leurs ailes.

Si tu reviens, gravis, pour trouver ce hameau,
Ce mont noir qui de loin semble un dos de chameau;
Pour trouver ma hutte fidèle,
Songe à son toit aigu comme une ruche à miel,
Qu’elle n’a qu’une porte, et qu’elle s’ouvre au ciel
Du côté d’où vient l’hirondelle.

Si tu ne reviens pas, songe un peu quelquefois
Aux filles du désert, soeurs à la douce voix,
Qui dansent pieds nus sur la dune;
Ô beau jeune homme blanc, bel oiseau passager,
Souviens-toi, car peut-être, ô rapide étranger,
Ton souvenir reste à plus d’une!

Adieu donc! - Va tout droit. Garde-toi du soleil,
Qui dore nos fronts bruns, mais brûle un teint vermeil;
De l’Arabie infranchissable;
De la vieille qui va seule et d’un pas tremblant;
Et de ceux qui le soir, avec un bâton blanc,
Tracent des cercles sur le sable!

XXV

MALÉDICTION

Ed altro disse: ma non l’ho a mente. DANTE.

Qu’il erre sans repos, courbé dès sa jeunesse,
En des sables sans borne où le soleil renaisse
Sitôt qu’il aura lui!
Comme un noir meurtrier qui fuit dans la nuit sombre,
S’il marche, que sans cesse il entende dans l’ombre
Un pas derrière lui!

En des glaciers polis comme un tranchant de hache,
Qu’il glisse, et roule, et tombe, et tombe et se rattache
De l’ongle à leurs parois!
Qu’il soit pris pour un autre, et, râlant sur la roue,
Dise: je n’ai rien fait! et qu’alors on le cloue
Sur un gibet en croix!

Qu’il pende échevelé, la bouche violette!
Que, visible à lui seul, la mort, chauve squelette,
Rie en le regardant!
Que son cadavre souffre, et vive assez encore
Pour sentir, quand la mort le ronge et le dévore,
Chaque coup de sa dent!

Qu’il ne soit plus vivant, et ne soit pas une âme!
Que sur ses membres nus tombe un soleil de flamme
Ou la pluie à ruisseaux!
Qu’il s’éveille en sursaut chaque nuit dans la brume,
Et lutte, et se secoue, et vainement écume
Sous des griffes d’oiseaux!

XXVI

LES TRONÇONS DU DÉSERT

D’ailleurs les sages ont dit: il ne faut point attacher son coeur aux choses passagères. SADI, Gullistan.

Je veille, et nuit et jour mon front rêve enflammé,
Ma joue en pleurs ruisselle
Depuis qu’Albaydé dans la tombe a fermé
Ses beaux yeux de gazelle.

Car elle avait quinze ans, un sourire ingénu,
Et m’aimait sans mélange,
Et quand elle croisait ses bras sur son sein nu,
On croyait voir un ange!

Un jour, pensif, j’errais au bord d’un golfe ouvert
Entre deux promontoires,
Et je vis sur le sable un serpent jaune et vert,
Jaspé de taches noires.

La hache en vingt tronçons avait coupé vivant
Son corps que l’onde arrose,
Et l’écume des mers que lui jetait le vent
Sur son sang flottait rose.

Tous ses anneaux vermeils rampaient en se tordant
Sur la grève isolée,
Et le sang empourprait d’un rouge plus ardent
Sa crête dentelée.

Ces tronçons déchirés, épars, près d’épuiser
Leurs forces languissantes,
Se cherchaient, se cherchaient, comme pour un baiser
Deux bouches frémissantes!

Et comme je rêvais, triste et suppliant Dieu
Dans ma pitié muette,
La tête aux mille dents rouvrit son oeil de feu,
Et me dit: “ Ô poète!

“ Ne plains que toi! ton mal est plus envenimé,
Ta plaie est plus cruelle;
Car ton Albaydé dans la tombe a fermé
Ses beaux yeux de gazelle.

“ Ce coup de hache aussi brise ton jeune essor.
Ta vie et tes pensées
Autour d’un souvenir, chaste et dernier trésor,
Se traînent dispersés.

“ Ton génie, au vol large, éclatant, gracieux,
Qui, mieux que l’hirondelle,
Tantôt rasait la terre et tantôt dans les cieux
Donnait de grands coups d’aile,

“ Comme moi maintenant, meurt près des flots troublés;
Et se forces s’éteignent,
Sans pouvoir réunir ses tronçons mutilés
Qui rampent et qui saignent. “

XXVII

NOURMAHAL-LA-ROUSSE

No es bestia que non fus hy trobada. JOAN LORENZO SEGURA DE ASTORGA
Pas de bête fauve qui ne s'y trouvât.

Entre deux rocs d'un noir d'ébène
Voyez-vous ce sombre hallier
Qui se hérisse dans la plaine,
Ainsi qu'une touffe de laine
Entre les cornes du bélier?

Là, dans une ombre non frayée,
Grondent le tigre ensanglanté,
La lionne, mère effrayée,
Le chacal, l'hyène rayée
Et le léopard tacheté.

Là, des monstres de toute forme
Rampent: - le basilic rêvant,
L'hippopotame au ventre énorme,
Et le boa, vaste et difforme,
Qui semble un tronc d'arbre vivant.

L'orfraie aux paupières vermeilles,
Le serpent, le singe méchant,
Sifflent comme un essaim d'abeilles;
L'éléphant aux larges oreilles,
Casse les bambous en marchant.

Là, vit la sauvage famille
Qui glapit, bourdonne et mugit.
Le bois entier hurle et fourmille.
Sous chaque buisson un oeil brille,

Dans chaque antre une voix rugit.

Eh bien! seul et nu sur la mousse,
Dans ce bois-là je serais mieux
Que devant Nourmahal-la-Rousse,
Qui parle avec une voix douce
Et regarde avec de doux yeux!

XXVIII

LES DJINNS

Murs, ville,
Et port,
Asile
De mort,
Mer grise
Où brise
La brise,
Tout dort.

Dans la plaine
Naît un bruit.
C’est l’haleine
    De la nuit.
    Elle brame
    Comme une âme
    Qu’une flamme
    Toujours suit!

    La voix plus haute
    Semble un grelot.
    D’un nain qui saute
    C’est le galop.
    Il fuit, s’élance,
    Puis en cadence
    Sur un pied danse
    Au bout d’un flot.

    La rumeur approche.
    L’écho la redit.
    C’est comme la cloche
    D’un couvent maudit;
    Comme un bruit de foule,

Qui tonne et qui roule,
Et tantôt s’écroule,
Et tantôt grandit,

Dieu! la voix sépulcrale
Des Djinns!... Quel bruit ils font!
Fuyons sous la spirale
De l’escalier profond.
Déjà s’éteint ma lampe,
Et l’ombre de la rampe,
Qui le long du mur rampe,
Monte jusqu’au plafond.

C’est l’essaim des Djinns qui passe,
Et tourbillonne en sifflant!
Les ifs, que leur vol fracasse,
Craquent comme un pin brûlant.
Leur troupeau, lourd et rapide,
Volant dans l’espace vide,
Semble un nuage livide
Qui porte un éclair au flanc.

Ils sont tout près! - Tenons fermée
Cette salle, où nous les narguons.
Quel bruit dehors! Hideuse armée
De vampires et de dragons!
La poutre du toit descellée
Ploie ainsi qu’une herbe mouillée,
Et la vieille porte rouillée
Tremble, à déraciner ses gonds!

Cris de l’enfer! voix qui hurle et qui pleure!
L’horrible essaim, poussé par l’aquilon,
Sans doute, ô ciel! s’abat sur ma demeure.
Le mur fléchit sous le noir bataillon.
La maison crie et chancelle penchée,
Et l’on dirait que, du sol arrachée,

Ainsi qu’il chasse une feuille séchée,
Le vent la roule avec leur tourbillon!

Prophète! si ta main me sauve
De ces impurs démons des soirs,
J’irai prosterner mon front chauve
Devant tes sacrés encensoirs!
Fais que sur ces portes fidèles
Meure leur souffle d’étincelles,
Et qu’en vain l’ongle de leurs ailes
Grince et crie à ces vitraux noirs!

Ils sont passés! - Leur cohorte
S’envole, et fuit, et leurs pieds
Cessent de battre ma porte
De leurs coups multipliés.
L’air est plein d’un bruit de chaînes,
Et dans les forêts prochaines
Frissonnent tous les grands chênes,
Sous leur vol de feu pliés!

De leurs ailes lointaines
Le battement décroît,
Si confus dans les plaines,
Si faible, que l’on croit
Ouïr la sauterelle
Crier d’une voix grêle,
Ou pétiller la grêle
Sur le plomb d’un vieux toit.

D’étranges syllabes
Nous viennent encor; -
Ainsi, des Arabes
Quand sonne le cor,
Un chant sur la grève
Par instants s’élève,
Et l’enfant qui rêve

Fait des rêves d’or.

Les Djinns funèbres,
Fils du trépas,
Dans les ténèbres
Pressent leurs pas;
Leur essaim gronde:
Ainsi, profonde,
Murmure une onde
Qu’on ne voit pas.

Ce bruit vague
Qui s’endort,
C’est la vague
Sur le bord;
C’est la plainte
Presque éteinte
D’une sainte
Pour un mort.

On doute
La nuit...
J’écoute: -
Tout fuit,
Tout passe
L’espace
Efface
Le bruit.

XXIX

SULTAN ACHMET

Oh! permets, charmante fille, que j'enveloppe mon cou avec tes bras. HAFIZ.

À Juana la Grenadine,
Qui toujours chante et badine,
Sultan Achmet dit un jour:
— Je donnerais sans retour
Mon royaume pour Médine,
Médine pour ton amour.

— Fais-toi chrétien, roi sublime!
Car il est illégitime,
Le plaisir qu'on a cherché
Aux bras d'un Turc débauché.
J'aurais peur de faire un crime:
C'est bien assez du péché.

— Par ces perles dont la chaîne
Rehausse, ô ma souveraine,
Ton cou blanc comme le lait,
Je ferai ce qui te plaît,
Si tu veux bien que je prenne
Ton collier pour chapelet.

XXX

ROMANCE MAURESQUE

Dixó le: - dime, buen hombre,
Lo que preguntarte queria. ROMANCERO GENERAL.

Don Rodrigue est à la chasse.
Sans épée et sans cuirasse,
Un jour d'été, vers midi,
Sous la feuillée et sur l'herbe
Il s'assied, l'homme superbe,
Don Rodrigue le hardi.

La haine en feu le dévore.
Sombre, il pense au bâtard maure.
À son neveu Mudarra,
Dont ses complots sanguinaires
Jadis ont tué les frères,
Les sept infants de Lara.

Pour le trouver en campagne,
Il traverserait l'Espagne
De Figuère à Setuval.
L'un des deux mourrait sans doute.
En ce moment sur la route
Il passe un homme à cheval.

— Chevalier, chrétien ou maure,
Qui dors sous le sycomore,
Dieu te guide par la main!
— Que Dieu répande ses grâces
Sur toi, l'écuyer qui passes,
Qui passes par le chemin!

— Chevalier, chrétien ou maure,

Qui dors sous le sycomore,
Parmi l’herbe du vallon,
Dis ton nom, afin qu’on sache
Si tu portes le panache
D’un vaillant ou d’un félon.

— Si c’est là ce qui t’intrigue,
On m’appelle don Rodrigue,
Don Rodrigue de Lara,
Doña Sanche est ma soeur même.
Du moins, c’est à mon baptême
Ce qu’un prêtre déclara.

J’attends sous ce sycomore:
J’ai cherché d’Albe à Zamore
Ce Mudarra le bâtard,
Le fils de la renégate,
Qui commande une frégate
Du roi maure Aliatar.

Certe, à moins qu’il ne m’évite,
Je le reconnaîtrais vite:
Toujours il porte avec lui
Notre dague de famille;
Une agate au pommeau brille,
Et la lame est sans étui.

Oui, par mon âme chrétienne,
D’une autre main que la mienne
Ce mécréant ne mourra.
C’est le bonheur que je brigue...
— On t’appelle don Rodrigue,
Don Rodrigue de Lara?

Eh bien! Seigneur, le jeune homme
Qui te parle et qui te nomme,
C’est Mudarra le bâtard.

C’est le vengeur et le juge.
Cherche à présent un refuge! -
L’autre dit: — Tu viens bien tard!

— Moi, fils de la renégate,
Qui commande une frégate
Du roi maure Aliatar,
Moi, ma dague et ma vengeance,
Tous les trois d’intelligence,
Nous voici! — Tu viens bien tard!

— Trop tôt pour toi, don Rodrigue,
À moins qu’il ne te fatigue
De vivre... Ah! la peur t’émeut,
Ton front pâlit; rends, infâme,
À moi ta vie, et ton âme
À ton ange, s’il en veut!

Si mon poignard de Tolède
Et mon Dieu me sont en aide,
Regarde mes yeux ardents,
Je suis ton seigneur, ton maître,
Et je t’arracherai, traître,
Le souffle d’entre les dents!

Le neveu de doña Sanche
Dans ton sang enfin étanche
La soif qui le dévora.
Mon oncle, il faut que tu meures.
Pour toi plus de jours ni d’heures...!
— Mon bon neveu Mudarra,

Un moment! attends que j’aille
Chercher mon fer de bataille.
— Tu n’auras d’autres délais
Que celui qu’ont eu mes frères:
Dans les caveaux funéraires

Où tu les as mis, suis-les!

Si jusqu’à l’heure venue,
J’ai gardé ma lame nue,
C’est que je voulais, bourreau,
Que, vengeant la renégate,
Ma dague au pommeau d’agate
Eût ta gorge pour fourreau.

XXXI

GRENADE

Quien no ha vista á Sevilla
No ha visto á maravilla.

Soit lointaine, soit voisine,
Espagnole ou sarrasine,
Il n’est pas une cité
Qui dispute, sans folie,
À Grenade la jolie
La pomme de la beauté,
Et qui, gracieuse, étale
Plus de pompe orientale
Sous un ciel plus enchanté.

Cadix a les palmiers; Murcie a les oranges;
Jaén son palais goth aux tourelles étranges;
Agreda son couvent bâti par Saint Edmond;
Ségovie a l’autel dont on baise les marches,
Et l’aqueduc aux trois rangs d’arches
Qui lui porte un torrent pris au sommet d’un mont.

Llers a des tours; Barcelone
Au faîte d’une colonne
Lève un phare sur la mer;
Aux rois d’Aragon fidèle,
Dans leurs vieux tombeaux, Tudèle
Garde leur sceptre de fer;
Tolose a des forges sombres
Qui semblent, au sein des ombres,
Des soupiraux de l’enfer.

Le poisson qui rouvrit l’oeil mort du vieux Tobie
Se joue au fond du golfe où dort Fontarabie;

Alicante aux clochers mêle les minarets;
Compostelle a son saint; Cordoue aux maisons vieilles
A sa mosquée où l’oeil se perd dans les merveilles;
Madrid a le Manzanarès.

Bilbao, des flots couverte,
Jette une pelouse verte,
Sur les murs noirs et caducs;
Medina la chevalière,
Cachant sa pauvreté fière
Sous le manteau de ses ducs,
N’a rien que ses sycomores,
Car ses beaux ponts sont aux Maures,
Aux romains, ses aqueducs.

Valence a les clochers de ses trois cents églises;
L’austère Alcantara livre au souffle des brises
Les drapeaux turcs, pendus en foule à ses piliers;
Salamanque en riant s’assied sur trois collines,
S’endort au son des mandolines,
Et s’éveille en sursaut aux cris des écoliers.

Tortose est chère à saint Pierre;
Le marbre est comme la pierre
Dans la riche Puycerda;
De sa bastille octogone
Tuy se vante, et Tarragone
De ses murs qu’un roi fonda;
Le Douro coule à Zamore;
Tolède a l’alcazar maure,
Séville a la giralda.

Burgos de son chapitre étale la richesse;
Peñaflor est marquise, et Girone est duchesse;
Bivar est une nonne aux sévères atours;
Toujours prête au combat, la sombre Pampelune,
Avant de s’endormir aux rayons de la lune,

Ferme sa ceinture de tours.

Toutes ces villes d’Espagne
S’épandent dans la campagne
Ou hérissent la Sierra;
Toutes ont des citadelles
Dont sous des mains infidèles
Aucun beffroi ne vibra;
Toutes sur leurs cathédrales
Ont des clochers en spirales;
Mais Grenade a l’Alhambra.

L’Alhambra! l’Alhambra! palais que les Génies
Ont doré comme un rêve et rempli d’harmonies;
Forteresse aux créneaux festonnés et croulants,
Où l’on entend la nuit de magiques syllabes,
Quand la lune, à travers les mille arceaux arabes,
Sème les murs de trèfles blancs!

Grenade a plus de merveilles
Que n’a de graines vermeilles
Le beau fruit de ses vallons;
Grenade, la bien nommée,
Lorsque la guerre enflammée
Déroule ses pavillons,
Cent fois plus terrible éclate
Que la grenade écarlate
Sur le front des bataillons.

Il n’est rien de plus beau ni de plus vivant au monde;
Soit qu’à Vivataubin Vivaconlud réponde,
Avec son clair tambour de clochettes orné;
Soit que, se couronnant de feux comme un calife,
L’éblouissant Généralife
Élève dans la nuit son faîte illuminé.

Les clairons des Tours-Vermeilles

Sonnent comme les abeilles
Dont le vent chasse l’essaim;
Alcacava pour les fêtes
A des cloches toujours prêtes
À bourdonner dans son sein ,
Qui dans leurs tours africaines
Vont éveiller les dulcaynes
Du sonore Albaycin.

Grenade efface en tout ses rivales: Grenade
Chante plus mollement la molle sérénade;
Elle peint ses maisons de plus riches couleurs;
Et l’on dit que les vents suspendent leurs haleines
Quand par un soir d’été Grenade dans ses plaines
Répand ses flammes et ses fleurs.

L’Arabie est son aïeule.
Les Maures, pour elle seule,
Aventuriers hasardeux,
Joueraient l’Asie et l’Afrique;
Mais Grenade est catholique,
Grenade se raille d’eux;
Grenade, la belle ville,
Serait une autre Séville
S’il en pouvait être deux.

XXXII

LES BLEUETS

Si es verdad ó non, yo no lo he hy de ver,
Pero non lo quiero en olvido poner. JOAN LORENZO SEGURA DE ASTORGA
Si cela est vrai ou non, je n’ai pas à le voir ici, mais je ne le veux pas mettre en oubli.

Tandis que l’étoile inodore
Que l’été mêle aux blonds épis,
Émaille de son bleu lapis
Les sillons que la moisson dore,
Avant que, de fleurs dépeuplés,
Les champs n’aient subi les faucilles,
Allez, allez, ô jeunes filles,
Cueillir des bleuets dans les blés!

Entre les villes andalouses,
Il n’en est pas qui sous le ciel
S’étende mieux que Peñafiel
Sur les gerbes et les pelouses;
Pas qui dans ses murs crénelés
Lève de plus fières bastilles...
Allez, allez, ô jeunes filles,
Cueillir des bleuets dans les blés!

Il n’est plus de cité chrétienne,
Pas de monastère à beffroi,
Chez le Saint-Père et chez le Roi,
Où, vers la Saint-Ambroise, il vienne
Plus de bon pèlerins hâlés,
Portant bourdon, gourde et coquilles...
Allez, allez, ô jeunes filles,
Cueillir des bleuets dans les blés!

Dans nul pays, les jeunes femmes,
Les soirs, lorsque l’on danse en rond,
N’ont plus de roses sur le front,
Et n’ont dans le coeur plus de flammes;
Jamais plus vifs et plus voilés
Regards n’ont lui sous les mantilles...
Allez, allez, ô jeunes filles,
Cueillir des bleuets dans les blés!

La perle de l’Andalousie,
Alice, était de Peñafiel,
Alice qu’en faisant son miel,
Pour fleur une abeille eût choisie.
Ces jours, hélas! sont envolés!
On la citait dans les familles...
Allez, allez, ô jeunes filles,
Cueillir des bleuets dans les blés!

Un étranger vint dans la ville,
Jeune, et parlant avec dédain.
Était-ce un Maure grenadin?
Un de Murcie ou de Séville?
Venait-il des bords désolés
Où Tunis a ses escadrilles...?
Allez, allez, ô jeunes filles,
Cueillir des bleuets dans les blés!

On ne savait. - La pauvre Alice
En fut aimée, et puis l’aima.
Le doux vallon du Xarama
De leur doux péché fut complice.
Le soir, sous les cieux étoilés,
Tous deux erraient par les charmilles...
Allez, allez, ô jeunes filles,
Cueillir des bleuets dans les blés!

La ville était lointaine et sombre;
Et la lune, douce aux amours,
Se levant derrière les tours
Et les clochers perdus dans l’ombre,
Des édifices dentelés
Découpait en noir les aiguilles...
Allez, allez, ô jeunes filles,
Cueillir des bleuets dans les blés!

Cependant, d’Alice jalouses,
En rêvant au bel étranger,
Sous l’arbre à soie et l’oranger
Dansaient les brunes Andalouses;
Les cors, aux guitares mêlés,
Animaient les joyeux quadrilles...
Allez, allez, ô jeunes filles,
Cueillir des bleuets dans les blés!

L’oiseau dort dans le lit de mousse
Que déjà menace l’autour;
Ainsi dormait dans son amour
Alice confiante et douce.
Le jeune homme aux cheveux bouclés,
C’était don Juan, roi des Castilles...
Allez, allez, ô jeunes filles,
Cueillir des bleuets dans les blés!

Or, c’est péril qu’aimer un prince.
Un jour, sur un noir palefroi
On la jeta de par le Roi;
On l’arracha de la province;
Un cloître sur ses jours troublés
De par le Roi ferma ses grilles...
Allez, allez, ô jeunes filles,
Cueillir des bleuets dans les blés!

XXXIII

FANTÔMES

Luenga es su noche, y cerrados
Estan sus ojos pesados.
Idos, idos en paz, vientos alados!
Longue est sa nuit, et fermés sont ses yeux lourds.
Allez, allez en paix, vents ailés!

I

Hélas! que j’en ai vu mourir de jeunes filles!
C’est le destin. Il faut une proie au trépas.
Il faut que l’herbe tombe au tranchant des faucilles;
Il faut que dans le bal les folâtres quadrilles
Foulent des roses sous leurs pas.

Il faut que l’eau s’épuise à courir les vallées;
Il faut que l’éclair brille, et brille peu d’instants;
Il faut qu’Avril jaloux brûle de ses gelées
Le beau pommier, trop fier de ses fleurs étoilées,
Neige odorante du printemps.

Oui, c’est la vie. Après le jour, la nuit livide.
Après tout, le réveil, infernal ou divin.
Autour du grand banquet siège une foule avide;
Mais bien des conviés laissent leur place vide,
Et se lèvent avant la fin.

II

Que j’en ai vu mourir! - l’une était rose et blanche;
L’autre semblait ouïr de célestes accords;
L’autre, faible, appuyait d’un bras son front qui penche,
Et, comme en s’envolant l’oiseau courbe la branche,

Son âme avait brisé son corps.

Une, pâle, égarée, en proie au noir délire,
Disait tout bas un nom dont nul ne se souvient;
Une s’évanouit, comme un chant sur la lyre;
Une autre en expirant avait le doux sourire
D’un jeune ange qui s’en revient.

Toutes fragiles fleurs, sitôt mortes que nées!
Alcyons engloutis avec leurs nids flottants!
Colombes, que le ciel au monde avait données!
Qui, de grâce, et d’enfance, et d’amour couronnées,
Comptaient leurs ans par les printemps!

Quoi, mortes! quoi, déjà, sous la pierre couchées!
Quoi! tant d’êtres charmants sans regard et sans voix!
Tant de flambeaux éteints! tant de fleurs arrachées...!
Oh! laissez-moi fouler les feuilles desséchées,
Et m’égarer au fond des bois!

Doux fantômes! c’est là, quand je rêve dans l’ombre,
Qu’ils viennent tour à tour m’entendre et me parler.
Un jour douteux me montre et me cache leur nombre;
À travers les rameaux et le feuillage sombre,
Je vois leurs yeux étinceler.

Mon âme est une soeur pour ces ombres si belles.
La vie et le tombeau pour nous n’ont plus de loi.
Tantôt j’aide leurs pas, tantôt je prends leurs ailes.
Vision ineffable où je suis mort comme elles,
Elles, vivantes comme moi!

Elles prêtent leur forme à toutes mes pensées.
Je les vois! je les vois! Elles me disent: viens!
Puis autour d’un tombeau dansent entrelacées;
Puis s’en vont lentement, par degrés éclipsées;
Alors je songe et je me souviens...

III

Une surtout. - Un ange, une jeune Espagnole! -
Blanches mains, sein gonflé de soupirs innocents,
Un oeil noir, où luisaient des regards de créole,
Et ce charme inconnu, cette fraîche auréole
Qui couronne un front de quinze ans!

Non, ce n'est point d'amour qu'elle est morte: pour elle,
L'amour n'avait encor ni plaisirs ni combats;
Rien ne faisait encor battre son coeur rebelle;
Quand tous en la voyant s'écriaient: qu'elle est belle!
Nul ne le lui disait tout bas.

Elle aimait trop le bal, c'est ce qui l'a tuée.
Le bal éblouissant! le bal délicieux!
Sa cendre encor frémit, doucement remuée,
Quand dans la nuit sereine, une blanche nuée
Danse autour du croissant des cieux.

Elle aimait trop le bal. - Quand venait une fête,
Elle y pensait trois jours, trois nuits elle en rêvait;
Et femmes, musiciens, danseurs que rien n'arrête,
Venaient dans son sommeil, troublant sa jeune tête,
Rire et bruire à son chevet.

Puis c'étaient des bijoux, des colliers, des merveilles!
Des ceintures de moire aux ondoyants reflets;
Des tissus plus légers que des ailes d'abeilles;
Des festons; des rubans, à remplir des corbeilles;
Des fleurs, à payer un palais!

La fête commencée, avec ses soeurs rieuses
Elle accourait, froissant l'éventail sous ses doigts;
Puis s'asseyait parmi les écharpes soyeuses,
Et son coeur éclairait en fanfares joyeuses,

Avec l’orchestre aux mille voix.

C’était plaisir de voir danser la jeune fille!
Sa basquine agitait ses paillettes d’azur;
Ses grands yeux noirs brillaient sous la noire mantille:
Telle une double étoile au front des nuits scintille
Sous les plis d’un nuage obscur.

Tout en elle était danse, et rire, et folle joie.
Enfant! - Nous l’admirions dans nos tristes loisirs;
Car ce n’est point au bal que le coeur se déploie:
La cendre y vole autour des tuniques de soie,
L’ennui sombre autour des plaisirs.

Mais elle, par la valse ou la ronde emportée,
Volait, et revenait, et ne respirait pas,
Et s’enivrait des sons de la flûte vantée,
Des fleurs, des lustres d’or, de la fête enchantée,
Du bruit des voix, du bruit des pas.

Quel bonheur de bondir, éperdue, en la foule,
De sentir par le bal ses sens multipliés,
Et de ne pas savoir si dans la nue on roule,
Si l’on chasse en fuyant la terre, ou si l’on foule
Un flot tournoyant sous ses pieds!

Mais hélas! il fallait, quand l’aube était venue,
Partir, attendre au seuil le manteau de satin.
C’est alors que souvent la danseuse ingénue
Sentit en frissonnant sur son épaule nue
Glisser le souffle du matin.

Quels tristes lendemains laisse le bal folâtre!
Adieu, parure, et danse, et rires enfantins!
Aux chansons succédait la toux opiniâtre,
Au plaisir rose et frais la fièvre au teint bleuâtre,
Aux yeux brillants les yeux éteints.

IV

Elle est morte. - À quinze ans, belle, heureuse, adorée!
Morte au sortir d’un bal qui nous mit en deuil,
Morte, hélas! et des bras d’une mère égarée
La mort aux froides mains la prit toute parée,
Pour l’endormir dans le cercueil.

Pour danser d’autres bals elle était encor prête,
Tant la mort fut pressée à prendre un corps si beau!
Et ces roses d’un jour qui couronnaient sa tête,
Qui s’épanouissaient la veille en une fête,
Se fanèrent dans un tombeau.

V

Sa pauvre mère! - hélas! de son sort ignorante,
Avoir mis tant d’amour sur ce frêle roseau,
Et si longtemps veillé son enfance souffrante,
Et passé tant de nuits à l’endormir pleurante
Toute petite en son berceau!

À quoi bon? - Maintenant la jeune trépassée,
Sous le plomb du cercueil, livide, en proie au ver,
Dort; et si, dans la tombe où nous l’avons laissée,
Quelque fête des morts la réveille glacée,
Par une belle nuit d’hiver,

Un spectre, au rire affreux, à sa morne toilette
Préside au lieu de mère, et lui dit: il est temps!
Et, glaçant d’un baiser sa lèvre violette,
Passe les doigts noueux de sa main de squelette
Sous ses cheveux longs et flottants.

Puis, tremblante, il la mène à la danse fatale,
Au choeur aérien dans l’ombre voltigeant;

Et sur l’horizon gris la lune est large et pâle,
Et l’arc-en-ciel des nuits teint d’un reflet d’opale
Le nuage aux franges d’argent.

VI

Vous toutes qu’à ses jeux le bal riant convie,
Pensez à l’Espagnole éteinte sans retour,
Jeunes filles! joyeuse et d’une main ravie,
Elle allait moissonnant les roses de la vie,
Beauté, plaisir, jeunesse, amour!

La pauvre enfant, de fête en fête promenée,
De ce bouquet charmant arrangeait les couleurs;
Mais qu’elle a passé vite, hélas! l’infortunée!
Ainsi qu’Ophelia par le fleuve entraînée,
Elle est morte en cueillant des fleurs!

XXXIV

MAZEPPA

à M. Louis Boulanger

Away! - Away! - BYRON, Mazeppa.
En avant! En avant!

I

Ainsi, quand Mazeppa, qui rugit et qui pleure,
A vu ses bras, ses pieds, ses flancs qu’un sabre effleure,
Tous ses membres liés
Sur un fougueux cheval, nourri d’herbes marines,
Qui fume, et fait jaillir le feu de ses narines
Et le feu de ses pieds;

Quand il s’est dans ses noeuds roulé comme un reptile,
Qu’il a bien réjoui de sa rage inutile
Ses bourreaux tout joyeux,
Et qu’il retombe enfin sur la croupe farouche,
La sueur sur le front, l’écume dans la bouche,
Et du sang dans les yeux,

Un cri part; et soudain voilà que par la plaine
Et l’homme et le cheval , emportés, hors d’haleine,
Sur les sables mouvants,
Seuls, emplissant de bruit un tourbillon de poudre
Pareil au nuage noir où serpente la foudre,
Volent avec les vents!

Ils vont. Dans les vallons comme un orage ils passent,
Comme ces ouragans qui dans les monts s’entassent,
Comme un globe de feu;
Puis déjà ne sont plus qu’un point noir dans la brume,

Puis s’effacent dans l’air comme un flocon d’écume
Au vaste océan bleu.

Ils vont. L’espace est grand. Dans le désert immense,
Dans l’horizon sans fin qui toujours recommence,
Ils se plongent tous deux.
Leur course comme un vol les emporte, et grands chênes,
Villes et tours, monts noirs liés en longues chaînes,
Tout chancelle autour d’eux.

Et si l’infortuné, dont la tête se brise,
Se débat, le cheval, qui devance la brise,
D’un bond plus effrayé,
S’enfonce au désert vaste, aride, infranchissable,
Qui devant eux s’étend, avec ses plis de sable,
Comme un manteau rayé.

Tout vacille et se peint de couleurs inconnues:
Il voit courir les bois, courir les larges nues,
Le vieux donjon détruit,
Les monts dont un rayon baigne les intervalles;
Il voit; et des troupeaux de fumantes cavales
Le suivent à grand bruit!

Et le ciel, où déjà les pas du soir s’allongent,
Avec ses océans de nuages où plongent
Des nuages encor,
Et son soleil qui fend leurs vagues de sa proue,
Sur son front ébloui tourne comme une roue
De marbre aux veines d’or!

Son oeil s’égare et luit, sa chevelure traîne,
Sa tête pend; son sang rougit la jaune arène,
Les buissons épineux;
Sur ses membres gonflés la corde se replie,
Et comme un long serpent resserre et multiplie
Sa morsure et ses noeuds.

Le cheval, qui ne sent ni le mors ni la selle,
Toujours fuit, et toujours son sang coule et ruisselle,
Sa chair tombe en lambeaux;
Hélas! voici déjà qu’aux cavales ardentes
Qui le suivaient, dressant leurs crinières pendantes,
Succèdent les corbeaux!

Les corbeaux, le grand-duc à l’oeil rond, qui s’effraie,
L’aigle effaré des champs de bataille, et l’orfraie,
Monstre au jour inconnu,
Les obliques hiboux, et le grand vautour fauve
Qui fouille au flanc des morts où son col rouge et chauve
Plonge comme un bras nu!

Tous viennent élargir la funèbre volée;
Tous quittent pour le suivre et l’yeuse isolée,
Et les nids du manoir.
Lui, sanglant, éperdu, sourd à leurs cris de joie,
Demande en les voyant qui donc là-haut déploie
Ce grand éventail noir.

La nuit descend lugubre, et sans robe étoilée.
L’essaim s’acharne, et suit, tel qu’une meute ailée,
Le voyageur fumant.
Entre le ciel et lui, comme un tourbillon sombre
Il les voit, puis les perd, et les entend dans l’ombre
Voler confusément.

Enfin, après trois jours d’une course insensée,
Après avoir franchi fleuves à l’eau glacée,
Steppes, forêts, déserts,
Le cheval tombe aux cris de mille oiseaux de proie,
Et son ongle de fer sur la pierre qu’il broie
Éteint ses quatre éclairs.

Voilà l’infortuné, gisant, nu, misérable,

Tout tacheté de sang, plus rouge que l’érable
Dans la saison des fleurs.
Le nuage d’oiseaux sur lui tourne et s’arrête;
Maint bec ardent aspire à ronger dans sa tête
Ses yeux brûlés de pleurs.

Eh bien! ce condamné qui hurle et qui se traîne,
Ce cadavre vivant, les tribus de l’Ukraine
Le feront prince un jour.
Un jour, semant les champs de morts sans sépultures,
Il dédommagera par de larges pâtures
L’orfraie et le vautour.

Sa sauvage grandeur naîtra de son supplice.
Un jour, des vieux hetmans il ceindra la pelisse,
Grand à l’oeil ébloui;
Et quand il passera, ces peuples de la tente,
Prosternés, enverront la fanfare éclatante
Bondir autour de lui!

II

Ainsi, lorsqu’un mortel, sur qui son dieu s’étale,
S’est vu lier vivant sur ta croupe fatale,
Génie, ardent coursier,
En vain il lutte, hélas! tu bondis, tu l’emportes
Hors du monde réel dont tu brises les portes
Avec tes pieds d’acier!

Tu franchis avec lui déserts, cimes chenues
Des vieux monts, et les mers, et, par delà les nues,
De sombres régions;
Et mille impurs esprits que ta course réveille
Autour du voyageur, insolente merveille,
Pressent leurs légions!

Il traverse d’un vol, sur tes ailes de flamme,

Tous les champs du possible, et les mondes de l’âme;
Boit au fleuve éternel;
Dans la nuit orageuse ou la nuit étoilée,
Sa chevelure, aux crins des comètes mêlée,
Flamboie au front du ciel.

Les six lunes d’Herschel, l’anneau du vieux Saturne,
Le pôle, arrondissant une aurore nocturne
Sur son front boréal,
Il voit tout; et pour lui ton vol, que rien ne lasse,
De ce monde sans borne à chaque instant déplace
L’horizon idéal.

Qui peut savoir, hormis les démons et les anges,
Ce qu’il souffre à te suivre, et quels éclairs étranges
À ses yeux reluiront,
Comme il sera brûlé d’ardentes étincelles,
Hélas! et dans la nuit combien de froides ailes
Viendront battre son front?

Il crie épouvanté, tu poursuis implacable.
Pâle, épuisé, béant, sous ton vol qui l’accable
Il ploie avec effroi;
Chaque pas que tu fais semble creuser sa tombe.
Enfin le terme arrive... il court, il vole, il tombe,
Et se relève roi!

XXXV

LE DANUBE EN COLÈRE

Admonet, et magna testatur voce per umbras, VIRGILE.

Belgrade et Semlin sont en guerre.
Dans son lit, paisible naguère,
Le vieillard Danube leur père
S’éveille au bruit de leur canon.
Il doute s’il rêve, il tressaille,
Puis entend gronder la bataille,
Et frappe dans ses mains d’écaille,
Et les appelle par leur nom.

“ Allons! la turque et la chrétienne!
Semlin! Belgrade! qu’avez-vous?
On ne peut, le ciel me soutienne!
Dormir un siècle, sans que vienne
Vous éveiller d’un bruit jaloux
Belgrade ou Semlin en courroux!

“ Hiver, été, printemps, automne,
Toujours votre canon qui tonne!
Bercé du courant monotone,
Je sommeillais dans mes roseaux;
Et, comme des louves marines
Jettent l’onde de leurs narines,
Voilà vos longues couleuvrines
Qui soufflent du feu sur mes eaux!

“ Ce sont des sorcières oisives
Qui vous mirent, pour rire un jour,
Face à face sur mes deux rives,
Comme au même plat deux convives,
Comme au front de la même tour

Une aire d’aigle, un nid d’autour.

“ Quoi! ne pouvez-vous vivre ensemble,
Mes filles? faut-il que je tremble
Du destin qui vous rassemble
Que pour vous haïr de plus près,
Quand vous pourriez, soeurs pacifiques,
Mirer dans mes eaux magnifiques,
Semlin, tes noirs clochers gothiques,
Belgrade, tes blancs minarets!

“ Mon flot, qui dans l’océan tombe,
Vous sépare en vain, large et clair;
Du haut du château qui surplombe
Vous vous unissez, et la bombe,
Entre vous courbant son éclair,
Vous trace un pont de feu dans l’air.

“ Trêve! taisez-vous, les deux villes!
Je m’ennuie aux guerres civiles.
Nous sommes vieux, soyons tranquilles.
Dormons à l’ombre des bouleaux.
Trêve à ces débats de familles!
Hé! sans le bruit de vos bastilles,
N’ai-je donc point assez, mes filles,
De l’assourdissement des flots?

“ Une croix, un croissant fragile
Changent en enfer ce beau lieu?
Vous échangez la bombe agile
Pour le koran et l’évangile?
C’est perdre le bruit et le feu:
Je le sais, moi qui fus un dieu!

“ Vos dieux m’ont chassé de leur sphère
Et dégradé, c’est leur affaire!
L’ombre est le bien que je préfère,

Pourvu qu’ils gardent leurs palais,
Et ne viennent pas sur mes plages
Déracines mes verts feuillages,
Et m’écraser mes coquillages
Sous leurs bombes et leurs boulets!

“ De leurs abominables cultes
Ces inventions sont le fruit.
De mon temps point de ces tumultes.
Si la pierre des catapultes
Battait les cités jour et nuit,
C’était sans fumée et sans bruit.

“ Voyez Ulm, votre soeur jumelle:
Tenez-vous en repos comme elle.
Que le fil des rois se démêle,
Tournez vos fuseaux, et riez.
Voyez Bude, votre voisine;
Voyez Dristra la sarrasine!
Que dirait l’Etna si Messine
Faisait tout ce bruit à ses pieds?

“ Semlin est la plus querelleuse:
Elle a toujours les premiers torts.
Croyez-vous que mon eau houleuse,
Suivant sa pente rocailleuse,
N’ait rien à faire entre ses bords
Qu’à porter à l’Euxin vos morts?

“ Vos mortiers ont tant de fumée
Qu’il fait nuit dans ma grotte aimée,
D’éclats d’obus toujours semée!
Du jour j’ai perdu le tableau;
Le soir, la vapeur de leur bouche
Me couvre d’une ombre farouche,
Quand je cherche à voir de ma couche
Les étoiles à travers l’eau.

“ Soeurs, à vous cribler de blessures
Espérez-vous un grand renom?
Vos palais deviendront masures.
Ah! qu’en vos noires embrasures
La guerre se taise, ou sinon
J’éteindrai, moi, votre canon.

“ Car je suis le Danube immense.
Malheur à vous, si je commence!
Je vous souffre ici par clémence.
Si je voulais, de leur prison,
Mes flots lâchés dans les campagnes,
Emportant vous et vos compagnes,
Comme une chaîne de montagnes
Se lèveraient à l’horizon! “

Certe, on peut parler de la sorte
Quand c’est au canon qu’on répond;
Quand des rois on baigne la porte,
Lorsqu’on est Danube, et qu’on porte,
Comme l’Euxin et l’Hellespont,
De grands vaisseaux au triple pont;

Lorsqu’on ronge cent ponts de pierres,
Qu’on traverse les huit Bavières,
Qu’on reçoit soixante rivières
Et qu’on les dévore en fuyant;
Qu’on a, comme une mer, sa houle;
Quand sur le globe on se déroule
Comme un serpent, et quand on coule
De l’occident à l’orient!

XXXVI

RÊVERIE

Lo giorno se n’andava, e l’aer bruno Toglieva gli animai che sono’n terra Dalle fatiche loro. DANTE.

Oh! laissez-moi! c’est l’heure où l’horizon qui fume
Cache un front inégal sous un cercle de brume;
L’heure où l’astre géant rougit et disparaît.
Le grand bois jaunissant dore seul la colline:
On dirait qu’en ces jours où l’automne décline,
Le soleil et la pluie ont rouillé la forêt.

Oh! qui fera surgir soudain, qui fera naître,
Là-bas, - tandis que seul je rêve à la fenêtre
Et que l’ombre s’amasse au fond du corridor, -
Quelque ville mauresque, éclatante, inouïe,
Qui, comme la fusée en gerbe épanouie,
Déchire ce brouillard avec ses flèches d’or!

Qu’elle vienne inspirer, ranimer, ô génies!
Mes chansons, comme un ciel d’automne rembrunies,
Et jeter dans mes yeux son magique reflet,
Et longtemps, s’éteignant en rumeurs étouffées,
Avec les mille tours de ses palais de fées,
Brumeuse, denteler l’horizon violet!

XXXVII

EXTASE

Et j’entendis une grande voix. Apocalypse.

J’étais seul près des flots, par une nuit d’étoiles.
Pas un nuage aux cieux, sur les mers pas de voiles.
    Mes yeux plongeaient plus loin que le monde réel.
    Et les bois, et les monts, et toute la nature,
    Semblaient interroger dans un confus murmure
    Les flots des mers, les feux du ciel.

    Et les étoiles d’or, légions infinies,
    À voix haute, à voix basse, avec mille harmonies,
    Disaient, en inclinant leurs couronnes de feu;
    Et les flots bleus, que rien ne gouverne et n’arrête,
    Disaient, en recourbant l’écume de leur crête:
    — C’est le Seigneur, le Seigneur Dieu!

XXXVIII

LE POÈTE AU CALIFE

Tous les habitants de la terre sont devant lui comme un néant; il fait tout ce qui lui plaît;

et nul ne peut résister à sa main puissante, ni lui dire: Pourquoi avez-vous fait ainsi? DANIEL.

Ô sultan Noureddin, calife aimé de Dieu!
Tu gouvernes, seigneur, l’empire du milieu,
De la mer Rouge au fleuve Jaune.
Les rois des nations, vers ta face tournés,
Pavent, silencieux, de leurs fronts prosternés
Le chemin qui mène à ton trône.

Ton sérail est très grand, tes jardins sont très beaux.
Tes femmes ont des yeux vifs comme des flambeaux,
Qui pour toi seul percent leurs voiles.
Lorsque, astre impérial, aux peuples pleins d’effroi
Tu luis, tes trois cents fils brillent autour de toi
Comme ton cortège d’étoiles.

Ton front porte une aigrette et ceint le turban vert.
Tu peux voir folâtrer dans leur bain, entrouvert
Sous la fenêtre où tu te penches,
Les femmes de Madras plus douces qu’un parfum,
Et les filles d’Alep qui sur leur beau sein brun
Ont des colliers de perles blanches.

Ton sabre large et nu semble en ta main grandir.
Toujours dans la bataille on le voit resplendir,
Sans trouver turban qui le rompe,
Au point où la mêlée a de plus noirs détours,
Où les grands éléphants, entrechoquant leurs tours,
Prennent des chevaux dans leur trompe.

Une fée est cachée en tout ce que tu vois.
Quand tu parles, calife, on dirait que ta voix
Descend d’un autre monde au nôtre;
Dieu lui-même t’admire, et de félicités
Emplit la coupe d’or que tes jours enchantés,
Joyeux, se passent l’un à l’autre.

Mais souvent dans ton coeur, radieux Noureddin,
Une triste pensée apparaît, et soudain
Glace ta grandeur taciturne:
Telle en plein jour, parfois, sous un soleil de feu,
La lune, astre des morts, blanche au fond d’un ciel bleu,
Montre à demi son front nocturne.

XXXIX

BOUNABERDI

Grand comme le monde.

Souvent Bounaberdi, sultan des Francs d’Europe,
Que, comme un noir manteau, le semoun enveloppe,
Monte, géant lui-même, au front d’un mont géant,
D’où son regard, errant sur le sable et sur l’onde,
Embrasse d’un coup d’oeil les deux moitiés du monde,
Gisantes à ses pieds dans l’abîme béant.

Il est seul et debout sur ce sublime faîte.
À sa droite couché, le désert qui le fête
D’un nuage de poudre importune ses yeux;
À sa gauche, la mer, dont jadis il fut l’hôte,
Élève jusqu’à lui sa voix profonde et haute,
Comme aux pieds de son maître aboie un chien joyeux.

Et le vieil empereur, que tour à tour réveille
Ce nuage à ses yeux, ce bruit à son oreille,
Rêve, et, comme à l’amante on voit songer l’amant,
Croit que c’est une armée, invisible et sans nombre,
Qui fait cette poussière et ce bruit pour son ombre,
Et sous l’horizon gris passe éternellement!

PRIÈRE

Oh! quand tu reviendras rêver sur la montagne,
Bounaberdi! regarde un peu dans la campagne
Ma tente qui blanchit dans les sables grondants,
Car je suis libre et pauvre, un Arabe du Caire,
Et quand j’ai dit: Allah! mon bon cheval de guerre
Vole, et sous sa paupière a deux charbons ardents!

XL

LUI

J’étais géant alors, et haut de cent coudées. BUONAPARTE.

I

Toujours lui! lui partout! - ou brûlante ou glacée,
Son image sans cesse ébranle ma pensée.
Il verse à mon esprit le souffle créateur.
Je tremble, et dans ma bouche abondent les paroles
Quand son nom gigantesque, entouré d’auréoles,
Se dresse dans mon vers de toute sa grandeur.

Là, je le vois, guidant l’obus aux bonds rapides;
Là, massacrant le peuple au nom des régicides;
Là, soldat, aux tribuns arrachant leurs pouvoirs;
Là, consul jeune et fier, amaigri par des veilles
Que des rêves d’empire emplissaient de merveilles,
Pâle sous ses longs cheveux noirs.

Puis, empereur puissant, dont la tête s’incline,
Gouvernant un combat du haut de la colline,
Promettant une étoile à ses soldats joyeux,
Faisant signe aux canons qui vomissent les flammes,
De son âme à la guerre armant six cent mille âmes,
Grave et serein, avec un éclair dans les yeux.

Puis, pauvre prisonnier, qu’on raille et qu’on tourmente,
Croisant ses bras oisifs sur son sein qui fermente,
En proie aux geôliers vils comme un vil criminel,
Vaincu, chauve, courbant son front noir de nuages,
Promenant sur un roc où passent les orages
Sa pensée, orage éternel.

Qu’il est grand, là surtout! quand, puissance brisée,
Des porte-clefs anglais misérable risée,
Au sacre du malheur il retrempe ses droits;
Tient au bruit de ses pas deux mondes en haleine,
Et mourant de l’exil, gêné dans Sainte-Hélène,
Manque d’air dans la cage où l’exposent les rois!

Qu’il est grand à cette heure, où, prêt à voir Dieu même,
Son oeil qui s’éteint roule une larme suprême!
Il évoque à sa mort sa vieille armée en deuil,
Se plaint à ses guerriers d’expirer solitaire,
Et, prenant pour linceul son manteau militaire,
Du lit de camp passe au cercueil!

II

À Rome, où du Sénat hésite le conclave,
À l’Elbe, aux monts blanchis de neige ou noirs de lave,
Au menaçant Kremlin, à l’Alhambra riant,
Il est partout! - Au Nil je le retrouve encore.
L’Égypte resplendit des feux de son aurore;
Son astre impérial se lève à l’orient.

Vainqueur, enthousiaste, éclatant de prestiges,
Prodige, il étonna la terre des prodiges.
Les vieux scheiks vénéraient l’émir jeune et prudent;
Le peuple redoutait ses armes inouïes;
Sublime, il apparut aux tribus éblouies
Comme un Mahomet d’occident.

Leur féerie a déjà réclamé son histoire.
La tente de l’Arabe est pleine de sa gloire.
Tout Bédouin libre était son hardi compagnon;
Les petits enfants, l’oeil tourné vers nos rivages,
Sur un tambour français règlent leurs pas sauvages,
Et les ardents chevaux hennissent à son nom.

Parfois il vient, porté sur l’ouragan numide,
Prenant pour piédestal la grande pyramide,
Contempler les déserts, sablonneux océans;
Là, son ombre, éveillant le sépulcre sonore,
Comme pour la bataille y ressuscite encore
Les quarante siècles géants.

Il dit: debout! soudain chaque siècle se lève,
Ceux-ci portant le sceptre et ceux-là ceints du glaive,
Satrapes, pharaons, mages, peuple glacé.
Immobiles, poudreux, muets, sa voix les compte;
Tous semblent, adorant son front qui les surmonte,
Faire à ce roi des temps une cour du passé.

Ainsi tout, sous les pas de l’homme ineffaçable,
Tout devient monument; il passe sur le sable,
Mais qu’importe qu’Assur de ses flots soit couvert,
Que l’Aquilon sans cesse y fatigue son aile,
Son pied colossal laisse une trace éternelle
Sur le front mouvant du désert.

III

Histoire, poésie, il joint du pied vos cimes.
Éperdu, je ne puis dans ces mondes sublimes
Remuer rien de grand sans toucher à son nom;
Oui, quand tu m’apparais, pour le culte ou le blâme,
Les chants volent pressés sur mes lèvres de flamme,
Napoléon! soleil dont je suis le Memnon!

Tu domines notre âge; ange ou démon, qu’importe!
Ton aigle dans son vol, haletants, nous emporte.
L’oeil même qui te fuit te retrouve partout.
Toujours dans nos tableaux tu jettes ta grande ombre;
Toujours Napoléon, éblouissant et sombre,
Sur le seuil du siècle est debout.

Ainsi, quand du Vésuve explorant le domaine,
De Naple à Portici l’étranger se promène,
Lorsqu’il trouble, rêveur, de ses pas importuns,
Ischia, de ses fleurs embaumant l’onde heureuse
Dont le bruit, comme un chant de sultane amoureuse,
Semble une voix qui vole au milieu des parfums;

Qu’il hante de Paestum l’auguste colonnade;
Qu’il écoute à Pouzzol la vive sérénade
Chantant la tarentelle au pied d’un mur toscan;
Qu’il éveille en passant cette cité momie,
Pompéi, corps gisant d’une ville endormie,
Saisie un jour par le volcan;

Qu’il erre au Pausilippe avec la barque agile
D’où le brun marinier chante Tasse à Virgile;
Toujours, sous l’arbre vert, sur les lits de gazon,
Toujours il voit, du sein des mers ou des prairies,
Du haut des caps, du bord des presqu’îles fleuries,
Toujours le noir géant qui fume à l’horizon!

XLI

NOVEMBRE

Je lui dis: la rose du jardin, comme tu sais, dure peu; et la saison des roses est bien vite écoulée. SADI.

Quand l’Automne, abrégeant les jours qu’elle dévore,
Éteint leurs soirs de flamme et glace leur aurore,
Quand Novembre de brume inonde le ciel bleu,
Que le bois tourbillonne et qu’il neige des feuilles,
Ô ma muse! en mon âme alors tu te recueilles,
Comme un enfant transi qui s’approche du feu.

Devant le sombre hiver de Paris qui bourdonne,
Ton soleil d’orient s’éclipse et s’abandonne,
Ton beau rêve d’Asie avorte, et tu ne vois,
Sous tes yeux, que la rue au bruit accoutumée,
Brouillard à ta fenêtre, et longs fleuves de fumée
Qui baignent en fuyant l’angle noirci des toits.

Alors s’en vont en foule et sultans et sultanes,
Pyramides, palmiers, galères capitanes,
Et le tigre vorace, et le chameau frugal,
Djinns au vol furieux, danses des bayadères,
L’Arabe qui se penche au cou des dromadaires,
Et la fauve girafe au galop inégal!

Alors, éléphants blancs chargés de femmes brunes,
Cités aux dômes d’or où les mois sont des lunes,
Imans de Mahomet, mages, prêtres de Bel,
Tout fuit, tout disparaît: - plus de minaret maure,
Plus de sérail fleuri, plus d’ardente Gomorrhe
Qui jette un reflet rouge au front noir de Babel!

C’est Paris, c’est l’hiver. - À ta chanson confuse

Odalisques, émirs, pachas, tout se refuse.
Dans ce vaste Paris le klephte est à l’étroit;
Le Nil déborderait; les roses du Bengale
Frissonnent dans ces champs où se tait la cigale;
À ce soleil brumeux les Péris auraient froid.

Pleurant ton Orient, alors, muse ingénue,
Tu viens à moi, honteuse, et seule, et presque nue.
— N’as-tu pas, me dis-tu, dans ton coeur jeune encor
Quelque chose à chanter, ami? car je m’ennuie
À voir ta blanche vitre où ruisselle la pluie,
Moi qui dans mes vitraux avais un soleil d’or!

Puis, tu prends mes deux mains dans tes mains diaphanes,
Et nous nous asseyons, et loin des yeux profanes,
Entre mes souvenirs je t’offre les plus doux,
Mon jeune âge, et ses jeux, et l’école mutine,
Et les serments sans fin de la vierge enfantine,
Aujourd’hui mère heureuse aux bras d’un autre époux.

Je te raconte comment, aux Feuillantines,
Jadis tintaient pour moi les cloches argentines;
Comment, jeune et sauvage, errait ma liberté,
Et qu’à dix ans, parfois, resté seul à la brune,
Rêveur, es yeux cherchaient les deux yeux de la lune,
Comme la fleur qui s’ouvre aux tièdes nuits d’été.

Puis tu me vois du pied pressant l’escarpolette
Qui d’un vieux marronnier fait crier le squelette,
Et vole, de ma mère éternelle terreur!
Puis je te dis les noms de mes amis d’Espagne,
Madrid, et son collège où l’ennui t’accompagne,
Et nos combats d’enfants pour le grand empereur!

Puis encor mon bon père, ou quelque jeune fille
Morte à quinze ans, à l’âge où l’oeil s’allume et brille.
Mais surtout tu te plais aux premières amours,

Frais papillons dont l’aile, en fuyant rajeunie,
Sous le doigt qui la fixe est si vite ternie,
Essaim doré qui n’a qu’un jour dans tous nos jours!

LES FEUILLES D’AUTOMNE

‘Autumn Leaves’ is a collection of poems published in 1831. It includes in particular six well known poems called ‘Soleils couchants’.

TABLE DES MATIERES

I
II
III
IV
V
VI
VII
VIII
IX
X
XI
XII
XIII
XIV
XV
XVI
XVII
XVIII
XIX
XX
XXI
XXII
XXIII
XXIV
XXV
XXVI
XXVII
XXVIII
XXIX
XXX
XXXI
XXXII
XXXIII
XXXIV

XXXV
XXXVI
XXXVII
XXXVIII
XXXIX
XL

LES FEUILLES D’AUTOMNE

Préface

Le moment politique est grave: personne ne le conteste, et l’auteur de ce livre moins que personne. Au dedans, toutes les solutions sociales remises en question; toutes les membrures du corps politique tordues, refondues ou reforgées dans la fournaise d’une révolution, sur l’enclume sonore des journaux; le vieux mot pairie, jadis presque aussi reluisant que le mot royauté, qui se transforme et change de sens; le retentissement perpétuel de la tribune sur la presse et de la presse sur la tribune; l’émeute qui fait la morte. Au dehors, çà et là , sur la face de l’Europe, des peuples tout entiers qu’on assassine, qu’on déporte en masse ou qu’on met aux fers, l’Irlande dont on fait un cimetière, l’Italie dont on fait un bagne, la Sibérie qu’on peuple avec la Pologne; partout d’ailleurs, dans les états même les plus paisibles, quelque chose de vermoulu qui se disloque, et, pour les oreilles attentives, le bruit sourd que font les révolutions, encore enfouies dans la sape, en poussant sous tous les royaumes de l’Europe leurs galeries souterraines, ramifications de la grande révolution centrale dont le cratère est Paris. Enfin, au dehors comme au dedans, les croyances en lutte, les consciences en travail; de nouvelles religions, chose sérieuse! qui bégayent des formules, mauvaises d’un côté, bonnes de l’autre; les vieilles religions qui font peau neuve; Rome, la cité de la foi, qui va se redresser peut-être à la hauteur de Paris, la cité de l’intelligence; les théories, les imaginations et les systèmes aux prises de toutes parts avec le vrai; la question de l’avenir déjà explorée et sondée comme celle du passé. Voilà où nous en sommes au mois de novembre 1831.

Sans doute, en un pareil moment, au milieu d’un si orageux conflit de toutes les choses et de tous les hommes, en présence de ce concile tumultueux de toutes les idées, de toutes les croyances, de toutes les erreurs, occupées à rédiger et à débattre en discussion publique la formule de l’humanité au dix-neuvième siècle, c’est folie de publier un volume de pauvres vers désintéressés. Folie! pourquoi?

L’art, et l’auteur de ce livre n’a jamais varié dans cette pensée, l’art a sa loi qu’il suit, comme le reste a la sienne. Parce que la terre tremble, est-ce une raison pour qu’il ne marche pas? Voyez le seizième siècle. C’est une immense époque pour la société humaine, mais c'est une immense époque pour l'art. C'est le passage de l'unité religieuse et politique à la liberté de conscience et de cité, de l'orthodoxie au schisme, de la discipline à l'examen, de la grande synthèse sacerdotale qui a fait le moyen-âge à l'analyse philosophique qui va le dissoudre; c'est tout cela; et c'est aussi le tournant, magnifique et éblouissant de perspectives sans nombre, de l'art gothique à l'art classique. Ce n'est partout, sur le sol de la vieille Europe, que guerres religieuses, guerres civiles, guerres pour un dogme, guerres pour un sacrement, guerres pour une idée, de peuple à peuple, de roi à roi, d'homme à homme, que cliquetis d'épées toujours tirées et de docteurs toujours irrités, que commotions politiques, que chutes et écroulements des choses anciennes, que bruyant et sonore avènement des nouveautés; en même temps, ce n'est dans l'art que chefs-d'œuvre. On convoque la diète de Worms, mais on peint la chapelle Sixtine. Il y a Luther, mais il y a Michel-Ange.

Ce n'est donc pas une raison, parce que aujourd'hui d'autres vieilleries croulent à leur tour autour de nous, et remarquons en passant que Luther est dans les vieilleries et que Michel-Ange n'y est pas, ce n'est pas une raison parce qu'à leur tour aussi d'autres nouveautés surgissent dans ces décombres, pour que l'art, cette chose éternelle, ne continue pas de verdoyer et de florir entre la ruine d'une société qui n'est plus et l'ébauche d'une société qui n'est pas encore.

Parce que la tribune aux harangues regorge de Démosthènes, parce que les rostres sont encombrés de Cicérons, parce que nous avons trop de Mirabeaux, ce n'est pas une raison pour que nous n'ayons pas, dans quelque coin obscur, un poëte. Il est donc tout simple, quel que soit le tumulte de la place publique, que l'art persiste, que l'art s'entête, que l'art se reste fidèle à lui-même, tenax propositi. Car la poésie ne s'adresse pas seulement au sujet de telle monarchie, au sénateur de telle oligarchie, au citoyen de telle république, au natif de telle nation; elle s'adresse à l'homme, à l'homme tout entier. A l'adolescent, elle parle de l'amour; au père, de la famille; au vieillard, du passé; et, quoi qu'on fasse, quelles que soient les révolutions futures, soit qu'elles prennent les sociétés caduques aux entrailles, soit qu'elles leur écorchent seulement l'épiderme, à travers tous les changements politiques possibles, il y aura toujours des enfants, des mères, des jeunes filles, des vieillards, des hommes enfin, qui aimeront, qui se réjouiront, qui souffriront. C'est à eux que va la poésie. Les révolutions, ces glorieux changements d’âge de l’humanité, les révolutions transforment tout, excepté le cœur humain. Le cœur humain est comme la terre; on peut semer, on peut planter, on peut bâtir ce qu’on veut à sa surface; mais il n’en continuera pas moins à produire ses verdures, ses fleurs, ses fruits naturels; mais jamais pioches ni sondes ne le troubleront à de certaines profondeurs; mais, de même qu’elle sera toujours la terre, il sera toujours le cœur humain; la base de l’art, comme elle de la nature.

Pour que l’art fût détruit, il faudrait donc commencer par détruire le cœur humain.

Ici se présente une objection d’une autre espèce: - Sans contredit, dans le moment même le plus critique d’une crise politique, un pur ouvrage d’art peut apparaître à l’horizon; mais toutes les passions, toutes les attentions, toutes les intelligences ne seront-elles pas trop absorbées par l’œuvre sociale qu’elles élaborent en commun, pour que le lever de cette sereine étoile de poésie fasse tourner les yeux à la foule? Ceci n’est plus qu’une question de second ordre, la question de succès, la question du libraire et non du poëte. Le fait répond d’ordinaire oui ou non aux questions de ce genre, et, au fond, il importe peu. Sans doute il y a des moments où les affaires matérielles de la société vont mal, où le courant ne les porte pas, où, accrochées à tous les accidents politiques qui se rencontrent chemin faisant, elles se gênent, s’engorgent, se barrent et s’embarrassent les unes dans les autres. Mais qu’est-ce que cela fait? D’ailleurs, parce que le vent, comme on dit, n’est pas à la poésie, ce n’est pas un motif pour que la poésie ne prenne pas son vol. Tout au contraire des vaisseaux, les oiseaux ne volent bien que contre le vent. Or la poésie tient de l’oiseau. Musa ales, dit un ancien.

Et c’est pour cela même qu’elle est plus belle et plus forte, risquée au milieu des orages politiques. Quand on sent la poésie d’une certaine faon, on l’aime mieux habitant la montagne et la ruine, planant sur l’avalanche, bâtissant son aire dans la tempête, qu’en fuite vers un perpétuel printemps. On l’aime mieux aigle qu’hirondelle. Hâtons-nous de déclarer ici, car il en est peut-être temps, que dans tout ce que l’auteur de ce livre vient de dire pour expliquer l’opportunité d’un volume de véritable poésie qui apparaîtrait dans un moment où il y a tant de prose dans les esprits, et à cause de cette prose même, il est très loin d’avoir voulu faire la moindre allusion à son propre ouvrage. Il en sent l’insuffisance et l’indigence tout le premier. L’artiste, comme l’auteur le comprend, qui prouve la vitalité de l’art au milieu d’une révolution, le poëte qui fait acte de poésie entre deux émeutes, est un grand homme, un génie, un œil comme dit admirablement la métaphore grecque. L’auteur n’a jamais prétendu à la splendeur de ces titres, au-dessus desquels il n’y a rien. Non; s’il publie en ce mois de novembre 1831 Les Feuilles d’Automne, c’est que le contraste entre la tranquillité de ces vers et l’agitation fébrile des esprits lui a paru curieux à voir au grand jour. Il ressent, en abandonnant ce livre inutile au flot populaire qui emporte tant d’autres choses meilleures, un peu de ce mélancolique plaisir qu’on éprouve à jeter une fleur dans un torrent, et à voir ce qu’elle devient.

Qu’on lui passe une image un peu ambitieuse, le volcan d’une révolution était ouvert devant ses yeux. Le volcan l’a tenté. Il s’y précipite. Il sait fort bien du reste qu’Empédocle n’est pas un grand homme, et qu’il n’est resté de lui que sa chaussure.

II laisse donc aller ce livre à sa destinée, quelle qu’elle soit, liber, ibis in urbem, et demain il se tournera d’un autre côté. Qu’est-ce d’ailleurs que ces pages qu’il livre ainsi, au hasard, au premier vent qui en voudra? Des feuilles tombées, des feuilles mortes, comme toutes feuilles d’automne. Ce n’est point là de la poésie de tumulte et de bruit; ce sont des vers sereins et paisibles, des vers comme tout le monde en fait ou en rêve, des vers de la famille, du foyer domestique, de la vie privée; des vers de l’intérieur de l’âme. C’est un regard mélancolique et résigné, jeté çà et là sur ce qui est, surtout sur ce qui a été. C’est l’écho de ces pensées, souvent inexprimables, qu’éveillent confusément dans notre esprit les mille objets de la création qui souffrent ou qui languissent autour de nous, une fleur qui s’en va, une étoile qui tombe, un soleil qui se couche, une église sans toit, une rue pleine d’herbe; ou l’arrivée imprévue d’un ami de collège presque oublié, quoique toujours aimé dans un repli obscur du cœur; ou la contemplation de ces hommes à volonté forte qui brisent le destin ou se font briser par lui; ou le passage d’un de ces êtres faibles qui ignorent l’avenir, tantôt un enfant, tantôt un roi. Ce sont enfin, sur la vanité des projets et des espérances, sur l’amour à vingt ans, sur l’amour à trente ans, sur ce qu’il y a de triste dans le bonheur, sur cette infinité de choses douloureuses dont se composent nos années, ce sont de ces élégies comme le cœur du poëte en laisse sans cesse écouler par toutes les fêlures que lui font les secousses de la vie. Il y a deux mille ans que Térence disait:

Plenus rimarum sum; hac atque illac

Perfluo.

C’est maintenant le lieu de répondre à la question des personnes qui ont bien voulu demander à l’auteur si les deux ou trois odes inspirées par les événements contemporains, qu’il a publiées à différentes époques depuis dix-huit mois, seraient comprises dans Les Feuilles d’automne. Non. Il n’y a point ici place pour cette poésie qu’on appelle politique et qu’il voudrait qu’on appelât historique. Ces poésies véhémentes et passionnées auraient troublé le calme et l’unité de ce volume. Elles font d’ailleurs partie d’un recueil de poésie politique, que l’auteur tient en réserve. Il attend pour le publier un moment plus littéraire.

Ce que sera ce recueil, quelles sympathies et quelles antipathies l’inspireront, on peut en juger, si l’on en est curieux, par la pièce XL du livre que nous mettons au jour. Cependant, dans la position indépendante, désintéressée et laborieuse où l’auteur a voulu rester, dégagé de toute haine comme de toute reconnaissance politique, ne devant rien à aucun de ceux qui sont puissants aujourd’hui, prêt à se laisser reprendre tout ce qu’on aurait pu lui laisser par indifférence ou par oubli, il croit avoir le droit de dire d’avance que ses vers seront ceux d’un homme honnête, simple et sérieux, qui veut toute liberté, toute amélioration, tout progrès, et en même temps toute précaution, tout ménagement et toute mesure; qui n’a plus, il est vrai, la même opinion qu’il y a dix ans sur ces choses variables qui constituent les questions politiques, mais qui, dans ses changements de conviction, s’est toujours laissé conseiller par sa conscience, jamais par son intérêt. Il répétera en outre ici ce qu’il a déjà dit ailleurs et ce qu’il ne se lassera jamais de dire et de prouver: que, quelle que soit sa partialité passionnée pour les peuples dans l’immense querelle qui s’agite au dix-neuvième siècle entre eux et les rois, jamais il n’oubliera quelles ont été les opinions, les crédulités, et même les erreurs de sa première jeunesse. Il n’attendra jamais qu’on lui rappelle qu’il a été, à dix-sept ans, stuartiste, jacobite et cavalier; qu’il a presque aimé la Vendée avant la France; que si son père a été un des premiers volontaires de la grande république, sa mère, pauvre fille de quinze ans, en fuite à travers le Bocage, a été une brigande, comme madame de Bonchamp et madame de Larochejaquelein. Il n’insultera pas la race tombée, parce qu’il est de ceux qui ont eu foi en elle et qui, chacun pour sa part et selon son importance, avaient cru pouvoir répondre d’elle à la France. D’ailleurs, quelles que soient les fautes, quels que soient même les crimes, c’est le cas plus que jamais de prononcer le nom de Bourbon avec précaution, gravité et respect, maintenant que le vieillard qui a été le roi n’a plus sur la tête que des cheveux blancs.

Paris, 24 novembre 1831.

I

Ce siècle avait deux ans!

Data fata secutus. DEVISE DES SAINT-JOHN

Ce siècle avait deux ans! Rome remplaçait Sparte,
Déjà Napoléon perçait sous Bonaparte,
Et du premier consul, déjà, par maint endroit,
Le front de l’empereur brisait le masque étroit.
Alors dans Besançon, vieille ville espagnole,
Jeté comme la graine au gré de l’air qui vole,
Naquit d’un sang breton et lorrain à la fois
Un enfant sans couleur, sans regard et sans voix;
Si débile qu’il fut, ainsi qu’une chimère,
Abandonné de tous, excepté de sa mère,
Et que son cou ployé comme un frêle roseau
Fit faire en même temps sa bière et son berceau.
Cet enfant que la vie effaçait de son livre,
Et qui n’avait pas même un lendemain à vivre,
C’est moi. -
Je vous dirai peut-être quelque jour
Quel lait pur, que de soins, que de voeux, que d’amour,
Prodigués pour ma vie en naissant condamnée,
M’ont fait deux fois l’enfant de ma mère obstinée,
Ange qui sur trois fils attachés à ses pas
Épandait son amour et ne mesurait pas!
Ô l’amour d’une mère! amour que nul n’oublie!
Pain merveilleux qu’un dieu partage et multiplie!
Table toujours servie au paternel foyer!
Chacun en a sa part et tous l’ont tout entier!

Je pourrai dire un jour, lorsque la nuit douteuse
Fera parler les soirs ma vieillesse conteuse,
Comment ce haut destin de gloire et de terreur
Qui remuait le monde aux pas de l’empereur,

Dans son souffle orageux m’emportant sans défense
À tous les vents de l’air fit flotter mon enfance.
Car, lorsque l’aquilon bat ses flots palpitants,
L’océan convulsif tourmente en même temps
Le navire à trois ponts qui tonne avec l’orage,
Et la feuille échappée aux arbres du rivage!

Maintenant, jeune encore et souvent éprouvé,
J’ai plus d’un souvenir profondément gravé,
Et l’on peut distinguer bien des choses passées
Dans ces plis de mon front que creusent mes pensées.
Certes, plus d’un vieillard sans flamme et sans cheveux,
Tombé de lassitude au bout de tous ses voeux,
Pâlirait s’il voyait, comme un gouffre dans l’onde,
Mon âme où ma pensée habite, comme un monde,
Tout ce que j’ai souffert, tout ce que j’ai tenté,
Tout ce qui m’a menti comme un fruit avorté,
Mon plus beau temps passé sans espoir qu’il renaisse,
Les amours, les travaux, les deuils de ma jeunesse,
Et quoiqu’encore à l’âge où l’avenir sourit,
Le livre de mon coeur à toute page écrit!

Si parfois de mon sein s’envolent mes pensées,
Mes chansons par le monde en lambeaux dispersées;
S’il me plaît de cacher l’amour et la douleur
Dans le coin d’un roman ironique et railleur;
Si j’ébranle la scène avec ma fantaisie,
Si j’entrechoque aux yeux d’une foule choisie
D’autres hommes comme eux, vivant tous à la fois
De mon souffle et parlant au peuple avec ma voix;
Si ma tête, fournaise où mon esprit s’allume,
Jette le vers d’airain qui bouillonne et qui fume
Dans le rythme profond, moule mystérieux
D’où sort la strophe ouvrant ses ailes dans les cieux;
C’est que l’amour, la tombe, et la gloire, et la vie,
L’onde qui fuit, par l’onde incessamment suivie,
Tout souffle, tout rayon, ou propice ou fatal,

Fait reluire et vibrer mon âme de cristal,
Mon âme aux mille voix, que le Dieu que j’adore
Mit au centre de tout comme un écho sonore!

D’ailleurs j’ai purement passé les jours mauvais,
Et je sais d’où je viens, si j’ignore où je vais.
L’orage des partis avec son vent de flamme
Sans en altérer l’onde a remué mon âme.
Rien d’immonde en mon coeur, pas de limon impur
Qui n’attendît qu’un vent pour en troubler l’azur!

Après avoir chanté, j’écoute et je contemple,
À l’empereur tombé dressant dans l’ombre un temple,
Aimant la liberté pour ses fruits, pour ses fleurs,
Le trône pour son droit, le roi pour ses malheurs;
Fidèle enfin au sang qu’ont versé dans ma veine
Mon père vieux soldat, ma mère vendéenne!

II

À M. LOUIS B.

Lyrnessi domus alta, solo Laurente sepulcrum. VIRGILE.

Louis, quand vous irez, dans un de vos voyages,
Voir Bordeaux, Pau, Bayonne et ses charmants rivages,
Toulouse la romaine où dans des jours meilleurs
J’ai cueilli tout enfant la poésie en fleurs,
Passez par Blois. - Et là, bien volontiers sans doute,
Laissez dans le logis vos compagnons de route,
Et tandis qu’ils joueront, riront ou dormiront,
Vous, avec vos pensers qui haussent votre front,
Montez à travers Blois cet escalier de rues
Que n’inonde jamais la Loire au temps des crues;
Laissez là le château, quoique sombre et puissant,
Quoiqu’il ait à la face une tache de sang;
Admirez, en passant, cette tour octogone
Qui fait à ses huit pans hurler une gorgone;
Mais passez. - Et sorti de la ville, au midi,
Cherchez un tertre vert, circulaire, arrondi,
Que surmonte un grand arbre, un noyer, ce me semble,
Comme au cimier d’un casque une plume qui tremble.
Vous le reconnaîtrez, ami, car, tout rêvant,
Vous l’aurez vu de loin sans doute en arrivant.

Sur le tertre monté, que la plaine bleuâtre,
Que la ville étagée en long amphithéâtre,
Que l’église, ou la Loire, et ses voiles aux vents,
Et ses mille archipels plus que ses flots mouvants,
Et de Chambord là-bas au loin les cent tourelles
Ne fassent pas voler votre pensée entre elles.
Ne levez pas vos yeux si haut que l’horizon,
Regardez à vos pieds. -

Louis, cette maison
Qu’on voit, bâtie en pierre et d’ardoise couverte,
Blanche et carrée, au bas de la colline verte,
Et qui, fermée à peine aux regards étrangers,
S’épanouit charmante entre ses deux vergers,
C’est là. - Regardez bien. C’est le toit de mon père.
C’est ici qu’il s’en vint dormir après la guerre,
Celui que tant de fois mes vers vous ont nommé,
Que vous n’avez pas vu, qui vous aurait aimé!

Alors, ô mon ami, plein d’une extase amère,
Pensez pieusement, d’abord à votre mère,
Et puis à votre soeur, et dites: “ Notre ami
Ne reverra jamais son vieux père endormi!

“ Hélas! il a perdu cette sainte défense
Qui protège la vie encore après l’enfance,
Ce pilote prudent, qui pour dompter le flot
Prête une expérience au jeune matelot!
Plus de père pour lui! plus rien qu’une mémoire!
Plus d’auguste vieillesse à couronner de gloire!
Plus de récits guerriers, plus de beaux cheveux blancs
À faire caresser par les petits enfants!
Hélas! il a perdu la moitié de sa vie,
L’orgueil de faire voir à la foule ravie
Son père, un vétéran, un général ancien!
Ce foyer où l’on est plus à l’aise qu’au sien,
Et le seuil paternel qui tressaille de joie
Quand du fils qui revient le chien fidèle aboie!

“ Le grand arbre est tombé! resté seul au vallon,
L’arbuste est désormais à nu sous l’aquilon.
Quand l’aïeul disparaît du sein de la famille,
Tout le groupe orphelin, mère, enfants, jeune fille,
Se rallie inquiet autour du père seul
Que ne dépasse plus le front blanc de l’aïeul.
C’est son tour maintenant. Du soleil, de la pluie,

On s’abrite à son ombre, à sa tige on s’appuie.
C’est à lui de veiller, d’enseigner, de souffrir,
De travailler pour tous, d’agir et de mourir!
Voilà que va bientôt sur sa tête vieillie
Descendre la sagesse austère et recueillie;
Voilà que ses beaux ans s’envolent tour à tour,
Emportant l’un sa joie et l’autre son amour,
Ses songes de grandeur et de gloire ingénue,
Et que pour travailler son âme reste nue,
Laissant là l’espérance et les rêves dorés,
Ainsi que la glaneuse, alors que dans les prés
Elle marche, d’épis emplissant sa corbeille,
Quitte son vêtement de fête de la veille!
Mais le soir, la glaneuse aux branches d’un buisson
Reprendra ses atours, et chantant sa chanson
S’en reviendra parée, et belle, et consolée;
Tandis que cette vie, âpre et morne vallée,
N’a point de buisson vert où l’on retrouve un jour
L’espoir, l’illusion, l’innocence et l’amour!

“ Il continuera donc sa tâche commencée,
Tandis que sa famille autour de lui pressée,
Sur son front, où des ans s’imprimera le cours,
Verra tomber sans cesse et s’amasser toujours,
Comme les feuilles d’arbre au vent de la tempête,
Cette neige des jours qui blanchit notre tête!

“ Ainsi du vétéran par la guerre épargné,
Rien ne reste à son fils, muet et résigné,
Qu’un tombeau vide, et toi, la maison orpheline
Qu’on voit blanche et carrée au bas de la colline,
Gardant, comme un parfum dans le vase resté,
Un air de bienvenue et d’hospitalité!

“ Un sépulcre à Paris! de pierre ou de porphyre,
Qu’importe! Les tombeaux des aigles de l’empire
Sont auprès. Ils sont là tous ces vieux généraux

Morts un jour de victoire en antiques héros,
Ou, regrettant peut-être et canons et mitraille,
Tombés à la tribune, autre champ de bataille.
Ses fils ont déposé sa cendre auprès des leurs,
Afin qu'en l'autre monde, heureux pour les meilleurs,
Il puisse converser avec ses frères d'armes.
Car sans doute ces chefs, pleurés de tant de larmes,
Ont là-bas une tente. Ils y viennent le soir
Parler de guerre; au loin, dans l'ombre, ils peuvent voir
Flotter de l'ennemi les enseignes rivales;
Et l'empereur au fond passe par intervalles.

" Une maison à Blois! riante, quoique en deuil,
Élégante et petite, avec un lierre au seuil,
Et qui fait soupirer le voyageur d'envie
Comme un charmant asile à reposer sa vie,
Tant sa neuve façade a de fraîches couleurs,
Tant son front est caché dans l'herbe et dans les fleurs!

" Maison! sépulcre! hélas, pour retrouver quelque ombre
De ce père parti sur le navire sombre,
Où faut-il que le fils aille égarer ses pas?
Maison, tu ne l'as plus! tombeau, tu ne l'as pas!"

III

RÊVERIE D’UN PASSANT À PROPOS D’UN ROI

Praebete aures, vos qui continetis multitudines et placetis vobis in turbis nationum, quoniam non custodistis legem justitiae, neque secundum voluntatem Dei ambulastis. SAP. VI.

Voitures et chevaux à grand bruit, l’autre jour,
Menaient le roi de Naples au gala de la cour.
J’étais au Carrousel, passant avec la foule
Qui par ses trois guichets incessamment s’écoule
Et traverse ce lieu quatre cents fois par an
Pour regarder un prince ou voir l’heure au cadran.
Je suivais lentement, comme l’onde suit l’onde,
Tout ce peuple, songeant qu’il était dans le monde,
Certes, le fils aîné du vieux peuple romain,
Et qu’il avait un jour, d’un revers de sa main,
Déraciné du sol les tours de la Bastille.
Je m’arrêtai: le suisse avait fermé la grille.

Et le tambour battait, et parmi les bravos
Passait chaque voiture avec ses huit chevaux.
La fanfare emplissait la vaste cour, jonchée
D’officiers redressant leur tête empanachée;
Et les royaux coursiers marchaient sans s’étonner,
Fiers de voir devant eux des drapeaux s’incliner.
Or, attentive au bruit, une femme, une vieille,
En haillons, et portant au bras quelque corbeille,
Branlant son chef ridé, disait à haute voix:
— Un roi! sous l’empereur, j’en ai tant vu, des rois!

Alors je ne vis plus des voitures dorées
La haute impériale et les rouges livrées,
Et, tandis que passait et repassait cent fois
Tout ce peuple inquiet, plein de confuses voix,

Je rêvai. Cependant la vieille vers la Grève
Poursuivait son chemin en me laissant mon rêve,
Comme l'oiseau qui va, dans la forêt lâché,
Laisse trembler la feuille où son aile a touché.

Oh! disais-je, la main sur mon front étendue,
Philosophie, au bas du peuple descendue!
Des petits sur les grands grave et hautain regard!
Où ce peuple est venu, le peuple arrive tard;
Mais il est arrivé. Le voilà qui dédaigne!
Il n'est rien qu'il admire, ou qu'il aime, ou qu'il craigne.
Il sait tirer de tout d'austères jugements,
Tant le marteau de fer des grands événements
A, dans ces durs cerveaux qu'il façonnait sans cesse,
Comme un coin dans le chêne enfoncé la sagesse!

Il s'est dit tant de fois: — Où le monde en est-il?
Que font les rois? à qui le trône? à qui l'exil?
Qu'il médite aujourd'hui, comme un juge suprême,
Sachant la fin de tout, se croyant en soi-même
Assez fort pour tout voir et pour tout épargner,
Lui qu'on n'exile pas et qui laisse régner!

La cour est en gala! pendant qu'au-dessous d'elle,
Comme sous le vaisseau l'océan qui chancelle,
Sans cesse remué, gronde un peuple profond
Dont nul regard de roi ne peut sonder le fond.
Démence et trahison qui disent sans relâche:
— Ô rois, vous êtes rois! confiez votre tâche
Aux mille bras dorés qui soutiennent vos pas.
Dormez, n'apprenez point et ne méditez pas
De peur que votre front, qu'un prestige environne,
Fasse en s'élargissant éclater la couronne! -

Ô rois, veillez, veillez! tâchez d'avoir régné.
Ne nous reprenez pas ce qu'on avait gagné;
Ne faites point, des coups d'une bride rebelle,

Cabrer la liberté qui vous porte avec elle;
Soyez de votre temps, écoutez ce qu’on dit,
Et tâchez d’être grands, car le peuple grandit.

Écoutez! écoutez, à l’horizon immense,
Ce bruit qui parfois tombe et soudain recommence,
Ce murmure confus, ce sourd frémissement
Qui roule, et qui s’accroît de moment en moment.
C’est le peuple qui vient, c’est la haute marée
Qui monte incessamment, par son astre attirée.
Chaque siècle, à son tour, qu’il soit d’or ou de fer,
Dévoré comme un cap sur qui monte la mer,
Avec ses lois, ses moeurs, les monuments qu’il fonde,
Vains obstacles qui font à peine écumer l’onde,
Avec tout ce qu’on vit et ce qu’on ne verra plus,
Disparaît sous ce flot qui n’a pas de reflux.
Le sol toujours s’en va, le flot toujours s’élève.
Malheur à qui le soir s’attarde sur la grève,
Et ne demande pas au pêcheur qui s’enfuit
D’où vient qu’à l’horizon l’on entend ce grand bruit!
Rois, hâtez-vous! rentrez dans le siècle où nous sommes,
Quittez l’ancien rivage! - À cette mer des hommes
Faites place, ou voyez si vous voulez périr
Sur le siècle passé que son flot doit couvrir!

Ainsi ce qu’en passant avait dit cette femme
Remuait mes pensers dans le fond de mon âme,
Quand un soldat soudain, du poste détaché,
Me cria: — Compagnon, le soleil est couché.

IV

Que t’importe, mon cœur, ces naissances de rois?

De todo, nada. De todos, nadie. CALDERON.

Que t’importe, mon coeur, ces naissances des rois,
Ces victoires, qui font éclater à la fois
Cloches et canons en volées,
Et louer le Seigneur en pompeux appareil,
Et la nuit, dans le ciel des villes en éveil,
Monter des gerbes étoilées?

Porte ailleurs ton regard sur Dieu seul arrêté!
Rien ici-bas qui n’ait en soi sa vanité:
La gloire fuit à tire-d’aile;
Couronnes, mitres d’or, brillent, mais durent peu;
Elles ne valent pas le brin d’herbe que Dieu
Fait pour le nid de l’hirondelle!

Hélas! plus de grandeur contient plus de néant!
La bombe atteint plutôt l’obélisque géant
Que la tourelle des colombes.
C’est toujours par la mort que Dieu s’unit aux rois;
Leur couronne dorée a pour faîte sa croix,
Son temple est pavé de leurs tombes.

Quoi! hauteur de nos tours, splendeur de nos palais,
Napoléon, César, Mahomet, Périclès,
Rien qui ne tombe et ne s’efface!
Mystérieux abîme où l’esprit se confond!
À quelques pieds sous terre un silence profond,
Et tant de bruit à la surface!

V

CE QU'ON ENTEND SUR LA MONTAGNE

O altitudo!

Avez-vous quelquefois, calme et silencieux,
Monté sur la montagne, en présence des cieux?
Était-ce aux bords du Sund? aux côtes de Bretagne?
Aviez-vous l'océan au pied de la montagne?
Et là, penché sur l'onde et sur l'immensité,
Calme et silencieux avez-vous écouté?

Voici ce qu'on entend: - du moins un jour qu'en rêve
Ma pensée abattit son vol sur une grève,
Et, du sommet d'un mont plongeant au gouffre amer,
Vit d'un côté la terre et de l'autre la mer,
J'écoutai, j'entendis, et jamais voix pareille
Ne sortit d'une bouche et n'émut une oreille.

Ce fut d'abord un bruit large, immense, confus,
Plus vague que le vent dans les arbres touffus,
Plein d'accords éclatants, de suaves murmures,
Doux comme un chant du soir, fort comme un choc d'armures
Quand la sourde mêlée étreint les escadrons
Et souffle, furieuse, aux bouches des clairons.
C'était une musique ineffable et profonde,
Qui, fluide, oscillait sans cesse autour du monde,
Et dans les vastes cieux, par ses flots rajeunis,
Roulait élargissant ses orbes infinis
Jusqu'au fond où son flux s'allait perdre dans l'ombre
Avec le temps, l'espace et la forme et le nombre.
Comme une autre atmosphère épars et débordé,
L'hymne éternel couvrait tout le globe inondé.
Le monde, enveloppé dans cette symphonie,
Comme il vogue dans l'air, voguait dans l'harmonie.

Et pensif, j’écoutais ces harpes de l’éther,
Perdu dans cette voix comme dans une mer.
Bientôt je distinguai, confuses et voilées,
Deux voix, dans cette voix l’une à l’autre mêlées,
De la terre et des mers s’épanchant jusqu’au ciel,
Qui chantaient à la fois le chant universel;
Et je les distinguai dans la rumeur profonde,
Comme on voit deux courants qui se croisent sous l’onde.

L’une venait des mers; chant de gloire! hymne heureux!
C’était la voix des flots qui se parlaient entre eux;
L’autre, qui s’élevait de la terre où nous sommes,
Était triste; c’était le murmure des hommes;
Et dans ce grand concert, qui chantait jour et nuit,
Chaque onde avait sa voix et chaque homme son bruit.

Or, comme je l’ai dit, l’océan magnifique
Épandait une voix joyeuse et pacifique,
Chantait comme la harpe aux temples de Sion,
Et louait la beauté de la création.
Sa clameur, qu’emportaient la brise et la rafale,
Incessamment vers Dieu montait plus triomphale,
Et chacun de ses flots que Dieu seul peut dompter,
Quand l’autre avait fini, se levait pour chanter.
Comme ce grand lion dont Daniel fut l’hôte,
L’océan par moments abaissait sa voix haute;
Et moi je croyais voir, vers le couchant en feu,
Sous sa crinière d’or passer la main de Dieu.

Cependant, à côté de l’auguste fanfare,
L’autre voix, comme un cri de coursier qui s’effare,
Comme le gond rouillé d’une porte d’enfer,
Comme l’archet d’airain sur la lyre de fer,
Grinçait; et pleurs, et cris, l’injure, l’anathème,
Refus du viatique et refus du baptême,
Et malédiction, et blasphème, et clameur,

Dans le flot tournoyant de l’humaine rumeur
Passaient, comme le soir on voit dans les vallées
De noirs oiseaux de nuit qui s’en vont par volées.
Qu’était-ce que ce bruit dont mille échos vibraient?
Hélas! c’était la terre et l’homme qui pleuraient.

Frère! de ces deux voix étranges, inouïes,
Sans cesse renaissant, sans cesse évanouies,
Qu’écoute l’Éternel durant l’éternité,
L’une disait: NATURE! et l’autre: HUMANITÉ!

Alors je méditai; car mon esprit fidèle,
Hélas! n’avait jamais déployé plus grande aile;
Dans mon ombre jamais n’avait lui tant de jour;
Et je rêvai longtemps, contemplant tour à tour,
Après l’abîme obscur que me cachait la lame,
L’autre abîme sans fond qui s’ouvrait dans mon âme.
Et je me demandai pourquoi l’on est ici,
Quel peut être après tout le but de tout ceci,
Que fait l’âme, lequel vaut mieux d’être ou de vivre,
Et pourquoi le Seigneur, qui seul lit à son livre,
Mêle éternellement dans un fatal hymen
Le chant de la nature au cri du genre humain?

VI

À UN VOYAGEUR

L’une partie du monde ne sait point comme l’autre vit et se gouverne. PHILIPPE DE COMMINES.

Ami, vous revenez d’un de ces longs voyages
Qui nous font vieillir vite, et nous changent en sages
Au sortir du berceau.
De tous les océans votre course a vu l’onde,
Hélas! et vous feriez une ceinture au monde
Du sillon du vaisseau.

Le soleil de vingt cieux a mûri votre vie.
Partout où vous mena votre inconstante envie,
Jetant et ramassant,
Pareil au laboureur qui récolte et qui sème,
Vous avez pris des lieux et laissé de vous-même
Quelque chose en passant.

Tandis que votre ami, moins heureux et moins sage,
Attendait des saisons l’uniforme passage
Dans le même horizon,
Et comme l’arbre vert qui de loin la dessine,
À sa porte effeuillant ses jours, prenait racine,
Au seuil de sa maison!

Vous êtes fatigué, tant vous avez vu d’hommes!
Enfin vous revenez, las de ce que nous sommes,
Vous reposer en Dieu.
Triste, vous me contez vos courses infécondes,
Et vos pieds ont mêlé la poudre de trois mondes
Aux cendres de mon feu.

Or, maintenant, le coeur plein de choses profondes,

Des enfants dans vos mains tenant les têtes blondes,
Vous me parlez ici,
Et vous me demandez, sollicitude amère!
— Où donc ton père? où donc ton fils? où donc ta mère?
— Ils voyagent aussi!

Le voyage qu'ils font n'a ni soleil, ni lune;
Nul homme n'y peut rien porter de sa fortune,
Tant le maître est jaloux!
Le voyage qu'ils font est profond et sans bornes,
On le fait à pas lents, parmi des faces mornes,
Et nous le ferons tous!

J'étais à leur départ comme j'étais au vôtre.
En diverses saisons, tous trois, l'un après l'autre,
Ils ont pris leur essor.
Hélas! j'ai mis en terre, à cette heure suprême,
Ces têtes que j'aimais. Avare, j'ai moi-même
Enfoui mon trésor.

Je les ai vus partir. J'ai, faible et plein d'alarmes,
Vu trois fois un drap noir semé de blanches larmes
Tendre ce corridor.
J'ai sur leurs froides mains pleuré comme une femme.
Mais, le cercueil fermé, mon âme a vu leur âme
Ouvrir deux ailes d'or!

Je les ai vus partir comme trois hirondelles
Qui vont chercher bien loin des printemps plus fidèles
Et des étés meilleurs.
Ma mère vit le ciel, et partit la première.
Et son oeil en mourant fut plein d'une lumière
Qu'on n'a point vue ailleurs.

Et puis mon premier-né la suivit; puis mon père,
Fier vétéran âgé de quarante ans de guerre,
Tout chargé de chevrons.

Maintenant ils sont là! tous trois dorment dans l’ombre,
Tandis que leurs esprits font le voyage sombre,
Et vont où nous irons!

Si vous voulez, à l’heure où la lune décline,
Nous monterons tous deux la nuit sur la colline
Où gisent nos aïeux.
Je vous dirai, montrant à votre vue amie
La ville morte auprès de la ville endormie;
Laquelle dort le mieux!

Venez; muets tous deux et couchés contre terre,
Nous entendrons, tandis que Paris fera taire
Son vivant tourbillon,
Ces millions de morts, moisson du fils de l’homme,
Sourdre confusément dans leurs sépulcres, comme
Le grain dans le sillon!

Combien vivent joyeux qui devaient, soeurs ou frères,
Faire un pleur éternel de quelques ombres chères!
Pouvoir des ans vainqueurs!
Les morts durent bien peu. Laissons-les sous la pierre!
Hélas! dans le cercueil ils tombent en poussière
Moins vite qu’en nos coeurs!

Voyageur! voyageur! Quelle est notre folie!
Qui sait combien de morts à chaque heure on oublie?
Des plus chers, de plus beaux?
Qui peut savoir combien toute douleur s’émousse,
Et combien sur la terre un jour d’herbe qui pousse
Efface de tombeaux!

VII

DICTÉ EN PRÉSENCE DU GLACIER DU RHÔNE

Causa tangor ab omni. OVIDE.

Souvent, quand mon esprit riche en métamorphoses
Flotte et roule endormi sur l’océan des choses,
Dieu, foyer du vrai jour qui ne luit point aux yeux,
Mystérieux soleil dont l’âme est embrasée;
Le frappe d’un rayon, et, comme une rosée,
Le ramasse et l’enlève aux cieux.

Alors, nuage errant, ma haute poésie
Vole capricieuse et sans route choisie,
De l’occident au sud, du nord à l’orient;
Et regarde, du haut des radieuses voûtes,
Les cités de la terre, et, les dédaignant toutes,
Leur jette son ombre en fuyant.

Puis, dans l’or du matin luisant comme une étoile,
Tantôt elle y découpe une frange à son voile,
Tantôt, comme un guerrier qui résonne en marchant,
Elle frappe d’éclairs la forêt qui murmure;
Et tantôt en passant rougit sa noire armure
Dans la fournaise du couchant.

Enfin sur un vieux mont, colosse à tête grise,
Sur des Alpes de neige un vent jaloux la brise.
Qu’importe! Suspendu sur l’abîme béant
Le nuage se change en un glacier sublime,
Et des mille fleurons qui hérissent sa cime,
Fait une couronne au géant!

Comme le haut cimier du mont inabordable,
Alors il dresse au loin sa crête formidable.

L’arc-en-ciel vacillant joue à son flanc d’acier;
Et, chaque soir, tandis que l’ombre en bas l’assiège,
Le soleil, ruisselant en lave sur sa neige,
Change en cratère le glacier.

Son front blanc dans la nuit semble une aube éternelle;
Le chamois effaré, dont le pied vaut une aile,
L’aigle même le craint, sombre et silencieux;
La tempête à ses pieds tourbillonne et se traîne;
L’oeil ose à peine atteindre à sa face sereine,
Tant il est avant dans les cieux!

Et seul, à ces hauteurs, sans crainte et sans vertige,
Mon esprit, de la terre oubliant le prestige,
Voit le jour étoilé, le ciel qui n’est plus bleu,
Et contemple de près ces splendeurs sidérales
Dont la nuit sème au loin ses sombres cathédrales,
Jusqu’à ce qu’un rayon de Dieu

Le frappe de nouveau, le précipite, et change
Les prismes du glacier en flots mêlés de fange;
Alors il croule, alors, éveillant mille échos,
Il retombe en torrent dans l’océan du monde,
Chaos aveugle et sourd, mer immense et profonde,
Où se ressemblent tous les flots!

Au gré du divin souffle ainsi vont mes pensées,
Dans un cercle éternel incessamment poussées.
Du terrestre océan dont les flots sont amers,
Comme sous un rayon monte une nue épaisse,
Elles montent toujours vers le ciel, et sans cesse
Redescendent des cieux aux mers.

VIII

À M. DAVID, STATUAIRE

D’hommes tu nous fais dieux. RÉGNIER.

Oh! que ne suis-je un de ces hommes
Qui, géants d’un siècle effacé,
Jusque dans le siècle où nous sommes
Règnent du fond de leur passé!
Que ne suis-je, prince ou poète,
De ces mortels à haute tête,
D’un monde à la fois base et faîte,
Que leur temps ne peut contenir;
Qui dans le calme ou dans l’orage,
Qu’on les adore ou les outrage,
Devançant le pas de leur âge,
Marchent un pied dans l’avenir!

Que ne suis-je une de ces flammes,
Un de ces pôles glorieux,
Vers qui penchent toutes les âmes,
Sur qui se fixent tous les yeux!
De ces hommes dont les statues,
Du flot des temps toujours battues,
D’un tel signe sont revêtues
Que, si le hasard les abat,
S’il les détrône de leur sphère,
Du bronze auguste on ne peut faire
Que des cloches pour la prière
Ou des canons pour le combat!

Que n’ai-je un de ces fronts sublimes,
David! Mon corps, fait pour souffrir,
Du moins sous tes mains magnanimes
Renaîtrait pour ne plus mourir!

Du haut du temple ou du théâtre,
Colosse de bronze ou d’albâtre,
Salué d’un peuple idolâtre,
Je surgirais sur la cité,
Comme un géant en sentinelle,
Couvrant la ville de mon aile,
Dans quelque attitude éternelle
De génie et de majesté!

Car c’est toi, lorsqu’un héros tombe,
Qui le relèves souverain!
Toi qui le scelles sur sa tombe
Qu’il foule avec des pieds d’airain!
Rival de Rome et de Ferrare,
Tu pétris pour le mortel rare
Ou le marbre froid de Carrare,
Ou le métal qui fume et bout.
Le grand homme au tombeau s’apaise
Quand ta main, à qui rien ne pèse,
Hors du bloc ou de la fournaise
Le jette vivant et debout!

Sans toi peut-être sa mémoire
Pâlirait d’un oubli fatal;
Mais c’est toi qui sculptes sa gloire
Visible sur un piédestal.
Ce fanal, perdu pour le monde,
Feu rampant dans la nuit profonde,
S’éteindrait, sans montrer sur l’onde
Ni les écueils ni le chemin;
C’est ton souffle qui le ranime;
C’est toi qui, sur le sombre abîme,
Dresses le colosse sublime
Qui prend le phare dans sa main.

Lorsqu’à tes yeux une pensée
Sous les traits d’un grand homme a lui,

Tu la fais marbre, elle est fixée,
Et les peuples disent: C’est lui!
Mais avant d’être pour la foule,
Longtemps dans ta tête elle roule
Comme une flamboyante houle
Au fond du volcan souverain;
Loin du grand jour qui la réclame
Tu la fais bouillir dans ton âme;
Ainsi de ses langues de flamme
Le feu saisit l’urne d’airain.

Va! que nos villes soient remplies
De tes colosses radieux!
Qu’à jamais tu te multiplies
Dans un peuple de demi-dieux!
Fais de nos cités des Corinthes!
Oh! ta pensée a des étreintes
Dont l’airain garde les empreintes,
Dont le granit s’enorgueillit!
Honneur au sol que ton pied foule!
Un métal dans tes veines coule;
Ta tête ardente est un grand moule
D’où l’idée en bronze jaillit!

Bonaparte eût voulu renaître
De marbre et géant sous ta main;
Cromwell, son aïeul et son maître,
T’eût livré son front surhumain;
Ton bras eût sculpté pour l’Espagne
Charles Quint; pour nous, Charlemagne,
Un pied sur l’hydre d’Allemagne,
L’autre sur Rome aux sept coteaux;
Au sépulcre prêt à descendre,
César t’eût confié sa cendre;
Et c’est toi qu’eût pris Alexandre
Pour lui tailler le mont Athos!

IX

À M. DE LAMARTINE

Te referent fluctus! HORACE.

Naguère une même tourmente,
Ami, battait nos deux esquifs;
Une même vague écumante
Nous jetait aux mêmes récifs;
Les mêmes haines débordées
Gonflaient sous nos nefs inondées
Leurs flots toujours multipliés,
Et, comme un océan qui roule,
Toutes les têtes de la foule
Hurlaient à la fois sous nos pieds!

Qu’allais-je faire en cet orage,
Moi qui m’échappais du berceau?
Moi qui vivais d’un peu d’ombrage,
D’un peu d’air, comme l’oiseau?
À cette mer qui le repousse
Pourquoi livrer mon nid de mousse
Où le jour n’osait pénétrer?
Pourquoi donner à la rafale
Ma belle robe nuptiale
Comme une voile à déchirer?

C’est que, dans mes songes de flamme,
C’est que, dans mes rêves d’enfant,
J’avais toujours présents à l’âme
Ces hommes au front triomphant,
Qui, tourmentés d’une autre terre,
En ont deviné le mystère
Avant que rien en soit venu,
Dont la tête au ciel est tournée,

Dont l’âme, boussole obstinée,
Toujours cherche un pôle inconnu!

Ces Gamas en qui rien n’efface
Leur indomptable ambition,
Savent qu’on n’a vu qu’une face
De l’immense création.
Ces Colombs, dans leur main profonde,
Pèsent la terre et pèsent l’onde
Comme à la balance du ciel,
Et, voyant d’en haut toute cause,
Sentent qu’il manque quelque chose
À l’équilibre universel!

Ce contre-poids qui se dérobe,
Ils le chercheront, ils iront;
Ils rendront sa ceinture au globe,
À l’univers son double front;
Ils partent, on plaint leur folie!
L’onde les emporte; on oublie
Le voyage et le voyageur!... -
Tout à coup de la mer profonde
Ils ressortent avec leur monde,
Comme avec sa perle un plongeur!

Voilà quelle était ma pensée.
Quand sur le flot sombre et grossi
Je risquai ma nef insensée,
Moi, je cherchais un monde aussi!
Mais, à peine loin du rivage,
J’ai vu sur l’océan sauvage
Commencer dans un tourbillon
Cette lutte qui me déchire
Entre les voiles du navire
Et les ailes de l’aquilon!

C’est alors qu’en l’orage sombre

J’entrevis ton mât glorieux
Qui bien avant le mien, dans l’ombre,
Fatiguait l’autan furieux.
Alors, la tempête était haute,
Nous combattîmes côte à côte,
Tous deux, moi barque, toi vaisseau,
Comme le frère auprès du frère,
Comme le nid auprès de l’aire,
Comme auprès du lit le berceau!

L’autan criait dans nos antennes,
Le flot lavait nos ponts mouvants,
Nos banderoles incertaines
Frissonnaient au souffle des vents.
Nous voyions les vagues humides,
Comme des cavales numides,
Se dresser, hennir, écumer;
L’éclair, rougissant chaque lame,
Mettait des crinières de flamme
À tous ces coursiers de la mer!

Nous, échevelés dans la brume,
Chantant plus haut dans l’ouragan,
Nous admirions la vaste écume
Et la beauté de l’océan!
Tandis que la foudre sublime
Planait tout en feu sur l’abîme,
Nous chantions, hardis matelots,
La laissant passer sur nos têtes,
Et; comme l’oiseau des tempêtes,
Tremper ses ailes dans ses flots!

Échangeant nos signaux fidèles
Et nous saluant de la voix,
Pareils à deux soeurs hirondelles,
Nous voulions, tous deux à la fois,
Doubler le même promontoire,

Remporter la même victoire,
Dépasser le siècle en courroux;
Nous tentions le même voyage;
Nous voyions surgir dans l’orage
Le même Adamastor jaloux!

Bientôt la nuit toujours croissante,
Ou quelque vent qui t’emportait,
M’a dérobé ta nef puissante
Dont l’ombre auprès de moi flottait!
Seul je suis resté sous la nue.
Depuis, l’orage continue,
Le temps est noir, le vent mauvais;
L’ombre m’enveloppe et m’isole,
Et, si je n’avais ma boussole,
Je ne saurais pas où je vais!

Dans cette tourmente fatale
J’ai passé les nuits et les jours,
J’ai pleuré la terre natale,
Et mon enfance et mes amours.
Si j’implorais le flot qui gronde,
Toutes les cavernes de l’onde
Se rouvraient jusqu’au fond des mers;
Si j’invoquais le ciel, l’orage,
Avec plus de bruit et de rage,
Secouait sa gerbe d’éclairs!

Longtemps, laissant le vent bruire,
Je t’ai cherché, criant ton nom!
Voici qu’enfin je te vois luire
À la cime de l’horizon.
Mais ce n’est plus la nef ployée,
Battue, errante, foudroyée
Sous tous les caprices des cieux,
Rêvant d’idéales conquêtes,
Risquant à travers les tempêtes

Un voyage mystérieux!

C’est un navire magnifique
Bercé par le flot souriant,
Qui, sur l’océan pacifique,
Vient du côté de l’orient!
Toujours en avant de sa voile
On voit cheminer une étoile
Qui rayonne à l’oeil ébloui;
Jamais on ne le voit éclore
Sans une étincelante aurore
Qui se lève derrière lui!

Le ciel serein, la mer sereine
L’enveloppent de tous côtés;
Par ses mâts et par sa carène
Il plonge aux deux immensités!
Le flot s’y brise en étincelles;
Ses voiles sont comme des ailes
Au souffle qui vient les gonfler;
Il vogue, il vogue vers la plage,
Et, comme le cygne qui nage,
On sent qu’il pourrait s’envoler!

Le peuple, auquel il se révèle
Comme une blanche vision,
Roule, prolonge, et renouvelle
Une immense acclamation.
La foule inonde au loin la rive.
Oh! dit-elle, il vient, il arrive!
Elle l’appelle avec des pleurs,
Et le vent porte au beau navire,
Comme à Dieu l’encens et la myrrhe,
L’haleine de la terre en fleurs!

Oh! rentre au port, esquif sublime!
Jette l’ancre loin des frimas!

Vois cette couronne unanime
Que la foule attache à tes mâts!
Oublie et l'onde et l'aventure,
Et le labeur de la mâture,
Et le souffle orageux du nord;
Triomphe à l'abri des naufrages,
Et ris-toi de tous les orages
Qui rongent les chaînes du port!

Tu reviens de ton Amérique!
Ton monde est trouvé! - Sur les flots
Ce monde, à ton souffle lyrique,
Comme un oeuf sublime est éclos!
C'est un univers qui s'éveille!
Une création pareille
À celle qui rayonne au jour!
De nouveaux infinis qui s'ouvrent!
Un de ces mondes que découvrent
Ceux qui de l'âme ont fait le tour!

Tu peux dire à qui doute encore:
" J'en viens! j'en ai cueilli ce fruit!
Votre aurore n'est pas l'aurore,
Et votre nuit n'est pas la nuit.
Votre soleil ne vaut pas l'autre.
Leur jour est plus bleu que le vôtre.
Dieu montre sa face en leur ciel.
J'ai vu luire une croix d'étoiles
Clouée à leurs nocturnes voiles
Comme un labarum éternel!"

Tu dirais la verte savane,
Les hautes herbes des déserts,
Et les bois dont le zéphyr vanne
Toutes les graines dans les airs;
Les grandes forêts inconnus;
Les caps d'où s'envolent les nues

Comme l’encens des saints trépieds;
Les fruits de lait et d’ambroisie,
Et les mines de poésie
Dont tu jettes l’or à leurs pieds!

Et puis encor tu pourrais dire,
Sans épuiser ton univers,
Ses monts d’agate et de porphyre,
Ses fleuves qui noieraient leurs mers;
De ce monde, né de la veille,
Tu peindrais la beauté vermeille,
Terre vierge et féconde à tous,
Patrie où rien ne nous repousse;
Et ta voix magnifique et douce
Les ferait tomber à genoux!

Désormais, à tous les voyages
Vers ce monde trouvé par toi,
En foule ils courront aux rivages
Comme un peuple autour de son roi!
Mille acclamations sur l’onde
Suivront longtemps ta voile blonde
Brillante en mer comme un fanal,
Salueront le vent qui t’enlève,
Puis sommeilleront sur la grève
Jusqu’à ton retour triomphal!

Ah! soit qu’au port ton vaisseau dorme,
Soit qu’il se livre sans effroi
Aux baisers de la mer difforme
Qui hurle béante sous moi,
De ta sérénité sublime
Regarde parfois dans l’abîme,
Avec des yeux de pleurs remplis,
Ce point noir dans ton ciel limpide,
Ce tourbillon sombre et rapide
Qui roule une voile en ses plis!

C’est mon tourbillon, c’est ma voile!
C’est l’ouragan qui, furieux,
À mesure éteint chaque étoile
Qui se hasarde dans mes cieux!
C’est la tourmente qui m’emporte!
C’est la nuée ardente et forte
Qui se joue avec moi dans l’air,
Et tournoyant comme une roue,
Fait étinceler sur ma proue
Le glaive acéré de l’éclair!

Alors, d’un coeur tendre et fidèle,
Ami, souviens-toi de l’ami
Que toujours poursuit à coups d’aile
Le vent dans ta voile endormi.
Songe que du sein de l’orage
Il t’a vu surgir au rivage
Dans un triomphe universel,
Et qu’alors il levait la tête,
Et qu’il oubliait sa tempête
Pour chanter l’azur de ton ciel!

Et si mon invisible monde
Toujours à l’horizon me fuit,
Si rien ne germe dans cette onde
Que je laboure jour et nuit,
Si mon navire de mystère
Se brise sur cette ingrate terre
Que cherchent mes yeux obstinés,
Pleure, ami, mon ombre jalouse!
Colomb doit plaindre Lapeyrouse.
Tous deux étaient prédestinés!

X

Un jour au mont Atlas les collines jalouses

Aestuat infelix.

Un jour au mont Atlas les collines jalouses
Dirent: — Vois nos prés verts, vois nos fraîches pelouses
Où vient la jeune fille, errante en liberté,
Chanter, rire, et rêver après qu'elle a chanté;
Nos pieds que l'océan baise en grondant à peine,
Le sauvage océan! notre tête sereine,
À qui l'été de flamme et la rosée en pleurs
Font tant épanouir de couronnes de fleurs!

Mais toi, géant! - d'où vient que sur ta tête chauve
Planent incessamment des aigles à l'oeil fauve?
Qui donc, comme une branche où l'oiseau fait son nid,
Courbe ta large épaule et ton dos de granit?
Pourquoi dans tes flancs noirs tant d'abîmes pleins d'ombre?
Quel orage éternel te bat d'un éclair sombre?
Qui t'a mis tant de neige et de rides au front?
Et ce front, où jamais printemps ne souriront,
Qui donc le courbe ainsi? quelle sueur l'inonde?... -

Atlas leur répondit: — C'est que je porte un monde.

XI

DÉDAIN

Yo contra todos y todos contra yo Romance de Viejo Arias.

I

Qui peut savoir combien de jalouses pensées,
De haines, par l’envie en tous lieux ramassées,
De sourds ressentiments, d’inimitiés sans frein,
D’orages à courber les plus sublimes têtes,
Combien de passions, de fureurs, de tempêtes,
Grondent autour de toi, jeune homme au front serein!

Tu ne le sais pas, toi! - Car tandis qu’à ta base
La gueule des serpents s’élargit et s’écrase,
Tandis que ces rivaux, que tu croyais meilleurs,
Vont t’assiégeant en foule, ou dans la nuit secrète
Creusent maint piège infâme à ta marche distraite,
Pensif, tu regardes ailleurs!

Ou si parfois leurs cris montent jusqu’à ton âme,
Si ta colère, ouvrant ses deux ailes de flamme,
Veut foudroyer leur foule acharnée à ton nom,
Avant que le volcan n’ait trouvé son issue,
Avant que tu n’aies mis la main à ta massue,
Tu te prends à sourire et tu dis: À quoi bon?

Puis voilà que revient ta chère rêverie,
Famille, enfance, amour, Dieu, liberté, patrie;
La lyre à réveiller; la scène à rajeunir;
Napoléon, ce dieu dont tu seras le prêtre;
Les grands hommes, mépris du temps qui les voit naître,
Religion de l’avenir!

II

Allez donc! ennemis de son nom! foule vaine!
Autour de son génie épuisez votre haleine!
Recommencez toujours! ni trêve, ni remord.
Allez, recommencez, veillez, et sans relâche
Roulez votre rocher, refaites votre tâche,
Envieux! - Lui, poète, il chante, il rêve, il dort.

Votre voix, qui s’aiguise et vibre comme un glaive,
N’est qu’une voix de plus dans le bruit qu’il soulève.
La gloire est un concert de mille échos épars,
Choeurs de démons, accords divins, chants angéliques,
Pareil au bruit que font dans les places publiques
Une multitude de chars.

Il ne vous connaît pas. - Il dit par intervalles
Qu’il faut aux jours d’été l’aigre cri des cigales,
L’épine à mainte fleur; que c’est le sort commun;
Que ce serait pitié d’écraser la cigale;
Que le trop bien est mal! que la rose au Bengale
Pour être sans épine est aussi sans parfum.

Et puis, qu’importe! amis, ennemis, tout s’écroule.
C’est au même tombeau que va toute la foule.
Rien ne touche un esprit que Dieu même a saisi.
Trônes, sceptres, lauriers, temples, chars de victoire,
On ferait à des rois des couronnes de gloire
De tout ce qu’il dédaigne ici!

Que lui font donc ces cris où votre voix s’enroue?
Que sert au flot amer d’écumer sur la proue?
Il ignore vos noms, il n’en a point souci,
Et quand, pour ébranler l’édifice qu’il fonde,
La sueur de vos fronts ruisselle et vous inonde,
Il ne sait même pas qui vous fatigue ainsi!

III

Puis, quand il le voudra, scribes, docteurs, poètes,
Il sait qu’il peut, d’un souffle, en vos bouches muettes
Éteindre vos clameurs,
Et qu’il emportera toutes vos voix ensemble
Comme le vent de mer emporte où bon lui semble
La chanson des rameurs!

En vain vos légions l’environnent sans nombre,
Il n’a qu’à se lever pour couvrir de son ombre
À la fois tous vos fronts;
Il n’a qu’à dire un mot pour couvrir vos voix grêles,
Comme un char en passant couvre le bruit des ailes
De mille moucherons!

Quand il veut, vos flambeaux, sublimes auréoles
Dont vous illuminez vos temples, vos idoles,
Vos dieux, votre foyer,
Phares éblouissants, clartés universelles,
Pâlissent à l’éclat des moindres étincelles
Du pied de son coursier!

XII

Ô toi, qui si longtemps vis luire à mon côté

In God is all. DEVISE DES SALTOUN.

Ô toi qui si longtemps vis luire à mon côté
Le jour égal et pur de la prospérité,
Toi qui, lorsque mon âme allait de doute en doute,
Et comme un voyageur te demandait sa route,
Endormis sur ton sein tes rêves ténébreux,
Et pour toute raison disais: Soyons heureux!
Hélas! ô mon amie, hélas! voici que l'ombre
Envahit notre ciel, et que la vie est sombre;
Voici que le malheur s'épanche lentement
Sur l'azur radieux de notre firmament;
Voici qu'à nos regards s'obscurcit et recule
Notre horizon, perdu dans un noir crépuscule;
Or, dans ce ciel, où va la nuit se propageant,
Comme un oeil lumineux, vivant, intelligent,
Vois-tu briller là-bas cette profonde étoile?
Des milles vérités que le bonheur nous voile,
C'est une qui paraît! c'est la première encor
Qui nous ait éblouis de sa lumière d'or!
Notre ciel, que déjà la sombre nuit réclame,
N'a plus assez d'éclat pour cacher cette flamme,
Et du sud, du couchant, ou du septentrion,
Chaque ombre qui survient donne à l'astre un rayon.
Et plus viendra la nuit, et plus, à plis funèbres,
S'épaissiront sur nous son deuil et ses ténèbres,
Plus, dans ce ciel sublime, à nos yeux enchantés,
En foule apparaîtront de splendides clartés!
Plus nous verrons dans l'ombre, où leur loi les rassemble,
Toutes les vérités étinceler ensemble,
Et graviter autour d'un centre impérieux,
Et rompre et renouer leur coeur mystérieux!

Cette fatale nuit, que le malheur amène,
Fait voir plus clairement la destinée humaine,
Et montre à ses deux bouts, écrits en traits de feu,
Ces mots: Âme immortelle! éternité de Dieu!
Car tant que luit le jour, de son soleil de flamme
Il accable nos yeux, il aveugle notre âme,
Et nous nous reposons dans un doute serein
Sans savoir si le ciel est d’azur ou d’airain.
Mais la nuit rend aux cieux leurs étoiles, leurs gloires,
Candélabres que Dieu pend à leurs voûtes noires.
L’oeil dans leurs profondeurs découvre à chaque pas
Mille mondes nouveaux qu’il ne soupçonnait pas,
Soleils plus flamboyants, plus chevelus dans l’ombre
Qu’en l’abîme sans fin il voit luire sans nombre!

XIII

C’est une chose grande et que tout homme envie

À Monsieur Fontaney

Quot libras in duce summo? JUVÉNAL.

C’est une chose grande et que tout homme envie
D’avoir un lustre en soi qu’on répand sur sa vie,
D’être choisi d’un peuple à venger son affront,
De ne point faire un pas qui n’ait trace en l’histoire,
Ou de chanter les yeux au ciel, et que la gloire
Fasse avec un regard reluire votre front.

Il est beau de courir par la terre usurpée,
Disciplinant les rois du plat de son épée,
D’être Napoléon, l’empereur radieux;
D’être Dante, à son nom rendant les voix muettes.
Sans doute ils sont heureux les héros, les poètes,
Ceux que le bras fait rois, ceux que l’esprit fait dieux!

Il est beau, conquérant, législateur, prophète,
De marcher dépassant les hommes de la tête;
D’être en la nuit de tous un éclatant flambeau;
Et que de vos vingt ans vingt siècles se souviennent!...
— Voilà ce que je dis: puis des pitiés me viennent
Quand je pense à tous ceux qui sont dans le tombeau!

XIV

Ô MES LETTRES D'AMOUR

Oh primavera! gioventù dell'anno!
Oh gioventù! primavera della vita!

Ô mes lettres d'amour, de vertu, de jeunesse,
C'est donc vous! Je m'enivre encore à votre ivresse;
Je vous lis à genoux.
Souffrez que pour un jour je reprenne votre âge!
Laissez-moi me cacher, moi, l'heureux et le sage,
Pour pleurer avec vous!

J'avais donc dix-huit ans! j'étais donc plein de songes!
L'espérance en chantant me berçait de mensonges.
Un astre m'avait lui!
J'étais un dieu pour toi qu'en mon coeur seul je nomme!
J'étais donc cet enfant, hélas! devant qui l'homme
Rougit presque aujourd'hui!

Ô temps de rêverie, et de force, et de grâce!
Attendre tous les soirs une robe qui passe!
Baiser un gant jeté!
Vouloir tout de la vie, amour, puissance et gloire!
Être pur, être fier, être sublime et croire
À toute pureté!

À présent j'ai senti, j'ai vu, je sais. - Qu'importe
Si moins d'illusions viennent ouvrir ma porte
Qui gémit en tournant!
Oh! que cet âge ardent, qui me semblait si sombre,
À côté du bonheur qui m'abrite à son ombre,
Rayonne maintenant!

Que vous ai-je donc fait, ô mes jeunes années!

Pour m’avoir fui si vite et vous être éloignées,
Me croyant satisfait?
Hélas! pour revenir m’apparaître si belles,
Quand vous ne pouvez plus me prendre sur vos ailes,
Que vous ai-je donc fait?

Oh! quand ce doux passé, quand cet âge sans tache,
Avec sa robe blanche où notre amour s’attache,
Revient dans nos chemins,
On s’y suspend et puis que de larmes amères
Sur les lambeaux flétris de vos jeunes chimères
Qui vous restent aux mains!

Oublions! oublions! Quand la jeunesse est morte,
Laissons-nous emporter par le vent qui l’emporte
À l’horizon obscur,
Rien ne reste de nous; notre oeuvre est un problème.
L’homme, fantôme errant, passe sans laisser même
Son ombre sur le mur!

XV

Laissez. Tous ces enfants sont bien là

Sinite parvulos venire ad me. JÉSUS.

Laissez. - Tous ces enfants sont bien là. - Qui vous dit
Que la bulle d’azur que mon souffle agrandit
À leur souffle indiscret s’écroule?
Qui vous dit que leurs voix, leurs pas, leurs jeux, leurs cris,
Effarouchent la muse et chassent les péris? ... -
Venez, enfants, venez en foule!

Venez autour de moi. Riez, chantez, courez!
Votre oeil me jettera quelques rayons dorés,
Votre voix charmera mes heures.
C’est la seule en ce monde où rien ne nous sourit
Qui vienne du dehors sans troubler dans l’esprit
Le choeur des voix intérieures!

Fâcheux! qui les vouliez écarter! - Croyez-vous
Que notre coeur n’est pas plus serein et plus doux
Au sortir de leurs jeunes rondes?
Croyez-vous que j’ai peur quand je vois au milieu
De mes rêves rougis ou de sang ou de feu
Passer toutes ces têtes blondes?

La vie est-elle donc si charmante à vos yeux
Qu’il faille préférer à tout ce bruit joyeux
Une maison vide et muette?
N’ôtez pas, la pitié même vous le défend,
Un rayon de soleil, un sourire d’enfant,
Au ciel sombre, au coeur du poète!

— Mais ils s’effaceront à leurs bruyants ébats
Ces mots sacrés que dit une muse tout bas,

Ces chants purs d’où l’âme se noie?... -
Eh! que m’importe à moi, muse, chants, vanité,
Votre gloire perdue et l’immortalité,
Si j’y gagne une heure de joie!

La belle ambition et le rare destin!
Chanter! toujours chanter pour un écho lointain,
Pour un vain bruit qui passe et tombe!
Vivre abreuvé de fiel, d’amertume et d’ennuis!
Expier dans ses jours les rêves de ses nuits!
Faire un avenir à sa tombe!

Oh! que j’aime bien mieux ma joie et mon plaisir,
Et toute ma famille avec tout mon loisir,
Dût la gloire ingrate et frivole,
Dussent mes vers, troublés de ces ris familiers,
S’enfuir, comme devant un essaim d’écoliers
Une troupe d’oiseaux s’envole!

Mais non. Au milieu d’eux rien ne s’évanouit.
L’orientale d’or plus riche épanouit
Ses fleurs peintes et ciselées;
La ballade est plus fraîche, et dans le ciel grondant
L’ode ne pousse pas d’un souffle moins ardent
Le groupe des strophes ailées!

Je les vois reverdir dans leurs jeux éclatants,
Mes hymnes, parfumés comme un champ de printemps.
Ô vous, dont l’âme est épuisée,
Ô mes amis! l’enfance aux riantes couleurs
Donne la poésie à nos vers, comme aux fleurs
L’aurore donne la rosée!

Venez, enfants! - À vous jardins, cours, escaliers!
Ébranlez et planchers, et plafonds, et piliers!
Que le jour s’achève ou renaisse,
Courez et bourdonnez comme l’abeille aux champs!

Ma joie et mon bonheur et mon âme et mes chants
Iront où vous irez, jeunesse!

Il est pour les coeurs sourds aux vulgaires clameurs
D'harmonieuses voix, des accords, des rumeurs,
Qu'on n'entend que dans les retraites,
Notes d'un grand concert interrompu souvent,
Vents, flots, feuilles des bois, bruits dont l'âme en rêvant
Se fait des musiques secrètes!

Moi, quel que soit le monde et l'homme et l'avenir,
Soit qu'il faille oublier ou se ressouvenir,
Que Dieu m'afflige ou me console,
Je ne veux habiter la cité des vivants
Que dans une maison qu'une rumeur d'enfants
Fasse toujours vivante et folle.

De même, si jamais enfin je vous revois,
Beau pays dont la langue est faite pour ma voix,
Dont mes yeux aimaient les campagnes,
Bords où mes pas enfants suivaient Napoléon,
Fortes villes du Cid! ô Valence, ô Léon,
Castille, Aragon, mes Espagnes!

Je ne veux traverser vos plaines, vos cités,
Franchir vos ponts d'une arche entre deux monts jetés,
Voir vos palais romains ou maures,
Votre Guadalquivir qui serpente et s'enfuit,
Que dans ces chars dorés qu'emplissent de leur bruit
Les grelots des mules sonores.

XVI

Quand le livre où s’endort chaque soir ma pensée

Sed satis est jam posse mori. LUCAIN

Quand le livre où s’endort chaque soir ma pensée,
Quand l’air de la maison, les soucis du foyer,
Quand le bourdonnement de la ville insensée
Où toujours on entend quelque chose crier,

Quand tous ces mille soins de misère ou de fête
Qui remplissent nos jours, cercle aride et borné,
Ont tenu trop longtemps, comme un joug sur ma tête,
Le regard de mon âme à la terre tourné;

Elle s’échappe enfin, va, marche, et dans la plaine
Prend le même sentier qu’elle prendra demain,
Qui l’égare au hasard et toujours la ramène,
Comme un coursier prudent qui connaît le chemin.

Elle court aux forêts où dans l’ombre indécise
Flottent tant de rayons, de murmures, de voix,
Trouve la rêverie au premier arbre assise,
Et toutes deux s’en vont ensemble dans les bois!

XVII

Oh! pourquoi te cacher? Tu pleurais seule ici.

Flebile nescio quid. OVIDE.

Oh! pourquoi te cacher? Tu pleurais seule ici.
Devant tes yeux rêveurs qui donc passait ainsi?
Quelle ombre flottait dans ton âme?
Était-ce long regret ou noir pressentiment,
Ou jeunes souvenirs dans le passé dormant,
Ou vague faiblesse de femme?

Voyais-tu fuir déjà l'amour et ses douceurs,
Ou les illusions, toutes ces jeunes soeurs
Qui le matin, devant nos portes,
Dans l'avenir sans borne ouvrant mille chemins,
Dansent, des fleurs au front et les mains dans les mains,
Et bien avant le soir sont mortes?

Ou bien te venait-il des tombeaux endormis
Quelque ombre douloureuse avec des traits amis,
Te rappelant le peu d'années,
Et demandant tout bas quand tu viendrais le soir
Prier devant ces croix de pierre ou de bois noir
Où pendent tant de fleurs fanées?

Mais non, ces visions ne te poursuivaient pas.
Il suffit pour pleurer de songer qu'ici-bas
Tout miel est amer, tout ciel sombre,
Que toute ambition trompe l'effort humain,
Que l'espoir est un leurre, et qu'il n'est pas de main
Qui garde l'onde ou prenne l'ombre!

Toujours ce qui là-bas vole au gré du zéphyr
Avec des ailes d'or, de pourpre et de saphir,

Nous fait courir et nous devance;
Mais adieu l’aile d’or, pourpre, émail, vermillon,
Quand l’enfant a saisi le frêle papillon,
Quand l’homme a pris son espérance!

Pleure. Les pleurs vont bien, même au bonheur; tes chants
Sont plus doux dans les pleurs; tes yeux purs et touchants
Sont plus beaux quand tu les essuies.
L’été, quand il a plu, le champ est plus vermeil,
Et le ciel fait briller plus au beau soleil
Son azur lavé par les pluies!

Pleure comme Rachel, pleure comme Sara.
On a toujours souffert ou bien on souffrira.
Malheur aux insensés qui rient!
Le Seigneur nous relève alors que nous tombons.
Car s’il préfère encor les malheureux aux bons,
Ceux qui pleurent à ceux qui prient!

Pleure afin de savoir! Les larmes sont un don.
Souvent les pleurs, après l’erreur et l’abandon,
Raniment nos forces brisées!
Souvent l’âme, sentant, au doute qui s’enfuit,
Qu’un jour l’intérieur se lève dans sa nuit,
Répand de ces douces rosées!

Pleure! mais, tu fais bien, cache-toi pour pleurer.
Aie un asile en toi. Pour t’en désaltérer,
Pour les savourer avec charmes,
Sous le riche dehors de ta prospérité,
Dans le fond de ton coeur, comme un fruit pour l’été,
Mets à part ton trésor de larmes!

Car la fleur, qui s’ouvrit avec l’aurore en pleurs,
Et qui fait à midi de ses belles couleurs
Admirer la splendeur timide,
Sous ses corolles d’or, loin des yeux importuns,

Au fond de ce calice où sont tous ses parfums,
Souvent cache une perle humide!

XVIII

Où donc est le bonheur? disais-je. - Infortuné!

Sed satis est jam posse mori. LUCAIN

Où donc est le bonheur? disais-je. - Infortuné!
Le bonheur, ô mon Dieu, vous me l’avez donné.

Naître, et ne pas savoir que l’enfance éphémère,
Ruisseau de lait qui fuit sans une goutte amère,
Est l’âge du bonheur, et le plus beau moment
Que l’homme, ombre qui passe, ait sous le firmament!

Plus tard, aimer, - garder dans son coeur de jeune homme
Un nom mystérieux que jamais on ne nomme,
Glisser un mot furtif dans une tendre main,
Aspirer aux douceurs d’un ineffable hymen,
Envier l’eau qui fuit, le nuage qui vole,
Sentir son coeur se fondre au son d’une parole,
Connaître un pas qu’on aime et que jaloux on suit,
Rêver le jour, brûler et se tordre la nuit,
Pleurer surtout cet âge où sommeillent les âmes,
Toujours souffrir; parmi tous les regards de femmes,
Tous les buissons d’avril, les feux du ciel vermeil,
Ne chercher qu’un regard, qu’une fleur, qu’un soleil!

Puis effeuiller en hâte et d’une main jalouse
Les boutons d’orangers sur le front de l’épouse;
Tout sentir, être heureux, et pourtant, insensé!
Se tourner presque en pleurs vers le malheur passé;
Voir aux feux de midi, sans espoir qu’il renaisse,
Se faner son printemps, son matin, sa jeunesse,
Perdre l’illusion, l’espérance, et sentir
Qu’on vieillit au fardeau croissant du repentir!
Effacer de son front des taches et des rides;

S’éprendre d’art, de vers, de voyages arides,
De cieux lointains, de mers où s’égarent nos pas;
Redemander cet âge où l’on ne dormait pas;
Se dire qu’on était bien malheureux, bien triste,
Bien fou, que maintenant on respire, on existe,
Et, plus vieux de dix ans, s’enfermer tout un jour
Pour relire avec pleurs quelques lettres d’amour!

Vieillir enfin, vieillir! comme des fleurs fanées
Voir blanchir nos cheveux et tomber nos années,
Rappeler notre enfance et nos beaux jours flétris,
Boire le reste amer de ces parfums aigris,
Être sage, et railler l’amant et le poète,
Et, lorsque nous touchons à la tombe muette,
Suivre en les rappelant d’un oeil mouillé de pleurs
Nos enfants qui déjà sont tournés vers les leurs!

Ainsi l’homme, ô mon Dieu! marche toujours plus sombre
Du berceau qui rayonne au sépulcre plein d’ombre.
C’est donc avoir vécu! c’est donc avoir été!
Dans la joie et l’amour et la félicité
C’est avoir eu sa part! et se plaindre est folie.
Voilà de quel nectar la coupe est remplie!

Hélas! naître pour vivre en désirant la mort!
Grandir en regrettant l’enfance où le coeur dort,
Vieillir en regrettant la jeunesse ravie,
Mourir en regrettant la vieillesse et la vie!

Où donc est le bonheur, disais-je? - Infortuné!
Le bonheur, ô mon Dieu, vous me l’avez donné!

XIX

Lorsque l’enfant paraît, le cercle de famille

Le toit s’égaie et rit. ANDRÉ CHÉNIER.

Lorsque l’enfant paraît, le cercle de famille
Applaudit à grands cris; son doux regard qui brille
Fait briller tous les yeux,
Et les plus tristes fronts, les plus souillés peut-être,
Se dérident soudain à voir l’enfant paraître,
Innocent et joyeux.

Soit que juin ait verdi mon seuil, ou que novembre
Fasse autour d’un grand feu vacillant dans la chambre
Les chaises se toucher,
Quand l’enfant vient, la joie arrive et nous éclaire.
On rit, on se récrie, on l’appelle, et sa mère
Tremble à le voir marcher.

Quelquefois nous parlons, en remuant la flamme,
De patrie et de Dieu, des poètes, de l’âme
Qui s’élève en priant;
L’enfant paraît, adieu le ciel et la patrie
Et les poètes saints! la grave causerie
S’arrête en souriant.

La nuit, quand l’homme dort, quand l’esprit rêve, à l’heure
Où l’on entend gémir, comme une voix qui pleure,
L’onde entre les roseaux,
Si l’aube tout à coup là-bas luit comme un phare,
Sa clarté dans les champs éveille une fanfare
De cloches et d’oiseaux!

Enfant, vous êtes l’aube et mon âme est la plaine
Qui des plus douces fleurs embaume son haleine

Quand vous la respirez;
Mon âme est la forêt dont les sombres ramures
S’emplissent pour vous seul de suaves murmures
Et de rayons dorés!

Car vos beaux yeux sont pleins de douceurs infinies,
Car vos petites mains, joyeuses et bénies,
N’ont point mal fait encor;
Jamais vos jeunes pas n’ont touché notre fange,
Tête sacrée! enfant aux cheveux blonds! bel ange
À l’auréole d’or!

Vous êtes parmi nous la colombe de l’arche.
Vos pieds tendres et purs n’ont point l’âge où l’on marche;
Vos ailes sont d’azur.
Sans le comprendre encor vous regardez le monde.
Double virginité! corps où rien n’est immonde,
Âme où rien n’est impur!

Il est si beau, l’enfant, avec son doux sourire,
Sa douce bonne foi, sa voix qui veut tout dire,
Ses pleurs vite apaisés,
Laissant errer sa vue étonnée et ravie,
Offrant de toutes parts sa jeune âme à la vie
Et sa bouche aux baisers!

Seigneur! préservez-moi, préservez ceux que j’aime,
Frères, parents, amis, et mes ennemis même
Dans le mal triomphants,
De jamais voir, Seigneur! l’été sans fleurs vermeilles,
La cage sans oiseaux, la ruche sans abeilles,
La maison sans enfants!

XX

Dans l’alcôve sombre,

Beau, frais, souriant d’aise à cette vie amère. Sainte-Beuve.

Dans l’alcôve sombre,
Près d’un humble autel,
L’enfant dort à l’ombre
Du lit maternel.
Tandis qu’il repose,
Sa paupière rose,
Pour la terre close,
S’ouvre pour le ciel.

Il fait bien des rêves.
Il voit par moments
Le sable des grèves
Plein de diamants,
Des soleils de flammes,
Et de belles dames
Qui portent des âmes
Dans leurs bras charmants.

Songe qui l’enchante!
Il voit des ruisseaux.
Une voix qui chante
Sort du fond des eaux.
Ses sœurs sont plus belles.
Son père est près d’elles.
Sa mère a des ailes
Comme les oiseaux.

Il voit mille choses
Plus belles encor;
Des lys et des roses

Plein le corridor;
Des lacs de délice
Où le poisson glisse,
Où l’onde se plisse
À des roseaux d’or!

Enfant, rêve encore!
Dors, ô mes amours!
Ta jeune âme ignore
Où s’en vont tes jours.
Comme une algue morte
Tu vas, que t’importe!
Le courant t’emporte,
Mais tu dors toujours!

Sans soin, sans étude,
Tu dors en chemin;
Et l’inquiétude,
À la froide main,
De son ongle aride
Sur ton front candide
Qui n’a point de ride,
N’écrit pas: Demain!

Il dort, innocence!
Les anges sereins
Qui savent d’avance
Le sort des humains,
Le voyant sans armes,
Sans peur, sans alarmes,
Baisent avec larmes
Ses petites mains.

Leurs lèvres effleurent
Ses lèvres de miel.
L’enfant voit qu’ils pleurent
Et dit: Gabriel!

Mais l’ange le touche,
Et, berçant sa couche,
Un doigt sur sa bouche,
Lève l’autre au ciel!

Cependant sa mère,
Prompte à le bercer,
Croit qu’une chimère
Le vient oppresser.
Fière, elle l’admire,
L’entend qui soupire,
Et le fait sourire
Avec un baiser.

XXI

Parfois, lorsque tout dort, je m’assieds plein de joie

Tout est en harmonie avec moi de ce qui est en harmonie avec toi, ô monde; rien ne me vient trop tôt ou trop tard de ce qui vient à point pour toi; tout m’est fruit de ce qu’apportent tes saisons, ô nature; de toi toutes choses; en toi toutes choses; vers toi toutes choses. MARC-AURÈLE.

Parfois, lorsque tout dort, je m’assieds plein de joie
Sous le dôme étoilé qui sur nos fronts flamboie;
J’écoute si d’en haut il tombe quelque bruit;
Et l’heure vainement me frappe de son aile
Quand je contemple, ému, cette fête éternelle
Que le ciel rayonnant donne au monde la nuit!

Souvent alors j’ai cru que ces soleils de flamme
Dans ce monde endormi n’échauffaient que mon âme;
Qu’à les comprendre seul j’étais prédestiné;
Que j’étais, moi, vaine ombre obscure et taciturne,
Le roi mystérieux de la pompe nocturne;
Que le ciel pour moi seul s’était illuminé!

XXII

À UNE FEMME

C’est une âme charmante. DIDEROT.

Enfant! si j’étais roi, je donnerais l’empire,
Et mon char, et mon sceptre, et mon peuple à genoux,
  Et ma couronne d’or, et mes bains de porphyre,
  Et mes flottes, à qui la mer ne peut suffire,
  Pour un regard de vous!

  Si j’étais Dieu, la terre et l’air avec les ondes,
  Les anges, les démons courbés devant ma loi,
  Et le profond chaos aux entrailles fécondes,
  L’éternité, l’espace, et les cieux, et les mondes,
  Pour un baiser de toi!

XXIII

Oh! qui que vous soyez, jeune ou vieux, riche ou sage,

Quien no ama, no vive.

Oh! qui que vous soyez, jeune ou vieux, riche ou sage,
Si jamais vous n’avez épié le passage,
Le soir, d’un pas léger, d’un pas mélodieux,
D’un voile blanc qui glisse et fuit dans les ténèbres,
Et, comme un météore au sein des nuits funèbres,
Vous laisse dans le coeur un sillon radieux;

Si vous ne connaissez que pour l’entendre dire
Au poète amoureux qui chante et qui soupire,
Ce suprême bonheur qui fait nos jours dorés,
De posséder un coeur sans réserve et sans voiles,
De n’avoir pour flambeaux, de n’avoir pour étoiles,
De n’avoir pour soleils que deux yeux adorés;

Si vous n’avez jamais attendu, morne et sombre,
Sous les vitres d’un bal qui rayonne dans l’ombre,
L’heure où pour le départ les portes s’ouvriront,
Pour voir votre beauté, comme un éclair qui brille,
Rose avec des yeux bleus et toute jeune fille,
Passer dans la lumière avec des fleurs au front;

Si vous n’avez jamais senti la frénésie
De voir la main qu’on veut par d’autres mains choisie,
De voir le coeur aimé battre sur d’autres coeurs;
Si vous n’avez jamais vu d’un oeil de colère
La valse impure, au vol lascif et circulaire,
Effeuiller en courant les femmes et les fleurs;

Si jamais vous n’avez descendu les collines,
Le coeur tout débordant d’émotions divines;

Si jamais vous n’avez, le soir, sous les tilleuls,
Tandis qu’au ciel luisaient des étoiles sans nombre,
Aspiré, couple heureux, la volupté de l’ombre,
Cachés, et vous parlant tout bas, quoique tout seuls;

Si jamais une main n’a fait trembler la vôtre;
Si jamais ce seule mot qu’on dit l’un après l’autre,
JE T’AIME! n’a rempli votre âme tout un jour;
Si jamais vous n’avez pris en pitié les trônes
En songeant qu’on cherchait les sceptres, les couronnes,
Et la gloire, et l’empire, et qu’on avait l’amour!

La nuit, quand la veilleuse agonise dans l’urne,
Quand Paris, enfoui sous la brume nocturne
Avec la tour saxonne et l’église des Goths,
Laisse sans les compter passer les heures noires
Qui, douze fois, semant les rêves illusoires,
S’envolent des clochers par groupes inégaux;

Si jamais vous n’avez, à l’heure où tout sommeille,
Tandis qu’elle dormait, oublieuse et vermeille,
Pleuré comme un enfant à force de souffrir,
Crié cent fois son nom du soir jusqu’à l’aurore,
Et cru qu’elle viendrait en l’appelant encore,
Et maudit votre mère, et désiré mourir;

Si jamais vous n’avez senti que d’une femme
Le regard dans votre âme allumait une autre âme,
Que vous étiez charmé, qu’un ciel s’était ouvert,
Et que pour cette enfant, qui de vos pleurs se joue,
Il vous serait bien doux, d’expirer sur la roue;..
Vous n’avez point aimé, vous n’avez point souffert!

XXIV

Madame, autour de vous tant de grâce étincelle,

Mens blanda in corpore blando.

Madame, autour de vous tant de grâce étincelle,
Votre chant est si pur, votre danse recèle
Un charme si vainqueur,
Un si touchant regard baigne votre prunelle,
Toute votre personne a quelque chose en elle
De si doux pour le coeur,

Que, lorsque vous venez, jeune astre qu'on admire,
Éclairer notre nuit d'un rayonnant sourire
Qui nous fait palpiter,
Comme l'oiseau des bois devant l'aube vermeille,
Une tendre pensée au fond des coeurs s'éveille
Et se met à chanter!

Vous ne l'entendez pas, vous l'ignorez, madame.
Car la chaste pudeur enveloppe votre âme
De ses voiles jaloux,
Et l'ange que le ciel commit à votre garde
N'a jamais à rougir quand, rêveur, il regarde
Ce qui se passe en vous.

XXV

Contempler dans son bain sans voiles

Amor, ch’a null’ amato amar perdona,
Mi prese del costui placer si forte
Che, come vedi, ancor non m’abbandona. DANTE.

Contempler dans son bain sans voiles
Une fille aux yeux innocents;
Suivre de loin de blanches voiles;
Voir au ciel briller les étoiles
Et sous l’herbe les vers luisants;

Voir autour des mornes idoles
Des sultanes danser en rond;
D’un bal compter les girandoles;
La nuit, voir sur l’eau les gondoles
Fuir avec une étoile au front;

Regarder la lune sereine;
Dormir sous l’arbre du chemin;
Être le roi lorsque la reine,
Par son sceptre d’or souveraine,
L’est aussi par sa blanche main;

Ouïr sur les harpes jalouses
Se plaindre la romance en pleurs;
Errer, pensif, sur les pelouses,
Le soir, lorsque les andalouses
De leurs balcons jettent des fleurs;

Rêver, tandis que les rosées
Pleuvent d’un beau ciel espagnol,
Et que les notes embrasées
S’épanouissent en fusées

Dans la chanson du rossignol;

Ne plus se rappeler le nombre
De ses jours, songes oubliés;
Suivre fuyant dans la nuit sombre
Un Esprit qui traîne dans l’ombre
Deux sillons de flamme à ses pieds;

Des boutons d’or qu’avril étale
Dépouiller le riche gazon;
Voir, après l’absence fatale,
Enfin, de sa ville natale
Grandir la flèche à l’horizon;

Non, tout ce qu’a la destinée
De bien réels ou fabuleux
N’est rien pour mon âme enchaînée
Quand tu regardes inclinée
Mes yeux noirs avec tes yeux bleus!

XXVI

Vois, cette branche est rude, elle est noire, et la nue

Ô que les tendres propos et les charmantes choses
Que me disait Aline en la saison des roses!
Doux zéphyrs qui passiez alors ces beaux lieux,
N’en rapportiez-vous rien à l’oreille des dieux?
SEGRAIS.

Vois, cette branche est rude, elle est noire, et la nue
Verse la pluie à flots sur son écorce nue;
Mais attends que l’hiver s’en aille, et tu vas voir
Une feuille percer ces noeuds si dur pour elle,
Et tu demanderas comment un bourgeon frêle
Peut, si tendre et si vert, jaillir de ce bois noir.

Demande alors pourquoi, ma jeune bien-aimée,
Quand sur mon âme, hélas! endurcie et fermée,
Ton souffle passe, après tant de maux expiés,
Pourquoi remonte et court ma sève évanouie,
Pourquoi mon âme en fleur et tout épanouie
Jette soudain des vers que j’effeuille à tes pieds!

C’est que tout a sa loi, le monde et la fortune;
C’est qu’une claire nuit succède aux nuits sans lune;
C’est que tout ici-bas a ses reflux constants;
C’est qu’il faut l’arbre au vent et la feuille au zéphyre;
C’est qu’après le malheur m’est venu ton sourire;
C’est que c’était l’hiver et que c’est le printemps!

XXVII

À MES AMIS L. B. ET S.-B.

Here’s a sigh to those who love me,
And a smile to those who hate;
And whatever sky’s above me,
Here’s a heart for every fate.
BYRON.

Amis! c’est donc Rouen, la ville aux vieilles rues,
Aux vieilles tours, débris des races disparues,
La ville aux cent clochers carillonnant dans l’air,
Le Rouen des châteaux, des hôtels, des bastilles,
Dont le front hérissé de flèches et d’aiguilles
Déchire incessamment les brumes de la mer;

C’est Rouen qui vous a! Rouen qui vous enlève!
Je ne m’en plaindrai pas. J’ai souvent fait ce rêve
D’aller voir Saint-Ouen à moitié démoli,
Et tout m’a retenu, la famille, l’étude,
Mille soins, et surtout la vague inquiétude
Qui fait que l’homme craint son désir accompli.

J’ai différé. La vie à différer se passe.
De projets en projets et d’espace en espace
Le fol esprit de l’homme en tout temps s’envola.
Un jour enfin, lassés du songe qui nous leurre,
Nous disons: “ Il est temps. Exécutons! c’est l’heure.”
Alors nous retournons les yeux: - la mort est là!

Ainsi de mes projets. - Quand vous verrai-je, Espagne,
Et Venise et son golfe, et Rome et sa campagne,
Toi, Sicile que ronge un volcan souterrain,
Grèce qu’on connaît trop, Sardaigne qu’on ignore,
Cités de l’aquilon, du couchant, de l’aurore,

Pyramides du Nil, cathédrales du Rhin!

Qui sait? Jamais peut-être. - Et quand m’abriterai-je
Près de la mer, ou bien sous un mont blanc de neige,
Dans quelque vieux donjon, tout plein d’un vieux héros,
Où le soleil, dorant les tourelles du faîte,
N’enverra sur mon front que des rayons de fête
Teints de pourpre et d’azur au prisme des vitraux?

Jamais non plus, sans doute. - En attendant, vaine ombre,
Oublié dans l’espace et perdu dans le nombre,
Je vis. J’ai trois enfants en cercle à mon foyer;
Et lorsque la sagesse entr’ouvre un peu ma porte,
Elle me crie: Ami! sois content. Que t’importe
Cette tente d’un jour qu’il faut sitôt ployer!

Et puis, dans mon esprit, des choses que j’espère
Je me fais cent récits, comme à son fils un père.
Ce que je voudrais voir je le rêve si beau!
Je vois en moi des tours, des Romes, des Cordoues,
Qui jettent mille feux, muse, quand tu secoues
Sous leurs sombres piliers ton magique flambeau!

Ce sont des Alhambras, de hautes cathédrales,
Des Babels, dans la nue enfonçant leurs spirales,
De noirs Escurials, mystérieux séjour,
Des villes d’autrefois, peintes et dentelées,
Où chantent jour et nuit mille cloches ailées,
Joyeuses d’habiter dans des clochers à jour!

Et je rêve! Et jamais villes impériales
N’éclipseront ce rêve aux splendeurs idéales.
Gardons l’illusion; elle fuit assez tôt.
Chaque homme, dans son coeur, crée à sa fantaisie
Tout un monde enchanté d’art et de poésie.
C’est notre Chanaan que nous voyons d’en haut.

Restons où nous voyons. Pourquoi vouloir descendre,
Et toucher ce qu’on rêve, et marcher dans la cendre?
Que ferons-nous après? où descendre? où courir?
Plus de but à chercher! plus d’espoir qui séduise!
De la terre donnée à la terre promise
Nul retour; et Moïse a bien fait de mourir!

Restons loin des objets dont la vue est charmée.
L’arc-en-ciel est vapeur, le nuage est fumée.
L’idéal tombe en poudre au toucher du réel.
L’âme en songes de gloire ou d’amour se consume.
Comme un enfant qui souffle en un flocon d’écume,
Chaque homme enfle une bulle où se reflète un ciel!

Frêle bulle d’azur, au roseau suspendue,
Qui tremble au moindre choc et vacille éperdue!
Voilà tous nos projets, nos plaisirs, notre bruit!
Folle création qu’un zéphyr inquiète!
Sphère aux mille couleurs, d’une goutte d’eau faite!
Monde qu’un souffle crée et qu’un souffle détruit!

Le saurons-nous jamais? - Qui percera nos voiles,
Noirs firmaments, semés de nuages d’étoiles?
Mer, qui peut dans ton lit descendre et regarder?
Où donc est la science? Où donc est l’origine?
Cherchez au fond des mers cette perle divine,
Et, l’océan connu, l’âme reste à sonder!

Que faire et que penser? - Nier, douter, ou croire?
Carrefour ténébreux! triple route! nuit noire!
Le plus sage s’assied sous l’arbre du chemin,
Disant tout bas: J’irai, Seigneur, où tu m’envoies.
Il espère, et, de loin, dans les trois sombres voies,
Il écoute, pensif, marcher le genre humain!

XXVIII

À MES AMIS S.-B. ET L. B.

Buen viage! GOYA.

Amis, mes deux amis, mon peintre, mon poète!
Vous me manquez toujours, et mon âme inquiète
Vous redemande ici.
Des deux amis, si chers à ma lyre engourdie,
Pas un ne m’est resté. Je t’en veux, Normandie,
De me les prendre ainsi!

Ils emportent en eux toute ma poésie;
L’un, avec son doux luth de miel et d’ambroisie,
L’autre avec ses pinceaux.
Peinture et poésie où s’abreuvait ma muse,
Adieu votre onde! Adieu l’Alphée et l’Aréthuse
Dont je mêlais les eaux!

Adieu surtout ces coeurs et ces âmes si hautes,
Dont toujours j’ai trouvé pour mes maux et mes fautes
Si tendre la pitié!
Adieu toute la joie à leur commerce unie!
Car tous deux, ô douceur! si divers de génie,
Ont la même amitié!

Je crois d’ici les voir, le poète et le peintre.
Ils s’en vont, raisonnant de l’ogive et du cintre
Devant un vieux portail;
Ou, soudain, à loisir, changeant de fantaisie,
Poursuivent un oeil noir dessous la jalousie,
À travers l’éventail.

Oh! de la jeune fille et du vieux monastère,
Toi, peins-nous la beauté, toi, dis-nous le mystère.

Charmez-nous tour à tour.
À travers le blanc voile et la muraille grise
Votre oeil, ô mes amis, sait voir Dieu dans l’église,
Dans la femme l’amour!

Marchez, frères jumeaux, l’artiste avec l’apôtre!
L’un nous peint l’univers que nous explique l’autre;
Car, pour notre bonheur,
Chacun de vous sur terre a sa part qu’il réclame.
À toi, peintre, le monde! à toi, poète, l’âme!
À tous deux le Seigneur!

XXIX

LA PENTE DE LA RÊVERIE

Obscuritate rerum verba saepè obscurantur. GERVASIUS TILBERIENSIS.

Amis, ne creusez pas vos chères rêveries;
Ne fouillez pas le sol de vos plaines fleuries;
Et quand s'offre à vos yeux un océan qui dort,
Nagez à la surface ou jouez sur le bord;
Car la pensée est sombre! Une pente insensible
Va du monde réel à la sphère invisible;
La spirale est profonde, et quand on y descend,
Sans cesse se prolonge et va s'élargissant,
Et pour avoir touché quelque énigme fatale,
De ce voyage obscur souvent on revient pâle!

L'autre jour, il venait de pleuvoir, car l'été,
Cette année, est de bise et de pluie attristé,
Et le beau mois de mai dont le rayon nous leurre,
Prend le masque d'avril qui sourit et qui pleure.
J'avais levé le store aux gothiques couleurs.
Je regardais au loin les arbres et les fleurs.
Le soleil se jouait sur la pelouse verte
Dans les gouttes de pluie, et ma fenêtre ouverte
Apportait du jardin à mon esprit heureux
Un bruit d'enfants joueurs et d'oiseaux amoureux.
Paris, les grands ormeaux, maison, dôme, chaumière,
Tout flottait à mes yeux dans la riche lumière
De cet astre de mai dont le rayon charmant
Au bout de tout brin d'herbe allume un diamant!
Je me laissais aller à ces trois harmonies,
Printemps, matin, enfance, en ma retraite unies;
La Seine, ainsi que moi, laissait son flot vermeil
Suivre nonchalamment sa pente, et le soleil
Faisait évaporer à la fois sur les grèves

L’eau du fleuve en brouillards et ma pensée en rêves!

Alors, dans mon esprit, je vis autour de moi
Mes amis, non confus, mais tels que je les voi
Quand ils viennent le soir, troupe grave et fidèle,
Vous avec vos pinceaux dont la pointe étincelle,
Vous, laissant échapper vos vers au vol ardent,
Et nous tous écoutant en cercle, ou regardant.
Ils étaient bien là tous, je voyais leurs visages,
Tous, même les absents qui font de longs voyages.
Puis tous ceux qui sont morts vinrent après ceux-ci,
Avec l’air qu’ils avaient quand ils vivaient aussi.
Quand j’eus, quelques instants, des yeux de ma pensée,
Contemplé leur famille à mon foyer pressée,
Je vis trembler leurs traits confus, et par degrés
Pâlir en s’effaçant leurs fronts décolorés,
Et tous, comme un ruisseau qui dans un lac s’écoule,
Se perdre autour de moi dans une immense foule.
Foule sans nom! chaos! des voix, des yeux, des pas.
Ceux qu’on n’a jamais vus, ceux qu’on ne connaît pas.
Tous les vivants! - cités bourdonnant aux oreilles
Plus qu’un bois d’Amérique ou des ruches d’abeilles,
Caravanes campant sur le désert en feu,
Matelots dispersés sur l’océan de Dieu,
Et, comme un pont hardi sur l’onde qui chavire,
Jetant d’un monde à l’autre un sillon de navire,
Ainsi que l’araignée entre deux chênes verts
Jette un fil argenté qui flotte dans les airs!

Les deux pôles! le monde entier! la mer, la terre,
Alpes aux fronts de neige, Etnas au noir cratère,
Tout à la fois, automne, été, printemps, hiver,
Les vallons descendant de la terre à la mer
Et s’y changeant en golfe, et des mers aux campagnes
Les caps épanouis en chaînes de montagnes,
Et les grands continents, brumeux, verts ou dorés,
Par les grands océans sans cesse dévorés,

Tout, comme un paysage en une chambre noire
Se réfléchit avec ses rivières de moire.
Ses passants, ses brouillards flottant comme un duvet,
Tout dans mon esprit sombre allait, marchait, vivait!
Alors, en attachant, toujours plus attentives,
Ma pensée et ma vue aux mille perspectives
Que le souffle du vent ou le pas des saisons
M’ouvrait à tous moments dans tous les horizons,
Je vis soudain surgir, parfois du sein des ondes,
À côté des cités vivantes des deux mondes,
D’autres villes aux fronts étranges, inouïs,
Sépulcres ruinés des temps évanouis,
Pleines d’entassements, de tours de pyramides,
Baignant leurs pieds aux mers, leur tête aux cieux humides.
Quelques-unes sortaient de dessous des cités
Où les vivants encor bruissent agités,
Et des siècles passés jusqu’à l’âge où nous sommes
Je pus compter ainsi trois étages de Romes.
Et tandis qu’élevant leurs inquiètes voix,
Les cités des vivants résonnaient à la fois
Des murmures du peuple ou du pas des armées,
Ces villes du passé, muettes et fermées,
Sans fumée à leurs toits, sans rumeurs dans leurs seins,
Se taisaient, et semblaient des ruches sans essaims.

J’attendais. Un grand bruit se fit. Les races mortes
De ces villes en deuil vinrent ouvrir les portes,
Et je les vis marcher ainsi que les vivants,
Et jeter seulement plus de poussière aux vents.
Alors, tours, aqueducs, pyramides, colonnes,
Je vis l’intérieur des vieilles Babylones,
Les Carthages, les Tyrs, les Thèbes, les Sions,
D’où sans cesse sortaient des générations.

Ainsi j’embrassais tout: et la terre, et Cybèle;
La face antique auprès de la face nouvelle;
Le passé, le présent; les vivants et les morts;

Le genre humain complet comme au jour du remords.
Tout parlait à la fois, tout se faisait comprendre,
Le pelage d’Orphée et l’étrusque d’Évandre,
Les runes d’Irmensul, le sphinx égyptien,
La voix du nouveau monde aussi vieux que l’ancien.

Or ce que je voyais, je doute que je puisse
Vous le peindre: c’était comme un grand édifice
Formé d’entassements de siècles et de lieux;
On n’en pouvait trouver les bords ni les milieux;
À toutes les hauteurs, nations, peuples, races,
Mille ouvriers humains, laissant partout leurs traces,
Travaillaient nuit et jour, montant, croisant leurs pas,
Parlant chacun leur langue et ne s’entendant pas;
Et moi je parcourais, cherchant qui me réponde,
De degrés en degrés cette Babel du monde.

La nuit avec la foule, en ce rêve hideux,
Venait, s’épaississant ensemble toutes deux,
Et, dans ces régions que nul regard ne sonde,
Plus l’homme était nombreux, plus l’ombre était profonde.
Tout devenait douteux et vague, seulement
Un souffle qui passait de moment en moment,
Comme pour me montrer l’immense fourmilière,
Ouvrait dans l’ombre au loin des vallons de lumière,
Ainsi qu’un coup de vent fait sur les flots troublés
Blanchir l’écume, ou creuse une onde dans les blés.

Bientôt autour de moi les ténèbres s’accrurent,
L’horizon se perdit, les formes disparurent,
Et l’homme avec la chose et l’être avec l’esprit
Flottèrent à mon souffle, et le frisson me prit.
J’étais seul. Tout fuyait. L’étendue était sombre.
Je voyais seulement au loin, à travers l’ombre,
Comme d’un océan les flots noirs et pressés,
Dans l’espace et le temps les nombres entassés!

Oh! cette double mer du temps et de l’espace
Où le navire humain toujours passe et repasse,
Je voulus la sonder, je voulus en toucher
Le sable, y regarder, y fouiller, y chercher,
Pour vous en rapporter quelque richesse étrange,
Et dire si son lit est de roche ou de fange.
Mon esprit plongea donc sous ce flot inconnu,
Au profond de l’abîme il nagea seul et nu,
Toujours de l’ineffable allant à l’invisible...
Soudain il s’en revint avec un cri terrible,
Ébloui, haletant, stupide, épouvanté,
Car il avait au fond trouvé l’éternité.

XXX

SOUVENIR D’ENFANCE

à Joseph, comte de S.

Cuncta supercilio. HORACE.

Dans une grande fête, un jour, au Panthéon,
J’avais sept ans, je vis passer Napoléon.

Pour voir cette figure illustre et solennelle,
Je m’étais échappé de l’aile maternelle;
Car il tenait déjà mon esprit inquiet;
Mais ma mère aux doux yeux, qui souvent s’effrayait
En m’entendant parler guerre, assauts et bataille,
Craignait pour moi la foule, à cause de ma taille.

Et ce qui me frappa, dans ma sainte terreur,
Quand au front du cortège apparut l’empereur,
Tandis que les enfants demandaient à leurs mères
Si c’est là ce héros dont on fait cent chimères,
Ce ne fut pas de voir tout ce peuple à grand bruit
Le suivre comme on suit un phare dans la nuit,
Et se montrer de loin sur sa tête suprême
Ce chapeau tout usé plus beau qu’un diadème,
Ni, pressés sur ses pas, dix vassaux couronnés
Regarder en tremblant ses pieds éperonnés,
Ni ses vieux grenadiers, se faisant violence,
Des cris universels s’enivrer en silence;
Non, tandis qu’à genoux la ville tout en feu,
Joyeuse comme on est lorsqu’on a qu’un seul voeu,
Qu’on n’est qu’un même peuple et qu’ensemble on respire
Chantait en choeur: VEILLONS AU SALUT DE L’EMPIRE!

Ce qui me frappa, dis-je, et me resta gravé,

Même après que le cri sur sa route élevé
Se fut évanoui dans ma jeune mémoire,
Ce fut de voir, parmi ces fanfares de gloire,
Dans le bruit qu’il faisait, cet homme souverain
Passer, muet et grave, ainsi qu’un dieu d’airain!

Et le soir, curieux, je le dis à mon père,
Pendant qu’il défaisait son vêtement de guerre,
Et que je me jouais sur son dos indulgent
De l’épaulette d’or aux étoiles d’argent.

Mon père secoua la tête sans réponse.

Mais souvent une idée en notre esprit s’enfonce,
Ce qui nous a frappés nous revient par moments,
Et l’enfance naïve a ses étonnements.

Le lendemain, pour voir le soleil qui s’incline,
J’avais suivi mon père du haut de la colline
Qui domine Paris du côté du levant,
Et nous allions tous deux, lui pensant, moi rêvant.
Cet homme en mon esprit restait comme un prodige,
Et, parlant à mon père: “ Ô mon père, lui dis-je,
Pourquoi notre empereur, cet envoyé de Dieu,
Lui qui fait tout mouvoir et qui met tout en feu,
A-t-il ce regard froid et cet air immobile?”
Mon père dans ses mains prit ma tête débile,
Et, me montrant au loin l’horizon spacieux:
“ Vois, mon fils! cette terre, immobile à tes yeux,
Plus que l’air, plus que l’onde et la flamme, est émue,
Car le germe de tout dans son ventre remue.
Dans ses flancs ténébreux, nuit et jour, en rampant,
Elle sent se plonger la racine, serpent
Qui s’abreuve aux ruisseaux des sèves toujours prêtes,
Et fouille et boit sans cesse avec ses mille têtes.
Mainte flamme y ruisselle, et tantôt lentement
Imbibe le cristal qui devient diamant,

Tantôt, dans quelque mine éblouissante et sombre,
Allume des monceaux d’escarboucles sans nombre,
Ou, s’échappant au jour, plus magnifique encor,
Au front du vieil Etna met une aigrette d’or.
Toujours l’intérieur de la terre travaille.
Son flanc universel incessamment tressaille.
Goutte à goutte, et sans bruit qui réponde à son bruit,
La source de tout fleuve y filtre dans la nuit.
Elle porte à la fois, sur sa face où nous sommes,
Les blés et les cités, les forêts et les hommes.
Vois, tout est vert au loin, tout rit, tout est vivant.
Elle livre le chêne et le brin d’herbe au vent.
Les fruits et les épis la couvrent à cette heure.
Eh bien! déjà, tandis que ton regard l’effleure,
Dans son sein, que n’épuise aucun enfantement,
Les futures moissons tremblent confusément!

“ Ainsi travaille, enfant, l’âme active et féconde
Du poète qui crée et du soldat qui fonde.
Mais ils n’en font rien voir. De la flamme à pleins bords,
Qui les brûle au dedans, rien ne luit au dehors.
Ainsi Napoléon, que l’éclat environne
Et qui fit tant de bruit en forgeant sa couronne,
Ce chef que tout célèbre et que pourtant tu vois
Immobile et muet, passer sur le pavois,
Quand le peuple l’étreint, sent en lui ses pensées,
Qui l’étreignent aussi, se mouvoir plus pressées.
Déjà peut-être en lui mille choses se font,
Et tout l’avenir germe en son cerveau profond.
Déjà dans sa pensée, immense et clairvoyante,
L’Europe ne fait plus qu’une France géante,
Berlin, Vienne, Madrid, Moscou, Londres, Milan,
Viennent rendre à Paris hommage une fois l’an,
Le Vatican n’est plus que le vassal du Louvre,
La terre à chaque instant sous les vieux trônes s’ouvre,
Et de tous leurs débris sort pour le genre humain
Un autre Charlemagne, un autre globe en main!

Et, dans le même esprit où ce grand dessein roule,
Les bataillons futurs déjà marchent en foule,
Le conscrit résigné, sous un avis fréquent,
Se dresse, le tambour résonne au front du camp,
D’ouvriers et d’outils Cherbourg couvre sa grève,
Le vaisseau colossal sur le chantier s’élève,
L’obusier rouge encor sort du fourneau qui bout,
Une marine flotte, une armée est debout!
Car la guerre toujours l’illumine et l’enflamme,
Et peut-être déjà, dans la nuit de cette âme,
Sous ce crâne, où le monde en silence est couvé,
D’un second Austerlitz le soleil s’est levé!”

Plus tard, une autre fois, je vis passer cet homme,
Plus grand dans son Paris que César dans sa Rome.
Des discours de mon père alors je me souvins.
On l’entourait encor d’honneurs presque divins,
Et je lui retrouvai, rêveur à son passage,
Et la même pensée et le même visage.
Il méditait toujours son projet surhumain.
Cent aigles l’escortaient en empereur romain.
Ses régiments marchaient, enseignes déployées;
Ses lourds canons, baissant leurs boucles essuyées,
Couraient, et, traversant la foule aux pas confus,
Avec un bruit d’airain sautaient sur leurs affûts.
Mais bientôt, au soleil, cette tête admirée
Disparut dans un flot de poussière dorée,
Il passa. Cependant son nom sur la cité
Bondissait, des canons aux cloches rejeté;
Son cortège emplissait de tumulte les rues,
Et, par mille clameurs de sa présence accrues,
Par mille cris de joie et d’amour furieux,
Le peuple saluait ce passant glorieux!

XXXI

À MADAME MARIE M.

Ave, Maria, gratia plena.

Oh! votre oeil est timide et votre front est doux.
Mais quoique, par pudeur ou par pitié pour nous,
Vous teniez secrète votre âme,
Quand du souffle d’en haut votre coeur est touché,
Votre coeur, comme un feu sous la cendre caché,
Soudain étincelle et s’enflamme.

Élevez-là souvent cette voix qui se tait.
Quand vous vîntes au jour un rossignol chantait;
Un astre charmant vous vit naître.
Enfant, pour vous marquer du poétique sceau,
Vous eûtes au chevet de votre heureux berceau
Un dieu, votre père peut-être!

Deux vierges, Poésie et Musique, deux soeurs,
Vous font une pensée infinie en douceurs;
Votre génie a deux aurores,
Et votre esprit tantôt s’épanche en vers touchants,
Tantôt sur le clavier, qui frémit sous vos chants,
S’éparpille en notes sonores!

Oh! vous faites rêver le poète, le soir!
Souvent il songe à vous, lorsque le ciel est noir,
Quand minuit déroule ses voiles;
Car l’âme du poète, âme d’ombre et d’amour,
Est une fleur des nuits qui s’ouvre après le jour
Et s’épanouit aux étoiles!

XXXII

POUR LES PAUVRES

Qui donne au pauvre prête à Dieu. V.H.

Dans vos fêtes d’hiver, riches, heureux du monde,
Quand le bal tournoyant de ses feux vous inonde,
Quand partout à l’entour de vos pas vous voyez
Briller et rayonner cristaux, miroirs, balustres,
Candélabres ardents, cercle étoilé des lustres,
Et la danse, et la joie au front des conviés;

Tandis qu’un timbre d’or sonnant dans vos demeures
Vous change en joyeux chant la voix grave des heures,
Oh! songez-vous parfois que, de faim dévoré,
Peut-être un indigent dans les carrefours sombres
S’arrête, et voit danser vos lumineuses ombres
Aux vitres du salon doré;

Songez-vous qu’il est là sous le givre et la neige,
Ce père sans travail que la famine assiège?
Et qu’il se dit tout bas: “ Pour un seul que de biens!
À son large festin que d’amis se récrient!
Ce riche est bien heureux, ses enfants lui sourient!
Rien que dans leurs jouets que de pain pour les miens!”

Et puis à votre fête il compare en son âme
Son foyer où jamais ne rayonne une flamme,
Ses enfants affamés, et leur mère en lambeau,
Et, sur un peu de paille, étendue et muette,
L’aïeule, que l’hiver, hélas! a déjà faite
Assez froide pour le tombeau!

Car Dieu mit ces degrés aux fortunes humaines.
Les uns vont tout courbés sous le fardeau des peines;

Au banquet du bonheur bien peu sont conviés.
Tous n’y sont point assis également à l’aise.
Une loi, qui d’en bas semble injuste et mauvaise,
Dit aux uns: JOUISSEZ! aux autres: ENVIEZ!

Cette pensée est sombre, amère, inexorable,
Et fermente en silence au coeur du misérable.
Riches, heureux du jour, qu’endort la volupté,
Que ce ne soit pas lui qui des mains vous arrache
Tous ces biens superflus où son regard s’attache; -
Oh! que ce soit la charité!

L’ardente charité, que le pauvre idolâtre!
Mère de ceux pour qui la fortune est marâtre,
Qui relève et soutient ceux qu’on foule en passant,
Qui, lorsqu’il le faudra, se sacrifiant toute,
Comme le Dieu martyr dont elle suit la route,
Dira: “ Buvez! mangez! c’est ma chair et mon sang.”

Que ce soit elle, oh! oui, riches! que ce soit elle
Qui, bijoux, diamants, rubans, hochets, dentelle,
Perles, saphirs, joyaux toujours faux, toujours vains,
Pour nourrir l’indigent et pour sauver vos âmes,
Des bras de vos enfants et du sein de vos femmes
Arrache tout à pleines mains!

Donnez, riches! L’aumône est soeur de la prière.
Hélas! quand un vieillard, sur votre seuil de pierre,
Tout roidi par l’hiver, en vain tombe à genoux;
Quand les petits enfants, les mains de froid rougies,
Ramassent sous vos pieds les miettes des orgies,
La face du Seigneur se détourne de vous.

Donnez! afin que Dieu, qui dote les familles,
Donne à vos fils la force, et la grâce à vos filles;
Afin que votre vigne ait toujours un doux fruit;
Afin qu’un blé plus mûr fasse plier vos granges;

Afin d’être meilleurs; afin de voir les anges
Passer dans vos rêves la nuit!

Donnez! il vient un jour où la terre nous laisse.
Vos aumônes là-haut vous font une richesse.
Donnez! afin qu’on dise: “ Il a pitié de nous!”
Afin que l’indigent que glacent les tempêtes,
Que le pauvre qui souffre à côté de vos fêtes,
Au seuil de vos palais fixe un oeil moins jaloux.

Donnez! pour être aimés du Dieu qui se fit homme,
Pour que le méchant même en s’inclinant vous nomme,
Pour que votre foyer soit calme et fraternel;
Donnez! afin qu’un jour à votre heure dernière,
Contre tous vos péchés vous ayez la prière
D’un mendiant puissant au ciel!

XXXIII

A , TRAPPISTE À LA MEILLERAYE

T'is vain to struggle - let me perish young -
Live as I have lived; and love as I have loved;
To dust if I return, from dust I sprung,
And then, at least, my heart can ne'er be moved. BYRON.

Mon frère, la tempête a donc été bien forte,
Le vent impétueux qui souffle et nous emporte
De récif en récif
A donc, quand vous partiez, d'une aile bien profonde
Creusé le vaste abîme et bouleversé l'onde
Autour de votre esquif,

Que tour à tour, en hâte, et de peur du naufrage,
Pour alléger la nef en butte au sombre orage,
En proie au flot amer,
Il a fallu, plaisirs, liberté, fantaisie,
Famille, amour, trésors, jusqu'à la poésie,
Tout jeter à la mer!

Et qu'enfin, seul et nu, vous voguez solitaire,
Allant où va le flot, sans jamais prendre terre,
Calme, vivant de peu.
Ayant dans votre esquif, qui des nôtres s'isole,
Deux choses seulement, la voile et la boussole,
Votre âme et votre Dieu!

XXXIV

BIÈVRE

À Mademoiselle Louise B.

Un horizon fait à souhait pour le plaisir des yeux. FÉNELON.

I

Oui, c'est bien le vallon! le vallon calme et sombre!
Ici l'été plus frais s'épanouit à l'ombre.
Ici durent longtemps les fleurs qui durent peu.
Ici l'âme contemple, écoute, adore, aspire,
Et prend pitié du monde, étroit et fol empire
Où l'homme tous les jours fait moins de place à Dieu!

Une rivière au fond; des bois sur les deux pentes.
Là, des ormeaux, brodés de cent vignes grimpantes;
Des prés, où le faucheur brunit son bras nerveux;
Là, des saules pensifs qui pleurent sur la rive,
Et, comme une baigneuse indolente et naïve,
Laissent tremper dans l'eau le bout de leurs cheveux.

Là-bas, un gué bruyant dans des eaux poissonneuses
Qui montrent aux passants les jambes des faneuses;
Des carrés de blé d'or; des étangs au flot clair;
Dans l'ombre, un mur de craie et des toits noirs de suie;
Les ocres des ravins, déchirés par la pluie;
Et l'aqueduc au loin qui semble un pont-de-l'air.

Et, pour couronnement à ces collines vertes,
Les profondeurs du ciel toutes grandes ouvertes,
Le ciel, bleu pavillon par Dieu même construit,
Qui, le jour, emplissant de plis d'azur l'espace,
Semble un dais suspendu sur le soleil qui passe,

Et dont on ne peut voir les clous d’or que la nuit!

Oui, c’est un de ces lieux où notre coeur sent vivre
Quelque chose des cieux qui flotte et qui l’enivre;
Un de ces lieux qu’enfant j’aimais et je rêvais,
Dont la beauté sereine, inépuisable, intime,
Verse à l’âme un oubli sérieux et sublime
De tout ce que la terre et l’homme ont de mauvais!

II

Si dès l’aube on suit les lisières
Du bois, abri des jeunes faons,
Par l’âpre chemin dont les pierres
Offensent les mains des enfants,
À l’heure où le soleil s’élève,
Où l’arbre sent monter la sève,
La vallée est comme un beau rêve.
La brume écarte son rideau.
Partout la nature s’éveille;
La fleur s’ouvre, rose et vermeille;
La brise y suspend une abeille,
La rosée une goutte d’eau!

Et dans ce charmant paysage
Où l’esprit flotte, où l’oeil s’enfuit,
Le buisson, l’oiseau de passage,
L’herbe qui tremble et qui reluit,
Le vieil arbre que l’âge ploie,
Le donjon qu’un moulin coudoie,
Le ruisseau de moire et de soie,
Le champ où dorment les aïeux,
Ce qu’on voit pleurer ou sourire,
Ce qui chante et ce qui soupire,
Ce qui parle et ce qui respire,
Tout fait un bruit harmonieux!

III

Et si le soir, après mille errantes pensées,
De sentiers en sentiers en marchant dispersées,
Du haut de la colline on descend vers ce toit
Qui vous a tout le jour, dans votre rêverie,
Fait regarder en bas, au fond de la prairie,
Comme une belle fleur qu’on voit;

Et si vous êtes là, vous dont la main de flamme
Fait parler au clavier la langue de votre âme;
Si c’est un des moments, doux et mystérieux,
Où la musique, esprit d’extase et de délire
Dont les ailes de feu font le bruit d’une lyre,
Réverbère en vos chants la splendeur de vos yeux;

Si les petits enfants, qui vous cherchent sans cesse,
Mêlent leur joyeux rire au chant qui vous oppresse;
Si votre noble père à leurs jeux turbulents
Sourit, en écoutant votre hymne commencée,
Lui, le sage et l’heureux, dont la jeune pensée
Se couronne de cheveux blancs;

Alors, à cette voix qui remue et pénètre,
Sous ce ciel étoilé qui luit à la fenêtre,
On croit à la famille, au repos, au bonheur;
Le coeur se fond en joie, en amour, en prière;
On sent venir des pleurs au bord de sa paupière;
On lève au ciel les mains en s’écriant: Seigneur!

IV

Et l’on ne songe plus, tant notre âme saisie
Se perd dans la nature et dans la poésie,
Que tout près, par les bois et les ravins caché,
Derrière le ruban de ces collines bleues,
À quatre de ces pas que nous nommons des lieues,

Le géant Paris est couché!

On ne s’informe plus si la ville fatale,
Du monde en fusion ardente capitale,
Ouvre et ferme à tel jour ses cratères fumants;
Et de quel air les rois, à l’instant où nous sommes,
Regardent bouillonner dans ce Vésuve d’hommes
La lave des événements!

XXXV

SOLEILS COUCHANTS

Merveilleux tableaux que la vue découvre à la pensée. CH. NODIER.

I

J’aime les soirs sereins et beaux, j’aime les soirs,
Soit qu’ils dorent le front des antiques manoirs
Ensevelis dans les feuillages;
Soit que la brume au loin s’allonge en bancs de feu;
Soit que mille rayons brisent dans un ciel bleu
À des archipels de nuages.

Oh! regardez le ciel! cent nuages mouvants,
Amoncelés là-haut sous le souffle des vents,
Groupent leurs formes inconnues;
Sous leurs flots par moments flamboie un pâle éclair,
Comme si tout à coup quelque géant de l’air
Tirait son glaive dans les nues.

Le soleil, à travers leurs ombres, brille encor;
Tantôt fait, à l’égal des larges dômes d’or,
Luire le toit d’une chaumière;
Ou dispute aux brouillards les vagues horizons;
Ou découpe, en tombant sur les sombres gazons,
Comme de grands lacs de lumière.

Puis voilà qu’on croit voir, dans le ciel balayé,
Pendre un grand crocodile au dos large et rayé,
Aux trois rangs de dents acérées;
Sous son ventre plombé glisse un rayon du soir;
Cent nuages ardents luisent sous son flanc noir
Comme des écailles dorées.

Puis se dresse un palais; puis l’air tremble, et tout fuit.
L’édifice effrayant des nuages détruit
S’écroule en ruines pressées;
Il jonche au loin le ciel, et ses cônes vermeils
Pendent, la pointe en bas, sur nos têtes, pareils
À des montagnes renversées.

Ces nuages de plomb, d’or, de cuivre, de fer,
Où l’ouragan, la trombe, et la foudre, et l’enfer
Dorment avec de sourds murmures,
C’est Dieu qui les suspend en foule aux cieux profonds,
Comme un guerrier qui pend aux poutres des plafonds
Ses retentissantes armures.

Tout s’en va! Le soleil, d’en haut précipité,
Comme un globe d’airain qui, rouge, est rejeté
Dans les fournaises remuées,
En tombant sur leurs flots que son choc désunit
Fait en flocons de feu jaillir jusqu’au zénith
L’ardente écume des nuées.

Oh! contemplez le ciel! et dès qu’a fui le jour,
En tout temps, en tout lieu, d’un ineffable amour,
Regardez à travers ses voiles;
Un mystère est au fond de leur grave beauté,
L’hiver, quand ils sont noirs comme un linceul, l’été,
Quand la nuit les brode d’étoiles.

II

Le jour s’enfuit des cieux; sous leur transparent voile
De moments en moments se hasarde une étoile;
La nuit, pas à pas, monte au trône obscur des soirs;
Un coin du ciel est brun, l’autre lutte avec l’ombre,
Et déjà, succédant au couchant rouge et sombre,
Le crépuscule gris meurt sur les coteaux noirs.

Et là-bas, allumant ses vitres étoilées,
Avec sa cathédrale aux flèches dentelées,
Les tours de son palais, les tours de sa prison,
Avec ses hauts clochers, sa bastille obscurcie,
Posée au bord du ciel comme une longue scie,
La ville aux mille toits découpe l'horizon.

Oh! qui m'emportera sur quelque tour sublime
D'où la cité sous moi s'ouvre comme un abîme!
Que j'entende, écoutant la ville où nous rampons,
Mourir sa vaste voix, qui semble un cri de veuve,
Et qui, le jour, gémit plus haut que le grand fleuve,
Le grand fleuve irrité, luttant contre les ponts!

Que je voie, à mes yeux en fuyant apparues,
Les étoiles des chars se croiser dans les rues,
Et serpenter le peuple en l'étroit carrefour,
Et tarir la fumée au bout des cheminées,
Et, glissant sur le front des maisons blasonnées,
Cent clartés naître, luire et passer tour à tour!

Que la vieille cité, devant moi, sur sa couche
S'étende, qu'un soupir s'échappe de sa bouche,
Comme si de fatigue on l'entendait gémir!
Que, veillant seul, debout sur son front que je foule,
Avec mille bruits sourds d'océan et de foule,
Je regarde à mes pieds la géante dormir!

III

Plus loin! allons plus loin! - Aux feux du couchant sombre,
J'aime à voir dans les champs croître et marcher mon ombre.
Et puis, la ville est là! je l'entends, je la voi.
Pour que j'écoute en paix ce que dit ma pensée,
Ce Paris, à la voix cassée,
Bourdonne encor trop près de moi.

Je veux fuir assez loin pour qu’un buisson me cache
Ce brouillard, que son front porte comme un panache,
Ce nuage éternel sur ses tours arrêté;
Pour que du moucheron, qui bruit et qui passe,
L’humble et grêle murmure efface
La grande voix de la cité!

IV

Oh! sur des ailes dans les nues
Laissez-moi fuir! laissez-moi fuir!
Loin des régions inconnues
C’est assez rêver et languir!
Laissez-moi fuir vers d’autres mondes.
C’est assez, dans les nuits profondes,
Suivre un phare, chercher un mot.
C’est assez de songe et de doute.
Cette voix que d’en bas j’écoute,
Peut-être on l’entend mieux là-haut.

Allons! des ailes ou des voiles!
Allons! un vaisseau tout armé!
Je veux voir les autres étoiles
Et la croix du sud enflammé.
Peut-être dans cette autre terre
Trouve-t-on la clef du mystère
Caché sous l’ordre universel;
Et peut-être aux fils de la lyre
Est-il plus facile de lire
Dans cette autre page du ciel!

V

Quelquefois, sous les plis des nuages trompeurs,
Loin dans l’air, à travers les brèches des vapeurs
Par le vent du soir remuées,
Derrière les derniers brouillards, plus loin encor,

Apparaissent soudain les milles étages d’or
D’un édifice de nuées!

Et l’oeil épouvanté, par delà tous nos cieux,
Sur une île de l’air au vol audacieux,
Dans l’éther libre aventurée,
L’oeil croit voir jusqu’au ciel monter, monter toujours,
Avec ses escaliers, ses ponts, ses grandes tours,
Quelque Babel démesurée!

VI

Le soleil s’est couché ce soir dans les nuées;
Demain viendra l’orage, et le soir, et la nuit;
Puis l’aube, et ses clartés de vapeurs obstruées;
Puis les nuits, puis les jours, pas du temps qui s’enfuit!

Tous ces jours passeront; ils passeront en foule
Sur la face des mers, sur la face des monts,
Sur les fleuves d’argent, sur les forêts où roule
Comme un hymne confus des morts que nous aimons.

Et la face des eaux, et le front des montagnes,
Ridés et non vieillis, et les bois toujours verts
S’iront rajeunissant; le fleuve des campagnes
Prendra sans cesse aux monts le flot qu’il donne aux mers.

Mais moi, sous chaque jour courbant plus bas ma tête,
Je passe, et, refroidi sous ce soleil joyeux,
Je m’en irai bientôt, au milieu de la fête,
Sans que rien manque au monde, immense et radieux!

XXXVI

Un jour vient où soudain l’artiste généreux

Oh! talk not to me of a name great in story;
The days of our youth are the days of our glory;
And the myrtle and ivy of sweet two-and-twenty
Are worth all your laurels, though ever so plenty. BYRON.

Un jour vient où soudain l’artiste généreux
À leur poids sur son front sent les ans plus nombreux.
Un matin il s’éveille avec cette pensée:
— Jeunesse aux jours dorés, je t’ai donc dépensée!
Oh! qu’il m’en reste peu! Je vois le fond du sort,
Comme un prodigue en pleurs le fond du coffre-fort. -

Il sent, sous le soleil qui plus ardent s’épanche,
Comme à midi les fleurs, sa tête qui se penche;
Si d’aventure il trouve, en suivant son destin,
Le gazon sous ses pas mouillé comme au matin,
Il dit, car il sait bien que son aube est passée:
— C’est de la pluie, hélas! et non de la rosée! -

C’en est fait. Son génie est plus mûr désormais.
Son aile atteint peut-être à de plus fiers sommets;
La fumée est plus rare au foyer qu’il allume;
Son astre haut monté soulève moins de brume;
Son coursier applaudi parcourt mieux le champ clos;
Mais il n’a plus en lui, pour l’épandre à grands flots
Sur des oeuvres, de grâce et d’amour couronnées,
Le frais enchantement de ses jeunes années!
Oh! rien ne rend cela! - Quand il s’en va cherchant
Ces pensers de hasard que l’on trouve en marchant,
Et qui font que le soir l’artiste chez son hôte
Rentre le coeur plus fier et la tête plus haute;
Quand il sort pour rêver, et qu’il erre incertain,

Soit dans les prés lustrés, au gazon de satin,
Soit dans un bois qu’emplit cette chanson sonore
Que le petit oiseau chante à la jeune aurore,
Soit dans le carrefour bruyant et fréquenté,
 — Car Paris et la foule ont aussi leur beauté,
Et les passants ne sont, le soir, sur les quais sombres,
Qu’un flux et qu’un reflux de lumières et d’ombres; -
Toujours, au fond de tout, toujours dans son esprit,
Même quand l’art le tient, l’enivre et lui sourit,
Même dans ses chansons, même dans ses pensées
Les plus joyeusement écloses et bercées,
Il retrouve, attristé, le regret morne et froid
Du passé disparu, du passé, quel qu’il soit.

XXXVII

LA PRIÈRE POUR TOUS

Ora pro nobis!

I

Ma fille, va prier! - Vois, la nuit est venue.
Une planète d’or là-bas perce la nue;
La brume des coteaux fait trembler le contour;
À peine un char lointain glisse dans l’ombre... Écoute!
Tout rentre et se repose; et l’arbre de la route
Secoue au vent du soir la poussière du jour!

Le crépuscule, ouvrant la nuit qui les recèle,
Fait jaillir chaque étoile en ardente étincelle;
L’occident amincit sa frange de carmin;
La nuit de l’eau dans l’ombre argente la surface;
Sillons, sentiers, buissons, tout se mêle et s’efface;
Le passant inquiet doute de son chemin.

Le jour est pour le mal, la fatigue et la haine.
Prions, voici la nuit! la nuit grave et sereine!
Le vieux pâtre, le vent aux brèches de la tour,
Les étangs, les troupeaux avec leur voix cassée,
Tout souffre et tout se plaint. La nature lassée
A besoin de sommeil, de prière et d’amour!

C’est l’heure où les enfants parlent avec les anges.
Tandis que nous courons à nos plaisirs étranges,
Tous les petits enfants, les yeux levés au ciel,
Mains jointes et pieds nus, à genoux sur la pierre,
Disant à la même heure une même prière,
Demandent pour nous grâce au père universel!

Et puis ils dormiront. - Alors, épars dans l’ombre,
Les rêves d’or, essaim tumultueux, sans nombre,
Qui naît aux derniers bruits du jour à son déclin,
Voyant de loin leur souffle et leurs boucles vermeilles,
Comme volent aux fleurs de joyeuses abeilles,
Viendront s’abattre en foule à leurs rideaux de lin!

Ô sommeil du berceau! prière de l’enfance!
Voix qui toujours caresse et qui jamais n’offense!
Douce religion, qui s’égaye et qui rit!
Prélude du concert de la nuit solennelle!
Ainsi que l’oiseau met sa tête sous son aile,
L’enfant dans la prière endort son jeune esprit!

II

Ma fille, va prier! - D’abord, surtout, pour celle
Qui berça tant de nuits ta couche qui chancelle,
Pour celle qui te prit jeune âme dans le ciel,
Et qui te mit au monde, et depuis, tendre mère,
Faisant pour toi deux parts dans cette vie amère,
Toujours a bu l’absinthe et t’a laissé le miel!

Puis ensuite pour moi! j’en ai plus besoin qu’elle!
Elle est, ainsi que toi, bonne, simple et fidèle!
Elle a le coeur limpide et le front satisfait.
Beaucoup ont sa pitié, nul ne lui fait envie;
Sage et douce, elle prend patiemment la vie;
Elle souffre le mal sans savoir qui le fait.

Tout en cueillant des fleurs, jamais sa main novice
N’a touché seulement à l’écorce du vice;
Nul piège ne l’attire à son riant tableau;
Elle est pleine d’oubli pour les choses passées;
Elle ne connaît pas les mauvaises pensées
Qui passent dans l’esprit comme une ombre sur l’eau.

Elle ignore - à jamais ignore-les comme elle! -
Ces misères du monde où notre âme se mêle,
Faux plaisirs, vanités, remords, soucis rongeurs,
Passions sur le coeur flottant comme une écume,
Intimes souvenirs de honte et d'amertume
Qui font monter au front de subites rougeurs!

Moi, je sais mieux la vie; et je pourrai te dire,
Quand tu seras plus grande et qu'il faudra t'instruire,
Que poursuivre l'empire et la fortune et l'art,
C'est folie et néant; que l'urne aléatoire
Nous jette bien souvent la honte pour la gloire,
Et que l'on perd son âme à ce jeu de hasard!

L'âme en vivant s'altère; et, quoique en toute chose
La fin soit transparente et laisse voir la cause,
On vieillit sous le vice et l'erreur abattu;
À force de marcher l'homme erre, l'esprit doute.
Tous laissent quelque chose aux buissons de la route,
Les troupeaux leur toison, et l'homme sa vertu!

Va donc prier pour moi! - Dis pour toute prière:
— Seigneur, Seigneur mon Dieu, vous êtes notre père,
Grâce, vous êtes bon! grâce, vous êtes grand! -
Laisse aller ta parole où ton âme l'envoie;
Ne t'inquiète pas, toute chose a sa voie,
Ne t'inquiète pas du chemin qu'elle prend!

Il n'est rien ici-bas qui ne trouve sa pente.
Le fleuve jusqu'aux mers dans les plaines serpente;
L'abeille sait la fleur qui recèle le miel.
Toute aile vers son but incessamment retombe,
L'aigle vole au soleil, le vautour à la tombe,
L'hirondelle au printemps, et la prière au ciel!

Lorsque pour moi vers Dieu ta voix s'est envolée,
Je suis comme l'esclave, assis dans la vallée,

Qui dépose sa charge aux bornes du chemin;
Je me sens plus léger; car ce fardeau de peine,
De fautes et d’erreurs qu’en gémissant je traîne,
Ta prière en chantant l’emporte dans sa main!

Va prier pour ton père! - Afin que je sois digne
De voir passer en rêve un ange au vol de cygne,
Pour que mon âme brûle avec les encensoirs!
Efface mes péchés sous ton souffle candide,
Afin que mon coeur soit innocent et splendide
Comme un pavé d’autel qu’on lave tous les soirs!

III

Prie encor pour tous ceux qui passent
Sur cette terre des vivants!
Pour ceux dont les sentiers s’effacent
À tous les flots, à tous les vents!
Pour l’insensé qui met sa joie
Dans l’éclat d’un manteau de soie,
Dans la vitesse d’un cheval!
Pour quiconque souffre et travaille,
Qu’il s’en revienne ou qu’il s’en aille,
Qu’il fasse le bien ou le mal!

Pour celui que le plaisir souille
D’embrassements jusqu’au matin,
Qui prend l’heure où l’on s’agenouille
Pour sa danse et pour son festin,
Qui fait hurler l’orgie infâme
Au même instant du soir où l’âme
Répète son hymne assidu,
Et, quand la prière est éteinte,
Poursuit, comme s’il avait crainte
Que Dieu ne l’ait pas entendu!

Enfant! pour les vierges voilées!

Pour le prisonnier dans sa tour!
Pour les femmes échevelées
Qui vendent le doux nom d’amour!
Pour l’esprit qui rêve et médite!
Pour l’impie à la voix maudite
Qui blasphème la sainte loi! -
Car la prière est infinie!
Car tu crois pour celui qui nie!
Car l’enfance tient lieu de foi!

Prie aussi pour ceux que recouvre
La pierre du tombeau dormant,
Noir précipice qui s’entrouvre
Sous notre foule à tout moment!
Toutes ces âmes en disgrâce
Ont besoin qu’on les débarrasse
De la vieille rouille du corps.
Souffrent-elles moins pour se taire?
Enfant! regardons sous la terre!
Il faut avoir pitié des morts!

IV

À genoux, à genoux, à genoux sur la terre
Où ton père a son père, où ta mère a sa mère,
Où tout ce qui vécut dort d’un sommeil profond!
Abîme où la poussière est mêlée aux poussières,
Où sous son père encore on retrouve des pères,
Comme l’onde sous l’onde en une mer sans fond!

Enfant! quand tu t’endors, tu ris! L’essaim des songes
Tourbillonne, joyeux, dans l’ombre où tu te plonges,
S’effarouche à ton souffle, et puis revient encor;
Et tu rouvres enfin tes yeux divins que j’aime,
En même temps que l’aube, oeil céleste elle-même,
Entrouvre à l’horizon sa paupière aux cils d’or!

Mais eux, si tu savais de quel sommeil ils dorment!
Leurs lits sont froids et lourds à leurs os qu’ils déforment.
Les anges autour d’eux ne chantent pas en choeur.
De tout ce qu’ils ont fait le rêve les accable.
Pas d’aube pour leur nuit; le remords implacable
S’est fait ver du sépulcre et leur ronge le coeur.

Tu peux avec un mot, tu peux d’une parole
Faire que le remords prenne une aile et s’envole!
Qu’une douce chaleur réjouisse les os!
Qu’un rayon touche encor leur paupière ravie,
Et qu’il leur vienne un bruit de lumière et de vie,
Quelque chose des vents, des forêts et des eaux!

Oh! dis-moi, quand tu vas, jeune et déjà pensive,
Errer au bord d’un flot qui se plaint sur sa rive,
Sous des arbres dont l’ombre emplit l’âme d’effroi,
Parfois, dans les soupirs de l’onde et de la brise,
N’entends-tu pas de souffle et de voix qui te dise:
— Enfant! quand vous prierez, prierez-vous pas pour moi? -

C’est la plainte des morts! - Les morts pour qui l’on prie
Ont sur leur lit de terre une herbe plus fleurie.
Nul démon ne leur jette un sourire moqueur.
Ceux qu’on oublie, hélas! - leur nuit est froide et sombre,
Toujours quelque arbre affreux, qui les tient sous son ombre,
Leur plonge sans pitié des racines au coeur!

Prie! afin que le père, et l’oncle, et les aïeules,
Qui ne demandent plus que nos prières seules,
Tressaillent dans leur tombe en s’entendant nommer,
Sachent que sur la terre on se souvient encore,
Et, comme le sillon qui sent la fleur éclore,
Sentent dans leur oeil vide une larme germer!

V

Ce n’est pas à moi, ma colombe,
De prier pour tous les mortels,
Pour les vivants dont la foi tombe,
Pour tous ceux qu’enferme la tombe,
Cette racine des autels!

Ce n’est pas moi, dont l’âme est vaine,
Pleine d’erreurs, vide de foi,
Qui prierais pour la race humaine,
Puisque ma voix suffit à peine,
Seigneur, à vous prier pour moi!

Non, si pour la terre méchante
Quelqu’un peut prier aujourd’hui,
C’est toi, dont la parole chante,
C’est toi! ta prière innocente,
Enfant, peut se charger d’autrui!

Ah! demande à ce père auguste
Qui sourit à ton oraison
Pourquoi l’arbre étouffe l’arbuste,
Et qui fait du juste à l’injuste
Chanceler l’humaine raison?

Demande-lui si la sagesse
N’appartient qu’à l’éternité?
Pourquoi son souffle nous abaisse?
Pourquoi dans la tombe sans cesse
Il effeuille l’humanité?

Pour ceux que les vices consument,
Les enfants veillent au saint lieu ,
Ce sont des fleurs qui le parfument,
Ce sont des encensoirs qui fument,
Ce sont des voix qui vont à Dieu!

Laissons faire ces voix sublimes,

Laissons les enfants à genoux.
Pécheurs! nous avons tous nos crimes,
Nous penchons tous sur les abîmes,
L'enfance doit prier pour tous!

VI

Comme une aumône, enfant, donne donc ta prière
À ton père, à ta mère, aux pères de ton père;
Donne au riche à qui Dieu refuse le bonheur,
Donne au pauvre, à la veuve, au crime, au vice immonde.
Fais en priant le tour des misères du monde;
Donne à tous! donne aux morts! - Enfin donne au Seigneur!

“ Quoi! murmure ta voix qui veut parler et n'ose.
Au Seigneur, au Très-Haut manque-t-il quelque chose?
Il est le saint des saints, il est le roi des rois!
Il se fait des soleils un cortège suprême!
Il fait baisser la voix à l'océan lui-même!
Il est seul! Il est tout! à jamais! à la fois!”

Enfant, quand tout le jour vous avez en famille,
Tes deux frères et toi, joué sous la charmille,
Le soir vous êtes las, vos membres sont pliés,
Il vous faut un lait pur et quelques noix frugales,
Et, baisant tour à tour vos têtes inégales,
Votre mère à genoux lave vos faibles pieds.

Eh bien! il est quelqu'un dans ce monde où nous sommes
Qui tout le jour aussi marche parmi les hommes,
Servant et consolant, à toute heure, en tout lieu,
Un bon pasteur qui suite sa brebis égarée,
Un pèlerin qui va de contrée en contrée.
Ce passant, ce pasteur, ce pèlerin, c'est Dieu!

Le soir il est bien las! il faut, pour qu'il sourie,
Une âme qui le serve, un enfant qui le prie,

Un peu d’amour! Ô toi, qui ne sais pas tromper,
Porte-lui ton coeur plein d’innocence et d’extase,
Tremblante et l’oeil baissé, comme un précieux vase
Dont on craint de laisser une goutte échapper!

Porte-lui ta prière! et quand, à quelque flamme
Qui d’une chaleur douce emplira ta jeune âme,
Tu verras qu’il est proche, alors, ô mon bonheur,
Ô mon enfant! sans craindre affront ni raillerie,
Verse, comme autrefois Marthe, soeur de Marie,
Verse tout ton parfum sur les pieds du Seigneur!

VII

Ô myrrhe! ô cinname!
Nard cher aux époux!
Baume! éther! dictame!
De l’eau, de la flamme,
Parfums les plus doux!

Prés que l’onde arrose!
Vapeurs de l’autel!
Lèvres de la rose
Où l’abeille pose
Sa bouche de miel!

Jasmin! asphodèle!
Encensoirs flottants!
Branche verte et frêle
Où fait l’hirondelle
Son nid au printemps!

Lis que fait éclore
Le frais arrosoir!
Ambre que Dieu dore!
Souffle de l’aurore,
Haleine du soir!

Parfum de la sève
Dans les bois mouvants!
Odeur de la grève
Qui la nuit s’élève
Sur l’aile des vents!

Fleurs dont la chapelle
Se fait un trésor!
Flamme solennelle,
Fumée éternelle
Des sept lampes d’or!

Tiges qu’a brisées
Le tranchant du fer!
Urnes embrasées!
Esprits des rosées
Qui flottez dans l’air!

Fêtes réjouies
D’encens et de bruits!
Senteurs inouïes!
Fleurs épanouies
Au souffle des nuits!

Odeurs immortelles
Que les Ariel,
Archanges fidèles,
Prennent sur leurs ailes
En venant du ciel!

Ô couche première
Du premier époux!
De la terre entière,
Des champs de lumière
Parfums les plus doux!

Dans l’auguste sphère,
Parfums, qu’êtes-vous,
Près de la prière
Qui dans la poussière
S’épanche à genoux!

Près du cri d’une âme
Qui fond en sanglots,
Implore et réclame,
Et s’exhale en flamme,
Et se verse à flots!

Près de l’humble offrande
D’un enfant de lin
Dont l’extase est grande
Et qui recommande son père orphelin!

Bouche qui soupire,
Mais sans murmurer!
Ineffable lyre!
Voix qui fait sourire et qui fait pleurer!

VIII

Quand elle prie, un ange est debout auprès d’elle,
Caressant ses cheveux des plumes de son aile,
Essuyant d’un baiser son oeil de pleurs terni,
Venu pour l’écouter sans que l’enfant l’appelle,
Esprit qui tient le livre où l’innocente épèle,
Et qui pour remonter attend qu’elle ait fini.

Son beau front incliné semble un vase qu’il penche
Pour recevoir les flots de ce coeur qui s’épanche;
Il prend tout, pleurs d’amour et soupirs de douleur;
Sans changer de nature il s’emplit de cette âme,
Comme le pur cristal que notre soif réclame
S’emplit d’eau jusqu’aux bords sans changer de couleur.

Ah! c’est pour le Seigneur sans doute qu’il recueille
Ces larmes goutte à goutte et ce lis feuille à feuille!
Et puis il reviendra se ranger au saint lieu,
Tenant prêts ces soupirs, ces parfums, cette haleine,
Pour étancher le soir, comme une coupe pleine,
Ce grand besoin d’amour, la seule soif de Dieu!

Enfant! dans ce concert qui d’en bas le salue,
La voix par Dieu lui-même entre toutes élue,
C’est la tienne, ô ma fille! elle a tant de douceur,
Sur des ailes de flamme elle monte si pure,
Elle expire si bien en amoureux murmure,
Que les vierges du ciel disent: c’est une soeur!

IX

Oh! bien loin de la voie
Où marche le pécheur,
Chemine où Dieu t’envoie!
Enfant, garde ta joie!
Lis, garde ta blancheur!

Sois humble! que t’importe
Le riche et le puissant!
Un souffle les emporte.
La force la plus forte
C’est un coeur innocent!

Bien souvent Dieu repousse
Du pied les hautes tours;
Mais dans le nid de mousse
Où chante une voix douce
Il regarde toujours!

Reste à la solitude!
Reste à la pauvreté!

Vis sans inquiétude,
Et ne te fais étude
Que de l’éternité!

Il est, loin de nos villes
Et loin de nos douleurs,
Des lacs purs et tranquilles,
Et dont toutes les îles
Sont des bouquets de fleurs!

Flots d’azur où l’on aime
À laver ses remords!
D’un charme si suprême
Que l’incrédule même
S’agenouille à leurs bords!

L’ombre qui les inonde
Calme et nous rend meilleurs;
Leur paix est si profonde
Que jamais à leur onde
On n’a mêlé de pleurs!

Et le jour, que leur plaine
Reflète éblouissant,
Trouve l’eau si sereine
Qu’il y hasarde à peine
Un nuage en passant!

Ces lacs que rien n’altère,
Entre des monts géants
Dieu les met sur la terre,
Loin du souffle adultère
Des sombres océans,

Pour que nul vent aride,
Nul flot mêlé de fiel
N’empoisonne et ne ride

Ces gouttes d’eau limpide
Où se mire le ciel!

Ô ma fille, âme heureuse!
Ô lac de pureté!
Dans la vallée ombreuse,
Reste où ton Dieu te creuse
Un lit plus abrité!

Lac que le ciel parfume!
Le monde est une mer;
Son souffle est plein de brume,
Un peu de son écume
Rendrait ton flot amer!

X

Et toi, céleste ami qui gardes son enfance,
Qui le jour et la nuit lui fais une défense
De tes ailes d’azur!
Invisible trépied où s’allume sa flamme!
Esprit de sa prière, ange de sa jeune âme,
Cygne de ce lac pur!

Dieu te l’a confiée et je te la confie!
Soutiens, relève, exhorte, inspire et fortifie
Sa frêle humanité!
Qu’elle garde à jamais, réjouie ou souffrante,
Cet oeil plein de rayons, cette âme transparente,
Cette sérénité

Qui fait que tout le jour, et sans qu’elle te voie,
Écartant de son coeur faux désirs, fausse joie,
Mensonge et passion,
Prosternant à ses pieds ta couronne immortelle,
Comme elle devant Dieu, tu te tiens devant elle
En adoration!

XXXVIII

PAN

Tout entier esprit, tout entier lumière, tout entier oeil. CLÉM. ALEX.

Si l’on vous dit que l’art et que la poésie
C’est un flux éternel de banale ambroisie,
Que c’est le bruit, la foule, attachés à vos pas,
Ou d’un salon doré l’oisive fantaisie,
Ou la rime en fuyant par la rime saisie,
Oh! ne le croyez pas!

Ô poètes sacrés, échevelés, sublimes,
Allez, et répandez vos âmes sur les cimes,
Sur les sommets de neige en butte aux aquilons,
Sur les déserts pieux où l’esprit se recueille,
Sur les bois que l’automne emporte feuille à feuille,
Sur les lacs endormis dans l’ombre des vallons!

Partout où la nature est gracieuse et belle,
Où l’herbe s’épaissit pour le troupeau qui bêle,
Où le chevreau lascif mord le cytise en fleurs,
Où chante un pâtre, assis sous une antique arcade,
Où la brise du soir fouette avec la cascade
Le rocher tout en pleurs;

Partout où va la plume et le flocon de laine;
Que ce soit une mer, que ce soit une plaine,
Une vieille forêt aux branchages mouvants,
Îles au sol désert, lacs à l’eau solitaire,
Montagnes, océans, neige ou sable, onde ou terre,
Flots ou sillons, partout où vont les quatre vents;

Partout où le couchant grandit l’ombre des chênes,
Partout où les coteaux croisent leurs molles chaînes,

Partout où sont des champs, des moissons, des cités,
Partout où pend un fruit à la branche épuisée,
Partout où l’oiseau boit des gouttes de rosée,
Allez, voyez, chantez!

Allez dans les forêts, allez dans les vallées,
Faites-vous un concert des notes isolées!
Cherchez dans la nature, étalée à vos yeux,
Soit que l’hiver attriste ou que l’été l’égaye,
Le mot mystérieux que chaque voix bégaye.
Écoutez ce que dit la foudre dans les cieux!

C’est Dieu qui remplit tout. Le monde, c’est son temple.
Oeuvre vivante, où tout l’écoute et le contemple!
Tout lui parle et le chante. Il est seul, il est un.
Dans sa création tout est joie et sourire;
L’étoile qui regarde et la fleur qui respire,
Tout est flamme ou parfum!

Enivrez-vous de tout! enivrez-vous, poètes,
Des gazons, des ruisseaux, des feuilles inquiètes,
Du voyageur de nuit dont on entend la voix,
De ces premières fleurs dont février s’étonne,
Des eaux, de l’air, des prés, et du bruit monotone
Que font les chariots qui passent les bois!

Frères de l’aigle! aimez la montagne sauvage:
Surtout à ces moments où vient un vent d’orage,
Un vent sonore et lourd qui grossit par degrés,
Emplit l’espace au loin de nuages et d’ombres,
Et penche sur le bord des précipices ombres
Les arbres effarés!

Contemplez du matin la pureté divine,
Quand la brume en flocons inonde la ravine,
Quand le soleil, que cache à demi la forêt,
Montrant sur l’horizon sa rondeur échancrée,

Grandit, comme ferait la coupole dorée
D’un palais d’Orient dont on approcherait!

Enivrez-vous du soir! à cette heure où, dans l’ombre,
Le paysage obscur, plein de formes sans nombre,
S’efface, de chemins et de fleuves rayé;
Quand le mont, dont la tête à l’horizon s’élève,
Semble un géant couché qui regarde et qui rêve
Sur son coude appuyé!

Si vous avez en vous, vivantes et pressées,
Un monde intérieur d’images, de pensées,
De sentiments, d’amour, d’ardente passion,
Pour féconder ce monde, échangez-le sans cesse
Avec l’autre univers visible qui vous presse!
Mêlez toute votre âme à la création!

Car, ô poètes saints! l’art est le son sublime,
Simple divers, profond, mystérieux; intime,
Fugitif comme l’eau qu’un rien fait dévier,
Redit par un écho dans toute créature,
Que sous vos doigts puissants exhale la nature,
Cet immense clavier!

XXXIX

Avant que mes chansons aimées,

Amor de mi pecho,
Pecho de mi amor!
Arbol, que has hecho,
Que has hecho del flor? ROMANCE.

Avant que mes chansons aimées,
Si jeunes et si parfumées,
Du monde eussent subi l'affront,
Loin du peuple ingrat qui les foule,
Vertes et fraîches sur mon front!

De l'arbre à présent détachées,
Fleurs par l'aquilon desséchées,
Vains débris qu'on traîne en rêvant,
Elles errent éparpillées,
De fange ou de poudre souillées,
Au gré du flot, au gré du vent.

Moi, comme des feuilles flétries,
Je les vois, toutes défleuries,
Courir sur le sol dépouillé;
Et la foule qui m'environne,
En broyant du pied ma couronne,
Passe et rit de l'arbre effeuillé!

XL

Amis, un dernier mot! - et je ferme à jamais

Toi, vertu, pleure si je meurs! André Chénier.

Amis, un dernier mot! - et je ferme à jamais
Ce livre, à ma pensée étranger désormais.
Je n’écouterai pas ce qu’en dira la foule.
Car, qu’importe à la source où son onde s’écoule?
Et que m’importe, à moi, sur l’avenir penché,
Où va ce vent d’automne au souffle desséché
Qui passe, en emportant sur son aile inquiète
Et les feuilles de l’arbre et les vers du poète?

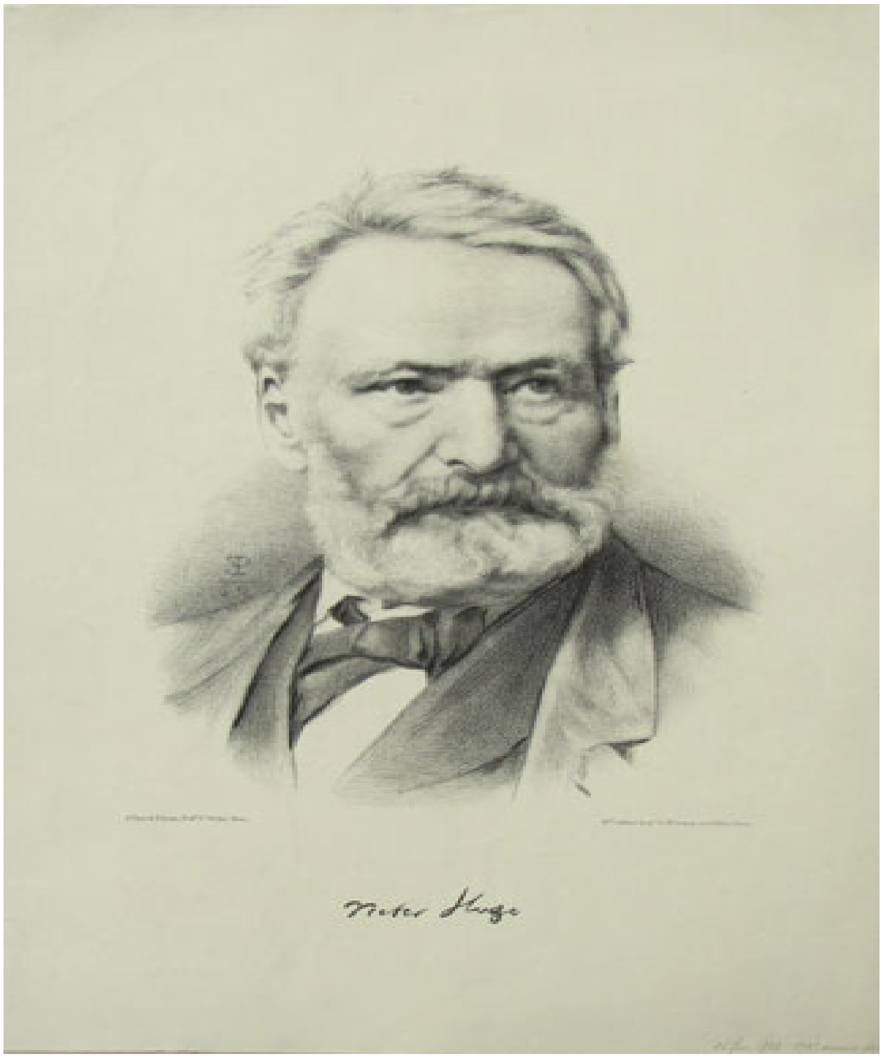
Oui, je suis jeune encore, et quoique sur mon front,
Où tant de passions et d’oeuvres germeront,
Une ride de plus chaque jour soit tracée,
Comme un sillon qu’y fait le soc de ma pensée,
Dans le cours incertain du temps qui m’est donné,
L’été n’a pas encor trente fois rayonné.
Je suis fils de ce siècle! Une erreur, chaque année,
S’en va de mon esprit, d’elle-même étonnée,
Et, détrompé de tout, mon culte n’est resté
Qu’à vous, sainte patrie et sainte liberté!

Je hais l’oppression d’une haine profonde.
Aussi, lorsque j’entends, dans quelque coin du monde,
Sous un ciel inclément, sous un roi meurtrier,
Un peuple qu’on égorge appeler et crier;
Quand, par les rois chrétiens aux bourreaux turcs livrée,
La Grèce, notre mère, agonise éventrée;
Quand l’Irlande saignante expire sur sa croix;
Quand Teutonie aux fers se débat sous dix rois;
Quand Lisbonne, jadis belle et toujours en fête,
Pend au gibet, les pieds de Miguel sur sa tête;

Lorsqu’Albani gouverne au pays de Caton;
Que Naples mange et dort; lorsqu’avec son bâton,
Sceptre honteux et lourd que la peur divinise,
L’Autriche casse l’aile au lion de Venise;
Quand Modène étranglé râle sous l’archiduc;
Quand Dresde lutte et pleure au lit d’un roi caduc;
Quand Madrid se rendort d’un sommeil léthargique;
Quand Vienne tient Milan; quand le lion belgique
Courbé comme le boeuf qui creuse un vil sillon,
N’a plus même de dents pour mordre son bâillon;
Quand un Cosaque affreux, que la rage transporte,
Viole Varsovie échevelée et morte,
Et, souillant son linceul, chaste et sacré lambeau,
Se vautre sur la vierge étendue au tombeau;
Alors, oh! je maudis, dans leur cour, dans leur antre,
Ces rois dont les chevaux ont du sang jusqu’au ventre!
Je sens que le poète est leur juge! je sens
Que la muse indignée, avec ses poings puissants,
Peut, comme au pilori, les lier sur leur trône
Et leur faire un carcan de leur lâche couronne,
Et renvoyer ces rois, qu’on aurait pu bénir,,
Marqués au front d’un vers que lira l’avenir!
Oh! la muse se doit aux peuples sans défense.
J’oublie alors l’amour, la famille, l’enfance,
Et les molles chansons, et le loisir serein,
Et j’ajoute à ma lyre une corde d’airain!

LES CHANTS DU CREPUSCULE

This is a collection of poems that was first published in 1836.



Victor Hugo

TABLE DES MATIERES

Prélude
Dicté après juillet 1830
À la colonne
Hymne
Noces et festins
Napoléon III
Sur le bal de l’hôtel-de-ville
Ô Dieu! si vous avez la France sous vos ailes
À Canaris
Seule au pied de la tour
À l’homme qui a livré une femme
À monsieur le duc d’O.
À Canaris
Il n’avait pas vingt ans
Oh! n’insultez jamais
Conseil
Le grand homme vaincu
À Alphonse Rabbe
Envoi des feuilles d’automne à madame
Anacréon, poëte
L’aurore s’allume
Hier, la nuit d’été
Nouvelle chanson sur un vieil air
Autre chanson
Oh! pour remplir de moi
Puisque j’ai mis ma lèvre
À mademoiselle J.
La pauvre fleur
Au bord de la mer
Puisque nos heures sont remplies
Espoir en dieu
Puisque mai tout en fleurs
À Louis B.
Dans l’église de ***

Écrit sur la première page d’un Pétrarque
Les autres en tout sens
Toi! sois bénie à jamais
À mademoiselle Louise B.
Que nous avons le doute en nous.
Date lilia

Préface

Les quelques vers placés en tête de ce volume indiquent la pensée qu’il contient. Le prélude explique les chants.

Tout aujourd’hui, dans les idées comme dans les choses, dans la société comme dans l’individu, est à l’état de crépuscule. De quelle nature est ce crépuscule? de quoi sera-t-il suivi? Question immense, la plus haute de toutes celles qui s’agitent confusément dans ce siècle où un point d’interrogation se dresse à la fin de tout. La société attend que ce qui est à l’horizon s’allume tout à fait ou s’éteigne complètement. Il n’y a rien de plus à dire.

Quant à ce volume en lui-même, l’auteur n’en dira rien non plus. A quoi bon faire remarquer le fil, à peine visible peut-être, qui lie ce livre aux livres précédents? C’est toujours la même pensée avec d’autres soucis, la même onde avec d’autres vents, le même front avec d’autres rides, la même vie avec un autre âge.

Il insistera peu sur cela. Il ne laisse même subsister dans ses ouvrages ce qui est personnel que parce que c’est peut-être quelquefois un reflet de ce qui est général. Il ne croit pas que son “Individualité”, comme on dit aujourd’hui en assez mauvais style, vaille la peine d’être autrement étudiée. Aussi, quelque idée qu’on veuille bien s’en faire, n’est-elle que très peu clairement entrevue dans ses livres. L’auteur est fort loin de croire que toutes les parties de celui-ci en particulier puissent jamais être considérées comme matériaux positifs pour l’histoire d’un cœur humain quelconque. Il y a dans ce volume beaucoup de choses rêvées.

Ce qui est peut-être exprimé parfois dans ce recueil, ce qui a été la principale préoccupation de l’auteur en jetant ça et là les vers qu’on va lire, c’est cet étrange état crépusculaire de l’âme et de la société dans le siècle où nous vivons; c’est cette brume au dehors, cette incertitude au-dedans; c’est ce je ne sais quoi d’à demi éclairé qui nous environne. De là, dans ce livre, ces cris d’espoir mêlés d’hésitation, ces chants d’amour coupés de plaintes, cette sérénité pénétrée de tristesse, ces abattements qui se réjouissent tout à coup, ces défaillances relevées soudain, cette tranquillité qui souffre, ces troubles intérieurs qui remuent à peine la surface du vers au dehors, ces tumultes politiques contemplés avec calme, ces retours religieux de la place publique à la famille, cette crainte que tout n’aille s’obscurcissant, et par moments cette foi joyeuse et bruyante à l’épanouissement possible de l’humanité. Dans ce livre, bien petit cependant en présence d’objets si grands, il y a tous les contraires, le doute et le dogme, le jour et la nuit, le coin sombre et le point lumineux, comme dans tout ce que nous voyons, comme dans tout ce que nous pensons en ce siècle; comme dans nos théories politiques, comme dans nos opinions religieuses, comme dans notre existence domestique; comme dans l’histoire qu’on nous fait, comme dans la vie que nous nous faisons.

Le dernier mot que doit ajouter ici l’auteur, c’est que dans cette époque livrée à l’attente et à la transition, dans cette époque où la discussion est si acharnée, si tranchée, si absolument arrivée à l’extrême, qu’il n’y a guère aujourd’hui d’écoutés, de compris et d’applaudis que deux mots, le Oui et le Non, il n’est pourtant, lui, ni de ceux qui nient, ni de ceux qui affirment. Il est de ceux qui espèrent.

25 octobre 1835

Prélude

De quel nom te nommer, heure trouble où nous sommes?
Tous les fronts sont baignés de livides sueurs.
Dans les hauteurs du ciel et dans le cœur des hommes
Les ténèbres partout se mêlent aux lueurs.

Croyances, passions, désespoir, espérances,
Rien n’est dans le grand jour et rien n’est dans la nuit;
Et le monde, sur qui flottent les apparences,
Est à demi couvert d’une ombre où tout reluit.

Le bruit que fait cette ombre assourdit la pensée.
Tout s’y mêle, depuis le chant de l’oiseleur
Jusqu’au frémissement de la feuille froissée
Qui cache un nid peut-être ou qui couve une fleur.

Tout s’y mêle! les pas égarés hors des voies
Qui cherchent leur chemin dans les champs spacieux;
Les roseaux verts froissant leurs luisantes courroies;
Les angelus lointains dispersés dans les cieux;

Le lierre tressaillant dans les fentes des voûtes;
Le vent, funeste au loin au nocher qui périt;
Les chars embarrassés dans les tournants des routes,
S’accrochant par l’essieu comme nous par l’esprit;

La mendiante en pleurs qui marche exténuée;
Celui qui dit Satan ou qui dit Jéhova;
La clameur des passants bientôt diminuée;
La voix du cœur qui sent, le bruit du pied qui va;

Les ondes que toi seul, ô Dieu, comptes et nommes;
L’air qui fuit; le caillou par le ruisseau lavé;
Et tout ce que, chargés des vains projets des hommes
Le soc dit au sillon et la roue au pavé;

Et la barque, où dans l’ombre on entend une lyre,
Qui passe, et loin du bord s’abandonne au courant;
Et l’orgue des forêts qui sur les monts soupire;
Et cette voix qui sort des villes en pleurant!

Et l’homme qui gémit à côté de la chose;
Car dans ce siècle, en proie aux sourires moqueurs,
Toute conviction en peu d’instants dépose
Le doute, lie affreuse, au fond de tous les cœurs!

Et de ces bruits divers, redoutable ou propice,
Sort l’étrange chanson que chante sans flambeau
Cette époque ne travail, fossoyeur ou nourrice,
Qui prépare une crèche ou qui creuse un tombeau!

— L’orient! l’orient! qu’y voyez-vous poëtes?
Tournez vers l’orient vos esprits et vos yeux! –
“Hélas! ont répondu leurs voix longtemps muettes,
Nous voyons bien là-bas un jour mystérieux!

“Un jour mystérieux dans le ciel taciturne,
Qui blanchit l’horizon derrière les coteaux,
Pareil au feu lointain d’une forge nocturne
Qu’on voit sans en entendre encore les marteaux!

“Mais nous ne savons pas si cette aube lointaine
Vous annonce le jour, le vrai soleil ardent;
Car, survenus dans l’ombre à cette heure incertaine,
Ce qu’on croit l’orient peut-être est l’occident!
“C’est peut-être le soir qu’on prend pour une aurore!
Peut-être ce soleil vers qui l’homme est penché,
Ce soleil qu’on appelle à l’horizon qu’il dore,
Ce soleil qu’on espère est un soleil couché!”

Seigneur! est-ce vraiment l’aube qu’on voit éclore?
Oh! l’anxiété croît de moment en moment.

N’y voit-on déjà plus? n’y voit-on pas encore?
Est-ce la fin, Seigneur, ou le commencement?

Dans l’âme et sur la terre effrayant crépuscule!
Les yeux pour qui fut fait, dans un autre univers,
Ce soleil inconnu qui vient ou qui recule,
Sont-ils déjà fermés ou pas encore ouvert?

Ce tumulte confus, où nos esprits s’arrêtent,
Peut-être c’est le bruit, fourmillant en tout lieu,
Des ailes qui partout pour le départ s’apprêtent.
Peut-être en ce moment la terre dit: adieu!

Ce tumulte confus qui frappe notre oreille,
Parfois pur comme un souffle et charmant comme un luth,
Peut-être c’est le bruit d’un éden qui s’éveille.
Peut-être en ce moment la terre dit: salut!

Là-bas l’arbre frissonne. Est-ce allégresse ou plainte?
Là-bas chante un oiseau. Pleure-t-il? a-t-il ri?
Là-bas l’océan parle. Est-ce joie? est-ce crainte?
Là-bas l’homme murmure. Est-ce un chant? Est-ce un cri?

A si peu de clarté nulle âme n’est sereine.
Triste, assis sur le banc qui s’appuie à son mur,
Le vieux prêtre se courbe, et, n’y voyant qu’à peine,
A ce jour ténébreux épèle un livre obscur.

O prêtre! vainement tu rêves, tu travailles.
L’homme ne comprend plus ce que Dieu révéla.
Partout des sens douteux hérissent leurs broussailles;
La menace est ici, mais la promesse est là!

Et qu’importe! bien loin de ce qui doit nous suivre,
Le destin nous emporte, éveillés ou dormant.
Que ce soit pour mourir ou que ce soit pour vivre,
Notre siècle va voir un accomplissement!

Cet horizon, qu’emplit un bruit vague et sonore,
Doit-il pâlir bientôt? doit-il bientôt rougir?
Esprit de l’homme! attends quelques instants encore.
Ou l’ombre va descendre, ou l’astre va surgir!

Vers l’orient douteux tourné comme les autres,
Recueillant tous les bruits formidables et doux,
Les murmures d’en haut qui répondent aux nôtres,
Le soupir de chacun et la rumeur de tous,

Le poëte, en ses chants où l’amertume abonde,
Reflétait, écho triste et calme cependant,
Tout ce que l’âme rêve et tout ce que le monde
Chante, bégaie ou dit dans l’ombre en attendant!
20 octobre 1835

Dicté après juillet 1830

I

Frères! et vous aussi, vous avez vos journées!
Vos victoires, de chêne et de fleurs couronnées,
Vos civiques lauriers, vos morts ensevelis,
Vos triomphes, si beaux à l’aube de la vie,
Vos jeunes étendards, troués à faire envie
A de vieux drapeaux d’Austerlitz!

Soyez fiers! vous avez fait autant que vos pères.
Les droits d’un peuple entier, conquis par tant de guerres,
Vous les avez tirés tout vivants du linceul.
Juillet vous a donné, pour sauver vos familles,
Trois de ces beaux soleils qui brûlent les bastilles:
Vos pères n’en ont eu qu’un seul!

Vous êtes bien leurs fils! c’est leur sang, c’est leur âme
Qui fait vos bras d’airain et vos regards de flamme.
Ils ont tout commencé. Vous avez votre tour.
Votre mère, c’est bien cette France féconde
Qui fait, quand il lui plaît, pour l’exemple du monde,
Tenir un siècle dans un jour!

L’Angleterre jalouse et la Grèce homérique,
Toute l’Europe admire, et la jeune Amérique
Se lève et bat des mains, du bord des océans.
Trois jours vous ont suffi pour briser vos entraves:
Vous êtes les aînés d’une race de braves,
Vous êtes les fils des géants!

C’est pour vous qu’ils traçaient avec des funérailles
Ce cercle triomphal de plaines de batailles,
Chemin victorieux, prodigieux travail,
Qui, de France parti pour enserrer la terre,

En passant par Moscou, Cadix, Rome et le Caire,
Va de Jemmape à Montmirail!

Vous êtes les enfants des belliqueux lycées!
Là vous applaudissiez nos victoires passées;
Tous vos jeux s'ombrageaient des plis d'un étendard.
Souvent Napoléon, plein de grandes pensées,
Passant, les bras croisés, dans vos lignes pressées,
Aimanta vos fronts d'un regard!

Aigle qu'ils devaient suivre! aigle de notre armée
Dont la plume sanglante en cent lieux est semée,
Dont le tonnerre un soir s'éteignit dans les flots,
Toi qui les as couvés dans l'aire paternelle,
Regarde, et sois joyeuse, et crie, et bats de l'aile!
Mère, tes aiglons sont éclos!

II

Quand notre ville épouvantée,
Surprise un matin et sans voix,
S'éveilla toute garrottée
Sous un réseau d'iniques lois,
Chacun de vous dit en son âme:
“C'est une trahison infâme!
Les peuples ont leur lendemain.
Pour rendre leur route douteuse
Suffit-il qu'une main honteuse
Change l'écriteau du chemin?

“La parole éclate et foudroie
Tous les obstacles imprudents;
Vérité, tu sais comme on broie
Tous les bâillons entre ses dents;
Un roi peut te fermer son Louvre;
Ta flamme importune, on la couvre,
On la fait éteindre aux valets;

Mais elle brûle qui la touche!
Mais on ne ferme pas ta bouche
Comme la porte d’un palais!

“Quoi! ce que le temps nous amène,
Quoi! ce que nos pères ont fait,
Ce travail de la race humaine,
Ils nous prendraient tout en effet!
Quoi! les lois! la Charte! chimère!
Comme un édifice éphémère
Nous verrions, en un jour d’été,
Crouler sous leurs mains acharnées
Ton œuvre de quarante années,
Laborieuse liberté!

“C’est donc pour eux que les épées
Ont relui du nord au midi!
Pour eux que les têtes coupées
Sur les pavés ont rebondi!
C’est pour ces tyrans satellites
Que nos pères, braves élites,
Ont dépassé grecs et romains!
Que tant de villes sont désertes!
Que tant de plaines, jadis vertes,
Sont blanches d’ossements humains!
“Les insensés qui font ce rêve
N’ont-ils donc pas des yeux pour voir,
Depuis que leur pouvoir s’élève,
Comme notre horizon est noir!
N’ont-ils pas vu dans leur folie
Que déjà la coupe est remplie,
Qu’on les suit des yeux en rêvant,
Qu’un foudre lointain nous éclaire,
Et que le lion populaire
Regarde ses ongles souvent!”

III

Alors tout se leva. – L’homme, l’enfant, la femme,
Quiconque avait un bras, quiconque avait une âme,
Tout vint, tout accourut. Et la ville à grand bruit
Sur les lourds bataillons se rua jour et nuit.
En vain boulets, obus, la balle et les mitrailles,
De la vieille cité déchiraient les entrailles
Pavés et pans de murs croulant sous mille efforts
Aux portes des maisons amoncelaient les morts;
Les bouches des canons trouaient au loin la foule;
Elle se refermait comme une mer qui roule,
Et de son râle affreux ameutant les faubourgs,
Le tocsin haletant bondissait dans les tours!

IV

Trois jours, trois nuits, dans la fournaise
Tout ce peuple en feu bouillonna.
Crevant l’écharpe béarnaise
Du fer de lance d’Iéna.
En vain dix légions nouvelles
Vinrent s’abattre à grand bruit d’ailes
Dans le formidable foyer;
Chevaux, fantassins et cohortes
Fondaient comme des branches mortes
Qui se tordent dans le brasier!

Comment donc as-tu fait pour calmer ta colère,
Souveraine cité qui vainquis en trois jours?
Comment donc as-tu fait, ô fleuve populaire,
Pour rentrer dans ton lit et reprendre ton cours?
O terre qui tremblais! ô tempête! ô tourmente!
Vengeance de la foule au sourire effrayant!
Comment donc as-tu fait pour être intelligente
Et pour choisir en foudroyant?

C’est qu’il est plus d’un cœur stoïque

Parmi vous, fils de la cité;
C’est qu’une jeunesse héroïque
Combattait à votre côté.
Désormais, dans toute fortune,
Vous avez une âme commune
Qui dans tous vos exploits a lui.
Honneur au grand jour qui s’écoule!
Hier vous n’étiez qu’une foule:
Vous êtes un peuple aujourd’hui!

Ces mornes conseillers de parjure et d’audace,
Voilà donc à quel peuple ils se sont attaqués!
Fléaux qu’aux derniers rois d’une fatale race
Toujours la providence envoie aux jours marqués!
Malheureux qui croyaient, dans leur erreur profonde
(Car Dieu les voulait perdre, et Dieu les aveuglait),
Qu’on prenait un matin la liberté d’un monde
Comme un oiseau dans un filet!

N’effacez rien. – Le coup d’épée
Embellit le front du soldat.
Laissons à la ville frappée
Les cicatrices du combat!
Adoptons héros et victimes.
Emplissons de ces morts sublimes
Les sépulcres du Panthéon.
Que nul souvenir ne nous pèse;
Rendons sa tombe à Louis seize,
Sa colonne à Napoléon!

V

Oh! laissez-moi pleurer sur cette race morte
Que rapporta l’exil et que l’exil remporte,
Vent fatal qui trois fois déjà les enleva!
Reconduisons au moins ces vieux rois de nos pères.
Rends, drapeau de Fleurus, les honneurs militaires

A l’oriflamme qui s’en va!

Je ne leur dirai point de mot qui les déchire.
Qu’ils ne se plaignent pas des adieux de la lyre!
Pas d’outrage au vieillard qui s’exile à pas lents!
C’est une piété d’épargner les ruines.
Je n’enfoncerai pas la couronne d’épines
Que la main du malheur met sur des cheveux blancs!

D’ailleurs, infortunés! ma voix achève à peine
L’hymne de leurs douleurs dont s’allonge la chaîne.
L’exile et les tombeaux dans mes chants sont bénis;
Et, tandis que d’un règne on saluera l’aurore,
Ma poésie en deuil ira longtemps encore
De Sainte-Hélène à Saint-Denis!

Mais que la leçon reste, éternelle et fatale,
A ces nains, étrangers sur la terre natale,
Qui font régner les rois pour leurs ambitions,
Et, pétrifiant tout sous leur groupe immobile,
Tourmentent, accroupis, de leur souffle débile
La cendre rouge encor des révolutions!

VI

Oh! l’avenir est magnifique!
Jeunes français, jeunes amis,
Un siècle pur et pacifique
S’ouvre à vos pas mieux affermis.
Chaque jour aura sa conquête.
Depuis la base jusqu’au faîte,
Nous verrons avec majesté,
Comme une mer sur ses rivages,
Monter d’étages en étages
L’irrésistible liberté!

Vos pères, hauts de cent coudées,

Ont été forts et généreux.
Les nations intimidées
Se faisaient adopter par eux.
Ils ont fait une telle guerre
Que tous les peuples de la terre
De la France prenaient le nom,
Quittaient leur passé qui s’écroule,
Et venaient s’abriter en foule
A l’ombre de Napoléon!

Vous n’avez pas l’âme embrasée
D’une moins haute ambition!
Faites libre toute pensée
Et reine toute nation;
Montrez la liberté dans l’ombre
A ceux qui sont dans la nuit sombre!
Allez, éclairez le chemin,
Guidez notre marche unanime,
Et faites, vers le but sublime,
Doubler le pas au genre humain!

Que l’esprit dans sa fantaisie
Suive, d’un vol plus détaché,
Ou les arts, ou la poésie,
Ou la science au front penché!
Qu’ouvert à quiconque l’implore
Le trône ait un écho sonore
Qui, pour rendre le roi meilleur,
Grossisse et répète sans cesse
Tous les conseils de la sagesse,
Toutes les plaintes du malheur!

Revenez prier sur les tombes,
Prêtres! que craignez-vous encor?
Qu’allez-vous faire aux catacombes
Tout reluisants de pourpre et d’or?
Venez! – mais plus de mitre ardente,

Plus de vaine pompe imprudente,
Plus de trône dans le sain lieu!
Rien que l’aumône et la prière!
La croix de bois, l’autel de pierre
Suffit aux hommes comme à Dieu!

VII

Et désormais, chargés du seul fardeau des âmes,
Pauvres comme le peuple, humbles comme les femmes,
Ne redoutez plus rien. Votre église est le port!
Quand longtemps a grondé la bouche du Vésuve,
Quand sa lave, écumant comme un vin dans la cuve,
Apparaît toute rouge au bord,

Naples s’émeut; pleurante, effarée et lascive,
Elle accourt, elle étreint la terre convulsive;
Elle demande grâce au volcan courroucé;
Point de grâce! un long jet de cendre et de fumée
Grandit incessamment sur la cime enflammée,
Comme un cou de vautour hors de l’air dressé.

Soudain un éclair luit! Hors du cratère immense
La sombre éruption bondit comme en démence.
Adieu le fronton grec et le temple toscan!
La flamme des vaisseaux empourpre la voilure.
La lave se répand comme une chevelure
Sur les épaules du volcan.

Elle vient, elle vient, cette lave profonde
Qui féconde les champs et fait des ports dans l’onde;
Plages, mer, archipels, tout tressaille à la fois;
Ses flots roulent, vermeils, fumants, inexorables;
Et Naple et ses palais tremblent, plus misérables
Qu’au souffle de l’orage une feuille des bois!

Chaos prodigieux! la cendre emplit les rues,

La terre revomit des maisons disparues;
Chaque toit éperdu se heurte au toit voisin;
La mer bout dans le golfe et la plaine s’embrase;
Et les clochers géants, chancelant sur leur base,
Sonnent d’eux-mêmes le tocsin!

Mais – c’est Dieu qui le veut – tout en brisant des villes,
En comblant les vallons, en effaçant les îles,
En charriant les tours sur son flot en courroux,
Tout en bouleversant les ondes et la terre,
Toujours Vésuve épargne en son propre cratère
L’humble ermitage où prie un vieux prêtre à genoux!
10 août 1830

À la colonne

Plusieurs pétitionnaires demandent que la Chambre intevienne pour faire transporter les cendres de Napoléon sous la colonne de la place Vendôme.

Après une courte délibération, la Chambre passe à l'ordre du jour.

(CHAMBRE DES DEPUTES. – séance du 7 octobre 1830

I

Oh! quand il bâtissait, de sa main colossale,
Pour son trône, appuyé sur l'Europe vassale,
Ce pilier souverain,
Ce bronze, devant qui tout n'est que poudre et sable,
Sublime monument, deux fois impérissable,
Fait de gloire et d'airain;

Quand il le bâtissait, pour qu'un jour dans la ville
Ou la guerre étrangère ou la guerre civile
Y brisassent leur char,
Et pour qu'il fît pâlir sur nos places publiques
Les frêles héritiers de vos noms magnifiques,
Alexandre et César!

C'était un beau spectacle! – Il parcourait la terre
Avec ses vétérans, nation militaire
Dont il savait les noms;
Les rois fuyaient; les rois n'étaient point de sa taille;
Et, vainqueur, il allait par les champs de bataille
Glanant tous leurs canons.

Et puis, il revenait avec la grande armée,
Encombrant de butin sa France bien-aimée,
Son Louvre de granit,
Et les Parisiens poussaient des cris de joie,
Comme font les aiglons, alors qu'avec sa proie
L'aigle rentre à son nid!

Et lui, poussant du pied tout ce métal sonore,
Il courait à la cuve où bouillonnait encore
Le monument promis.
Le moule en était fait d’une de ses pensées.
Dans la fournaise ardente il jetait à brassées
Les canons ennemis!

Puis il s’en revenait gagner quelque bataille.
Il dépouillait encore à travers la mitraille
Maints affûts dispersés;
Et, rapportant ce bronze à la Rome française,
Il disait aux fondeurs penchés sur la fournaise:
— En avez-vous assez?

C’était son œuvre à lui! – Les feux du polygone,
Et la bombe, et le sabre, et l’or de la dragonne
Furent ses premiers jeux.
Général, pour hochets il prit les Pyramides;
Empereur, il voulut, dans ses vœux moins timides
Quelque chose de mieux.

Il fit cette colonne! – Avec sa main romaine
Il tordit et mêla dans l’œuvre surhumaine
Tout un siècle fameux,
Les Alpes se courbant sous sa marche tonnante,
Le Nil, le Rhin, le Tibre, Austerlitz rayonnante,
Eylau froid et brumeux.

Car c’est lui qui, pareil à l’antique Encelade,
Du trône universel essaya l’escalade,
Qui vingt ans entassa,
Remuant terre et cieux avec une parole,
Wagram
sur Marengo, Champaubert sur Arcole,
Pélion sur Ossa!

Oh! quand par un beau jour, sur la place Vendôme,

Homme dont tout un peuple adorait le fantôme,
Tu vins grave et serein,
Et que tu découvris ton œuvre magnifique,
Tranquille, et contenant d’un geste pacifique
Tes quatre aigles d’airain;

A cette heure où les tiens t’entouraient par cent mille;
Où, comme se pressaient autour de Paul-Emile
Tous les petits romains,
Nous, enfants de six ans, rangés sur ton passage,
Cherchant dans ton cortège un père au fier visage,
Nous te battions des mains;

Oh! qui t’eût dit alors, à ce faîte sublime,
Tandis que tu rêvais sur le trophée opime
Un avenir si beau,
Qu’un jour à cet affront il te faudrait descendre
Que trois cents avocats oseraient à ta cendre
Chicaner ce tombeau!

II

Attendez donc, jeunesse folle,
Nous n’avons pas le temps encor!
Que vient-on nous parler d’Arcole,
Et de Wagram et du Thabor?
Pour avoir commandé peut-être
Quelque armée, et s’être fait maître
De quelque ville dans son temps,
Croyez-vous que l’Europe tombe
S’il n’ameute autour de sa tombe
Les Démosthènes haletants?

D’ailleurs le ciel n’est pas tranquille;
Les soucis ne leur manquent pas;
L’inégal pavé de la ville
Fait encor trébucher leurs pas.

Et pourquoi ces honneurs suprêmes?
Ont-ils des monuments eux-mêmes?
Quel temple leur a-t-on dressé?
Etrange peuple que nous sommes!
Laissez passer tous ces grands hommes!
Napoléon est bien pressé!

Toute crainte est-elle étouffée?
Nous songerons à l’immortel
Quand ils auront tous leur trophée,
Quand ils auront tous leur autel!
Attendons, attendons, mes frères.
Attendez, restes funéraires,
Dépouille de Napoléon,
Que leur courage se rassure
Et qu’ils aient donné leur mesure
Au fossoyeur du Panthéon!

III

Ainsi, — cent villes assiégées;
Memphis, Milan, Cadix, Berlin;
Soixante batailles rangées;
L’univers d’un seul homme plein;
N’avoir rien laissé dans le monde,
Dans la tombe la plus profonde,
Qu’il n’ait dompté, qu’il n’ait atteint;
Avoir, dans sa course guerrière,
Ravi le Kremlin au czar Pierre,
L’Escurial à Charles-Quint;

Ainsi, — ce souvenir qui pèse
Sur nos ennemis effarés;
Ainsi, dans une cage anglaise
Tant de pleurs amers dévorés;
Cette incomparable fortune,
Cette gloire aux rois importune,

Ce nom si grand, si vite acquis,
Sceptre unique, exil solitaire,
Ne valent pas six pieds de terre
Sous les canons qu’il a conquis!

IV

Encore si c’était crainte austère!
Si c’était l’âpre liberté
Qui d’une cendre militaire
N’ose ensemencer la cité!
Si c’était la vierge stoïque
Qui proscrit un nom héroïque
Fait pour régner et conquérir,
Qui se rappelle Sparte et Rome,
Et craint que l’ombre d’un grand homme
N’empêche son fruit de mûrir! –

Mais non; la liberté sait aujourd’hui sa force.
Un trône est sous sa main comme un gui sur l’écorce
Quand les races de rois manquent au droit juré;
Nous avons parmi nous vu passer, ô merveille!
La plus nouvelle et la plus vieille!
Ce siècle, avant trente ans, avait tout dévoré.

La France, guerrière et paisible,
A deux filles du même sang: -
L’une fait l’armée invincible,
L’autre fait le peuple puissant.
La Gloire, qui n’est pas l’aînée,
N’est plus armée et couronnée;
Ni pavois, ni sceptre oppresseur;
La Gloire n’est plus décevante,
Et n’a plus rien dont s’épouvante
La Liberté, sa grande sœur!

V

Non. S’ils ont repoussé la relique immortelle,
C’est qu’ils en sont jaloux! qu’ils tremblent devant elle!
Qu’ils en sont tout pâlis!
C’est qu’ils ont peur d’avoir l’empereur sur leur tête,
Et de voir s’éclipser leurs lampions de fête
Au soleil d’Austerlitz!

Pourtant, c’eût été beau! – Lorsque, sous la colonne,
On eût senti présents dans notre Babylone
Ces ossements vainqueurs,
Qui pourrait dire, au jour d’une guerre civile,
Ce qu’une si grande ombre, hôtesse de la ville,
Eût mis dans tous les cœurs!

Si jamais l’étranger, ô cité souveraine,
Eût ramené brouter les chevaux de l’Ukraine
Sur ton sol bien-aimé,
Enfantant des soldats dans ton enceinte émue,
Sans doute qu’à travers ton pavé qui remue
Ces os eussent germé!

Et toi, colonne! un jour, descendu sous ta base,
Le pèlerin pensif, contemplant en extase
Ce débris surhumain,
Serait venu peser, à genoux sur la pierre,
Ce qu’un Napoléon peut laisser de poussière
Dans le creux de la main!

O merveille! ô néant! – tenir cette dépouille!
Compter et mesurer ces os que de sa rouille
Rongea le flot marin,
Ce genou qui jamais n’a ployé sous la crainte,
Ce pouce de géant dont tu portes l’empreinte
Partout sur ton airain!

Contempler le bras fort, la poitrine féconde,

Le talon qui, douze ans, éperonna le monde,
Et, d’un œil filial,
L’orbite du regard qui fascinait la foule,
Ce front prodigieux, ce crâne fait au moule
Du globe impérial!

Et croire entendre, en haut, dans tes noires entrailles,
Sortir du cliquetis des confuses batailles,
Des bouches du canon,
Des chevaux hennissants, des villes crénelées,
Des clairons, des tambours, du souffle des mêlées,
Ce bruit: Napoléon!

Rhéteurs embarrassés dans votre toge neuve,
Vous n’avez pas voulu consoler cette veuve
Vénérable aux partis!
Tout en vous partageant l’empire d’Alexandre,
Vous avez peur d’une ombre et peur d’un peu de cendre:
Oh! vous êtes petits!

VI

Hélas! hélas! garde ta tombe!
Garde ton rocher écumant,
Où t’abattant comme la bombe
Tu vins tomber, tiède et fumant!
Garde ton âpre Sainte-Hélène
Où de ta fortune hautaine
L’œil ébloui voit le revers;
Garde l’ombre où tu te recueilles,
Ton saule sacré dont les feuilles
S’éparpillent dans l’univers!

Là, du moins, tu dors sans outrage.
Souvent tu t’y sens réveillé
Par les pleurs d’amour et de rage
D’un soldat rouge agenouillé!

Là, si parfois tu te relèves,
Tu peux voir, du haut de ces grèves,
Sur le globe azuré des eaux,
Courir vers ton roc solitaire,
Comme au vrai centre de la terre,
Toutes les voiles des vaisseaux!

VII

Dors, nous t'irons chercher! ce jour viendra peut-être!
Car nous t'avons pour dieu sans t'avoir eu pour maître!
Car notre œil s'est mouillé de ton destin fatal,
Et, sous les trois couleurs comme sous l'oriflamme,
Nous ne nous pendons pas à cette corde infâme
Qui t'arrache à ton piédestal!

Oh! va, nous te ferons de belles funérailles!
Nous aurons bien aussi peut-être nos batailles;
Nous en ombragerons ton cercueil respecté!
Nous y convierons tout, Europe, Afrique, Asie!
Et nous t'amènerons la jeune Poésie
Chantant la jeune Liberté!

Tu sera bien chez nous! –couché sous ta colonne,
Dans ce puissant Paris qui fermente et bouillonne,
Sous ce ciel, tant de fois d'orages obscurci,
Sous ces pavés vivants qui grondent et s'amassent,
Où roulent les canons, où les lésions passent; -
Le peuple est une mer aussi.

S'il ne garde aux tyrans qu'abîme et que tonnerre,
Il a pour le tombeau, profond et centenaire
(La seule majesté dont il soit courtisan),
Un long gémissement, infini, doux et sombre,
Qui ne laissera pas regretter à ton ombre
Le murmure de l'océan!
9 octobre 1830

Hymne

Ceux qui pieusement sont morts pour la patrie
Ont droit qu'à leur cerceuil la foule vienne et prie.
Entre les plus beaux noms leur nom est le plus beau.
   Toute gloire près d'eux passe et tombe éphémère;
   Et, comme ferait une mère,
   La voix d'un peuple entier les berce en leur tombeau.

   Gloire à notre France éternelle!
   Gloire à ceux qui sont morts pour elle!
   Aux martyrs! aux vaillants! aux forts!
   A ceux qu'enflamme leur exemple,
   Qui veulent place dans le temple,
   Et qui mourrons comme ils sont morts!

   C'est pour ces morts, dont l'ombre est ici bienvenue,
   Que le haut Panthéon élève dans la nue,
   Au-dessus de Paris,la ville aux mille tours,
   La reine de nos Tyrs et de nos Babylones,
   Cette couronne de colonnes
   Que le soleil levant redore tous les jours!

   Gloire à notre France éternelle!
   Gloire à ceux qui sont morts pour elle!
   Aux martyrs! aux vaillants! aux forts!
   A ceux qu'enflamme leur exemple,
   Qui veulent place dans le temple,
   Et qui mourrons comme ils sont morts!

   Ainsi, quand de tels morts sont couchés dans la tombe,
   En vain l'oubli, nuit sombre où va tout ce qui tombe,
   Passe sur leur sépulcre où nous nous inclinons;
   Chaque jour,pour eux seuls se levant plus fidèle,
   La gloire, aube toujours nouvelle,
   Fait luire leur mémoire et redore leurs noms!

Gloire à notre France éternelle!
Gloire à ceux qui sont morts pour elle!
Aux martyrs! aux vaillants! aux forts!
A ceux qu’enflamme leur exemple,
Qui veulent place dans le temple,
Et qui mourrons comme ils sont morts!
Juillet 1831

Noces et festins

La salle est magnifique et la table est immense.
Toujours par quelque bout le banquet recommence,
Un magique banquet, sans cesse amoncelé
Dans l’or et le cristal et l’argent ciselé.
A cette table auguste, où siègent peu de sages,
Tous les sexes ont place ainsi que tous les âges.
Guerrier de quarante ans au profil sérieux,
Jeune homme au blond duvet, jeune fille aux doux yeux,
Enfant qui balbutie et vieillard qui bégaye,
Tous mangent, tous ont faim, et leur faim les égaye,
Et les plus acharnés sont, autour des plats d’or,
Ceux qui n’ont plus de dents ou n’en ont pas encor!
Casques, cimiers, fleurons, bannières triomphales
Les lions couronnés, les vautours bicéphales,
Les étoiles d’argent sur le sinople obscur,
L’abeille dans la pourpre et le lys dans l’azur,
Les chaînes, les chevrons, les lambels, les losanges,
Tout ce que le blason a de formes étranges,
De léopards ailés, d’aigles et de griffons,
Tourbillonne autour d’eux, se cramponne aux plafonds,
Se tord dans l’arabesque entre leurs pieds jetée,
Plonge un bec familier dans leur coupe sculptée,
Et suspend aux lambris main drapeau rayonnant,
Qui, des poutres du toit jusqu’à leurs fronts traînant,
Les effleure du bout de sa frange superbe,
Comme un oiseau dont l’aile en passant touche l’herbe.

Et comme à ce banquet tout résonne ou reluit,
On y croit voir jouter la lumière et le bruit.

La salle envoie au ciel une rumeur de fête.
Les convives ont tous une couronne en tête,
Tous un trône sous eux où leur orgueil s’assied,
Tous un sceptre à la main, tous une chaîne au pied;

Car il en est plus d’un qui voudrait fuir peut-être,
Et l’esclave le mieux attaché c’est le maître.

Le pouvoir enivrant qui change l’homme en dieu;
L’amour, miel et poison, l’amour, philtre de feu
Fait du souffle mêlé de l’homme et de la femme,
Des frissons de la chair et des rêves de l’âme;
Le plaisir, fils des nuits, dont l’œil brûlant d’espoir
Languit vers le matin et sa rallume au soir;
Les meutes, les piqueurs, les chasses effrénées
Tout le jour par les champs au son du cor menées;
La soie et l’or; les lits de cèdre et de vermeil,
Faits pour la volupté plus que pour le sommeil,
Où, quand votre maîtresse en vos bras est venue,
Sur une peau de tigre on peut la coucher nue;
Les palais effrontés, les palais imprudents
Qui, du pauvre enviées, lui font grincer des dents;
Les parcs majestueux, pleins d’horizons bleuâtres,
Où l’œil sous le feuillage entrevoit des albâtres,
Où le grand peuplier tremble auprès du bouleau,
Où l’on entend la nuit des musiques sur l’eau;
La pudeur des beautés facilement vaincue;
La justice du juge à prix d’or convaincue;
La terreur des petits, le respect des passants,
Cet assaisonnement du bonheur des puissants;
La guerre; le canon tout gorgé de mitrailles
Qui passe son long cou par-dessus les murailles;
Le régiment marcheur, polype aux mille pieds;
La grande capitale aux bruits multipliés;
Tout ce qui jette au ciel, soit ville, soit armée,
Des vagues de poussière et des flots de fumée;
Le budget, monstre énorme, admirable poisson
A qui de toutes parts on jette l’hameçon,
Et qui, laissant à flots l’or couler de ses plaies,
Traîne un ventre splendide, écaillé de monnaies;
Tels sont les mets divins que sur des plats dorés
Leur servent à la fois cent valets affairés,

Et que dans son fourneau, laboratoire sombre,
Souterrain qui flamboie au-dessous d’eux dans l’ombre,
Prépare nuit et jour pour le royal festin
Ce morose alchimiste, appelé le Destin!

Le sombre amphitryon ne veut pas de plats vides,
Et la profusion lasse les plus avides;
Et, pour choisir parmi tant de mets savoureux,
Pour les bien conseiller, sans cesse, derrière eux,
Ils ont leur conscience ou ce qu’ainsi l’on nomme,
Compagnon clairvoyant, guide sûr de tout homme,
A qui, par imprudence et dès les premiers jeux,
Les nourrices des rois crèvent toujours les yeux.

Oh! ce sont là les grands et les heureux du monde!
O vie intarissable où le bonheur abonde!
O magnifique orgie! ô superbe appareil!
Comme on s’enivre bien dans un festin pareil!
Comme il doit, à travers ces splendeurs éclatantes,
Vous passer dans l’esprit mille images flottantes!
Que les rires, les voix, les lampes et le vin
Vous doivent faire en l’âme un tourbillon divin!
Et que l’œil ébloui doit errer avec joie
De tout ce qui ruisselle à tout ce qui flamboie!

Mais tout à coup, tandis que l’échanson rieur
Leur verse à tous l’oubli du monde extérieur;
A l’heure où table, et salle, et valets, et convives,
Et flambeaux couronnés d’auréoles plus vives,
Et l’orchestre caché qui chante jour et nuit,
Epanchent plus de joie, et de flamme, et de bruit,
Hélas! à cet instant d’ivresse et de délire,
Où le banquet hautain semble éclater de rire,
Narguant le peuple assis à la porte en haillons,
Quelqu’un frappe soudain l’escalier des talons,
Quelqu’un survient, quelqu’un en bas se fait entendre,
Quelqu’un d’inattendu qu’on devrait bien attendre.

Ne fermez pas la porte. Il faut ouvrir d'abord.
Il faut qu'on laisse entrer. – Et tantôt c'est la mort,
Tantôt l'exil qui vient, la bouche haletante,
L'une avec un tombeau, l'autre avec une tente,
La mort au pied pesant, l'exil au pas léger,
Spectre toujours vêtu d'un habit étranger.

Le spectre est effrayant. Il entre dans la salle,
Jette sur tous les fronts son ombre colossale,
Courbe chaque convive ainsi qu'un arbre au vent,
Puis il en choisit un, le plus ivre souvent,
L'arrache du milieu de la table effrayée,
Et l'emporte, la bouche encor mal essuyée!
20 août 1832

Napoléon III

Mil huit cent onze! – O temps où des peuples sans nombre
Attendaient prosternés sous un nuage sombre
Que le ciel eût dit oui!
Sentaient trembler sous eux les états centenaires,
    Et regardaient le Louvre entouré de tonnerres,
    Comme un mont Sinaï!

    Courbés comme un cheval qui sent venir son maître,
    Ils se disaient entre eux: — Quelqu’un de grand va naître!
    L’immense empire attend un héritier demain.
    Qu’est-ce que le Seigneur va donner à cet homme
    Qui, plus grand que César, plus grand même que Rome,
    Absorbe dans son sort le sort du genre humain? –

    Comme ils parlaient, la nue éclatante et profonde
    S’entr’ouvrit, et l’on vit se dresser sur le monde
    L’homme prédestiné,
    Et les peuples béants ne purent que se taire,
    Car ses deux bras levés présentaient à la terre
    Un enfant nouveau-né.

    Au souffle de l’enfant, dôme des Invalides,
    Les drapeaux prisonniers sous tes voûtes splendides
    Frémirent, comme au vent frémissent les épis;
    Et son cri, ce doux cri qu’une nourrice apaise,
    Fit, nous l’avons tous vu, bondir et hurler d’aise
    Les canons monstrueux à ta porte accroupis!

    Et lui! l’orgueil gonflait sa puissante narine;
    Ses deux bras, jusqu’alors croisés sur sa poitrine,
    S’étaient enfin ouverts!
    Et l’enfant, soutenu dans sa main paternelle,
    Inondé des éclairs de sa fauve prunelle,
    Rayonnait au travers!

Quand il eut bien fait voir l’héritier de ses trônes
Aux vieilles nations comme aux vieilles couronnes,
Eperdu, l’œil fixé sur quiconque était roi,
Comme un aigle arrivé sur une haute cime,
Il cria tout joyeux avec un air sublime:
— L’avenir! l’avenir! l’avenir est à moi!

II

Non, l’avenir n’est à personne!
Sire, l’avenir est à Dieu!
A chaque fois que l’heure sonne,
Tout ici-bas nous dit adieu.
L’avenir! l’avenir! mystère!
Toutes les choses de la terre,
Gloire, fortune militaire,
Couronne éclatante des rois,
Victoire aux ailes embrasées,
Ambitions réalisées,
Ne sont jamais sur nous posées
Que comme l’oiseau sur nos toits!

Non, si puissant qu’on soit, non, qu’on rie ou qu’on pleure,
Nul ne te fait parler, nul ne peut avant l’heure
Ouvrir ta froide main,
O fantôme muet, ô notre ombre, ô notre hôte,
Spectre toujours masqué qui nous suis côte à côte,
Et qu’on nomme demain!

Oh! demain, c’est la grande chose!
De quoi demain sera-t-il fait?
L’homme aujourd’hui sème la cause,
Demain Dieu fait mûrir l’effet.
Demain, c’est l’éclair dans la voile,
C’est le nuage sur l’étoile,
C’est un traître qui se dévoile,

C’est le bélier qui bat les tours,
C’est l’astre qui change de zone,
C’est Paris qui suit Babylone;
Demain, c’est le sapin du trône
Aujourd’hui, c’en est le velours!

Demain, c’est le cheval qui s’abat blanc d’écume.
Demain, ô conquérant, c’est Moscou qui s’allume,
La nuit, comme un flambeau.
C’est votre vieille garde au loin jonchant la plaine.
Demain, c’est Waterloo! demain, c’est Sainte-Hélène!
Demain, c’est le tombeau!

Vous pouvez entrer dans les villes
Au galop de votre coursier,
Dénouer les guerres civiles
Avec le tranchant de l’acier;
Vous pouvez, ô mon capitaine,
Barrer la Tamise hautaine,
Rendre la victoire incertaine
Amoureuse de vos clairons,
Briser toutes portes fermées,
Dépasser toutes renommées,
Donner pour astre à des armées
L’étoile de vos éperons!

Dieux garde la durée et vous laisse l’espace;
Vous pouvez sur la terre avoir toute la place,
Etre aussi grand qu’un front peut l’être sous le ciel;
Sire, vous pouvez prendre, à votre fantaisie,
L’Europe à Charlemagne, à Mahomet l’Asie; -
Mais tu ne prendras pas demain à l’Eternel!

III

O revers! ô leçon! – Quand l’enfant de cet homme
Eut reçu pour hochet la couronne de Rome;

Lorsqu’on l’eut revêtu d’un nom qui retentit;
Lorsqu’on eut bien montré son front royal qui tremble
Au peuple émerveillé qu’on puisse tout ensemble
Etre si grand et si petit;

Quand son père eut pour lui gagné bien des batailles;
Lorsqu’il eut épaissi de vivantes murailles
Autour du nouveau-né riant sur son chevet;
Quand ce grand ouvrier, qui savait comme on fonde,
Eut, à coups de cognée, à peu près fait le monde
Selon le songe qu’il rêvait;

Quant tout fut préparé par les mains paternelles
Pour doter l’humble enfant de splendeurs éternelles;
Lorsqu’on eut de sa vie assuré les relais;
Quand, pour loger un jour ce maître héréditaire,
On eut enraciné bien avant dans la terre
Les pieds de marbre des palais;

Lorsqu’on eut pour sa soif posé devant la France
Un vase tout rempli du vin de l’espérance, -
Avant qu’i eût goûté de ce poison doré,
Avant que de sa lèvre il eût touché la coupe,
Un cosaque survint qui prit l’enfant en croupe
Et l’emporta tout effaré!

IV

Oui, l’aigle, un soir, planait aux voûtes éternelles,
Lorsqu’un grand coup de vent lui cassa les deux ailes;
Sa chute fit dans l’air un foudroyant sillon;
Tous alors sur son nid fondirent pleins de joie;
Chacun selon ses dents se partagea la proie;
L’Angleterre prit l’aigle, et l’Autriche l’aiglon.

Vous savez ce qu’on fit du géant historique.
Pendant sic ans on vit, loin derrière l’Afrique,

Sous le verrou des rois prudents,
— Oh! n'exilons personne! oh! l'exil est impie! -
Cette grande figure en sa cage accroupie,
Ployée, et les genoux aux dents.

Encor si ce banni n'eût rien aimé sur terre!
Mais les cœurs de lion sont les vrais cœurs de père.
Il aimait son fils, ce vainqueur!
Deux choses lui restaient dans sa cage inféconde,
Le portrait d'un enfant et la carte du monde,
Tout son génie et tout son cœur!

Le soir, quand son regard se perdait dans l'alcôve,
Ce qui se remuait dans cette tête chauve,
Ce que son œil cherchait dans le passé profond,
— Tandis que ses geôliers, sentinelles placées
Pour guetter nuit et jour le vol de ses pensées,
En regardaient passer les ombres sur son front; -

Ce n'était pas toujours, sire, cette épopée
Que vous aviez naguère écrite avec l'épée;
Arcole, Austerlitz, Montmirail;
Ni l'apparition des vieilles pyramides;
Ni le pacha du Caire et ses chevaux numides
Qui mordaient le vôtre au poitrail;

Ce n'était pas le bruit de bombe et de mitraille
Que vingt ans, sous ses pieds, avait fait la bataille
Déchaînée en noirs tourbillons,
Quand son souffle poussait sur cette mer troublée
Les drapeaux frisonnants, penchés dans la mêlée
Comme les mâts des bataillons;

Ce n'était pas Madrid, le Kremlin et la Phare,
La diane au matin fredonnant sa fanfare,
Le bivouac sommeillant dans les feux étoilés,
Les dragons chevelus, les grenadiers épiques,

Et les rouges lanciers fourmillant dans les piques,
Comme des fleurs de pourpre en l’épaisseur des blés;

Non, ce qui l’occupait, c’est l’ombre blonde et rose
D’un bel enfant qui dort la bouche demi-close,
Gracieux comme l’orient,
Tandis qu’avec amour sa nourrice enchantée
D’une goutte de lait au bout du sein restée
Agace sa lèvre en riant.

Le père alors posait ses coudes sur sa chaise,
Son cœur plein de sanglots se dégonflait à l’aise,
Il pleurait, d’amour éperdu… -
Sois béni, pauvre enfant, tête aujourd’hui glacée,
Seul être qui pouvais distraire sa pensée
Du trône du monde perdu!

V

Tous deux sont morts. – Seigneur, votre droite est terrible!
Vous avez commencé par le maître invincible,
Par l’homme triomphant;
Puis vous avez enfin complété l’ossuaire;
Dix ans vous ont suffi pour filer le suaire
Du père et de l’enfant!

Gloire, jeunesse, orgueil, biens que la tombe emporte!
L’homme voudrait laisser quelque chose à la porte,
Mais la mort lui dit non!
Chaque élément retourne où tout doit redescendre.
L’air reprend la fumée, et la terre la cendre.
L’oubli reprend le nom.

VI

O révolutions! j’ignore,
Moi, le moindre des matelots,

Ce que Dieu dans l’ombre élabore
Sous le tumulte de vos flots.
La foule vous hait et vous raille.
Mais qui sait comment Dieu travaille?
Qui sait si l’onde qui tressaille,
Si le cri des gouffres amers,
Si la trombe aux ardentes serres,
Si les éclairs et les tonnerres,
Seigneur, ne sont pas nécessaires
A la perle que font les mers!

Pourtant cette tempête est lourde
Aux princes comme aux nations;
Oh! quelle mer aveugle et sourde
Qu’un peuple en révolutions!
Que sert ta chanson, ô poëte?
Ces chants que ton génie émiette
Tombent à la vague inquiète
Qui n’a jamais rien entendu!
Ta voix s’enroue en cette brume,
Le vent disperse au loin ta plume,
Pauvre oiseau chantant dans l’écume
Sur le mât d’un vaisseau perdu!

Longue nuit! tourmente éternelle!
Le ciel n’a pas un coin d’azur.
Hommes et choses, pêle-mêle,
Vont roulant dans l’abîme obscur.
Tout dérive et s’en va sous l’onde,
Rois au berceau, maîtres du monde,
Le front chauve et la tête blonde,
Grand et petit Napoléon!
Tout s’efface, tout se délie,
Le flot sur le flot se replie,
Et la vague qui passe oublie
Léviathan comme Alcyon!
Août 1832 Napoléon

Sur le bal de l’hôtel-de-ville

Ainsi l’hôtel de ville illumine son faîte.
Le prince et les flambeaux, tout y brille, et la fête
Ce soir va resplendir sur ce comble éclairé,
Comme l’idée au front du poëte sacré.
Mais cette fête, amis, n’est pas une pensée.
Ce n’est pas d’un banquet que la France est pressée,
Et ce n’est pas un bal qu’il faut, en vérité,
A ce tas de douleurs qu’on nomme la cité!

Puissants! nous ferions mieux de panser quelque plaie
Dont le sage rêveur à cette heure s’effraie,
D’étayer l’escalier qui d’en bas monte en haut,
D’agrandir l’atelier, d’amoindrir l’échafaud,
De songer aux enfants qui sont sans pain dans l’ombre,
De rendre un paradis au pauvre impie et sombre,
Que d’allumer un lustre et de tenir la nuit
Quelques fous éveillés autour d’un peu de bruit!

O reines de nos toits, femmes chastes et saintes,
Fleurs qui de nos maisons parfumez les enceintes,
Vous à qui le bonheur conseille la vertu,
Vous qui contre le mal n’avez pas combattu,
A qui jamais la faim, empoisonneuse infâme,
N’a dit: Vends-moi ton corps, — c’est-à-dire votre âme!
Vous dont le cœur de joie et d’innocence est plein,
Dont la pudeur a plus d’enveloppes de lin
Que n’en avait Isis, la déesse voilée,
Cette fête est pour vous comme une aube étoilée!
Vous riez d’y courir tandis qu’on souffre ailleurs!
C’est que votre belle âme ignore les douleurs;
Le hasard vous posa dans la sphère suprême;
Vous vivez, vous brillez, vous ne voyez pas même,
Tant vos yeux éblouis de rayons sont noyés,
Ce qu’au-dessous de vous dans l’ombre on foule aux pieds!

Oui, c’est ainsi. – Le prince, et le riche, et le monde
Cherche à vous réjouir, vous pour qui tout abonde.
Vous avez la beauté, vous avez l’ornement;
La fête vous enivre à son bourdonnement,
Et, comme à la lumière un papillon de soie,
Vous volez à la porte ouverte qui flamboie!
Vous allez à ce bal, et vous ne songez pas
Que parmi ces passants amassés sur vos pas,
En foule émerveillés des chars et des livrées,
D’autres femmes sont là, non moins que vous parées,
Qu’on farde et qu’on expose à vendre au carrefour;
Spectres où saigne encor la place de l’amour;
Comme vous pour le bal, belles et demi-nues;
Pour vous voir au passage, hélas! exprès venues,
Voilant leur feuil affreux d’un sourire moqueur,
Les fleurs au front, la boue aux pieds, la haine au cœur!
Mai 1832

Ô Dieu! si vous avez la France sous vos ailes

Ô Dieu! si vous avez la France sous vos ailes,
Ne souffrez pas, Seigneur, ces luttes éternelles,
Ces trônes qu’on élève et qu’on brise en courant,
Ces tristes libertés qu’on donne et qu’on reprend,
Ce noir torrent de lois, de passions, d’idées,
Qui répand sur les mœurs ses vagues débordées,
Ces tribuns opposant, lorsqu’on les réunit,
Une charte de plâtre aux abus de granit,
Ces flux et ces reflux de l’onde contre l’onde,
Cette guerre, toujours plus sombre et plus profonde,
Des partis au pouvoir, du pouvoir aux partis,
L’aversion des grands qui ronge les petits,
Et toutes ces rumeurs, ces chocs, ces cris sans nombre,
Ces systèmes affreux échafaudés dans l’ombre,
Qui font que le tumulte et la haine et le bruit
Emplissent les discours, et qu’on entend la nuit
À l’heure où le sommeil veut des moments tranquilles,
Les lourds canons rouler sur le pavé des villes!
30 août 1835

À Canaris

Canaris! Canaris! nous t’avons oublié!
Lorsque sur un héros le temps s’est replié,
Quand le sublime acteur a fait pleurer ou rire,
Et qu’il a dit le mot que Dieu lui donne à dire;
Quand, venus au hasard des révolutions,
Les grands hommes ont fait leurs grandes actions,
Qu’ils ont jeté leur lustre, étincelant ou sombre,
Et qu’ils sont pas à pas redescendus dans l’ombre,
Leur nom, s’éteint aussi. Tout est vain! tout est vain!
Et jusqu’à ce qu’un jour le poëte divin
Qui peut créer un monde avec une parole,
Les prenne, et leur rallume au front une auréole,
Nul ne se souvient d’eux, et la foule aux cent voix
Qui rien qu’en les voyant hurlait d’aise autrefois,
Hélas! si par hasard devant elle on les nomme,
Interroge et s’étonne, et dit: Quel est cet homme?

Nous t’avons oublié. Ta gloire est dans la nuit.
Nous faisons bien encor toujours beaucoup de bruit;
Mais plus de cris d’amour, plus de chants, plus de culte,
Plus d’acclamations pour toi dans ce tumulte!
Le bourgeois ne sait plus épeler ton grand nom.
Soleil qui t’es couché, tu n’as plus de Memnon!
Nous avons un instant crié: — La Grèce! Athènes!
Sparte! Léonidas! Botzaris! Démosthènes!
Canaris, demi-dieu de gloire rayonnant!… –
Puis l’entracte est venu, c’est bien; et maintenant
Dans notre esprit, si plein de ton apothéose,
Nous avons tout rayé pour écrire autre chose.
Adieu les héros grecs! leurs lauriers sont fanés!
Vers d’autres orients nos regards sont tournés.
On n’entend plus sonner ta gloire sur l’enclume
De la presse, géant par qui tout feu s’allume,
Prodigieux cyclope à la tonnante voix,

A qui plus d’un Ulysse a crevé l’œil parfois.
Oh! la presse! ouvrier qui chaque jour s’éveille,
Et qui défait souvent ce qu’il a fait la veille;
Mais qui forge du moins, de son bras souverain,
A toute chose juste une armure d’airain!

Nous t’avons oublié! Mais à toi, que t’importe?
Il te reste, ô marin, la vague qui t’emporte,
Ton navire, un bon vent toujours prêt à souffler,
Et l’étoile du soir qui te regarde aller.
Il te reste l’espoir, le hasard, l’aventure,
Le voyage à travers une belle nature,
L’éternel changement de choses et de lieux,
La joyeuse arrivée et le départ joyeux;
L’orgueil qu’un homme libre a de se sentir vivre
Dans un brick fin voilier et bien doublé de cuivre,
Soit qu’il ait à franchir un détroit sinueux,
Soit que, par un beau temps, l’océan monstrueux,
Qui brise quand il veut les rocs et les murailles,
Le berce mollement sur ses larges écailles,
Soit que l’orage noir, envolé dans les airs,
Le battre à coups pressés de son aile d’éclairs!

Mais il te reste, ô grec! ton ciel bleu, ta mer bleue,
Tes grands aigles qui font d’un coup d’aile une lieue,
Ton soleil toujours pur dans toutes les saisons,
La sereine beauté des tièdes horizons,
Ta langue harmonieuse, ineffable, amollie,
Que le temps a mêlée aux langues d’Italie
Comme aux flots de Baia la vague de Samos;
Langue d’Homère où Dante a jeté quelques mots!
Il te reste, trésor du grand homme candide,
Ton long fusil sculpté, ton yatagan splendide,
Tes larges caleçons de toile, tes caftans
De velours rouge et d’or, aux coudes éclatants!

Quand ton navire fuit sur les eaux écumeuses,

Fier de ne côtoyer que des rives fameuses,
Il te reste, ô mon grec, la douceur d’entrevoir
Tantôt un fronton blanc dans les brumes du soir,
Tantôt, sur le sentier qui près des mers chemine,
Une femme de Thèbe ou bien de Salamine,
Paysanne à l’œil fier qui va vendre ses blés
Et pique gravement deux grands bœufs accouplés,
Assise sur un char d’homérique origine
Comme l’antique Isis des bas-reliefs d’Egine!
Octobre 1832

Seule au pied de la tour

Seule au pied de la tour d’où sort la voix du maître
Dont l’ombre à tout moment au seuil vient apparaître,
Prête à voir en bourreau se changer ton époux,
Pâle et sur le pavé tombée à deux genoux,
Triste Pologne! hélas! te voilà onc liée,
Et vaincue, et déjà pour la tombe pliée!
Hélas! tes blanches mains, à défaut de tes fils,
Pressent sur ta poitrine un sanglant crucifix.
Les baskirs ont marché sur ta robe royale
Où sont encore empreints les clous de leur sandale:
Par instants un voix gronde, on entend le bruit
D’un pas lourd, et l’on voit un sabre qui reluit,
Et toi, serrée au mur qui sous tes pleurs ruisselle,
Levant tes bras meurtris et ton front qui chancelle
Et tes yeux que déjà la mort semble ternir,
Tu dis: France, ma sœur! ne vois-tu rien venir?
12 septembre 1835

À l’homme qui a livré une femme

Ô honte! ce n’est pas seulement cette femme,
Sacrée alors pour tous, faible cœur, mais grande âme,
Mais c’est lui, c’est son nom dans l’avenir maudit,
Ce sont les cheveux blancs de son père interdit,
C’est la pudeur publique en face regardée
Tandis qu’il s’accouplait à son infâme idée,
C’est l’honneur, c’est la foi, la pitié, le serment,
Voilà ce que ce juif a vendu lâchement!

Juif: les impurs traitants à qui l’on vend son âme
Attendront bien longtemps avant qu’un plus infâme
Vienne réclamer d’eux, dans quelque jour d’effroi,
Le fond du sac plein d’or qu’on fit vomir sur toi!

Ce n’est pas même un juif! C’est un payen immonde,
Un renégat, l’opprobre et le rebut du monde,
Un fétide apostat, un oblique étranger
Qui nous donne du moins le bonheur de songer
Qu’après tant de revers et de guerres civiles
Il n’est pas un bandit écumé dans nos villes,
Pas un forçat hideux blanchi dans les prisons,
Qui veuille mordre en France au pain des trahisons!

Rien ne te disait donc dans l’âme, ô misérable!
Que la proscription est toujours vénérable,
Qu’on ne bat pas le sein qui nous donna son lait,
Qu’une fille des rois dont on fut le valet
Ne se met point en vente au fond d’un antre infâme,
Et que, n’étant plus reine, elle était encor femme!

Rentre dans l’ombre où sont tous les monstres flétris
Qui depuis quarante ans bavent sur nos débris!
Rentre dans ce cloaque! et que jamais ta tête,
Dans un jour de malheur ou dans un jour de fête,

Ne songe à reparaître au soleil des vivants!
Qu'ainsi qu'une fumée abandonnée aux vents,
Infecte, et don chacun se détourne au passage,
Ta vie erre au hasard de rivage en rivage!

Et tais-toi! que veux-tu balbutier encor!
Dis, n'as-tu pas vendu l'honneur, le vrai trésor?
Garde tous les soufflets entassés sur ta joue.
Que fait l'excuse au crime et le fard sur la boue!

Sans qu'un ami t'abrite à l'ombre de son toit,
Marche, autre juif errant! marche avec l'or qu'on voit
Luire à travers les doigts de tes mains mal fermées!
Tous les biens de ce monde en grappes parfumées
Pendent sur ton chemin, car le riche ici-bas
A tout, hormis l'honneur qui ne s'achète pas!
Hâte-toi de jouir, maudit! et sans relâche
Marche! et qu'en te voyant on dise: C'est ce lâche!
Marche! et que le remords soit ton seul compagnon!
Marche! sans rien pouvoir arracher de ton nom!
Car le mépris public, ombre de la bassesse,
Croît d'année en année et repousse sans cesse,
Et va s'épaississant sur les traîtres pervers
Comme la feuille au front des sapins toujours verts!

Et quand la tombe un jour, cette embûche profonde
Qui s'ouvre tout à coup sous les choses du monde,
Te fera, d'épouvante et d'horreur agité,
Passer de cette vie à la réalité,
La réalité sombre, éternelle, immobile!
Quand, d'instant en instant plus seul et plus débile,
Tu te cramponneras en vain à ton trésor;
Quand la mort, t'accostant couché sur des tas d'or,
Videra brusquement ta main crispée et pleine
Comme une main d'enfant qu'un homme ouvre sans peine,
Alors, dans cet abîme où tout traître descend,
L'un roulé dans la fange et l'autre teint de sang,

Tu tomberas damné, désespéré, banni!
Afin que ton forfait ne soit pas impuni,
Et que ton âme, errante au milieu de ces âmes,
Y soit la plus abjecte entre les plus infâmes!
Et lorsqu’ils te verront paraître au milieu d’eux,
Ces fourbes dont l’histoire inscrit les noms hideux,
Que l’or tenta jadis, mais à qui d’âge en âge
Chaque peuple en passant vient cracher au visage,
Tous ceux, les plus obscurs comme les plus fameux,
Qui portent sur leur lèvre un baiser venimeux,
Judas qui vend son Dieu, Leclerc qui vend sa ville,
Groupe au louche regard, engeance ingrate et vile,
Tous en foule accourront joyeux sur ton chemin,
Et Louvel indigné repoussera ta main!
Juillet 1835

À monsieur le duc d’O.

Prince, vous avez fait une sainte action.
Loin de la haute sphère où rit l’ambition,
Un père et ses enfants, cheveux blancs, têtes blondes,
Marchaient enveloppés de ténèbres profondes,
Prêts à se perdre au fond d’un gouffre de douleurs,
Le père dans le crime et les filles ailleurs.
Comme des voyageurs, lorsque la nuit les gagne,
Vont s’appelant l’un l’autre aux flancs de la montagne,

Au penchant de l’abîme et rampant à genoux,
Ils ont crié vers moi; moi, j’ai crié vers vous.
Je vous ai dit: — Voici, tout près du précipice,
Des malheureux perdus dont le pied tremble et glisse!
Oh! venez à leur aide et tendez-leur la main! –
Vous vous êtes penché sur le bord du chemin,
Sans demander leurs noms vos mains se sont tendues,
Et vous avez sauvé ces âmes éperdues.
Puis à moi, qui, de joie et de pitié saisi,
Vous contemplais rêveur, vous avez dit: Merci!

C’est bien. C’est noble et grand. – Sous la tente empressée
Que vos mains sur leurs fronts à la hâte ont dressée,
Ils sont là maintenant, recueillant leur espoir,
Leur force et leur courage, et tachant d’entrevoir,
Grâce à votre rayon qui perce leur nuage,
Quelque horizon moins sombre à leur triste voyage,
Groupe encor frissonnant à sa perte échappé!
Pareil au pauvre oiseau, par l’orage trempé,
Qui, s’abritant d’un chêne aux branches éternelles,
Attend pour repartir qu’il ait séché ses ailes!

Jeune homme au cœur royal, soyez toujours ainsi.
La porte qui fait dire au pauvre: C’est ici!
La main toujours tendue au bord de cet abîme

Où tombe le malheur, d’où remonte le crime!
La clef sainte, qu’on trouve au besoin sans flambeau,
Qui rouvre l’espérance et ferme le tombeau!

Soyez l’abri, le toit, le port, l’appui, l’asile!
Faites au prisonnier qu’on frappe et qu’on exile,
A cette jeune fille, hélas, vaincue enfin,
Que marchandent dans l’ombre et le froid et la faim,
Au vieillard qui des jours vide la lie amère,
Aux enfants grelottants qui n’ont ni pain ni mère,
Faites aux malheureux, sans cesse, nuit et jour,
Verser sur vos deux mains bien des larmes d’amour!
Car Dieu fait quelquefois sous ces saintes rosées
Regermer des fleurons aux couronnes rasées.

Comme la nue altière, en son sublime essor,
Se laisse dérober son fluide trésor
Par ces flèches de fer au ciel toujours dressées,
Heureux le prince, empli de pieuses pensées,
Qui sent, du haut des cieux sombres et flamboyants,
Tout son or s’en aller aux mains des suppliants!

Décembre 1834

À Canaris

D’où vient que ma pensée encor revole à toi,
Grec illustre à qui nul ne songe, excepté moi?
D’où vient que me voilà, seul et dans la nuit noire,
Grave et triste, essayant de redorer ta gloire?
Tandis que là, dehors, cent rhéteurs furieux
Grimpent sur des tréteaux pour attirer les yeux,
D’où vient que c’est vers toi que mon esprit retourne,
Vers toi sur qui l’oubli s’enracine et séjourne?
C’est que tu fus tranquille et grand sous les lauriers.
Nous autres qui chantons, nous aimons les guerriers,
Comme sans doute aussi vous aimez les poëtes.
Car ce que nous chantons vient de ce que vous faites!
Car le héros est fort et le poëte est saint!
Les poëtes profonds qu’aucun souffle n’éteint
Sont pareils au volcan de la Sicile blonde
Que tes regards sans doute ont vu fumer sur l’onde;
Comme le haut Etna, flamboyant et fécond,
Ils ont la lave au cœur et l’épi sur le front!

Et puis, ce fut toujours un instinct de mon âme;
Quand ce chaos mêlé de fumée et de flamme,
Quand ce grand tourbillon, par Dieu même conduit,
Qui nous emporte tous au jour ou dans la nuit,
A passé sur le front des héros et des sages,
Comme après la tempête on court sur les rivages,
Moi je vais ramasser ceux qu’il jette dehors,
Ceux qui sont oubliés comme ceux qui sont morts!

Va, ne regrette rien. Ta part est la meilleure.
Vieillir dans ce Paris qui querelle et qui pleure
Et qui chante ébloui par mille visions
Comme une courtisane aux folles passions;
Rouler sur cet amas de têtes sans idées
Pleines chaque matin et chaque soir vidées;

Croître, fruit ignoré, dans ces rameaux touffus;
Etre admiré deux jours par tous ces yeux confus;
Ecouter dans ce gouffre où tout ruisseau s’écoule
Le bruit que fait un nom en tombant sur la foule;
Si des mœurs du passé quelque reste est debout
Se répandre à torrents, comme une onde qui bout,
Sur cette forteresse autrefois glorieuse
Par la brèche qu’y fait la presse furieuse;
Contempler jour et nuit ces flots et leur rumeur,
Et s’y mêler soi-même, inutile rameur;
Voir de près, haletants sous la main qui les pique,
Les ministres traîner la machine publique,
Charrue embarrassée en des sillons bourbeux
Dont nous sommes le soc et dont ils sont les bœufs;
Tirer sur le théâtre, en de funèbres drames,
Du choc des passions l’étincelle des âmes,
Et comme avec la main tordre et presser les cœur(s
Pour en faire sortir goutte à goutte les pleurs;
Emplir de son fracas la tribune aux harangues,
Babel où de nouveau se confondent les langues,
Harceler les pouvoirs; jeter sur ce qu’ils font
L’écume d’un discours au flot sombre et profond;
Etre un gond de la porte, une clef de la voûte;
S’i l’on est grand et fort, chaque jour dans sa route
Ecraser des serpents tout gonflés de venins;
Etre arbuste dans l’herbe et géant chez les nains;
Tout cela ne vaut pas, ô noble enfant de l’onde,
Le bonheur de flotter sur cette mer féconde
Qui vit partir Argo, qui vit naître Colomb,
D’y jeter par endroits la sonde aux pieds de plomb,
Et de voir, à travers la vapeur du cigare,
Décroître à l’horizon Mantinée ou Mégare!

Que si tu nous voyais, ô fils de l’Archipel,
Quand la presse a battu l’unanime rappel,
Créneler à la hâte un droit qu’on veut détruire,
Ou, foule dévouée à qui veut nous conduire,

Contre un pouvoir pygmée agitant son beffroi,
Nous ruer pêle-mêle à l’assaut d’une loi,
Sur ces combats d’enfants, sur ces frêles trophées,
Oh! que tu jetterais le dédain par bouffées,
Toi qui brises tes fers rien qu’en les secouant,
Toi dont le bras, la nuit, envoie en se jouant,
Avec leurs icoglans, leurs noirs, leurs femmes nues,
Les capitans-pachas s’éveiller dans les nues!

Va, que te fait l’oubli de ceux dont tu rirais
Si tu voyais leurs mains et leurs âmes de près?
Que t’importe ces cœurs faits de cire ou de pierre,
Ces mémoires en qui tout est cendre et poussière,
Ce traitant qui, du peuple infructueux fardeau,
N’est bon qu’à s’emplir d’or comme l’éponge d’eau,
Ce marchand accoudé sur son comptoir avide,
Et ce jeune énervé, face imbécile et vide,
Eunuque par le cœur, qui n’admire à Paris
Que les femmes de race et les chevaux de prix?
Que t’importe l’oubli de l’Europe, où tout roule,
L’homme et l’évènement, sous les pieds de la foule?
De Paris qui s’éveille et s’endort tour à tour,
Et fait un mauvais rêve en attendant le jour?
De Londre où l’hôpital ne vaut pas l’hippodrome?
De Rome qui n’est plus que l’écaille de Rome?
Et de ceux qui sont rois ou tribuns, et de ceux
Qui tiennent ton Hellé sous leur joug paresseux,
Vandales vernissés, blonds et pâles barbares,
Qui viennent au pays des rudes palikares,
Tout restaurer, mœurs, peuple et monuments, hélas!
Civiliser la Grèce et gratter Phidias!
Et puis, qui sait – candeur que j’admire et que j’aime! –
Si tu n’as pas fini par t’oublier toi-même!

Que t’importe! Tandis que, debout sur le port,
Tu vends à quelque anglais un passage à ton bord;
Ou que tu fais rouler et ranger sur la grève

Des ballots que longtemps le marchand vit en rêve;
Ou que ton joyeux rire accueille tes égaux,
Tes amis, les patrons de Corinthe et d’Argos;
Peut-être en ce moment quelque femme de Grèce,
Dont un bandeau païen serre la noire tresse,
Mère féconde, ou fille avec de vieux parents,
Tourne sur toi ses yeux fixes et transparents,
Se souvient de Psara, de Chio, de Nauplie,
Et de toute la mer de Canaris remplie,
Et, t’admirant de loin comme on admire un roi,
Sans oser te parler, passe en priant pour toi!

18 septembre 1835

Il n’avait pas vingt ans

Il n’avait pas vingt ans. Il avait abusé
De tout ce qui peut être aimé, souillé, brisé.
Il avait tout terni sous ses mains effrontées.
Les blêmes voluptés sur sa trace ameutées
Sortaient, pour l’appeler, de leur repaire impur
Quand son ombre passait à l’angle de leur mur.
Sa sève nuit et jour s’épuisait aux orgies
Comme la cire ardente aux mèches des bougies
Chassant l’été, l’hiver il posait au hasard
Son coude à l’Opéra sur Gluck ou sur Mozart.
Jamais il ne trempait sa tête dans ces ondes
Qu’Homère et que Shakspeare épanchent si profondes.
Il ne croyait à rien; jamais il ne rêvait;
Le bâillement hideux siégeait à son chevet;
Toujours son ironie, inféconde et morose,
Jappait sur les talons de quelque grande chose;
Il se faisait de tout le centre et le milieu;
Il achetait l’amour, il aurait vendu Dieu.
La nature, la mer, le ciel bleu, les étoiles,
Tous ces vents pour qui l’âme a toujours quelques voiles,
N’avaient rien dont son cœur fût dans l’ombre inquiet.
Il n’aimait pas les champs. Sa mère l’ennuyait.
Enfin, ivre, énervé, ne sachant plus que faire,
Sans haine, sans amour, et toujours, ô misère!
Avant la fin du jour blasé du lendemain,
Un soir qu’un pistolet se trouva sous sa main,
Il rejeta son âme au ciel, voûte fatale,
Comme le fond du verre au plafond de la salle!

Jeune homme, tu fus lâche, imbécile et méchant.
Nous ne te plaindrons pas. Lorsque le soc tranchant
A passé, donne-t-on une larme à l’ivraie?

Mais ce que nous plaindrons une douleur bien vraie,

C’est celle sur laquelle un tel fils est tombé,
C’est ta mère, humble femme au dos lent et courbé,
Qui sent fléchir sans toi son front que l’âge plombe,
Et qui fit le berceau de qui lui fait sa tombe!

Nous ne te plaindrons pas, mais ce que nous plaindrons,
Ce qui nous est encor sacré sous les affronts,
C’est cette triste enfant qui jadis pure et tendre
Chantait à sa mansarde où ton or l’alla prendre,
Qui s’y laissa tenter comme au soleil levant,
Croyant la faim derrière et le bonheur devant;
Qui voit son âme hélas, qu’on mutile et qu’on foule,
Eparse maintenant sous les pieds de la foule;
Qui pleure son parfum par tout souffle enlevé;
Pauvre vase de fleurs tombé sur le pavé!

Non, ce que nous plaindrons, ce n’est pas toi, vaine ombre,
Chiffre qu’on n’a jamais compté dans aucun nombre,
C’est ton nom jadis pur, maintenant avili,
C’est ton père expiré, ton père enseveli,
Vénérable soldat de notre armée ancienne,
Que ta tombe en s’ouvrant réveille dans la sienne!
Ce sont tes serviteurs, tes parents, tes amis,
Tous ceux qui t’entouraient, tous ceux qui s’étaient mis
Follement à ton ombre, et dont la destinée
Par malheur dans la tienne était enracinée;
C’est tout ce qu’ont flétri tes caprices ingrats;
C’est ton chien qui t’aimait et que tu n’aimais pas!

Pour toi, triste orgueilleux, riche au cœur infertile,
Qui vivais impuissant et qui meurs inutile,
Toi qui tranchas tes jours pour faire un peu de bruit,
Sans même être aperçu, retourne dans la nuit!
C’est bien. Sors du festin sans qu’un flambeau s’efface!
Tombe au torrent, sans même en troubler la surface!
Ce siècle a son idée, elle marche à grand pas,

Et toujours à son but! Ton sépulcre n’est pas
De ceux qui le feront trébucher dans sa route.
Ta porte en se fermant ne vaut pas qu’on l’écoute.
Va donc! Qu’as-tu trouvé, ton caprice accompli?
Voluptueux, la tombe, et vaniteux, l’oubli!

Avril 1831

Certe, une telle mort, ignorée ou connue,
N’importe pas au siècle, et rien n’en diminue;
On n’en parle pas même et l’on passe à côté.
Mais lorsque, grandissant sous le ciel attristé,
L’aveugle suicide étend son aile sombre,
Et prend à chaque instant plus d’âmes sous son ombre;
Quand il éteint partout, hors des desseins de Dieu,
Des fronts pleins de lumière et des cœurs pleins de feu;
Quand Robert, qui voilait, peintre au pinceau de flamme,
Sous un regard serein l’orage de son âme,
Rejette le calice avant la fin du jour
Dès qu’il en a vidé ce qu’il contient d’amour;
Quand Castlereagh, ce taon qui piqua Bonaparte,
Cet anglais mélangé de Carthage et de Sparte,
Se plonge au cœur l’acier et meurt désabusé,
Assouvi de pouvoir, de ruses épuisé;
Quand Rabbe de poison inonde ses blessures;
Comme un cerf poursuivi d’aboyantes morsures,
Lorsque Gros haletant se jette, faible et vieux,
Au fleuve, pour tromper sa meute d’envieux;
Quand de la mère au fils et du père à la fille
Partout ce vent de mort ébranche la famille;
Lorsqu’on voit le vieillard se hâter au tombeau

Après avoir longtemps trouvé le soleil beau,
Et l’épouse quittant le foyer domestique,
Et l’écolier lisant dans quelque livre antique,
Et tous ces beaux enfants, hélas! trop tôt mûris,
Qui ne connaissaient pas les hommes, qu’à Paris

Souvent un songe d’or jusques au ciel enlève,
Et qui se sont tués quand du haut de leur rêve
De gloire, de vertu, d’amour, de liberté,
Ils sont tombés le front sur la société!
Alors le croyant prie et le penseur médite!
Hélas! l’humanité va peut-être trop vite.
Où tend ce siècle? où court le troupeau des esprits?
Rien n’est encor trouvé, rien n’est encor compris,
Car beaucoup ici-bas sentent que l’espoir tombe,
Et se brisent la tête à l’angle de la tombe
Comme vous briseriez le soir sur le pavé
Un œuf où rien ne germe et qu’on n’a pas couvé!
Mal d’un siècle en travail où tout se décompose!
Quel en est le remède et quelle en est la cause?
Serait-ce que la foi derrière la raison
Décroît comme un soleil qui baisse à l’horizon?
Que Dieu n’est plus compté dans ce que l’homme fonde?
Et qu’enfin il se fait une nuit trop profonde
Dans ces recoins du cœur, du monde inaperçus,
Que peut seule éclairer votre lampe, ô Jésus!
Est-il temps, matelots mouillés par la tempête,
De rebâtir l’autel et de courber la tête?
Devons-nous regretter ces jours anciens et forts
Où les vivants croyaient ce qu’avaient cru les morts,
Jours de piété grave et de force féconde,
Lorsque la Bible ouverte éblouissait le monde!

Amas sombre et mouvant de méditations!
Problèmes périlleux! obscures questions
Qui font que, par moments s’arrêtant immobile,
Le poëte pensif erre encor dans la ville

A l’heure où sur ses pas on ne rencontre plus
Que le passant tardif aux yeux irrésolus
Et la ronde de nuit, comme un rêve apparue,
Qui va tâtant dans l’ombre à tous les coins de rue!

4 septembre 1835

Oh! n’insultez jamais

Oh! n’insultez jamais une femme qui tombe!
Qui sait sous quel fardeau la pauvre âme succombe!
Qui sait combien de jours sa faim a combattu!
Quand le vent du malheur ébranlait leur vertu,
Qui de nous n’a pas vu de ces femmes brisées
S’y cramponner longtemps de leurs mains épuisées!
Comme au bout d’une branche on voit étinceler
Une goutte de pluie où le ciel vient briller,
Qu’on secoue avec l’arbre et qui tremble et qui lutte,
Perle avant de tomber et fange après sa chute!

La faute en est à nous. A toi, riche! à ton or!
Cette fange d’ailleurs contient l’eau pure encor.
Pour que la goutte d’eau sorte de la poussière,
Et redevienne perle en sa splendeur première,
Il suffit, c’est ainsi que tout remonte au jour,
D’un rayon de soleil ou d’un rayon d’amour!
6 septembre 1835

Conseil

Rien encore n’a germé de vos rameaux flottants
Sur notre jeune terre où, depuis quarante ans,
Tant d’âmes se sont échouées,
Doctrines aux fruits d’or, espoir des nations,
Que la hâtive main des révolutions
Sur nos têtes a secouées!

Nous attendons toujours! Seigneur, prenez pitié
Des peuples qui, toujours satisfaits à moitié,
Vont d’espérance en espérance;
Et montrez-nous enfin l’homme de votre choix
Parmi tous ces tribuns et parmi tous ces rois
Que vous essayez à la France!

Qui peut se croire fort, puissant et souverain?
Qui peut dire en scellant des barrières d’airain:
Jamais vous ne serez franchies!
Dans ce siècle de bruit, de gloire et de revers,
Où les roseaux penchés au bord des étangs verts
Durent plus que les monarchies!

Rois! la bure est souvent jalouse du velours.
le peuple a froid l’hiver, le peuple a faim toujours.
Rendez-lui son sort plus facile.
Le peuple souvent porte un bien rude collier.
Ouvrez l’école aux fils, aux pères l’atelier,
A tous vos bras, auguste asile!

Par la bonté des rois rendez les peuples bons.
Sous d’étranges malheurs souvent nous nous courbons.
Songez que Dieu seul est le maître.
Un bienfait par quelqu’un est toujours ramassé.
Songez-y, rois minés sur qui pèse un passé
Gros du même avenir peut-être!

Donnez à tous. Peut-être un jour tous vous rendront!
Donnez, — on ne sait pas quels épis germeront
Dans notre siècle autour des trônes! –
De la main droite aux bons, de la gauche aux méchants!
Comme le laboureur sème sa graine aux champs,
Ensemencez les cœurs d'aumônes!

O rois! le pain qu'on porte au vieillard desséché,
La pauvre adolescente enlevée au marché,
Le bienfait souriant, toujours prêt à toute heure,
Qui vient, riche et voilé, partout où quelqu'un pleure,
Le cri reconnaissant d'une mère à genoux,
L'enfant sauvé qui lève, entre le peuple et vous,
Ses deux petites mains sincères et joyeuses,
Sont la meilleure digue aux foules furieuses.

Hélas! je vous le dis, ne vous endormez pas
Tandis que l'avenir s'amoncelle là-bas!

Il arrive parfois, dans le siècle où nous sommes,
Qu'un grand vent tout à coup soulève à flots les hommes;
Vent de malheur, formé, comme tous les autans,
De souffles quelque part comprimés trop longtemps;
Vent qui de tout foyer disperse la fumée;
Dont s'attise l'idée à cette heure allumée;
Qui passe sur tout homme, et, torche ou flot amer,
Le fait étinceler ou le fait écumer;
Ebranle tout digue et toute citadelle;
Dans la société met à nu d'un coup d'aile
Des sommets jusqu'alors par des brumes voilés,
Des gouffres ténébreux ou des coins étoilés;
Vent fatal qui confond les meilleurs et les pires,
Arrache mainte tuile au vieux toit des empires,
Et prenant dans l'état, en haut, en bas, partout,
Tout esprit qui dérive et toute âme qui bout,
Tous ceux dont un zéphyr fait remuer les têtes,

Tout ce qui devient onde à l’heure des tempêtes,
Amoncelant dans l’ombre et chassant à la fois
Ces flots, ces bruits, ce peuple, et ces pas et ces voix,
Et ces groupes sans forme et ces rumeurs sans nombre,
Pousse tout cet orage au seuil d’un palais sombre!

Palais sombre en effet, et plongé dans la nuit!
D’où les illusions s’envolent à grand bruit,
Quelques-unes en pleurs, d’autres qu’on entend rire!
C’en est fait. L’heure vient, le voile se déchire,
Adieu les songes d’or! On se réveille, on voit
Un spectre aux mains de chair qui vous touche du doigt.
C’est la réalité! qu’on sent là, qui vous pèse.
On rêvait Charlemagne, on pense à Louis seize!
Heure grande et terrible où, doutant des canons,
La royauté, nommant ses amis par leurs noms,
Recueillant tous les bruits que la tempête apporte,
Attend, l’œil à la vitre et l’oreille à la porte!
Où l’on voit dans un coin, ses filles dans ses bras,
La reine qui pâlit, pauvre étrangère, hélas!

Où les petits enfants des familles royales
De quelque vieux soldat pressent les mains loyales,
Et demandent, avec des sanglots superflus,
Aux valets, qui déjà ne leur répondent plus,
D’où viennent ces rumeurs, ces terreurs, ce mystère,
Et les ébranlements de cette affreuse terre
Qu’ils sentent remuer comme la mer aux vents,
Et qui ne tremble pas sous les autres enfants!

Hélas! vous crénelez vos mornes Tuileries,
Vous encombrez les ponts de vos artilleries,
Vous gardez chaque rue avec un régiment,
A quoi bon? à quoi bon? De moment en moment
La tourbe s’épaissit, grosse et désespérée
Et terrible, et qu’importe, à l’heure où leur marée
Sort et monte en hurlant du fond du gouffre amer,

La mitraille à la foule et la grêle à la mer!

O redoutable époque! et quels temps que les nôtres!
Où, rien qu'en se serrant les uns contre les autres,
Les hommes dans leurs plis écrasent tours, châteaux,
Donjons que les captifs rayaient de leurs couteaux,
Créneaux, portes d'airain comme un carton ployées,
Et sur leurs boulevards vainement appuyées
Les pâles garnisons, et les canons de fer
Broyés avec le mur comme l'os dans la chair!

Comment se défendra ce roi qu'un peuple assiège?
Plus léger sur ce flot que sur l'onde un vain liège,
Plus vacillant que l'ombre aux approches du soir,
Ecoutant sans entendre et regardant sans voir,
Il est là qui frissonne, impuissant, infertile,
Sa main tremble, et sa tête est un crible inutile,
— Hélas! hélas! les rois en ont seuls de pareils! -
Qui laisse tout passer, hors les mauvais conseils!
Que servent maintenant ces sabres, ces épées,
Ces lignes de soldats par des caissons coupées,
Ces bivouacs, allumés dans les jardins profonds,
Dont la lueur sinistre empourpre ses plafonds,
Ce général choisi, qui déjà, vaine garde,
Sent peut-être à son front sourdre une autre cocarde,
Et tous ces cuirassiers, soldats vieux ou nouveaux,
Qui plantent dans la cour des pieux pour leurs chevaux?
Que sert la grille close et la mèche allumée?
Il faudrait une tête, et tu n'as qu'une armée!

Que faire de ce peuple à l'immense roulis,
Mer qui traîne du moins une idée en ses plis,
Vaste inondation d'hommes, d'enfants, de femmes,
Flots qui tous ont des yeux, vagues qui sont des âmes?

Malheur alors! O Dieu! faut-il que nous voyions
Le côté monstrueux des révolutions!

Qui peut dompter la mer? Seigneur! qui peut répondre
Des ondes de Paris et des vagues de Londre,
Surtout lorsque la ville, ameutée aux tambours
Sent ramper dans ses flots l’hydre de ses faubourgs!
Dans ce palais fatal où l’empire s’écroule,
Dont la porte bientôt va ployer sous la foule,
Où l’on parle tout bas de passages secrets,
Où le roi sent déjà qu’on le sert de moins près,
Où la mère en tremblant rit à l’enfant qui pleure,
O mon Dieu! que va-t-il se passer tout à l’heure?
Comment vont-ils jouer avec ce nid de rois?
Pourquoi faut-il qu’aux jours où le pauvre aux abois
Sent sa haine des grands de ce qu’il souffre accrue,
Notre faute ou la leur le lâchent dans la rue?
Temps de deuil où l’émeute en fureur sort de tout!
Où le peuple devient difforme tout à coup!

Malheur donc! c’est fini. Plus de barrière au trône!
Mais Dieu garde un trésor à qui lui fit l’aumône.
Si le prince a laissé, dans des temps moins changeants,
L’empreinte de ses pas à des seuils indigents,
Si des bienfaits cachés il fut parfois complice,
S’il a souvent dit: grâce! où la loi dit: supplice!
Ne désespérez pas. Le peuple aux mauvais jours
A pu tout oublier, Dieu se souvient toujours!
Souvent un cri du cœur sorti d’une humble bouche
Désarme, impérieux, une foule farouche
Qui tenait une proie en ses poings triomphants.
Les mères aux lions font rendre les enfants!

Oh! dans cet instant même où le naufrage gronde,
Où l’on sent qu’un boulet ne peut rien contre une onde,
Où, liquide et fangeuse et pleine de courroux,
La populace à l’œil stupide, aux cheveux roux,
Aboyant sur le seuil comme un chien pour qu’on ouvre,
Arrive, éclaboussant les chapiteaux du Louvre,
Océan qui n’a pas d’heure pour son reflux!

Au moment où l’on voit que rien n’arrête plus
Ce flot toujours grossi, que chaque instant apporte,
Qui veut monter, qui hurle et qui mouille la porte,…
C’est un spectacle auguste et que j’ai vu déjà
Souvent, quand mon regard dans l’histoire plongea,
Qu’une bonne action, cachée en un coin sombre,
Qui sort subitement toute blanche de l’ombre,
Et comme autrefois Dieu qu’elle prend à témoin,
Dit au peuple écumant: Tu n’iras pas plus loin!
28 décembre 1834

Le grand homme vaincu

Le grand homme vaincu peut perdre en un instant
Sa gloire, son empire, et son trône éclatant,
Et sa couronne qu'on renie,
Tout, jusqu'à ce prestige à sa grandeur mêlé
Qui faisait voir son front dans un ciel étoilé;
Il garde toujours son génie!

Ainsi, quand la bataille enveloppe un drapeau,
Tout ce qui n'est qu'azur, écarlate, oripeau,
Frange d'or, tunique de soie,
Tombe sous la mitraille en un moment haché,
Et, lambeau par lambeau, s'en va comme arraché
Par le bec d'un oiseau de proie;

Et, qu'importe! à travers les cris, les pas, les voix,
Et la mêlée en feu qui sur tous à la fois
Fait tourner son horrible meule,
Au plus haut de la hmape, orgeuil des bataillons,
Où pendait cette pourpre envolée en haillons,
L'aigle de bronze reste seule!
21 février 1835

À Alphonse Rabbe

Mort le 31 décembre 1829

Hélas! que fais-tu donc, ô Rabbe, ô mon ami,
Sévère historien dans la tombe endormi!

Je l’ai pensé souvent dans mes heures funèbres,
Seul près de mon flambeau qui rayait les ténèbres,
O noble ami, pareil aux hommes d’autrefois,
Il manque parmi nous ta voix, ta forte voix
Pleine de l’équité qui gonflait ta poitrine,
Il nous manque ta main qui grave et qui burine,
Dans ce siècle où par l’or les sages sont distraits,
Où l’idée est servante auprès des intérêts,
Temps de fruits avortés et de tiges rompues,
D’instincts dénaturés, de raisons corrompues,
Où, dans l’esprit humain tout étant dispersé,
Le présent au hasard flotte sur le passé!

Si parmi nous ta tête était debout encore,
Cette cime où vibrait l’éloquence sonore,
Au milieu de nos flots tu serais calme et grand.
Tu serais comme un pont posé sur ce courant.

Tu serais pour chacun la voix haute et sensée
Qui fait que tout brouillard s’en va de la pensée,
Et que la vérité, qu’en vain nous repoussions,
Sort de l’amas confus des sombres visions!

Tu dirais aux partis qu’ils font trop de poussière
Autour de la raison pour qu’on la voie entière;
Au peuple, que la loi du travail est sur tous
Et qu’il est assez fort pour n’être pas jaloux;
Au pouvoir, que jamais le pouvoir ne se venge,
Et que pour le penseur c’est un spectacle étrange

Et triste quand la loi, figure au bras d'airain,
Déesse qui ne doit avoir qu'un front serein,
Sort à de certains jours de l'urne consulaire
L'œil hagard, écumante et folle de colère!

Et ces jeunes esprits, à qui tu souriais,
Et que leur âge livre aux rêves inquiets,
Tu leurs dirais: “Amis, nés pour des temps prospères,
Oh! n'allez pas errer comme ont erré vos pères!
Laissez mûrir vos fronts! gardez-vous, jeunes gens,
Des systèmes dorés aux plumages changeants
Qui dans les carrefours s'en vont faire la roue!
Et de ce qu'en vos cœurs l'Amérique secoue,
Peuple à peine essayé, nation de hasard,
Sans tige, sans passé, sans histoire et sans art!
Et de cette' sagesse impie, envenimée,
Du cerveau de Voltaire éclose toute armée,
Fille de l'ignorance et de l'orgueil, posant
Les lois des anciens jours sur les mœurs d'à présent,
Qui refait un chaos partout où fut un monde,
Qui rudement enfonce, ô démence profonde!
Le casque étroit de Sparte au front du vieux Paris,
Qui dans les temps passés, mal lus et mal compris,
Viole effrontément tout sage pour lui faire
Un monstre qui serait la terreur de son père!
Si bien que les héros antiques tout tremblants
S'en sont voilé la face, et qu'après trois mille ans,
Par ses embrassements réveillé sous la pierre,
Lycurgue qu'elle épouse enfante Robespierre!”

Tu nous dirais à tous: “Ne vous endormez pas!
Veillez, et soyez prêts! car déjà pas à pas
La main de l'oiseleur dans l'ombre s'est glissée
Partout où chante un nid couvé par la pensée!
Car les plus nobles cœurs sont vaincus ou sont las!
Car la Pologne aux fers ne peut plus même, hélas!
Mordre le pied du czar appuyé sur sa gorge!

Car on voit chaque jour s’allonger dans la forge
La chaîne que les rois, craignant la liberté,
Font pour cette géante endormie à côté!
Ne vous endormez pas! travaillez sans relâche!
Car les grands ont leur œuvre et les petits leur tâche,
Chacun a son ouvrage à faire. Chacun met
Sa pierre à l’édifice encor loin du sommet.
Qui croit avoir fini pour un roi qu’on dépose
Se trompe. Un roi qui tombe est toujours peu de chose.
Il est plus difficile et c’est un plus grand poids
De relever les mœurs que d’abattre les rois.
Rien chez vous n’est complet. La ruine ou l’ébauche.
L’épi n’est pas formé que votre main le fauche!
Vous êtes encombrés de plans toujours rêvés
Et jamais accomplis. Hommes, vous ne savez
Tant vous connaissez peu ce qui convient aux âmes,
Que faire des enfants ni que faire des femmes!
Où donc en êtes-vous? Vous vous applaudissez
Pour quelques blocs de lois au hasard entassés!
Ah: l’heure du repos pour aucun n’est venue.
Travaillez! Vous cherchez une chose inconnue,
Vous n’avez pas de foi, vous n’avez pas d’amour,
Rien chez vous n’est encore éclairé du vrai jour!
Crépuscule et brouillards que vos plus clairs systèmes!
Dans vos lois, dans vos mœurs, et dans vos esprits mêmes
Partout l’aube blanchâtre ou le couchant vermeil!
Nulle part le midi! nulle part le soleil!”

Tu parlerais ainsi dans des livres austères,
Comme parlaient jadis les anciens solitaires,
Comme parlent tous ceux devant qui l’on se tait,
Et l’on t’écouterait comme on les écoutait.
Et l’on viendrait vers toi dans ce siècle plein d’ombre
Où, chacun se heurtant aux obstacles sans nombre
Que faute de lumière on tâte avec la main,
Le conseil manque à l’âme et le guide au chemin!

Hélas! à chaque instant des souffles de tempêtes
Amassent plus de brume et d’ombre sur nos têtes.
De moment en moment l’avenir s’assombrit.
Dans le calme du cœur, dans la paix de l’esprit,
Je t’adressais ces vers où mon âme sereine
N’a laissé sur ta pierre écumer nulle haine,
A toi qui dors couché dans le tombeau profond,
A toi qui ne sais plus ce que les hommes font!
Je t’adressais ces vers pleins de tristes présages.
Car c’est bien follement que nous nous croyions sages!
Le combat furieux recommence à gronder
Entre le droit de croître et le droit d’émonder;
La bataille où les lois attaquent les idées
Se mêle de nouveau sur des mers mal sondées;
Chacun se sent troublé comme l’eau sous le vent;
Et moi-même, à cette heure, à mon foyer rêvant,
Voilà, depuis cinq ans qu’on oubliait Procuste,
Que j’entends aboyer au seuil du drame auguste
La censure à l’haleine immonde, aux ongles noirs,
Cette chienne au front bas qui suit tous les pouvoirs,
Vile, et mâchant toujours dans sa gueule souillée,
O muse! quelque pan de ta robe étoilée!

Hélas! que fais-tu donc, ô Rabbe, ô mon ami,
Sévère historien dans la tombe endormi!

14 septembre 1835

Envoi des feuilles d’automne à madame

A Madame ***

I

Ce livre errant qui va l’aile brisée,
Et que le vent jette à votre croisée
Comme un grêlon à tous les murs cogné,

Hélas! il sort des tempêtes publiques.
Le froid, la pluie, et mille éclairs obliques
L’ont assailli, le pauvre nouveau-né.

Il est puni d’avoir fui ma demeure.
Après avoir chanté, voici qu’il pleure;
Voici qu’il boite après avoir plané!

II

En attendant que le vent le remporte,
Ouvrez, Marie, ouvrez-lui votre porte.
Raccomodez ses vers estropiés!

Dans votre alcôve à tous les vents bien close,
Pour un instant souffrez qu’il se repose,
Qu’il se réchauffe au feu de vos trépieds,

Qu’à vos côtés, à votre ombre, il se couche,
Oiseau plumé, qui, frileux et farouche,
Tremble et palpite, abrité sous vos pieds!
18 janvier 1832

Anacréon, poëte

Anacréon, poëte aux ondes érotiques
Qui filtres du sommet des sagesses antiques,
Et qu’on trouve à mi-côte alors qu’on y gravit,
Clair, à l’ombre, épandu sur l’herbe qui revit,
Tu me plais, doux poëte au flot calme et limpide!
quand le sentier qui monte aux cimes est rapide,
Bien souvent, fatigués du soleil, nous aimons
Boire au petit ruisseau tamisé par les monts!
21 août 1835

L’aurore s’allume

I

L’aurore s’allume;
L’ombre épaisse fuit;
Le rêve et la brume
Vont où va la nuit;
Paupières et roses
S’ouvrent demi-closes;
Du réveil des choses
    On entend le bruit.

    Tout chante et murmure,
    Tout parle à la fois,
    Fumée et verdure,
    Les nids et les toits;
    Le vent parle aux chênes,
    L’eau parle aux fontaines;
    Toutes les haleines
    Deviennent des voix!

    Tout reprend son âme,
    L’enfant son hochet,
    Le foyer sa flamme,
    Le luth son archet;
    Folie ou démence,
    Dans le monde immense,
    Chacun recommence
    Ce qu’il ébauchait.

    Qu’on pense ou qu’on aime,
    Sans cesse agité,
    Vers un but suprême,
    Tout vole emporté;
    L’esquif cherche un môle,

L’abeille un vieux saule,
La boussole un pôle,
Moi la vérité.

II

Vérité profonde!
Granit éprouvé
Qu’au fond de toute onde
Mon ancre a trouvé!
De ce monde sombre,
Où passent dans l’ombre
Des songes sans nombre,
Plafond et pavé!

Vérité, beau fleuve
Que rien ne tarit!
Source où tout s’abreuve,
Tige où tout fleurit!
Lampe que Dieu pose
Près de toute cause!
Clarté que la chose
Envoie à l’esprit!

Arbre à rude écorce,
Chêne au vaste front,
Que selon sa force
L’homme ploie ou rompt,
D’où l’ombre s’épanche,
Où chacun se penche,
L’un sur une branche,
L’autre sur le tronc!

Mont d’où tout ruisselle!
Gouffre où tout s’en va!
Sublime étincelle
Que fait Jéhova!

Rayon qu’on blasphème!
Œil calme et suprême
Qu’au front de Dieu même
L’homme un jour creva!

III

Ô terre! ô merveilles
Dont l’éclat joyeux
Emplit nos oreilles,
Eblouit nos yeux!
Bords où meurt la vague,
Bois qu’un souffle élague,
De l’horizon vague
Plis mystérieux!

Azur dont se voile
L’eau du gouffre amer,
Quand, laissant ma voile
Fuir au gré de l’air,
Penché sur la lame,
J’écoute avec l’âme
Cet épithalame
Que chante la mer!

Azur non moins tendre
Du ciel qui sourit
Quand, tâchant d’entendre
Ce que dit l’esprit,
Je cherche, ô nature,
La parole obscure
Que le vent murmure,
Que l’étoile écrit!

Création pure!
Etre universel!
Océan, ceinture

De tout sous le ciel!
Astres que fait naître
Le souffle du maître,
Fleurs où Dieu peut-être
Cueille quelque miel!

O champs, ô feuillages!
Monde fraternel
Clocher des villages
Humble et solennel!
Mont qui portes l’aire!
Aube fraîche et claire,
Sourire éphémère
De l’astre éternel!

N’êtes-vous qu’un livre,
Sans fin ni milieu,
Où chacun pour vivre
Cherche à lire un peu!
Phrase si profonde
Qu’en vain on la sonde!
L’œil y voit un monde,
L’âme y trouve un Dieu!

Beau livre qu’achèvent
Les cœurs ingénus,
Où les penseurs rêvent
Des sens inconnus,
Où ceux que Dieu charge
D’un front vaste et large
Ecrivent en marge:
Nous sommes venus!

Saint livre où la voile
Qui flotte en tous lieux,
Saint livre où l’étoile
Qui rayonne aux yeux,

Ne trace, ô mystère!
Qu’un nom solitaire,
Qu’un nom sur la terre,
Qu’un nom dans les cieux!

Livre salutaire
Où le cœur s’emplit!
Où tout sage austère
Travaille et pâlit!
Dont le sens rebelle
Parfois se révèle!
Pythagore épèle
Et Moïse lit!

Décembre 1834

Hier, la nuit d’été

Hier, la nuit d’été, qui nous prêtait ses voiles,
Etait digne de toi, tant elle avait d’étoiles!
Tant son calme était frais! tant son souffle était doux!
Tant elle éteignait bien ses rumeurs apaisées!
Tant elle répandait d’amoureuses rosées
Sur les fleurs et sur nous!

Moi, j’étais devant toi, plein de joie et de flamme,
Car tu me regardais avec toute ton âme!
J’admirais la beauté dont ton front se revêt.
Et sans même qu’un mot révélât ta pensée,
La tendre rêverie en ton cœur commencée
Dans mon cœur s’achevait!

Et je bénissais Dieu, dont la grâce infinie
Sur la nuit et sur toi jeta tant d’harmonie,
Qui, pour me rendre calme et pour me rendre heureux,
Vous fit, la nuit et toi, si belles et si pures,
Si pleines de rayons, de parfums, de murmures,
Si douces toutes deux!

Oh oui, bénissons Dieu dans notre foi profonde!
C’est lui qui fit ton âme et qui créa le monde!
Lui qui charme mon cœur! lui qui ravit mes yeux!
C’est lui que je retrouve au fond de tout mystère!
C’est lui qui fait briller ton regard sur la terre
Comme l’étoile aux cieux!

C’est Dieu qui mit l’amour au bout de toute chose,
L’amour en qui tout vit, l’amour sur qui tout pose!
C’est Dieu qui fait la nuit plus belle que le jour.
C’est Dieu qui sur ton corps, ma jeune souveraine,
A versé la beauté, comme une coupe pleine,
Et dans mon cœur l’amour!

Laisse-toi donc aimer! — Oh! l’amour, c’est la vie.
C’est tout ce qu’on regrette et tout ce qu’on envie
Quand on voit sa jeunesse au couchant décliner.
Sans lui rien n’est complet, sans lui rien ne rayonne.
La beauté c’est le front, l’amour c’est la couronne:
Laisse-toi couronner!

Ce qui remplit une âme, hélas! tu peux m’en croire,
Ce n’est pas un peu d’or, ni même un peu de gloire,
Poussière que l’orgueil rapporte des combats,
Ni l’ambition folle, occupée aux chimères,
Qui ronge tristement les écorces amères
Des choses d’ici-bas;

Non, il lui faut, vois-tu, l’hymen de deux pensées,
Les soupirs étouffés, les mains longtemps pressées,
Le baiser, parfum pur, enivrante liqueur,
Et tout ce qu’un regard dans un regard peut lire,
Et toutes les chansons de cette douce lyre
Qu’on appelle le cœur!

Il n’est rien sous le ciel qui n’ait sa loi secrète,
Son lieu cher et choisi, son abri, sa retraite,
Où mille instincts profonds nous fixent nuit et jour;
Le pêcheur a la barque où l’espoir l’accompagne,
Les cygnes ont le lac, les aigles la montagne,
Les âmes ont l’amour!
21 mai 1833

Nouvelle chanson sur un vieil air

S’il est un charmant gazon
Que le ciel arrose,
Où brille en toute saison
Quelque fleur éclose,
Où l’on cueille à pleine main
Lys, chèvrefeuille et jasmin,
J’en veux faire le chemin
Où ton pied se pose!

S’il est un sein bien aimant
Dont l’honneur dispose,
Dont le ferme dévouement
N’ait rien de morose,
Si toujours ce noble sein
Bat pour un digne dessein,
J’en veux faire le coussin
Où ton front se pose!

S’il est un rêve d’amour
Parfumé de rose,
Où l’on trouve chaque jour
Quelque douce chose,
Un rêve que Dieu bénit,
Où l’âme à l’âme s’unit,
Oh! j’en veux faire le nid
Où ton cœur se pose!
18 février 1834

Autre chanson

L’aube naît, et ta porte est close!
Ma belle, pourquoi sommeiller?
A l’heure où s’éveille la rose
Ne vas-tu pas te réveiller?

O ma charmante,
Ecoute ici
L’amant qui chante
Et pleure aussi!

Tout frappe à ta porte bénie.
L’aurore dit: Je suis le jour!
L’oiseau dit: Je suis l’harmonie!
Et mon cœur dit: Je suis l’amour!

O ma charmante,
Ecoute ici
L’amant qui chante
Et pleure aussi!

Je t’adore ange et t’aime femme.
Dieu qui par toi m’a complété
A fait mon amour pour ton âme
Et mon regard pour ta beauté!

O ma charmante,
Ecoute ici
L’amant qui chante
Et pleure aussi!

Oh! pour remplir de moi

Oh! pour remplir de moi ta rêveuse pensée,
Tandis que tu m’attends, par la marche lassée,
Sous l’arbre au bord du lac, loin des yeux importuns,
Tandis que sous tes pieds l’odorante vallée,
Toute pleine de brume au soleil envolée,
Fume comme un beau vase où brûlent des parfums;

Que tout ce que tu vois, les coteaux et les plaines,
Les doux buissons de fleurs aux charmantes haleines,
La vitre au vif éclair,
Le pré vert, le sentier qui se noue aux villages,
Et le ravin profond débordant de feuillages
Comme d’ondes la mer;

Que le bois, le jardin, la maison, la nuée,
Dont midi ronge au loin l’ombre diminuée;
Que tous les points confus qu’on voit là-bas trembler;
Que la branche aux fruits mûrs; que la feuille séchée;
Que l’automne, déjà par septembre ébauchée;
Que tout ce qu’on entend ramper, marcher, voler;

Que ce réseau d’objets qui t’entoure et te presse,
Et dont l’arbre amoureux qui sur ton front se dresse
Est le premier chaînon;
Herbe et feuille, onde et terre, ombre, lumière et flamme,
Que tout prenne une voix, que tout devienne une âme,
Et te dise mon nom!
Enghien, 19 septembre 1834

Puisque j’ai mis ma lèvre

Puisque j’ai mis ma lèvre à ta coupe encor pleine;
Puisque j’ai dans tes mains posé mon front pâli;
Puisque j’ai respiré parfois la douce haleine
De ton âme, parfum dans l’ombre enseveli;

Puisqu’il me fut donné de t’entendre me dire
Les mots où se répand le cœur mystérieux;
Puisque j’ai vu pleurer, puisque j’ai vu sourire
Ta bouche sur ma bouche et tes yeux sur mes yeux;

Puisque j’ai vu briller sur ma tête ravie
Un rayon de ton astre, hélas! voilé toujours;
Puisque j’ai vu tomber dans l’onde de ma vie
Une feuille de rose arrachée à tes jours;

Je puis maintenant dire aux rapides années:
— Passez! Passez toujours! je n’ai plus à vieillir;
Allez-vous-en avec vos fleurs toutes fanées;
J’ai dans l’âme une fleur que nul ne peut cueillir!

Votre aile en le heurtant ne fera rien répandre
Du vase où je m’abreuve et que j’ai bien rempli.
Mon âme a plus de feu que vous n’avez de cendre!
Mon cœur a plus d’amour que vous n’avez d’oubli!

À mademoiselle J.

Chantez! chantez! jeune inspirée!
La femme qui chante est sacrée
Même aux jaloux, même aux pervers!
La femme qui chante est bénie!
Sa beauté défend son génie.
Les beaux yeux sauvent les beaux vers!
Moi que déchire tant de rage,
J’aime votre aube sans orage;
Je souris à vos yeux sans pleurs.
Chantez donc vos chansons divines.
A moi la couronne d’épines!
A vous la couronne de Beurs!
Il fut un temps, un temps d’ivresse,
Où l’aurore qui vous caresse
Rayonnait sur mon beau printemps
Où l’orgueil, la joie et l’extase,
Comme un vin pur d’un riche vase,
Débordaient de mes dix-sept ans 1’
Alors, à tous mes pas présente,
Une chimère éblouissante
Fixait sur moi ses yeux dorés;
Alors, prés verts, ciels bleus, eaux vives,
Dans les riantes perspectives
Mes regards flottaient égarés!

Alors je disais aux étoiles:
O mon astre, en vain tu te voiles.
Je sais que tu brilles là-haut!
Alors je disais à la rive:
Vous êtes la gloire, et j’arrive.
Chacun de mes jours est un flot!

Je disais au bois: forêt sombre,
J’ai comme toi des bruits sans nombre.

A l’aigle: contemple mon front!
Je disais aux coupes vidées:
Je suis plein d’ardentes idées
Dont les âmes s’enivreront!

Alors, du fond de vingt calices,
Rosée, amour, parfums, délices,
Se répandaient sur mon sommeil;
J’avais des fleurs plein mes corbeilles;
Et comme un vif essaim d’abeilles,
Mes pensers volaient au soleil!

Comme un clair de lune bleuâtre
Et le rouge brasier du pâtre
Se mirent au même ruisseau;
Comme dans les forêts mouillées,
A travers le bruit des feuillées
On entend le bruit d’un oiseau;

Tandis que tout me disait: Aime!
Écoutant tout hors de moi-même,
Ivre d’harmonie et d’encens,
J’entendais, ravissant murmure,
Le chant de toute la nature
Dans le tumulte de mes sens!

Et roses par avril fardées,
Nuits d’été de lune inondées,
Sentiers couverts de pas humains,
Tout, l’écueil aux hanches énormes,
Et les vieux troncs d’arbres difformes
Qui se penchent sur les chemins,

Me parlaient cette langue austère,
Langue de l’ombre et du mystère,
Qui demande à tous: Que sait-on?
Qui, par moments presque étouffée,

Chante des notes pour Orphée,
Prononce des mots pour Platon!

La terre me disait Poète!
Le ciel me répétait Prophète!
Marche! parle! enseigne! bénis!
Penche l’urne des chants sublimes!
Verse aux vallons noirs comme aux cimes,
Dans les aires et dans les nids!

Ces temps sont passés. — A cette heure,
Heureux pour quiconque m’effleure,
Je suis triste au dedans de moi;
J’ai sous mon toit un mauvais hôte;
Je suis la tour splendide et haute
Qui contient le sombre beffroi.

L’ombre en mon cœur s’est épanchée;
Sous mes prospérités cachée
La douleur pleure en ma maison;
Un ver ronge ma grappe mûre;
Toujours un tonnerre murmure
Derrière mon vague horizon!

L’espoir mène à des portes closes.
Cette terre est pleine de choses
Dont nous ne voyons qu’un côté.
Le sort de tous nos vœux se joue;
Et la vie est comme la roue
D’un char dans la poudre emporté!

A mesure que les années,
Plus pâles et moins couronnées,
Passent sur moi du haut du ciel,
Je vois s’envoler mes chimères
Comme des mouches éphémères

Qui n’ont pas su faire de miel!

Vainement j’attise en moi-même
L’amour, ce feu doux et suprême
Qui brûle sur tous les trépieds,
Et toute mon âme enflammée
S’en va dans le ciel en fumée
Ou tombe en cendre sous mes pieds!

Mon étoile a fui sous la nue.
La rose n’est plus revenue
Se poser sur mon rameau noir.
Au fond de la coupe est la lie,
Au fond des rêves la folie,
Au fond de l’aurore le soir!

Toujours quelque bouche flétrie,
Souvent par ma pitié nourrie,
Dans tous mes travaux m’outragea.
Aussi que de tristes pensées,
Aussi que de cordes brisées
Pendent à ma lyre déjà!

Mon avril se meurt feuille à feuille;
Sur chaque branche que je cueille
Croît l’épine de la douleur;
Toute herbe a pour moi sa couleuvre;
Et la haine monte à mon œuvre
Comme un bouc au cytise en fleur!

La nature grande et touchante,
La nature qui vous enchante
Blesse mes regards attristés.
Le jour est dur, l’aube est meilleure.
Hélas! la voix qui me dit: Pleure!
Est celle qui vous dit: Chantez!

Chantez! chantez! belle inspirée!
Saluez cette aube dorée
Qui jadis aussi m’enivra.
Tout n’est pas sourire et lumière.
Quelque jour de votre paupière
Peut-être une larme éclora!

Alors je vous plaindrai, pauvre “âme!
Hélas! les larmes d’une femme,
Ces larmes où tout est amer,
Ces larmes où tout est sublime,
Viennent d’un plus profond abîme
Que les gouttes d’eau de la mer!
Mars 18…

La pauvre fleur disait au papillon céleste
— Ne fuis pas!
Vois comme nos destins sont différents. Je reste,
Tu t’en vas!
Pourtant nous nous aimons, nous vivons sans les hommes
Et loin d’eux,
Et nous nous ressemblons, et l’on dit que nous sommes
Fleurs tous deux!
Mais, hélas! l’air t’emporte et la terre m’enchaîne.
Sort cruel!
Je voudrais embaumer ton vol de mon haleine
Dans le ciel!
Mais non, tu vas trop loin! — Parmi des fleurs sans nombre
Vous fuyez,
Et moi je reste seule à voir tourner mon ombre
A mes pieds!
Tu fins, puis tu reviens, puis tu t’en vas encore
Luire ailleurs.
Aussi me trouves-tu toujours à chaque aurore
Toute en pleurs!
Oh! pour que notre amour coule des jours fidèles,
O mon roi,

Prends comme moi racine, ou donne-moi des ailes
Comme à toi!

ENVOI A ***

Roses et papillons, la tombe nous rassemble
Tôt ou tard.
Pourquoi l’attendre, dis? Veux-tu pas vivre ensemble
Quelque part?

Quelque part dans les airs, si c’est là que se berce
Ton essor;
Aux champs, si c’est aux champs que ton calice verse
Son trésor.

Où tu voudras! qu’importe! oui, que tu sois haleine
Ou couleur,
Papillon rayonnant, corolle à demi pleine,
Aile ou fleur!

Vivre ensemble, d’abord! c’est le bien nécessaire
Et réel!
Après on peut choisir au hasard, ou la terre
Ou le ciel!
7 décembre 1834

ENVOI A ***
Roses et papillons, la tombe nous rassemble
Tôt ou tard.
Pourquoi l’attendre, dis? Veux-tu pas vivre ensemble
Quelque part?

Quelque part dans les airs, si c’est là que se berce
Ton essor!
Aux champs, si c’est aux champs que ton calice verse

Son trésor!

Où tu voudras! qu’importe! oui, que tu sois haleine
Ou couleur,
Papillon rayonnant, corolle à demi pleine,
Aile ou fleur!

Vivre ensemble, d’abord! c’est le bien nécessaire
Et réel.
Après on peut choisir au hasard, ou la terre
Ou le ciel 1
Septembre 18…

La pauvre fleur

La pauvre fleur disait au papillon céleste
— Ne fuis pas!
Vois comme nos destins sont différents. Je reste,
Tu t'en vas!
Pourtant nous nous aimons, nous vivons sans les hommes
Et loin d'eux,
Et nous nous ressemblons, et l'on dit que nous sommes
Fleurs tous deux!
Mais, hélas! l'air t'emporte et la terre m'enchaîne.
Sort cruel!
Je voudrais embaumer ton vol de mon haleine
Dans le ciel!
Mais non, tu vas trop loin! — Parmi des fleurs sans nombre
Vous fuyez,
Et moi je reste seule à voir tourner mon ombre
A mes pieds!
Tu fins, puis tu reviens, puis tu t'en vas encore
Luire ailleurs.
Aussi me trouves-tu toujours à chaque aurore
Toute en pleurs!
Oh! pour que notre amour coule des jours fidèles,
O mon roi,
Prends comme moi racine, ou donne-moi des ailes
Comme à toi!

Au bord de la mer

Vois, ce spectacle est beau. — Ce paysage immense
Qui toujours devant nous finit et recommence;
Ces blés, ces eaux, ces prés; ce bois charmant aux yeux
Ce chaume où l’on entend rire un groupe joyeux;
L’océan qui s’ajoute à la plaine où nous sommes
Ce golfe, fait par Dieu, puis refait par les hommes,
Montrant la double main empreinte en ses contours,
Et des amas de rocs sous des monceaux de tours;
Ces landes, ces forêts, ces crêtes déchirées;
Ces antres à fleur d’eau qui boivent les marées;
Cette montagne, au front de nuages couvert,
Qui dans un de ses plis porte un beau vallon vert,
Comme un enfant des fleurs dans un pan de sa robe;
La ville que la brume à demi nous dérobe,
Avec ses mille toits bourdonnants et pressés;
Ce bruit de pas sans nombre et de rameaux froissés,
De voix et de chansons qui par moments s’élève;
Ces lames que la mer amincit sur la grève,
Où les longs cheveux verts des sombres goémons
Tremblent dans l’eau moirée avec l’ombre des monts;
Cet oiseau qui voyage et cet oiseau qui joue;
Ici, cette charrue, et là-bas, cette proue,
Traçant en même temps chacune leur sillon
Ces arbres et ces mâts, jouets de l’aquilon
Et là-bas, par-delà les collines lointaines,
Ces horizons remplis de formes incertaines;
Tout ce que nous voyons, brumeux ou transparent,
Flottant dans les clartés, dans les ombres errant,
Fuyant, debout, penché, fourmillant, solitaire,
Vagues, rochers, gazons, — regarde, c’est la terre!

Et là-haut, sur ton front, ces nuages si beaux
Où pend et se déchire une pourpre en lambeaux;

Cet azur, qui ce soir sera l’ombre infinie;
Cet espace qu’emplit l’éternelle harmonie;
Ce merveilleux soleil, ce soleil radieux,
Si puissant à changer toute forme à nos yeux
Que parfois, transformant en métaux les bruines,
On ne voit plus dans l’air que splendides ruines,
Entassements confus, amas étincelants
De cuivres et d’airains l’un sur l’autre croulants,
Cuirasses, boucliers, armures dénouées,
Et caparaçons d’or aux croupes des nuées,
L’éther, cet océan si liquide et si bleu,
Sans rivage et sans fond, sans borne et sans milieu,
Que l’oscillation de toute haleine agite,
Où tout ce qui respire, ou remue, ou gravite,
A sa vague et son flot, à d’autres flots uni,
Où passent à la fois, mêlés dans l’infini,
Air tiède et vents glacés, aubes et crépuscules,
Brises d’hiver, ardeur des chaudes canicules,
Les parfums de la fleur et ceux de l’encensoir,
Les astres scintillant sur la robe du soir,
Et les brumes de gaze, et la douteuse étoile,
Paillette qui se perd dans les plis noirs du voile,
La clameur des soldats qu’enivre le tambour,
Le froissement du nid qui tressaille d’amour,
Les souffles, les échos, les brouillards, les fumées,
Mille choses que l’homme encor n’a pas nommées,
Les flots de la lumière et les ondes du bruit,
Tout ce qu’on voit le jour, tout ce qu’on sent la nuit;
Eh bien! nuage, azur, espace, éther, abîmes,
Ce fluide océan, ces régions sublimes
Toutes pleines de feux, de lueurs, de rayons,
Où l’âme emporte l’homme, où tous deux nous fuyons,
Où volent sur nos fronts, selon des lois profondes,
Près de nous les oiseaux et loin de nous les mondes,
Cet ensemble ineffable, immense, universel,
Formidable et charmant, — contemple, c’est le ciel!

Oh oui! la terre est belle et le ciel est superbe;
Mais quand ton sein palpite et quand ton œil reluit,
Quand ton pas gracieux court si léger sur l’herbe,
Que le bruit d’une lyre est moins doux que son bruit;
Lorsque ton frais sourire, aurore de ton âme,
Se lève rayonnant sur moi qu’il rajeunit,
Et de ta bouche rose, où naît sa douce flamme,
Monte jusqu’à ton front comme l’aube au zénith;

Quand, parfois, sans te voir, ta jeune voix m’arrive,
Disant des mots confus qui m’échappent souvent,
Bruit d’une eau qui se perd sous l’ombre de sa rive,
Chanson d’oiseau caché qu’on écoute en rêvant;

Lorsque ma poésie, insultée et proscrite,
Sur ta tête un moment se repose en chemin;
Quand ma pensée en deuil sous la tienne s’abrite,
Comme un flambeau de nuit sous une blanche main;

Quand nous nous asseyons tous deux dans la vallée;
Quand ton âme, soudain apparue en tes yeux,
Contemple, avec les pleurs d’une sœur exilée,
Quelque vertu sur terre ou quelque étoile aux cieux;

Quand brille sous tes cils, comme un feu sous les branches,
Ton beau regard terni par de longues douleurs;
Quand sur les maux passés tout-à-coup tu te penches,
Que tu veux me sourire et qu’il te vient des pleurs;

Quand mon corps et ma vie à ton souffle résonnent,
Comme un tremblant clavier qui vibre à tout moment;
Quant tes doigts, se posant sur mes doigts qui frissonnent,

Font chanter dans mon cœur un céleste instrument;

Lorsque je te contemple, ô mon charme suprême!
Quand ta noble nature, épanouie aux yeux,
Comme l’ardent buisson qui contenait Dieu même,
Ouvre toutes ses fleurs et jette tous ses feux;

Ce qui sort à la fois de tant de douces choses,
Ce qui de ta beauté s’exhale nuit et jour,
Comme un parfum formé du souffle de cent roses,
C’est bien plus que la terre et le ciel, — c’est l’amour!
Octobre 18.

Puisque nos heures sont remplies

Puisque nos heures sont remplies
De trouble et de calamités;
Puisque les choses que tu lies
Se détachent de tous côtés;

Puisque nos pères et nos mères
Sont allés où nous irons tous,
Puisque des enfants, têtes chères,
Se sont endormis avant nous;

Puisque la terre où tu t’inclines
Et que tu mouilles de tes pleurs,
A déjà toutes nos racines
Et quelques-unes de nos fleurs;

Puisqu’à la voix de ceux qu’on aime
Ceux qu’on aima mêlent leurs voix;
Puisque nos illusions même
Sont pleines d’ombres d’autrefois;

Puisqu’à l’heure où l’on boit l’extase
On sent la douleur déborder,
Puisque la vie est comme un vase
Qu’on ne peut emplir ni vider;

Puisqu’à mesure qu’on avance
Dans plus d’ombre on sent flotter;
Puisque la menteuse espérance
N’a plus de conte à nous conter;

Puisque le cadran, quand il sonne,
Ne nous promet rien pour demain,
Puisqu’on ne connaît plus personne
De ceux qui vont dans le chemin,

Mets ton esprit hors de ce monde!
Mets ton rêve ailleurs qu'ici-bas!
Ta perle n'est pas dans notre onde!
Ton sentier n'est point sous nos pas!

Quand la nuit n'est pas étoilée,
Viens te bercer aux flots des mers;
Comme la mort elle est voilée,
Comme la vie ils sont amers.

L'ombre et l'abîme ont un mystère
Que nul mortel ne pénétra;
C'est Dieu qui leur dit de se taire
Jusqu'au jour où tout parlera!

D'autres yeux de ces flots sans nombre
Ont vainement cherche le fond;
D'autres yeux se sont emplis d'ombre
A contempler ce ciel profond.

Toi, demande au monde nocturne
De la paix pour ton cœur désert!
Demande une goutte à cette urne!
Demande un chant à ce concert!

Plane au-dessus des autres femmes,
Et laisse errer tes yeux si beaux
Entre le ciel où sont les âmes
Et la terre où sont les tombeaux!
19 février 1835

Espoir en dieu

Espère, enfant! demain! et puis demain encore!
Et puis toujours demain! croyons dans l’avenir.
Espère! et chaque fois que se lève l’aurore,
Soyons là pour prier comme Dieu pour bénir!

Nos fautes, mon pauvre ange, ont causé nos souffrances.
Peut-être qu’en restant bien longtemps à genoux,
Quand il aura béni toutes les innocences,
Puis tous les repentirs, Dieu finira par nous!

Octobre 18…

Puisque mai tout en fleurs

Puisque mai tout en fleurs dans les prés nous réclame,
Viens! ne te lasse pas de mêler à ton âme
La campagne, les bois, les ombrages charmants,
Les larges clairs de lune au bord des flots dormants,
Le sentier qui finit où le chemin commence,
Et l’air et le printemps et l’horizon immense,
L’horizon que ce monde attache humble et joyeux
Comme une lèvre au bas de la robe des cieux!
Viens! et que le regard des pudiques étoiles
Qui tombe sur la terre à travers tant de voiles,
Que l’arbre pénétré de parfums et de chants,
Que le souffle embrasé de midi dans les champs,
Et l’ombre et le soleil et l’onde et la verdure,
Et le rayonnement de toute la nature
Fassent épanouir, comme une double fleur,
La beauté sur ton front et l’amour dans ton cœur!
21 mai 1835

À Louis B.

Ami, le voyageur que vous avez connu,
Et dont tant de douleurs ont mis le cœur à nu,
Monta, comme le soir s’épanchait sur la terre,
Triste et seul, dans la tour lugubre et solitaire;
Tour sainte où la pensée est mêlée au granit,
Où l’homme met son âme, où l’oiseau fait son nid!
Il gravit la spirale aux marches presque usées,
Dont le mur s’entr’ouvrait aux bises aiguisées,
Sans regarder les toits amoindris sous ses pieds;
Puis entra sous la voûte aux arceaux étayés,
Où la cloche, attendant la prière prochaine,
Dormait, oiseau d’airain, dans sa cage de chêne!
Vaste et puissante cloche au battant monstrueux!
Un câble aux durs replis chargeait son cou noueux.
L’œil qui s’aventurait sous sa coupole sombre
Y voyait s’épaissir de larges cercles d’ombre.
Les reflets sur ses bords se fondaient mollement.
Au fond tout était noir. De moment en moment
Sous cette voûte obscure où l’air vibrait encore
On sentait remuer comme un lambeau sonore.
On entendait des bruits glisser sur les parois,
Comme si, se parlant d’une confuse voix,
Dans cette ombre, où dormaient leurs légions ailées,
Les notes chuchotaient à demi réveillées.
Bruits douteux pour l’oreille et de l’âme écoutés!
Car même en sommeillant, sans souffle et sans clartés,
Toujours le volcan fume et la cloche soupire;
Toujours de cet airain la prière transpire,
Et l’on n’endort pas plus la cloche aux sons pieux
Que l’eau sur l’océan ou le vent dans les cieux!

La cloche, écho du ciel placé près de la terre!
Voix grondante qui parle à côté du tonnerre,

Faite pour la cité comme lui pour la mer!
Vase plein de rumeur qui se vidé dans l’air!

Sur cette cloche, auguste et sévère surface,
Hélas! chaque passant avait laissé sa trace.
Partout des mots impurs creusés dans le métal
Rompaient l’inscription du baptême natal.
On distinguait encore, au sommet ciselée,
Une couronne à coups de couteau mutilée.
Chacun, sur cet airain par Dieu même animé,
Avait fait son sillon où rien n’avait germé!
Ils avaient semé là, ceux-ci leur vie immonde,
Ceux-là leurs vœux perdus comme une onde dans l’onde,
D’autres l’amour des sens dans la fange accroupi,
Et tous l’impiété, ce chaume sans épi.
Tout était profané dans la cloche bénie.
La rouille s’y mêlait, autre amère ironie!
Sur le nom du Seigneur l’un avait mis son nom!
Où le prêtre dit oui, l’autre avait écrit non!
Lâche insulte! affront vil! vain outrage d’une heure
Que fait tout ce qui passe à tout ce qui demeure!

Alors, tandis que l’air se jouait dans les cieux,
Et que sur les chemins gémissaient les essieux,
Que les champs exhalaient leurs senteurs embaumées,
Les hommes leurs rumeurs et les toits leurs fumées,
Il sentit, à l’aspect du bronze monument 74
Comme un arbre inquiet qui sent confusément
Des ailes se poser sur ses feuilles froissées,
S’abattre sur son front un essaim de pensées.

I

Seule en ta sombre tour aux faîtes dentelés,
D’où ton souffle descend sur les toits ébranlés,

O cloche suspendue au milieu des nuées,
Par ton vaste roulis si souvent remuées,
Tu dors en ce moment dans l’ombre, et rien ne luit
Sous ta voûte profonde où sommeille le bruit!
Oh! tandis qu’un esprit qui jusqu’à toi s’élance,
Silencieux aussi, contemple ton silence,
Sens-tu, par cet instinct vague et plein de douceur
Qui révèle toujours une sœur à la sœur,
Qu’à cette heure où s’endort la soirée expirante,
Une âme est près de toi, non moins que toi vibrante,
Qui bien souvent aussi jette un bruit solennel,
Et se plaint dans l’amour comme toi dans le ciel!

II

Oh 1 dans mes premiers temps de jeunesse et d’aurore 75,
Lorsque ma conscience était joyeuse encore,
Sur son vierge métal mon âme avait aussi
Son auguste origine écrite comme ici,
Et sans doute à côté quelque inscription sainte,
Et, n’est-ce pas, ma mère? une couronne empreinte!
Mais des passants aussi, d’impérieux passants
Qui vont toujours au cœur par le chemin des sens. 76,!
Qui, lorsque le hasard jusqu’à nous les apporte,
Montent notre escalier et poussent notre porte,
Qui viennent bien souvent trouver l’homme au saint lieu,
Et qui le font tinter pour d’autres que pour Dieu;
Les passions, hélas! tourbe un jour accourue,
Pour visiter mon âme ont monté de la rue,
Et de quelque couteau se faisant un burin,
Sans respect pour le verbe “ écrit sur son airain,
Toutes, mêlant ensemble injure, erreur, blasphême,
L’ont rayée en tous sens comme ton bronze même,
Où le nom du Seigneur, ce nom grand et sacré,
N’est pas plus illisible et plus défiguré!

III

Mais qu’importe à la cloche et qu’importe à mon âme!
Qu’à son heure, à son jour, l’esprit saint les réclame,
Les touche l’une et l’autre et leur dise: chantez!
Soudain, par toute voie et de tous les côtés,
De leur sein ébranlé, rempli d’ombres obscures,
A travers leur surface, à travers leurs souillures,
Et la cendre et la rouille, amas injurieux,
Quelque chose de grand s’épandra dans les cieux!
Ce sera l’hosanna de toute créature!
Ta pensée, ô Seigneur! ta parole, ô nature!
Oui, ce qui sortira, par sanglots, par éclairs,
Comme l’eau du glacier, comme le vent des mers,
Comme le jour à flots des urnes de l’aurore,
Ce qu’on verra jaillir, et puis jaillir encore,
Du clocher toujours droit, du front toujours debout,
Ce sera l’harmonie immense qui dit tout!
Tout! les soupirs du cœur, les élans de la foule;
Le cri de ce qui monte et de ce qui s’écroule;
Le discours de chaque homme à chaque passion
L’adieu qu’en s’en allant chante l’illusion;
L’espoir éteint; la barque échouée à la grève;
La femme qui regrette et la vierge qui rêve;
La vertu qui se fait de ce que le malheur
A de plus douloureux, hélas! et de meilleur;
L’autel enveloppé d’encens et de fidèles;
Les mères retenant les enfants auprès d’elles
La nuit qui chaque soir fait taire l’univers
Et ne laisse ici-bas la parole qu’aux mers;
Les couchants flamboyants; les aubes étoilées;
Les heures de soleil et de lune mêlées;
Et les monts et les flots proclamant à la fois
Ce grand nom qu’on retrouve au fond de toute voix;
Et l’hymne inexpliqué qui, parmi des bruits d’ailes,
Va de l’aire de l’aigle au nid des hirondelles 11,
Et ce cercle dont l’homme a sitôt fait le tour,

L’innocence, la foi, la prière et l’amour!
Et l’éternel reflet de lumière et de flamme
Que l’âme verse au monde et que Dieu verse à l’âme!

IV

Oh 1 c’est alors qu’émus et troublés par ces chants,
Le peuple dans la ville et l’homme dans les champs,
Et le sage attentif aux voix intérieures,
A qui l’éternité fait oublier les heures,
S’inclinent en silence; et que l’enfant joyeux
Court auprès de sa mère et lui montre les cieux;
C’est alors que chacun sent un baume qui coule
Sur tous ses maux cachés; c’est alors que la foule
Et le cœur isolé qui souffre obscurément
Boivent au même vase un même enivrement;
Et que la vierge, assise au rebord des fontaines,
Suspend sa rêverie à ses 79 rumeurs lointaines;
C’est alors que les bons, les faibles, les méchants,
Tous à la fois, la veuve en larmes, les marchands
Dont l’échoppe a poussé sous le sacré portique
Comme un champignon vil au pied d’un chêne antique,
Et le croyant soumis, prosterné sous la tour,
Écoutent, effrayés et ravis tour à tour,
Comme
on rêve au bruit sourd d’une mer écumante,
La grande âme d’airain qui là-haut se lamente!

V

Hymne de la nature et de l’humanité!
Hymne par tout écho sans cesse répété!
Grave, inouï, joyeux, désespéré, sublime!
Hymne qui des hauts lieux ruisselle dans J’abîme,
Et qui, des profondeurs du gouffre harmonieux,

Comme une onde en brouillard, remonte dans les cieux!
Cantique qu'on entend sur les monts, dans les plaines,
Passer, chanter, pleurer par toutes les haleines,
Écumer dans le fleuve et frémir dans les bois,
A l'heure où nous voyons s'allumer à la fois,
Au bord du ravin sombre, au fond du ciel bleuâtre,
L'étoile du berger avec le feu du pâtre!
Hymne qui le matin s'évapore des eaux,
Et qui le soir s'endort dans le nid des oiseaux!
Verbe que dit la cloche aux cloches ébranlées,
Et que l'âme redit aux âmes consolées!
Psaume immense et sans fin que ne traduiraient pas
Tous les mots fourmillants des langues d'ici-bas,
Et qu'exprime en entier dans un seul mot suprême
Celui qui dit: je prie, et celui qui dit: j'aime!
Et ce psaume éclatant, cet hymne aux chants vainqueurs
Qui tinte dans les airs moins haut que dans les cœurs,
Pour sortir plus à flots de leurs gouffres sonores,
De l'âme et de la cloche ouvrira tous les pores.
Toutes deux le diront d'une ineffable voix,
Pure comme le bruit des sources dans les bois,
Chaste comme un soupir de l'amour qui s'ignore,
Vierge comme le chant que chante chaque aurore.
Alors tout parlera dans les deux instruments
D'amour et d'harmonie et d'extase écumants.
Alors, non-seulement ce qui sur leur surface
Reste du Verbe saint que chaque jour efface,
Mais tout ce que grava dans leur bronze souillé
Le passant imbécile avec son clou rouillé,
L'ironie et l'affront, les mots qui perdent l'âme,
La couronne tronquée et devenue infâme,
Tout puisant vie et source en leurs vibrations,
Tout se transfigurant dans leurs commotions,
Mêlera, sans troubler l'ensemble séraphique,
Un chant plaintif et tendre à leur voix magnifique!
Oui, le blasphême inscrit sur le divin métal
Dans ce concert sacré perdra son cri fatal;

Chaque mot qui renie et chaque mot qui doute
Dans ce torrent d'amour exprimera sa goutte;
Et, pour faire éclater l'hymne pur et serein,
Rien ne sera souillure et tout sera l'airain!

VI

Oh! c'est un beau triomphe à votre loi sublime,
Seigneur, pour vos regards dont le feu nous ranime
C'est un spectacle auguste, ineffable et bien doux
A l'homme comme à l'ange, à l'ange comme à vous,
Qu'une chose en passant par l'impie avilie,
Qui, dès que votre esprit la touche, se délie,
Et sans même songer à son indigne affront,
Chante, l'amour au cœur et le blasphême au front!
Voilà sur quelle pente, en ruisseaux divisée,
S'écoulait flots à flots l'onde de sa pensée,
Grossie à chaque instant par des sanglots du cœur.
La nuit, que la tristesse aime comme une sœur,
Quand il redescendit, avait couvert le monde;
Il partit; et la vie incertaine et profonde
Emporta vers des jours plus mauvais ou meilleurs,
Vers des événements amoncelés ailleurs,
Cet homme au flanc blessé, ce front sévère où tremble
Une âme en proie au sort, soumise et tout ensemble
Rebelle au dur battant qui la vient tourmenter,
De verre pour gémir, d'airain pour résister.
Août 1834.

Dans l’église de ***

I

C’était une humble église au cintre surbaissé,
L’église où nous entrâmes,
Où depuis trois cents ans avaient déjà passé
Et pleuré bien des âmes.

Elle était triste et calme à la chute du jour,
L’église où nous entrâmes;
L’autel sans serviteur, comme un cœur sans amour,
Avait éteint ses flammes.

Les antiennes du soir, dont autrefois saint Paul
Réglait les chants fidèles,
Sur les stalles du chœur d’où s’élance leur vol
Avaient ployé leurs ailes.

L’ardent musicien qui sur tous à pleins bords
Verse la sympathie,
L’homme-esprit n’était plus dans l’orgue, vaste corps
Dont l’âme était partie.

La main n’était plus là, qui, vivante et jetant
Le bruit par tous les pores,
Tout à l’heure pressait le clavier palpitant,
Plein de notes sonores,

Et les faisait jaillir sous son doigt souverain
Qui se crispe et s’allonge,
Et ruisseler le long des grands tubes d’airain
Comme l’eau d’une éponge.

L’orgue majestueux se taisait gravement
Dans la nef solitaire;

L’orgue, le seul concert, le seul gémissement
Qui mêle aux cieux la terre!

La seule voix qui puisse, avec le flot dormant
Et les forêts bénies,
Murmurer ici-bas quelque commencement
Des choses infinies!

L’église s’endormait à l’heure où tu t’endors,
Ô sereine nature!
À peine,quelque lampe au fond des corridors
Étoilait l’ombre obscure.

À peine on entendait flotter quelque soupir,
Quelque basse parole,
Comme en une forêt qui vient de s’assoupir
Un dernier oiseau vole;

Hélas! et l’on sentait, de moment en moment,
Sous cette voûte sombre,
Quelque chose de grand, de saint et de charmant
S’évanouir dans l’ombre!

Elle était triste et calme à la chute du jour
L’église où nous entrâmes;
L’autel sans serviteur, comme un cœur sans amour,
Avait éteint ses flammes.

Votre front se pencha, morne et tremblant alors,
Comme une nef qui sombre,
Tandis qu’on entendait dans la ville au dehors
Passer des voix sans nombre.

II
Et ces voix qui passaient disaient joyeusement
«Bonheur! gaîté! délices!
» À nous les coupes d’or pleines d’un vin charmant!

» À d’autres les calices!

» Jouissons! l’heure est courte et tout fuit promptement
» L’urne est vite remplie!
» Le nœud de l’âme au corps, hélas 1 à tout moment
» Dans l’ombre se délie!

» Tirons de chaque objet ce qu’il a de meilleur,
» La chaleur de la flamme,
» Le vin du raisin mûr, le parfum de la fleur,
» Et l’amour de la femme!

» Épuisons tout! Usons du printemps enchanté
» Jusqu’au dernier zéphire,
» Du jour jusqu’au dernier rayon, de la beauté
» Jusqu’au dernier sourire!

» Allons jusqu’à la fin de tout, en bien vivant,
» D’ivresses en ivresses,
» Une chose qui meurt, mes amis, a souvent
» De charmantes caresses!

» Dans le vin que je bois, ce que j’aime le mieux
» C’est la dernière goutte.
» L’enivrante saveur du breuvage joyeux
» Souvent s’y cache toute!

» Sur chaque volupté pourquoi nous hâter tous,
» Sans plonger dans son onde,
» Pour voir si quelque perle ignorée avant nous
» N’est pas sous l’eau profonde?

» Que sert de n’effleurer qu’à peine ce qu’on tient,
» Quand on a les mains pleines,
» Et de vivre essoufflé comme un enfant qui vient
» De courir dans les plaines?

» Jouissons à loisir! Du loisir tout renaît!
» Le bonheur nous convie!
» Faisons, comme un tison qu’on heurte au dur chenet,
» Étinceler la vie!

» N’imitons pas ce fou que l’ennui tient aux fers,
» Qui pleure et qui s’admire.
» Toujours les plus beaux fruits d’ici-bas sont offerts
» Aux belles dents du rire!

» Les plus tristes d’ailleurs, comme nous qui rions,
» Souillent parfois leur âme.
» Pour fondre ces grands cœurs il suffit des rayons
» De l’or ou de la femme.

» Ils tombent comme nous, malgré leur fol orgueil
» Et leur vaine amertume;
» Les flots les plus hautains, dès que vient un écueil,
» S’écroulent en écume!

» Vivons donc! et buvons, du soir jusqu’au matin,
» Pour l’oubli de nous-même,
» Et déployons gaîment la nappe du festin,
» Linceul du chagrin blême!

» L’ombre attachée aux pas du beau plaisir vermeil,
» C’est la tristesse sombre.
» Marchons les yeux toujours tournés vers le soleil;
» Nous ne verrons pas l’ombre!
» Qu’importe le malheur, le deuil, le désespoir,
» Que projettent nos joies,
» Et que derrière nous quelque chose de noir
» Se traîne sur nos voies!

» Nous ne le savons pas. — Arrière les douleurs,
» Et les regrets moroses!
» Faut-il donc, en fanant des couronnes de fleurs,

» Avoir pitié des roses?

» Les vrais biens dans ce monde, — et l’autre est importun!
» C’est tout ce qui nous fête,
» Tout ce qui met un chant, un rayon, un parfum,
» Autour de notre tête!

» Ce n’est jamais demain, c’est toujours aujourd’hui!
» C’est la joie et le rire!
» C’est un sein éclatant peut-être plein d’ennui,
» Qu’on baise et qui soupire!

» C’est l’orgie opulente, enviée au-dehors,
» Contente, épanouie,
» Qui rit, et qui chancelle, et qui boit à pleins bords,
» De flambeaux éblouie!”

III

Et tandis que ces voix, que tout semblait grossir,
Voix d’une ville entière,
Disaient: Santé, bonheur, joie, orgueil et plaisir!
Votre œil disait: Prière!

IV

Elles parlaient tout haut et vous parliez tout bas
— « Dieu qui m’avez fait naître,
» Vous m’avez réservée ici pour des combats
» Dont je tremble, ô mon maître!

» Ayez pitié! — L’esquif où chancellent mes pas
» Est sans voile et sans rames.
» Comme pour les enfants, pourquoi n’avez-vous pas
» Des anges pour les femmes?

» Je sais que tous nos jours ne sont rien, Dieu tonnant,
» Devant vos jours sans nombre.
» Vous seul êtes réel, palpable et rayonnant;
» Tout le reste est de l’ombre.

» Je le sais. Mais cette ombre où nos cœurs sont flottants,
» J’y demande ma route.
» Quelqu’un répondra-t-il? Je prie, et puis j’attends!
» J’appelle, et puis j’écoute!

» Nul ne vient. Seulement par instants, sous mes pas,
» Je sens d’affreuses trames.
» Comme pour les enfants, pourquoi n’avez-vous pas
» Des anges pour les femmes?

» Seigneur! autour de moi, ni le foyer joyeux,
» Ni la famille douce,
» Ni l’orgueilleux palais qui touche presque aux cieux,
» Ni le nid dans la mousse,

» Ni le fanal pieux qui montre le chemin,
» Ni pitié, ni tendresse,
» Hélas! ni l’amitié qui nous serre la main,
» Ni l’amour qui la presse,

» Seigneur, autour de moi rien n’est resté debout!
» Je pleure et je végète,
» Oubliée au milieu des ruines de tout,
» Comme ce qu’on rejette!

» Pourtant je n’ai rien fait à ce monde d’airain,
» Vous le savez vous-même.
» Toutes mes actions passent le front serein
» Devant votre œil suprême.

» Jusqu’à ce que le pauvre en ait pris la moitié,
» Tout ce que j’ai me pèse.
» Personne ne me plaint. Moi, de tous j’ai pitié.
» Moi, je souffre et j’apaise!

» Jamais de votre haine ou de votre faveur

» Je n’ai dit: Que m’importe!
» J’ai toujours au passant que je voyais rêveur
» Enseigné votre porte.

» Vous le savez. — Pourtant mes pleurs que vous voyez,
» Seigneur, qui les essuie?
» Tout se rompt sous ma main, tout tremble sous mes pieds,
» Tout coule où je m’appuie.

» Ma vie est sans bonheur, mon berceau fut sans jeux.
» Cette loi, c’est la vôtre!
» Tous les rayons de jour de mon ciel orageux
» S’en vont l’un après l’autre.

» Je n’ai plus même, hélas! le flux et le reflux
» Des clartés et des ombres.
» Mon esprit chaque jour descend de plus en plus
» Parmi les rêves sombres.

» On dit que sur les cœurs, pleins de trouble et d’effroi,
» Votre grâce s’épanche.
» Soutenez-moi, Seigneur! Seigneur, soutenez-moi,
» Car je sens que tout penche!”

V

Et moi, je contemplais celle qui priait Dieu
Dans l’enceinte sacrée,
La trouvant grave et douce et digne du saint lieu,
Cette belle éplorée.

Et je lui dis, tâchant de ne pas la troubler,
La pauvre enfant qui pleure,
Si par hasard dans l’ombre elle entendait parler
Quelque autre voix meilleure,

Car au déclin des ans comme au matin des jours,
Joie, extase ou martyre,
Un autel que rencontre une femme a toujours

Quelque chose à lui dire!

VI

«Ô madame! pourquoi ce chagrin qui vous suit,
» Pourquoi pleurer encore,
» Vous, femme au cœur charmant, sombre comme la nuit,
» Douce comme l'aurore?

» Qu'importe que la vie, inégale ici-bas
» Pour l'homme et pour la femme,
» Se dérobe et soit prête à rompre sous vos pas?
» N'avez-vous pas votre âme?

»Votre âme qui bientôt fuira peut-être ailleurs
» Vers les régions pures,
» Et vous emportera plus loin que nos douleurs,
» Plus loin que nos murmures!

» Soyez comme l'oiseau, posé pour un instant
» Sur des rameaux trop frêles,
» Qui sent ployer la branche et qui chante pourtant,
» Sachant qu'il a des ailes!”
Octobre 18…

Écrit sur la première page d'un Pétrarque

Quand d'une aube d'amour mon âme se colore,
Quand je sens ma pensée, ô chaste amant de Laure,
Loin du souffle glacé d'un vulgaire moqueur,
Eclore feuille à feuille au plus profond du cœur,
Je prends ton livre saint qu'un feu céleste embrase,
Où si souvent murmure à côté de l'extase
La résignation au sourire fatal,
Ton beau livre, où l'on voit, comme un flot de cristal
Qui sur un sable d'or coule à sa fantaisie,
Tant d'amour ruisseler sur tant de poésie!
Je viens à ta fontaine, ô maître! et je relis
Tes vers mystérieux par la grâce amollis,
Doux trésor, fleur d'amour qui, dans les bois recluse,
Laisse après cinq cents ans sont odeur à Vaucluse!
Et tandis que je lis, rêvant, presque priant,
Celui qui me verrait me verrait souriant,
Car, loin des bruits du monde et des sombres orgies,
Tes pudiques chansons, tes nobles élégies,
Vierges au doux profil, sœurs au regard d'azur,
Passent devant mes yeux, portant sur leur front pur,
Dans les sonnets sculptés, comme dans des amphores,
Ton beau style, étoilé de fraîches métaphores!
14 octobre 1835

Les autres en tout sens

Les autres en tout sens laissent aller leur vie,
Leur âme, leur désir, leur instinct, leur envie.
Tout marche en eux, au gré des choses qui viendront,
L’action sans l’idée et le pied sans le front.
Ils suivent au hasard le projet ou le rêve,
Toute porte qui s’ouvre ou tout vent qui s’élève.
Le présent les absorbe en sa brièveté.
Ils ne seront jamais et n’ont jamais été;
Ils sont, et voilà tout. Leur esprit flotte et doute.
Ils vont, le voyageur ne tient pas à la route,
Et tout s’efface en eux à mesure, l’ennui
Par la joie, oui par non, hier par aujourd’hui.
Ils vivent jour à jour et pensée à pensée.
Aucune règle au fond de leurs vœux n’est tracée;
Nul accord ne les tient dans ses proportions.
Quand ils pensent une heure, au gré des passions,
Rien de lointain ne vient de derrière leur vie
Retentir dans l’idée à cette heure suivie;
Et pour leur cœur terni l’amour est sans douleurs,
Le passé sans racine et l’avenir sans fleurs.

Mais vous qui répandez tant de jour sur mon âme,
Vous qui, depuis douze ans, tour-à-tour ange et femme,
Me soutenant là-haut ou m’aidant ici-bas,
M’avez pris sous votre aile ou calmé dans vos bras;
Vous qui, mettant toujours le cœur dans la parole,
Rendez visible aux yeux, comme un vivant symbole,
Le calme intérieur par la paix du dehors,
La douceur de l’esprit par la santé du corps,
La bonté par la joie, et comme les dieux même
La suprême vertu par la beauté suprême;
Vous, mon phare, mon but, mon pôle, mon aimant!
Tandis que nous flottons à tout événement,

Vous savez que toute âme a sa règle auprès d’elle;
Tout en vous est serein, rayonnant et fidèle,
Vous ne dérangez pas le tout harmonieux,
Et vous êtes ici comme une sphère aux cieux!
Rien ne se heurte en vous; tout se tient avec grâce;
Votre âme en souriant à votre esprit s’enlace;
Votre vie, où les pleurs se mêlent quelquefois,
Secrète comme un nid qui gémit dans les bois,
Comme un flot lent et sourd qui coule sur des mousses,
Est un concert charmant des choses les plus douces.
Bonté, vertu, beauté, frais sourire, œil de feu,
Toute votre nature est un hymne vers Dieu.
Il semble, en vous voyant si parfaite et si belle,
Qu’une pure musique, égale et solennelle,
De tous vos mouvements se dégage en marchant.
Les autres sont des bruits, vous, vous êtes un chant!
Octobre 18…

Toi! sois bénie à jamais

Toi! sois bénie à jamais!
Ève qu'aucun fruit ne tente Il!
Qui de la vertu contente
Habite les purs sommets!
Ame sans tache et sans rides,
Baignant tes ailes candides,
A l'ombre et bien loin des yeux,
Dans un flot mystérieux,
Moiré de reflets splendides!

Sais-tu ce qu'en te voyant
L'indigent dit quand tu passes?
— « Voici le front plein de grâces
Qui sourit au suppliant!
Notre infortune la touche.
Elle incline à notre couche
Un visage radieux;
Et les -mots mélodieux
Sortent charmants de sa bouche!" -

Sais-tu, les yeux vers le ciel,
Ce que dit la pauvre veuve?
— « Un ange au fiel qui m'abreuve
Est venu mêler son miel.
Comme à l'herbe la rosée,
Sur ma misère épuisée,
Ses bienfaits sont descendus.
Nos cœurs se sont entendus,
Elle heureuse, et moi brisée!

J'ai senti que rien d'impur

Dans sa gaîté ne se noie,
Et que son front a la joie
Comme le ciel a l’azur.
Son œil de même a su lire
Que le deuil qui me déchire
N’a que de saintes douleurs.
Comme elle a compris mes pleurs,
Moi, j’ai compris son sourire!” -

Pour parler des orphelins,
Quand, près du foyer qui tremble,
Dans mes genoux je rassemble
Tes enfants de ton cœur pleins;
Quand je leur dis l’hiver sombre,
La faim, et les maux sans nombre
Des petits abandonnés,
Et qu’à peine sont-ils nés
Qu’ils s’en vont pieds nus dans l’ombre;

Tandis que, silencieux,
Le groupe écoute et soupire,
Sais-tu ce que semblent dire
Leurs yeux pareils à tes yeux?
— « Vous qui n’avez rien sur terre,
Venez chez nous! pour vous plaire
Nous nous empresserons tous;
Et vous aurez comme nous
Votre part de notre mère!”

Sais-tu ce que dit mon cœur?
— « Elle est indulgente et douce,
Et sa lèvre ne repousse
Aucune amère liqueur.
Mère pareille à sa fille,

Elle luit dans ma famille
Sur mon front que l’ombre atteint.
Le front se ride et s’éteint,
La couronne toujours brille!” -

Au-dessus des passions,
Au-dessus de la colère,
Ton noble esprit ne sait faire
Que de nobles actions.
Quand jusqu’à nous tu te penches,
C’est ainsi que tu t’épanches
Sur nos cœurs que tu soumets.
D’un cygne il ne peut jamais
Tomber que des plumes blanches!
Octobre 18.

À mademoiselle Louise B.

I

L’année en s’enfuyant par l’année est suivie.
Encore une qui meurt! encore un pas du temps;
Encore une limite atteinte dans la vie!
    Encore un sombre hiver jeté sur nos printemps!
    Le temps! les ans! les jours! mots que la foule ignore!
    Mots profonds qu’elle croit à d’autres mots pareils!
    Quand l’heure tout-à-coup lève sa voix sonore,
    Combien peu de mortels écoutent ses conseils!
    L’homme les use, hélas! ces fugitives heures,
    En folle passion, en folle volupté,
    Et croit que Dieu n’a pas fait de choses meilleures
    Que les chants, les banquets, le rire et la beauté!
    Son temps dans les plaisirs s’en va sans qu’il y pense.
    Imprudent! est-il sûr de demain? d’aujourd’hui?
    En dépensant ses jours, sait-il ce qu’il dépense?
    Le nombre en est compté par un autre que lui.
    A peine lui vient-il une grave pensée
    Quand, au sein d’un festin qui satisfait ses vœux,
    Ivre, il voit tout-à-coup de sa tête affaissée
    Tomber en même temps les fleurs et les cheveux;
    Quand ses projets hâtifs l’un sur l’autre s’écroulent;
    Quand ses illusions meurent à son côté;
    Quand il sent le niveau de ses jours qui s’écoulent,
    Baisser rapidement comme un torrent d’été.
    Alors en chancelant il s’écrie, il réclame,
    Il dit: Ai-je donc bu toute cette liqueur?
    Plus de vin pour ma soif! plus d’amour pour mon âme!
    Qui donc vide à la fois et ma coupe et mon cœur?
    Mais rien ne lui répond. — Et triste, et le front blême,
    De ses débiles mains, de son souffle glacé,
    Vainement il remue, en s’y cherchant lui-même,
    Ce tas de cendre éteint qu’on nomme le passé!

II

Ainsi nous allons tous. — Mais vous dont l’âme est forte,
Vous dont le cœur est grand, vous dites: — Que m’importe
Si le temps fuit toujours,
Et si toujours un souffle emporte quand il passe,
Pêle-mêle à travers la durée et l’espace,
Les hommes et les jours! —
Car vous avez le goût de ce qui seul peut vivre;
Sur Dante et sur Mozart, sur la note et le livre,
Votre front est courbé.
Car vous avez l’amour des choses immortelles;
Rien de ce que le temps emporte sur ses ailes
Des vôtres n’est tombé!
Quelquefois, quand l’esprit vous presse et vous réclame,
Une musique en feu s’échappe de votre âme,
Musique aux chants vainqueurs,
Au souffle pur, plus doux que l’aile des zéphires,
Qui palpite et qui fait vibrer comme des lyres
Les fibres de nos cœurs!
Dans ce siècle où l’éclair reluit sur chaque tête,
Où le monde, jeté de tempête en tempête,
S’écrie avec frayeur,
Vous avez su vous faire, en la nuit qui redouble,
Une sérénité qui traverse sans trouble
L’orage extérieur!
Soyez toujours ainsi! l’amour d’une famille;
Le centre autour duquel tout gravite et tout brille;
La sœur qui nous défend;
Prodigue d’indulgence et de blâme économe;
Femme au cœur grave et doux; sérieuse avec l’homme,
Folâtre avec l’enfant!
Car pour garder toujours la beauté de son âme,
Pour se remplir le cœur, riche ou pauvre, homme ou femme,
De pensers bienveillants,
Vous avez ce qu’on peut, après Dieu, sur la terre,
Contempler de plus saint et de plus salutaire,

Un père en cheveux blancs!

31 décembre 1831.

Que nous avons le doute en nous.

De nos jours, — plaignez-nous, vous, douce et noble femme! —
L’intérieur de l’homme offre un sombre tableau.
Un serpent est visible en la source de l’eau,
Et l’incrédulité rampe au fond de notre âme.

Vous qui n’avez jamais de sourire moqueur
Pour les accablements dont une âme est troublée,
Vous qui vivez sereine, attentive et voilée,
Homme par la pensée et femme par le cour,

Si vous me demandez, vous muse, à moi poète,
D’où vient qu’un rêve obscur semble agiter mes jours,
Que mon front est couvert d’ombres, et que toujours,
Comme un rameau dans l’air, ma vie est inquiète;

Pourquoi je cherche un sens au murmure des vents;
Pourquoi souvent, morose et pensif dès la veille,
Quand l’horizon blanchit à peine, je m’éveille
Même avant les oiseaux, même avant les enfants;

Et pourquoi, quand la brume a déchiré ses voiles,
Comme dans un palais dont je ferais le tour,
Je vais dans le vallon, contemplant tour-à-tour
Et le tapis de fleurs et le plafond d’étoiles?
Je vous dirai qu’en moi je porte un ennemi,
Le doute, qui m’emmène errer dans le bois sombre,
Spectre myope et sourd, qui, fait de jour et d’ombre,
Montre et cache à la fois toute chose à demi!
Je vous dirai qu’en moi j’interroge à toute heure
Un instinct qui bégaie, en mes sens prisonnier,
Près du besoin de croire un désir de nier,
Et l’esprit qui ricane auprès du cœur qui, pleure!
Aussi vous me voyez souvent parlant tout bas;
Et comme un mendiant, à la bouche affamée,

Qui rêve assis devant une porte fermée,
On dirait que j’attends quelqu’un qui n’ouvre pas.
Le doute! mot funèbre et qu’en lettres de flammes,
Je vois écrit partout, dans l’aube, dans l’éclair,
Dans l’azur de ce ciel, mystérieux et clair,
Transparent pour les yeux, impénétrable aux âmes!

C’est notre mal à nous, enfants des passions
Dont l’esprit n’atteint pas votre calme sublime;
A nous dont le berceau, risqué sur un abîme,
Vogua sur le flot noir des révolutions.

Les superstitions, ces hideuses vipères,
Fourmillent sous nos fronts où tout germe est flétri.
Nous portons dans nos cœurs le cadavre pourri
De la religion qui vivait dans nos pères.
Voilà pourquoi je vais, triste et réfléchissant,
Pourquoi souvent, la nuit, je regarde et j’écoute.
Solitaire, et marchant au hasard sur la route
A l’heure où le passant semble étrange au passant.
Heureux qui peut aimer, et qui dans la nuit noire,
Tout en cherchant la foi, peut rencontrer l’amour!
Il a du moins la lampe en attendant le jour.
Heureux ce cœur! Aimer, c’est la moitié de croire.
Octobre 1834.

Date lilia

Oh! si vous rencontrez quelque part sous les cieux
Une femme au front pur, au pas grave, aux doux yeux,
Que suivent quatre enfants dont le dernier chancelle,
Les surveillant bien tous, et, s'il passe auprès d'elle
Quelque aveugle indigent que l'âge appesantit,
Mettant une humble aumône aux mains du plus petit;
Si, quand la diatribe autour d'un nom s'élance,
Vous voyez une femme écouter en silence,
Et douter, puis vous dire: — Attendons pour juger.
Quel est celui de nous qu'on ne pourrait charger?
On est prompt à ternir les choses les plus belles.
La louange est sans pieds et le blâme a des ailes. —
Si, lorsqu'un souvenir, ou peut-être un remords,
Ou le hasard vous mène à la cité des morts,
Vous voyez, au détour d'une secrète allée,
Prier sur un tombeau dont la route est foulée,
Seul avec des enfants, un être gracieux
Qui pleure en souriant comme l'on pleure aux cieux;
Si de ce sein brisé la douleur et l'extase
S'épanchent comme l'eau des fêlures d'un vase;
Si rien d'humain ne reste à cet ange éploré;
Si, terni par le deuil, son œil chaste et sacré,
Bien plus levé là-haut que baissé vers la tombe,
Avec tant de regret sur la terre retombe
Qu'on dirait que son cœur n'a pas encor choisi
Entre sa mère au ciel et ses enfants ici;
Quand, vers Pâque ou Noël, l'église, aux nuits tombantes,
S'emplit de pas confus et de cires flambantes,
Quand la fumée en flots déborde aux encensoirs
Comme la blanche écume aux lèvres des pressoirs,
Quand au milieu des chants d'hommes, d'enfants, de femmes,
Une âme selon Dieu sort de toutes ces âmes,
Si, loin des feux, des voix, des bruits et des splendeurs,
Dans un repli perdu parmi les profondeurs,

Sur quatre jeunes fronts groupés près du mur sombre,
Vous voyez se pencher un regard voilé d’ombre
Où se mêle, plus doux encor que solennel,
Le rayon virginal au rayon maternel;

Oh! qui que vous soyez, bénissez-la. C’est elle!
La sœur, visible aux yeux, de mon âme immortelle!
Mon orgueil, mon espoir, mon abri, mon recours!
Toit de mes jeunes ans qu’espèrent mes vieux jours!

C’est elle! la vertu sur ma tête penchée;
La figure d’albâtre en ma maison cachée;
L’arbre qui, sur la route où je marche à pas lourds,
Verse des fruits souvent et de l’ombre toujours;
La femme dont ma joie est le bonheur suprême;
Qui, si nous chancelons, ses enfants ou moi-même,
Sans parole sévère et sans regard moqueur,
Les soutient de la main et me soutient du cœur;
Celle qui, lorsqu’au mal, pensif, je m’abandonne,
Seule peut me punir et seule me pardonne;
Qui de mes propres torts me console et m’absout;
A qui j’ai dit: toujours! et qui m’a dit: partout!
Elle! tout dans un mot! c’est dans ma froide brume
Une fleur de beauté que la bonté parfume!
D’une double nature hymen mystérieux!
La fleur est de la terre et le parfum des cieux!

LES VOIX INTÉRIEURES

TABLE DES MATIERES

I
II
III
IV
V
«Oh! vivons! disent-ils dans leur enivrement”
VII
VIII
IX
X
XI
XII
XIII
XIV
XV
XVI
XVII
XVIII
XIX
XX
XXI
XXII
XXIII
XXIV
XXV
XXVI
XXVII
XXVIII
XXIX
XXX
XXXI

XXXII

A
JOSEPH-LEOPOLD-SIGISBERT,
COMTE HUGO,
LIEUTENANT GENERAL DES ARMEES DU ROI
NE EN 1774.
VOLONTAIRE EN 1791.
COLONEL EN 1803.
GENERAL DE BRIGADE EN 1809.
GOUVERNEUR DE PROVINCE EN 1810.
LIEUTENANT GENERAL EN 1825.
MORT EN 1828.
NON INSCRIT SUR L'ARC DE L'ETOILE.
SON FILS RESPECTUEUX,
V. H.

Préface

La Porcia de Shakespeare parle quelque part de cette musique que tout homme à en soi. - Malheur, dit-elle, à qui ne l'entend pas! - Cette musique, la nature aussi l'a en elle. Si le livre qu'on va lire est quelque chose, il est l'écho, bien confus et bien affaibli sans doute, mais fidèle, l'auteur le croit, de ce chant qui répond en nous au chant que nous entendons hors de nous.

Au reste, cet écho intime et secret étant, aux yeux de l'auteur, la poésie même, ce volume, avec quelques nuances nouvelles peut-être et les développements que le temps a amenés, ne fait que continuer ceux qui l'ont précédé. Ce qu'il contient, les autre le contenaient; à cette différence près que dans les Orientales, par exemple, la fleur serait plus épanouie, dans les Voix intérieures, la goutte de rosée ou de pluie serait plus cachée. La poésie, en supposant que ce soit ici le lieu de prononcer un si grand mot, la poésie est comme Dieu: une et inépuisable.

Si l'homme a sa voix, si la nature a la sienne, les événement ont aussi la leur. L'auteur a toujours pensé que la mission du poète était de fondre dans un même groupe de chants cette triple parole qui renferme un triple enseignement, car la première s'adresse plus particulièrement au coeur, la seconde à l'âme, la troisième à l'esprit. Tres radios.

Et puis, dans l'époque où nous vivons, tout l'homme ne se retrouve-t-il pas là? N'est-il pas entièrement compris sous ce triple aspect de notre vie: Le foyer, le champ, la rue? Le foyer, qui est notre coeur même; le champ, où la nature nous parle; la rue, ou tempête, à travers les coups de fouet des partis, cet embarras de charrettes qu'on appelle les événements politiques.

Et, disons-le en passant, dans cette mêlée d’hommes, de doctrines et d’intérêts qui se ruent si violemment tous les jours sur chacune des oeuvres qu’il est donné à ce siècle de faire, le poète a une fonction sérieuse. Sans parler même ici de son influence civilisatrice, c’est à lui qu’il appartient d’élever, lorsqu’ils le méritent, les événements politiques à la dignité d’événements historiques. Il faut, pour cela, qu’il jette sur ses contemporains ce tranquille regard que l’histoire jette sur le passé; il faut que, sans se laisser tromper aux illusions d’optique, aux mirages menteurs, aux voisinages momentanés, il mette dès à présent tout en perspective, diminuant ceci, grandissant cela. Il faut qu’il ne trempe dans aucune voie de fait. Il faut qu’il sache se maintenir, au-dessus du tumulte, inébranlable, austère et bienveillant; indulgent quelquefois, chose difficile, impartial toujours, chose plus difficile encore; qu’il ait dans le coeur cette sympathique intelligence des révolutions qui implique le dédain de l’émeute, ce grave respect du peuple qui s’allie au mépris de la foule; que son esprit ne concède rien aux petites colères ni petites vanités; que son éloge comme son blâme prenne souvent à rebours, tantôt l’esprit de cour, tantôt l’esprit de faction. Il faut qu’il puisse saluer le drapeau tricolore sans insulter les fleur de lys; il faut qu’il puisse dans le même livre, presque à la même page, flétrir “l’homme qui a vendu une femme” et louer un noble jeune prince pour une bonne action bien faite, glorifier la haute idée sculptée sur l’arc de l’Etoile et consoler la triste pensée enfermée dans la tombe de Charles X. Il faut qu’il soit attentif à tout, sincère en tout, désintéressé sur tout, et que, nous l’avons déjà dit ailleurs, il ne dépende de rien, pas même de ses propres ressentiments, pas même de ses griefs personnels; sachant être, dans l’occasion, tout à la fois irrité comme homme et calme comme poète. Il faut enfin que, dans ces temps livrés à la lutte furieuse des opinions, au milieu des attractions violentes que sa raison devra subir sans dévier, il ait sans cesse présent à l’esprit ce but sévère: être de tous les partis par leur côté généreux, n’être d’aucun par leur côté mauvais.

La puissance du poète est faite d’indépendance.

L’auteur, on le voit, ne se dissimule aucune des conditions rigoureuses de la mission qu’il s’est imposée, en attendant qu’un meilleur vienne. Le résultat de l’art ainsi compris, c’est l’adoucissement des esprits et des moeurs, c’est la civilisation même. Ce résultat, quoique l’auteur de ce livre soit bien peu de chose pour une fonction si haute, il continuera d’y tendre par toutes les voie ouvertes à sa pensée, par le théâtre comme par le livre, par le roman comme par le drame, par l’histoire comme par la poésie. Il tâche, il essaie, il entreprend. Voilà tout. Bien des sympathies, nobles et intelligentes, l’appuient. S’il réussit, c’est à elles et non à lui que sera dû le succès.

Quant à la dédicace placée en tête de ce volume, l’auteur, surtout après les ligne qui précèdent, pense n’avoir pas besoin de dire combien est calme et religieux le sentiment qui l’a dictée. On le comprendra, en présence de ces deux monuments, le trophée de l’Etoile, le tombeau de son père, l’un national, l’autre domestique, tous deux sacrés, il ne pouvait y avoir place dans son âme que pour une pensée grave, paisible et sereine. Il signale une omission, et, en attendant qu’elle soit réparée où elle doit l’être, il la répare ici autant qu’il est en lui. Il donne à son père cette pauvre feuille de papier, tout ce qu’il a, en regrettant de n’avoir pas de granit. Il agit comme tout autre agirait dans la même situation. C’est donc tout simplement un devoir qu’il accomplit, rien de plus, rien de moins, et qu’il accomplit comme s’accomplissent les devoirs, sans bruit, sans colère, sans étonnement. Personne ne s’étonnera non plus de le voir faire ce qu’il fait. Après tout, la France peut bien, sans trop de souci, laisser tomber une feuille de son épaisse et glorieuse couronne; cette feuille, un fils doit la ramasser. Une nation est grande, une famille petite; ce qui n’est rien pour l’une est tout pour l’autre. La France a le droit d’oublier, la famille a le droit de se souvenir.

24 juin 1837. Paris.

I

«Ce siècle est grand et fort”

Ce siècle est grand et fort. Un noble instinct le mène.
Partout on voit marcher l’Idée en mission;
Et le bruit du travail, plein de parole humaine,
Se mêle au bruit divin de la création.

Partout, dans les cités et dans les solitudes,
L’homme est fidèle au lait dont nous le nourrissions;
Et dans l’informe bloc des sombres multitudes
La pensée en rêvant sculpte des nations.

L’échafaud vieilli croule, et la Grève se lave.
L’émeute se rendort. De meilleurs jours sont prêts.
Le peuple a sa colère et le volcan sa lave
Qui dévaste d’abord et qui féconde après.

Des poètes puissants, tête par Dieu touchées,
Nous jettent les rayons de leurs fronts inspirés.
L’art a de frais vallon où les âmes penchées
Boivent la poésie à des ruisseaux sacrés.

Pierre à pierre, en songeant aux vieilles moeurs éteintes,
Sous la société qui chancelle à tous vents,
Le penseur reconstruit ces deux colonnes saintes,
Le respect des vieillards et l’amour des enfants.

Le devoir, fils du droit, sous nos toits domestiques
Habite comme un hôte auguste et sérieux.
Les mendiants groupés dans l’ombre des portiques
Ont moins de haine au coeur et moins de flamme aux yeux.

L’austère vérité n’a plus de portes closes.
Tout verbe est déchiffré. Notre esprit éperdu,

Chaque jour, en lisant dans le livre des choses,
Découvre à l’univers un sens inattendu.

O poètes! le fer et la vapeur ardente
Effacent de la terre, à l’heure où vous rêvez,
L’antique pesanteur, à tout objet pendante,
Qui sous les lourds essieux broyait les durs pavés.

L’homme se fait servir par l’aveugle matière.
Il pense, il cherche, il crée! A son souffle vivant
Les germes dispersés dans la nature entière
Tremblent comme frissonne une forêt au vent!

Oui, tout va, tout s’accroît. Les heures fugitives
Laissent toutes leur trace. Un grand siècle a surgi.
Et, contemplant de loin de lumineuses rives,
L’homme voit son destin comme un fleuve élargi.

Mais parmi ces progrès dont notre âge se vante,
Dans tout ce grand éclat d’un siècle éblouissant,
Une chose, ô Jésus, en secret m’épouvante,
C’est l’écho de ta voix qui va s’affaiblissant.

15 avril 1837

II

Sunt Lacrymae Rerum

I

Il est mort. Rien de plus. Nul groupe populaire,
Urne d'où se répand l'amour et la colère,
N'a jeté sur son nom pitié, gloire ou respect.
Aucun signe n'a lui. Rien n'a changé l'aspect
De ce siècle orageux, mer de récifs bordée,
Où le fait, ce flot sombre, écume sur l'idée.
Nul temple n'a gémi dans nos villes. Nul glas
N'a passé sur nos fronts criant: Hélas! hélas!
La presse aux mille voix, cette louve hargneuse,
A peine a retourné sa tête dédaigneuse;
Nous ne l'avons pas vue, irritée et grondant,
Donner à cette pourpre un dernier coup de dent.
Et chacun vers son but, la marée à la grève,
La foule vers l'argent, la penseur vers son rêve,
Tout a continué de marcher, de courir,
Et rien n'a dit au monde: Un roi vient de mourir!

II

Sombres canons rangés devant les Invalides,
Comme des sphinx au pied des grandes pyramides,
Dragons d'airain, hideux, verts, énormes, béants,
Gardiens de ce palais, bâti pour des géants,
Qui dresse et fait au loin reluire à la lumière
Un casque monstrueux sur sa tête de pierre!
A ce bruit qui jadis vous eût fait rugir tous,
— Le roi de France est mort! - d'où vient qu'aucun de vous,
Comme un lion captif qui secouerait sa chaîne,
Aucun n'a tressailli sur sa base de chêne,
Et n'a, se réveillant par un subit effort,

Dit à son noir voisin: - Le roi de France est mort! -
D’où vient qu’il s’est fermé sans vos salves funèbres,
Ce cercueil qu’on clouait là-bas dans les ténèbres?
Et que rien n’est sorti de vos mornes affûts,
Pas même, ô canons sourds, ce murmure confus
Qu’au vague battement de ses ailes livides
le vent des nuits arrache à des armures vides?
C’est que, prostitués dans nos troubles civils,
Vous êtes comme nous fiers, sonores et vils!
C’est que, rouillés, vieillis, rivés à votre place,
Toujours agenouillés devant tout ce qui passe,
Retirés des combats, et dans ce coin obscur
Par des soldats boiteux gardés sous un vieux mur,
Vains foudres de parade oubliés de l’armée,
Autour de tout vainqueur faisant de la fumée,
Réservés pour la pompe et la solennité,
Vous avez pris racine en cette lâcheté!
Soyez flétris! canons que la guerre repousse,
Dont la voix sans terreur dans les fêtes s’émousse,
Vous qui glorifiez de votre cri profond
ceux qui viennent, toujours, jamais ceux qui s’en vont!
Vous qui, depuis trente ans, noirs courtisans de bronze,
Avez, comme Henri Quatre adorant Louis Onze,
Toujours tout applaudi, toujours tout salué,
Vous taisant seulement quand le peuple a hué!
Lâches, vous préférez ceux que le sort préfère!
Dans le moule brûlant le fondeur pour vous faire
Mit l’étain et le cuivre et l’oubli du vaincu;
Car qui meurt exilé pour vous n’a pas vécu,
Car vos poumons de fer, où gronde une âpre haleine,
Sont muets pour Goritz, comme pour Sainte-Hélène!
Soyez flétris!

Mais non. C’est à nous, insensés,
Que le mépris revient. Vous nous obéissez.
Vous êtes prisonniers et vous êtes esclaves.
La guerre qui vous fit de ses bouillantes laves

Vous fit pour la bataille, et nous vous avons pris
Pour vous éclabousser des fanges de Paris,
Pour vous sceller au seuil d'un palais centenaire,
Et pour vous mettre au ventre un éclair sans tonnerre!
C'est nous qu'il faut flétrir, nous qui, déshonorés,
Donnons notre âme abjecte à ces bronzes sacrés.
Nous passons dans l'opprobre! hélas! ils y demeurent.
Mornes captifs! le jour où des rois proscrits meurent,
Vous ne pouvez, jetant votre fumée à flots,
Prolonger sur Paris vos éclatants sanglots,
Et, pareils à des chiens liés à des murailles,
D'un hurlement plaintif suivre leurs funérailles!
Muets, et vos longs cous baissés vers les pavés,
Vous restez là pensifs, et, tristes, vous rêvez
Aux hommes, froids esprits, coeurs bas, âmes douteuses,
Qui font faire à l'airain tant de choses honteuses!

III

Vous vous taisez. - Mais moi, moi dont parfois le chant
Se refuse à l'aurore et jamais au couchant,
Moi que jadis à Reims Charle admit comme un hôte,
Moi qui plaignis ses maux, moi qui blâmai sa faute,
Je ne me tairai pas. Je descendrai, courbé,
Jusqu'au caveau profond, où dort ce roi tombé;
Je suspendrai ma lampe à cette voûte noire;
Et sans cesse, à côté de sa triste mémoire,
Mon esprit, dans ces temps d'oubli contagieux,
Fera veiller dans l'ombre un vers religieux!

Et que m'importe à moi qui, déployant mon aile,
Touche parfois d'en bas à la lyre éternelle,
A moi qui n'ai d'amour que pour l'onde et les champs,
Et pour tout ce qui souffre, excepté les méchants,
A moi qui prends souci, quand la nef s'aventure,
De tous les matelots risqués dans la mâture,
Et dont la pitié grave hésite quelquefois

De la sueur du peuple à la sueur des rois,
Que m'importe après tout que depuis six années
Ce roi fût retranché des têtes couronnées,
Froide ruine au bord de nos flots écumants,
Vain fantôme penché sur les événements!
Qu'il ne changeât de rien ni le poids ni le nombre,
Que, rasé dès longtemps, son front plongeât dans l'ombre,
Et que déjà, vieillard sans trône et sans pavois,
Il eût subi l'exil, première mort des rois!
Je le dirai, sans peur que la haine renaisse,
Son avènement pur eut pour soeur ma jeunesse;
Saint Rémi nous reçut sous son mur triomphant
Tous deux le même jour, lui vieux, moi presque enfant;
Et moi je ne veux pas, harpe qu'il a connue,
Qu'on mette mon roi mort dans une bière nue!
Tandis qu'au loin la foule emplit l'air de ses cris,
L'auguste piété, servante des proscrits,
Qui les ensevelit dans sa plus blanche toile,
N'aura pas, dans la nuit que son regard étoile,
Demandé vainement à ma pensée en deuil
Un lambeau de velours pour couvrir ce cercueil!

IV

Oh! que Versailles était superbe
Dans ces jours purs de tout affront
Où les prospérités en gerbe
S'épanouissaient sur son front!
Là, tout faste était sans mesure;
Là, tout arbre avait sa parure;
Là, tout homme avait sa dorure;
Tout du maître suivait la loi.
Comme au même but vont cent routes,
Là les grandeurs abondaient toutes;
L'olympe ne pendait aux voûtes
Que pour compléter le grand roi!

Vers le temps où naissaient nos pères
Versailles rayonnait encor.
Les lions ont de grands repaires;
Les princes ont des palais d'or.
Chaque fois que, foule asservie,
Le peuple au coeur rongé d'envie
Contemplait du fond de sa vie
Ce fier château si radieux,
Rentrant dans sa nuit plus livide,
Il emportait dans son oeil vide
Un éblouissement splendide
De rois, de femmes et de dieux!
Alors riaient dans l'espérance
Trois enfants sous ces nobles toits,
Les deux Louis, aînés de France,
Le beau Charles, comte d'Artois.
Tous trois nés sous les dais de soie,
Frêles enfants, mais pleins de joie
Comme ceux qu'un chaud soleil noie
De rayons purs sous le ciel bleu.
Oh! d'un beau sort quelle semence!
Près d'eux le roi d'où tout commence,
Au-dessous d'eux le peuple immense,
Au-dessus la bonté de Dieu!

V

Qui leur eût dit alors l'austère destinée?
Qui leur eût dit qu'un jour cette France, inclinée
Sous leurs fronts de fleurons chargés,
Ne se souviendrait d'eux ni de leur morne histoire,
Pas plus que l'océan sans fond et sans mémoire
Ne se souvient des naufragés!

Que, chaînes, lys, dauphins, un jour les Tuileries
Verraient l'illustre amas des vieilles armoiries
S'écrouler de leur plafond nu,

Et qu’en ces temps lointains que le mystère couvre,
Un Corse, encore à naître, au noir fronton du Louvre
Sculpterait un aigle inconnu!

Que leur royal Saint-Cloud se meublait pour un autre,
Et qu’en ces fiers jardins du rigide Lenôtre,
Amour de leurs yeux éblouis,
Beaux parcs où dans les jeux croissait leur jeune force,
Les chevaux de Crimée un jour mordraient l’écorce
Des vieux arbres du grand Louis!

VI

Dans ces temps radieux, dans cette aube enchantée
Dieu! comme avec terreur leur mère épouvantée
Les eût contre son coeur pressés, pâle et sans voix,
Si quelque vision, troublant ces jours de fêtes,
Eût jeté tout à coup sur ces fragiles têtes
Ce cri terrible: - Enfants! vous serez rois tous trois!

Et la voix prophétique aurait pu dire encore:
— Enfants, que votre aurore est une triste aurore!
Que les sceptres pour vous sont d’odieux présents!
D’où vient donc que le Dieu qui punit Babylone
Vous fait à pareille heure éclore au pied du trône?
Et qu’avez-vous donc fait, ô pauvres innocents?

Beaux enfants qu’on berce et qu’on flatte,
Tout surpris, vous si purs, si doux,
Que des vieux en robe écarlate
Viennent vous parler à genoux!
Quand les sévères Malesherbes
Ont relevé leurs fronts superbes,
Vous courez jouer dans les herbes,
Sans savoir que tout doit finir,
Et que votre race qui sombre
Porte à ses deux bouts couverts d’ombre

Ravaillac dans le passé sombre,
Robespierre dans l’avenir!

Dans ce Louvre où de vieux murs gardent
Les portraits des rois hasardeux,
Allez voir comme vous regardent
Charles premier et Jacques deux!
Sur vous un nuage s’étale.
Sol étranger, terre natale,
L’émeute, la guerre fatale,
Dévoreront vos jours maudits.
De vous trois, enfants sur qui pèse
L’antique masure française,
Le premier sera Louis seize,
Le dernier sera Charles dix!

Que l’aîné, peu crédule à la vie, à la gloire,
Au peuple ivre d’amour, sache d’une nuit noire
D’avance emplir son coeur de courage pourvu;
Qu’il rêve un ciel de pluie, un tombereau qui roule,
Et là-bas, tout au fond, au-dessus de la foule,
Quelque étrange échafaud dans la brume entrevu!

Frères par la naissance et par le malheur frères,
Les deux autres fuiront, battus des vents contraires.
Le règne de Louis, roi de quelques bannis,
Commence dans l’exil, celui de Charle y tombe.
L’un n’aura pas de sacre et l’autre pas de tombe.
A l’un Reims doit manquer, à l’autre Saint-Denisl!”

VII

Quel rêve horrible! - C’est l’histoire.
De nos pères couchés dans les tombeaux profonds
Ce qu’aucun n’aurait voulu croire,
Nous l’avons vu, nous qui vivons!

Tous ces maux, et d’autres encore,
Sont tombés sur ces fronts de la main du Seigneur.
Maintenant croyez à l’aurore!
Maintenant croyez au bonheur!

Croyez au ciel pur et sans rides!
Saluez l’avenir qui vous flatte si bien!
L’avenir, fantôme aux mains vides,
Qui promet tout et qui n’a rien!

O rois! ô familles tronquées!
Brusques écroulements des vieilles majestés!
O calamités embusquées
Au tournant des prospérités!

Tout colosse a des pieds de sable.
Votre abîme est, Seigneur, un abîme infini.
Louis quinze fut le coupable,
Louis seize fut le puni!

La peine se trompe et dévie.
Celui qui fit le mal, c’est la loi du Très-Haut,
A le trône et la longue vie,
Et l’innocent a l’échafaud.

Les fautes que l’aïeul peut faire
Te poursuivront, ô fils! en vain tu t’en défends.
Quand il a neigé sous le père,
L’avalanche est pour les enfants!

Révolutions! mer profonde!
Que de choses, hélas! pleines d’enseignement,
Dans les ténèbres de votre onde
On voit flotter confusément!

VIII

Charles Dix! - Oh! le Dieu qui retire et qui donne
Forgea pour cette tête une lourde couronne!
L’empire était penchant et les temps étaient durs.
Une ombre quand il vint couvrait encor nos murs,
L’ombre de l’empereur, figure colossale.
Peuple, armée, et la France, et l’Europe vassale,
Par cette vaste main depuis quinze ans pétris,
Demandaient un grand règne, et, pour remplir Paris
Ainsi qu’après César Auguste remplit Rome,
Après Napoléon il fallait plus qu’un homme.
Charles ne fut qu’un homme. A ce faîte il eut peur.
Le gouffre attire. Pris d’un vertige trompeur,
Dans l’abîme, fermant les yeux à la lumière,
Il se précipita la tête la première.
Silence à son tombeau! car tout vient de finir.
A peine il aura teint d’un vague souvenir
Le peuple à l’eau pareil, qui passe, clair ou sombre,
Près de tout sans en prendre autre chose que l’ombre!

Je n’aurai pas pour lui de reproches amers.
Je ne suis pas l’oiseau qui crie au bord des mers
Et qui, voyant tomber la foudre des nuées
Jette aux marins perdus ses sinistres huées.
Des passions de tous isolé bien souvent,
Je n’ai jamais cherché les baisers que nous vend
Et l’hymne dont nous berce avec sa voix flatteuse
La popularité, cette grande menteuse.
Aussi n’attendez pas que j’achète aujourd’hui
Des louanges pour moi par des affronts pour lui.
Qu’un autre, aux rois déchus donnant un nom sévère
Fasse un vil pilori de leur fatal calvaire;
Moi je n’affligerai pas plus, ô Charles dix,
Ton cercueil maintenant que ton exil jadis!

IX

Repose, fils de France, en ta tombe exilée!

Dormez, sire! - Il convient que cette ombre voilée,
Que ce vieux pasteur mort sans peuple et sans troupeaux,
Roi presque séculaire, ait au moins le repos,
Qu'il ait au moins la paix où la mort nous convie,
Puisqu'il eut le travail d'une si dure vie!
Peuple! soyons cléments! soyons forts! oublions!
Jamais l'odeur des morts n'attire les lions.
La haine d'un grand peuple est une haine grande
Qui veut que le pardon au sépulcre descende
Et n'a pour ennemis que ceux qui sont debout.
Hélas! quel poids encor pourrions-nous après tout
Jeter sur ce vieillard cassé par la misère,
Qui dort sous le fardeau de la terre étrangère!

Roi, puissant, vous l'avez brisé; c'est un grand pas.
Il faut l'épargner mort. Et moi, je ne crois pas
Qu'il soit digne du peuple en qui Dieu se reflète
De joindre au bras qui tue une main qui soufflette.

X

Nous, pasteurs des esprits, qui, du bord du chemin
Regardons tous les pas que fait le genre humain,
Poètes, par nos chants, penseurs, par nos idées,
Hâtons vers la raison les âmes attardées!
Hâtons l'ère où viendront s'unir d'un noeud loyal
Le travail populaire et le labeur royal;
Où colère et puissance auront fait leur divorce;
Où tous ceux qui sont forts auront peur de leur force,
Et d'un saint tremblement frémiront à la fois,
Rois, devant leurs devoirs, peuples, devant leurs droits!
Aidons tous ces grands faits que le Seigneur envoie
Pour ouvrir une route ou pour clore une voie,
Les révolutions dont la surface bout,
Les changements soudains qui font vaciller tout,
A dégager du fond des nuages de l'âme,
A poser au-dessus des lois comme une flamme

Ce sentiment profond en nous tous replié
Que l'homme appelle doute et la femme pitié!
Expliquons au profit de la sainte clémence
Ces hauts événements où l'état recommence,
Et qui font, quand l'oeil va des vaincus aux vainqueurs,
Trembler la certitude humaine au fond des coeurs!
Faisons venir bientôt l'heure où l'on pourra dire
Que sur le froid sépulcre on ne doit rien écrire
Hors des mots de pardon, d'espérance et de paix;
Et que, l'empereur mort comme les vieux Capets,
On a tort d'exiler, lorsque rien ne bouillonne,
Eux de leur Saint-Denis et lui de sa colonne.
A quoi sert, Dieu clément, cette vaine action?
Et comment se fait-il que la Proscription
Ne brise pas ses dents au marbre de la tombe?
N'est-ce donc pas assez que, cygne, aigle ou colombe,
Dès qu'un vent de malheur lui jette un nid de rois,
Sortant de ce bois noir qu'on appelle les lois,
Cette hyène, acharnée aux grandes races mortes,
Vienne, là, sous nos murs, les ronger à nos portes!

Un jour, - mais nous serons couchés sous le gazon
Quand cette aube de Dieu blanchira l'horizon! -
— Un jour on comprendra, même en changeant de règne,
Qu'aucune loi ne peut, sans que l'équité saigne,
Faire expier à tous ce qu'a commis un seul,
Et faire boire au fils ce qu'a versé l'aïeul.
On fera ce que nul aujourd'hui ne peut faire.
Quand un aiglon royal tombera de sa sphère,
On ne l'abattra pas sur l'aigle foudroyé.
Et, tout en gardant bien le droit qu'il a payé
De mettre le pouvoir sur un front comme un signe
Et de donner le trône et le Louvre au plus digne,
Un grand peuple pourra, sans être épouvanté,
Voir un enfant de plus jouer dans la cité.
Car tous les coeurs diront: C'est une juste aumône
De laisser la patrie à qui n'a plus le trône!

Alors, jetant enfin l’ancre dans un port sûr,
Ayant les biens germés sur nos maux, et l’azur
Du ciel nouveau dont Dieu nous donne la tempête,
Proscription! nos fils broieront du pied ta tête!
Démon qui tiens du tigre et qui tiens du serpent!
Dans les prospérités invisible et rampant,
Qui, lâche et patient, épiant en silence
Ce que dans son palais le roi dit, rêve, ou pense,
Horrible, en attendant l’heure d’être lâché,
Vis, monstre ténébreux, sous le trône caché!
O poésie! au ciel ton vol se réfugie
Quand les partis hurlants luttent à pleine orgie,
Quand la nécessité sous son code étouffant
Brise le fort, le faible, hélas! l’innocent même,
Et sourde et sans pitié promène l’anathème
Du front blanc du vieillard au front pur de l’enfant!

Tu fuis alors à tire-d’aile
Vers le ciel éternel et pur,
Vers la 1umière à tous fidèle,
Vers l’innocence, vers l’azur!
Afin que ta pureté fière
N’ait pas la fange et la poussière
Des vils chemins par nous frayés,
Et que, nuages et tempêtes,
Tout ce qui passe sur nos têtes
Ne puisse passer qu’à tes pieds!

Tu sais qu’étoile sans orbite,
L’homme erre au gré de tous les vents;
Tu sais que l’injustice habite
Dans la demeure des vivants;
Et que nos coeurs sont des arènes
Où les passions souveraines,
Groupe horrible en vain combattu,
Lionnes, louves affamées,
Tigresses de taches semées,

Dévorent la chaste vertu!

Tout ce qui souffre est plein de haine.
Tout ce qui vit traîne un remords.
Les morts seuls ont rompu leur chaîne.
Tout est méchant, hormis les morts!
Aussi, voyant partout la vie
Palpiter de rage et d’envie,
Et que parmi nous rien n’est beau,
Si parfois, oiseau solitaire,
Tu redescends sur cette terre,
Tu te poses sur un tombeau!

15 mai 1837

III

«Quelle est la fin de tout?”

Quelle est la fin de tout? la vie, ou bien la tombe?
Est-ce l’onde où l’on flotte? est-ce l’onde où l’on tombe?
De tant de pas croisés quel est le but lointain?
Le berceau contient-il l’homme ou bien le destin?
Sommes-nous ici-bas, dans nos maux, dans nos joies,
Des rois prédestinés ou de fatales proies?

O seigneur, dites-nous, dites-nous, ô Dieu fort,
Si vous n’avez créé l’homme que pour le sort?
Si déjà le calvaire est caché dans la crèche
Et si les nids soyeux, dorés par l’aube fraîche,
Où la plume naissante éclôt parmi des fleurs,
Sont faits pour les oiseaux ou pour les oiseleurs?

24 mars 1837

IV

A l’Arc de Triomphe

I

Toi dont la courbe au loin, par le couchant dorée
S’emplit d’azur céleste, arche démesurée
Toi qui lèves si haut ton front large et serein
Fait pour changer sous lui la campagne en abîme,
Et pour servir de base à quelque aigle sublime
Qui viendra s’y poser et qui sera d’airain!

O vaste entassement ciselé par l’histoire!
Monceau de pierre assis sur un monceau de gloire!
Edifice inouï!
Toi que l’homme par qui notre siècle commence,
De loin, dans les rayons de l’avenir immense,
Voyait, tout ébloui!

Non, tu n’es pas fini quoique tu sois superbe!
Non; puisque aucun passant, dans l’ombre assis sur l’herbe,
Ne fixe un oeil rêveur à ton mur triomphant,
Tandis que triviale, errante et vagabonde,
Entre tes quatre pieds toute la ville abonde
Comme une fourmilière aux pieds d’un éléphant!

A ta beauté royale il manque quelque chose.
Les siècles vont venir pour ton apothéose
Qui te l’apporteront.
Il manque sur ta tête un sombre amas d’années
Qui pendent pêle-mêle et toutes ruinées
Aux brèches de ton front!

Il te manque la ride et l’antiquité fière,
Le passé, pyramide où tout siècle a sa pierre,

Les chapiteaux brisés, l’herbe sur les vieux fûts;
Il manque sous ta voûte où notre orgueil s’élance
Ce bruit mystérieux qui se mêle au silence,
Le sourd chuchotement des souvenirs confus!

La vieillesse couronne et la ruine achève.
Il faut à l’édifice un passé dont on rêve,
Deuil, triomphe ou remords.
Nous voulons, en foulant son enceinte pavée,
Sentir dans la poussière à nos pieds soulevée
De la cendre des morts!

Il faut que le fronton s’effeuille comme un arbre.
I1 faut que le lichen, cette rouille du marbre,
De sa lèpre dorée au loin couvre le mur;
Et que la vétusté, par qui tout art s’efface,
Prenne chaque sculpture et la ronge à la face,
Comme un avide oiseau qui dévore un fruit mûr.

Il faut qu’un vieux dallage ondule sous les portes,
Que le lierre vivant grimpe aux acanthes mortes,
Que l’eau dorme aux fossés,
Que la cariatide, en sa lente révolte,
Se refuse, enfin lasse, à porter l’archivolte,
Et dise: C’est assez!

Ce n’est pas, ce n’est pas entre des pierres neuves
Que la bise et la nuit pleurent comme des veuves.
Hélas! d’un beau palais le débris est plus beau.
Pour que la lune émousse à travers la nuit sombre
L’ombre par le rayon et le rayon par l’ombre,
Il lui faut la ruine à défaut du tombeau!

Voulez-vous qu’une tour, voulez-vous qu’une église
Soient de ces monuments dont l’âme idéalise
La forme et la hauteur,
Attendez que de mousse elles soient revêtues,

Et laissez travailler à toutes les statues
Le temps, ce grand sculpteur!

Il faut que le vieillard, chargé de jours sans nombre,
Menant son jeune fils sous l’arche pleine d’ombre,
Nomme Napoléon comme on nomme Cyrus,
Et dise en la montrant de ses mains décharnées:
“Vois cette porte énorme! elle a trois mille années.
C’est par là qu’ont passé des hommes disparus!”

II

Oh! Paris est la cité mère!
Paris est le lieu solennel
Où le tourbillon éphémère
Tourne sur un centre éternel!
Paris! feu sombre ou pure étoile!
Morne Isis couverte d’un voile!
Araignée à l’immense toile
Où se prennent les nations!
Fontaine d’urnes obsédée!
Mamelle sans cesse inondée
Où pour se nourrir de l’idée
Viennent les générations!

Quand Paris se met à l’ouvrage
Dans sa forge aux mille clameurs,
A tout peuple, heureux, brave ou sage,
Il prend ses lois, ses dieux, ses moeurs.
Dans sa fournaise, pêle-mêle,
Il fond, transforme et renouvelle
Cette science universelle
Qu’il emprunte à tous les humains;
Puis il rejette aux peuples blêmes
Leurs sceptres et leurs diadèmes,
Leurs préjugés et leurs systèmes,
Tout tordus par ses fortes mains!

Paris, qui garde, sans y croire,
Les faisceaux et les encensoirs,
Tous les matins dresse une gloire,
Eteint un soleil tous les soirs;
Avec l'idée, avec le glaive,
Avec la chose, avec le rêve,
Il refait, recloue et relève
L'échelle de la terre aux cieux;
Frère des Memphis et des Romes,
Il bâtit au siècle où nous sommes
Une Babel pour tous les hommes,
Un Panthéon pour tous les dieux!

Ville qu'un orage enveloppe!
C'est elle, hélas! qui, nuit et jour,
Réveille le géant Europe
Avec sa cloche et son tambour!
Sans cesse, qu'il veille ou qu'il dorme,
Il entend la cité difforme
Bourdonner sur sa tête énorme
Comme un essaim dans la forêt.
Toujours Paris s'écrie et gronde.
Nul ne sait, question profonde!
Ce que perdrait le bruit du monde
Le jour où Paris se tairait!

III

Il se taira pourtant! - Après bien des aurores,
Bien des mois, bien des ans, bien des siècles couchés,
Quand cette rive où l'eau se brise aux ponts sonores
Sera rendue aux joncs murmurants et penchés;

Quand la Seine fuira de pierres obstruée,
Usant quelque vieux dôme écroulé dans ses eaux,
Attentive au doux vent qui porte à la nuée

Le frisson du feuillage et le chant des oiseaux;

Lorsqu’elle coulera, la nuit, blanche dans l’ombre,
Heureuse, en endormant son flot longtemps troublé,
De pouvoir écouter enfin ces voix sans nombre
Qui passent vaguement sous le ciel étoilé;

Quand de cette cité, folle et rude ouvrière,
Qui, hâtant les destins à ses murs réservés,
Sous son propre marteau s’en allant en poussière,
Met son bronze en monnaie et son marbre en pavés;

Quand, des toits des clochers, des ruches tortueuses,
Des porches, des frontons, des dômes pleins d’orgueil
Qui faisaient cette ville, aux voix tumultueuses,
Touffue, inextricable et fourmillante à l’oeil,

Il ne restera plus dans l’immense campagne,
Pour toute pyramide et pour tout panthéon,
Que deux tours de granit faites par Charlemagne,
Et qu’un pilier d’airain fait par Napoléon;

Toi, tu compléteras le triangle sublime!
L’airain sera la gloire et le granit la foi;
Toi, tu seras la porte ouverte sur la cime
Qui dit: il faut monter pour venir jusqu’à moi!

Tu salueras là-bas cette église si vieille,
Cette colonne altière au nom toujours accru,
Debout peut-être encore, ou tombée, et pareille
Au clairon monstrueux d’un Titan disparu.

Et sur ces deux débris que les destins rassemblent,
Pour toi l’aube fera resplendir à la fois
Deux signes triomphants qui de loin se ressemblent.
De près l’un est un glaive et l’autre est une croix!

Sur vous trois poseront mille ans de notre France.
La colonne est le chant d’un règne à peine ouvert,
C’est toi qui finiras l’hymne qu’elle commence.
Elle dit: Austerlitz! tu diras: Champaubert!

IV

Arche! alors tu seras éternelle et complète,
Quand tout ce que la Seine en son onde reflète
Aura fui pour jamais,
Quand de cette cité qui fut égale à Rome
Il ne restera plus qu’un ange, un aigle, un homme,
Debout sur trois sommets!

C’est alors que le roi, le sage, le poète,
Tous ceux dont le passé presse l’âme inquiète,
T’admireront vivante auprès de Paris mort;
Et, pour mieux voir ta face où flotte un sombre rêve,
Lèveront à demi ton lierre, ainsi qu’on lève
Un voile sur le front d’une aïeule qui dort!

Sur ton mur qui pour eux n’aura rien de vulgaire,
Ils chercheront nos moeurs, nos héros, notre guerre,
Tous pensifs à tes pieds;
Ils croiront vous voir, le long de ta frise animée,
Revivre le grand peuple avec la grande armée!
— “Oh! diront-ils, voyez!

Là, c’est le régiment, ce serpent des batailles,
Traînant sur mille pieds ses luisantes écailles,
Qui tantôt, furieux, se roule au pied des tours,
Tantôt, d’un mouvement formidable et tranquille,
Troue un rempart de pierre et traverse une ville
Avec son front sonore où battent vingt tambours!

Là-haut, c’est l’empereur avec ses capitaines,
Qui songe s’il ira vers ces terres lointaines

Où se tourne son char,
Et s’il doit préférer pour vaincre ou se défendre
La courbe d’Annibal ou l’ange d’Alexandre
Au carré de César.

Là, c’est l’artillerie aux cent gueules de fonte,
D’où la fumée à flots monte, tombe et remonte,
Qui broie une cité, détruit les garnisons,
Ruine par la brèche incessamment accrue
Tours, dômes, ponts, clochers, et, comme une charrue,
Creuse une horrible rue à travers les maisons!”

Et tous les souvenirs qu’à ton front taciturne
Chaque siècle en passant versera de son urne
Leur reviendront au coeur.
Ils feront de ton mur jaillir ta vieille histoire,
Et diront, en posant un panache de gloire
Sur ton cimier vainqueur:

— “Oh! que tout était grand dans cette époque antique!
Si les ans n’avaient pas dévasté ce portique,
Nous en retrouverions encor les lambeaux!
Mais le temps, grand semeur de la ronce et du lierre,
Touche les monuments d’une main familière,
Et déchire le livre aux endroits les plus beaux!”

V

Non, le temps n’ôte rien aux choses.
Plus d’un portique à tort vanté
Dans ses lentes métamorphoses
Arrive enfin à la beauté.
Sur les monuments qu’on révère
Le temps jette un charme sévère
De leur façade à leur chevet.
Jamais, quoiqu’il brise et qu’il rouille,
La robe dont il les dépouille

Ne vaut celle qu’il leur revêt.

C’est le temps qui creuse une ride
Dans un claveau trop indigent;
Qui sur l’ange d’un marbre aride
Passe son pouce intelligent;
C’est lui qui, pour corriger l’oeuvre,
Mêle une vivante couleuvre
Aux noeuds d’une hydre de granit.
Je cois voir rire un toit gothique
Quand le temps dans la frise antique
Ote une pierre et met un nid!

Aussi, quand vous venez, c’est lui qui vous accueille;
Lui qui verse l’odeur du vague chèvrefeuille
Sur ce pavé souillé peut-être d’ossements;
Lui qui remplit d’oiseaux les sculptures farouches,
Met la vie en leurs flancs, et de leurs mornes bouches
Fait sortir mille cris charmants!

Si quelque Vénus toute nue
Gémit, pauvre marbre désert,
C’est lui, dans la verte avenue,
Qui la caresse et qui la sert.
A l’abri d’un porche héraldique
Sous un beau feuillage pudique
Il la cache jusqu’au nombril;
Et sous son pied blanc et superbe
Etend les mille fleurs de l’herbe,
Cette mosaïque d’avril!

La mémoire des morts demeure
Dans les monuments ruinés.
Là, douce et clémente, à toute heure,
Elle parle aux fronts inclinés.
Elle est là, dans l’âme affaissée
Filtrant de pensée en pensée,

Comme une nymphe au front dormant
Qui, seule sous l’obscure voûte
D’où son eau suinte goutte à goutte,
Penche son vase tristement!

VI

Mais, hélas! hélas! dit l’histoire,
Bien souvent le passé couvre plus d’un secret
Dont sur un mur vieilli la tache reparaît!
Toute ancienne muraille est noire!

Souvent, par le désert et par l’ombre absorbé,
L’édifice déchu ressemble au roi tombé.
Plus de gloire où n’est plus la foule!
Rome est humiliée et Venise est en deuil.
La ruine de tout commence par l’orgueil;
C’est le premier fronton qui croule!

Athène est triste, et cache au front du Parthénon
Les traces de l’Anglais et celles du canon,
Et, pleurant ses tours mutilées,
Rêve à l’artiste grec qui versa de sa main
Quelque chose de beau comme un sourire humain
Sur le profil des propylées!

Thèbe a des temples morts où rampe en serpentant
La vipère au front plat, au regard éclatant,
Autour de la colonne torse;
Et, seul, quelque grand aigle habite en souverain
Les piliers de Rhamsès d’où les lames d’airain
S’en vont comme une vieille écorce!

Dans les débris de Gur, pleins du cri des hiboux,
Le tigre en marchant ploie et casse les bambous,
D’où s’envole le vautour chauve,
Et la lionne au pied d’un mur mystérieux

Met le groupe inquiet des lionceaux sans yeux
Qui fouillent sous son ventre fauve.

La morne Palenquè gît dans les marais verts.
A peine entre ses blocs d’herbe haute couverts
Entend-on le lézard qui bouge.
Ses murs sont obstrués d’arbres au fruit vermeil
Où volent, tout moirés par l’ombre et le soleil,
De beaux oiseaux de cuivre rouge!

Muette en la douleur, Jumièges gravement
Etouffe un triste écho sous son portail normand,
Et laisse chanter sur ses tombes
Tous ces nids dans ses tours abrités et couvés
D’où le souffle du soir fait sur les noirs pavés
Neiger des plumes de colombes!

Comme une mère sombre, et qui, dans sa fierté,
Cache sous son manteau son enfant souffleté,
L’Egypte au bord du Nil assise
Dans sa robe de sable enfonce enveloppés
Ses colosses camards à la face frappés
Par le pied brutal de Cambyse.

C’est que toujours les ans contiennent quelque affront.
Toute ruine, hélas! pleure et penche le front!

VII

Mais toi! rien s’atteindra ta majesté pudique,
Porte sainte! jamais ton marbre véridique
Ne sera profané.
Ton cintre virginal sera pur sous la nue;
Et les peuples à naître accourront tête nue
Vers ton front couronné!

Toujours le pâtre, au loin accroupi dans les seigles,

Verra sur ton sommeil planer un cercle d’aigles.
Les chênes à tes blocs noueront leur large tronc.
La gloire sur ta cime allumera son phare.
Ce n’est qu’en te chantant une haute fanfare
Que sous ton arc altier le siècles passeront!

Jamais rien qui ressemble à quelque ancienne honte
N’osera sur ton mur où le flot des ans monte
Répandre sa noirceur.
Tu pourras, dans ces champs où vous resterez seules,
Contempler fièrement les deux tours tes aïeules,
Ne mêle à tes lauriers son feuillage hideux!

Tandis que ces cités, dans leurs cendres enfouies,
Furent pleines jadis d’actions inouïes,
Ivres de sang versé,
Si bien que le seigneur a dit à la nature:
Refais-toi des palais dans cette architecture
Dont l’homme a mal usé!

Aussi tout est fini. Le chacal les visite;
Les murs vont décroissant sous l’herbe parasite;
L’étang s’installe et dort sous le dôme brisé;
Sur les Nérons sculptés marche la bête fauve;
L’antre se creuse où fut l’incestueuse alcôve.
Le tigre peut venir où le crime a passé!

VIII

Oh! dans ces jours lointains où l’on n’ose descendre,
Quand trois mille ans auront passé sur notre cendre
A nous qui maintenant vivons, pensons, allons,
Quand nos fosses auront fait place à des sillons,
Si, vers le soir, un homme assis sur la colline
S’oublie à contempler cette Seine orpheline,
O Dieu! de quel aspect triste et silencieux
Les lieux où fut Paris étonneront ses yeux!

Si c’est l’heure où déjà des vapeurs sont tombées
Sur le couchant rougi de l’or des scarabées,
Si la touffe de l’arbre est noire sur le ciel,
Dans ce demi-jour pâle où plus rien n’est réel,
Ombre où la fleure s’endort, où s’éveille l’étoile,
De quel oeil il verra, comme à travers un voile,
Comme un songe aux contours grandissant et noyés,
La plaine immense et brune apparaître à ses pieds,
S’élargir lentement dans le vague nocturne,
Et comme une eau qui s’enfle et monte aux dors de l’urne,
Absorbant par degrés forêt, coteau, gazon,
Quand la nuit sera noire, emplir tout l’horizon!
Oh! dans cette heure sombre où l’on croit voir les choses
Fuir, sous une autre forme étrangement éclose,
Quelle extase de voir dormir, quant rien ne luit,
Ces champs dont chaque pierre a contenu du bruit!
Comme il tendra l’oreille aux rumeurs indécises!
Comme il ira rêvant des figures assises
Dans le buisson penché, dans l’arbre aux bord des eaux,
Dans le vieux pan de mur que lèchent les roseaux!
Qu’il cherchera de vie en ce tombeau suprême!
Et comme il se fera, s’éblouissant lui-même,
A travers la nuit trouble et les rameaux touffus,
Des visions de chars et de passants confus!
— Mais non, tout sera mort. Plus rien dans cette plaine
Qu’un peuple évanoui dont elle est encor pleine;
Que l’oeil éteint de l’homme et l’oeil vivant de dieu;
Un arc, une colonne, et, là-bas, au milieu
De ce fleuve argenté dont on entend l’écume,
Une église échouée à demi dans la brume!

O spectacle! - ainsi meurt ce que les peuples fonts!
Qu’un tel passé pour l’âme est un gouffre profond!
Pour ce passant pieux quel poids de notre histoire!
Surtout si tout à coup réveillant sa mémoire,
L’année a ce soir-là ramené dans son cours
Une des grandes nuits, veilles de nos grands jours,

Où l’empereur, rêvant un lendemain de gloire,
Dormait en attendant l’aube d’une victoire!

Lorsqu’enfin, fatigué de songes, vers minuit,
Las d’écouter au seuil de ce monde détruit,
Après s’être accoudé longtemps, oubliant,
Au bord de ce néant immense où rien ne pleure,
Il aura lentement regagné son chemin;
Quant ce grand désert, pur de tout pas humain,
Rien ne troublera plus cette pudeur que Rome
Ou Paris ruiné doit avoir devant l’homme;
Lorsque la solitude, enfin libre et sans bruit,
Pourra continuer ce qu’elle fait la nuit,
Si quelque être animé veille encor dans la plaine
Peut-être verra-t-il, comme sous une haleine
Soudain un pâle éclair de ta tête jaillir,
Et la colonne au loin répondre et tressaillir!
Et ses soldats de cuivre et tes soldats de pierre
Ouvrir subitement leur pesante paupière!
Et tous s’entre-heurter, réveil miraculeux!
Tels que d’anciens guerriers d’un âge fabuleux
Qu’un noir magicien, loin des temps où nous sommes,
Jadis aurait fait marbre et qu’il referait homme!
Alors l’aigle d’airain à ton faîte endormi,
Superbe, et tout à coup se dressant à demi,
Sur ces héros baignés du feu de ses prunelles
Secouera largement ses ailes éternelles!
D’où viendra ce réveil? d’où viendront ces clartés?
Et ce vent qui, soufflant sur ces guerriers sculptés,
Les fera remuer sur ta face hautaine
Comme tremble un feuillage autour du tronc de chêne?
Qu’importe? Dieu le sait. Le mystère est dans tout.
L’un à l’autre à voix basse ils se diront: Debout!
Ceux de quatre-vingt-seize et de mil huit cent onze,
Ceux que conduit au ciel la spirale de bronze,
Ceux que scelle à la terre un socle de granit,
Tous, poussant au combat le cheval qui hennit,

Le drapeau qui se gonfle et le canon qui roule,
A l’immense mêlée ils se rueront en foule!
Alors on entendra sur ton mur les clairons,
Les bombes, les tambours, le choc des escadrons,
Les cris, et le bruit sourd des plaines ébranlées,
Sortir confusément des pierres ciselées,
Et du pied au sommet du pilier souverain
Cent batailles rugir avec des voix d’airain.
Tout à coup, écrasant l’ennemi qui s’effare,
La victoire aux cent voix sonnera sa fanfare.
De la colonne à toi les cris se répondront.
Et puis tout se taira sur votre double front;
Une rumeur de fête emplira la vallée,
Et Notre-Dame au loin, aux ténèbres mêlée,
Illuminant sa croix ainsi qu’un labarum,
Vous chantera dans l’ombre un vague Te Deum!

Monument! voilà donc la rêverie immense
Qu’à ton ombre déjà le poète commence!
Piédestal qu’eût aimé Bélénus ou Mithra!
Arche aujourd’hui guerrière, un jour religieuse!
Rêve en pierre ébauché! porte prodigieuse
D’un palais de géants qu’on se figurera!

Quand d’un lierre poudreux je couvre tes sculptures,
Lorsque je vois, au fond des époques futures,
La liste des héros sur ton mur constellé
Reluire et rayonner, malgré les destinées,
A travers les rameaux des profondes années,
Comme à travers un bois brille un ciel étoilé;

Quand ma pensée ainsi, vieillissant ton attique,
Te fait de l’avenir un passé magnifique,
Alors sous ta grandeur je me courbe effrayé,
J’admire, et, fils pieux, passant que l’art anime,
Je ne regrette rien devant ton mur sublime
Que Phidias absent et mon père oublié!

2 février 1837

V

Dieu est toujours là

I

Quand l’été vient, le pauvre adore!
L’été, c’est la saison de feu,
C’est l’air tiède et la fraîche aurore;
L’été, c’est le regard de Dieu.

L’été, la nuit bleue et profonde
S’accouple au jour limpide et claire;
Le soir est d’or, la plaine est blonde;
On entend des chansons dans l’air.

L’été, la nature éveillée
Partout se répand en tous sens,
Sur l’arbre en épaisse feuillée,
Sur l’homme en bienfaits caressants.

Tout ombrage alors semble dire:
Voyageur, viens te reposer!
Elle met dans l’aube un sourire,
Elle met dans l’onde un baiser.

Elle cache et recouvre d’ombre,
Loin du monde sourd et moqueur,
Une lyre dans le bois sombre,
Une oreille dans notre coeur!

Elle donne vie et pensée
Aux pauvres de l’hiver sauvés,
Du soleil à pleine croisée,
Et le ciel pur qui dit: Vivez!

Sur les chaumières dédaignées
Par les maîtres et les valets,
Joyeuse, elle jette à poignées
Les fleurs qu’elle vend aux palais.

Son luxe aux pauvres seuils s’étale.
Ni les parfums ni les rayons
N’ont peur, dans leur candeur royale,
De se salir à des haillons.

Sur un toit où l’herbe frissonne
Le jasmin veut bien se poser.
Le lys ne méprise personne,
Lui qui pourrait tout mépriser!

Alors la masure où la mousse
Sur l’humble chaume a débordé
Montre avec une fierté douce
Son vieux mur de roses brodé.

L’aube alors de clartés baignée,
Entrant dans le réduit profond,
Dore la toile d’araignée
Entre les poutres du plafond.

Alors l’âme du pauvre est pleine.
Humble, il bénit ce Dieu lointain
Dont il sent la céleste haleine
Dans tous les souffles du matin!

L’air le réchauffe et le pénètre.
Il fête le printemps vainqueur.
Un oiseau chante à sa fenêtre,
La gaîté chante dans son coeur!

Alors, si l’orphelin s’éveille,
Sans toit, sans mère et priant Dieu,

Une voix lui dit à l’oreille:
“Eh bien! viens sous mon dôme bleu!

Le Louvre est égal aux chaumières
Sous ma coupole de saphirs.
Viens sous mon ciel plein de lumières,
Viens sous mon ciel plein de zéphirs!

J’ai connu ton père et ta mère
Dans leurs bons et leurs mauvais jours.
Pour eux la vie était amère,
Mais moi je fut douce toujours.

C’est moi qui sur leur sépulture
Ai mis l’herbe qui la défend.
Viens, je suis la grande nature!
Je suis l’aïeule, et toi l’enfant.

Viens, j’ai des fruits d’or, j’ai des roses,
J’en remplirai tes petits bras,
Je te dirai de douces choses,
Et peut-être tu souriras!

Car je voudrais te voir sourire,
Pauvre enfant si triste et si beau!
Et puis tout bas j’irais le dire
A ta mère dans son tombeau!”

Et l’enfant à cette voix tendre,
De la vie oubliant le poids,
Rêve et se hâte de descendre
Le long des coteaux dans les bois.

Là du plaisir tout a la forme;
L’arbre a des fruits, l’herbe a des fleurs;
Il entend dans le chêne énorme
Rire les oiseaux querelleurs.

Dans l’onde, il mire son visage;
Tout lui parle; adieu son ennui!
Le buisson l’arrête au passage,
Et le caillou joue avec lui.

Le soir, point d’hôtesse cruelle
Qui l’accueille d’un front hagard.
Il trouve l’étoile si belle
Qu’il s’endort à son doux regard!

— Oh! qu’en dormant rien ne t’oppresse!
Dieu sera là pour ton réveil!-
La lune vient qui le caresse
Plus doucement que le soleil.

Car elle a de plus molles trêves
Pour nos travaux et nos douleurs.
Elle fait éclore nos rêves,
Lui ne fait naître que les fleurs!

Oh! quand la fauvette dérobe
Son nid sous les rameaux penchants,
Lorsqu’au soleil séchant sa robe
Mai tout mouillé rit dans les champs

J’ai souvent pensé dans mes veilles
Que la nature au front sacré
Dédiait tout bas ses merveilles
A ceux qui l’hiver ont pleuré!

Pour tous et pour le méchant même
Elle est bonne, Dieu le permet,
Dieu le veut, mais surtout elle aime
Le pauvre que Jésus aimait!

Toujours sereine et pacifique,

Elle offre à l’auguste indigent
Des dons de reine magnifique,
Des soins d’esclave intelligent!

A-t-il faim? au fruit de la branche
Elle dit: - Tombe, ô fruit vermeil!
A-t-il soif? - Que l’onde s’épanche!
A-t-il froid? - Lève-toi, soleil!

II

Mais hélas! juillet fait sa gerbe;
L’été, lentement effacé,
Tombe feuille à feuille dans l’herbe
Et jour à jour dans le passé.

Puis octobre perd sa dorure;
Et les bois dans les lointains bleus
Couvrent de leur rousse fourrure
L’épaule des coteaux frileux.

L’hiver des nuages sans nombre
Sort, et chasse l’été du ciel,
Pareil au temps, ce faucheur sombre
Qui suit le semeur éternel!

Le pauvre alors s’effraie te prie.
L’hiver, hélas! c’est Dieu qui dort;
C’est la faim livide et maigrie
Qui tremble auprès du foyer mort!

Il croit voir une main de marbre
Qui, mutilant le jour obscur,
Retire tous les fruits de l’arbre
Et tout les rayons d’azur.

Il pleure, la nature est morte!

O rude hiver! ô dure loi!
Soudain un ange ouvre sa porte
Et dit en souriant: C’est moi!

Cet ange qui donne et tremble,
C’est l’aumône aux yeux de douceur,
Au front crédule, et qui ressemble
A la foi dont elle est la soeur!

Je suis la Charité, l’amie
Qui se réveille avant le jour,
Quand la nature est rendormie,
Et que dieu m’a dit: A ton tour!

“Je viens visiter ta chaumière
Veuve de l’été si charmant!
Je suis fille de la prière.
J’ai des mains qu’on ouvre aisément.

“J’accours, car la saison est dure,
j’accours, car l’indigent a froid”
J’accours, car la tiède verdure
Ne fait plus d’ombre sur le toit!

“je prie, et jamais je n’ordonne.
Chère à tout homme quel qu’il soit,
Je laisse la joie à qui donne
Et je l’apporte à qui reçoit.”

O figure auguste et modeste,
Où le Seigneur mêla pour nous
Ce que l’ange a de plus céleste,
Ce que la femme a de plus doux!

Au lit du vieillard solitaire
Elle penche un front gracieux,
et rien n’est plus beau sur la terre

Et rien n’est plus grand sous les cieux,

Lorsque, réchauffant leurs poitrines
Entre ses genoux triomphants,
Elle tient dans ses mains divines
Les pieds nus des petits enfants!

Elle va dans chaque masure,
Laissant au pauvre réjoui
Le vin, le pain frais, l’huile pure,
Et le courage épanoui!

Et le feu! le beau feu folâtre,
A la pourpre ardente pareil,
Qui fait qu’amené devant l’âtre
L’aveugle croit rire au soleil!

Puis elle cherche au coin des bornes,
Transis par la froide vapeur,
Ces enfants qu’on voit nus et mornes
Et se mourant avec stupeur.

Oh! voilà surtout ceux qu’elle aime!
Faibles fronts dans l’ombre engloutis!
Parés d’un triple diadème,
Innocents, pauvres et petits!

Ils sont meilleurs que nous ne sommes!
Elle leur donne en même temps,
Avec le pain qu’il faut aux hommes,
Le baiser qu’il faut aux enfants!

Tandis que leur faim secourue
Mange ce pain de pleurs noyé,
Elle étend sur eux dans la rue
Son bras de passants coudoyé.

Et si, le front dans la lumière,
Un riche passe en ce moment,
Par le bord de sa robe altière
Elle le tire doucement!

Puis pour eux elle prie encore
La grande foule au coeur étroit,
La foule qui, dès qu’on l’implore,
S’en va comme l’eau qui décroît!

“- Oh! malheureux celui qui chante
Un chant joyeux, peut-être impur,
Pendant que la bise méchante
Mord un pauvre enfant sous son mur!

Oh! la chose triste et fatale,
Lorsque chez le riche hautain
Un grand feu tremble dans la salle,
Reflété par un grand festin,

De voir, quand l’orgie enrouée
Dans la pourpre s’égaie et rit,
A peine une toile trouée
Sur les membres de Jésus-Christ!

Oh! donnez-moi pour que je donne!
J’ai des oiseaux nus dans mon nid.
Donnez, méchants, Dieu vous pardonne!
Donnez, ô bons, Dieu vous bénit!

Heureux ceux que mon zèle enflamme!
Qui donne au pauvres prête à Dieu.
Le bien qu’on fait parfume l’âme;
On s’en souvient toujours un peu!

Le soir, au seuil de sa demeure,
Heureux celui qui sait encor

Ramasser un enfant qui pleure,
Comme un avare un sequin d’or!

Le vrai trésor rempli de charmes,
C’est un groupe pour vous priant
D’enfants qu’on a trouvés en larmes
Et qu’on a laissés souriant!

Les biens que je donne à qui m’aime,
Jamais Dieu ne les retira.
L’or que sur le pauvre je sème
Pour le riche au ciel germera!”

III

Oh! que l’été brille ou s’éteigne,
Pauvres, ne désespérez pas!
Le Dieu qui souffrit et qui règne
A mis ses pieds où sont vos pas!

Pour vous couvrir il se dépouille;
Bon même pour l’homme fatal
Qui, comme l’airain dans la rouille,
Va s’endurcissant dans le mal!
Tendre, même durant l’absinthe,
Pour l’impie au regard obscur
Qui l’insulte sans plus de crainte
Qu’un passant qui raie un vieux mur!

Ils ont beau traîner sur les claies
Ce Dieu mort dans leur abandon;
Ils ne font couler de ses plaies
Qu’un intarissable pardon.

Il n’est pas l’aigle altier qui vole,
Ni le grand lion ravisseur;
Il compose son auréole

D’une lumineuse douceur!

Quand sur nous une chaîne tombe,
Il la brise anneau par anneau.
Pour l’esprit il se fait colombe,
Pour le coeur il se fait agneau!

Vous pour qui la vie est mauvaise,
Espérez! il veille sur vous!
Il sait bien ce que cela pèse,
Lui qui tomba sur ses genoux!

Il est le Dieu de l’évangile;
Il tient votre coeur dans sa main,
Et c’est une chose fragile
Qu’il ne veut pas briser, enfin!

Lorsqu’il est temps que l’été meure
Sous l’hiver sombre et solennel,
Même à travers le ciel qui pleure
On voit son sourire éternel!

Car sur les familles souffrantes,
L’hiver, l’été, la nuit, le jour,
Avec des urnes différentes
Dieu verse à grands flots son amour!

Et dans ses bontés éternelles
Il penche sur l’humanité
Ces mères au triples mamelles,
La nature et la charité.

VI

«Oh! vivons! disent-ils dans leur enivrement”

Oh! vivons! disent-ils dans leur enivrement.
Voyez la longue table et le festin charmant
Qui rayonne dans nos demeures!
Nous semons tous nos biens n’importe en quels sillons.
Riches, nous dépensons, nous perdons, nous pillons
Nos onces d’or; jeunes, nos heures

Jette ta vielle Bible, ô jeune homme pieux!
Quitte église et collège, et viens chez nous! - Joyeux,
Entourés de cent domestiques,
Buvant, chantant, riant, nous n’insultons pas Dieu,
Et nous lui permettons de montrer son ciel bleu
Par le cintre de nos portiques!

De quoi te servira ton labeur ennuyeux?
Sais-tu ce que diront les belles aux doux yeux
Dont le sourire vaut un trône?
— O jeune homme inutile! - Et puis elles riront.
— Oh! que de peine il prend pour donner à son front
La couleur de son livre jaune!

Nous, éblouis de feux, de concerts, de seins nus,
Nous vivons! - Nous avons des bonheurs inconnus
A la foule avare et grossière,
Quand dans l’orchestre, où rien ne grandit qu’en tremblant,
La fanfare, tantôt montant, tantôt croulant,
S’enfle en onde ou vole en poussière!

L’homme à tout ce qu’il fait dans tous les temps mêla
La musique et les chants. - Amis c’est pour cela
Que la Guerre qui nous enivre,
Noble déesse à qui tout enfants nous songions,
Fait chanter en avant des sombres légions

Les clairons aux bouches de cuivre!

O rois, pour vous la guerre et pour nous le plaisir!
Vous vivez par l’orgueil et nous par le désir.
Nous avons tous notre part d’âmes.
Nous avons, les uns craints et les autres aimés,
Vous les empires, nous les boudoirs parfumés,
Vous les homme, et nous les femmes.

Prêtres, mages, docteurs, savants, nous font pitié!
Pauvres songeurs qui vont expliquant à moitié
L’ombre dont l’Eternel se voile,
Tantôt lisant un livre et hués des valets,
Tantôt assis la nuit sur le toit des palais,
Epelant d’étoile en étoile!

Fous qui cherchent un centre au globe obscur du ciel!
Nous, rions! - Il n’est rien ici-bas de réel
Que ce que tient la main e l’homme.
Donnons leur saint bonheur pour les plaisirs maudits,
Pour une Eve au front pur leur vague paradis,
Et leur sphère pour une pomme!

Qu’est-ce que la science à côté de l’amour?
L’hiver donne la neige et le soleil le jour.
Aimons! chantons! trêve aux paroles!
Préférons, puisque enfin, nos coeurs flambent encor,
Aux discours larmoyants le choc des coupes d’or,
Aux vieux sages les belles folles!

Nature, nous buvons aux flots que tu répands!
Toujours nous nos hâtons de jouir aux dépens
Du penseur prudent qui diffère.
Nous ne songeons, prenant les biens sans les choisir,
Qu’à dissoudre ici-bas toute chose en plaisir.
Quant à Dieu, nous le laissons faire!”

Le sage cependant, qui songe à leur destin,
Ramasse tristement les miettes du festin,
Tandis que l’un l’autre ils s’enchantent;
Puis il donne ce pain aux pauvres oubliés,
Aux mendiants rêveurs, en leur disant: - Priez,
Priez pour ces hommes qui chantent!

4 mars 1837

VII

A Virgile

O Virgile! ô poète! ô mon maître divin!
Viens, quittons cette ville au cri sinistre et vain,
Qui, géante, et jamais ne fermant la paupière,
Presse un flot écumant entre ses flancs de pierre,
Lutèce, si petite au temps de tes Césars,
Et qui jette aujourd'hui, cité pleine de chars,
Sous le nom éclatant dont le monde la nomme,
Plus de clarté qu'Athène et plus de bruit que Rome.

Pour toi qui dans les bois fais, comme l'eau des cieux,
Tomber de feuille en feuille un vers mystérieux,
Pour toi dont la pensée emplit ma rêverie,
J'ai trouvé dans une ombre où rit l'herbe fleurie,
Entre Buc et Meudon, dans un profond oubli,
— Et quand je dis Meudon, suppose Tivoli! -
J'ai trouvé, mon poète, une chaste vallée
A des coteaux charmants nonchalamment mêlée,
Retraite favorable à des amants cachés,
Faite de flots dormants et de rameaux penchés,
Où midi baigne en vain de ses rayons sans nombre
La grotte et la forêt, frais asiles de l'ombre!

Pour toi je l'ai cherchée, un matin, fier, joyeux,
Avec l'amour au coeur et l'aube dans les yeux;
Pour toi je l'ai cherchée, accompagné de celle
Qui sait tous les secrets que mon âme recèle,
Et qui, seule avec moi sous les bois chevelus,
Serait ma Lycoris si j'étais ton Gallus.

Car elle a dans le coeur cette fleur large et pure,
L'amour mystérieux de l'antique nature!
Elle aime comme nous, maître, ces douces voix,

Ce bruit de nids joyeux qui sort des sombres bois,
Et, le soir, tout au fond de la vallée étroite,
Les coteaux renversés dans le lac qui miroite,
Et, quand le couchant morne a perdu sa rougeur,
Les marais irrités des pas du voyageur,
Et l'humble chaume, et l'antre obstrué d'herbe verte,
Et qui semble une bouche avec terreur ouverte,
Les eaux, les prés, les monts, les refuges charmants,
Et les grands horizons pleins de rayonnements!

Maître! puisque voici la saison des pervenches,
Si tu veux, chaque nuit, en écartant les branches,
Sans éveiller d'échos à nos pas hasardeux,
Nous irons tous les trois, c'est-à-dire tous deux,
Dans ce vallon sauvage, et de la solitude,
Rêveurs, nous surprendrons la secrète attitude.
Dans la brune clairière où l'arbre au tronc noueux
Prend le soir un profil humain et monstrueux,
Nous laisserons fumer, à côté d'un cytise,
Quelque feu qui s'éteint sans pâtre qui l'attise,
Et, l'oreille tendue à leurs vagues chansons,
Dans l'ombre, au clair de lune, à travers les buissons,
Avides, nous pourrons voir à la dérobée
Les satyres dansants qu'imite Alphésibée.

23 mars 18...

VIII

Venez que je vous parle, ô jeune enchanteresse!

Venez que je vous parle, ô jeune enchanteresse!
Dante vous eût faite ange et Virgile déesse.
Vous avez le front haut, le pied vif et charmant,
Une bouche qu’entrouvre un bel air d’enjouement,
Et vous pourriez porter, fière entre les plus fières,
La cuirasse d’azur des antiques guerrières.

Tout essaim de beautés, gynécée ou sérail,
Madame, admirerait vos lèvres de corail.
Cellini sourirait à votre grâce pure,
Et, dans un vase grec sculptant votre figure,
Il vous ferait sortir d’un beau calice d’or,
D’un lys qui devient femme en restant lys encor,
Ou d’un de ces lotus qui lui doivent la vie,
Etranges fleurs de l’art que la nature envie!

Venez que je vous parle, ô belle aux yeux divins,
Pour la première fois quand près de vous je vins,
Ce fut un jour doré. Ce souvenir, madame,
A-t-il comme en mon coeur son rayon dans votre âme?
Vous souriez. Mettez votre main dans ma main,
Venez. Le printemps rit, l’ombre est sur le chemin,
L’air est tiède, et là-bas, dans les forêts prochaines,
La mousse épaisse et verte abonde au pied des chênes.

21 avril 1837

IX

Pendant que la fenêtre était ouverte

Poète, ta fenêtre était ouverte au vent,
Quand celle à qui tout bas ton coeur parle souvent
Sur ton fauteuil posait sa tête:
— “Oh! disait-elle, ami, ne vous y fiez pas!
Parce que maintenant, attachée à vos pas,
Ma vie à votre ombre s’arrête;

Parce que mon regard est fixé sur vos yeux;
Parce que je n’ai plus de sourire joyeux
Que pour votre grave sourire;
Parce que, de l’amour me faisant un linceul,
Je vous offre mon coeur comme un livre où vous seul
Avez encor le droit d’écrire;

Il n’est pas dit qu’enfin je n’aurai pas un jour
La curiosité de troubler votre amour
Et d’alarmer votre oeil sévère,
Et l’inquiet caprice et le désir moqueur
De renverser soudain la paix de votre coeur
Comme un enfant renverse un verre!

Hommes, vous voulez tous qu’une femme ait longtemps
Des fiertés, des hauteurs, puis vous êtes contents,
Dans votre orgueil que rien ne brise,
Quand, aux feux de l’amour qui rayonne sur nous,
Pareille à ces fruits verts que le soleil fait doux,
La hautaine devient soumise!

Aimez-moi d’être ainsi! - Ces hommes, ô mon roi,
Que vous voyez passer si froids autour de moi,
Empressés près des autres femmes,
Je n’y veux pas songer, car le repos vous plaît;

Mais mon oeil endormi ferait, s’il le voulait,
De tous ces fronts jaillir des flammes!”

Elle parlait, charmante et fière et tendre encor,
Laissant sur le dossier de velours à clous d’or
Déborder sa manche traînante;
Et toi tu croyais voir à ce beau front si doux
Sourire ton vieux livre ouvert sur tes genoux,
Ton Iliade rayonnante!

Beau livre que souvent vous lisez tous les deux!
Elle aime comme toi ces combats hasardeux
Où la guerre agite ses ailes.
Femme, elle ne hait pas, en t’y voyant rêver,
Le poète qui chante Hélène, et fait lever
Les plus vieux devant les plus belles.

Elle vient là, du haut de ses jeunes amours,
Regarder quelquefois dans le flot des vieux jours
Quelle ombre y fait cette chimère;
Car, ainsi que d’un mont tombe de vivent eaux,
Le passé murmurant sort et coule à ruisseaux
De ton flanc, ô géant Homère!

26 février 1837

X

A Albert Dürer

Dans les vieilles forêts où la sève à grands flots
Court du fût noir de l’aulne au tronc blanc des bouleaux,
Bien des fois, n’est ce pas? à travers la clairière,
Pâle, effaré, n’osant regarder en arrière,
Tu t’es hâté, tremblant et d’un pas convulsif,
O mon maître Albert Dure, ô vieux peintre pensif!

On devine, devant tes tableaux qu’on vénère,
que dans les noirs taillis ton oeil visionnaire
Voyait distinctement, par l’ombre recouverts,
Le faune aux doigts palmés, le sylvain aux yeux verts,
Pan, qui revêt de fleurs l’antre où tu te recueilles,
Et l’antique dryade aux mains pleines de feuilles.

Une forêt pour toi, c’est un monde hideux.
Le songe et le réel s’y mêlent tous les deux.
Là se penchent rêveurs les vieux pins, les grands ormes
Dont les rameaux tordus font cent coudes difformes,
Et dans ce groupe sombre agité par le vent
Rien n’est tout à fait mort ni tout à fait vivant.
Le cresson boit; l’eau court; les frênes sur les pentes,
Sous la broussaille horrible et les ronces grimpantes,
Contractent lentement leurs pieds noueux et noirs;
Les fleurs au cou de cygne ont les lacs pour miroirs:
Et, sur vous qui passez et l’avez réveillée,
Mainte chimère étrange à la gorge écaillée,
D’un arbre entre ses doigts serrant les larges noeuds,
Du fond d’un antre obscur fixe un oeil lumineux.
O végétation! esprit! matière! force!
Couverte de peau rude ou de vivante écorce!

Aux bois, ainsi que toi, je n’ai jamais erré,

Maître, sans qu’en mon coeur l’horreur ait pénétré,
Sans voir tressaillir l’herbe, et, par le vent bercées,
Pendre à tous les rameaux de confuses pensées.
Dieu seul, ce grand témoin des faits mystérieux,
Dieu seul le sait, souvent, en de sauvages lieux,
J’ai senti, moi qu’échauffe une secrète flamme,
Comme moi palpiter et vivre avec une âme,
Et rire, et se parler dans l’ombre à demi-voix,
Les chênes monstrueux qui remplissent les bois.

20 avril 1837

XI

Puisqu’ici-bas toute âme

Puisqu’ici-bas toute âme
Donne à quelqu’un
Sa musique, sa flamme,
Ou son parfum;

Puisqu’ici toute chose
Donne toujours
Son épine ou sa rose
A ses amours;

Puisqu’avril donne aux chênes
Un bruit charmant;
Que la nuit donne aux peines
L’oubli dormant;

Puisque l’air à la branche
Donne l’oiseau;
Que l’aube à la pervenche
Donne un peu d’eau;

Puisque, lorsqu’elle arrive
S’y reposer,
L’onde amère à la rive
Donne un baiser;

Je te donne à cette heure,
Penché sur toi,
La chose la meilleure
Que j’ai en moi!

Reçois donc ma pensée,
Triste d’ailleurs,

Qui, comme une rosée,
T’arrive en pleurs!
Reçois mes voeux sans nombre,
O mes amours!
Reçois la flamme ou l’ombre
De tout mes jours!

Mes transports pleins d’ivresses,
Pur de soupçons,
Et toutes les caresses
De mes chansons!

Mon esprit qui sans voile
Vogue au hasard,
Et qui n’a pour étoile
Que ton regard!

Ma muse, que les heures
Bercent rêvant,
Qui, pleurant quand tu pleures,
Pleure souvent!

Reçois, mon bien céleste,
O ma beauté,
Mon coeur, dont rien ne reste,
L’amour ôté!

19 mai 1837

XII

A Ol.

O poète! je vais dans ton âme blessée
Remuer jusqu’au fond ta profonde pensée.

Tu ne l’avais pas vue encore, ce fut un soir,
A l’heure ou dans le ciel les astres se font voir,
Qu’elle apparut soudain à tes yeux, fraîche et belle,
Dans un lieu radieux qui rayonnait moins qu’elle.
Ses cheveux pétillaient de mille diamants;
Un orchestre tremblait à tous ses mouvements
Tandis qu’elle enivrait la foule haletante,
Blanche avec des yeux noirs, jeune, grande, éclatante.
Tout en elle était feu qui brille, ardeur qui rit.
La parole parfois tombait de son esprit
Comme un épi doré du sac de la glaneuse,
Où sortait de sa bouche en vapeur lumineuse.
Chacun se récriait, admirant tour à tour
Son front plein de pensées éclose avant l’amour,
Son sourire entrouvert comme une vive aurore,
Et son ardente épaule, et, plus ardente encore,
Comme les soupiraux d’un centre étincelant,
Ses yeux ou l’on voyait luire son coeur brûlant.
Elle allait et passait comme un oiseau de flamme,
Mettant sans le savoir le feu dans plus d’une âme,
Et dans les yeux fixés sur tous ses pas charmants
Jetant de toute part des éblouissements!

Toi, tu la contemplais n’osant approcher d’elle,
Car le baril de poudre a peur de l’étincelle.

26 mai 1837

XIII

Jeune homme, ce méchant fait une lâche guerre.

Jeune homme, ce méchant fait une lâche guerre.
Ton indignation ne l’épouvante guère.
Crois-moi donc, laisse en paix, jeune homme au noble
Ce Zoïle à l’oeil faux, ce malheureux moqueur. Coeur,
Ton mépris? mais c’est l’air qui respire. Ta haine?
La haine est son odeur, sa sueur, son haleine:
Il sait qu’il peut souiller sans peur les noms fameux,
Et que pour qu’on le touche il est trop venimeux.
Il ne craint rien; pareil au champignon difforme
Poussé dans une nuit au pied d’un chêne énorme,
Qui laisse les chevreaux autour de lui paissant
Essayer leur dent folle à l’arbuste innocent;
Sachant qu’il porte en lui des vengeances trop sûres,
Tout gonflé de poison il attend les morsures.

18 mai 1837

XIV

Avril - A Louis B.

Louis, voici le temps de respirer les roses,
Et d’ouvrir bruyamment les vitres longtemps closes;
Le temps d’admirer en rêvant
Tout ce que la nature a de beautés divines
Qui flottent sur les monts, les bois et les ravines,
Avec l’onde, l’ombre et le vent.

Louis voici le temps de reposer son âme
Dans ce calme sourire empreint de vague flamme
Qui rayonne au front du ciel pur;
De dilater son coeur ainsi qu’une eau qui fume,
Et d’en faire envoler la nuée et la brume
A travers le limpide azur!

O Dieu! que les amants sous les vertes feuillées
S’en aillent, par l’hiver pauvres ailes mouillées!
Qu’ils errent joyeux et vainqueurs!
Que le rossignol chante, oiseau dont la voix tendre
Contient de l’harmonie assez pour en répandre
Sur tout l’amour qui sort des coeurs!

Que, blé qui monte, enfant qui joue, eau qui murmure,
Fleur rose où le semeur rêve une pêche mûre,
Que tout semble rire ou prier!
Que le chevreau gourmand, furtif et plein de grâces,
De quelques arbre incliné mordant les feuilles basses,
Fasse accourir le chevrier!

Qu’on songe aux deuils passés en se disant: qu’était-ce?
Que rien sous le soleil ne garde de tristesse!
Qu’un nid chante sur les vieux troncs!
Nous, tandis que de joie au loin tout vibre et tremble,

Allons dans la forêt, et là, marchant ensemble,
Si vous voulez, nous songerons,
Nous songerons tous deux à cette belle fille
Qui dort là bas sous l’herbe où le bouton d’or brille,
Où l’oiseau cherche un grain de mil,
Et qui voulait avoir, et qui, triste chimère,
S’était fait cet hiver promettre par sa mère,
Une robe verte en avril.

Avril 1837

XV

La Vache

Devant la blanche ferme où parfois vers midi
Un vieillard vient s’asseoir sur le seuil attiédi,
Où cent poules gaîment mêlent leurs crêtes rouge,
Où, gardiens du sommeil, les dogues dans leurs bouges

Ecoutant les chansons du gardien du réveil,
Du beau coq vernissé qui reluit au soleil,
Une vache était là tout à l’heure arrêtée.
Superbe, énorme, rousse et de blanc tachetée,
Douce comme une biche avec ses jeunes faons,
Elle avait sous le ventre un beau groupe d’enfants,
D’enfants aux dents de marbre, aux cheveux en broussailles
Frais, et plus charbonnés que de vieilles murailles,
Qui, bruyants, tous ensemble, à grands cris appelant
D’autres qui, tout petits, se hâtaient en tremblant,
Dérobant sans pitié quelque laitière absente,
Sous leur bouche joyeuse et peut-être blessante
Et sous leurs doigts pressant le lait par mille trous,
Tiraient le pis fécond de la mère au poil roux.
Elle, bonne et puissante et de son trésor pleine,
Sous leurs mains par moments faisant frémir à peine
Son beau flanc plus ombré qu’un flanc de léopard,
Distraite, regardait vaguement quelque part.

Ainsi, Nature! abri de toute créature!
O mère universelle! indulgente Nature!
Ainsi, tous à la fois, mystiques et charnels,
Cherchant l’ombre et le lait sous tes flancs éternels,
Nous sommes là, savants, poètes, pêle-mêle,
Pendus de toutes parts à ta forte mamelle!
Et tandis qu’affamés, avec des cris vainqueurs,
A tes sources sans fin désaltérant nos coeurs,

Pour en faire plus tard notre sang et notre âme,
Nous aspirons à flots ta lumière et ta flamme,
Les feuillages, le sommets, les prés verts, le ciel bleu,
Toi, sans te déranger, tu rêves à ton Dieu!

XVI

Passé

C’était un grand château du temps de Louis treize.
Le couchant rougissait ce palais oublié.
Chaque fenêtre au loin, transformée en fournaise,
Avait perdu sa forme et n’était plus que braise.
Le toit disparaissait dans les rayons noyé.

Sous nos yeux s’étendait, gloire antique abattue,
Un de ces parcs dont l’herbe inonde le chemin,
Où dans un coin, de lierre à demi revêtue,
Sur un piédestal gris, l’hiver, morne statue,
Se chauffe avec un feu de marbre sous sa main.

O deuil! Le grand bassin, lac solitaire.
Un Neptune verdâtre y moisissait dans l’eau.
Les roseaux cachaient l’onde et l’eau rongeait la terre.
Et les arbres mêlaient leur vieux branchage austère,
D’où tombaient autrefois des rimes pour Boileau.

On voyait par moments errer dans la futaie
De beaux cerfs qui semblaient regretter les chasseur;
Et, pauvres marbres blancs qu’un vieux tronc d’arbre étaie
Seules, sous la charmille, hélas! changé en haie,
Soupirer Gabrielle et Vénus, ces deux soeurs!

Les manteaux relevés par la longue rapière,
Hélas! ne passaient plus dans ce jardin sans voix;
Les tritons avaient l’air de fermer la paupière.
Et, dans l’ombre, entr’ouvrant ses mâchoires de pierre,
Un vieux antre ennuyé bâillait au fond du bois.

Et je vous dis alors:- Ce château dans son ombre

A contenu l'amour, frais comme en votre coeur,
Et la gloire, et le rire, et les fêtes sans nombre,
Et toute cette joie aujourd'hui le rend sombre,
Comme un vaste noircit rouillé par sa liqueur.

Dans cet antre, où la mousse a recouvert la dalle,
Venait, les yeux baissés et le sein palpitant,
Ou la belle Caussade ou la jeune Candale,
Qui, d'un royal amant conquête féodale,
En entrant disait Sire, et Louis en sortant.

Alors comme aujourd'hui, pour Candale ou Caussade,
La nuée au ciel bleu mêlait son blond duvet,
Un doux rayon dorait le toit grave et maussade,
Les vitres flamboyaient sur toute la façade,
Le soleil souriait, la nature rêvait!

Alors comme aujourd'hui, deux coeurs unis, deux âmes,
Erraient sous ce feuillage où tant d'amour a lui;
Il nommait sa duchesse un ange entre les femmes,
Et l'oeil plein de rayons et l'oeil rempli de flammes
S'éblouissaient l'un l'autre, alors comme aujourd'hui!

Au loin dans le bois vague on entendait des rires.
C'étaient d'autres amants, dans leur bonheur plongés.
Par moments un silence arrêtait leurs délires.
Tendre il lui demandait: D'où vient que tu soupires?
Douce, elle répondait: D'où vient que vous songez?

Tous deux, l'ange et le roi, les mains entrelacées,
Ils marchaient, fiers, joyeux, foulant le vert gazon,
Ils mêlaient leurs regards, leur souffle, leurs pensées..-
O temps évanouis! ô splendeurs éclipsées!
O soleils descendus derrière l'horizon!

1 er avril 1835

XVII

Soirée en mer

Près du pêcheur qui ruisselle,
Quand tous deux, au jour baissant,
Nous errons dans la nacelle,
Laissant chanter l’homme frêle
Et gémir le flot puissant;

Sous l’abri que font les voiles
Lorsque nous nous asseyons,
Dans cette ombre où tu te voiles
Quand ton regard aux étoiles
Semble cueillir des rayons;

Quand tous deux nous croyons lire
Ce que la nature écrit,
Réponds, ô toi que j’admire,
D’où vient que mon coeur soupire?
D’où vient que ton front sourit?

Dis, d’où vient qu’à chaque lame
Comme une coupe de fiel,
La pensée emplit mon âme?
C’est que moi je vois la rame
Tandis que tu vois le ciel!

C’est que je vois les flots sombres,
Toi, les astres enchantés!
C’est que, perdu dans leurs nombres,
Hélas! je compte les ombres
Quand tu comptes les clartés!

Chacun, c’est la loi suprême,
Rame, hélas! jusqu’à la fin.

Pas d’homme, ô fatal problème!
Qui ne laboure ou ne sème
Sur quelque chose de vain!

L’homme est sur un flot qui gronde.
L’ouragan tord son manteau.
Il rame en la nuit profonde,
Et l’espoir s’en va dans l’onde
Par les fentes du bateau.

Sa voile que le vent troue
Se déchire à tout moment,
De sa route l’eau se joue,
Les obstacles sur sa proue
Ecument incessamment!

Hélas! hélas! tout travaille
Sous tes yeux, ô Jéhova!
De quelque côté qu’on aille,
Partout un flot qui tressaille,
Partout un homme qui va!

Où vas-tu? - Vers la nuit noire.
Où vas-tu? - Vers le grand jour.
Toi!- Je cherche s’il faut croire.
Et toi?- Je vais à la gloire.
Et toi?- Je vais à l’amour.

Vous allez tous à la tombe!
Vous allez à l’inconnu!
Aigle, vautour, ou colombe,
Vous allez où tout retombe
Et d’où rien n’est revenu!

Vous allez où vont encore
Ceux qui font le plus de bruit!
Où va la fleur qu’avril dore!

Vous allez où va l’aurore!
Vous allez où va la nuit!

A quoi bon toutes ces peines?
Pourquoi tant de soins jaloux?
Buvez l’onde des fontaines,
Secouez le gland des chênes,
Aimez, et rendormez- vous!

Lorsque ainsi que des abeilles
On a travaillé toujours;
Qu’on a rêvé des merveilles;
Lorsqu’on a sur bien des veilles
Amoncelé bien des jours;

Sur votre plus belle rose,
Sur votre lys le plus beau,
Savez-vous ce qui se pose?
C’est l’oubli pour toute chose,
Pour tout homme le tombeau!

Car le Seigneur nous retire
Les fruits à peine cueillis.
Il dit: Echoue! au navire.
Il dit à la flamme: Expire!
Il dit à la fleur: Pâlis!

Il dit au guerrier qui fonde:
— Je garde le dernier mot.
Monte, monte, ô roi du monde!
La chute la plus profonde
Pend au sommet le plus haut. -

Il a dit à la mortelle:
— Vite! éblouis ton amant.
Avant de mourir sois belle.
Sois un instant étincelle,

Puis cendre éternellement! -

Cet ordre auquel tu t’opposes
T’enveloppe et l’engloutit.
Mortel, plains-toi, si tu l’oses,
Au Dieu qui fit ces deux choses,
Le ciel grand, l’homme petit!

Chacun, qu’il doute ou qu’il nie,
Lutte en frayant son chemin;
Et l’éternelle harmonie
Pèse comme une ironie
Sur tout ce tumulte humain!

Tous ces faux biens qu’on envie
Passent comme un soir de mai.
Vers l’ombre, hélas! tout dévie.
Que reste-t-il de la vie,
Excepté d’avoir aimé!

Ainsi je courbe ma tête
Quand tu redresses ton front.
Ainsi, sur l’onde inquiète,
J’écoute, sombre poète,
Ce que les flots me diront.

Ainsi, pour qu’on me réponde,
J’interroge avec effroi;
Et dans ce gouffre où je sonde
La fange se mêle à l’onde...
Oh! ne fais pas comme moi!

Que sur la vague troublée
J’abaisse un sourcil hagard;
Mais toi, belle âme voilée,
Vers l’espérance étoilée
Lève un tranquille regard!

Tu fais bien. Vois les cieux luire.
Vois les astres s’y mirer.
Un instinct là-haut t’attire.
Tu regardes Dieu sourire;
Moi, je vois l’homme pleurer!

9 novembre 1836. Minuit et demi

XVIII

Dans Virgile parfois

Dans Virgile parfois, dieu tout près d'être un ange,
Le vers porte à sa cime une lueur étrange.
C'est que, rêvant déjà ce qu'à présent on sait,
Il chantait presque à l'heure où jésus vagissait.
C'est qu'à son issu même il est une des âmes
Que l'orient lointain teignait de vagues flammes.
C'est qu'il est un des coeur que, déjà sous les cieux,
Dorait le jour naissant du Christ Mystérieux!

Dieu voulait qu'avant tout, rayon du fils de l'homme,
L'aube de Bethléem blanchit le front de Rome.

Nuit du 21 au 22 mars 1837

XIX

A un riche

Jeune homme! je te plains; et cependant j'admire
Ton grand parc enchanté qui semble nous sourire,
Qui fait, vu de ton seuil, le tour de l'horizon,
Grave ou joyeux suivant le jour et la saison,
Coupé d'herbe et d'eau vive, et remplissant huit lieues
De ses vagues massifs et de ses ombres bleues.
J'admire ton domaine, et pourtant je te plains!
Car dans ces bois touffus de tant de grandeur pleins,
Où le printemps épanche un faste sans mesure,
Quelle plus misérable et plus pauvre masure
Qu'un homme usé, flétri, mort pour l'illusion,
Riche et sans volupté, jeune et sans passion,
Dont le coeur délabré, dans ses recoins livides,
N'a plus qu'un triste amas d'anciennes coupes vides,
Vases brisés qui n'ont rien gardé que l'ennui,
Et d'où l'amour, la joie et la candeur ont fui!

Oui, tu me fais pitié, toi qui crois faire envie!
Ce splendide séjour sur ton coeur, sur ta vie,
Jette une ombre ironique, et rit en écrasant
Ton front terne et chétif d'un cadre éblouissant.

Dis-moi, crois-tu, vraiment posséder ce royaume
D'ombre et de fleurs, où l'arbre arrondi comme un dôme,
L'étang, lame d'argent que le couchant fait d'or,
L'allée entrant au bois comme un noir corridor,
Et là, sur la forêt, ce mont qu'une tour garde,
Font un groupe si beau pour l'âme qui regarde!
Lieu sacré pour qui sait dans l'immense univers,
Dans les prés, dans les eaux et dans les vallons verts,
Retrouver les profils de la face éternelle
Dont le visage humain n'est qu'une ombre charnelle!

Que fais-tu donc ici? Jamais on ne te voit,
Quand le matin blanchit l’angle ardoisé du toit,
sortir, songer, cueillir la fleur, coupe irisée
Que la plante à l’oiseau tend pleine de rosée,
Et parfois t’arrêter, laissant pendre à ta main
Un livre interrompu, debout sur le chemin,
Quand le bruit du vent coupe en strophes incertaines
Cette longue chanson qui coule des fontaines.

Jamais tu n’as suivi de sommets en sommets
La ligne des coteaux qui fait rêve; jamais
Tu n’as joui de voir, sur l’eau qui reflète,
Quelque saule noueux tordu comme un athlète.
Jamais, sévère esprit au mystère attaché,
Tu n’as questionné le vieux orme penché
Qui regarde à ses pieds toute la pleine vivre
Comme un sage qui rêve attentif à son livre.

L’été, lorsque le jour est par midi frappé,
Lorsque la lassitude a tout enveloppé,
A l’heure où l’andalouse et l’oiseau font la sieste,
Jamais le faon peureux, tapi dans l’antre agreste,
Ne te vois, à pas lents, loin de l’homme importun,
Grave, et comme ayant peur de réveiller quelqu’un,
Errer dans les forêts ténébreuses et douces
Où le silence dort sur le velours des mousses.

Que te fais tout cela? Les nuages des cieux,
La verdure et l’azur sont l’ennui de tes yeux.
Tu n’est pas de ces fous qui vont, et qui s’en vantent,
Tendant partout l’oreille aux voix qui partout chantent,
Rendant au Seigneur d’avoir fait le printemps,
Qui ramasse un nid, ou contemple longtemps
Quelque noir champignon, monstre étrange de l’herbe.
Toi, comme un sac d’argent, tu vois passer la gerbe.
Ta futaie, en avril, sous ses bras plus nombreux

A l’air de réclamer bien des pas amoureux,
Bien des coeurs soupirants, bien des têtes pensives;

Toi qui jouis aussi sous ses branches massives,
Tu songes, calculant le taillis qui s’accroît,
Que Paris, ce vieillard qui, l’hiver, a si froid,
Attend, sous ses vieux quais percés de rampes neuves,
Ces longs serpents de bois qui descendent les fleuves!
Ton regard voit, tandis que ton oeil flotte au loin,
Les blés d’or en farine et la prairie en foin;
Pour toi le laboureur est un rustre qu’on paie;
Pour toi toute fumée ondulant, noire ou gaie,
Sur le clair paysage, est un foyer impur
Où l’on cuit quelque viande à l’angle d’un vieux mur.
Quand le soir tend le ciel de ses moires ardentes
Au dos d’un fort cheval assis, jambes pendantes,
Quand les bouviers hâlés, de leur bras vigoureux
Pique tes boeufs géants qui par le chemin creux
Se hâtent pêle-mêle et s’en vont à la crèche,
Toi, devant ce tableau tu rêves à la brèche
Qu’il faudra réparer, en vendant tes silos,
Dans ta rente qui tremble aux pas de don Carlos!

Au crépuscule, après un long jour monotone,
Tu t’enferme chez toi. Les tièdes nuits d’automne
Versent leur chaste haleine aux coteaux veloutés.
Tu n’en sais rien. D’ailleurs, qu’importe! A tes côtés,
Belles, leur bruns cheveux appliqués sur les tempes,
Fronts roses empourprés par le reflet des lampes,
Des femmes aux yeux purs sont assises, formant
Un cercle frais qui borde et cause doucement;
Toutes, dans leurs discours où rien n’ose apparaître,
Cachant leurs voeux, leur âmes et leur coeur que peut-être
Embaume un vague amour, fleur qu’on ne cueille pas,
Parfum qu’on sentirait en se baissant tout bas.
Tu n’en sais rien. Tu fais, parmi ces élégies,
Tomber ton froid sourire, où, sous quatre bougies,

D’autres hommes et toi, dans un coin attablés
Autour d’un tapis vert, bruyants, vous querellez
Les caprices du whist, du brelan ou de l’hombre.
La fenêtre est pourtant pleine de lune et d’ombre!

O risible insensé! vraiment, je te le dis,
Cette terre, ces prés, ces vallons arrondis,
Nids de feuilles et d’herbe où jasent les villages,
Ces blés où les moineaux ont leurs joyeux pillages,
Ces champs qui, l’hiver même, ont d’austères appas,
Ne t’appartiennent point: tu ne les comprends pas.

Vois-tu, tous les passants, les enfants, les poètes,
Sur qui ton bois répand ses ombres inquiètes,
Le pauvre jeune peintre épris de ciel et d’air,
L’amant plein d’un seul nom, le sage au coeur amer,
Qui viennent rafraîchir dans cette solitude,
Hélas! l’un son amour et l’autre son étude,
Tous ceux qui, savourant la beauté de ce lieu,
Aiment, en quittant l’homme, à s’approcher de Dieu,
Et qui, laissant ici le bruit vague et morose
Des troubles de leur âme, y prennent quelque chose
De l’immense repos de la création,
Tous ces hommes, sans or et sans ambition,
Et dont le pied poudreux ou tout mouillé par l’herbe
Te fait rire emporté par ton landau superbe,
Sont dans ce parc touffu, que tu crois sous ta loi,
Plus riches, plus chez eux, plus les maîtres que toi,
Quoique de leur forêt que ta main grille et mure
Tu puisses couper l’ombre et vendre le murmure!

Pour eux rien n’est stérile en ces asiles frais.
Pour qui les sait cueillir tout a des dons secrets.
De partout sort un flot de sagesse abondante.
L’esprit qu’a déserté la passion grondante,
Médite à l’arbre mort, aux débris du vieux pont.
Tout objet dont le bois se compose répond

A quelque objet pareil dans la forêt de l’âme.
Un feu de pâtre éteint parle à l’amour en flamme.
Tout donne des conseils au penseur, jeune ou vieux.
On se pique aux chardons ainsi qu’aux envieux;
La feuille invite à croître; et l’onde, en coulant vite,
Avertit qu’on se hâte et que l’heure nous quitte.
Pour eux rien n’est muet, rien n’est froid, rien n’est mort.
Un peu de plume en sang leur éveille un remord;
Les sources sont des pleurs; la fleur qui boit aux fleuves,
Leur dit: Souvenez-vous, ô pauvres âmes veuves!

Pour eux l’antre profond cache un songe étoilé;
Et la nuit, sous l’azur d’un beau ciel constellé,
L’arbre sur ses rameaux, comme à travers ses branches,
Leur montre l’astre d’or et les colombes blanches,
Choses douces aux coeurs par le malheur ployés,
Car l’oiseau dit: Aimez! et l’étoile: Croyez!

Voilà ce que chez toi verse aux âmes souffrantes
La chaste obscurité des branches murmurantes!
Mais toi, qu’en fais tu? dis. - Tous les ans, en flots d’or,
Ce murmure, cette ombre, ineffable trésor,
Ces bruits de vent qui joue et d’arbre qui tressaille,
Vont s’enfouir au fond de ton coffre qui bâille;
Et tu changes ces bois où l’amour s’enivra,
Toute cette nature, en loge à l’opéra!

Encor si la musique arrivait à ton âme!
Mais entre l’art et toi l’or met son mur infâme.
L’esprit qui comprend l’art comprend le reste aussi.
Tu vas donc dormir là! sans te douter qu’ainsi
Que tous ces verts trésors que dévore ta bourse,
Gluck est une forêt et Mozart une source.

Tu dors; et quand parfois la mode, en souriant,
Te dit: Admire, riche! alors, joyeux, criant,
Tu surgis, demandant comment l’auteur se nomme,

Pourvu que toutefois la muse soit un homme!
Car tu te roidiras dans ton étrange orgueil
Si l'on t'apporte, un soir, quelque musique en deuil,
Urne que la pensée a chauffée à sa flamme,
Beau vase où s'est versé tout le coeur d'une femme.

O seigneur malvenu de ce superbe lieu!
Caillou vil incrusté dans ces rubis en feu!
Maître pour qui ces champs sont pleins de sourdes haines!
Gui parasite enflé de la sève des chênes!
Pauvre riche! - Vis donc, puisque cela pour toi
C'est vivre. Vis sans coeur, sans pensée et sans foi.
Vis pour l'or, chose vile, et l'orgueil, chose vaine.
Végète, toi qui n'as que du sang dans la veine,

Toi qui ne sens pas Dieu frémir dans le roseau,
Regarder dans l'aurore et chanter dans l'oiseau!

Car, - et bien que tu sois celui qui rit aux belles
Et, le soir, se récrie aux romances nouvelles, -
Dans les coteaux penchants où fument les hameaux,
Près des lacs, près des fleurs, sous les larges rameaux,
Dans tes propres jardins, tu vas aussi stupide,
Aussi peu clairvoyant dans ton instinct cupide,
Aussi sourd à la vie à l'harmonie, aux voix,
Qu'un loup sauvage errant au milieu des grands bois!

22 mai 1837

XX

Regardez: les enfants se sont assis en rond.

Regardez: les enfants se sont assis en rond.
Leur mère est à coté, leur mère au jeune front
Qu’on prend pour une soeur aînée;
Inquiète, au milieu de leurs jeux ingénus,
De sentir s’agiter leurs chiffres inconnus
Dans l’urne de la destinée.

Près d’elle naît leur rire et finissent leurs pleurs,
Et son coeur est si pur et si pareil aux leurs.
Et sa lumière est si choisie,
Qu’en passant à travers les rayons de ses jours,
La vie aux mille soins, laborieux et lourds,
Se transfigure en poésie!

Toujours elle les suit, veillant et regardant,
Soit que janvier rassemble au coin de l’âtre ardent
Leur joie aux plaisirs occupée;
Soit qu’un doux vent de mai, qui ride le ruisseau,
Remue au-dessus d’eux les feuilles, vert monceau
D’où tombe une ombre découpée.
Parfois, lorsque, passant près d’eux, un indigent
Contemple avec envie un beau hochet d’argent
Que sa faim dévorante admire,
La mère est là; pour faire, au nom du Dieu vivant,
Du hochet une aumône, un ange de l’enfant,
Il ne lui faut qu’un doux sourire!

Et moi qui, mère, enfants, les vois tous sous mes yeux,
Tandis qu’auprès de moi les petits sont joyeux
Comme des oiseaux sur les grèves,
Mon coeur gronde et bouillonne, et je sens lentement,
Couvercle soulevé par un flot écumant,

S’entr’ouvrir mon front plein de rêves.

12 juin 1837

XXI

Dans ce jardin antique où les grandes allées

Dans ce jardin antique où les grandes allées
Passent sous les tilleuls si chastes, si voilées
Que toute fleur qui s'ouvre y semble un encensoir,
Où, marquant tous ses pas de l'aube jusqu'au soir,
L'heure met tour à tour dans les vases de marbre
Les rayons du soleil et les ombres de l'arbre,
Anges, vous le savez, oh! comme avec amour,
Rêveur, je regardais dans la clarté du jour
Jouer l'oiseau qui vole et la branche qui plie,
Et de quels doux pensers mon âme était remplie,
Tandis que l'humble enfant dont je baise le front,
Avec son pas joyeux pressant mon pas moins prompt,
Marchait en m'entraînant vers la grotte où le lierre
Met une barbe verte au vieux fleuve de pierre!

20 février 1837

XXII

A des oiseaux envolés

Enfants! - Oh! revenez! tout à l’heure, imprudent,
je vous ai de ma chambre exilés en grondant,
Rauque et tout hérissé de paroles morose.
Et qu’aviez-vous donc fait, bandits aux lèvres roses?
Quel crime? Quel exploit? Quel forfait insensé?
Quel vase du japon en mille éclats brisé?
Quel vieux portrait crevé? Quel beau missel gothique
Enrichi par vos mains d’un dessin fantastique?
Non, rien de tout cela. Vous aviez seulement,
Ce matin, restés seuls dans ma chambre un moment,
Pris, parmi ces papiers que mon esprit colore,
Quelques vers, groupe informe, embryons près d’éclore,
Puis vous les aviez mis, prompts à vous accorder,
Dans le feu, pour jouer, pour voir, pour regarder
Dans une cendre noire errer de nocturnes nacelles,
Ou comme, de fenêtre en fenêtre, on peut voir
Des lumières courir dans les maisons le soir.

Voilà tout. Vous jouiez et vous croyiez bien faire.

Belle perte, en effet! beau sujet de colère!
Une strophe, mal née au doux bruit de vos jeux,
Qui remuait les mots d’un vol trop orageux!
Une ode qui chargeait d’une rime gonflée
Sa stance paresseuse en marchant essoufflée!
De lourds alexandrins l’un sur l’autre enjambant
Comme des écoliers qui sortent de leur banc!
Un autre eût dit: - Merci! Vous ôtez une proie
Au feuilleton méchant qui bondissait de joie
Et d’avance poussait des rires infernaux
Dans l’antre qu’il se creuse au bas des grands journaux
Moi, je vous ai grondés. Tort grave et ridicule!

Nains charmants que n’eût pas voulu fâcher Hercule,
Moi, je vous ai fait peur. J’ai, rêveur triste et dur,
Reculé brusquement ma chaise jusqu’au mur,
Et, vous jetant ces noms dont l’envieux vous nomme,
J’ai dit: - Allez-vous-en! laissez-moi seul! - Pauvre homme!
Seul! le beau résultat! le beau triomphe! seul!
Comme on oublie un mort roulé dans son linceul,
Vous m’avez laissé là, l’oeil fixé sur ma porte,
Hautain, grave et puni. - Mais vous, que vous importe!
Vous avez retrouvé dehors la liberté,
Le grand air, le beau parc, le gazon souhaité,
L’eau courante où l’on jette une herbe à l’aventure,
Le ciel bleu, le printemps, la sereine nature,
Ce livre des oiseaux et des bohémiens,
Ce poème de Dieu qui vaut mieux que les miens,
Où l’enfant peut cueillir la fleur, strophe vivante,
Sans qu’une grosse voix tout à coup l’épouvante!
Moi, je suis resté seul, toute joie ayant fui,
Seul avec ce pédant qu’on appelle l’ennui.
Car, depuis le matin assis dans l’antichambre,
Ce docteur, né dans Londre, un dimanche, en décembre,
Qui ne vous aime pas, ô mes pauvres petits,
Attendait pour entrer que vous fussiez sortis.
Dans l’angle où vous jouiez il est là qui soupire,
Et je le vois bâiller, moi qui vous voyais rire!

Que faire? lire un livre? oh non! - Dicter des vers?
A quoi bon? - Emaux bleus ou blancs, céladons verts,
Sphère qui fait tourner tout le ciel sur son axe,
Les beaux insectes peints sur mes tasses de Saxe,
Tout m’ennuie, et je pense à vous. En vérité,
Vous partis, j’ai perdu le soleil, la gaîté,
Le bruit joyeux qui fait qu’on rêve, le délire
De voir le tout petit s’aider du doigt pour lire,
Les fronts pleins de candeur qui disent toujours oui,
L’éclat de rire franc, sincère, épanoui,
Qui met subitement des perles sur les lèvres,

Les beaux grands yeux naïfs admirant mon vieux Sèvres,
La curiosité qui cherche à tour savoir,
Et les coudes qu’on pousse en disant: Viens donc voir!

Oh! certes, les esprits, les sylphes et les fées
Que le vent dans ma chambre apporte par bouffées,
Les gnomes accroupis là-haut, près du plafond,
Dans les angles obscurs que mes vieux livres font,
Les lutins familiers, nains à la longue échine,
Qui parlent dans les coins à mes vases de Chine.
Tout l’invisible essaim de ces démons joyeux
A dû rire aux éclats, quand là, devant leurs yeux,
Ils vous ont vus saisir dans la boîte aux ébauches
Ces hexamètres nus, boiteux, difformes, gauches,
Les traîner au grand jour, pauvres hiboux fâchés,
Et puis, battant des mains, autour du feu penchés,
De tout ces corps hideux soudain tirant une âme,
Avec ces vers si laids faire une belle flamme!

Espiègles radieux que j’ai fait envoler,
Oh! revenez ici chanter, danser, parler,
Tantôt, groupe folâtre, ouvrir un gros volume,
Tantôt courir, pousser mon bras qui tient ma plume,
Et faire dans le vers que je viens retoucher
Saillir soudain un angle aigu comme un clocher
Qui perce tout à coup un horizon de plaines.
Mon âme se réchauffe à vos douces haleines.
Revenez près de moi, souriant de plaisir,
Bruire et gazouiller, et sans peur obscurcir
Le vieux livre où je lis de vos ombres penchées,
Folles têtes d’enfants! gaîtés effarouchées!

J’en conviens, j’avais tort, et vous aviez raison.
Mais qui n’a quelquefois grondé hors de saison?
Il faut être indulgent. Nous avons nos misères.
Les petits pour les grands ont tort d’être sévères.
Enfants! chaque matin, votre âme avec amour

S’ouvre à la joie ainsi que la fenêtre au jour.
Beau miracle, vraiment, que l’enfant, gai sans cesse,
Ayant tout le bonheur, ait toute la sagesse!
Le destin vous caresse en vos commencements.
Vous n’avez qu’à jouer et vous êtes charmants.
Mais nous, nous qui pensons, nous qui vivons, nous somme
Hargneux, tristes, mauvais, ô mes chers petits hommes!

On a ses jours d’humeur, de déraison, d’ennui.
Il pleuvait ce matin. Il fait froid aujourd’hui.
Un nuage mal fait dans le ciel tout à l’heure
A passé. Que nous veut cette cloche qui pleure?
Puis on a dans le coeur quelque remords. Voilà
Ce qui nous rend méchants. Vous saurez tout cela,
Quand l’âge à votre tour ternira vos visages,
Quand vous serez plus grands, c’est-à-dire moins sages.

J’ai donc eu tort. C’est dit. Mais c’est assez punir,
Mais il faut pardonner, mais il faut revenir.
voyons, faisons la paix, je vous prie à mains jointes.
Tenez, crayons, papiers, mon vieux compas sans pointes,
Mes laques et mes grès, qu’une vitre défend,
Tous ces hochets de l’homme enviés par l’enfant,
Mes gros chinois ventrus faits comme des concombres,
Mon vieux tableau trouvé sous d’antiques décombres,
Je vous livrerai tout, vous toucherez à tout!
Vous pourrez sur ma table être assis ou debout,
Et chanter, et traîner, sans que je me récrie,
Mon grand fauteuil de chêne et de tapisserie,
Et sur mon banc sculpté jeter tous à la fois
Vos jouets anguleux qui déchirent le bois!
Je vous laisserai même, et gaîment, et sans crainte,
O prodige! en vos mains tenir ma bible peinte,
Que vous n’avez touchée encor qu’avec terreur,
Où l’on voit Dieu le père en habit d’empereur!

Et puis, brûlez les vers dont ma table est semée,

Si vous tenez à voir ce qu’ils font de fumée!
Brûlez ou déchirez! - Je serais moins clément
Si c’était chez Méry, le poète charmant,
Que Marseille la grecque, heureuse et noble ville,
Blonde fille d’Homère, a fait fils de Virgile.
Je vous dirais: - “Enfants, ne touchez que des yeux
A ces vers qui demain s’envoleront aux cieux.
Ces papiers, c’est le nid, retraite caressée,
Où du poète ailé rampe encor la pensée.
Oh! n’en approchez pas! car les vers nouveau-nés,
Au manuscrit natal encore emprisonnés,
Souffrent entre vos mains innocemment cruelles.
Vous leur blessez le pied, vous leur froissez les ailes;
Et, sans vous en douter, vous leur faites ces maux
Que les petits enfants font aux petits oiseaux.” -

Mais qu’importe les miens! - Toute ma poésie,
C’est vous, et mon esprit suit votre fantaisie.
Vous êtes les reflets et les rayonnements
Dont j’éclaire mon vers si sombre par moments.
Enfants, vous dont la vie est faite d’espérance,
Enfants, vous dont la joie est faite d’ignorance,
Vous n’avez pas souffert et vous ne savez pas,
Quand la pensée en nous a marché pas à pas,
Sur le poète morne et fatigué d’écrire
Quelle douce chaleur répand votre sourire!
Combien il a besoin, quand sa tête se rompt,
De la sérénité qui luit sur votre front;
Et quel enchantement l’enivre et le fascine,
Quand le charmant hasard de quelque cour voisine,
Où vous vous ébattez sous un arbre penchant,
Mêle vos joyeux cris à son douloureux chant!

Revenez donc, hélas! revenez dans mon ombre,
Si vous ne voulez pas que je sois triste et sombre,
Pareil, dans l’abandon où vous m’avez laissé,
Au pêcheur d’Etretat, d’un long hiver lassé,

Qui médite appuyé sur son coude, et s’ennuie
De voir à sa fenêtre un ciel rayé de pluie.

23 avril 1837

XXIII

A quoi je songe?

A quoi je songe? - Hélas! loin du toit où vous êtes,
Enfants, je songe à vous! à vous, mes jeunes têtes,
Espoir de mon été déjà penchant et mûr,
Rameaux dont, tous les ans, l'ombre croît sur mon mur,
Douces âmes à peine au jour épanouies,
Des rayons de votre aube encor tout éblouies!
Je songe aux deux petits qui pleurent en riant,
Et qui font gazouiller sur le seuil verdoyant,
Comme deux jeunes fleures qui se heurtent entre elles,
Leurs jeux charmants mêlés de charmantes querelles!
Et puis, père inquiet, je rêve aux deux aînés
Qui s'avancent déjà de plus de flot baignés,
Laissant pencher parfois leur tête encor naïve,
L'un déjà curieux, l'autre déjà pensive!

Seul et triste au milieu des chants des matelots,
Le soir, sous la falaise, à cette heure où les flots,
S'ouvrant et se fermant comme autant de narines,
Mêlent au vent des cieux mille haleines marines,
Où l'on entend dans l'air d'ineffables échos
Qui viennent de la terre ou qui viennent des eaux,
Ainsi je songe! - à vous, enfants, maisons, famille,
A la table qui rit, au foyer qui pétille,
A tous les soins pieux que répandent sur vous
Votre mère si tendre et votre aïeul si doux!
Et tandis qu'à mes pieds s'étend, couvert de voiles,
Le limpide océan, ce miroir des étoiles,
Tandis que les nochers laissent errer leurs yeux
De l'infini des mers à l'infini des cieux,
Moi, rêvant à vous seuls, je contemple et je sonde
L'amour que j'ai pour vous dans mon âme profonde,
Amour doux et puissant qui toujours m'est resté.

Et cette grande mer est petite à côté!

15 juillet 1837. - Fécamp. - Ecrit au bord de la mer.

XXIV

Une nuit qu’on entendait la mer sans la voir

Quels sont ces bruits sourds?
Ecoutez vers l’onde
Cette voix profonde
Qui pleure toujours
Et qui toujours gronde,
    Quoiqu’un son plus clair
    Parfois l’interrompe... -
    Le vent de la mer
    Souffle dans sa trompe.

    Comme il pleut ce soir!
    N’est-ce pas, mon hôte?
    Là-bas, à la côte,
    Le ciel est bien noir,
    La mer est bien haute!
    On dirait l’hiver;
    Parfois on s’y trompe... -
    Le vent de la mer
    Souffle dans sa trompe.

    Oh! marins perdus!
    Au loin, dans cette ombre
    Sur la nef qui sombre,
    Que de bras tendus
    Vers la terre sombre!
    Pas d’ancre de fer
    Que le flot ne rompe. -
    Le vent de la mer
    Souffle dans sa trompe.

    Nochers imprudents!
    Le vent dans la voile

Déchire la toile
Comme avec les dents!
Là-haut pas d’étoile!
L’un lutte avec l’air,
L’autre est à la pompe. -
Le vent de la mer
Souffle dans sa trompe.

C’est toi, c’est ton feu
Que le nocher rêve,
Quand le flot s’élève,
Chandelier que Dieu
Pose sur la grève,
Phare au rouge éclair
Que la brume estompe!
Le vent de la mer
Souffle dans sa trompe

17 juillet 1836

XXV

Tentanda via est

Ne vous effrayez pas, douce mère inquiète
Dont la bonté partout dans la maison s'émiette,
De le voir si petit, si grave et si pensif.
Comme un pauvre oiseau blanc qui, seul sur un récif,
Voit l'océan vers lui monter du fond de l'ombre,
Il regarde déjà la vie immense et sombre.
Il rêve de le voir s'avancer pas à pas.
O mère au coeur divin, ne vous effrayez pas,
Vous en qui, - tant votre âme est un charmant mélange! -
L'ange voit un enfant et l'enfant voit un ange.

Allons, mère, sans trouble et d'un air triomphant
Baisez-moi le grand front de ce petit enfant.
Ce n'est pas un savant, ce n'est pas un prodige,
C'est un songeur; tant mieux. Soyez fière, vous dis-je!
La méditation du génie est la soeur,
Mère, et l'enfant songeur fait un homme penseur,
Et la pensée est tout, et la pensée ardente
Donne à Milton le ciel, donne l'enfer à Dante!
Un jour il sera grand. L'avenir glorieux
Attend, n'en doutez pas, l'enfant mystérieux
Qui veut savoir comment chaque chose se nomme,
Et questionne tout, un mur autant qu'un homme.
Qui sait si, ramassant à terre sans effort
Le ciseau colossal de Michel-Ange mort,
Il ne doit pas, livrant au granit des batailles,
Faire au marbre étonné de superbes entailles?
Ou, comme Bonaparte ou bien François premier,
Prendre, joueur d'échecs, l'Europe pour damier?
Qui sait s'il n'ira point, voguant à toute voile,
Ajoutant à son oeil, que l'ombre humaine voile,
L'oeil du long télescope au regard effrayant,

Ou l’oeil de la pensée encor plus clairvoyant,
Saisir, dans l’azur vaste ou dans la mer profonde,
Un astre comme Herschell, comme Colomb un monde?

Qui sait? Laissez grandir ce petit sérieux.
Il ne voit même pas nos regards curieux.
Peut-être que déjà ce pauvre enfant fragile
Rêve, comme rêvait l’enfant qui fut Virgile,
Au combat que poursuit le poète éclatant;
Et qu’il veut, aussi lui, tenter, vaincre, et sortant
Par un chemin nouveau de la sphère où nous sommes,
Voltiger, nom ailé, sur les bouches des hommes.

9 juin 1837

XXVI

Jeune fille, l’amour, c’est d’abord un miroir

Jeune fille, l’amour, c’est d’abord un miroir
Où la femme coquette et belle aime à se voir,
Et, gaie ou rêveuse, se penche;
Puis, comme la vertu, quand il a votre coeur,
Il en chasse le mal et le vice moqueur,
Et vous fait l’âme pure et blanche;

Puis on descend un peu, le pied vous glisse... - Alors
C’est un abîme! en vain la main s’attache aux bords,
On s’en va dans l’eau qui tournoie! -
L’amour est charmant, pur, et mortel. N’y crois pas!
Tel l’enfant, par un fleuve attiré pas à pas,
S’y mire, s’y lave et s’y noie.

25 février 1837

XXVII

Après une Lecture de Dante

Quand le poète peint l’enfer, il peint sa vie:
Sa vie, ombre qui fuit de spectres poursuivie;
Forêt mystérieuse où ses pas effrayés
S’égarent à tâtons hors des chemins frayés;
Noir voyage obstrué de rencontres difformes;
Spirale aux bords douteux, aux profondeurs énormes,
Dont les cercles hideux vont toujours plus avant
Dans une ombre où se meut l’enfer vague et vivant!
Cette rampe se perd dans la bruime indécise;

Au bas de chaque marche une plainte est assise,
Et l’on y voit passer avec un faible bruit
Des grincements de dents blancs dans la sombre nuit.
Là sont les visions, les rêves, les chimères;
Les yeux que la douleur change en sources amères,
L’amour, couple enlacé, triste, et toujours brûlant,
Qui dans un tourbillon passe une plaie au flanc;
Dans un coin la vengeance et la faim, soeurs impies,
Sur un crâne rongé côte à côte accroupies;
Puis la pâle misère au sourire appauvri;
L’ambition, l’orgueil, de soi-même nourri,
Et la luxure immonde, et l’avarice infâme,
Tous les manteaux de plomb dont peut se charger l’âme!
Plus loin, la lâcheté, la peur, la trahison
Offrant des clefs à vendre et goûtant du poison;
Et puis, plus bas encore, et tout au fond du gouffre,
Le masque grimaçant de la Haine qui souffre!

Oui, c’est bien là la vie, ô poète inspiré,
Et son chemin brumeux d’obstacles encombré.
Mais, pour que rien n’y manque, en cette route étroite
Vous nous montrez toujours debout à votre droite

Le génie au front calme, aux yeux pleins de rayons,
Le Virgile serein qui dit: Continuons!

6 août 1836

XXVIII

Pensar, Dudar

A Mlle Louise B.

Je vous l’ai déjà dit, notre incurable plaie,
Notre nuage noir qu’aucun vent ne balaie,
Notre plus lourd fardeau, notre pire douleur,
Ce qui met sur nos fronts la ride et la pâleur,
Ce qui fait flamboyer l’enfer sur nos murailles,
C’est l’âpre anxiété qui nous tient aux entrailles,
C’est la fatale angoisse et le trouble profond
Qui fait que notre coeur en abîmes se fond,
Quand un matin le sort, qui nous a dans sa serre,
Nous mettant face à face avec notre misère,
Nous jette brusquement, lui notre maître à tous,
Cette question sombre:- Ame, que croyez-vous?
C’est l’hésitation redoutable et profonde
Qui prend, devant ce sphinx qu’on appelle le monde,
Notre esprit effrayé plus encor qu’ébloui,
Qui n’ose dire non et ne peut dire oui!

C’est là l’infirmité de toute notre race.
De quoi l’homme est-il sûr? qui demeure? qui passe?
Quel est le chimérique et quel est le réel?
Quand l’explication viendra-t-elle du ciel?
D’où vient qu’en nos sentiers que le sophisme encombre
Nous trébuchons toujours? d’où vient qu’esprits faits d’ombre,

Nous tremblons tous, la nuit, à l’heure où lentement
La brume monte au coeur ainsi qu’au firmament?
Que l’aube même est sombre et cache un grand problème?
Et que plus d’un penseur, ô misère suprême!
Jusque dans les enfants trouvant de noirs écueils,
Doute auprès des berceaux comme auprès des cercueils?

Voyez: cet homme est juste, il est bon; c’est un sage.
Nul fiel intérieur ne verdit son visage;
Si par quelques endroits son coeur est déjà mort,
Parmi tous ses regrets il n’a pas un remord;
Les ennemis qu’il a, s’il faut qu’il s’en souvienne,
Lui viennent de leur haine et non pas de la sienne;
C’est un sage - du temps d’Aurèle ou d’Adrien.
Il est pauvre, et s’y plaît. Il ne tombe plus rien
De sa tête vieillie aux rumeurs apaisées,
Rien que des cheveux blancs et de douces pensées.
Tous les hommes pour lui d’un seul flanc sont sortis,
Et, frère aux malheureux, il est père aux petits.
Sa vie est simple, et fuit la ville qui bourdonne.
Les champs où tout guérit, les champs où tout pardonne,
Les villageois dansant au bruit des tambourins,
Quelque ancien livre grec où revivent sereins
Les vieux héros d’Athène et de Lacédémone,
Les enfants rencontrés à qui l’on fait l’aumône,
Le chien à qui l’on parle et dont l’oeil vous comprend,
L’étude d’un insecte en des mousses errant,
Le soir, quelque humble vieille au logis ramenée:
Voilà de quels rayons est faite sa journée.
Chaque jour, car pour lui chaque jour passe ainsi,
Quand le soleil descend, il redescend aussi;
Il regagne, abordé des passants qui l’accueillent,
Son toit sur qui, l’hiver, de grands chênes s’effeuillent.
Si sa table, où jamais rien ne peut abonder,
N’a qu’un maigre repas, il sourit, sans gronder
La servante au front gris, qui sous les ans chancelle,
A qui manque aujourd’hui la force et non le zèle;
Puis il rentre à sa chambre où le sommeil l’attend.
Et là, seul, que fait-il? lui, ce juste content?
Lui, ce coeur sans désirs, sans fautes et sans peines?
Il pense, il rêve, il doute... - O ténèbres humaines!

Sombre loi! tout est donc brumeux et vacillant!

Oh! surtout dans ces jours où tout s’en va croulant,
Où le malheur saisit notre âme qui dévie,
Et souffle affreusement sur notre folle vie,
Où le sort envieux nous tient, où l’on a plus
Que le caprice obscur du flux et du reflux,
Qu’un livre déchiré, qu’une nuit ténébreuse,
Qu’une pensée en proie au gouffre qui se creuse,
Qu’un coeur désemparé de ses illusions,
Frêle esquif démâté, sur qui les passions,
Matelots furieux, qu’en vain l’esprit écoute,
Trépignent, se battant pour le choix de la route;
Quand on ne songe plus, triste et mourant effort,
Qu’à chercher un salut, une boussole, un port,
Une ancre où l’on s’attache, un phare où l’on s’adresse,
Oh! comme avec terreur, pilotes en détresse,
Nous nous apercevons qu’il nous manque la foi,
La foi, ce pur flambeau qui rassure l’effroi,
Ce mot d’espoir écrit sur la dernière page,
Cette chaloupe où peut se sauver l’équipage!

Comment donc se fait-il, ô pauvres insensés,
Que nous soyons si fiers? - Dites, vous qui pensez,
Vous que le sort expose, âme toujours sereine,
Si modeste à la gloire et si douce à la haine,
Vous dont l’esprit, toujours égal et toujours pur,
Dans la calme raison, cet immuable azur,
Bien haut, bien loin de nous, brille, grave et candide,
Comme une étoile fixe au fond du ciel splendide,
Soleil que n’atteint pas, tant il est abrité,
Ce roulis de l’abîme et de l’immensité,
Où flottent, dispersés par les vents qui s’épanchent,
Tant d’astres fatigués et de mondes qui penchent!
Hélas! que vous devez méditer à côté
De l’arrogance unie à notre cécité!
Que vous devez sourire en voyant notre gloire!
Et, comme un feu brillant jette une vapeur noire,

Que notre fol orgueil au néant appuyé
Vous doit jeter dans l'âme une étrange pitié!

Hélas! ayez pitié, mais une pitié tendre;
Car nous écoutons tout sans pouvoir rien entendre!

Cette absence de foi, cette incrédulité,
Ignorance ou savoir, sagesse ou vanité,
Est-ce, de quelque nom que notre orgueil la nomme,
Le vice de ce siècle ou le malheur de l'homme?
Est-ce un mal passager? est-ce un mal éternel?
Dieu peut-être a fait l'homme ainsi pour que le ciel,
Plein d'ombres pour nos yeux, soit toujours notre étude?
Dieu n'a scellé dans l'homme aucune certitude.
Penser, ce n'est pas croire. A peine par moment
Entend-on une voix dire confusément:
— "Ne vous y fiez pas, votre oeuvre est périssable!
Tout ce que bâtit l'homme est bâti sur le sable;
Ce qu'il fait tôt ou tard par l'herbe est recouvert;
Ce qu'il dresse est dressé pour le vent du désert.
Tous ces asiles vains où vous mettez votre âme,
Gloire qui n'est que pourpre, amour qui n'est que flamme,
L'altière ambition aux manteaux étoilés
Qui livre à tous les vents ses pavillons gonflés,
La richesse toujours assise sur sa gerbe,
La science de loin si haute et si superbe,
Le pouvoir sous le dais, le plaisir sous les fleurs,
Tentes que tout cela! l'édifice est ailleurs.
Passez outre! cherchez plus loin les biens sans nombre.
Une tente, ô mortels, ne contient que de l'ombre."

On entend cette voix et l'on rêve longtemps.
Et l'on croit voir le ciel, moins obscur par instants,
Comme à travers la brume on distingue des rives,
Presque entr'ouvert, s'emplir de vagues perspectives!

Que croire? Oh! j'ai souvent, d'un oeil peut-être expert,

Fouillé ce noir problème où la sonde se perd!
Ces vastes questions dont l’aspect toujours change,
Comme la mer tantôt cristal et tantôt fange,
J’en ai tout remué! la surface et le fond!
J’ai plongé dans ce gouffre et l’ai trouvé profond!

Je vous atteste, ô vents du soir et de l’aurore,
Etoiles de la nuit, je vous atteste encore,
Par l’austère pensée à toute heure asservi,
Que de fois j’ai tenté, que de fois j’ai gravi,
Seul, cherchant dans l’espace un point qui me réponde,
Ces hauts lieux d’où l’on voit la figure du monde!
Le glacier sur l’abîme ou le cap sur les mers!
Que de fois j’ai songé sur les sommets déserts,
Tandis que fleuves, champs, forêts, cité, ruines
Que tous les monts fumaient comme des encensoirs,
Et qu’au loin l’océan, répandant ses flots noirs,
Sculptant des fiers écueils la haute architecture,
Mêlait son bruit sauvage à l’immense nature!

Et je disais aux flots: Flots qui grondez toujours!
Je disais aux donjons, croulant avec leurs tours:
Tours où vit le passé! donjons que les années
Mordent incessamment de leurs dents acharnées!
Je disais à la nuit: Nuit pleine de soleils!
Je disais aux torrents, aux fleurs, aux fruits vermeils,
A ces formes sans nom que la mort décompose,
Aux monts, aux champs, aux bois: Savez-vous quelque chose?

Bien des fois, à cette heure où le soir et le vent
Font que le voyageur s’achemine en rêvant,
Je me suis dit en moi:- cette grande nature,
Cette création qui sert la créature,
Sait tout! Tout serait clair pour qui la comprendrait!-
Comme un muet qui sait le mot d’un grand secret
Et dont la lèvre écume à ce mot qu’il déchire,
Il semble par moment qu’elle voudrait tout dire.

Mais Dieu le lui défend! En vain vous écoutez.
Aucun verbe en ces bruits l’un par l’autre heurtés!
Cette chanson qui sort des campagnes fertiles,
Mêlée à la rumeur qui déborde des villes,
Les tonnerres grondants, les vents plaintifs et sourds,
La vague de la mer, gueule ouverte toujours,
Qui vient, hurle, et s’en va, puis sans fin recommence,
Toutes ces voix ne sont qu’un bégaiement immense!

L’homme seul peut parler et l’homme ignore, hélas!
Inexplicable arrêt! quoi qu’il rêve ici-bas,
Tout se voile à ses yeux sous un nuage austère.
Et l’âme du mourant s’en va dans le mystère!
Aussi repousser Rome et rejeter Sion,
Rire, et conclure tout par la négation,
Comme c’est plus aisé, c’est ce que font les hommes.
Le peu que nous croyons tient au peu que nous sommes.

Puisque Dieu l’a voulu, c’est qu’ainsi tout est mieux!
Plus de clarté peut-être aveuglerait nos yeux.
Souvent la branche casse où trop de fruit abonde.
Que deviendrons-nous si, sans mesurer l’onde,
Le Dieu vivant, du haut de son éternité,
Sur l’humaine raison versait la vérité?
Le vase est trop petit pour la contenir toute.

Il suffit que chaque âme en recueille une goutte,
Même à l’erreur mêlée! Hélas! tout homme en soi
Porte un obscur repli qui refuse la foi.
Dieu! la mort! mots sans fond qui cachent un abîme!
L’épouvante saisit le coeur le plus sublime
Dès qu’il s’est hasardé sur de si grandes eaux.
On ne les franchit pas tout d’un vol. Peu d’oiseaux
Traversent l’océan sans reposer leur aile.
Il n’est pas de croyant si pur et si fidèle
Qui ne tremble et n’hésite à de certains moments.
Quelle âme est sans faiblesse et sans accablements?

Enfants! résignons-nous et suivons notre route.
Tout corps traîne son ombre, et tout esprit son doute.

8 septembre 1837

XXIX

A Eugène Vicomte H.

Puisqu’il plut au Seigneur de te briser, poète;
Puisqu’il plut au Seigneur de comprimer ta tête
De son doigt souverain,
D’en faire une urne sainte à contenir l’extase,
D’y mettre le génie, et de sceller ce vase
Avec un sceau d’airain;

Puisque le Seigneur Dieu t’accorda, noir mystère!
Un puits pour ne point boire, une voix pour te taire,
Et souffla sur ton front,
Et, comme une nacelle errante et d’eau remplie,
Fit rouler ton esprit à travers la folie,
Cet océan sans fond;

Puisqu’il voulut ta chute, et que la mort glacée,
Seule, te fît revivre en rouvrant ta pensée
Pour un autre horizon;
Puisque Dieu, t’enfermant dans la cage charnelle,
Pauvre aigle, te donna l’aile et non la prunelle,
L’âme et non la raison;

Tu pars du moins, mon frère, avec ta robe blanche!
Tu retournes à Dieu comme l’eau qui s’épanche
Par son poids naturel!
Tu retournes à Dieu, tête de candeur pleine,
Comme y va la lumière, et comme y va l’haleine
Qui des fleurs monte au ciel!

Tu n’as rien dit de mal, tu n’as rien fait d’étrange.
Comme une vierge meurt, comme s’envole un ange,
Jeune homme, tu t’en vas!
Rien n’a souillé ta main ni ton coeur; dans ce monde

Où chacun court, se hâte, se forge, et crie, et gronde,
A peine tu rêvas!

Comme le diamant, quant le feu le vient prendre,
Disparaît tout entier, et sans laisser de cendre,
Au regard ébloui,
Comme un rayon s’enfuit sans rien jeter de sombre,
Sur la terre après toi tu n’as pas laissé d’ombre,
Esprit évanoui!

Doux et blond compagnon de toute mon enfance,
Oh! dis-moi, maintenant, frère marqué d’avance
Pour un morne avenir,
Maintenant que la mort a rallumé ta flamme,
Maintenant que la mort a réveillé ton âme,
Tu dois te souvenir!

Tu dois te souvenir de nos jeunes années!
Quand les flots transparents de nos deux destinées
Se côtoyaient encor,
Lorsque Napoléon flamboyait comme un phare,
Et qu’enfants nous prêtions l’oreille à sa fanfare
Comme un meute au cor!

Tu dois te souvenir des vertes Feuillantines,
Et de la grande allée où nos voix enfantines,
Nos purs gazouillements,
Ont laissé dans les coins des murs, dans les fontaines,
Dans le nid des oiseaux et dans le creux des chênes,
Tant d’échos si charmants!

O temps! jours radieux! aube trop tôt ravie!
Pourquoi Dieu met-il donc le meilleur de la vie
Tout au commencement?
Nous naissions! on eût dit que le vieux monastère
Pour nous voir rayonner ouvrait avec mystère
Son doux regard dormant.

T’en souviens-tu, mon frère? après l’heure d’étude,
Oh! comme nous courions dans cette solitude!
Sous les arbres blottis,
Nous avions, en chassant quelque insecte qui saute,
L’herbe jusqu’aux genoux, car l’herbe était bien haute,
Nos genoux bien petits.

Vives têtes d’enfants par la course effarées,
Nous poursuivons dans l’air cent ailes bigarrées;
Le soir nous étions las,
Nous revenions, jouant avec tout ce qui joue,
Frais, joyeux, et tous deux baisés à pleine joue
Par notre mère, hélas!

Elle grondait: - Voyez! comme ils sont faits! ces hommes!
Les monstres! ils auront cueilli toutes nos pommes!
Pourtant nous les aimons.
Madame, les garçons sont les soucis des mères,
Car ils ont la fureur de courir dans les pierres
Comme font les démons! -

Puis un même sommeil, nous berçant comme un hôte,
Tous deux au même lit nous couchait côte à côte;
Puis un même réveil.
Puis, trempé dans un lait sorti chaud de l’étable,
Le même pain faisait rire à la même table
Notre appétit vermeil!

Et nous recommencions nos jeux, cueillant par gerbe
Les fleurs, tous les bouquets qui réjouissent l’herbe,
Le lys à Dieu pareil,
Surtout ces fleurs de flamme et d’or qu’on voit, si belles,
Luire à terre en avril comme des étincelles
Qui tombent du soleil!

On nous voyait tous deux, gaîté de la famille,

Le front épanoui, courir sous la charmille,
L’oeil de joie enflammé... -
Hélas! hélas! quel deuil pour ma tête orpheline!
Tu vas donc désormais dormir sur la colline,
Mon pauvre bien-aimé!

Tu vas dormir là-haut sur la colline verte,
Qui, livrée à l’hiver, à tous les vents ouverte,
A le ciel pour plafond;
Tu vas dormir, poussière, au fond d’un lit d’argile;
Et moi je resterai parmi ceux de la ville
Qui parlent et qui vont!

Et moi je vais rester, souffrir, agir et vivre;
Voir mon nom se grossir dans les bouches de cuivre
De la célébrité;
Et cacher, comme à Sparte, en riant quand on entre,
Le renard envieux qui me ronge le ventre,
Sous ma robe abrité!

Je vais reprendre, hélas! mon oeuvre commencée,
Rendre ma barque frêle à l’onde courroucée,
Lutter contre le sort;
Enviant souvent ceux qui dorment sans murmure,
Comme un doux nid couvé pour la saison future,
Sous l’aile de la mort!

J’ai d’austères plaisirs. Comme un prêtre à l’église,
Je rêve à l’art qui charme, à l’art qui civilise,
Qui change l’homme un peu,
Et qui, comme un semeur qui jette au loin sa graine,
En semant la nature à travers l’âme humaine,
Y fera germer Dieu!

Quand le peuple au théâtre écoute ma pensée,
J’y cours, et là, courbé vers la foule pressée,
L’étudiant de près,

Sur mon drame touffu dont le branchage plie,
J’entends tomber ses pleurs comme la large pluie
Aux feuilles des forêts!

Mais quel labeur aussi! que de flots! quelle écume!
Surtout lorsque l’envie, au coeur plein d’amertume,
Au regard vide et mort,
Fait, pour les vils besoins de ses luttes vulgaires,
D’une bouche d’ami qui souriait naguères
Une bouche qui mord!

Quel vie! et quel siècle alentour! - Vertu, gloire,
Pouvoir, génie et foi, tout ce qu’il faudrait croire,
Tout ce que nous valons,
Le peu qui nous restait de nos splendeurs décrues,
Est traîné sur la claie et suivi dans les rues
Par le rire en haillons!

Combien de calomnie et combien de bassesse!
Combien de pamphlets vils qui flagellent sans cesse
Quiconque vient du ciel,
Et qui font, la blessant de leur lance payée,
Boire à la vérité, pâle et crucifiée,
Leur éponge de fiel!

Combien d’acharnements sur toutes les victimes!
Que de rhéteurs, penchés sur le bord des abîmes,
Riant, ô cruauté!
De voir l’affreux poison qui de leurs doigts découle,
Goutte à goutte, ou par flots, quand leurs mains sur la foule
Tordent l’impiété!

L’homme, vers le plaisir se ruant par cent voies,
Ne songent qu’à bien vivre et qu’à chercher des proies;
L’argent est adoré;
Hélas! nos passions ont des serres infâmes
Où pend, triste lambeau, tout ce qu’avaient nos âmes

De chaste et de sacré!

A quoi bon, cependant? à quoi bon tant de haine,
Et faire tant de mal, et prendre tant de peine,
Puisque la mort viendra!
Pour aller avec tous où tous doivent descendre!
Et pour n'être après tout qu'une ombre, un peu de cendre
Sur qui l'herbe croîtra!

A quoi bon s'épuiser en voluptés diverses?
A quoi bon se bâtir des fortunes perverses
Avec les maux d'autrui?
Tout s'écroule; et, fruit vert qui pend à la ramée,
Demain ne mûrit pas pour la bouche affamée
Qui dévore aujourd'hui!

Ce que nous croyons être avec ce que nous sommes,
Beauté, richesse, honneurs, ce que rêvent les hommes,
Hélas! et ce qu'ils font,
Pêle-mêle, à travers les champs ou les huées,
Comme s'est emporté par rapides nuées
Dans un oubli profond!

Et puis quelle éternelle et lugubre fatigue
De voir le peuple enflé monter jusqu'à sa digue,
Dans ces terribles jeux!
Sombre océan d'esprits dont l'eau n'est pas sondée,
Et qui vient faire autour de toute grande idée
Un murmure orageux!

Quel choc d'ambitions luttant le long des routes,
Toutes contre chacune et chacune avec toutes!
Quel tumulte ennemi!
Comme on raille d'un bas tout astre qui décline!... -
Oh! ne regrette rien sur la haute colline
Où tu t'es endormi!

Là, tu reposes, toi! Là, meurt toute voix fausse.
Chaque jour, du Levant au Couchant, sur ta fosse
Promenant son flambeau,
L’impartial soleil, pareil à l’espérance,
Dore des deux côtés sans choix ni préférence
La croix de ton tombeau!

Là, tu n’entends plus rien que l’herbe et la broussaille,
Le pas du fossoyeur dont la terre tressaille
La chute du fruit mûr
Et, par moments, le chant, dispersé dans l’espace,
Du bouvier qui descend dans la plaine et qui passe
Derrière le vieux mur!

6 mars 1837

XXX

A Olympio

Un jour l’ami qui reste à ton coeur qu’on déchire
Contemplait tes malheurs,
Et, tandis qu’il parlait, ton sublime sourire
Se mêlait à ses pleurs:

I

“Te voilà donc, ô toi dont la foule rampante
Admirait la vertu,
Déraciné, flétri, tombé sur une pente
Comme un cèdre abattu!

Te voilà sous les pieds des envieux sans nombre
Et des passants rieurs
Toi dont le front superbe accoutumait à l’ombre
Les fronts inférieurs!

Ta feuille est dans la poudre, et ta racine austère
Est découverte aux yeux.
Hélas! tu n’as plus rien d’abrité dans la terre
Ni d’éclos dans les cieux!

Jeune homme, on vénérait jadis ton oeil sévère,
Ton front calme et tonnant;
Ton nom était de ceux qu’on craint et qu’on révère,
Hélas! et maintenant

Les méchants, accourus pour déchirer ta vie,
L’ont prise entre leurs dents,
Et les hommes alors se sont avec envie
Penchés pour voir dedans!

Avec des cris de joie ils ont compté tes plaies
Et compté tes douleurs,
Comme sur une pierre on compte des monnaies
Dans l’antre des voleurs.

Ta chaste renommée, aux exemples utiles,
N’a plus rien qui reluit,
Sillonnée en tous sens par les hideux reptiles
Qui viennent dans la nuit.

Eclairée à la flamme, à toute heure visible,
De ton nom rayonnant,
Au bord du grand chemin, ta vie est une cible
Offerte à tout venant

Où cent flèches, toujours sifflant dans la nuit noire,
S’enfoncent tour à tour,
Chacun cherchant ton coeur, l’un visant à ta gloire
Et l’autre à ton amour!

Ta réputation, dont souvent nous nous sommes
Ecriés en rêvant,
Se disperse et s’en va dans les discours des hommes,
Comme un feuillage au vent!

Ton âme, qu’autrefois on prenait pour arbitre
Du droit et du devoir,
Est comme une taverne où chacun à la vitre
Vient regarder le soir,

Afin d’y voir à table une orgie aux chants grêles,
Au propos triste et vain,
Qui renverse à grand bruit les coeurs pleins de querelles
Et les brocs pleins de vin!

Tes ennemis ont pris ta belle destinée
Et l’ont brisée en fleur.

Ils ont fait de ta gloire aux carrefours traînée
Ta plus grande douleur!

Leurs mains ont retourné ta robe, dont le lustre
Irritait leur fureur;
Avec la même pourpre ils t’ont fait vil d’illustre,
Et forçat d’empereur!

Nul ne te défend plus. On se fait une fête
De tes maux aggravés.
On ne parle de toi qu’en secouant la tête,
Et l’on dit: Vous savez!

Hélas! pour te haïr tous les coeurs se rencontrent.
Tous t’ont abandonné.
Et tes amis pensifs sont comme ceux qui montrent
Un palais ruiné.

II

Mais va, pour qui comprend ton âme haute et grave,
Tu n’en es que plus grand.
Ta vie a, maintenant que l’obstacle l’entrave,
La rumeur du torrent.

Tous ceux qui de tes jours orageux et sublimes
S’approchent sans effroi
Reviennent en disant qu’ils ont vu des abîmes
En se penchant sur toi!

Mais peut-être, à travers l’eau de ce gouffre immense
Et de ce coeur profond,
On verrait cette perle appelée innocence,
En regardant au fond!

On s’arrête aux brouillards dont ton âme est voilée,
Mais moi, juge et témoin,

Je sais qu’on trouverait une voûte étoilée
Si l’on allait plus loin!

Et qu’importe, après tout, que le monde t’assiège
De ses discours mouvants,
Et que ton nom se mêle à ces flocons de neige
Poussés à tous les vents!

D’ailleurs que savent-ils? Nous devrions nous taire.
De quel droit jugeons-nous?
Nous qui ne voyons rien au ciel ou sur la terre
Sans nous mettre à genoux!

La certitude - hélas! insensés que nous sommes
De croire à l’oeil humain! -
Ne séjourne pas plus dans la raison des hommes
Que l’onde dans leur main.

Elle mouille un moment, puis s’écoule infidèle,
Sans que l’homme, ô douleur!
Puisse désaltérer à ce qui reste d’elle
Ses lèvres ou son coeur!

L’apparence de tout nous trompe et nous fascine.
Est-il jour? Est-il nuit?
Rien d’absolu. Tout fruit contient une racine,
Toute racine un fruit.

Le même objet qui rend votre visage sombre
Fait ma sérénité.
Toute chose ici-bas par une face est ombre
Et par l’autre clarté.

Le lourd nuage, effroi des matelots livides
Sur le pont accroupis,
Pour le brun laboureur dont les champs sont arides
Est un sac plein d’épis!

Pour juger un destin il en faudrait connaître
Le fond mystérieux;
Ce qui gît dans la frange aura bientôt peut-être
Des ailes dans les cieux!

Cette âme se transforme, elle est tout près d’éclore,
Elle rampe, elle attend,
Aujourd’hui larve informe, et demain dès l’aurore
Papillon éclatant!

III

Tu souffres cependant! toi sur qui l’ironie
Epuise tous ses traits,
Et qui te sens poursuivre, et par la calomnie
Mordre aux endroits secrets!

Tu fuis, pâle et saignant, et, pénétrant dans l’ombre
Par ton flanc déchiré,
La tristesse en ton âme ainsi qu’en un puits sombre
Goutte à goutte a filtré!

Tu fuis, lion blessé, dans une solitude,
Rêvant sur ton destin,
Et le soir te retrouve en la même attitude
Où t’a vu le matin!

Là, pensif, cherchant l’ombre où ton âme repose,
L’ombre que nous aimons;
Ne songeant quelquefois, de l’aube à la nuit close,
Qu’à la forme des monts;

Attentif aux ruisseaux, aux mousses étoilées,
Aux champs silencieux,
A la virginité des herbes non foulées,
A la beauté des cieux;

Ou parfois contemplant, de quelque grève austère,
L’esquif en proie aux flots
Qui fuit, rompant les fils qui liaient à la terre
Les coeurs des matelots;

Contemplant le front vert et la noire narine
De l’autre ténébreux
Et l’arbre qui, rongé par la brise marine,
Tord ses bras douloureux,

Et l’immense océan où la voile s’incline,
Où le soleil descend,
L’océan qui respire ainsi qu’une poitrine,
S’enflant et s’abaissant;

Du haut de la falaise aux rumeurs infinies,
Du fond des bois touffus,
Tu mêles ton esprit aux grandes harmonies
Plaines de sens confus,

Qui, tenant ici-bas toute chose embrassée,
Vont de l’aigle au serpent,
Que toute voix grossit, et que sur la pensée
La nature répand!

IV

Console-toi, poète! - Un jour, bientôt peut-être,
Les coeurs te reviendront,
Et pour tous les regards on verra reparaître
Les flammes de ton front.

Tous les côté ternis par ta gloire outragée,
Nettoyés un matin,
Seront comme une dalle avec soin épongée
Après un grand festin.

En vain tes ennemis auront armé le monde
De leur rire moqueur,
Et sur les grands chemins répandu comme l’onde
Les secrets de ton coeur.

En vain ils jetteront leur rage humiliée
Sur ton nom ravagé.
Comme un chien qui remâche une chair oubliée
Sur l’os déjà rongé.

Ils ne prévaudront pas, ces hommes qui t’entourent
De leurs obscurs réseaux
Ils passeront ainsi que ces lueurs qui courent
A travers les roseaux.

Ils auront bien toujours pour toi toute la haine
Des démons pour le Dieu;
Mais un souffle éteindra leur bouche impure pleine
De parole de feu.

Ils s’évanouiront, et la foule et ravie
Verra, d’un oeil pieux,
Sortir de ce tas d’ombre amassé par l’envie
Ton front majestueux!

En attendant, regarde en pitié cette foule
Qui méconnaît tes chants,
Et qui de toutes parts se répand et s’écoule
Dans les mauvais penchant.

Laisse en ce noir chaos qu’aucun rayon n’éclaire
Ramper les ignorants;
L’orgueilleux dont la voix grossit dans la colère
Comme l’eau des torrents;

La beauté sans amour dont les pats nous entraîne,

Femme aux yeux exercés
Dont la robe flottante est un piège ou se prennent
Les pieds insensés;

Les rhéteurs qui de bruit emplissent leur parole
Quand nous les écoutons;
Et ces hommes sans foi, sans culte, sans boussole,
Qui vivent à tâtons;

Et les flatteurs courbés, aux douceurs familières,
Aux fronts bas et rampants;
Et les ambitieux qui sont comme des lierres
L'un sur l'autre grimpants!

Non, tu ne portes pas, ami, la même chaîne
Que ces hommes d'un jour.
Ils sont vils, et toi grand. Leur joug est fait de haine,
Le tien est fait d'amour!

Tu n'as rien de commun avec le monde infime
Au souffle empoisonneur;
Car c'est pour tous les yeux un spectacle sublime
Quand la main du Seigneur

Loin du sentier banal où la foule se rue
Sur quelque illusion,
Laboure le génie avec cette charrue
Qu'on nomme passion!"

Et quand il eut fini, toi que la haine abreuve,
Tu lui dis d'une voix attendrie un instant,
Voix pareille à la sienne et plus haute pourtant,
Comme la grande mer qui parlerait au fleuve;

"Ne me console point et ne t'afflige pas.
Je suis calme et paisible.
Je ne regarde point le monde d'ici-bas,

Mais le monde invisible.

Les hommes sont meilleurs, ami, que tu ne crois.
Mais le sort est sévère.
C’est lui qui teint de vin ou de lie à son choix
Le pur cristal du verre.

Moi, je rêve! écoutant le cyprès soupirer
Autour des croix d’ébène,
Et murmurer le fleuve et la cloche pleurer
Dans un coin de la plaine,

Recueillant le cri sourd de l’oiseau qui s’enfuit,
Du char traînant la gerbe
Et la plainte qui sort des roseaux, et le bruit
Que fait la touffe d’herbe,

Prêtant l’oreille aux flots qui ne peuvent dormir,
A l’air dans la nuée,
J’erre sur les hauts lieux d’ou l’on entend gémir
Toute chose crée!

Là, je vois, comme un vase allumé sur l’autel,
Le toit lointain qui fume;
Et le soir je compare aux purs flambeaux du ciel
Tout flambeau qui s’allume.

Là j’abandonne aux vents mon esprit sérieux,
Comme l’oiseau sa plume;
Là, je songe au malheur de l’homme, et j’entends mieux
Le bruit de cette enclume,

Là, je contemple, ému, tout ce qui s’offre aux yeux,
Onde, terre, verdure;
Et je vois l’homme au loin, mage mystérieux,
Traverser la nature!

Pourquoi me plaindre, ami? Tout homme à tout
Souffre des maux sans nombre. [moment
Moi, sur qui vient la nuit, j'ai gardé seulement
Dans mon horizon sombre,

Comme un rayon du soir au front d'un mont obscur,
L'amour, divine flamme,
L'amour, qui dore encor ce que j'ai de plus pur
Et de plus haut dans l'âme!

Sans doute en mon avril, ne sachant rien à fond,
Jeune, crédule, austère,
J'ai fait des songes d'or comme tous ceux qui font
Des songes sur la terre!

J'ai vu la vie en fleur sur mon front s'élever
Pleine de douces choses.
Mais quoi! me crois-tu assez fou pour rêver
L'éternité des roses?

Les chimères, qu'enfant mes mains croyaient toucher,
Maintenant sont absentes;
Et je dis au bonheur ce que dit le nocher
Aux rives décroissantes.

Qu'importe! je m'abrite en un calme profond,
Plaignant surtout les femmes;
Et je vis l'oeil fixé sur le ciel où s'en vont
Les ailes et les âmes.

Dieu nous donne à chacun notre part du destin,
Au fort, au faible, au lâche,
Comme un maître soigneux levé dès le matin
Divise à tous leur tâche.

Soyons grands. Le grand coeur à Dieu même est pareil.
Laissons, doux ou funestes,

Se croiser sur nos pieds la foudre et le soleil,
Ces deux clartés célestes.

Laissons gronder en bas cet orage irrité
Qui toujours nous assiège;
Et gardons au-dessus notre tranquillité,
Comme le mont sa neige.

Va, nul mortel ne brise avec la passion,
Vainement obstinée,
Cette âpre loi que l’un nomme Expiation
Et l’autre Destinée.

Hélas! de quelque nom que, broyé sous l’essieu,
L’orgueil humain la nomme,
Roue immense et fatale, elle tourne sur Dieu,
Elle roule sur l’homme!”

15 octobre 1837

XXXI

La tombe dit à la rose:

La tombe dit à la rose:
— Des pleurs dont l’aube t’arrose
Que fais-tu, fleur des amours?
La rose dit à la tombe:
— Que fais-tu de ce qui tombe
Dans ton gouffre ouvert toujours?

La rose dit: - Tombeau sombre,
De ces pleurs je fais dans l’ombre
Un parfum d’ambre et de miel.
La tombe dit: - Fleur plaintive,
De chaque âme qui m’arrive
Je fais un ange du ciel!

3 juin 1837

XXXII

O Muse, contiens-toi! muse aux hymnes d'airain!

O Muse, contiens-toi! muse aux hymnes d'airain!
Muse de loi juste et du droit souverain!
Toi dont la bouche abonde en mots trempés de flamme,
Etincelles de feu qui sortent de ton âme,

Oh! ne dis rien encore et laisse-les aller!
Attends que l'heure vienne où tu puisses parler.
Endure le spectacle en vierge résignée.
Qu'à peine un mouvement de ta lèvre indignée.
Révèle ton courroux au fond du coeur grondant.
Dans ce siècle où chacun, noyant ou fécondant,
Se répand au hasard comme l'eau d'un orage,
Où l'on ne voit partout qu'impuissance et que rage,
Qu'inutiles fardeaux qu'on s'obstine à rouler,
Que Samsons écrasés sous ce qu'il font crouler,
Le plus fort est celui qui tient sa force en bride.
L'océan quelquefois montre à peine une ride.
Jusqu'au jour d'éclater, plus proche qu'on ne croit,
Ne te dépense pas. Qui se contient s'accroît.

Aie au milieu de tous l'attitude élevée
D'une lente déesse à punir réservée,
Qui, recueillant sa force ainsi qu'un saint trésor,
Pourrait depuis longtemps et ne veut pas encor!

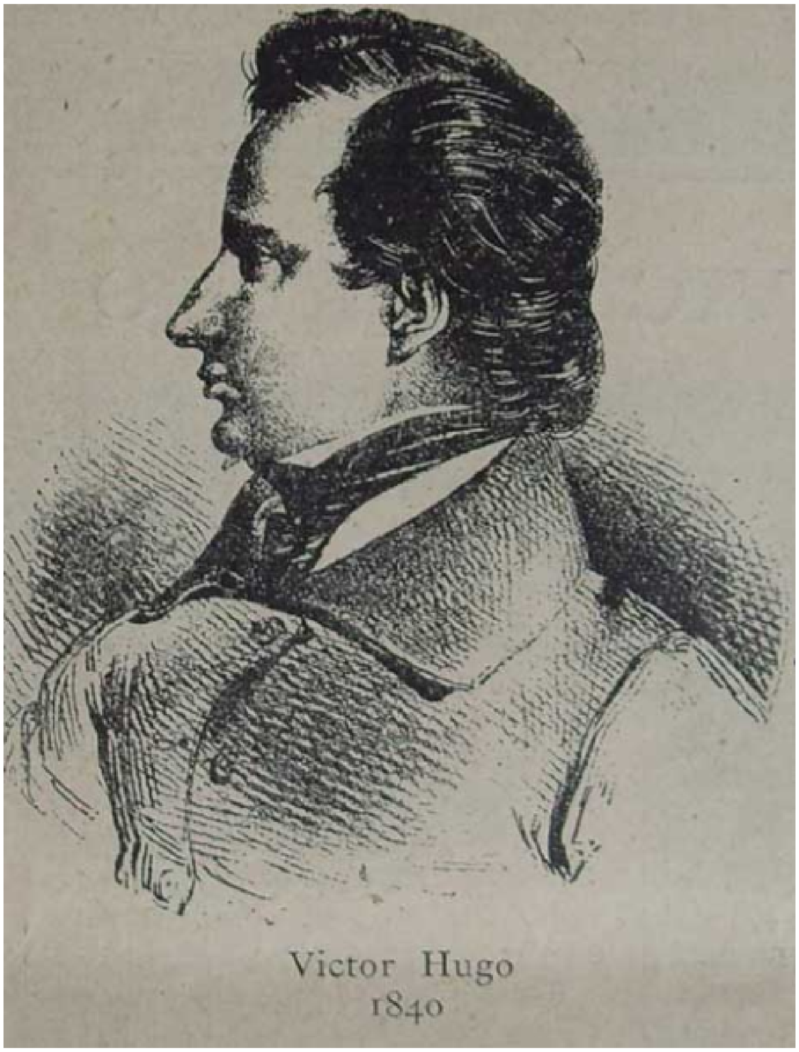
Va cependant! - contemple et le ciel et le monde.
Et que tous ceux qui font quelque travail immonde,
Que ces trafiquants vils épris d'un sac d'argent,
Que ces menteurs publics, au langage changeant,
Pleins de méchanceté dans leur âme hypocrite
Et dorés au dehors de quelque faux mérite,
Toux ceux, grands et petits, que marque un sceau fatal,

Que l’envieux bâtard accroupi dans le mal,
Que ce tribun valet, plus lâche qu’une femme,
Qui dans les carrefours vend sa parole infâme,
Toujours prêt pour l’or à souffleter la loi,
Forgeant l’émeute au peuple ou la censure au roi,
Que l’ami faux par qui la haine s’ensemence,
Et ceux qui nuit et jour occupent leur démence
D’une orgie effrontée au tumulte hideux,
Te regardent passer tranquille au milieu d’eux,
Saluant gravement les fronts que tu révères,
Muette, et l’oeil pourtant plein de choses sévères!
Fouille ces coeurs profonds de ton regard ardent.
Et que, lorsque le peuple ira se demandant:
— Sur qui donc va tomber, dans la foule éperdue,
Cette foudre en éclairs dans ses yeux suspendue? -
Chacun d’eux, contemplant son oeuvre avec effroi,
Se dise en frissonnant: C’est peut-être sur moi!

En attendant, demeure impassible et sereine.
Qu’aucun pan de ta robe en leur fange ne traîne;
Et que tous ces pervers tremblent dès à présent
De voir auprès de toi, formidable, et posant
Son ongle de lion sur ta lyre étoilée,
Ta colère superbe à tes pieds muselée!
6 septembre 1836.

LES RAYONS ET LES OMBRES

This collection of poems was written after 1830 and published in 1840. Through this publication, Hugo sought to bring poetry closer to men, exploring universal paths, struggles and concerns.



Victor Hugo
1840

Hugo at the time of publication

TABLE DES MATIERES

I
II
III
IV
V
VI
VII
LE MONDE ET LE SIÈCLE
VIII
IX
X
XI
XII
XIII
XIV
XV
XVI
XVII
XVIII
ÉCRIT SUR LA VITRE D'UNE FENÊTRE FLAMANDE
XIX
XX
XXI
XXII
XXIII
XXIV
XXV
XXVI
XXVII
XXVIII
XXIX
XXX
XXXI
XXXII

XXXIII
XXXIV
XXXV
XXXVI
XXXVII
XXXVIII
XXXIX
XL
XLI
XLII
XLIII
XLIV

I

FONCTION DU POÈTE

I

Pourquoi t’exiler, ô poète,
Dans la foule où nous te voyons?
Que sont pour ton âme inquiète
Les partis, chaos sans rayons?
Dans leur atmosphère souillée
Meurt ta poésie effeuillée;
Leur souffle égare ton encens.
Ton coeur, dans leurs luttes serviles,
Est comme ces gazons des villes
Rongés par les pieds des passants.

Dans les brumeuses capitales
N’entends-tu pas avec effroi,
Comme deux puissances fatales,
Se heurter le peuple et le roi?
De ces haines que tout réveille
À quoi bon emplir ton oreille,
Ô Poète, ô maître, ô semeur?
Tout entier au Dieu que tu nommes,
Ne te mêle pas à ces hommes
Qui vivent dans une rumeur!

Va résonner, âme épurée,
Dans le pacifique concert!
Va t’épanouir, fleur sacrée,
Sous les larges cieux du désert!
Ô rêveur, cherche les retraites,
Les abris, les grottes discrètes,
Et l’oubli pour trouver l’amour,
Et le silence, afin d’entendre

La voix d’en haut, sévère et tendre,
Et l’ombre, afin de voir le jour!

Va dans les bois! va sur les plages!
Compose tes chants inspirés
Avec la chanson des feuillages
Et l’hymne des flots azurés!
Dieu t’attend dans les solitudes;
Dieu n’est pas dans les multitudes;
L’homme est petit, ingrat et vain.
Dans les champs tout vibre et soupire.
La nature est la grande lyre,
Le poète est l’archet divin!

Sors de nos tempêtes, ô sage!
Que pour toi l’empire en travail,
Qui fait son périlleux passage
Sans boussole et sans gouvernail,
Soit comme un vaisseau qu’en décembre
Le pêcheur, du fond de sa chambre
Où pendent les filets séchés,
Entend la nuit passer dans l’ombre
Avec un bruit sinistre et sombre
De mâts frissonnants et penchés!

II

Hélas! hélas! dit le poète,
J’ai l’amour des eaux et des bois;
Ma meilleure pensée est faite
De ce que murmure leur voix.
La création est sans haine.
Là, point d’obstacle et point de chaîne.
Les prés, les monts, sont bienfaisants;
Les soleils m’expliquent les roses;
Dans la sérénité des choses
Mon âme rayonne en tous sens.

Je vous aime, ô sainte nature!
Je voudrais m’absorber en vous;
Mais, dans ce siècle d’aventure,
Chacun, hélas! se doit à tous.
Toute pensée est une force.
Dieu fit la sève pour l’écorce,
Pour l’oiseau les rameaux fleuris,
Le ruisseau pour l’herbe des plaines,
Pour les bouches, les coupes pleines,
Et le penseur pour les esprits!

Dieu le veut, dans les temps contraires,
Chacun travaille et chacun sert.
Malheur à qui dit à ses frères:
Je retourne dans le désert!
Malheur à qui prend des sandales
Quand les haines et les scandales
Tourmentent le peuple agité;
Honte au penseur qui se mutile,
Et s’en va, chanteur inutile,
Par la porte de la cité!

Le poète en des jours impies
Vient préparer des jours meilleurs.
Il est l’homme des utopies;
Les pieds ici, les yeux ailleurs.
C’est lui qui sur toutes les têtes,
En tout temps, pareil aux prophètes,
Dans sa main, où tout peut tenir,
Doit, qu’on l’insulte ou qu’on le loue,
Comme une torche qu’il secoue,
Faire flamboyer l’avenir!

Il voit, quand les peuples végètent!
Ses rêves, toujours pleins d’amour,
Sont faits des ombres que lui jettent

Les choses qui seront un jour.
On le raille. Qu’importe? il pense.
Plus d’une âme inscrit en silence
Ce que la foule n’entend pas.
Il plaint ses contempteurs frivoles;
Et maint faux sage à ses paroles
Rit tout haut et songe tout bas!

Foule qui répands sur nos rêves
Le doute et l’ironie à flots,
Comme l’océan sur les grèves
Répand son râle et ses sanglots,
L’idée auguste qui t’égaie
À cette heure encore bégaie;
Mais de la vie elle a le sceau!
Ève contient la race humaine,
Un oeuf l’aiglon, un gland le chêne!
Une utopie est un berceau!

De ce berceau, quand viendra l’heure,
Vous verrez sortir, éblouis,
Une société meilleure
Pour des coeurs mieux épanouis,
Le devoir que le droit enfante,
L’ordre saint, la foi triomphante,
Et les moeurs, ce groupe mouvant
Qui toujours, joyeux ou morose,
Sur ses pas sème quelque chose
Que la loi récolte en rêvant!

Mais, pour couver ces puissants germes,
Il faut tous les coeurs inspirés,
Tous les coeurs purs, tous les coeurs fermes,
De rayons divins pénétrés.
Sans matelots la nef chavire;
Et, comme aux deux flancs d’un navire,
Il faut que Dieu, de tous compris,

Pour fendre la foule insensée,
Aux deux côtés de sa pensée
Fasse ramer de grands esprits!

Loin de vous, saintes théories,
Codes promis à l’avenir,
Ce rhéteur aux lèvres flétries,
Sans espoir et sans souvenir,
Qui jadis suivait votre étoile,
Mais qui, depuis, jetant le voile
Où s’abrite l’illusion,
A laissé violer son âme
Par tout ce qu’ont de plus infâme
L’avarice et l’ambition!

Géant d’orgueil à l’âme naine,
Dissipateur du vrai trésor,
Qui, repu de science humaine,
A voulu se repaître d’or,
Et, portant des valets au maître
Son faux sourire d’ancien prêtre
Qui vendit sa divinité,
S’enivre, à l’heure où d’autres pensent,
Dans cette orgie impure où dansent
Les abus au rire effronté!

Loin ces scribes au coeur sordide,
Qui dans l’ombre ont dit sans effroi
À la corruption splendide:
Courtisane, caresse-moi!
Et qui parfois, dans leur ivresse,
Du temple où rêva leur jeunesse
Osent reprendre les chemins,
Et, leurs faces encor fardées,
Approcher les chastes idées,
L’odeur de la débauche aux mains!

Loin ces docteurs dont se défie
Le sage, sévère à regret!
Qui font de la philosophie
Une échoppe à leur intérêt!
Marchands vils qu’une église abrite!
Qu’on voit, noire engeance hypocrite,
De sacs d’or gonfler leur manteau,
Troubler le prêtre qui contemple,
Et sur les colonnes du temple
Clouer leur immonde écriteau!

Loin de vous ces jeunes infâmes
Dont les jours, comptés par la nuit,
Se passent à flétrir des femmes
Que la faim aux antres conduit!
Lâches à qui, dans leur délire,
Une voix secrète doit dire:
Cette femme que l’or salit,
Que souille l’orgie où tu tombes,
N’eut qu’à choisir entre deux tombes:
La morgue hideuse ou ton lit!

Loin de vous les vaines colères
Qui s’agitent au carrefour!
Loin de vous ces chats populaires
Qui seront tigres quelque jour!
Les flatteurs du peuple ou du trône!
L’égoïste qui de sa zone
Se fait le centre et le milieu!
Et tous ceux qui, tisons sans flamme,
N’ont pas dans leur poitrine une âme,
Et n’ont pas dans leur âme un Dieu!

Si nous n’avions que de tels hommes,
Juste Dieu! comme avec douleur
Le poète au siècle où nous sommes
Irait criant: Malheur! malheur!

On le verrait voiler sa face;
Et, pleurant le jour qui s’efface,
Debout au seuil de sa maison,
Devant la nuit prête à descendre,
Sinistre, jeter de la cendre
Aux quatre points de l’horizon!

Tels que l’autour dans les nuées,
On entendrait rire, vainqueurs,
Les noirs poètes des huées,
Les Aristophanes moqueurs.
Pour flétrir nos hontes sans nombre,
Pétrone, réveillé dans l’ombre,
Saisirait son stylet romain.
Autour de notre infâme époque
L’iambe boiteux d’Archiloque
Bondirait, le fouet à la main!

Mais Dieu jamais ne se retire.
Non! jamais, par les monts caché,
Ce soleil, vers qui tout aspire,
Ne s’est complètement couché!
Toujours, pour les mornes vallées,
Pour les âmes d’ombre aveuglées,
Pour les coeurs que l’orgueil corrompt,
Il laisse au-dessus de l’abîme,
Quelques rayons sur une cime,
Quelques vérités sur un front!

Courage donc! esprit, pensées,
Cerveaux d’anxiétés rongés,
Coeurs malades, âmes blessées,
Vous qui priez, vous qui songez!

Ô générations! courage!
Vous qui venez comme à regret,
Avec le bruit que fait l’orage

Dans les arbres de la forêt!

Douteurs errants sans but ni trêve,
Qui croyez, étendant la main,
Voir les formes de votre rêve
Dans les ténèbres du chemin!

Philosophes dont l’esprit souffre,
Et qui, pleins d’un effroi divin,
Vous cramponnez au bord du gouffre,
Pendus aux ronces du ravin!

Naufragés de tous les systèmes,
Qui de ce flot triste et vainqueur
Sortez tremblants et de vous-mêmes
N’avez sauvé que votre coeur!

Sages qui voyez l’aube éclore
Tous les matins parmi les fleurs,
Et qui revenez de l’aurore,
Trempés de célestes lueurs!

Lutteurs qui pour laver vos membres
Avant le jour êtes debout!
Rêveurs qui rêvez dans vos chambres,
L’oeil perdu dans l’ombre de tout!

Vous, hommes de persévérance,
Qui voulez toujours le bonheur,
Et tenez encor l’espérance,
Ce pan du manteau du Seigneur!

Chercheurs qu’une lampe accompagne!
Pasteurs armés de l’aiguillon!
Courage à tous sur la montagne!
Courage à tous dans le vallon!

Pourvu que chacun de vous suive
Un sentier ou bien un sillon;
Que, flot sombre, il ait Dieu pour rive,
Et, nuage, pour aquilon;

Pourvu qu’il ait sa foi qu’il garde,
Et qu’en sa joie ou sa douleur
Parfois doucement il regarde
Un enfant, un astre, une fleur;

Pourvu qu’il sente, esclave ou libre,
Tenant à tout par un côté,
Vibrer en lui par quelque fibre
L’universelle humanité;

Courage! - Dans l’ombre et l’écume
Le but apparaîtra bientôt!
Le genre humain dans une brume,
C’est l’énigme et non pas le mot!

Assez de nuit et de tempête
A passé sur vos fronts penchés.
Levez les yeux! levez la tête!
La lumière est là-haut! marchez!

Peuples! écoutez le poète!
Écoutez le rêveur sacré!
Dans votre nuit, sans lui complète,
Lui seul a le front éclairé.
Des temps futurs perçants les ombres,
Lui seul distingue en leurs flancs sombres
Le germe qui n’est pas éclos.
Homme, il est doux comme une femme.
Dieu parle à voix basse à son âme
Comme aux forêts et comme aux flots.

C’est lui qui, malgré les épines,

L’envie et la dérision,
Marche, courbé dans vos ruines,
Ramassant la tradition.
De la tradition féconde
Sort tout ce qui couvre le monde,
Tout ce que le ciel peut bénir,
Toute idée, humaine ou divine,
Qui prend le passé pour racine
A pour feuillage l’avenir.

Peuples! écoutez le poète!
Écoutez le rêveur sacré!
Dans votre nuit, sans lui complète,
Lui seul a le front éclairé!
Des temps futurs perçant les ombres,
Lui seul distingue en leurs flancs sombres
Le germe qui n’est pas éclos.
Homme, il est doux comme une femme.
Dieu parle à voix basse à son âme
Comme aux forêts et comme aux flots!

C’est lui qui, malgré les épines,
L’envie et la dérision,
Marche, courbé dans vos ruines,
Ramassant la tradition.
De la tradition féconde
Sort tout ce qui couvre le monde,
Tout ce que le ciel peut bénir.
Toute idée, humaine ou divine,
Qui prend le passé pour racine
A pour feuillage l’avenir.

Il rayonne! il jette sa flamme
Sur l’éternelle vérité!
Il la fait resplendir pour l’âme
D’une merveilleuse clarté.
Il inonde de sa lumière

Ville et désert, Louvre et chaumière,
Et les plaines et les hauteurs;
À tous d’en haut il la dévoile;
Car la poésie est l’étoile
Qui mène à Dieu rois et pasteurs!

II

LE SEPT AOÛT MIL HUIT CENT VINGT-NEUF

C’était le sept août. Ô sombre destinée!
C’était le premier jour de leur dernière année.

Seuls dans un lieu royal, côte à côté marchant,
Deux hommes, par endroits du coude se touchant,
Causaient. Grand souvenir qui dans mon coeur se grave!
Le premier avait l’air fatigué, triste et grave,
Comme un trop faible front qui porte un lourd projet.
Une double épaulette à couronne chargeait
Son uniforme vert à ganse purpurine,
Et l’ordre et la toison faisaient sur sa poitrine,
Près du large cordon moiré de bleu changeant,
Deux foyers lumineux, l’un d’or, l’autre d’argent.
C’était un roi; vieillard à la tête blanchie,
Penché du poids des ans et de la monarchie.
L’autre était un jeune homme étranger chez les rois,
Un poète, un passant, une inutile voix.

Ils se parlaient tous deux, sans témoins, sans mystère,
Dans un grand cabinet, simple, nu, solitaire,
Majestueux pourtant. Ce que les hommes font
Laisse une empreinte aux murs. Sous ce même plafond
Avaient passé jadis, ô splendeurs effacées!
De grands événements et de grandes pensées.
Là, derrière son dos, croisant ses fortes mains,
Ébranlant le plancher sous ses pas surhumains,
Bien souvent l’empereur quand il était le maître,
De la porte en rêvant allait à la fenêtre.

Dans un coin une table, un fauteuil de velours,
Miraient dans le parquet leurs pieds dorés et lourds.
Par une porte en vitre, au dehors, l’oeil en foule

Apercevait au loin des armoires de Boulle,
Des vases du Japon, des laques, des émaux,
Et des chandeliers d'or aux immenses rameaux.
Un salon rouge orné de glaces de Venise,
Plein de ces bronzes grecs que l'esprit divinise,
Multipliait sans fin ses lustres de cristal;
Et, comme une statue à lames de métal,
On voyait, casque au front, luire dans l'encoignure
Un garde argent et bleu d'une fière tournure.

Or entre le poète et le vieux roi courbé,
De quoi s'agissait-il?
D'un pauvre ange tombé
Dont l'amour refaisait l'âme avec son haleine;
De Marion, lavée ainsi que Madeleine,
Qui boitait et traînait son pas estropié,
La censure, serpent, l'ayant mordue au pied.

Le poète voulait faire un soir apparaître
Louis treize, ce roi sur qui régnait un prêtre;
— Tout un siècle, marquis, bourreaux, fous, bateleurs;
Et que la foule vînt, et qu'à travers des pleurs,
Par moments, dans un drame étincelant et sombre,
Du pâle cardinal on crût voir passer l'ombre.

Le vieillard hésitait: — Que sert de mettre à nu
Louis treize, ce roi chétif et mal venu?
À quoi bon remuer un mort dans une tombe?
Que veut-on? où court-on? sait-on bien où l'on tombe?
Tout n'est-il pas déjà croulant de tout côté?
Tout ne s'en va-t-il pas dans trop de liberté?
N'est-il pas temps plutôt, après quinze ans d'épreuve,
De relever la digue et d'arrêter le fleuve?
Certe, un roi peut reprendre alors qu'il a donné.
Quant au théâtre, il faut, le trône étant miné,
Étouffer des deux mains sa flamme trop hardie;
Car la foule est le peuple, et d'une comédie

Peut jaillir l’étincelle aux livides rayons
Qui met le feu dans l’ombre aux révolutions. -
Puis il niait l’histoire, et, quoi qu’il puisse en être,
À ce jeune rêveur disputait son ancêtre;
L’accueillant bien d’ailleurs, bon, royal, gracieux,
Et le questionnant sur ses propres aïeux.

Tout en laissant aux rois les noms dont on les nomme,
Le poète luttait fermement, comme un homme
Épris de liberté, passionné pour l’art,
Respectueux pourtant pour ce noble vieillard.
Il disait: — Tout est grave en ce siècle où tout penche.
L’art, tranquille et puissant, veut une allure franche.
Les rois morts sont sa proie; il faut la lui laisser.
Il n’est pas ennemi; pourquoi le courroucer,
Et le livrer dans l’ombre à des tortionnaires,
Lui dont la main fermée est pleine de tonnerres?
Cette main, s’il l’ouvrait, redoutable envoyé,
Sur la France éblouie et le Louvre effrayé,
On l’épouvanterait - trop tard, s’il faut le dire -
D’y voir subitement tant de foudres reluire!
Oh! les tyrans d’en bas nuisent au roi d’en haut.
Le peuple est toujours là qui prend la muse au mot,
Quand l’indignation, jusqu’au roi qu’on révère,
Monte du front pensif de l’artiste sévère!
— Sire à ce qui chancelle est-on bien appuyé?
La censure est un toit mauvais, mal étayé,
Toujours prêt à tomber sur les noms qu’il abrite.
Sire, un souffle imprudent, loin de l’éteindre, irrite
Le foyer, tout à coup terrible et tournoyant,
Et d’un art lumineux fait un art flamboyant!
D’ailleurs, ne cherchât-on que la splendeur royale,
Pour cette nation moqueuse, mais loyale,
Au lieu des grands tableaux qu’offrait le grand Louis,
Roi-soleil, fécondant les lys épanouis,
Qui, tenant sous son sceptre un monde en équilibre,
Faisait Racine heureux, laissait Molière libre,

Quel spectacle, grand Dieu! qu’un groupe de censeurs
Armés et parlant bas, vils esclaves chasseurs,
À plat ventre couchés, épiant l’heure où rentre
Le drame, fier lion, dans l’histoire, son antre! -

Ici, voyant vers lui, d’un front plus incliné,
Se tourner doucement ce vieillard étonné,
Il hasardait plus loin sa pensée inquiète,
Et, laissant de côté le drame et le poète,
Attentif, il sondait le dessein vaste et noir
Qu’au fond de ce roi triste il venait d’entrevoir.
Se pourrait-il? quelqu’un aurait cette espérance?
Briser le droit de tous! retrancher à la France,
Comme on ôte un jouet à l’enfant dépité,
De l’air, de la lumière, et de la liberté!
Le roi ne voudrait pas! lui, roi sage et roi juste!

Puis, choisissant les mots pour cette oreille auguste,
Il disait que les temps ont des flots souverains;
Que rien, ni ponts hardis, ni canaux souterrains,
Jamais, excepté Dieu, rien n’arrête et ne dompte
Le peuple qui grandit ou l’océan qui monte;
Que le plus fort vaisseau sombre et se perd souvent
Qui veut rompre de front et la vague et le vent;
Et que, pour s’y briser, dans la lutte insensée,
On a derrière soi, roche partout dressée,
Tout son siècle, les moeurs, l’esprit qu’on veut braver,
Le port même où la nef aurait pu se sauver!
Il osait s’effrayer. Fils d’une Vendéenne,
Coeur n’ayant plus d’amour, mais n’ayant pas de haine,
Il suppliait qu’au moins on l’en crût un moment,
Lui qui sur le passé s’incline gravement,
Et dont la piété, lierre qui s’enracine,
Hélas, s’attache aux rois comme à toute ruine!
Le destin a parfois de formidable jeux.
Les rois doivent songer dans ces jours orageux
Où, mer qui vient, esprit des temps, nuée obscure,

Derrière l’horizon quelque chose murmure!
À quoi bon provoquer d’avance et soulever
Les générations qu’on entend arriver?
Pour des regards distraits la France était sereine;
Mais dans ce ciel troublé d’un peu de brume à peine,
Où tout semblait azur, où rien n’agitait l’air,
Lui, rêveur, il voyait par instants un éclair! -

Charles dix souriant répondit: — Ô poète!

Le soir, tout rayonnait de lumière et de fête.
Regorgeant de soldats, de princes, de valets,
Saint-Cloud joyeux et vert, autour du fier palais
Dont la Seine en fuyant reflète les beaux marbres,
Semblait avec amour presser sa touffe d’arbres.
L’arc de triomphe orné de victoires d’airain,
Le Louvre étincelant, fleurdelysé, serein,
Lui répondaient de loin du milieu de la ville;
Tout ce royal ensemble avait un air tranquille,
Et, dans le calme aspect d’un repos solennel,
Je ne sais quoi de grand qui semblait éternel.

Holyrood! Holyrood! ô fatale abbaye,
Où la loi du destin, dure, amère, obéie,
S’inscrit de tous côtés!
Cloître! palais! tombeau! qui sous tes murs austères
Gardes les rois, la mort et Dieu; trois grands mystères,
Trois sombres majestés!

Château découronné! Vallée expiatoire!
Où le penseur entend dans l’air et dans l’histoire,
Comme un double conseil pour nos ambitions,
Comme une double voix qui se mêle et qui gronde,
La rumeur de la mer profonde,
Et le bruit éloigné des révolutions!

Solitude où parfois des collines prochaines

On voit venir les faons qui foulent sous les chênes
Le gazon endormi,
Et qui, pour aspirer le vent dans la clairière,
Effarés, frissonnants, sur leurs pieds de derrière
Se dressent à demi!

Fière église où priait le roi des temps antiques,
Grave, ayant pour pavé sous les arches gothiques
Les tombeaux paternels qu'il usait du genou!
Porte où superbement tant d'archers et de gardes
Veillaient, multipliant l'éclair des hallebardes,
Et qu'un pâtre aujourd'hui ferme avec un vieux clou!

Patrie où, quand la guerre agitait leurs rivages,
Les grands lords montagnards comptaient leurs clans sauvages
Et leurs noirs bataillons;
Où maintenant sur l'herbe, au soleil, sous des lierres,
Les vieilles aux pieds nus qui marchent dans les pierres
Font sécher des haillons!

Holyrood! Holyrood! la ronce est sur tes dalles.
Le chevreau broute au bas de tes tours féodales.
Ô fureur des rivaux ardents à se chercher!
Amours! - Darnley! Rizzio! quel néant est le vôtre!
Tous deux sont là, - l'un près de l'autre; -
L'un est une ombre, et l'autre une tâche au plancher!

Hélas! que de leçons sous tes voûtes funèbres!
Oh! que d'enseignements on lit dans les ténèbres
Sur ton seuil renversé,
Sur tes murs tout empreints d'une étrange fortune,
Vaguement éclairés dans ce reflet de lune
Que jette le passé!

Ô palais, sois béni! soyez bénie, ô ruine!
Qu'une auguste auréole à jamais t'illumine!
Devant tes noirs créneaux, pieux, nous nous courbons,

Car le vieux roi de France a trouvé sous ton ombre
Cette hospitalité mélancolique et sombre
Qu’on reçoit et qu’on rend de Stuarts à Bourbons!

III

AU ROI LOUIS-PHILIPPE, APRÈS L'ARRÊT DE MORT PRONONCÉ LE 12 JUILLET 1839

Par votre ange envolée ainsi qu'une colombe!
Par ce royal enfant, doux et frêle roseau!
    Grâce encore une fois! grâce au nom de la tombe!
    Grâce au nom du berceau!

IV

REGARD JETÉ DANS UNE MANSARDE

I

L’église est vaste et haute. À ses clochers superbes
L’ogive en fleur suspend ses trèfles et ses gerbes;
Son portail resplendit, de sa rose pourvu;
Le soir fait fourmiller sous la voussure énorme
Anges, vierges, le ciel, l’enfer sombre et difforme,
Tout un monde effrayant comme un rêve entrevu.

Mais ce n’est pas l’église, et ses voûtes sublimes,
Ses porches, ses vitraux, ses lueurs, ses abîmes,
Sa façade et ses tours, qui fascinent mes yeux;
Non; c’est, tout près, dans l’ombre où l’âme aime à descendre
Cette chambre d’où sort un chant sonore et tendre,
Posée au bord d’un toit comme un oiseau joyeux.

Oui, l’édifice est beau, mais cette chambre est douce.
J’aime le chêne altier moins que le nid de mousse;
J’aime le vent des prés plus que l’âpre ouragan;
Mon coeur, quand il se perd vers les vagues béantes,
Préfère l’algue obscure aux falaises géantes.
Et l’heureuse hirondelle au splendide océan.

II

Frais réduit! à travers une claire feuillée
Sa fenêtre petite et comme émerveillée
S’épanouit auprès du gothique portail.
Sa verte jalousie à trois clous accrochée,
Par un bout s’échappant, par l’autre rattachée,
S’ouvre coquettement comme un grand éventail.

Au-dehors un beau lys, qu’un prestige environne,
Emplit de sa racine et de sa fleur couronne
— Tout près de la gouttière où dort un chat sournois -
Un vase à forme étrange en porcelaine bleue
Où brille, avec des paons ouvrant leur large queue,
Ce beau pays d’azur que rêvent les Chinois.

Et dans l’intérieur par moments luit et passe
Une ombre, une figure, une fée, une grâce,
Jeune fille du peuple au chant plein de bonheur,
Orpheline, dit-on, et seule en cet asile,
Mais qui parfois a l’air, tant son front est tranquille,
De voir distinctement la face du Seigneur.

On sent, rien qu’à la voir, sa dignité profonde.
De ce coeur sans limon nul vent n’a troublé l’onde.
Ce tendre oiseau qui jase ignore l’oiseleur.
L’aile du papillon a toute sa poussière.
L’âme de l’humble vierge a toute sa lumière.
La perle de l’aurore est encor dans la fleur.

À l’obscure mansarde il semble que l’oeil voie
Aboutir doucement tout un monde de joie,
La place, les passants, les enfants, leurs ébats,
Les femmes sous l’église à pas lents disparues,
Des fronts épanouis par la chanson des rues,
Mille rayons d’en haut, mille reflets d’en bas.

Fille heureuse! autour d’elle ainsi qu’autour d’un temple,
Tout est modeste et doux, tout donne un bon exemple.
L’abeille fait son miel, la fleur rit au ciel bleu,
La tour répand de l’ombre, et, devant la fenêtre,
Sans faute, chaque soir, pour obéir au maître,
L’astre allume humblement sa couronne de feu.

Sur son beau col, empreint de virginité pure,
Point d’altière dentelle ou de riche guipure;

Mais un simple mouchoir noué pudiquement.
Pas de perle à son front, mais aussi pas de ride,
Mais un oeil chaste et vif, mais un regard limpide.
Où brille le regard que sert le diamant?

III

L’angle de la cellule abrite un lit paisible.
Sur la table est ce livre où Dieu se fait visible,
La légende des saints, seul et vrai panthéon.
Et dans un coin obscur, près de la cheminée,
Entre la bonne Vierge et le buis de l’année,
Quatre épingles au mur fixent Napoléon.

Cet aigle en cette cage! - et pourquoi non? dans l’ombre
De cette chambre étroite et calme, où rien n’est sombre,
Où dort la belle enfant, douce comme son lys,
Où tant de paix, de grâce et de joie est versée,
Je ne hais pas d’entendre au fond de ma pensée
Le bruit des lourds canons roulant vers Austerlitz.

Et près de l’empereur devant qui tout s’incline,
— Ô légitime orgueil de la pauvre orpheline! -
Brille une croix d’honneur, signe humble et triomphant,
Croix d’un soldat, tombé comme tout héros tombe,
Et qui, père endormi, fait du fond de sa tombe
Veiller un peu de gloire auprès de son enfant.

IV

Croix de Napoléon! joyau guerrier! pensée!
Couronne de laurier de rayons traversée!
Quand il menait ses preux aux combats acharnés,
Il la laissait, afin de conquérir la terre,
Pendre sur tous les fronts durant toute la guerre;
Puis, la grande oeuvre faite, il leur disait: Venez!

Puis il donnait sa croix à ces hommes stoïques,
Et des larmes coulaient de leurs yeux héroïques;
Muets, ils admiraient leur demi-dieu vainqueur;
On eût dit qu’allumant leur âme avec son âme,
En touchant leur poitrine avec son doigt de flamme,
Il leur faisait jaillir cette étoile du coeur!

V

Le matin elle chante et puis elle travaille,
Sérieuse, les pieds sur sa chaise de paille,
Cousant, taillant, brodant quelques dessins choisis;
Et, tandis que, songeant à Dieu, simple et sans crainte,
Cette vierge accomplit sa tâche auguste et sainte,
Le silence rêveur à sa porte est assis.

Ainsi, Seigneur, vos mains couvrent cette demeure.
Dans cet asile obscur, qu’aucun souci n’effleure,
Rien qui ne soit sacré, rien qui ne soit charmant!
Cette âme, en vous priant pour ceux dont la nef sombre,
Peut monter chaque soir vers vous sans faire d’ombre
Dans la sérénité de votre firmament!

Nul danger! nul écueil! - Si! l’aspic est dans l’herbe!
Hélas! hélas! le ver est dans le fruit superbe!
Pour troubler une vie il suffit d’un regard.
Le mal peut se montrer même aux clartés d’un cierge.
La curiosité qu’a l’esprit de la vierge
Fait une plaie au coeur de la femme plus tard.

Plein de ces chants honteux, dégoût de la mémoire,
Un vieux livre est là-haut sur une vieille armoire,
Par quelque vil passant dans cette ombre oublié;
Roman du dernier siècle! oeuvre d’ignominie!
Voltaire alors régnait, ce singe de génie
Chez l’homme en mission par le diable envoyé.

VI

Époque qui gardas, de vin, de sang rougie,
Même en agonisant, l'allure de l'orgie!
Ô dix-huitième siècle, impie et châtié!
Société sans dieu, par qui Dieu fus frappée!
Qui, brisant sous la hache et le sceptre et l'épée,
Jeune offensas l'amour, et vieille la pitié!

Table d'un long festin qu'un échafaud termine!
Monde, aveugle pour Christ, que Satan illumine!
Honte à tes écrivains devant les nations!
L'ombre de tes forfaits est dans leur renommée
Comme d'une chaudière il sort une fumée,
Leur sombre gloire sort des révolutions!

VII

Frêle barque assoupie à quelques pas d'un gouffre!
Prends garde, enfant! coeur tendre où rien encor ne souffre!
Ô pauvre fille d'Ève! ô pauvre jeune esprit!
Voltaire, le serpent, le doute, l'ironie,
Voltaire est dans un coin de ta chambre bénie!
Avec son oeil de flamme il t'espionne, et rit.

Oh! tremble! ce sophiste a sondé bien des fanges!
Oh! tremble! ce faux sage a perdu bien des anges!
Ce démon, noir milan, fond sur les coeurs pieux,
Et les brise, et souvent, sous ses griffes cruelles,
Plume à plume j'ai vu tomber ces blanches ailles
Qui font qu'une âme vole et s'enfuit dans les cieux!

Il compte de ton sein les battements sans nombre.
Le moindre mouvement de ton esprit dans l'ombre,
S'il penche un peu vers lui, fait resplendir son oeil.
Et, comme un loup rôdant, comme un tigre qui guette,
Par moments, de Satan, visible au seul poète,

La tête monstrueuse apparaît à ton seuil!

VIII

Hélas! si ta main chaste ouvrait ce livre infâme,
Tu sentirais soudain Dieu mourir dans ton âme.
Ce soir tu pencherais ton front triste et boudeur
Pour voir passer au loin dans quelque verte allée
Les chars étincelants à la roue étoilée,
Et demain tu rirais de la sainte pudeur!

Ton lit, troublé la nuit de visions étranges,
Ferait fuir le sommeil, le plus craintif des anges!
Tu ne dormirais plus, tu ne chanterais plus,
Et ton esprit, tombé dans l'océan des rêves,
Irait, déraciné comme l'herbe des grèves,
Du plaisir à l'opprobre et du flux au reflux!

IX

Oh! la croix de ton père est là qui te regarde!
La croix du vieux soldat mort dans la vieille garde!
Laisse-toi conseiller par elle, ange tenté!
Laisse-toi conseiller, guider, sauver peut-être
Par ce lys fraternel penché sur ta fenêtre,
Qui mêle son parfum à ta virginité!

Par toute ombre qui passe en baissant la paupière!
Par les vieux saints rangés sous le portail de pierre!
Par la blanche colombe aux rapides adieux!
Par l'orgue ardent dont l'hymne en longs sanglots se brise!
Laisse-toi conseiller par la pensive église!
Laisse-toi conseiller par le ciel radieux!

Laisse-toi conseiller par l'aiguille ouvrière,
Présente à ton labeur, présente à ta prière,
Qui dit tout bas: Travaille! - Oh! crois-la! - Dieu, vois-tu,

Fit naître du travail, que l’insensé repousse,
Deux filles, la vertu, qui fait la gaîté douce,
Et la gaîté, qui rend charmante la vertu!

Entends ces mille voix, d’amour accentuées,
Qui passent dans le vent, qui tombent des nuées,
Qui montent vaguement des seuils silencieux,
Que la rosée apporte avec ses chastes gouttes,
Que le chant des oiseaux te répète, et qui toutes
Te disent à la fois: Sois pure sous les cieux!

Sois pure sous les cieux! comme l’onde et l’aurore,
Comme le joyeux nid, comme la tour sonore,
Comme la gerbe blonde, amour du moissonneur,
Comme l’astre incliné, comme la fleur penchante,
Comme tout ce qui rit, comme tout ce qui chante,
Comme tout ce qui dort dans la paix du Seigneur!

Sois calme. Le repos va du coeur au visage;
La tranquillité fait la majesté du sage.
Sois joyeuse. La foi vit sans l’austérité;
Un des reflets du ciel, c’est le rire des femmes;
La joie est la chaleur que jette dans les âmes
Cette clarté d’en haut qu’on nomme Vérité.

La joie est pour l’esprit une riche ceinture.
La joie adoucit tout dans l’immense nature.
Dieu sur les vieilles tours pose le nid charmant
Et la broussaille en fleur qui luit dans l’herbe épaisse;
Car la ruine même autour de sa tristesse
A besoin de jeunesse et de rayonnement!

Sois bonne. La bonté contient les autres choses.
Le Seigneur indulgent sur qui tu te reposes
Compose de bonté le penseur fraternel.
La bonté, c’est le fond des natures augustes.
D’une seule vertu Dieu fait le coeur des justes,

Comme d’un seul saphir la coupole du ciel.

Ainsi, tu resteras, comme un lys, comme un cygne,
Blanche entre les fronts purs marqués d’un divin signe
Et tu seras de ceux qui, sans peur, sans ennuis,
Des saintes actions amassant la richesse,
Rangent leur barque au port, leur vie à la sagesse
Et, priant tous les soirs, dorment toutes les nuits!

LE POÈTE À LUI-MÊME

Tandis que sur les bois, les prés et les charmilles,
S’épanchent la lumière et la splendeur des cieux,
Toi, poète serein, répands sur les familles,
Répands sur les enfants et sur les jeunes filles,
Répands sur les vieillards ton chant religieux!

Montre du doigt la rive à tous ceux qu’une voile
Traîne sur le flot noir par les vents agité;
Aux vierges, l’innocence, heureuse et noble étoile;
À la foule, l’autel que l’impiété voile;
Aux jeunes, l’avenir; aux vieux, l’éternité!

Fais filtrer ta raison dans l’homme et dans la femme.
Montre à chacun le vrai du côté saisissant.
Que tout penseur en toi trouve ce qu’il réclame.
Plonge Dieu dans les coeurs, et jette dans chaque âme
Un mot révélateur, propre à ce qu’elle sent.

Ainsi, sans bruit, dans l’ombre, ô songeur solitaire,
Ton esprit, d’où jaillit ton vers que Dieu bénit,
Du peuple sous tes pieds perce le crâne austère; -
Comme un coin lent et sûr, dans les flancs de la terre
La racine du chêne entr’ouvre le granit.

V

ON CROYAIT DANS CES TEMPS OU LE PATRE NOCTURNE

On croyait dans ces temps où le pâtre nocturne,
Loin dans l’air, au-dessus de son front taciturne,
Voyait parfois, témoin par l’ombre recouvert,
Dans un noir tourbillon de tonnerre et de pluie,
Passer rapidement la figure éblouie
D’un prophète emporté par l’Esprit au désert!

On croyait dans les jours du barde et du trouvère!
Quand tout un monde armé se ruait au Calvaire,
Pour délivrer la croix,
Et pour voir le lac sombre où Jésus sauva Pierre,
L’Horeb et le Cédron, et les portes de pierre
Du sépulcre des rois!

On croyait dans ce siècle où tout était prière;
Où Louis, au moment de ravir La Vallière,
S’arrêtait éperdu devant un crucifix;
Où l’autel rayonnait près du trône prospère;
Où, quand le roi disait: Dieu seul est grand, mon père?
L’évêque répondait: Dieu seul est grand, mon fils!

Les pâtres maintenant dorment dans les ravines;
Jérusalem est turque; et les moissons divines
N’ont plus de moissonneur;
La royauté décline et le peuple se lève.
— Hélas! l’homme aujourd’hui ne croit plus, mais il rêve. -
Lequel vaut mieux, Seigneur?

VI

SUR UN HOMME POPULAIRE

Ô peuple! sous ce crâne où rien n’a pénétré,
Sous l’auguste sourcil morose et vénéré
Du tribun et du cénobite,
Sous ce front dont un jour les révolutions
Feront en l’entr’ouvrant sortir les visions,
Une pensée affreuse habite.

Dans l’Inde ainsi parfois le passant curieux
Contemple avec respect un mont mystérieux,
Cime des nuages touchée,
Rêve et croit respirer, sans approcher trop près,
Dans ces rocs, dans ces eaux, dans ces mornes forêts,
Une divinité cachée.

L’intérieur du mont en pagode est sculpté.
Puis vient enfin le jour de la solennité.
On brise la porte murée.
Le peuple accourt en poussant des cris tumultueux; -
L’idole alors, foetus aveugle et monstrueux,
Sort de la montagne éventrée.

VII

LE MONDE ET LE SIÈCLE

Que faites-vous, Seigneur? à quoi sert votre ouvrage?
À quoi bon l’eau du fleuve et l’éclair de l’orage?
Les prés? les ruisseaux purs qui lavent le gazon?
    Et, sur les coteaux verts dont s’emplit l’horizon,
    Les immenses troupeaux aux fécondes haleines
    Que l’aboiement des chiens chasse à travers les plaines?
    Pourquoi, dans ce doux mois où l’air semble attiédi,
    Quand un calice s’ouvre aux souffles de midi,
    Y plonger, ô Seigneur, l’abeille butinante,
    Et changer toute fleur en cloche bourdonnante?
    Pourquoi le brouillard d’or qui monte des hameaux?
    Pourquoi l’ombre et la paix qui tombent des rameaux?
    Pourquoi le lac d’azur semé de molles îles?
    Pourquoi les bois profonds, les grottes, les asiles?
    À quoi bon, chaque soir, quand luit l’été vermeil,
    Comme un charbon ardent déposant le soleil
    Au milieu des vapeurs par les vents remuées,
    Allumer au couchant un brasier de nuées?
    Pourquoi rougir la vigne et jeter aux vieux murs
    Le rayon qui revient gonfler les raisins mûrs?
    À quoi bon incliner sur ses axes mobiles
    Ce globe monstrueux avec toutes ses villes,
    Et ses monts et ses mers qui flottent alentour,
    À quoi bon, ô Seigneur, l’incliner tour à tour,
    Pour que l’ombre l’éteigne ou que le jour le dore,
    Tantôt vers la nuit sombre et tantôt vers l’aurore?
    À quoi vous sert le flot, le nuage, le bruit
    Qu’en secret dans la fleur fait le germe du fruit?
    À quoi bon féconder les éthers et les ondes,
    Faire à tous les soleils des ceintures de mondes,
    Peupler d’astres errants l’arche énorme des cieux,

Seigneur! et sur nos fronts, d’où rayonnent nos yeux,
Entasser en tous sens des millions de lieues
Et du vague infini poser les plaines bleues?
Pourquoi sur les hauteurs et dans les profondeurs
Cet amas effrayant d’ombres et de splendeurs?
À quoi bon parfumer, chauffer, nourrir et luire,
Tout aimer, et, Dieu bon! incessamment traduire,
Pour l’oeil intérieur comme pour l’oeil charnel,
L’éternelle pensée en spectacle éternel?
Si c’est pour qu’en ce siècle où la loi tombe en cendre
L’homme passe sans voir, sans croire, sans comprendre,
Sans rien chercher dans l’ombre, et sans lever les yeux
Vers les conseils divins qui flottent dans les cieux,
Sous la forme sacrée ou sous l’éclatant voile
Tantôt d’une nuée et tantôt d’une étoile!
Si c’est pour que ce temps fasse, en son morne ennui,
De l’opprimé d’hier l’oppresseur d’aujourd’hui;
Pour que l’on s’entre-déchire à propos de cent rêves;
Pour que le peuple, foule où dorment tant de sèves,
Aussi bien que les rois, - grave et haute leçon! -
Ait la brutalité pour dernière raison,
Et réponde, troupeau qu’on tue ou qui lapide,
À l’aveugle boulet par le pavé stupide!
Si c’est pour que l’émeute ébranle la cité!
Pour que tout soit tyran, même la liberté!
Si c’est pour que l’honneur des anciens gentilshommes,
Aux projets des partis s’attelle tristement;
Si c’est pour qu’à sa haine on ajoute un serment
Comme à son vieux poignard on remet une lame;
Si c’est pour que le prince, homme né d’une femme,
Né pour briller bien vite et pour vivre bien peu,
S’imagine être roi comme vous êtes Dieu!
Si c’est pour que la joie aux justes soit ravie;
Pour que l’iniquité règne, pour que l’envie,
Emplissant tant de fronts de brasiers dévorants,
Fasse petits des coeurs que l’amour ferait grands!
Si c’est pour que le prêtre, infirme et triste apôtre,

Marche avec ses deux yeux, ouvrant l’un fermant l’autre,
Insulte à la nature au nom du verbe écrit,
Et ne comprenne pas qu’ici tout est l’esprit,
Que Dieu met comme en nous son souffle dans l’argile,
Et que l’arbre et la fleur commentent l’Évangile!
Si c’est pour que personne enfin, grand ou petit,
Pas même le vieillard que l’âge appesantit,
Personne, du tombeau sondant les avenues,
N’ait l’austère souci des choses inconnues,
Et que, pareil au boeuf par l’instinct assoupi,
Chacun trace un sillon sans songer à l’épi!
Car l’humanité, morne et manquant de prophètes,
Perd l’admiration des oeuvres que vous faites;
L’homme ne sent plus luire en son coeur triomphant
Ni l’aube, ni le lys, ni l’ange, ni l’enfant,
Ni l’âme, ce rayon fait de lumière pure,
Ni la création, cette immense figure!

De là vient que souvent je rêve et que je dis:
— Est-ce que nous serions condamnés et maudits?
Est-ce que ces vivants, chétivement prospères,
Seraient déshérités du souffle de leurs pères?
Ô Dieu! considérez les hommes de ce temps,
Aveugles, loin de vous sous tant d’ombre flottants.
Éteignez vos soleils, ou rallumez leur flamme!
Reprenez votre monde, ou donnez-leur une âme!

VIII

À M. LE D. DE ***

Jules, votre château, tour vieille et maison neuve,
Se mire dans la Loire, à l’endroit où le fleuve,
Sous Blois, élargissant son splendide bassin,
Comme une mère presse un enfant sur son sein
En lui parlant tout bas d’une voix recueillie,
Serre une île charmante en ses bras qu’il replie.
Vous avez tous les biens que l’homme peut tenir.
Déjà vous souriez, voyant l’été venir,
Et vous écouterez bientôt sous le feuillage
Les rires éclatants qui montent du village.
Vous vivez! avril passe, et voici maintenant
Que mai, le mois d’amour, mai rose et rayonnant,
Mai dont la robe verte est chaque jour plus ample,
Comme un lévite enfant chargé d’orner le temple,
Suspend aux noirs rameaux, qu’il gonfle en les touchant,
Les fleurs d’où sort l’encens, les nids d’où sort le chant.

Et puis vous m’écrivez que votre cheminée
Surcharge en ce moment sa frise blasonnée
D’un tas d’anciens débris autrefois triomphants,
De glaives, de cimiers essayés des enfants,
Qui souillent les doigts blancs de vos belles duchesses;
Et qu’enfin - et c’est là d’où viennent vos richesses, -
Vos paysans, piquant les boeufs de l’aiguillon,
Ont ouvert un sépulcre en creusant un sillon.
Votre camp de César a subi leur entaille.
Car vous avez à vous tout un champ de bataille,
Et vos durs bûcherons, tout hâlés par le vent,
Du bruit de leur cognée ont troublé bien souvent,
Avec les noirs corbeaux s’enfuyant par volées,
Les ombres des héros à vos chênes mêlées.

Ami, vous le savez, spectateur sérieux,
J’ai rêvé bien des fois dans ces champs glorieux,
Qui, forcés par le soc, eux, vieux témoins des guerres,
À donner des moissons comme des champs vulgaires,
Pareils au roi déchu qui, craignant le réveil,
Revoit sa gloire en songe aux heures du sommeil,
Le jour, laissent marcher le bouvier dans leurs seigles,
Et reçoivent, la nuit, la visite des aigles!

Oh! respectez, enfant d’un siècle où tout se vend,
Rome morte à côté d’un village vivant!
Que votre piété, qui sur tout veut descendre,
Laisse en paix cette terre ou plutôt cette cendre!
Vivez content! dès l’aube, en vos secrets chemins,
Errez avec la main d’une femme en vos mains;
Contemplez, du milieu de tant de douces choses,
Dieu qui se réjouit dans la saison des roses;
Et puis, le soir, au fond d’un coffre vermoulu,
Prenez ce vieux Virgile où tant de fois j’ai lu!
Cherchez l’ombre, et, tandis que dans la galerie
Jase et rit au hasard la folle causerie,
Vous, éclairant votre âme aux antiques clartés,
Lisez mon doux Virgile, ô Jule, et méditez!

Car les temps sont venus qu’a prédits le poète.
Aujourd’hui, dans ces champs, vaste plaine muette,
Parfois le laboureur, sur le sillon courbé,
Trouve un noir javelot qu’il croit des cieux tombé,
Puis heurte pêle-mêle, au fond du sol qu’il fouille,
Casques vides, vieux dards qu’amalgame la rouille,
Et, rouvrant des tombeaux pleins de débris humains,
Pâlit de la grandeur des ossements romains!

IX

À MADEMOISELLE FANNY DE P.

Ô vous que votre âge défend,
Riez! tout vous caresse encore.
Jouez! chantez! soyez l’enfant!
Soyez la fleur; soyez l’aurore!

Quant au destin, n’y songez pas.
Le ciel est noir, la vie est sombre.
Hélas! que fait l’homme ici-bas?
Un peu de bruit dans beaucoup d’ombre.

Le sort est dur, nous le voyons,
Enfant! souvent l’oeil plein de charmes
Qui jette le plus de rayons
Répand aussi le plus de larmes.

Vous que rien ne vient éprouver,
Vous avez tout, joie et délire,
L’innocence qui fait rêver,
L’ignorance qui fait sourire.

Vous avez, lys sauvé des vents,
Coeur occupé d’humbles chimères,
Ce calme bonheur des enfants,
Pur reflet du bonheur des mères.

Votre candeur vous embellit.
Je préfère à toute autre flamme
Votre prunelle que remplit
La clarté qui sort de votre âme.

Pour vous ni soucis ni douleurs,
La famille vous idolâtre.

L’été, vous courez dans les fleurs;
L’hiver, vous jouez près de l’âtre.

La poésie, esprit des cieux,
Près de vous, enfant, s’est posée;
Votre mère l’a dans ses yeux,
Votre père dans sa pensée.

Profitez de ce temps si doux!
Vivez! - La joie est vite absente;
Et les plus sombres d’entre nous
Ont eu leur aube éblouissante.

Comme on prie avant de partir,
Laissez-moi vous bénir, jeune âme, -
Ange qui serez un martyr!
Enfant qui serez une femme!

X

COMME DANS LES ETANGS ASSOUPIS SOUS LES BOIS

Comme dans les étangs assoupis sous les bois,
Dans plus d’une âme on voit deux choses à la fois,
Le ciel, qui teint les eaux à peine remuées
    Avec tous ses rayons et toutes ses nuées,
    Et la vase, - fond morne, affreux, sombre et dormant,
    Où des reptiles noirs fourmillent vaguement.

XI

FIAT VOLUNTAS

Pauvre femme! son lait à sa tête est monté.
Et, dans ses froids salons, le monde a répété,
Parmi les vains propos que chaque jour emporte,
Hier, qu’elle était folle, aujourd’hui, qu’elle est morte;
Et, seul au champ des morts, je foule ce gazon,
Cette tombe où sa vie a suivi sa raison!

Folle! morte! pourquoi? Mon Dieu! pour peu de chose!
Pour un fragile enfant dont la paupière est close,
Pour un doux nouveau-né, tête aux fraîches couleurs,
Qui naguère à son sein, comme une mouche aux fleurs,
Pendait, riait, pleurait, et, malgré ses prières,
Troublant tout leur sommeil pendant des nuits entières,
Faisait mille discours, pauvre petit ami!
Et qui ne dit plus rien, car il est endormi.

Quand elle vit son fils, le soir d’un jour bien sombre,
Car elle l’appelait son fils, cette vaine ombre!
Quand elle vit l’enfant glacé dans sa pâleur,
— Oh! ne consolez point une telle douleur!
Elle ne pleura pas. Le lait avec la fièvre
Soudain troubla sa tête et fit trembler sa lèvre;
Et depuis ce jour-là, sans voir et sans parler,
Elle allait devant elle et regardait aller.
Elle cherchait dans l’ombre une chose perdue,
Son enfant disparu dans la vague étendue;
Et par moments penchait son oreille en marchant,
Comme si sous la terre elle entendait un chant.

Une femme du peuple, un jour que dans la rue
Se pressait sur ses pas une foule accourue,
Rien qu’à la voir souffrir devina son malheur.

Les hommes, en voyant ce beau front sans couleur,
Et cet oeil froid toujours suivant une chimère,
S'écriaient: Pauvre folle! Elle dit: Pauvre mère!

Pauvre mère, en effet! Un soupir étouffant
Parfois coupait sa voix qui murmurait: L'enfant!
Parfois elle semblait, dans la cendre enfouie,
Chercher une lueur au ciel évanouie;
Car la jeune âme enfuie, hélas! de sa maison
Avait en s'en allant emporté sa raison!

On avait beau lui dire, en parlant à voix basse,
Que la vie est ainsi; que tout meurt, que tout passe;
Et qu'il est des enfants, - mères, sachez-le bien!
Que Dieu, qui prête tout et qui ne donne rien,
Pour rafraîchir nos fronts avec leurs ailes blanches,
Met comme des oiseaux pour un jour sur nos branches!
On avait beau lui dire, elle n'entendait pas.
L'oeil fixe, elle voyait toujours devant ses pas
S'ouvrir les bras charmants de l'enfant qui l'appelle.
Elle avait des hochets fait une humble chapelle.
Car rien n'est plus puissant que ces petits bras morts
Pour tirer promptement les mères dans la tombe.
Où l'enfant est tombé bientôt la femme tombe.
Qu'est-ce qu'une maison dont le seuil est désert?
Qu'un lit sans un berceau? Dieu clément! à quoi sert
Le regard maternel sans l'enfant qui repose?
À quoi bon ce sein blanc sans cette bouche rose?

Après avoir longtemps, le coeur mort, les yeux morts,
Erré sur le tombeau comme étant en dehors,
— Longtemps! ce sont ici des paroles humaines,
Hélas! il a suffi de bien peu de semaines! -
Malheureuse! en deux mois tout s'est évanoui.
Hier elle était folle, elle est morte aujourd'hui!

Il suffit qu'un oiseau vienne sur une rive

Pour qu’un deuxième oiseau tout en hâte l’y suive.
Sur deux il en est un toujours qui va devant.
Après avoir à peine ouvert son aile au vent,
Il vint, le bel enfant, s’abattre sur la tombe;
Elle y vint après lui, comme une autre colombe.

On a creusé la terre, et là, sous le gazon,
On a mis la nourrice auprès du nourrisson.

Et moi je dis: — Seigneur! votre règne est austère!
Seigneur! vous avez mis partout un noir mystère,
Dans l’homme et dans l’amour, dans l’arbre et dans l’oiseau,
Et jusque dans ce lait que réclame un berceau,
Ambroisie et poison, doux miel, liqueur amère,
Fait pour nourrir l’enfant ou pour tuer la mère!

XII

À LAURE, DUCH. D'A.

[Le conseil municipal de la ville de Paris a refusé de donner six pieds de terre dans le cimetière du Père-Lachaise pour le tombeau de la veuve de Junot, ancien gouverneur de Paris.

Le ministre de l'intérieur a également refusé un morceau de marbre pour ce monument. (Journaux de février 1840)]

Puisqu'ils n'ont pas compris dans leur étroite sphère,
Qu'après tant de splendeur, de puissance et d'orgueil,
Il était grand et beau que la France dût faire
L'aumône d'une fosse à ton noble cercueil;

Puisqu'ils n'ont pas senti que celle qui sans crainte
Toujours loua la gloire et flétrit les bourreaux
A le droit de dormir sur la colline sainte,
A le droit de dormir à l'ombre des héros;

Puisque le souvenir de nos grandes batailles
Ne brûle pas en eux comme un sacré flambeau;
Puisqu'ils n'ont pas de coeur; puisqu'ils n'ont point d'entrailles;
Puisqu'ils t'ont refusé la pierre d'un tombeau;

C'est à nous de chanter un chant expiatoire!
C'est à nous de t'offrir notre deuil à genoux!
C'est à nous, c'est à nous de prendre ta mémoire
Et de l'ensevelir dans un vers triste et doux!

C'est à nous cette fois de garder, de défendre
La mort contre l'oubli, son pâle compagnon;
C'est à nous d'effeuiller des roses sur ta cendre;
C'est à nous de jeter des lauriers sur ton nom!

Puisqu’un stupide affront, pauvre femme endormie,
Monte jusqu’à ton front que César étoila,
C’est à moi, dont ta main pressa la main amie,
De te dire tout bas: Ne crains rien! je suis là!

Car j’ai ma mission! car, armé d’une lyre,
Plein d’hymnes irrités ardents à s’épancher,
Je garde le trésor des gloires de l’empire;
Je n’ai jamais souffert qu’on osât y toucher!

Car ton coeur abondait en souvenirs fidèles!
Dans notre ciel sinistre et sur nos tristes jours,
Ton noble esprit planait avec de nobles ailes,
Comme un aigle souvent, comme un ange toujours!

Car, forte pour tes maux et bonne pour les nôtres,
Livrée à la tempête et femme en proie au sort,
Jamais tu n’imitas l’exemple de tant d’autres,
Et d’une lâcheté tu ne te fis un port!

Car toi, la muse illustre, et moi, l’obscur apôtre,
Nous avons dans ce monde eu le même mandat,
Et c’est un noeud profond qui nous joint l’un à l’autre,
Toi, veuve d’un héros, et moi, fils d’un soldat!

Aussi, sans me lasser, dans cette Babylone,
Des drapeaux insultés baisant chaque lambeau,
J’ai dit pour l’empereur: Rendez-lui sa colonne!
Et je dirai pour toi: Donnez-lui son tombeau!

XIII

PUITS DE L’INDE! TOMBEAUX!

Puits de l’Inde! tombeaux! monuments constellés!
Vous dont l’intérieur n’offre aux regards troublés
Qu’un amas tournoyant de marches et de rampes,
Froids cachots, corridors où rayonnent des lampes,
Poutres où l’araignée a tendu ses longs fils,
Blocs ébauchant partout de sinistres profils,
Toits de granit, troués comme une frêle toile,
Par où l’oeil voit briller quelque profonde étoile,
Et des chaos de murs, de chambres, de paliers,
Où s’écroule au hasard un gouffre d’escaliers!
Cryptes qui remplissez d’horreur religieuse
Votre voûte sans fin, morne et prodigieuse!
Cavernes où l’esprit n’ose aller trop avant!
Devant vos profondeurs j’ai pâli bien souvent
Comme sur un abîme ou sur une fournaise,
Effrayantes Babels que rêvait Piranèse!

Entrez si vous l’osez!
Sur le pavé dormant
Les ombres des arceaux se croisent tristement;
La dalle par endroits, pliant sous les décombres,
S’entr’ouvre pour laisser passer des degrés sombres
Qui fouillent, vis de pierre, un souterrain sans fond;
D’autres montent là-haut et crèvent le plafond.
Où vont-ils? Dieu le sait. Du creux d’une arche vide
Une eau qui tombe envoie une lueur livide.
Une voûte au front vert s’égoutte dans un puits,
Dans l’ombre un lourd monceau de roches sans appuis
S’arrête retenu par des ronces grimpantes;
Une corde qui pend d’un amas de charpentes
S’offre, mystérieuse, à la main du passant.
Dans un caveau, penché sur un livre, et lisant,

Un vieillard surhumain, sous le roc qui surplombe,
Semble vivre oublié par la mort dans sa tombe.
Des sphinx, des boeufs d’airain, sur l’étrave accroupis,
Ont fait des chapiteaux aux piliers décrépits;
L’aspic à l’oeil de braise, agitant ses paupières,
Passe sa tête plate aux crevasses des pierres.
Tout chancelle et fléchit sous les toits entr’ouverts.
Le mur suinte, et l’on voit fourmiller à travers
De grands feuillages roux, sortant d’entre les marbres,
Des monstres qu’on prendrait pour des racines d’arbres.
Partout, sur les parois du morne monument,
Quelque chose d’affreux rampe confusément;
Et celui qui parcourt ce dédale difforme,
Comme s’il était pris par un polype énorme,
Sur son front effaré, sous son pied hasardeux,
Sent vivre et remuer l’édifice hideux!

Aux heures où l’esprit, dont l’oeil partout se pose,
Cherche à voir dans la nuit le fond de toute chose,
Dans ces lieux effrayants mon regard se perdit.
Bien souvent je les ai contemplés, et j’ai dit:

— Ô rêves de granit! grottes visionnaires!
Cryptes! palais! tombeaux, pleins de vagues tonnerres!
Vous êtes moins brumeux, moins noirs, moins ignorés,
Vous êtes moins profonds et moins désespérés
Que le destin, cet antre habité par nos craintes,
Où l’âme entend, perdue, en d’affreux labyrinthes,
Au fond, à travers l’ombre, avec mille bruits sourds,
Dans un gouffre inconnu tomber le flot des jours!

XIV

DANS LE CIMETIÈRE DE...

La foule des vivants rit et suit sa folie,
Tantôt pour son plaisir, tantôt pour son tourment;
Mais par les morts muets, par les morts qu’on oublie,
Moi, rêveur, je me sens regardé fixement.

Ils savent que je suis l’homme des solitudes,
Le promeneur pensif sous les arbres épais,
L’esprit qui trouve, ayant ses douleurs pour études,
Au seuil de tout le trouble, au fond de tout la paix!

Ils savent l’attitude attentive et penchée
Que j’ai parmi les buis, les fosses et les croix;
Ils m’entendent marcher sur la feuille séchée;
Ils m’ont vu contempler des ombres dans les bois,

Ils comprennent ma voix sur le monde épanchée,
Mieux que vous, ô vivants bruyants et querelleurs!
Les hymnes de la lyre en mon âme cachée,
Pour vous ce sont des chants, pour eux ce sont des pleurs.

Moi, c’est là que je vis! - cueillant les roses blanches,
Consolant les tombeaux délaissés trop longtemps,
Je passe et je reviens, je dérange les branches,
Je fait du bruit dans l’herbe, et les morts sont contents.

Là je rêve! et, rôdant dans le champ léthargique,
Je vois, avec des yeux dans ma pensée ouverts,
Se transformer mon âme en un monde magique,
Miroir mystérieux du visible univers.

Regardant sans les voir de vagues scarabées,
Des rameaux indistincts, des formes, des couleurs,

Là, j’ai dans l’ombre, assis sur des pierres tombées,
Des éblouissements de rayons et de fleurs.

Là, le songe idéal qui remplit ma paupière
Flotte, lumineux voile, entre la terre et nous;
Là, mes doutes ingrats se fondent en prière;
Je commence debout et j’achève à genoux.

Comme au creux du rocher vole l’humble colombe,
Cherchant la goutte d’eau qui tombe avant le jour,
Mon esprit altéré, dans l’ombre de la tombe,
Va boire un peu de foi, d’espérance et d’amour!

XV

MERES, L’ENFANT QUI JOUE A VOTRE SEUIL JOYEUX

Mères, l’enfant qui joue à votre seuil joyeux,
Plus frêle que les fleurs, plus serein que les cieux,
Vous conseille l’amour, la pudeur, la sagesse.
L’enfant, c’est un feu pur dont la chaleur caresse;
C’est de la gaîté sainte et du bonheur sacré,
C’est le nom paternel dans un rayon doré;
Et vous n’avez besoin que de cette humble flamme
Pour voir distinctement dans l’ombre de votre âme.
Mères, l’enfant que l’on pleure et qui s’en est allé,
Si vous levez vos fronts vers le ciel constellé,
Verse à votre douleur une lumière auguste;
Car l’innocent éclaire aussi bien que le juste!
Il montre, clarté douce, à vos yeux abattus,
Derrière notre orgueil, derrière nos vertus,
Derrière nos malheurs, Dieu profond et tranquille.
Que l’enfant vive ou dorme, il rayonne toujours!
Sur cette terre où rien ne va loin sans secours,
Où nos jours incertains sur tant d’abîmes pendent,
Comme un guide au milieu des brumes que répandent
Nos vices ténébreux et nos doutes moqueurs,
Vivant, l’enfant fait voir le devoir à vos coeurs;
Mort, c’est la vérité qu’à votre âme il dévoile.
Ici, c’est un flambeau; là-haut, c’est une étoile.

XVI

MATELOTS! MATELOTS!

Matelots! matelots! vous déploierez les voiles;
Vous voguerez, joyeux parfois, mornes souvent;
Et vous regarderez aux lueurs des étoiles
    La rive, écueil ou port, selon le coup de vent.

    Envieux, vous mordrez la base des statues.
    Oiseaux, vous chanterez! vous verdirez, rameaux!
    Portes, vous croulerez de lierres revêtues.
    Cloches, vous ferez vivre et rêver les hameaux.

    Teignant votre nature aux moeurs de tous les hommes,
    Voyageurs, vous irez comme d’errants flambeaux;
    Vous marcherez pensifs sur la terre où nous sommes,
    En vous ressouvenant quelquefois des tombeaux.

    Chênes, vous grandirez au fond des solitudes.
    Dans les lointains brumeux, à la clarté des soirs,
    Vieux saules, vous prendrez de tristes attitudes,
    Et vous vous mirerez vaguement aux lavoirs.

    Nids, vous tressaillirez sentant croître des ailes;
    Sillons, vous frémirez sentant sourdre le blé.
    Torches, vous jetterez de rouges étincelles
    Qui tourbillonneront comme un esprit troublé.

    Foudres, vous nommerez le Dieu que la mer nomme.
    Ruisseaux, vous nourrirez la fleur qu’avril dora;
    Vos flots refléteront l’ombre austère de l’homme.
    Et vos flots crouleront, et l’homme passera.

    Chaque chose et chacun, âme, être, objet ou nombre,
    Suivra son cours, sa loi, son but, sa passion,

Portant sa pierre à l’oeuvre indéfinie et sombre
Qu’avec le genre humain fait la création!

Moi, je contemplerai le Dieu père du monde,
Qui livre à notre soif, dans l’ombre ou la clarté,
Le ciel, cette grande urne, adorable et profonde,
Où l’on puise le calme et la sérénité!

XVII

SPECTACLE RASSURANT

Tout est lumière, tout est joie,
L’araignée au pied diligent
Attache aux tulipes de soie
Ses rondes dentelles d’argent.

La frissonnante libellule
Mire les globes de ses yeux
Dans l’étang splendide où pullule
Tout un monde mystérieux!

La rose semble, rajeunie,
S’accoupler au bouton vermeil;
L’oiseau chante plein d’harmonie
Dans les rameaux pleins de soleil.

Sa voix bénit le Dieu de l’âme
Qui, toujours visible au coeur pur,
Fait l’aube, paupière de flamme,
Pour le ciel, prunelle d’azur!

Sous les bois, où tout bruit s’émousse,
Le faon craintif joue en rêvant;
Dans les verts écrins de la mousse
Luit le scarabée, or vivant.

La lune au jour est tiède et pâle
Comme un joyeux convalescent;
Tendre, elle ouvre ses yeux d’opale
D’où la douceur du ciel descend!

La giroflée avec l’abeille
Folâtre en baisant le vieux mur;

Le chaud sillon gaîment s’éveille,
Remué par le germe obscur.

Tout vit, et se pose avec grâce,
Le rayon sur le seuil ouvert,
L’ombre qui fuit sur l’eau qui passe,
Le ciel bleu sur le coteau vert!

La plaine brille, heureuse et pure;
Le bois jase; l’herbe fleurit. -
Homme! ne crains rien! la nature
Sait le grand secret, et sourit.

XVIII

ÉCRIT SUR LA VITRE D'UNE FENÊTRE FLAMANDE

J'aime le carillon dans tes cités antiques,
Ô vieux pays gardien de tes moeurs domestiques,
Noble Flandre, où le Nord se réchauffe engourdi
Au soleil de Castille et s'accouple au Midi!
Le carillon, c'est l'heure inattendue et folle,
Que l'oeil croit voir, vêtue en danseuse espagnole,
Apparaître soudain par le trou vif et clair
Que ferait en s'ouvrant une porte de l'air.
Elle vient, secouant sur les toits léthargiques
Son tablier d'argent plein de notes magiques,
Réveillant sans pitié les dormeurs ennuyeux,
Sautant à petits pas comme un oiseau joyeux,
Vibrant, ainsi qu'un dard qui tremble dans la cible;
Par un frêle escalier de cristal invisible,
Effarée et dansante, elle descend des cieux;
Et l'esprit, ce veilleur fait d'oreilles et d'yeux,
Tandis qu'elle va, vient, monte et descend encore,
Entend de marche en marche errer son pied sonore!

XIX

CE QUI SE PASSAIT AUX FEUILLANTINES VERS 1813

Enfants, beaux fronts naïfs penchés autour de moi,
Bouches aux dents d’émail disant toujours: Pourquoi?
Vous qui, m’interrogeant sur plus d’un grand problème,
Voulez de chaque chose, obscure pour moi-même,
Connaître le vrai sens et le mot décisif,
Et qui touchez à tout dans mon esprit pensif;
— Si bien que, vous partis, souvent je passe
Des heures, fort maussade, à remettre à leur place
Au fond de mon cerveau mes plans, mes visions,
Mes sujets éternels de méditations,
Dieu, l’homme, l’avenir, la raison, la démence,
Mes systèmes, tas sombre, échafaudage immense,
Dérangés tout à coup, sans tort de votre part,
Par une question d’enfant, faite au hasard! -
Puisqu’enfin vous voilà sondant mes destinées,
Et que vous me parlez de mes jeunes années,
De mes premiers instincts, de mon premier espoir,
Écoutez, doux amis, qui voulez tout savoir!

J’eus dans ma blonde enfance, hélas! trop éphémère,
Trois maîtres: - un jardin, un vieux prêtre et ma mère.

Le jardin était grand, profond, mystérieux,
Fermé par de hauts murs aux regards curieux,
Semé de fleurs s’ouvrant ainsi que des paupières,
Et d’insectes vermeils qui couraient sur les pierres;
Plein de bourdonnements et de confuses voix;
Au milieu, presque un champ, dans le fond, presque un bois.
Le prêtre, tout nourri de Tacite et d’Homère,
Était un doux vieillard. Ma mère - était ma mère!

Ainsi je grandissais sous ce triple rayon.

Un jour... - Oh! si Gautier me prêtait son crayon,
Je vous dessinerais d’un trait une figure
Qui chez ma mère un jour entra, fâcheux augure!
Un docteur au front pauvre, au maintien solennel,
Et je verrais éclore à vos bouches sans fiel,
Portes de votre coeur qu’aucun souci ne mine,
Ce rire éblouissant qui parfois m’illumine!

Lorsque cet homme entra, je jouais au jardin.
Et rien qu’en le voyant je m’arrêtai soudain.

C’était le principal d’un collège quelconque.

Les tritons que Coypel groupe autour d’une conque,
Les faunes que Watteau dans les bois fourvoya,
Les sorciers de Rembrandt, les gnomes de Goya,
Les diables variés, vrais cauchemars de moine
Dont Callot en riant taquine saint Antoine,
Sont laids, mais sont charmants; difformes, mais remplis
D’un feu qui de leur face anime tous les plis
Et parfois dans leurs yeux jette un éclair rapide.
— Notre homme était fort laid, mais il était stupide.

Pardon, j’en parle encor comme un franc écolier.
C’est mal. Ce que j’ai dit, tâchez de l’oublier;
Car de votre âge heureux, qu’un pédant embarrasse,
J’ai gardé la colère et j’ai perdu la grâce.

Cet homme chauve et noir, très effrayant pour moi,
Et dont ma mère aussi d’abord eut quelque effroi,
Tout en multipliant les humbles attitudes,
Apportait des avis et des sollicitudes:
— Que l’enfant n’était pas dirigé; - que parfois
Il emportait son livre en rêvant dans les bois;
Qu’il croissait au hasard dans cette solitude;
Qu’on devait y songer; que la sévère étude

Était fille de l’ombre et des cloîtres profonds;
Qu’une lampe pendue à de sombres plafonds,
Qui de cent écoliers guide la plume agile,
Éclairait mieux Horace et Catulle et Virgile,
Et versait à l’esprit des rayons bien meilleurs
Que le soleil qui joue à travers l’arbre en fleurs;
Et qu’enfin il fallait aux enfants, - loin des mères, -
Le joug, le dur travail et les larmes amères.
Là-dessus, le collège, aimable et triomphant,
Avec un doux sourire offrait au jeune enfant
Ivre de liberté, d’air, de joie et de roses,
Ses bancs de chêne noirs, ses longs dortoirs moroses,
Ses salles qu’on verrouille et qu’à tous leurs piliers
Sculpte avec un vieux clou l’ennui des écoliers,
Ses magisters qui font, parmi les paperasses,
Manger l’heure du jeu par les pensums voraces,
Et, sans eux, sans gazon, sans arbres, sans fruits mûrs,
Sa grande cour pavée entre quatre murs.

L’homme congédié, de ses discours frappée,
Ma mère demeura triste et préoccupée.
Que faire? que vouloir? qui donc avait raison,
Ou le morne collège, ou l’heureuse maison?
Qui sait mieux de la vie accomplir l’oeuvre austère,
L’écolier turbulent, ou l’enfant solitaire?
Problèmes! questions! elle hésitait beaucoup.
L’affaire était bien grave. Humble femme après tout,
Âme par le destin, non par les livres faite,
De quel front repousser ce tragique prophète,
Au ton si magistral, aux gestes si certains,
Qui lui parlait au nom des Grecs et des Latins?
Le prêtre était savant sans doute; mais, que sais-je?
Apprend-on par le maître ou bien par le collège?
Et puis, enfin, - souvent ainsi nous triomphons! -
L’homme le plus vulgaire a de grands mots profonds:
“ Il est indispensable! - il convient! - il importe! “
Qui troublent quelquefois la femme la plus forte.

Pauvre mère! lequel choisir des deux chemins?
Tout le sort de son fils se pesait dans ses mains.
Tremblante, elle tenait cette lourde balance,
Et croyait bien la voir par moments en silence
Pencher vers le collège, hélas! en opposant
Mon bonheur à venir à mon bonheur présent.

Elle songeait ainsi sans sommeil et sans trêve.

C’était l’été. Vers l’heure où la lune se lève,
Par un de ces beaux soirs qui ressemblent au jour
Avec moins de clarté, mais avec plus d’amour,
Dans son parc, où jouaient le rayon et la brise,
Elle errait, toujours triste et toujours indécise,
Questionnant tout bas l’eau, le ciel, la forêt,
Écoutant au hasard les voix qu’elle entendait.

C’est dans ces moments-là que le jardin paisible,
La broussaille où remue un insecte invisible,
Le scarabée ami des feuilles, le lézard
Courant au clair de lune au fond du vieux puisard,
La faïence à fleur bleue où vit la plante grasse,
Le dôme oriental du sombre Val-de-Grâce,
Le cloître du couvent, brisé, mais doux encor,
Les marronniers, la verte allée aux boutons-d’or,
La statue où sans bruit se meut l’ombre des branches,
Les pâles liserons, les pâquerettes blanches,
Les cent fleurs du buisson, de l’arbre, du roseau,
Qui rendent en parfums ses chansons à l’oiseau,
Se mirent dans la mare ou se cachent dans l’herbe,
Ou qui, de l’ébénier chargeant le front superbe,
Au bord des clairs étangs se mêlant au bouleau,
Tremblent en grappes d’or dans les moires de l’eau,
Et le ciel scintillant derrière les ramées,
Et les toits répandant de charmantes fumées,
C’est dans ces moments-là, comme je vous le dis,
Que tout ce beau jardin, radieux paradis,

Tous ces vieux murs croulants, toutes ces jeunes roses,
Tous ces objets pensifs, toutes ces douces choses,
Parlèrent à ma mère avec l’onde et le vent,
Et lui dirent tout bas: “ Laisse-nous cet enfant! “

“ Laisse-nous cet enfant, pauvre mère troublée!
Cette prunelle ardente, ingénue, étoilée,
Cette tête au front pur qu’aucun deuil ne voila,
Cette âme neuve encor, mère, laisse-nous-la!
Ne vas pas la jeter au hasard dans la foule.
La foule est un torrent qui brise ce qu’il roule.
Ainsi que les oiseaux les enfants ont leurs peurs.
Laisse à notre air limpide, à nos moites vapeurs,
À nos soupirs, légers comme l’aile d’un songe,
Cette bouche où jamais n’a passé le mensonge,
Ce sourire naïf que sa candeur défend!
Ô mère au coeur profond, laisse-nous cet enfant!
Nous ne lui donnerons que de bonnes pensées;
Nous changerons en jour ses lueurs commencées;
Dieu deviendra visible à ses yeux enchantés;
Car nous sommes les fleurs, les rameaux, les clartés,
Nous sommes la nature et la source éternelle
Où toute soif s’épanche, où se lave toute aile;
Et les bois et les champs, du sage seul compris,
Font l’éducation de tous les grands esprits!
Laisse croître l’enfant parmi nos bruits sublimes.
Nous le pénétrerons de ces parfums intimes,
Nés du souffle céleste épars dans tout beau lieu,
Qui font sortir de l’homme et monter jusqu’à Dieu,
Comme le chant d’un luth, comme l’encens d’un vase,
L’espérance, l’amour, la prière, et l’extase!
Nous pencherons ses yeux vers l’ombre d’ici-bas,
Vers le secret de tout entr’ouvert sous ses pas.
D’enfant nous le ferons homme, et d’homme poète.
Pour former de ses sens la corolle inquiète,
C’est nous qu’il faut choisir; et nous lui montrerons
Comment, de l’aube au soir, du chêne aux moucherons,

Emplissant tout, reflets, couleurs, brumes, haleines,
La vie aux mille aspects rit dans les vertes plaines.
Nous te le rendrons simple et des cieux ébloui:
Et nous ferons germer de toutes parts en lui
Pour l’homme, triste effet perdu sous tant de causes,
Cette pitié qui naît du spectacle des choses!
Laissez-nous cet enfant! nous lui ferons un coeur
Qui comprendra la femme; un esprit non moqueur,
Où naîtront aisément le songe et la chimère,
Qui prendra Dieu pour livre et les champs pour grammaire,
Un âme, pur foyer de secrètes faveurs,
Qui luira doucement sur tous les fronts rêveurs,
Et, comme le soleil dans les fleurs fécondées,
Jettera des rayons sur toutes les idées! “

Ainsi parlaient, à l’heure où la ville se tait,
L’astre, la plante et l’arbre, - et ma mère écoutait.

Enfants! ont-ils tenu leur promesse sacrée?
Je ne sais. Mais je sais que ma mère adorée
Les crut, et, m’épargnant d’ennuyeuses prisons,
Confia ma jeune âme à leurs douces leçons.

Dès lors, en attendant la nuit, heure où l’étude
Rappelait ma pensée à sa grave attitude,
Tout le jour, libre, heureux, seul sous le firmament,
Je pus errer à l’aise en ce jardin charmant,
Contemplant les fruits d’or, l’eau rapide ou stagnante,
L’étoile épanouie et la fleur rayonnante,
Et les prés et les bois, que mon esprit le soir,
Revoyait dans Virgile ainsi qu’en un miroir.

Enfants! aimez les champs, les vallons, les fontaines,
Les chemins que le soir emplit de voix lointaines,
Et l’onde et le sillon, flanc jamais assoupi,
Où germe la pensée à côté de l’épi.
Prenez-vous par la main et marchez dans les herbes;

Regardez ceux qui vont liant les blondes gerbes;
Épelez dans le ciel plein de lettres de feu,
Et, quand un oiseau chante, écoutez parler Dieu.
La vie avec le choc des passions contraires
Vous attend; soyez bons, soyez vrais, soyez frères;
Unis contre le monde où l'esprit se corrompt,
Lisez au même livre en vous touchant du front,
Et n'oubliez jamais que l'âme humble et choisie
Faite pour la lumière et pour la poésie,
Que les coeurs où Dieu met des échos sérieux
Pour tous les bruits qu'anime un sens mystérieux,
Dans un cri, dans un son, dans un vague murmure,
Entendent les conseils de toute la nature!

XX

AU STATUAIRE DAVID

I

David! comme un grand roi qui partage à des princes
Les états paternels provinces par provinces,
Dieu donne à chaque artiste un empire divers;
Au poète le souffle épars dans l’univers,
La vie et la pensée et les foudres tonnantes,
Et le splendide essaim des strophes frissonnantes
Volant de l’homme à l’ange et du monstre à la fleur;
La forme au statuaire; au peintre la couleur;
Au doux musicien, rêveur limpide et sombre,
Le monde obscur des sons qui murmure dans l’ombre.

La forme au statuaire! - Oui, mais, tu le sais bien,
La forme, ô grand sculpteur, c’est tout et ce n’est rien.
Ce n’est rien sans l’esprit, c’est tout avec l’idée!
Il faut que, sous le ciel, de soleil inondée,
Debout sous les flambeaux d’un grand temple doré,
Ou seule avec la nuit dans un antre sacré,
Au fond des bois dormants comme au seuil d’un théâtre,
La figure de pierre, ou de cuivre, ou d’albâtre,
Porte divinement sur son front calme et fier
La beauté, ce rayon, la gloire, cet éclair!
Il faut qu’un souffle ardent lui gonfle la narine,
Que la force puissante emplisse sa poitrine,
Que la grâce en riant ait arrondi ses doigts,
Que sa bouche muette ait pourtant une voix!
Il faut qu’elle soit grave et pour les mains glacée,
Mais pour les yeux vivante, et, devant la pensée,
Devant le pur regard de l’âme et du ciel bleu,
Nue avec majesté comme Adam devant Dieu!
Il faut que, Vénus chaste, elle sorte de l’onde,

Semant au loin la vie et l'amour sur le monde,
Et faisant autour d'elle, en son superbe essor,
Partout où s'éparpille et tombe en gouttes d'or,
L'eau de ses longs cheveux, humide et sacré voile,
De toute herbe une fleur, de tout oeil une étoile!
Il faut, si l'art chrétien anime le sculpteur,
Qu'avec le même charme elle ait plus de hauteur;
Qu'Âme ailée, elle rie et de Satan se joue;
Que, Martyre, elle chante à côté de la roue;
Ou que, Vierge divine, astre du gouffre amer,
Son regard soit si doux qu'il apaise la mer!

II

Voilà ce que tu sais, ô noble statuaire!
Toi qui dans l'art profond, comme en un sanctuaire,
Entras bien jeune encor pour n'en sortir jamais!
Esprit, qui, te posant sur les plus purs sommets
Pour créer ta grande oeuvre, où sont tant d'harmonies,
Près de la flamme au front de tous les fiers génies!
Voilà ce que tu sais, toi qui sens, toi qui vois!
Maître sévère et doux qu'éclairent à la fois,
Comme un double rayon qui jette un jour étrange,
Le jeune Raphaël et le vieux Michel-Ange!
Et tu sais bien aussi quel souffle inspirateur
Parfois, comme un vent sombre, emporte le sculpteur,
Âme dans Isaïe et Phidias trempée,
De l'ode étroite et haute à l'immense épopée!

III

Les grands hommes, héros ou penseurs, - demi-dieux! -
Tour à tour sur le peuple ont passé radieux,
Les uns armés d'un glaive et les autres d'un livre,
Ceux-ci montrant du doigt la route qu'il faut suivre,
Ceux-là forçant la cause à sortir de l'effet;
L'artiste ayant un rêve et le savant un fait;

L’un a trouvé l’aimant, la presse, la boussole,
L’autre un monde où l’on va, l’autre un vers qui console;
Ce roi, juste et profond, pour l’aider en chemin,
A pris la liberté franchement par la main;
Ces tribuns ont forgé des freins aux républiques;
Ce prêtre, fondateur d’hospices angéliques,
Sous son toit, que réchauffe une haleine de Dieu,
A pris l’enfant sans mère et le vieillard sans feu,
Ce mage, dont l’esprit réfléchit les étoiles,
D’Isis l’un après l’autre a levé tous les voiles;
Ce juge, abolissant l’infâme tombereau,
A raturé le code à l’endroit du bourreau;
Ensemençant malgré les clameurs insensées,
D’écoles les hameaux et les coeurs de pensées,
Pour nous rendre meilleurs ce vrai sage est venu;
En de graves instant cet autre a contenu,
Sous ses puissantes mains à la foule imposées,
Le peuple, grand faiseur de couronnes brisées;
D’autres ont traversé sur un pont chancelant,
Sur la mine qu’un fort recelait en son flanc,
Sur la brèche par où s’écroule une muraille,
Un horrible ouragan de flamme et de mitraille;
Dans un siècle de haine, âge impie et moqueur,
Ceux-là, poètes saints, ont fait entendre en choeur,
Aux sombres nations que la discorde pousse,
Des champs et des forêts la voix auguste et douce
Car l’hymne universel éteint les passions;
Car c’est surtout aux jours des révolutions,
Morne et brûlant désert où l’homme s’aventure,
Que l’art se désaltère à ta source, ô nature!
Tous ces hommes, coeurs purs, esprits de vérité,
Fronts où se résuma toute l’humanité,
Rêveurs ou rayonnants, sont debout dans l’histoire,
Et tous ont leur martyre auprès de leur victoire.
La vertu, c’est un livre austère et triomphant
Où tout père doit faire épeler son enfant;
Chaque homme illustre, ayant quelque divine empreinte,

De ce grand alphabet est une lettre sainte.
Sous leurs pieds sont groupés leurs symboles sacrés,
Astres, lyres, compas, lions démesurés,
Aigles à l’oeil de flamme, aux vastes envergures.
— Le sculpteur ébloui contemple ces figures! -
Il songe à la patrie, aux tombeaux solennels,
Aux cités à remplir d’exemples éternels;
Et voici que déjà, vision magnifique!
Mollement éclairés d’un reflet pacifique,
Grandissant hors du sol de moment en moment,
De vagues bas-reliefs chargés confusément,
Au fond de son esprit, que la pensée encombre,
Les énormes frontons apparaissent dans l’ombre!

IV

N’est-ce pas? c’est ainsi qu’en ton cerveau, sans bruit,
L’édifice s’ébauche et l’oeuvre se construit?
C’est là ce qui se passe en ta grande âme émue
Quand tout un panthéon ténébreux s’y remue?
C’est ainsi, n’est-ce pas, ô maître! que s’unit
L’homme à l’architecture et l’idée au granit?
Oh! qu’en ces instants-là ta fonction est haute!
Au seuil de ton fronton tu reçois comme un hôte
Ces hommes plus qu’humains. Sur un bloc de Paros
Tu t’assieds face à face avec tous ces héros
Et là, devant tes yeux qui jamais ne défaillent,
Ces ombres, qui seront bronze et marbre, tressaillent.
L’avenir est à toi, ce but de tous leurs voeux,
Et tu peux le donner, ô maître, à qui tu veux!
Toi, répandant sur tous ton équité complète,
Prêtre autant que sculpteur, juge autant que poète,
Accueillant celui-ci, rejetant celui-là,
Louant Napoléon, gourmandant Attila,
Parfois grandissant l’un par le contact de l’autre,
Dérangeant le guerrier pour mieux placer l’apôtre,
Tu fais des dieux! - tu dis, abaissant ta hauteur,

Au pauvre vieux soldat, à l’humble vieux pasteur:
— Entrez! je vous connais. Vos couronnes sont prêtes.
Et tu dis à des rois: — Je ne sais qui vous êtes.

V

Car il ne suffit point d’avoir été des rois,
D’avoir porté le sceptre, et le globe, et la croix,
Pour que le fier poète et l’altier statuaire
Étoilent dans sa nuit votre drap mortuaire,
Et des hauts panthéons vous ouvrent les chemins!

C’est vous-mêmes, ô rois, qui de vos propres mains
Bâtissez sur vos noms ou la gloire ou la honte!
Ce que nous avons fait tôt ou tard nous raconte.
On peut vaincre le monde, avoir un peuple, agir
Sur un siècle, guérir sa plaie ou l’élargir, -
Lorsque vos missions seront enfin remplies,
Des choses qu’ici-bas vous aurez accomplies
Une voix sortira, voix de haine ou d’amour,
Sombre comme le bruit du verrou dans la tour,
Ou douce comme un chant dans le nid des colombes,
Qui fera remuer la pierre de vos tombes.
Cette voix, l’avenir, grave et fatal témoin,
Est d’avance penché qui l’écoute de loin.
Et là, point de caresse et point de flatterie,
Point de bouche à mentir façonnée et nourrie,
Pas d’hosanna payé, pas d’écho complaisant
Changeant la plainte amère en cri reconnaissant.
Non, les vices hideux, les trahisons, les crimes,
Comme les dévouements et les vertus sublimes,
Portent un témoignage intègre et souverain.
Les actions qu’on fait ont des lèvres d’airain.

VI

Que sur ton atelier, maître, un rayon demeure!

Là, dans le silence, l’art, l’étude oubliant l’heure,
Dans l’ombre les essais que tu répudias,
D’un côté Jean Goujon, de l’autre Phidias,
Des pierres, de pensée à demi revêtues,
Un tumulte muet d’immobiles statues,
Les bustes méditant dans les coins assombris,
Je ne sais quelle paix qui tombe des labris,
Tout est grand, tout est beau, tout charme et tout domine.
Toi qu’à l’intérieur l’art divin illumine,
Tu regardes passer, grave et sans dire un mot,
Dans ton âme tranquille où le jour vient d’en haut,
Tous les nobles aspects de la figure humaine.
Comme dans une église à pas lents se promène
Un grand peuple pensif auquel un dieu sourit,
Ces fantômes sereins marchent dans ton esprit.
Ils errent à travers tes rêves poétiques
Faits d’ombres et de lueurs et de vagues portiques,
Parfois palais vermeil, parfois tombeau dormant,
Secrète architecture, immense entassement
Qui, jetant des rumeurs joyeuses et plaintives,
De ta grande pensée emplit les perspectives,
Car l’antique Babel n’est pas morte, et revit
Sous les front des songeurs. Dans ta tête, ô David!
La spirale se tord, le pilier se projette;
Et dans l’obscurité de ton cerveau végète
La profonde forêt, qu’on ne voit point ailleurs,
Des chapiteaux touffus pleins d’oiseaux et de fleurs!

VII

Maintenant, - toi qui vas hors des routes tracées,
Ô pétrisseur de bronze, ô mouleur de pensées,
Considère combien les hommes sont petits,
Et maintiens-toi superbe au-dessus des partis!
Garde la dignité de ton ciseau sublime.
Ne laisse pas toucher ton marbre par la lime
Des sombres passions qui rongent tant d’esprits.

Michel-Ange avait Rome et David a Paris.
Donne donc à ta ville, ami, ce grand exemple
Que, si les marchands vils n’entrent pas dans le temple,
Les fureurs des tribuns et leur songe abhorré
N’entrent pas dans le coeur de l’artiste sacré.
Refuse aux cours ton art, donne aux peuples tes veilles,
C’est bien, ô mon sculpteur! mais loin de tes oreilles
Chasse ceux qui s’en vont flattant les carrefours.
Toi, dans ton atelier, tu dois rêver toujours,
Et, de tout vice humain écrasant la couleuvre,
Toi-même par degrés t’éblouir de ton oeuvre!
Ce que ces hommes-là font dans l’ombre ou défont
Ne vaut pas ton regard levé vers le plafond
Cherchant la beauté pure et le grand et le juste.
Leur mission est basse et la tienne est auguste.
Et qui donc oserait mêler un seul moment
Aux mêmes visions, au même aveuglement,
Aux mêmes voeux haineux, insensés ou féroces,
Eux, esclaves des nains, toi, père des colosses!

XXI

À UN POÈTE

Ami, cache ta vie et répands ton esprit.

Un tertre, où le gazon diversement fleurit;
Des ravins où l'on voit grimper les chèvres blanches;
Un vallon, abrité sous un réseau de branches
Pleines de nids d'oiseaux, de murmures, de voix,
Qu'un vent joyeux remue, et d'où tombe parfois,
Comme un sequin jeté par une main distraite,
Un rayon de soleil dans ton âme secrète;
Quelques rocs, par Dieu même arrangés savamment
Pour faire des échos au fond du bois dormant;
Voilà ce qu'il te faut pour séjour, pour demeure!
C'est là, - que ta maison chante, aime, rie ou pleure, -
Qu'il faut vivre, enfouir ton toit, borner tes jours,
Envoyant un soupir à peine aux antres sourds,
Mirant dans ta pensée intérieure et sombre
La vie obscure et douce et les heures sans nombre,
Bon d'ailleurs, et tournant, sans trouble ni remords,
Ton coeur vers les enfants, ton âme vers les morts!
Et puis, en même temps, au hasard, par le monde,
Suivant sa fantaisie auguste et vagabonde,
Loin de toi, par delà ton horizon vermeil,
Laisse ta poésie aller en plein soleil!
Dans les rauques cités, dans les champs taciturnes,
Effleurée en passant des lèvres et des urnes,
Laisse-la s'épancher, cristal jamais terni,
Et fuir, roulant toujours vers Dieu, gouffre infini,
Calme et pure, à travers les âmes fécondées,
Un immense courant de rêves et d'idées,
Qui recueille en passant, dans son flot solennel,
Toute eau qui sort de la terre ou qui descend du ciel!
Toi, sois heureux dans l'ombre. En ta vie ignorée,

Dans ta tranquillité vénérable et sacrée,
Reste réfugié, penseur mystérieux!
Et que le voyageur malade et sérieux
Puisse, si le hasard l’amène en ta retraite,
Puiser en toi la paix, l’espérance discrète,
L’oubli de la fatigue et l’oubli du danger,
Et boire à ton esprit limpide, sans songer
Que, là-bas, tout un peuple aux mêmes eaux s’abreuve.

Sois petit comme source et sois grand comme fleuve.

XXII

GUITARE

Gastibelza, l’homme à la carabine,
Chantait ainsi:
“ Quelqu’un a-t-il connu doña Sabine?
Quelqu’un d’ici?
Dansez, chantez, villageois! la nuit gagne
Le mont Falù.
— Le vent qui vient à travers la montagne
Me rendra fou!

“ Quelqu’un de vous a-t-il connu Sabine,
Ma señora?
Sa mère était la vieille maugrabine
D’Antequera,
Qui chaque nuit criait dans la Tour-Magne
Comme un hibou... -
Le vent qui vient à travers la montagne
Me rendra fou!

“ Dansez, chantez! Des biens que l’heure envoie
Il faut user.
Elle était jeune et son oeil plein de joie
Faisait penser. -
À ce vieillard qu’un enfant accompagne
Jetez un sou! ... -
Le vent qui vient à travers la montagne
Me rendra fou.

“ Vraiment, la reine eût près d’elle été laide
Quand, vers le soir,
Elle passait sur le pont de Tolède
En corset noir.
Un chapelet du temps de Charlemagne

Ornait son cou... -
Le vent qui vient à travers la montagne
Me rendra fou.

“ Le roi disait en la voyant si belle
À son neveu: — Pour un baiser, pour un sourire d’elle,
Pour un cheveu,
Infant don Ruy, je donnerais l’Espagne
Et le Pérou! -
Le vent qui vient à travers la montagne
Me rendra fou.

“ Je ne sais pas si j’aimais cette dame,
Mais je sais bien
Que pour avoir un regard de son âme,
Moi, pauvre chien,
J’aurais gaîment passé dix ans au bagne
Sous le verrou... -
Le vent qui vient à travers la montagne
Me rendra fou.

“ Un jour d’été que tout était lumière,
Vie et douceur,
Elle s’en vint jouer dans la rivière
Avec sa soeur,
Je vis le pied de sa jeune compagne
Et son genou... -
Le vent qui vient à travers la montagne
Me rendra fou.

“ Quand je voyais cette enfant, moi le pâtre
De ce canton,
Je croyais voir la belle Cléopâtre,
Qui, nous dit-on,
Menait César, empereur d’Allemagne,
Par le licou... -
Le vent qui vient à travers la montagne

Me rendra fou.

“ Dansez, chantez, villageois, la nuit tombe!
Sabine, un jour,
A tout vendu, sa beauté de colombe,
Et son amour,
Pour l’anneau d’or du comte de Saldagne,
Pour un bijou... -
Le vent qui vient à travers la montagne
Me rendra fou.

“ Sur ce vieux banc souffrez que je m’appuie,
Car je suis las.
Avec ce comte elle s’est donc enfuie!
Enfuie, hélas!
Par le chemin qui va vers la Cerdagne,
Je ne sais où... -
Le vent qui vient à travers la montagne
Me rendra fou.

“ Je la voyais passer de ma demeure,
Et c’était tout.
Mais à présent je m’ennuie à toute heure,
Plein de dégoût,
Rêveur oisif, l’âme dans la campagne,
La dague au clou... -
Le vent qui vient à travers la montagne
M’a rendu fou! “

XXIII

AUTRE GUITARE

Comment, disaient-ils,
Avec nos nacelles,
Fuir les alguazils?
— Ramez, disaient-elles.

Comment, disaient-ils,
Oublier querelles,
Misère et périls?
— Dormez, disaient-elles.

Comment, disaient-ils,
Enchanter les belles
Sans philtres subtils?
— Aimez, disaient-elles.

XXIV

QUAND TU ME PARLES DE GLOIRE

Quand tu me parles de gloire,
Je souris amèrement.
Cette voix que tu veux croire,
Moi, je sais bien qu’elle ment.

La gloire est vite abattue;
L’envie au sanglant flambeau
N’épargne cette statue
Qu’assise au seuil d’un tombeau.

La prospérité s’envole,
Le pouvoir tombe et s’enfuit.
Un peu d’amour qui console
Vaut mieux et fait moins de bruit.

Je ne veux pas d’autres choses
Que ton sourire et ta voix,
De l’air, de l’ombre et des roses,
Et des rayons dans les bois!

Je ne veux, moi qui me voile
Dans la joie ou la douleur,
Que ton regard, mon étoile!
Que ton haleine, ô ma fleur!

Sous ta paupière vermeille
Qu’inonde un céleste jour,
Tout un univers sommeille.
Je n’y cherche que l’amour!

Ma pensée, urne profonde,
Vase à la douce liqueur,

Qui pourrait emplir le monde,
Ne veut emplir que ton coeur!

Chante! en moi l’extase coule.
Ris-moi! c’est mon seul besoin.
Que m’importe cette foule
Qui fait sa rumeur au loin!

Dans l’ivresse où tu me plonges,
En vain, pour briser nos noeuds,
Je vois passer dans mes songes
Les poètes lumineux.

Je veux, quoi qu’ils me conseillent,
Préférer, jusqu’à la mort,
Aux fanfares qui m’éveillent
Ta chanson qui me rendort.

Je veux, dût mon nom suprême
Au front des cieux s’allumer,
Qu’une moitié de moi-même
Reste ici-bas pour t’aimer!

Laisse-moi t’aimer dans l’ombre,
Triste, ou du moins sérieux.
La tristesse est un lieu sombre
Où l’amour rayonne mieux.

Ange aux yeux pleins d’étincelles,
Femme aux jours de pleurs noyés,
Prends mon âme sur tes ailes,
Laisse mon coeur à tes pieds!

XXV

EN PASSANT DANS LA PLACE LOUIS XV UN JOUR DE FÊTE PUBLIQUE

— Allons, dit-elle, encor! pourquoi ce front courbé?
Songeur, dans votre puits vous voilà retombé!
À quoi bon pour rêver venir dans une fête?
Moi, je lui dis, tandis qu'elle inclinait la tête,
Et que son bras charmant à mon bras s'appuyait:
— Oui, c'est dans cette place où notre âge inquiet
Mit une pierre afin de cacher une idée,
C'est bien ici qu'un jour de soleil inondée,
La grande nation dans la grande cité
Vint voir passer en pompe une douce beauté!
Ange à qui l'on rêvait des ailes repliées!
Vierge la veille encor, des jeunes mariées
Ayant l'étonnement et la fraîche pâleur,
Qui, reine et femme, étoile en même temps que fleur,
Unissait, pour charmer cette foule attendrie,
Le doux nom d'Antoinette au beau nom de Marie!

Son prince la suivait, ils souriaient entre eux,
Et tous en la voyant disaient: Qu'il est heureux! -

Et je me tus alors, car mon coeur était sombre;
La laissant contempler la fête aux bruits sans nombre,
Le fleuve où se croisaient cent bateaux pavoisés,
Le peuple, les vieillards à l'ombre reposés,
Les écoliers jouant par bandes séparées,
Et le soleil tranquille, et, de joie enivrées,
Les bouches qui, couvrant l'orchestre aux vagues sons,
Jetaient une vapeur de confuses chansons.

Moi, vers ce qui se meut dans une ombre éternelle,
Je m'étais retourné. L'âme est une prunelle.

— Oh! pensais-je, pouvoir étrange et surhumain
De celui qui nous tient palpitants dans sa main!
Ô volonté du ciel! abîme où l’oeil se noie!
Gouffre où depuis Adam le genre humain tournoie!
Comme vous nous prenez et vous nous rejetez!
Comme vous vous jouez de nos prospérités!
Sur votre sable, ô Dieu, notre granit se fonde!
Oh! que l’homme est plongé dans une nuit profonde!
Comme tout ce qu’il fait, hélas! en s’achevant
Sur lui croule! et combien il arrive souvent
Qu’à l’heure où nous rêvons un avenir suprême,
Le sort de nous se rit, et que, sous nos pas même,
Dans cette terre où rien ne nous semble creusé,
Quelque chose d’horrible est déjà déposé!
Louis seize, le jour de sa noce royale,
Avait déjà le pied sur la place fatale
Où, formé lentement au souffle du Très-Haut,
Comme un grain dans le sol, germait son échafaud!

XXVI

MILLE CHEMINS, UN SEUL BUT

Le chasseur songe dans les bois
À des beautés sur l’herbe assises,
Et dans l’ombre il croit voir parfois
Danser des formes indécises.

Le soldat pense à ses destins
Tout en veillant sur les empires,
Et dans ses souvenirs lointains
Entrevoit de vagues sourires.

Le pâtre attend sous le ciel bleu
L’heure où son étoile paisible
Va s’épanouir, fleur de feu,
Au bout d’une tige invisible.

Regarde-les, regarde encor
Comme la vierge, fille d’Ève,
Jette en courant dans les blés d’or
Sa chanson qui contient son rêve!

Vois errer dans les champs en fleur,
Dos courbé, paupières baissées,
Le poète, cet oiseleur,
Qui cherche à prendre des pensées.

Vois sur la mer les matelots
Implorant la terre embaumée,
Lassés de l’écume des flots,
Et demandant une fumée!

Se rappelant quand le flot noir
Bat les flancs plaintifs du navire,

Les hameaux si joyeux le soir,
Les arbres pleins d’éclats de rire!

Vois le prêtre, priant pour tous,
Front pur qui sous nos fautes penche,
Songer dans le temple, à genoux
Sur les plis de sa robe blanche.

Vois s’élever sur les hauteurs
Tous ces grands penseurs que tu nommes,
Sombres esprit dominateurs,
Chênes dans la forêt des hommes.

Vois, couvant des yeux son trésor,
La mère contempler, ravie,
Son enfant, coeur sans ombre encor,
Vase que remplira la vie!

Tous, dans la joie ou dans l’affront,
Portent, sans nuage et sans tache,
Un mot qui rayonne à leur front,
Dans leur âme un mot qui se cache.

Selon les desseins du Seigneur,
Le mot qu’on voit pour tous varie;
— L’un a: Gloire! l’autre a: Bonheur!
L’un dit: Vertu! l’autre: Patrie!

Le mot caché ne change pas.
Dans tous les coeurs toujours le même;
Il y chante ou gémit tout bas;
Et ce mot, c’est le mot suprême!

C’est le mot qui peut assoupir
L’ennui du front le plus morose!
C’est le mystérieux soupir
Qu’à toute heure fait toute chose!

C’est le mot d’où les autres mots
Sortent comme d’un tronc austère,
Et qui remplit de ses rameaux
Tous les langages de la terre!

C’est le verbe, obscur ou vermeil,
Qui luit dans le reflet des fleuves,
Dans le phare, dans le soleil,
Dans la sombre lampe des veuves!

Qui se mêle au bruit des roseaux,
Au tressaillement des colombes;
Qui jase et rit dans les berceaux,
Et qu’on sent vivre au fond des tombes!

Qui fait éclore dans les bois
Les feuilles, les souffles, les ailes,
La clémence au coeur des grands rois,
Le sourire aux lèvres des belles!

C’est le noeud des prés et des eaux!
C’est le charme qui se compose
Du plus tendre cri des oiseaux,
Du plus doux parfum de la rose!

C’est l’hymne que le gouffre amer
Chante en poussant au port des voiles!
C’est le mystère de la mer,
Et c’est le secret des étoiles!

Ce mot, fondement éternel
De la seconde des deux Romes,
C’est Foi dans la langue du ciel,
Amour dans la langue des hommes!

Aimer, c’est avoir dans les mains

Un fil pour toutes les épreuves,
Un flambeau pour tous les chemins,
Une coupe pour tous les fleuves!

Aimer, c’est comprendre les cieux.
C’est mettre, qu’on dorme ou qu’on veille,
Une lumière dans ses yeux,
Une musique en son oreille!

C’est se chauffer à ce qui bout!
C’est pencher son âme embaumée
Sur le côté divin de tout!
Ainsi, ma douce bien-aimée,

Tu mêles ton coeur et tes sens,
Dans la retraite où tu m’accueilles,
Aux dialogues ravissants
Des flots, des astres et des feuilles!

La vitre laisse voir le jour;
Malgré nos brumes et nos doutes,
Ô mon ange! à travers l’amour
Les vérités paraissent toutes!

L’homme et la femme, couple heureux,
À qui le coeur tient lieu d’apôtre,
Laissent voir le ciel derrière eux,
Et sont transparents l’un pour l’autre.

Ils ont en eux, comme un lac noir
Reflète un astre en son eau pure,
Du Dieu caché qu’on ne peut voir
Une lumineuse figure!

Aimons! prions! les bois sont verts,
L’été resplendit sur la mousse,
Les germes vivent entr’ouverts,

L’onde s’épanche et l’herbe pousse!

Que la foule, bien loin de nous
Suive ses routes insensées.
Aimons, et tombons à genoux,
Et laissons aller nos pensées!

L’amour, qu’il vienne tôt ou tard,
Prouve Dieu dans notre âme sombre.
Il faut bien un corps quelque part
Pour que le miroir ait une ombre.

XXVII

Oh! quand je dors, viens auprès de ma couche,

Oh! quand je dors, viens auprès de ma couche,
Comme à Pétrarque apparaissait Laura,
Et qu'en passant ton haleine me touche... -
Soudain ma bouche
S'entrouvrira!

Sur mon front morne où peut-être s'achève
Un songe noir qui trop longtemps dura,
Que ton regard comme un astre se lève... -
Soudain mon rêve
Rayonnera!

Puis sur ma lèvre où voltige une flamme,
Éclair d'amour que Dieu même épura,
Pose un baiser, et d'ange deviens femme... -
Soudain mon âme
S'éveillera!

XXVIII

À UNE JEUNE FEMME

Voyez-vous, un parfum éveille la pensée.
Repliez, belle enfant par l’aube caressée,
Cet éventail ailé, pourpre, or et vermillon,
Qui tremble dans vos mains comme un grand papillon,
Et puis écoutez-moi. - Dieu fait l’odeur des roses
Comme il fait un abîme, avec autant de choses.
Celui-ci, qui se meurt sur votre sein charmant,
N’aurait pas ce parfum qui monte doucement
Comme un encens divin vers votre beauté pure,
Si sa tige, parmi l’eau, l’air et la verdure,
Dans la création prenant sa part de tout,
N’avait profondément plongé par quelque bout,
Pauvre et fragile fleur pour tous les vents béante,
Au sein mystérieux de la terre géante.
Là, par un lent travail que Dieu lui seul connaît,
Fraîcheur du flot qui court, blancheur du jour qui naît,
Souffle de ce qui coule, ou végète, ou se traîne,
L’esprit de ce qui vit dans la nuit souterraine,
Fumée, onde, vapeur, de loin comme de près,
— Non sans faire avec tout des échanges secrets, -
Elle a dérobé tout, son calme à l’antre sombre,
Au diamant sa flamme, à la forêt son ombre,
Et peut-être, qui sait? sur l’aile du matin
Quelque ineffable haleine à l’océan lointain!
Et vivant alambic que Dieu lui-même forme,
Où filtre et se répand la terre, vase énorme,
Avec les bois, les champs, les nuages, les eaux,
Et l’air tout pénétré des chansons des oiseaux,
La racine, humble, obscure, au travail résignée,
Pour la superbe fleur par le soleil baignée,
A, sans en rien garder, fait ce parfum si doux,
Qui vient si mollement de la nature à vous,

Qui vous charme, et se mêle à votre esprit, madame,
Car l’âme d’une fleur parle au coeur d’une femme.

Encore un mot, et puis je vous laisse rêver.
Pour qu’atteignant au but où tout doit s’élever,
Chaque chose ici-bas prenne un attrait suprême,
Pour que la fleur embaume et pour que la vierge aime,
Pour que, puisant la vie au grand centre commun,
La corolle ait une âme et la femme un parfum,
Sous le soleil qui luit, sous l’amour qui fascine,
Il faut, fleur de beauté, tenir par la racine,
L’une au monde idéal, l’autre au monde réel,
Les roses à la terre et les femmes au ciel.

XXIX

À LOUIS B.

Ô Louis! je songeais! - Baigné d’ombre sereine,
Le soir tombait; des feux scintillaient dans la plaine;
Les vastes flots berçaient le nid de l’alcyon;
J’écoutais vers le ciel, où toute aube commence,
Monter confusément une louange immense
Des deux extrémités de la création.

Ce que Dieu fit petit chantait dans son délire
Tout ce que Dieu fait grand, et je voyais sourire
Le colosse à l’atome et l’étoile au flambeau;
La nature semblait n’avoir qu’une âme aimante.
La montagne disait: Que la fleur est charmante!
Le moucheron disait: Que l’océan est beau!

XXX

À cette terre, où l’on ploie

À cette terre, où l’on ploie
Sa tente au déclin du jour,
Ne demande pas la joie.
Contente-toi de l’amour!

Excepté lui, tout s’efface.
La vie est un sombre lieu
Où chaque chose qui passe
Ébauche l’homme pour Dieu.

L’homme est l’arbre à qui la sève
Manque avant qu’il soit en fleur.
Son sort jamais ne s’achève
Que du côté du malheur.

Tous cherchent la joie ensemble;
L’esprit rit à tout venant;
Chacun tend sa main qui tremble
Vers quelque objet rayonnant.

Mais vers toute âme, humble ou fière,
Le malheur monte à pas lourds,
Comme un spectre aux pieds de pierre;
Le reste flotte toujours!

Tout nous manque, hormis la peine!
Le bonheur, pour l’homme en pleurs,
N’est qu’une figure vaine
De choses qui sont ailleurs.

L’espoir c’est l’aube incertaine;
Sur notre but sérieux

C’est la dorure lointaine
D’un rayon mystérieux.

C’est le reflet, brume ou flamme,
Que dans leur calme éternel
Versent d’en haut sur notre âme
Les félicités du ciel.

Ce sont les visions blanches
Qui, jusqu’à nos yeux maudits,
Viennent à travers les branches
Des arbres du paradis!

C’est l’ombre que sur nos grèves
Jettent ces arbres charmants
Dont l’âme entend dans ses rêves
Les vagues frissonnements!

Ce reflet des biens sans nombre,
Nous l’appelons le bonheur;
Et nous voulons saisir l’ombre
Quand la chose est au Seigneur!

Va, si haut nul ne s’élève;
Sur terre il faut demeurer;
On sourit de ce qu’on rêve,
Mais ce qu’on a, fait pleurer.

Puisqu’un Dieu saigne au Calvaire,
Ne nous plaignons pas, crois-moi.
Souffrons! c’est la loi sévère.
Aimons! c’est la douce loi.

Aimons! soyons deux! Le sage
N’est pas seul dans son vaisseau.
Les deux yeux font le visage;
Les deux ailes font l’oiseau.

Soyons deux! - Tout nous convie
À nous aimer jusqu’au soir.
N’ayons à deux qu’une vie!
N’ayons à deux qu’un espoir!

Dans ce monde de mensonges,
Moi, j’aimerai mes douleurs,
Si mes rêves sont tes songes,
Si mes larmes sont tes pleurs!

XXXI

RENCONTRE

Après avoir donné son aumône au plus jeune,
Pensif, il s’arrêta pour les voir. - Un long jeûne
Avait maigri leur joue, avait flétri leur front.
Ils s’étaient tous les quatre à terre assis en rond,
Puis, s’étant partagé, comme feraient des anges,
Un morceau de pain noir ramassé dans nos fanges,
Ils mangeaient; mais d’un air si morne et si navré
Qu’en les voyant ainsi toute femme eût pleuré.
C’est qu’ils étaient perdus sur la terre où nous sommes,
Et tout seuls, quatre enfants, dans la foule des hommes!
— Oui, sans père ni mère! Et pas même un grenier.
Pas d’abri. Tous pieds nus; excepté le dernier
Qui traînait, pauvre amour, sous son pied qui chancelle,
De vieux souliers trop grands noués d’une ficelle.
Dans des fossés, la nuit, ils dorment bien souvent.
Aussi, comme ils ont froid, le matin, en plein vent,
Quand l’arbre, frissonnant au cri de l’alouette,
Dresse sur un ciel clair sa noire silhouette!
Leurs mains rouges étaient roses quand Dieu les fit.
Le dimanche, au hameau, cherchant un vil profit,
Ils errent. Le petit, sous sa pâleur malsaine,
Chante, sans la comprendre, une chanson obscène,
Pour faire rire - hélas! lui qui pleure en secret! -
Quelque immonde vieillard au seuil d’un cabaret;
Si bien que, quelquefois, du bouge qui s’égaie
Il tombe à leur faim sombre une abjecte monnaie,
Aumône de l’enfer que jette le péché,
Sou hideux sur lequel le démon a craché!
Pour l’instant, ils mangeaient derrière une broussaille,
Cachés, et plus tremblants que le faon qui tressaille,
Car souvent on les bat, on les chasse toujours!
C’est ainsi qu’innocents condamnés, tous les jours

Ils passent affamés, sous mes murs, sous les vôtres,
Et qu’ils vont au hasard, l’aîné menant les autres.

Alors, lui qui rêvait, il regarda là-haut.
Et son oeil ne vit rien que l’éther calme et chaud,
Le soleil bienveillant, l’air plein d’ailes dorées,
Et la sérénité des voûtes azurées,
Et le bonheur, les cris, les rires triomphants
Qui des oiseaux du ciel tombaient sur ces enfants.

XXXII

QUAND VOUS VOUS ASSEMBLEZ, BRUYANTE MULTITUDE,

Quand vous vous assemblez, bruyante multitude,
Pour aller le traquer jusqu’en sa solitude,
Vous excitant l’un l’autre, acharnés furieux,
— Ne le sentez-vous pas? - le peuple sérieux,
Qui rêvait à vos cris un dragon dans son antre,
Avec la flamme aux yeux, avec l’écaille au ventre,
S’étonne de ne voir d’autre objet à vos coups
Que cet homme pensif, mystérieux et doux.

XXXIII

L'OMBRE

Il lui disait: — Vos chants sont tristes. Qu'avez-vous?
Ange inquiet, quels pleurs mouillent vos yeux si doux?
Pourquoi, pauvre âme tendre, inclinée et fidèle,
Comme un jonc que le vent a ployé d'un coup d'aile,
Pencher votre beau front assombri par instants?
Il faut vous réjouir, car voici le printemps,
Avril, saison dorée, où, parmi les zéphires,
Les parfums, les chansons, les baisers, les sourires,
Et les charmants propos qu'on dit à demi-voix,
L'amour revient aux coeurs comme la feuille aux bois! -
Elle lui répondit de sa voix grave et douce:
— Ami, vous êtes fort. Sûr du Dieu qui vous pousse,
L'oeil fixé sur un but, vous marchez droit et fier,
Sans la peur de demain, sans le souci d'hier,
Et rien ne peut troubler, pour votre âme ravie,
La belle vision qui vous cache la vie.
Mais moi je pleure! - Morne, attachée à vos pas,
Atteinte à tous ces coups que vous ne sentez pas,
Coeur fait, moins l'espérance, à l'image du vôtre,
Je souffre dans ce monde et vous chantez dans l'autre.
Tout m'attriste, avenir que je vois à faux jour,
Aigreur de la raison qui querelle l'amour,
Et l'âcre jalousie alors qu'une autre femme
Veut tirer de vos yeux un regard de votre âme,
Et le sort qui nous frappe et qui n'est jamais las.
Plus le soleil reluit, plus je suis ombre, hélas!
Vous allez, moi je suis; vous marchez, moi je tremble,
Et tandis que, formant mille projets ensemble,
Vous semblez ignorer, passant robuste et doux,
Tous les angles que fait le monde autour de nous,
Je me traîne après vous, pauvre femme blessée.
D'un corps resté debout l'ombre est parfois brisée.

XXXIV

TRISTESSE D’OLYMPIO

Les champs n’étaient point noirs, les cieux n’étaient pas mornes.
Non, le jour rayonnait dans un azur sans bornes
Sur la terre étendu,
L’air était plein d’encens et les prés de verdures
Quand il revit ces lieux où par tant de blessures
Son coeur s’est répandu!

L’automne souriait; les coteaux vers la plaine
Penchaient leurs bois charmants qui jaunissaient à peine;
Le ciel était doré;
Et les oiseaux, tournés vers celui que tout nomme,
Disant peut-être à Dieu quelque chose de l’homme,
Chantaient leur chant sacré!

Il voulut tout revoir, l’étang près de la source,
La masure où l’aumône avait vidé leur bourse,
Le vieux frêne plié,
Les retraites d’amour au fond des bois perdues,
L’arbre où dans les baisers leurs âmes confondues
Avaient tout oublié!

Il chercha le jardin, la maison isolée,
La grille d’où l’oeil plonge en une oblique allée,
Les vergers en talus.
Pâle, il marchait. - Au bruit de son pas grave et sombre,
Il voyait à chaque arbre, hélas! se dresser l’ombre
Des jours qui ne sont plus!

Il entendait frémir dans la forêt qu’il aime
Ce doux vent qui, faisant tout vibrer en nous-même,
Y réveille l’amour,
Et, remuant le chêne ou balançant la rose,

Semble l’âme de tout qui va sur chaque chose
Se poser tour à tour!

Les feuilles qui gisaient dans le bois solitaire,
S’efforçant sous ses pas de s’élever de terre,
Couraient dans le jardin;
Ainsi, parfois, quand l’âme est triste, nos pensées
S’envolent un moment sur leurs ailes blessées,
Puis retombent soudain.

Il contempla longtemps les formes magnifiques
Que la nature prend dans les champs pacifiques;
Il rêva jusqu’au soir;
Tout le jour il erra le long de la ravine,
Admirant tour à tour le ciel, face divine,
Le lac, divin miroir!

Hélas! se rappelant ses douces aventures,
Regardant, sans entrer, par-dessus les clôtures,
Ainsi qu’un paria,
Il erra tout le jour. Vers l’heure où la nuit tombe,
Il se sentit le coeur triste comme une tombe,
Alors il s’écria:

“ Ô douleur! j’ai voulu, moi dont l’âme est troublée,
Savoir si l’urne encor conservait la liqueur,
Et voir ce qu’avait fait cette heureuse vallée
De tout ce que j’avais laissé là de mon coeur!

“ Que peu de temps suffit pour changer toutes choses!
Nature au front serein, comme vous oubliez!
Et comme vous brisez dans vos métamorphoses
Les fils mystérieux où nos coeurs sont liés!

“ Nos chambres de feuillage en halliers sont changées!
L’arbre où fut notre chiffre est mort ou renversé;
Nos roses dans l’enclos ont été ravagées

Par les petits enfants qui sautent le fossé!

“ Un mur clôt la fontaine où, par l’heure échauffée,
Folâtre, elle buvait en descendant des bois;
Elle prenait de l’eau dans sa main, douce fée,
Et laissait retomber des perles de ses doigts!

“ On a pavé la route âpre et mal aplanie,
Où, dans le sable pur se dessinant si bien,
Et de sa petitesse étalant l’ironie,
Son pied charmant semblait rire à côté du mien!

“ La borne du chemin, qui vit des jours sans nombre,
Où jadis pour m’attendre elle aimait à s’asseoir,
S’est usée en heurtant, lorsque la route est sombre,
Les grands chars gémissants qui reviennent le soir.

“ La forêt ici manque et là s’est agrandie.
De tout ce qui fut nous presque rien n’est vivant;
Et, comme un tas de cendre éteinte et refroidie,
L’amas des souvenirs se disperse à tout vent!

“ N’existons-nous donc plus? Avons-nous eu notre heure?
Rien ne la rendra-t-il à nos cris superflus?
L’air joue avec la branche au moment où je pleure;
Ma maison me regarde et ne me connaît plus.

“ D’autres vont maintenant passer où nous passâmes.
Nous y sommes venus, d’autres vont y venir;
Et le songe qu’avaient ébauché nos deux âmes,
Ils le continueront sans pouvoir le finir!

“ Car personne ici-bas ne termine et n’achève;
Les pires des humains sont comme les meilleurs;
Nous nous réveillons tous au même endroit du rêve.
Tout commence en ce monde et tout finit ailleurs.

“ Oui, d’autres à leur tour viendront, couples sans tache,
Puiser dans cet asile heureux, calme, enchanté,
Tout ce que la nature à l’amour qui se cache
Mêle de rêverie et de solennité!

“ D’autres auront nos champs, nos sentiers, nos retraites;
Ton bois, ma bien-aimée, est à des inconnus.
D’autres femmes viendront, baigneuses indiscrètes,
Troubler le flot sacré qu’ont touché tes pieds nus!

“ Quoi donc! c’est vainement qu’ici nous nous aimâmes!
Rien ne nous restera de ces coteaux fleuris
Où nous fondions notre être en y mêlant nos flammes!
L’impassible nature a déjà tout repris.

“ Oh! dites-moi, ravins, frais ruisseaux, treilles mûres,
Rameaux chargés de nids, grottes, forêts, buissons,
Est-ce que vous ferez pour d’autres vos murmures?
Est-ce que vous direz à d’autres vos chansons?

“ Nous vous comprenions tant! doux, attentifs, austères,
Tous nos échos s’ouvraient si bien à votre voix!
Et nous prêtions si bien, sans troubler vos mystères,
L’oreille aux mots profonds que vous dites parfois!

“ Répondez, vallon pur, répondez, solitude,
Ô nature abritée en ce désert si beau,
Lorsque nous dormirons tous deux dans l’attitude
Que donne aux morts pensifs la forme du tombeau;

“ Est-ce que vous serez à ce point insensible
De nous savoir couchés, morts avec nos amours,
Et de continuer votre fête paisible,
Et de toujours sourire et de chanter toujours?

“ Est-ce que, nous sentant errer dans vos retraites,
Fantômes reconnus par vos monts et vos bois,

Vous ne nous direz pas de ces choses secrètes
Qu’on dit en revoyant des amis d’autrefois?

“ Est-ce que vous pourriez, sans tristesse et sans plainte,
Voir nos ombres flotter où marchèrent nos pas,
Et la voir m’entraîner, dans une morne étreinte,
Vers quelque source en pleurs qui sanglote tout bas?

“ Et s’il est quelque part, dans l’ombre où rien ne veille,
Deux amants sous vos fleurs abritant leurs transports,
Ne leur irez-vous pas murmurer à l’oreille:
— Vous qui vivez, donnez une pensée aux morts!

“ Dieu nous prête un moment les prés et les fontaines,
Les grands bois frissonnants, les rocs profonds et sourds
Et les cieux azurés et les lacs et les plaines,
Pour y mettre nos coeurs, nos rêves, nos amours!

“ Puis il nous les retire. Il souffle notre flamme;
Il plonge dans la nuit l’antre où nous rayonnons;
Et dit à la vallée, où s’imprima notre âme,
D’effacer notre trace et d’oublier nos noms.

“ Eh bien! oubliez-nous, maison, jardin, ombrages!
Herbe, use notre seuil! ronce, cache nos pas!
Chantez, oiseaux! ruisseaux, coulez! croissez, feuillages!
Ceux que vous oubliez ne vous oublieront pas.

“ Car vous êtes pour nous l’ombre de l’amour même!
Vous êtes l’oasis qu’on rencontre en chemin!
Vous êtes, ô vallon, la retraite suprême
Où nous avons pleuré nous tenant par la main!

“ Toutes les passions s’éloignent avec l’âge,
L’une emportant son masque et l’autre son couteau,
Comme un essaim chantant d’histrions en voyage
Dont le groupe décroît derrière le coteau.

“Mais toi, rien ne t’efface, amour! toi qui nous charmes,
Toi qui, torche ou flambeau, luis dans notre brouillard!
Tu nous tiens par la joie, et surtout par les larmes;
Jeune homme on te maudit, on t’adore vieillard.

“ Dans ces jours où la tête au poids des ans s’incline,
Où l’homme, sans projets, sans but, sans visions,
Sent qu’il n’est déjà plus qu’une tombe en ruine
Où gisent ses vertus et ses illusions;

“ Quand notre âme en rêvant descend dans nos entrailles,
Comptant dans notre coeur, qu’enfin la glace atteint,
Comme on compte les morts sur un champ de batailles,
Chaque douleur tombée et chaque songe éteint,

“ Comme quelqu’un qui cherche en tenant une lampe,
Loin des objets réels, loin du monde rieur,
Elle arrive à pas lents par une obscure rampe
Jusqu’au fond désolé du gouffre intérieur;

“ Et là, dans cette nuit qu’aucun rayon n’étoile,
L’âme, en un repli sombre où tout semble finir,
Sent quelque chose encor palpiter sous un voile...
C’est toi qui dors dans l’ombre, ô sacré souvenir! “

XXXV

QUE LA MUSIQUE DATE DU SEIZIÈME SIÈCLE

I

Ô vous, mes vieux amis, si jeunes autrefois,
Qui comme moi des jours avez porté le poids,
Qui de plus d'un regret frappez la tombe sourde,
Et qui marchez courbés, car la sagesse est lourde;
Mes amis! qui de vous, qui de nous n'a souvent,
Quand le deuil à l'oeil sec, au visage rêvant,
Cet ami sérieux qui blesse et qu'on révère,
Avait sur notre front posé sa main sévère,
Qui de nous n'a cherché le calme dans un chant!
Qui n'a, comme une soeur qui guérit en touchant,
Laissé la mélodie entrer dans sa pensée!
Et, sans heurter des morts la mémoire bercée,
N'a retrouvé le rire et les pleurs à la fois
Parmi les instruments, les flûtes et les voix!

Qui de nous, quand sur lui quelque douleur s'écoule,
Ne s'est glissé, vibrant au souffle de la foule,
Dans le théâtre empli de confuses rumeurs!
Comme un soupir parfois se perd dans des clameurs,
Qui n'a jeté son âme, à ces âmes mêlée,
Dans l'orchestre où frissonne une musique ailée,
Où la marche guerrière expire en chant d'amour,
Où la basse en pleurant apaise le tambour!

II

Écoutez! écoutez! du maître qui palpite,
Sur tous les violons l'archet se précipite.
L'orchestre tressaillant rit dans son antre noir.
Tout parle. C'est ainsi qu'on entend sans les voir,

Le soir, quand la campagne élève un sourd murmure,
Rire les vendangeurs dans une vigne mûre.
Comme sur la colonne un frêle chapiteau,
La flûte épanouie a monté sur l'alto.
Les gammes, chastes soeurs dans la vapeur cachées,
Vident et remplissent leurs amphores penchées,
Se tiennent par la main et chantent tour à tour.
Tandis qu'un vent léger fait flotter alentour,
Comme un voile folâtre autour d'un divin groupe,
Ces dentelles du son que le fifre découpe.
Ciel! voilà le clairon qui sonne. À cette voix,
Tout s'éveille en sursaut, tout bondit à la fois.
La caisse aux mille échos, battant ses flancs énormes,
Fait hurler le troupeau des instruments difformes,
Et l'air s'emplit d'accords furieux et sifflants
Que les serpents de cuivre ont tordus dans leurs flancs.
Vaste tumulte où passe un hautbois qui soupire!
Soudain du haut en bas le rideau se déchire;
Plus sombre et plus vivante à l'oeil qu'une forêt,
Toute la symphonie en un hymne apparaît.
Puis, comme en un chaos qui reprendrait un monde,
Tout se perd dans les plis d'une brume profonde.
Chaque forme du chant passe en disant: Assez!
Les sons étincelants s'éteignent dispersés.
Une nuit qui répand ses vapeurs agrandies
Efface le contour des vagues mélodies,
Telles que des esquifs dont l'eau couvre les mâts;
Et la strette, jetant sur leur confus amas
Ses tremblantes lueurs largement étalées,
Retombe dans cette ombre en grappes étoilées!

Ô concert qui s'envole en flamme à tous les vents!
Gouffre où le crescendo gonfle ses flots mouvants!
Comme l'âme s'émeut! comme les coeurs écoutent!
Et comme cet archet d'où les notes dégouttent,
Tantôt dans le lumière et tantôt dans la nuit,
Remue avec fierté cet orage de bruit!

III

Puissant Palestrina, vieux maître, vieux génie,
Je vous salue ici, père de l’harmonie,
Car, ainsi qu’un grand fleuve où boivent les humains,
Toute cette musique a coulé dans vos mains!
Car Gluck et Beethoven, rameaux sous qui l’on rêve,
Sont nés de votre souche et faits de votre sève!
Car Mozart, votre fils, a pris sur vos autels
Cette nouvelle lyre inconnue aux mortels,
Plus tremblante que l’herbe au souffle des aurores,
Née au seizième siècle entre vos doigts sonores!
Car, maître, c’est à vous que tous nos soupirs vont,
Sitôt qu’une voix chante et qu’une âme répond!

Oh! ce maître, pareil au créateur qui fonde,
Comment dit-il jaillir de sa tête profonde
Cet univers de sons, doux et sombre à la fois,
Écho du Dieu caché dont le monde est la voix?
Où ce jeune homme, enfant de la blonde Italie,
Prit-il cette âme immense et jusqu’aux bords remplie?
Quel souffle, quel travail, quelle intuition,
Fit de lui ce géant, dieu de l’émotion,
Vers qui se tourne l’oeil qui pleure et qui s’essuie,
Sur qui tout un côté du coeur humain s’appuie?
D’où lui vient cette voix qu’on écoute à genoux?
Et qui donc verse en lui ce qu’il reverse en nous?

IV

Ô mystère profond des enfances sublimes!
Qui fait naître la fleur au penchant des abîmes,
Et le poète au bord des sombres passions?
Quel dieu lui trouble l’oeil d’étranges visions?
Quel dieu lui montre l’astre au milieu des ténèbres,
Et, comme sous un crêpe aux plis noirs et funèbres

On voit d’une beauté le sourire enivrant,
L’idéal à travers le réel transparent?
Qui donc prend par la main un enfant dès l’aurore
Pour lui dire:—” En ton âme il n’est pas jour encore.
Enfant de l’homme! avant que de son feu vainqueur
Le midi de la vie ait desséché ton coeur,
Viens, je vais t’entrouvrir des profondeurs sans nombre!
Viens, je vais de clarté remplir tes yeux pleins d’ombre!
Viens, écoute avec moi ce qu’on explique ailleurs,
Le bégaiement confus des sphères et des fleurs;
Car, enfant, astre au ciel ou rose dans la haie,
Toute chose innocente ainsi que toi bégaie!
Tu seras le poète, un homme qui voit Dieu!
Ne crains pas la science, âpre sentier de feu,
Route austère, il est vrai, mais des grands coeurs choisies,
Que la religion et que la poésie
Bordent des deux côtés de leur buisson fleuri.
Quand tu peux en chemin, ô bel enfant chéri,
Cueillir l’épine blanche et les clochettes bleues,
Ton petit pas se joue avec les grandes lieues.
Ne crains donc pas l’ennui ni la fatigue. - Viens!
Écoute la nature aux vagues entretiens.
Entends sous chaque objet sourdre la parabole.
Sous l’être universel vois l’éternel symbole,
Et l’homme et le destin, et l’arbre et la forêt,
Les noirs tombeaux, sillons où germe le regret;
Et, comme à nos douleurs des branches attachées,
Les consolations sur notre front penchées,
Et, pareil à l’esprit du juste radieux,
Le soleil, cette gloire épanouie aux cieux! “

V

Dieu! que Palestrina, dans l’homme et dans les choses,
Dut entendre de voix joyeuse et moroses!
Comme on sent qu’à cet âge où notre coeur sourit,
Où lui déjà pensait, il a dans son esprit

Emporté, comme un fleuve à l’onde fugitive,
Tout ce que lui jetait la nuée ou la rive!
Comme il s’est promené, tout enfant, tout pensif,
Dans les champs, et, dès l’aube, au fond du bois massif,
Et près du précipice, épouvante des mères!
Tour à tour noyé d’ombre, ébloui de chimères,
Comme il ouvrait son âme alors que le printemps
Trempe la berge en fleur dans l’eau des clairs étangs,
Que le lierre remonte aux branches favorites,
Que l’herbe aux boutons d’or mêle les marguerites!

À cette heure indécise où le jour va mourir,
Où tout s’endort, le coeur oubliant de souffrir,
Les oiseaux de chanter et les troupeaux de paître,
Que de fois sous ses yeux un chariot champêtre,
Groupe vivant de bruit, de chevaux et de voix,
A gravi sur le flanc du coteau dans les bois
Quelque route creusée entre les ocres jaunes,
Tandis que, près d’une eau qui fuyait sous les aulnes,
Il écoutait gémir dans les brumes du soir
Une cloche enrouée au fond d’un vallon noir!

Que de fois, épiant la rumeur des chaumières,
Le brin d’herbe moqueur qui siffle entre deux pierres,
Le cri plaintif du soc gémissant et traîné,
Le nid qui jase au fond du cloître ruiné
D’où l’ombre se répand sur les tombes des moines,
Le champ doré par l’aube où causent les avoines
Qui pour nous voir passer, ainsi qu’un peuple heureux,
Se penchent en tumulte au bord du chemin creux,
L’abeille qui gaiement chante et parle à la rose,
Parmi tous ces objets dont l’être se compose,
Que de fois il rêva, scrutateur ténébreux,
Cherchant à s’expliquer ce qu’ils disaient entre eux!

Et chaque soir, après ses longues promenades,
Laissant sous les balcons rire les sérénades,

Quand il s’en revenait content, grave et muet,
Quelque chose de plus dans son coeur remuait.
Mouche, il avait son miel; arbuste, sa rosée.
Il en vint par degrés à ce qu’en sa pensée
Tout vécut. - Saint travail que les poètes font! -
Dans sa tête, pareille à l’univers profond,
L’air courait, les oiseaux chantaient, la flamme et l’onde
Se courbaient, la moisson dorait la terre blonde,
Et les toits et les monts et l’ombre qui descend
Se mêlaient, et le soir venait, sombre et chassant
La brute vers son antre et l’homme vers son gîte,
Et les hautes forêts, qu’un vent du ciel agite,
Joyeuses de renaître au départ des hivers,
Secouaient follement leurs grands panaches verts!

C’est ainsi qu’esprit, forme, ombre, lumière et flamme,
L’urne du monde entier s’épancha dans son âme!

VI

Ni peintre, ni sculpteur! Il fut musicien.
Il vint, nouvel Orphée, après l’Orphée ancien;
Et, comme l’océan n’apporte que sa vague,
Il n’apporta que l’art du mystère et du vague!
La lyre qui tout bas pleure en chantant bien haut!
Qui verse à tous un son où chacun trouve un mot!
Le luth où se traduit, plus ineffable encore,
Le rêve inexprimé qui s’efface à l’aurore!
Car il ne voyait rien par l’angle étincelant,
Car son esprit, du monde immense et fourmillant
Qui pour ses yeux nageait dans l’ombre indéfinie,
Éteignait la couleur et tirait l’harmonie!
Ainsi toujours son hymne, en descendant des cieux,
Pénètre dans l’esprit par le côté pieux,
Comme un rayon des nuits par un vitrail d’église!
En écoutant ses chants que l’âme idéalise,
Il semble, à ces accords qui, jusqu’au coeur touchant,

Font sourire le juste et songer le méchant,
Qu’on respire un parfum d’encensoirs et de cierges,
Et l’on croit voir passer un de ces anges-vierges
Comme en rêvait Giotto, comme Dante en voyait,
Êtres sereins posés sur ce monde inquiet,
À la prunelle bleue, à la robe d’opale,
Qui, tandis qu’au milieu d’un azur déjà pâle
Le point d’or d’une étoile éclate à l’orient,
Dans un beau champ de trèfle errent en souriant!

VII

Heureux ceux qui vivaient dans ce siècle sublime
Où, du génie humain dorant encor la cime,
Le vieux soleil gothique à l’horizon mourait!
Où déjà, dans la nuit emportant son secret,
La cathédrale morte en un sol infidèle
Ne faisait plus jaillir d’églises autour d’elle!
Être immense obstruée encore à tous degrés,
Ainsi qu’une Babel aux abords encombrés,
De donjons, de beffrois, de flèches élancées,
D’édifices construits pour toutes les pensées;
De génie et de pierre énorme entassement;
Vaste amas d’où le jour s’en allait lentement!
Siècle mystérieux où la science sombre
De l’antique Dédale agonisait dans l’ombre,
Tandis qu’à l’autre bout de l’horizon confus,
Entre Tasse et Luther, ces deux chênes touffus,
Sereine, et blanchissant de sa lumière pure
Ton dôme merveilleux, ô sainte Architecture,
Dans ce ciel, qu’Albert Düre admirait à l’écart,
La Musique montait, cette lune de l’art!

XXXVI

LA STATUE

Il semblait grelotter, car la bise était dure.
C’était, sous un amas de rameaux sans verdure,
Une pauvre statue, au dos noir, au pied vert,
Un vieux faune isolé dans le vieux parc désert,
Qui, de son front penché touchant aux branches d’arbre,
Se perdait à mi-corps dans sa gaine de marbre.

Il était là, pensif, à la terre lié,
Et, comme toute chose immobile, - oublié!

Des arbres l’entouraient, fouettés d’un vent de glace,
Et comme lui vieillis à cette même place;
Des marronniers géants, sans feuilles, sans oiseaux
Sous leurs tailles brouillés en ténébreux réseaux,
Pâle, il apparaissait, et la terre était brune.
Une âpre nuit d’hiver, sans étoile et sans lune,
Tombait à larges pans dans le brouillard diffus.
D’autres arbres plus loin croisaient leurs sombres fûts;
Plus loin d’autre encore, estompés par l’espace,
Poussaient dans le ciel gris où le vent du soir passe
Mille petits rameaux noirs, tordus et mêlés,
Et se posaient partout, l’un par l’autre voilés,
Sur l’horizon, perdu dans les vapeurs informes,
Comme un grand troupeau roux de hérissons énormes.

Rien de plus. Ce vieux faune, un ciel morne, un bois noir.

Peut-être dans la brume au loin pouvait-on voir
Quelque longue terrasse aux verdâtres assises,
Ou, près d’un grand bassin, des nymphes indécises,
Honteuses à bon droit dans ce parc aboli,
Autrefois des regards, maintenant de l’oubli.

Le vieux faune riait. - Dans leurs ombres douteuses
Laissant le bassin triste et les nymphes honteuses,
Le vieux faune riait, c’est à lui que je vins;
Ému, car sans pitié tous ces sculpteurs divins
Condamnent pour jamais, contents qu’on les admire,
Les nymphes à la honte et les faunes au rire.

Moi, j’ai toujours pitié du pauvre marbre obscur.
De l’homme moins souvent, parce qu’il est plus dur.

Et, sans froisser d’un mot son oreille blessée,
Car le marbre entend bien la voix de la pensée,
Je lui dis:—” Vous étiez du beau siècle amoureux.
Sylvain, qu’avez-vous vu quand vous étiez heureux?
Vous étiez de la cour? Vous assistiez aux fêtes?
C’est pour vous divertir que ces nymphes sont faites.
C’est pour vous, dans ces bois, que de savantes mains
Ont mêlé les dieux grecs et les césars romains,
Et, dans les claires eaux mirant les vases rares,
Tordu tout ce jardin en dédales bizarres.
Quand vous étiez heureux, qu’avez-vous vu, Sylvain?
Contez-moi les secrets de ce passé trop vain,
De ce passé charmant, plein de flammes discrètes,
Où parmi les grands rois croissaient les grands poètes.
Que de frais souvenirs dont encor vous riez!
Parlez-moi, beau Sylvain, comme vous parleriez
À l’arbre, au vent qui souffle, à l’herbe non foulée.
D’un bout à l’autre bout de cette épaisse allée,
Avez-vous quelquefois, moqueur antique et grec,
Quand près de vous passait avec le beau Lautrec
Marguerite aux yeux doux, la reine béarnaise,
Lancé votre oeil oblique à l’Hercule Farnèse?
Seul sous votre antre vert de feuillage mouillé,
Ô Sylvain complaisant, avez-vous conseillé,
Vous tournant vers chacun du côté qui l’attire,
Racan comme berger, Regnier comme satyre?

Avez-vous vu parfois, sur ce banc, vers midi,
Suer Vincent de Paul à façonner Gondi?
Faune! avez-vous suivi de ce regard étrange
Anne avec Buckingham, Louis avec Fontange,
Et se retournaient-ils, la rougeur sur le front,
En vous entendant rire au coin du bois profond?
Étiez-vous consulté sur le thyrse ou le lierre,
Lorsqu’en un grand ballet de forme singulière
La cour du dieu Phoebus ou la cour du dieu Pan
Du nom d’Amaryllis enivraient Montespan?
Fuyant des courtisans les oreilles de pierre,
La Fontaine vint-il, les pleurs dans la paupière,
De ses nymphes de Vaux vous conter les regrets?
Que vous disait Boileau, que vous disait Segrais,
À vous, faune lettré qui jadis dans l’églogue
Aviez avec Virgile un charmant dialogue,
Et qui faisiez sauter, sur le gazon naissant,
Le lourd spondée au pas du dactyle dansant?
Avez-vous vu jouer les beautés dans les herbes,
Chevreuse aux yeux noyés, Thiange aux airs superbes?
Vous ont-elles parfois de leur groupe vermeil
Entouré follement, si bien que le soleil
Découpait tout à coup, en perçant quelque nue,
Votre profil lascif sur leur gorge ingénue?
Votre arbre a-t-il reçu sous son abri serein
L’écarlate linceul du pâle Mazarin?
Avez-vous eu l’honneur de voir rêver Molière?
Vous a-t-il quelquefois, d’une voix familière,
Vous jetant brusquement un vers mélodieux,
Tutoyé, comme on fait entre les demi-dieux?
En revenant un soir du fond des avenues,
Ce penseur, qui, voyant les âmes toutes nues,
Ne pouvait avoir peur de votre nudité,
À l’homme en son esprit vous a-t-il confronté?
Et vous a-t-il trouvé, vous le spectre cynique,
Moins triste, moins méchant, moins froid, moins ironique,
Alors qu’il comparait, s’arrêtant en chemin,

Votre rire de marbre à notre rire humain? “

Ainsi je lui parlais sous l’épaisse ramure.
Il ne répondit pas même par un murmure.
J’écoutais, incliné sur le marbre glacé,
Mais je n’entendis rien remuer du passé.
La blafarde lueur du jour qui se retire
Blanchissait vaguement l’immobile satyre,
Muet à ma parole et sourd à ma pitié.
À le voir là, sinistre, et sortant à moitié
De son fourreau noirci par l’humide feuillée,
On eût dit la poignée en torse ciselée
D’un vieux glaive rouillé qu’on laisse dans l’étui.

Je secouai la tête et m’éloignai de lui.
Alors des buissons noirs, des branches desséchées
Comme des soeurs en deuil sur sa tête penchées,
Et des antres secrets dispersés dans les bois,
Il me sembla soudain qu’il sortait une voix,
Qui dans mon âme obscure et vaguement sonore
Éveillait un écho comme au fond d’une amphore.

—” Ô poète imprudent, que fais-tu? laisse en paix
Les faunes délaissés sous les arbres épais!
Poète! ignores-tu qu’il est toujours impie
D’aller, aux lieux déserts où dort l’ombre assoupie,
Secouer, par l’amour fussiez-vous entraînés,
Cette mousse qui pend aux siècles ruinés,
Et troubler, du vain bruit de vos voix indiscrètes,
Le souvenir des morts dans ses sombres retraites! “

Alors dans les jardins sous la brume enfouis
Je m’enfonçai, rêvant aux jours évanouis,
Tandis que les rameaux s’emplissaient de mystère,
Et que derrière moi le faune solitaire,
Hiéroglyphe obscur d’un antique alphabet,
Continuait de rire à la nuit qui tombait.

J’allais, et contemplant d’un regard triste encore
Tous ces doux souvenirs, beauté, printemps, aurore,
Dans l’air et sous mes pieds épars, mêlés, flottants,
Feuilles de l’autre été, femmes de l’autre temps,
J’entrevoyais au loin, sous les branchages sombres,
Des marbres dans le bois, dans le passé des ombres!

XXXVII

J’EUS TOUJOURS DE L’AMOUR POUR LES CHOSES AILEES

J’eus toujours de l’amour pour les choses ailées.
Lorsque j’étais enfant, j’allais sous les feuillées,
J’y prenais dans les nids de tout petits oiseaux.
D’abord je leur faisais des cages de roseaux
Où je les élevais parmi des mousses vertes.
Plus tard je leur laissais les fenêtres ouvertes.
Ils ne s’envolaient point; ou, s’ils fuyaient aux bois,
Quand je les rappelais ils venaient à ma voix.
Une colombe et moi longtemps nous nous aimâmes.
Maintenant je sais l’art d’apprivoiser les âmes.

XXXVIII

ÉCRIT SUR LE TOMBEAU D’UN PETIT ENFANT AU BORD DE LA MER

Vieux lierre, frais gazon, herbe, roseaux, corolles;
Église où l’esprit voit le Dieu qu’il rêve ailleurs;
Mouches qui murmurez d’ineffables paroles
À l’oreille du pâtre assoupi dans les fleurs;

Vents, flots, hymne orageux, choeur sans fin, voix sans nombre;
Bois qui faites songer le passant sérieux;
Fruits qui tombez de l’arbre impénétrable et sombre,
Étoiles qui tombez du ciel mystérieux;

Oiseaux aux cris joyeux, vague aux plaintes profondes;
Froid lézard des vieux murs dans les pierres tapi;
Plaines qui répandez vos souffles sur les ondes;
Mer où la perle éclôt, terre où germe l’épi;

Nature d’où tout sort, nature où tout retombe,
Feuilles, nids, doux rameaux que l’air n’ose effleurer,
Ne faites pas de bruit autour de cette tombe;
Laissez l’enfant dormir et la mère pleurer!

XXXIX

A. L.

Toute espérance, enfant, est un roseau.
Dieu dans ses mains tient nos jours, ma colombe;
Il les dévide à son fatal fuseau,
Puis le fil casse et notre joie en tombe;
Car dans tout berceau
Il germe une tombe.

Jadis, vois-tu, l’avenir, pur rayon,
Apparaissait à mon âme éblouie,
Ciel avec l’astre, onde avec l’alcyon,
Fleur lumineuse à l’ombre épanouie.
Cette vision
S’est évanouie!

Si, près de toi, quelqu’un pleure en rêvant,
Laisse pleurer sans en chercher la cause.
Pleurer est doux, pleurer est bon souvent
Pour l’homme, hélas! sur qui le sort se pose.
Toute larme, enfant,
Lave quelque chose.

XL

CAERULEUM MARE

Quand je rêve sur la falaise,
Ou dans les bois, les soirs d'été,
Sachant que la vie est mauvaise,
Je contemple l'éternité.

À travers mon sort mêlé d'ombres,
J'aperçois Dieu distinctement,
Comme à travers des branches sombres
On entrevoit le firmament!

Le firmament! où les faux sages
Cherchent comme nous des conseils!
Le firmament plein de nuages,
Le firmament plein de soleils!

Un souffle épure notre fange.
Le monde est à Dieu, je le sens.
Toute fleur est une louange,
Et tout parfum est un encens.

La nuit on croit sentir Dieu même
Penché sur l'homme palpitant.
La terre prie et le ciel aime.
Quelqu'un parle et quelqu'un entend.

Pourtant, toujours à notre extase,
Ô Seigneur, tu te dérobas;
Hélas! tu mets là-haut le vase,
Et tu laisses la lèvre en bas!

Mais un jour ton oeuvre profonde,
Nous la saurons, Dieu redouté!

Nous irons voir de monde en monde
S’épanouir ton unité;

Cherchant dans ces cieux que tu règles
L’ombre de ceux que nous aimons,
Comme une troupe de grands aigles
Qui s’envole à travers les monts!

Car, lorsque la mort nous réclame,
L’esprit des sens brise le sceau.
Car la tombe est un nid où l’âme
Prend des ailes comme l’oiseau!

Ô songe! ô vision sereine!
Nous saurons le secret de tout,
Et ce rayon qui sur nous traîne,
Nous en pourrons voir l’autre bout!

Ô Seigneur! l’humble créature
Pourra voir enfin à son tour
L’autre côté de la nature
Sur lequel tombe votre jour!

Nous pourrons comparer, poètes,
Penseurs croyant en nos raisons,
À tous les mondes que vous faites
Tous les rêves que nous faisons!

En attendant, sur cette terre,
Nous errons, troupeau désuni,
Portant en nous ce grand mystère:
Oeil borné, regard infini.

L’homme au hasard choisit sa route;
Et toujours, quoi que nous fassions,
Comme un bouc sur l’herbe qu’il broute,
Vit courbé sur ses passions.

Nous errons, et dans les ténèbres,
Allant où d’autres sont venus,
Nous entendons des voix funèbres
Qui disent des mots inconnus.

Dans ces ombres où tout s’oublie,
Vertu, sagesse, espoir, honneur,
L’un va criant: Élie! Élie!
L’autre appelant: Seigneur! Seigneur!

Hélas! tout penseur semble avide
D’épouvanter l’homme orphelin;
Le savant dit: Le ciel est vide!
Le prêtre dit: L’enfer est plein!

Ô deuil! médecins sans dictames,
Vains prophètes aux yeux déçus,
L’un donne Satan à nos âmes,
L’autre leur retire Jésus!

L’humanité, sans loi, sans arche,
Suivant son sentier desséché,
Est comme un voyageur qui marche
Après que le jour est couché.

Il va! la brume est sur la plaine.
Le vent tord l’arbre convulsif.
Les choses qu’il distingue à peine
Ont un air sinistre et pensif.

Ainsi, parmi de noirs décombres,
Dans ce siècle le genre humain
Passe et voit des figures sombres
Qui se penchent sur son chemin.

Nous, rêveurs, sous un toit qui croule,

Fatigués, nous nous abritons,
Et nous regardons cette foule
Se plonger dans l’ombre à tâtons!

Et nous cherchons, souci morose!
Hélas! à deviner pour tous
Le problème que nous propose
Toute cette ombre autour de nous!

Tandis que, la tête inclinée,
Nous nous perdons en tristes voeux,
Le souffle de la destinée
Frissonne à travers nos cheveux.

Nous entendons, race asservie,
Ce souffle passant dans la nuit
Du livre obscur de notre vie
Tourner les pages avec bruit!

Que faire? - À ce vent de la tombe,
Joignez les mains, baissez les yeux,
Et tâchez qu’une lueur tombe
Sur le livre mystérieux!

— D’où viendra la lueur, ô père?
Dieu dit: — De vous, en vérité.
Allumez, pour qu’il vous éclaire,
Votre coeur par quelque côté!

Quand le coeur brûle, on peut sans crainte
Lire ce qu’écrit le Seigneur.
Vertu, sous cette clarté sainte,
Est le même mot que Bonheur.

Il faut aimer! l’ombre en vain couvre
L’oeil de notre esprit, quel qu’il soit.
Croyez, et la paupière s’ouvre!

Aimez, et la prunelle voit!

Du haut des cieux qu’emplit leur flamme,
Les trop lointaines vérités
Ne peuvent au livre de l’âme
Jeter que de vagues clartés.

La nuit, nul regard ne sait lire
Aux seuls feux des astres vermeils;
Mais l’amour près de nous vient luire,
Une lampe aide les soleils.

Pour que, dans l’ombre où Dieu nous mène,
Nous puissions lire à tous moments,
L’amour joint sa lumière humaine
Aux célestes rayonnements!

Aimez donc! car tout le proclame,
Car l’esprit seul éclaire peu,
Et souvent le coeur d’une femme
Est l’explication de Dieu!

Ainsi je rêve, ainsi je songe,
Tandis qu’aux yeux des matelots
La nuit sombre à chaque instant plonge
Des groupes d’astres dans les flots!

Moi, que Dieu tient sous son empire,
J’admire, humble et religieux,
Et par tous les pores j’aspire
Ce spectacle prodigieux!

Entre l’onde, des vents bercée,
Et le ciel, gouffre éblouissant,
Toujours, pour l’oeil de la pensée,
Quelque chose monte ou descend.

Goutte d’eau pure ou jet de flamme,
Ce verbe intime et non écrit
Vient se condenser dans mon âme
Ou resplendir dans mon esprit;

Et l’idée à mon coeur sans voile,
À travers la vague ou l’éther,
Du fond des cieux arrive étoile,
Ou perle du fond de la mer!

XLI

DIEU QUI SOURIT ET QUI DONNE

Dieu qui sourit et qui donne
Et qui vient vers qui l’attend,
Pourvu que vous soyez bonne,
Sera content.

Le monde où tout étincelle,
Mais où rien n’est enflammé,
Pourvu que vous soyez belle,
Sera charmé.

Mon coeur, dans l’ombre amoureuse
Où l’enivre deux beaux yeux,
Pourvu que tu sois heureuse,
Sera joyeux.

XLII

OCEANO NOX

Saint-Valery-Sur-Somme.

Oh! combien de marins, combien de capitaines
Qui sont partis joyeux pour des courses lointaines,
Dans ce morne horizon se sont évanouis!
    Combien ont disparu, dure et triste fortune!
    Dans une mer sans fond, par une nuit sans lune,
    Sous l’aveugle océan à jamais enfouis!

    Combien de patrons morts avec leurs équipages!
    L’ouragan de leur vie a pris toutes les pages
    Et d’un souffle il a tout dispersé sur les flots!
    Nul ne saura leur fin dans l’abîme plongée.
    Chaque vague en passant d’un butin s’est chargée;
    L’une a saisi l’esquif, l’autre les matelots!

    Nul ne sait votre sort, pauvres têtes perdues!
    Vous roulez à travers les sombres étendues,
    Heurtant de vos fronts morts des écueils inconnus.
    Oh! que de vieux parents, qui n’avaient plus qu’un rêve,
    Sont morts en attendant tous les jours sur la grève
    Ceux qui ne sont pas revenus!

    On s’entretient de vous parfois dans les veillées.
    Maint joyeux cercle, assis sur des ancres rouillées,
    Mêle encor quelque temps vos noms d’ombre couverts
    Aux rires, aux refrains, aux récits d’aventures,
    Aux baisers qu’on dérobe à vos belles futures,
    Tandis que vous dormez dans les goémons verts!

    On demande: — Où sont-ils? sont-ils rois dans quelque île?
    Nous ont-ils délaissés pour un bord plus fertile? -

Puis votre souvenir même est enseveli.
Le corps se perd dans l’eau, le nom dans la mémoire.
Le temps, qui sur toute ombre en verse une plus noire,
Sur le sombre océan jette le sombre oubli.

Bientôt des yeux de tous votre ombre est disparue.
L’un n’a-t-il pas sa barque et l’autre sa charrue?
Seules, durant ces nuits où l’orage est vainqueur,
Vos veuves aux fronts blancs, lasses de vous attendre,
Parlent encor de vous en remuant la cendre
De leur foyer et de leur coeur!

Et quand la tombe enfin a fermé leur paupière,
Rien ne sait plus vos noms, pas même une humble pierre
Dans l’étroit cimetière où l’écho nous répond,
Pas même un saule vert qui s’effeuille à l’automne,
Pas même la chanson naïve et monotone
Que chante un mendiant à l’angle d’un vieux pont!

Où sont-ils, les marins sombrés dans les nuits noires?
Ô flots, que vous savez de lugubres histoires!
Flots profonds redoutés des mères à genoux!
Vous vous les racontez en montant les marées,
Et c’est ce qui vous fait ces voix désespérées
Que vous avez le soir quand vous venez vers nous!

XLIII

NUITS DE JUIN

L’été, lorsque le jour a fui, de fleurs couverte
La plaine verse au loin un parfum enivrant;
Les yeux fermés, l’oreille aux rumeurs entrouverte,
    On ne dort qu’à demi d’un sommeil transparent.

    Les astres sont plus purs, l’ombre paraît meilleure;
    Un vague demi-jour teint le dôme éternel;
    Et l’aube douce et pâle, en attendant son heure,
    Semble toute la nuit errer au bas du ciel.

XLIV

SAGESSE

à Mademoiselle Louise B.

I

— Ainsi donc rien de grand, rien de saint, rien de pur,
Rien qui soit digne, ô ciel! de ton regret d’azur!
Rien qui puisse anoblir le vil siècle où nous sommes,
Ne sortira du coeur de l’homme enfant des hommes!
Homme! esprit enfoui sous les besoins du corps!
Ainsi, jouir; descendre à tâtons chez les morts;
Être à tout ce qui rampe, à tout ce qui s’envole,
À l’intérêt sordide, à la vanité folle;
Ne rien savoir - qu’emplir, sans souci du devoir,
Une charte de mots ou d’écus un comptoir;
Ne jamais regarder les voûtes étoilées;
Rire du dévouement et des vertus voilées;
Voilà ta vie, hélas! et tu n’as, nuit et jour,
Pour espoir et pour but, pour culte et pour amour,
Qu’une immonde monnaie aux carrefours traînée
Et qui te laisse aux mains sa rouille empoissonnée!
Et tu ne comprends pas que ton destin, à toi,
C’est de penser! c’est d’être un mage et d’être un roi;
C’est d’être un alchimiste alimentant la flamme
Sous ce sombre alambic que tu nommes ton âme,
Et de faire passer par ce creuset de feu
La nature et le monde, et d’en extraire Dieu!

II

Comme je m’écriais ainsi, vous m’entendîtes;
Et vous, dont l’âme brille en tout ce que vous dites,
Vous tournâtes alors vers moi paisiblement

Votre sourire triste, ineffable et calmant:

— L’humanité se lève, elle chancelle encore,
Et, le front baigné d’ombre, elle va vers l’aurore.
Tout l’homme sur la terre a deux faces, le bien
Et le mal. Blâmer tout, c’est ne comprendre rien.
Les âmes des humains d’or et de plomb sont faites.
L’esprit du sage est grave, et sur toutes les têtes
Ne jette pas sa foudre au hasard en éclats.
Pour le siècle où l’on vit - comme on y souffre, hélas! -
On est toujours injuste, et tout y paraît crime.
Notre époque insultée a son côté sublime.
Vous l’avez dit vous-même, ô poète irrité! -

Dans votre chambre, asile illustre et respecté,
C’est ainsi que, sereine et simple, vous parlâtes.
Votre front, au reflet des damas écarlates,
Rayonnait, et pour moi, dans cet instant profond,
Votre regard levé fit un ciel du plafond.

L’accent de la raison, auguste et pacifique,
L’équité, la pitié, la bonté séraphique,
L’oubli des torts d’autrui, cet oubli vertueux
Qui rend à leur insu les fronts majestueux,
Donnaient à vos discours, pleins de clartés si belles,
La tranquille grandeur des choses naturelles,
Et par moments semblaient mêler à votre voix
Ce chant doux et voilé qu’on entend dans les bois.

III

Pourquoi devant mes yeux revenez-vous sans cesse,
Ô jours de mon enfance et de mon allégresse?
Qui donc toujours vous rouvre en nos coeurs presque éteints
Ô lumineuse fleur des souvenirs lointains?

Oh! que j’étais heureux! oh! que j’étais candide!

En classe, un banc de chêne, usé, lustré, splendide,
Une table, un pupitre, un lourd encrier noir,
Une lampe, humble soeur de l’étoile du soir,
M’accueillaient gravement et doucement. Mon maître,
Comme je vous l’ai dit souvent, était un prêtre
À l’accent calme et bon, au regard réchauffant,
Naïf comme un savant, malin comme un enfant,
Qui m’embrassait, disant, car un éloge excite:
— Quoiqu’il n’ait que neuf ans, il explique Tacite. -
Puis près d’Eugène, esprit qu’hélas! Dieu submergea,
Je travaillais dans l’ombre, - et je songeais déjà.
Tandis que j’écrivais, - sans peur, mais sans système,
Versant le barbarisme à grands flots sur le thème,
Inventant les auteurs de sens inattendus,
Le dos courbé, le front touchant presque au Gradus, -
Je croyais, car toujours l’esprit de l’enfant veille,
Ouïr confusément, tout près de mon oreille,
Les mots grecs et latins, bavards et familiers,
Barbouillés d’encre, et gais comme des écoliers,
Chuchoter, comme font les oiseaux dans une aire,
Entre les noirs feuillets du lourd dictionnaire.
Bruits plus doux que le bruit d’un essaim qui s’enfuit,
Souffles plus étouffés qu’un soupir de la nuit,
Qui faisaient par instants, sous les fermoirs de cuivre,
Frissonner vaguement les pages du vieux livre!

Le devoir fait, légers comme de jeunes daims,
Nous fuyions à travers les immenses jardins,
Éclatant à la fois en cent propos contraires.
Moi, d’un pas inégal je suivais mes grands frères;
Et les astres sereins s’allumaient dans les cieux,
Et les mouches volaient dans l’air silencieux,
Et le doux rossignol, chantant dans l’ombre obscure,
Enseignait la musique à toute la nature,
Tandis qu’enfant jaseur aux gestes étourdis,
Jetant partout mes yeux ingénus et hardis
D’où jaillissait la joie en vives étincelles,

Je portais sous mon bras, noués par trois ficelles,
Horace et les festins, Virgile et les forêts,
Tout l’Olympe, Thésée, Hercule, et toi Cérès,
La cruelle Junon, Lerne et l’hydre enflammée,
Et le vaste lion de la roche Némée.

Mais, lorsque j’arrivais chez ma mère, souvent,
Grâce au hasard taquin qui joue avec l’enfant,
J’avais de grands chagrins et de grandes colères.
Je ne retrouvais plus, près des ifs séculaires,
Le beau petit jardin par moi-même arrangé.
Un gros chien en passant avait tout ravagé.
Ou quelqu’un dans ma chambre avait ouvert mes cages,
Et mes oiseaux étaient partis pour les bocages,
Et, joyeux, s’en étaient allés de fleur en fleur
Chercher la liberté bien loin, - ou l’oiseleur.
Ciel! alors j’accourais, rouge, éperdu, rapide,
Maudissant le grand chien, le jardinier stupide,
Et l’infâme oiseleur et son hideux lacet,
Furieux! - D’un regard ma mère m’apaisait.

IV

Aujourd’hui, ce n’est pas pour une cage vide,
Pour des oiseaux jetés à l’oiseleur avide,
Pour un dogue aboyant lâché parmi les fleurs,
Que mon courroux s’émeut. Non, les petits malheurs
Exaspèrent l’enfant; mais, comme en une église,
Dans les grandes douleurs l’homme se tranquillise.
Après l’ardent chagrin, au jour brûlant pareil,
Le repos vient au coeur comme aux yeux le sommeil.
De nos maux, chiffres noirs, la sagesse est la somme.
En l’éprouvant toujours, Dieu semble dire à l’homme:
— Fais passer ton esprit à travers le malheur;
Comme le grain du crible, il sortira meilleur. -
J’ai vécu, j’ai souffert, je juge et je m’apaise.
Ou si parfois encor la colère mauvaise

Fait pencher dans mon âme avec son doigt vainqueur
La balance où je pèse et le monde et mon coeur;
Si, n'ouvrant qu'un seul oeil, je condamne et je blâme,
Avec quelques mots purs, vous, sainte et noble femme,
Vous ramenez ma voix qui s'irrite et s'aigrit
Au calme sur lequel j'ai posé mon esprit;
Je sens sous vos rayons mes tempêtes se taire;
Et vous faites pour l'homme incliné, triste, austère,
Ce que faisait jadis pour l'enfant doux et beau
Ma mère, ce grand coeur qui dort dans le tombeau!

V

Écoutez à présent. - Dans ma raison qui tremble,
Parfois l'une après l'autre et quelquefois ensemble,
Trois voix, trois grandes voix murmurent.

L'une dit:
—" Courrouce-toi, poète. Oui, l'enfer applaudit
Tout ce que cette époque ébauche, crée ou tente.
Reste indigné. Ce siècle est une impure tente
Où l'homme appelle à lui, voyant le soir venu,
La volupté, la chair, le vice infâme et nu.
La vérité, qui fit jadis resplendir Rome,
Est toujours dans le ciel; l'amour n'est plus dans l'homme.
Tout rayon jaillissant trouve tout oeil fermé.
Oh! ne repousse pas la muse au bras armé
Qui visitait jadis comme une austère amie,
Ces deux sombres géants, Amos et Jérémie!
Les hommes sont ingrats, méchants, menteurs, jaloux.
Le crime est dans plusieurs, la vanité dans tous;
Car, selon le rameau dont ils ont bu la sève,
Ils tiennent, quelques-uns de Caïn, et tous d'Ève.

" Seigneur! ta croix chancelle et le respect s'en va.
La prière décroît. Jéhova! Jéhova!
On va parlant tout haut de toi-même en ton temple.

Le livre était la loi, le prêtre était l’exemple;
Livre et prêtre sont morts. Et la foi maintenant,
Cette braise allumée à ton foyer tonnant,
Qui, marquant pour ton Christ ceux qu’il préfère aux autres,
Jadis purifiait la lèvre des apôtres,
N’est qu’un charbon éteint dont les petits enfants
Souillent ton mur avec des rires triomphants! “ -

L’autre voix dit:—” Pardonne! aime! Dieu qu’on révère,
Dieu pour l’homme indulgent ne sera point sévère.
Respecte la fourmi non moins que le lion.
Rêveur! rien n’est petit dans la création.
De l’être universel l’atome se compose;
Dieu vit un peu dans tout, et rien n’est peu de chose.
Cultive en toi l’amour, la pitié, les regrets.
Si le sort te contraint d’examiner de près
L’homme souvent frivole, aveugle et téméraire,
Tempère l’oeil du juge avec les pleurs du frère.
Et que tout ici-bas, l’air, la fleur, le gazon;
Le groupe heureux qui joue au seuil de ta maison;
Un mendiant assis à côté d’une gerbe;
Un oiseau qui regarde une mouche dans l’herbe;
Les vieux livres du quai, feuilletés par le vent,
D’où l’esprit des anciens, subtil, libre et vivant,
S’envole, et, souffle errant, se mêle à tes pensées;
La contemplation de ces femmes froissées
Qui vivent dans les pleurs comme l’algue dans l’eau;
L’homme, ce spectateur; le monde, ce tableau;
Que cet ensemble auguste où l’insensé se blase
Tourne de plus en plus ta vie et ton extase
Vers l’oeil mystérieux qui nous regarde tous,
Invisible veilleur! témoin intime et doux!
Principe! but! milieu! clarté! chaleur! dictame!
Secret de toute chose entrevu par toute l’âme!

“ N’allume aucun enfer au tison d’aucun feu.
N’aggrave aucun fardeau. Démontre l’âme et Dieu,

L’impérissable esprit, la tombe irrévocable;
Et rends douce à nos fronts, que souvent elle accable,
La grande main qui grave en signes immortels
JAMAIS! sur les tombeaux; TOUJOURS! sur les autels. “

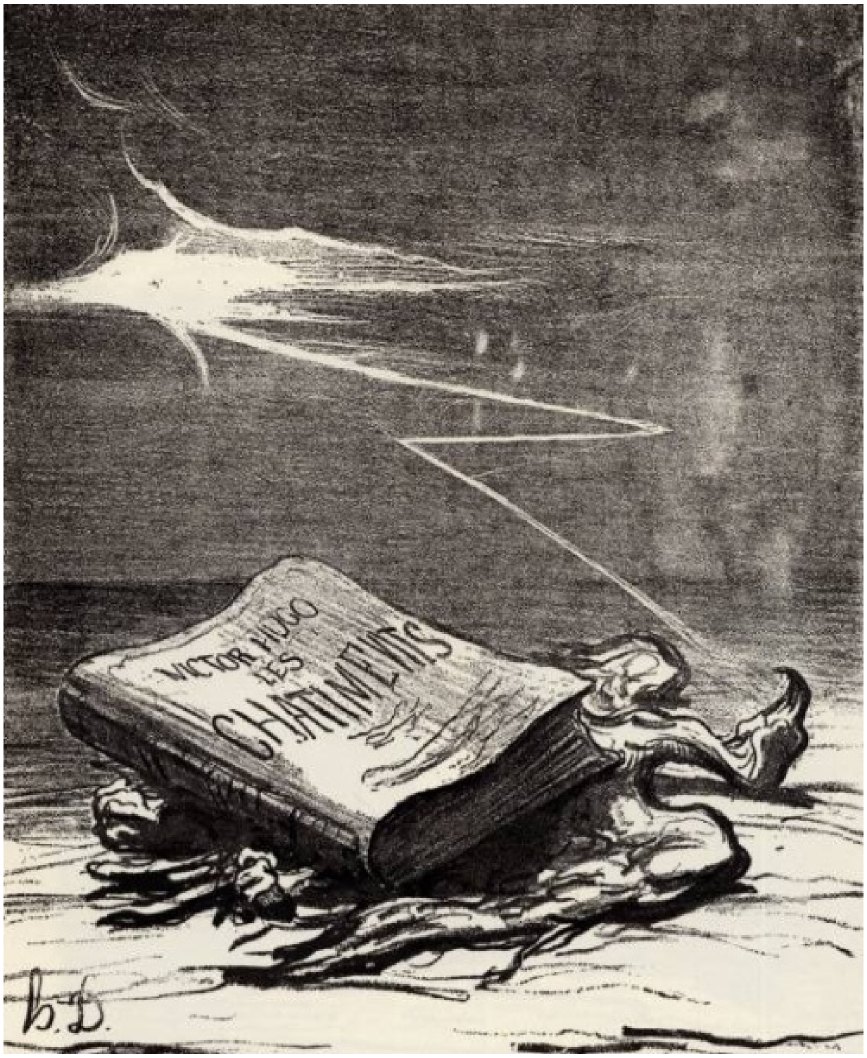
La troisième voix dit:—” Aimer? haïr? qu’importe!
Qu’on chante ou qu’on maudisse, et qu’on entre ou qu’on sorte,
Le mal, le bien, la mort, les vices, les faux dieux,
Qu’est-ce que tout cela fait au ciel radieux?
La végétation, vivante, aveugle et sombre,
En couvre-t-elle moins de feuillages sans nombre,
D’arbres et de lichens, d’herbe et de goëmons,
Les prés, les champs, les eaux, les rochers et les monts?
L’onde est-elle moins bleue et le bois moins sonore?
L’air promène-t-il moins, dans l’ombre et dans l’aurore,
Sur les clairs horizons, sur les flots décevants,
Ces nuages heureux qui vont aux quatre vents?
Le soleil qui sourit aux fleurs dans les campagnes,
Aux rois dans les palais, aux forçats dans les bagnes,
Perd-il, dans la splendeur dont il est revêtu,
Un rayon quand la terre oublie une vertu?
Non, Pan n’a pas besoin qu’on le prie et qu’on l’aime.
Ô sagesse! esprit pur! sérénité suprême!
Zeus! Irmensul! Wishnou! Jupiter! Jéhova!
Dieu que cherchait Socrate et que Jésus trouva!
Unique Dieu! vrai Dieu! seul mystère! seule âme!
Toi qui, laissant tomber ce que la mort réclame,
Fis les cieux infinis pour les temps éternels!
Toi qui mis dans l’éther plein de bruits solennels,
Tente dont ton haleine émeut les sombres toiles,
Des millions d’oiseaux, des millions d’étoiles!
Que te font, ô Très-Haut! les hommes insensés,
Vers la nuit au hasard l’un par l’autre poussés,
Fantômes dont jamais tes yeux ne se souviennent,
Devant ta face immense ombres qui vont et viennent! “

VI

Dans ma retraite obscure où, sous mon rideau vert,
Luit comme un oeil ami maint vieux livre entrouvert,
Où ma bible sourit dans l’ombre à mon Virgile,
J’écoute ces trois voix. Si mon cerveau fragile
S’étonne, je persiste; et, sans peur, sans effroi,
Je les laisse accomplir ce qu’elles font en moi.
Car les hommes, troublés de ces métamorphoses,
Composent leur sagesse avec trop peu de choses.
Tous ont la déraison de voir la Vérité
Chacun de sa fenêtre et rien que d’un côté,
Sans qu’aucun d’eux, tenté par ce rocher sublime,
Aille en faire le tour et monte sur sa cime.
Et de ce triple aspect des choses d’ici-bas,
De ce triple conseil que l’homme n’entend pas,
Pour mon coeur où Dieu vit, où la haine s’émousse,
Sort une bienveillance universelle et douce
Qui dore comme une aube et d’avance attendrit
Le vers qu’à moitié fait j’emporte en mon esprit
Pour l’achever aux champs avec l’odeur des plaines
Et l’ombre du nuage et le bruit des fontaines!

LES CHATIMENTS

This collection of satirical poems was published in 1853. Following the coup of 2nd December 1851, which saw the arrival of Prince Louis-Napoleon Bonaparte, Hugo was exiled. These poems were, for the poet, a weapon designed to discredit and bring down the regime of Napoleon III.



VICTOR HUGO
LES CHATIMENTS
h.D.

An original illustration

TABLE DES MATIERES

AU MOMENT DE RENTRER EN FRANCE
NOX

LIVRE I: LA SOCIÉTÉ EST SAUVÉE

France! à l’heure où tu te prosternes
Toulon
Approchez-vous. Ceci, c’est le tas des dévots
Aux morts du 4 décembre
Cette nuit-là
Le Te Deum du 1er janvier 1852
Ad majorem Dei gloriam
À un martyr
L’Art et le Peuple
Chanson
Oh! je sais qu’ils feront des mensonges sans nombre
Carte d’Europe
Chanson
C’est la nuit; la nuit noire, assoupie et profonde

LIVRE II: L’ORDRE EST RETABLI.

Idylles
Au peuple
Souvenir de la nuit du 4
Ô soleil, ô face divine
Puisque le juste est dans l’abîme
L’Autre Président
À l’obéissance passive

LIVRE III: LA FAMILLE EST RESTAURÉE

Apothéose
L’Homme a ri
Fable ou Histoire
“Ainsi les plus abjects, les plus vils, les plus minces
Querelles du sérail

Orientale
Un Bon Bourgeois dans sa maison
Splendeurs
Joyeuse vie
L’Empereur s’amuse
Sentiers où l’herbe se balance
Ô Robert, un conseil. Ayez l’air moins candide
“L’histoire a pour égout des temps comme les nôtres
À propos de la loi Faider
Le Bord de la mer
Non

LIVRE IV: LA RELIGION EST GLORIFIEE

Sacer esto
Ce que le poète se disait en 1848
Les Commissions mixtes
À des journalistes de robe courte
Quelqu’un
Écrit le 17 juillet 1851, en descendant de la tribune
Un autre
Déjà nommé
Ceux qui vivent, ce sont ceux qui luttent; ce sont …
Aube
“Vicomte de Foucault, lorsque vous empoignâtes
À quatre prisonniers
On loge à la nuit

LIVRE V: L’AUTORITÉ EST SACRÉE

Le Sacre
Chanson
Le Manteau impérial
Tout s’en va
Ô drapeau de Wagram! ô pays de Voltaire
“On est Tibère, on est Judas, on est Dracon
Les Grands Corps de l’État
“Le Progrès calme et fort, et toujours innocent
Le Chant de ceux qui s’en vont sur mer

À un qui veut se détacher
Pauline Roland
L’Expiation

LIVRE VI: LA STABILITE EST ASSUREE

Napoléon III
Les Martyres
Hymne des transportés
Chanson
Éblouissements
À ceux qui dorment
Luna
Aux femmes
Au peuple
Apportez vos chaudrons, sorcières de Shakespeare
Le Parti du crime
On dit: — Soyez prudents. — Puis vient ce dithyrambe
À Juvénal
Floréal
Stella
Les Trois Chevaux
Applaudissement

LIVRE VII: LES SAUVEURS SE SAUVERONT

Sonnez, sonnez toujours, clairons de la pensée
La Reculade
Le Chasseur noir
L’Égout de Rome
“C’était en juin, j’étais à Bruxelle; on me dit …
Chanson
Patria
La Caravane
Cette nuit, il pleuvait, la marée était haute
Ce serait une erreur de croire que ces choses
Quand l’eunuque régnait à côté du césar
Paroles d’un conservateur à propos d’un perturbateur
Force des choses

Chanson
“Il est des jours abjects où, séduits par la joie
Ultima verba
LUX
LA FIN

LES CHATIMENTS

PREFACE

Il a été publié, à Bruxelles, une édition tronquée de ce livre, précédée des lignes que voici:

“Le faux serment est un crime.

“Le guet-apens est un crime.

“La séquestration arbitraire est un crime.

“La subornation des fonctionnaires publics est un crime.

“La subornation des juges est un crime.

“Le vol est un crime.

“Le meurtre est un crime.

“Ce sera un des plus douloureux étonnements de l’avenir que, dans de nobles pays qui, au milieu de la prostration de l’Europe, avaient maintenu leur Constitution et semblaient être les derniers et sacrés asiles de la probité et de la liberté, ce sera, disons-nous, l’étonnement de l’avenir que, dans ces pays-là, il ait été fait des lois pour protéger ce que toutes les lois humaines, d’accord avec toutes les lois et divines, ont dans tous les temps appelé crime.

“L’honnêteté universelle proteste contre ces lois protectrices du mal.

“Pourtant, que les patriotes qui défendent la liberté, que les généreux peuples auxquels la force voudrait imposer l’immoralité, ne désespèrent pas; que, d’un autre côté, les coupables, en apparence tout-puissants, ne se hâtent pas trop de triompher en voyant les pages tronquées de ce livre.

“Quoi que fassent ceux qui règnent chez eux par la violence et hors de chez eux par la menace, quoi que fassent ceux qui se croient les maîtres des peuples et qui ne sont que des tyrans de consciences, l’homme qui lutte pour la justice et la vérité trouvera toujours le moyen d’accomplir son devoir tout entier.

“La toute-puissance du mal n’a jamais abouti qu’à des efforts inutiles. La pensée échappe toujours à qui tente de l’étouffer. Elle se fait insaisissable à la compression; elle se réfugie d’une forme dans l’autre. Le flambeau rayonne; si on l’éteint, si on l’engloutit dans les ténèbres, le flambeau devient une voix, et l’on ne fait pas la nuit sur la parole; si l’on met un bâillon à la bouche qui parle, la parole se change en lumière, el l’on ne bâillonne pas la lumière.

“Rien ne dompte la conscience de l’homme, car la conscience de l’homme, c’est la pensée de Dieu.

“V.H.”

Les quelques lignes qu’on vient de lire, préface d’un livre mutilé, contenaient l’engagement de publier le livre complet. Cet engagement, nous le tenons aujourd’hui.

“V.H.”

Jersey, 1853.

AU MOMENT DE RENTRER EN FRANCE

Qui peut en ce moment où Dieu peut-être échoue,
Deviner
Si c'est du côté sombre ou joyeux que la roue
Va tourner?

Qu'est-ce qui va sortir de ta main qui se voile,
O destin?
Sera-ce l'ombre infâme et sinistre, ou l'étoile
Du matin?

Je vois en même temps le meilleur et le pire;
Noir tableau!
Car la France mérite Austerlitz, et l'empire
Waterloo.

J'irai, je rentrerai dans ta muraille sainte,
O Paris!
Je te rapporterai l'âme jamais éteinte
Des proscrits.

Puisque c'est l'heure où tous doivent se mettre à l'oeuvre,
Fiers, ardents,
Écraser au dehors le tigre, et la couleuvre
Au dedans;

Puisque l'idéal pur, n'ayant pu nous convaincre,
S'engloutit;
Puisque nul n'est trop grand pour mourir, ni pour vaincre
Trop petit;

Puisqu'on voit dans les cieux poindre l'aurore noire
Du plus fort;
Puisque tout devant nous maintenant est la gloire
Ou la mort;

Puisqu’en ce jour le sang ruisselle, les toits brûlent,
Jour sacré!
Puisque c’est le moment où les lâches reculent,
J’accourrai.

Et mon ambition, quand vient sur la frontière
L’étranger,
La voici: part aucune au pouvoir, part entière
Au danger.

Puisque ces ennemis, hier encor nos hôtes,
Sont chez nous,
J’irai, je me mettrai, France, devant tes fautes
A genoux!

J’insulterai leurs chants, leurs aigles noirs, leurs serres,
Leurs défis;
Je te demanderai ma part de tes misères,
Moi ton fils.

Farouche, vénérant, sous leurs affronts infâmes,
Tes malheurs,
Je baiserai tes pieds, France, l’oeil plein de flammes
Et de pleurs.

France, tu verras bien qu’humble tête éclipsée
J’avais foi,
Et que je n’eus jamais dans l’âme une pensée
Que pour toi.

Tu me permettras d’être en sortant des ténèbres
Ton enfant;
Et tandis que rira ce tas d’hommes funèbres
triomphant,

Tu ne trouveras pas mauvais que je t’adore,

En priant,
Ébloui par ton front invincible, que dore
L’Orient.

Naguère, aux jours d’orgie où l’homme joyeux brille,
Et croit peu,
Pareil aux durs sarments desséchés où petille
Un grand feu,

Quand, ivre de splendeur, de triomphe et de songes,
Tu dansais
Et tu chantais, en proie aux éclatants mensonges
Du succès,

Alors qu’on entendait ta fanfare de fête
Retentir,
O Paris, je t’ai fui comme noir prophète
Fuyait Tyr.

Quand l’empire en Gomorrhe avait changé Lutèce,
Morne, amer,
Je me suis envolé dans la grande tristesse
De la mer.

Là, tragique, écoutant ta chanson, ton délire,
Bruits confus,
J’opposais à ton luxe, à ton rève, à ton rire,
Un refus.

Mais aujourd’hui qu’arrive avec sa sombre foule
Attila,
Aujourd’hui que le monde autour de toi s’écroule,
Me voilà.

France, être sur ta claie à l’heure où l’on te traîne
Aux cheveux,
O ma mère, et porter mon anneau de ta chaîne,

Je le veux!

J’accours, puisque sur toi la bombe et la mitraille
Ont craché;
Tu me regarderas debout sur ta muraille,
Ou couché.

Et peut-être, en la terre où brille l’espérance,
Pur flambeau,
Pour prix de mon exil, tu m’accorderas, France,
Un tombeau.
Bruxelles, 31 aoùt 1870.

NOX

I

C’est la date choisie au fond de ta pensée,
Prince! il faut en finir, - Cette nuit est glacée, viens, lève-toi!
Flairant dans l’ombre les escrocs,
Le dogue Liberté gronde et montre ses crocs.
Quoique mis par Carlier à la chaîne, il aboie.
N’attends pas plus longtemps! c’est l’heure de la proie.
Vois, décembre épaissit son brouillard le plus noir.
Comme un baron voleur qui sort de son manoir,
Surprends, brusque assaillant, l’ennemi que tu cernes.
Debout! les régiments sont là dans les casernes,

Sac au dos, abrutis de vin et de fureur,
N’attendant qu’un bandit pour faire un empereur.
Mets ta main sur ta lampe et viens d’un pas oblique,
Prends ton couteau, l’instant est bon: la République,
Confiante, et sans voir tes yeux sombres briller,
Dort, avec ton serment, prince, pour oreiller.

Cavaliers, fantassins, sortez! dehors les hordes!
Sus aux représentants! soldats, liez de cordes
Vos généraux jetés dans la cave aux forçats!
Poussez, la crosse aux reins, l’Assemblée à Mazas!
Chassez la haute-cour à coups de plat de sabre!
Changez-vous, preux de France, en brigands de Calabre!
Vous, bourgeois, regardez, vil troupeau, vil limon,
Comme un glaive rougi qu’agite un noir démon,
Le coup d’état qui sort flamboyant de la forge!
Les tribuns pour le droit luttent; qu’on les égorge.
Routiers, condottieri, vendus, prostitués,
Frappez! tuez Baudin! tuez Dussoubs! tuez!
Que fait hors des maisons ce peuple? Qu’il s’en aille.
Soldats, mitraillez-moi toute cette canaille!

Feu! feu! Tu voteras ensuite, ô peuple roi!
Sabrez le droit, sabrez l'honneur, sabrez la loi!
Que sur les boulevards le sang coule en rivières!
Du vin plein les bidons! des morts plein les civières!
Qui veut de l'eau-de-vie? En ce temps pluvieux
Il faut boire. Soldats, fusillez-moi ce vieux.
Tuez-moi cet enfant. Qu'est-ce que cette femme?
C'est la mère? tuez. Que tout ce peuple infâme
Tremble, et que les pavés rougissent ses talons!

Ce Paris odieux bouge et résiste. Allons!
Qu'il sente le mépris, sombre et plein de vengeance,
Que nous, la force, avons pour lui, l'intelligence!
L'étranger respecta Paris: soyons nouveaux!
Traînons-le dans la boue aux crins de nos chevaux!
Qu'il meure! qu'on le broie et l'écrase et l'efface!
Noirs canons, crachez-lui vos boulets à la face!

II

C'est fini. Le silence est partout, et l'horreur.
Vive Poulmann César et Soufflard empereur!
On fait des feux de joie avec les barricades;
La porte Saint-Denis sous ses hautes arcades
Voit les brasiers trembler au vent et rayonner.
C'est fait, reposez-vous; et l'on entend sonner
Dans les fourreaux le sabre et l'argent dans les poches.
De la banque aux bivouacs on vide les sacoches.
Ceux qui tuaient le mieux et qui n'ont pas bronché
Auront la croix d'honneur par-dessus le marché.
Les vainqueurs en hurlant dansent sur les décombres.
Des tas de corps saignants gisent dans les coins sombres.
Le soldat, gai, féroce, ivre, complice obscur,
Chancelle, et, de la main dont il s'appuie au mur,
Achève d'écraser quelque cervelle humaine.
On boit, on rit, on chante, on ripaille, on amène
Des vaincus qu'on fusille, hommes, femmes, enfants.

Les généraux dorés galopent triomphants,
Regardés par les morts tombés à la renverse.
Bravo! César a pris le chemin de traverse!
Courons féliciter l’Élysée à présent.
Du sang dans les maisons, dans les ruisseaux du sang,
Partout! Pour enjamber ces effroyables mares
Les juges lestement retroussent leurs simarres,
Et l’Église joyeuse en emporte un caillot
Tout fumant, pour servir d’écritoire à Veuillot.
Oui, c’est bien vous qu’hier, riant de vos férules,
Un caporal chassa de vos chaises curules,
Magistrats! Maintenant que, reprenant du cœur,
Vous êtes bien certains que Mandrin est vainqueur,
Que vous ne serez pas obligés d’être intègres,
Que Mandrin dotera vos dévouements allègres,
Que c’est lui qui paîra désormais, et très bien,
Qu’il a pris le budget, que vous ne risquez rien,
Qu’il a bien étranglé la loi, qu’elle est bien morte,
Et que vous trouverez ce cadavre à la porte,
Accourez, acclamez, et chantez Hosanna!
Oubliez le soufflet qu’hier il vous donna,
Et puisqu’il a tué vieillards, mères et filles,
Puisqu’il est dans le meurtre entré jusqu’aux chevilles,
Prosternez-vous devant l’assassin tout-puissant,
Et léchez-lui les pieds pour effacer le sang!
III

Donc cet homme s’est dit: - « Le maître des armées,
L’empereur surhumain
Devant qui, gorge au vent, pieds nus, les renommées
Volaient, clairons en main,

«Napoléon, quinze ans régna dans les tempêtes
Du Sud à l’Aquilon.
Tous les rois l’adoraient, lui, marchant sur leurs têtes,
Eux, baisant son talon;

«Il prit, embrassant tout dans sa vaste espérance,
Madrid, Berlin, Moscou;
Je ferai mieux; je vais enfoncer à la France
Mes ongles dans le cou!

«La France libre et fière et chantant la concorde
Marche à son but sacré;
Moi, je vais lui jeter par derrière une corde
Et je l’étranglerai.

«Nous nous partagerons, mon oncle et moi, l’histoire;
Le plus intelligent,
C’est moi, certes! il aura la fanfare de gloire,
J’aurai le sac d’argent.
«Je me sers de son nom, splendide et vain tapage,
Tombé dans mon berceau.
Le nain grimpe au géant. Je lui laisse sa page,
Mais j’en prends le verso.

«Je me cramponne à lui. C’est moi qui suis son maître.
J’ai pour sort et pour loi
De surnager sur lui dans l’histoire, ou peut-être
De l’engloutir sous moi.

«Moi, chat-huant, je prends cet aigle dans ma serre.
Moi si bas, lui si haut,
Je le tiens! je choisis son grand anniversaire,
C’est le jour qu’il me faut.

«Ce jour-là, je serai comme un homme qui monte
Le manteau sur ses yeux;
Nul ne se doutera que j’apporte la honte
A ce jour glorieux;

«J’irai plus aisément saisir mon ennemie
Dans mes poings meurtriers;

La France ce jour-là sera mieux endormie
Sur son lit de lauriers.» -

Alors il vint, cassé de débauches, l’œil terne,
Furtif, les traits pâlis,
Et ce voleur de nuit alluma sa lanterne
Au soleil d’Austerlitz!
IV

Victoire! il était temps, prince, que tu parusses!
Les filles d’opéra manquaient de princes russes;
Les révolutions apportent de l’ennui
Aux Jeannetons d’hier, Pamélas d’aujourd’hui;
Dans don Juan qui s’effraie un Harpagon éclate,
Un maigre filet d’or sort de sa bourse plate;
L’argent devenait rare aux tripots; les journaux
Faisaient le vide autour des confessionnaux;
Le sacré-cœur, mourant de sa mort naturelle,
Maigrissait; les protêts, tourbillonnant en grêle,
Drus et noirs, aveuglaient le portier de Magnan;
On riait aux sermons de l’abbé Ravignan;
Plus de pur-sang piaffant aux portes des donzelles;
L’hydre de l’anarchie apparaissait aux belles
Sous la forme effroyable et triste d’un cheval
De fiacre les traînant pour trente sous au bal.
La désolation était sur Babylone.
Mais tu surgis, bras fort; tu te dresses, colonne
Tout renaît, tout revit, tout est sauvé. Pour lors
Les figurantes vont récolter des milords,
Tous sont contents, soudards, francs viveurs, gent dévote,
Tous chantent, monseigneur l’archevêque, et Javotte.

Allons! congratulons, triomphons, partageons!

Les vieux partis, coiffés en ailes de pigeons,
Vont s’inscrire, adorant Mandrin, chez son concierge.
Falstaff allume un punch, Tartuffe brûle un cierge.

Vers l’Élysée en joie, où sonne le tambour,
Tous se hâtent, Parieu, Montalembert, Sibour,
Rouher, cette catin, Troplong, cette servante,
Grecs, juifs, quiconque a mis sa conscience en vente,
Quiconque vole et ment cum privilegio;
L’homme du bénitier, l’homme de l’agio,
Quiconque est méprisable et désire être infâme,
Quiconque, se jugeant dans le fond de son âme,
Se sent assez forçat pour être sénateur.
Myrmidon de César admire la hauteur.
Lui, fait la roue et trône au centre de la fête.
— Eh bien, messieurs, la chose est-elle un peu bien faite?
Qu’en pense Papavoine et qu’en dit Loyola?
Maintenant nous ferons voter ces drôles-là.
Partout en lettres d’or nous écrirons le chiffre. -
Gai! tapez sur la caisse et soufflez dans le fifre;
Braillez vos salvum fac, messeigneurs; en avant
Des églises, abri profond du Dieu vivant,
On dressera des mâts avec des oriflammes.
Victoire! venez voir les cadavres, mesdames.

V

Où sont-ils? Sur les quais, dans les cours, sous les ponts,
Dans l’égout, dont Maupas fait lever les tampons,
Dans la fosse commune affreusement accrue,
Sur le trottoir, au coin des portes, dans la rue,
Pêle-mêle entassés, partout; dans les fourgons
Que vers la nuit tombante escortent les dragons,
Convoi hideux qui vient du Champ de Mars, et passe,
Et dont Paris tremblant s’entretient à voix basse.
Ô vieux mont des martyrs, hélas, garde ton nom!
Les morts, sabrés, hachés, broyés par le canon,
Dans ce champ que la tombe emplit de son mystère,
Etaient ensevelis la tête hors de terre.
Cet homme les avait lui-même ainsi placés,
Et n’avait pas eu peur de tous ces fronts glacés.

Ils étaient là, sanglants, froids, la bouche entrouverte,
La face vers le ciel, blêmes dans l’herbe verte,
Effroyables à voir dans leur tranquillité,
Eventrés, balafrés, le visage fouetté
Par la ronce qui tremble au vent du crépuscule
Tous, l’homme du faubourg qui jamais ne recule,
Le riche à la main blanche et le pauvre au bras fort,
La mère qui semblait montrer son enfant mort,
Cheveux blancs, tête blonde, au milieu des squelettes,
La belle jeune fille aux lèvres violettes,

Côte à côte rangés dans l’ombre au pied des ifs,
Livides, stupéfaits, immobiles, pensifs,
Spectres du même crime et des mêmes désastres,
De leur œil fixe et vide ils regardaient les astres.
Dès l’aube, on s’en venait chercher dans ce gazon
L’absent qui n’était pas rentré dans la maison;
Le peuple contemplait ces têtes effarées;
La nuit, qui de décembre abrège les soirées,
Pudique, les couvrait du moins de son linceul.
Le soir, le vieux gardien des tombes, resté seul,
Hâtait le pas parmi les pierres sépulcrales,
Frémissant d’entrevoir toutes ces faces pâles
Et tandis qu’on pleurait dans les maisons en deuil,
L’âpre bise soufflait sur ces fronts sans cercueil,
L’ombre froide emplissait l’enclos aux murs funèbres;
Ô morts, que disiez-vous à Dieu dans ces ténèbres?

On eût dit, en voyant ces morts mystérieux
Le cou hors de la terre et le regard aux cieux,
Que, dans le cimetière où le cyprès frissonne,
Entendant le clairon du jugement qui sonne,
Tous ces assassinés s’éveillaient brusquement,
Qu’ils voyaient, Bonaparte, au seuil du firmament
Amener devant Dieu ton âme horrible et fausse,
Et que, pour témoigner, ils sortaient de leur fosse.

Montmartre! enclos fatal! quand vient le soir obscur
Aujourd’hui le passant évite encor ce mur.

VI

Un mois après, cet homme allait à Notre-Dame.

Il entra le front haut; la myrrhe et le cinname
Brûlaient; les tours vibraient sous le bourdon sonnant;
L’archevêque était là, de gloire rayonnant;
Sa chape avait été taillée en un suaire;
Sur une croix dressée au fond du sanctuaire
Jésus avait été cloué pour qu’il restât.
Cet infâme apportait à Dieu son attentat.
Comme un loup qui se lèche après qu’il vient de mordre,
Caressant sa moustache, il dit: - J’ai sauvé l’ordre!
Anges, recevez-moi dans votre légion!
J’ai sauvé la famille et la religion! -
Et dans son œil féroce, où Satan se contemple,
On vit luire une larme... - Ô colonnes du temple!
Abîmes qu’à Pathmos vit s’entrouvrir saint-Jean,
Cieux qui vîtes Néron, soleil qui vis Séjan,
Vents qui jadis meniez Tibère vers Caprée
Et poussiez sur les flots sa galère dorée,
Ô souffles de l’aurore et du septentrion,
Dites si l’assassin dépasse l’histrion!

VII

Toi qui bats de ton flux fidèle
La roche où j’ai ployé mon aile,
Vaincu, mais non pas abattu,
Gouffre où l’air joue, où l’esquif sombre
Pourquoi me parles-tu dans l’ombre?
Ô sombre mer, que me veux-tu?

Tu n’y peux rien! Ronge tes digues,
Epands l’onde que tu prodigues,
Laisse-moi souffrir et rêver;

Toutes les eaux de ton abîme,
Hélas! passeraient sur ce crime,
Ô vaste mer, sans le laver!

Je comprends, tu veux m’en distraire
Tu me dis: - Calme-toi, mon frère,
Calme-toi, penseur orageux! -
Mais toi-même alors, mer profonde,
Calme ton flot puissant qui gronde,
Toujours amer, jamais fangeux!

Tu crois en ton pouvoir suprême,
Toi qu’on admire, toi qu’on aime,

Toi qui ressembles au destin,
Toi que les cieux ont azurée,
Toi qui dans ton onde sacrée
Laves l’étoile du matin!

Tu me dis: - Viens, contemple, oublie!
Tu me montres le mât qui plie,
Les blocs verdis, les caps croulants,
L’écume au loin dans les décombres,
S’abattant sur les rochers sombres
Comme une troupe d’oiseaux blancs;

La pêcheuse aux pieds nus qui chante,
L’eau bleue où fuit la nef penchants,
Le marin, rude laboureur,
Les hautes vagues en démence;
Tu me montres ta grâce immense
Mêlée à ton immense horreur;

Tu me dis: - Donne-moi ton âme;
Proscrit, éteins en moi ta flamme,
Marcheur, jette aux flots ton bâton
Tourne vers moi ta vue ingrate. -

Tu me dis: - J’endormais Socrate!-
Tu me dis: - J’ai calmé Caton!

Non! respecte l’âpre pensée,
L’âme du juste courroucée,
L’esprit qui songe aux noirs forfaits!
Parle aux vieux rochers, tes conquêtes,

Et laisse en repos mes tempêtes!
D’ailleurs, mer sombre, je te hais!

Ô mer! n’est-ce pas toi, servante,
Qui traînes sur ton eau mouvante,
Parmi les vents et les écueils,
Vers Cayenne aux fosses profondes
Ces noirs pontons qui sur tes ondes
Passent comme de grands cercueils!

N’est-ce pas toi qui les emportes
Vers le sépulcre ouvrant ses portes,
Tous nos martyrs au front serein,
Dans la cale où manque la paille,
Où les canons pleins de mitraille,
Béants, passent leur cou d’airain!

Et s’ils pleurent, si les tortures
Font fléchir ces hautes natures,
N’est-ce pas toi, gouffre exécré,
Qui te mêles à leur supplice,
Et qui de ta rumeur complice,
Couvres leur cri désespéré!
VIII

Voilà ce qu’on a vu! l’histoire le raconte,
Et lorsqu’elle a fini pleure, rouge de honte.

Quand se réveillera la grande nation,

Quand viendra le moment de l’expiation,
Glaive des jours sanglants, oh! ne sors pas de l’ombre!
Non! non! il n’est pas vrai qu’en plus d’une âme sombre,
Pour châtier ce traître et cet homme de nuit,
A cette heure, ô douleur! ta nécessité luit!
Souvenirs où l’esprit grave et pensif s’arrête!
Gendarmes, sabre nu, conduisant la charrette,
Roulements des tambours, peuple criant: frappons!
Foule encombrant les toits, les seuils, les quais, les ponts,
Grèves des temps passés, mornes places publiques
Où l’on entrevoyait des triangles obliques,
Oh! ne revenez pas, lugubres visions!
Ciel! nous allions en paix devant nous, nous faisions
Chacun notre travail dans le siècle où nous sommes,
Le poëte chantait l’œuvre immense des hommes,
La tribune parlait avec sa grande voix,
On brisait échafauds, trônes, carcans, pavois,
Chaque jour décroissaient la haine et la souffrance,
Le genre humain suivait le progrès saint, la France
Marchait devant, avec sa flamme sur le front;

Ces hommes sont venus! lui, ce vivant affront,
Lui, ce bandit qu’on lave avec l’huile du sacre,
Ils sont venus, portant le deuil et le massacre,
Le meurtre, les linceuls, le fer, le sang, le feu,
Ils ont semé cela sur l’avenir. Grand Dieu!

Et maintenant, pitié, voici que tu tressailles
A ces mots effrayants - vengeance! représailles!

Et moi, proscrit qui saigne aux ronces des chemins,
Triste, je rêve et j’ai mon front dans mes deux mains,
Et je sens, par instants, d’une aile hérissée
Dans les jours qui viendront s’enfoncer ma pensée!
Géante aux chastes yeux, à l’ardente action,
Que jamais on ne voie, ô Révolution,
Devant ton fier visage où la colère brille,

L’Humanité, tremblante et te criant: ma fille!
Et couvrant de son corps même les scélérats,
Se traîner à tes pieds en se tordant les bras!
Ah! tu respecteras cette douleur amère,
Et tu t’arrêteras, Vierge, devant la Mère!

Ô travailleur robuste, ouvrier demi-nu,
Moissonneur envoyé par Dieu même, et venu
Pour faucher en un jour dix siècles de misère,
Sans peur, sans pitié, vrai, formidable et sincère,
Egal par la stature au colosse romain,
Toi qui vainquis l’Europe et qui pris dans ta main
Les rois, et les brisas les uns contre les autres,
Né pour clore les temps d’où sortirent les nôtres,

Toi qui par la terreur sauvas la liberté,
Toi qui portes ce nom sombre: Nécessité!
Dans l’Histoire où tu luis comme en une fournaise,
Reste seul à jamais, Titan quatrevingt-treize!
Rien d’aussi grand que toi ne viendrait après toi.

D’ailleurs, né d’un régime où dominait l’effroi,
Ton éducation sur ta tête affranchie
Pesait, et malgré toi, fils de la monarchie,
Nourri d’enseignements et d’exemples mauvais,
Comme elle tu versas le sang; tu ne savais
Que ce qu’elle t’avait appris: le mal, la peine,
La loi de mort mêlée avec la loi de haine;
Et jetant bas tyrans, parlements, rois, Capets,
Tu te levais contre eux et comme eux tu frappais.

Nous, grâce à toi, géant qui gagnas notre cause,
Fils de la liberté, nous savons autre chose.
Ce que la France veut pour toujours désormais,
C’est l’amour rayonnant sur ses calmes sommets,
La loi sainte du Christ, la fraternité pure.
Ce grand mot est écrit dans toute la nature:

Aimez-vous! aimez-vous! - Soyons frères; ayons
L’œil fixé sur l’Idée, ange aux divins rayons.
L’Idée à qui tout cède et qui toujours éclaire
Prouve sa sainteté même dans sa colère,
Elle laisse toujours les principes debout.
Etre vainqueurs, c’est peu, mais rester grands, c’est tout.
Quand nous tiendrons ce traître, abject, frissonnant, blême
Affirmons le progrès dans le châtiment même.

La honte, et non la mort. - Peuples, couvrons d’oubli
L’affreux passé des rois, pour toujours aboli,
Supplices, couperets, billots, gibets, tortures!
Hâtons l’heure promise aux nations futures
Où, calme et souriant aux bons, même aux ingrats,
La Concorde, serrant les hommes dans ses bras,
Penchera sur nous tous sa tête vénérable!
Oh! qu’il ne soit pas dit que, pour ce misérable,
Le monde en son chemin sublime a reculé!
Que Jésus et Voltaire auront en vain parlé!
Qu’il n’est pas vrai qu’après tant d’efforts et de peine,
Notre époque ait enfin sacré la vie humaine,
Hélas! et qu’il suffit d’un moment indigné
Pour perdre le trésor par les siècles gagné!
On peut être sévère et de sang économe.
Oh! qu’il ne soit pas dit qu’à cause de cet homme
La guillotine au noir panier, qu’avec dégoût
Février avait prise et jetée à l’égout,
S’est réveillée avec les bourreaux dans leurs bouges,
A ressaisi sa hache entre ses deux bras rouges,
Et, dressant son poteau dans les tombes scellé,
Sinistre, a reparu sous le ciel étoilé!
IX
Toi qu’aimait Juvénal gonflé de lave ardente,
Toi dont la clarté luit dans l’œil fixe de Dante,
Muse Indignation! viens, dressons maintenant,
Dressons sur cet empire heureux et rayonnant,
Et sur cette victoire au tonnerre échappée,

Assez de piloris pour faire une épopée!
16-22 novembre 1852. Jersey

LIVRE I: LA SOCIÉTÉ EST SAUVÉE

France! à l’heure où tu te prosternes

I

France! à l’heure où tu te prosternes,
Le pied d’un tyran sur ton front,
La voix sortira des cavernes;
Les enchaînés tressailleront.

Le banni, debout sur la grève,
Contemplant l’étoile et le flot,
Comme ceux qu’on entend en rêve,
Parlera dans l’ombre tout haut;

Et ses paroles qui menacent,
Ses paroles dont l’éclair luit,

Seront comme des mains qui passent
Tenant des glaives dans la nuit.

Elles feront frémir les marbres
Et les monts que brunit le soir,
Et les chevelures des arbres
Frissonneront sous le ciel noir;

Elles seront l’airain qui sonne,
Le cri qui chasse les corbeaux,
Le souffle inconnu dont frissonne
Le brin d’herbe sur les tombeaux;

Elles crieront: Honte aux infâmes,
Aux oppresseurs, aux meurtriers!
Elles appelleront les âmes
Comme on appelle des guerriers!

Sur les races qui se transforment,

Sombre orage, elles planeront;
Et si ceux qui vivent s’endorment,
Ceux qui sont morts s’éveilleront.

30 mars. Jersey.

Toulon

I

En ces temps-là, c’était une ville tombée
Au pouvoir des anglais, maîtres des vastes mers,
Qui, du canon battue et de terreur courbée,
Disparaissait dans les éclairs.

C’était une cité qu’ébranlait le tonnerre
A l’heure où la nuit tombe, à l’heure où le jour naît,
Qu’avait prise en sa griffe Albion, qu’en sa serre
La République reprenait.

Dans la rade couraient les frégates meurtries;
Les pavillons pendaient troués par le boulet;
Sur le front orageux des noires batteries
La fumée à longs flots roulait.
On entendait gronder les forts, sauter les poudres
Le brûlot flamboyait sur la vague qui luit;
Comme un astre effrayant qui se disperse en foudres,
La bombe éclatait dans la nuit.

Sombre histoire! Quels temps! Et quelle illustre page!
Tout se mêlait, le mât coupé, le mur détruit,
Les obus, le sifflet des maîtres d’équipage,
Et l’ombre, et l’horreur, et le bruit.

Ô France! tu couvrais alors toute la terre
Du choc prodigieux de tes rébellions.
Les rois lâchaient sur toi le tigre et la panthère,
Et toi, tu lâchais les lions.

Alors la République avait quatorze armées;
On luttait sur les monts et sur les océans.
Cent victoires jetaient au vent cent renommées.

On voyait surgir les géants!

Alors apparaissaient des aubes rayonnantes.
Des inconnus, soudain éblouissant les yeux,
Se dressaient, et faisaient aux trompettes sonnantes
Dire leurs noms mystérieux.

Ils faisaient de leurs jours de sublimes offrandes;
Ils criaient: Liberté! guerre aux tyrans! mourons!
Guerre! - et la gloire ouvrait ses ailes toutes grandes
Au-dessus de ces jeunes fronts!

II

Aujourd’hui c’est la ville où toute honte échoue.
Là, quiconque est abject, horrible et malfaisant,
Quiconque un jour plongea son honneur dans la boue,
Noya son âme dans le sang,

Là, le faux monnayeur pris la main sur sa forge,
L’homme du faux serment et l’homme du faux poids,
Le brigand qui s’embusque et qui saute à la gorge
Des passants, la nuit, dans les bois,

Là, quand l’heure a sonné, cette heure nécessaire,
Toujours, quoi qu’il ait fait pour fuir, quoi qu’il ait dit,
Le pirate hideux, le voleur, le faussaire,
Le parricide, le bandit,

Qu’il sorte d’un palais ou qu’il sorte d’un bouge,
Vient, et trouve une main, froide comme un verrou,
Qui sur le dos lui jette une casaque rouge,
Et lui met un carcan au cou.

L’aurore luit, pour eux sombre et pour nous vermeille.
Allons! debout! Ils vont vers le sombre océan.
Il semble que leur chaîne avec eux se réveille,
Et dit: me voilà; viens-nous-en!

Ils marchent, au marteau présentant leurs manilles,
À leur chaîne cloués, mêlant leurs pas bruyants,
Traînant leur pourpre infâme en hideuses guenilles,
Humbles, furieux, effrayants.

Les pieds nus, leur bonnet baissé sur leurs paupières,
Dès l’aube harassés, l’œil mort, les membres lourds,
Ils travaillent, creusant des rocs, roulant des pierres,
Sans trêve, hier, demain, toujours.

Pluie ou soleil, hiver, été, que juin flamboie,
Que janvier pleure, ils vont, leur destin s’accomplit,
Avec le souvenir de leurs crimes pour joie,
Avec une planche pour lit.

Le soir, comme un troupeau l’argousin vil les compte.
Ils montent deux à deux l’escalier du ponton,
Brisés, vaincus, le cœur incliné sous la honte,
Le dos courbé sous le bâton.

La pensée implacable habite encor leurs têtes.
Morts vivants, aux labeurs voués, marqués au front,
Ils rampent, recevant le fouet comme des bêtes,
Et comme des hommes l’affront.

III

Ville que l’infamie et la gloire ensemencent,
Où du forçat pensif le fer tond les cheveux,
Ô Toulon! c’est par toi que les oncles commencent,
Et que finissent les neveux!

Va, maudit! ce boulet que, dans des temps stoïques,
Le grand soldat, sur qui ton opprobre s’assied,
Mettait dans les canons de ses mains héroïques,
Tu le traîneras à ton pied!

Jersey, 28 octobre 1852

Approchez-vous. Ceci, c’est le tas des dévots

Approchez-vous. Ceci, c’est le tas des dévots.
Cela hurle en grinçant un benedicat vos;
C’est laid, c’est vieux, c’est noir. Cela fait des gazettes.
Pères fouetteurs du siècle, à grands coups de garcettes.
Ils nous mènent au ciel. Ils font, blêmes grimauds,
De l’âme et de Jésus des querelles de mots
Comme à Byzance au temps des Jeans et des Eudoxes.
Méfions-nous; ce sont des gredins orthodoxes.
Ils auraient fait pousser des cris à Juvénal.
La douairière aux yeux gris s’ébat sur leur journal
Comme sur les marais la grue et la bécasse.
Ils citent Poquelin, Pascal, Rousseau, Boccace,
Voltaire, Diderot, l’aigle au vol inégal,
Devant l’official et le théologal.
L’esprit étant gênant, ces saints le congédient.
Ils mettent Escobar sous bande et l’expédient
Aux bedeaux rayonnants, pour quatre francs par mois.
Avec le vieux savon des jésuites sournois
Ils lavent notre époque incrédule et pensive,
Et le bûcher fournit sa cendre à leur lessive.

Leur gazette, où les mots de venin sont verdis,
Est la seule qui soit reçue au paradis.
Ils sont, là, tout-puissants; et tandis que leur bande
Prêche ici-bas la dîme et défend la prébende,
Ils font chez Jéhovah la pluie et le beau temps.
L’ange au glaive de feu leur ouvre à deux battants
La porte bienheureuse, effrayante et vermeille;
Tous les matins, à l’heure où l’oiseau se réveille,
Quand l’aube, se dressant au bord du ciel profond,
Rougit en regardant ce que les hommes font
Et que des pleurs de honte emplissent sa paupière,
Gais, ils grimpent là-haut, et, cognant chez saint-Pierre,
Jettent à ce portier leur journal impudent.

Ils écrivent à Dieu comme à leur intendant,
Critiquant, gourmandant, et lui demandant compte
Des révolutions, des vents, du flot qui monte,
De l’astre au pur regard qu’ils voudraient voir loucher,
De ce qu’il fait tourner notre terre et marcher
Notre esprit, et, d’un timbre ornant l’eucharistie,
Ils cachettent leur lettre immonde avec l’hostie.
Jamais marquis. voyant son carrosse broncher,
N’a plus superbement tutoyé son cocher;
Si bien que, ne sachant comment mener le monde,
Ce pauvre vieux bon Dieu, sur qui leur foudre gronde,
Tremblant, cherchant un trou dans ses cieux éclatants,
Ne sait où se fourrer quand ils sont mécontents.
Ils ont supprimé Rome; ils auraient détruit Sparte.
Ces drôles sont charmés de monsieur Bonaparte.

Aux morts du 4 décembre

Jouissez du repos que vous donne le maître.
Vous étiez autrefois des cœurs troublés peut-être,
Qu’un vain songe poursuit;
L’erreur vous tourmentait, ou la haine, ou l’envie;
Vos bouches, d’où sortait la vapeur de la vie,
Étaient pleines de bruit.

Faces confusément l’une à l’autre apparues,
Vous alliez et veniez en foule dans les rues,
Ne vous arrêtant pas,
Inquiets comme l’eau qui coule des fontaines,
Tous, marchant au hasard, souffrant les mêmes peines,
Mêlant les mêmes pas.

Peut-être un feu creusait votre tête embrasée,
Projets, espoirs, briser l’homme de l’Élysée,
L’homme du Vatican,

Verser le libre esprit à grands flots sur la terre
Car dans ce siècle ardent toute âme est un cratère
Et tout peuple un volcan.

Vous aimiez, vous aviez le cœur lié de chaînes
Et le soir vous sentiez, livrés aux craintes vaines,
Pleins de soucis poignants,
Ainsi que l’océan sent remuer ses ondes,
Se soulever en vous mille vagues profondes
Sous les cieux rayonnants.

Tous, qui que vous fussiez, tête ardente, esprit sage,
Soit qu’en vos yeux brillât la jeunesse, ou que l’âge
Vous prît et vous courbât,
Que le destin pour vous fût deuil, énigme ou fête,
Vous aviez dans vos cœurs l’amour, cette tempête,

La douleur, ce combat.

Grâce au quatre décembre, aujourd’hui, sans pensée,
Vous gisez étendus dans la fosse glacée
Sous les linceuls épais;
Ô morts, l’herbe sans bruit croît sur vos catacombes,
Dormez dans vos cercueils! taisez-vous dans vos tombes
L’empire, c’est la paix.

10 novembre. Jersey.

Cette nuit-là

Trois amis l’entouraient. C’était à l’Élysée.
On voyait du dehors luire cette croisée.
Regardant venir l’heure et l’aiguille marcher,
Il était là, pensif; et rêvant d’attacher
Le nom de Bonaparte aux exploits de Cartouche,
Il sentait approcher son guet-apens farouche.
D’un pied distrait dans l’âtre il poussait le tison,
Et voici ce que dit l’homme de trahison:
«Cette nuit vont surgir mes projets invisibles.
Les Saint-Barthélemy sont encore possibles.
Paris dort, comme aux temps de Charles de Valois.
Vous allez dans un sac mettre toutes les lois,
Et par-dessus le pont les jeter dans la Seine.”
Ô ruffians! bâtards de la fortune obscène,
Nés du honteux coït de l’intrigue et du sort!
Rien qu’en songeant à vous mon vers indigné sort,
Et mon cœur orageux dans ma poitrine gronde
Comme le chêne au vent dans la forêt profonde!

Comme ils sortaient tous trois de la maison Bancal,
Morny, Maupas le grec, Saint-Arnaud le chacal,
Voyant passer ce groupe oblique et taciturne,
Les clochers de Paris, sonnant l’heure nocturne,
S’efforçaient vainement d’imiter le tocsin;
Les pavés de Juillet criaient à l’assassin!
Tous les spectres sanglants des antiques carnages,
Réveillés, se montraient du doigt ces personnages
La Marseillaise, archange aux chants aériens,
Murmurait dans les cieux: aux armes, citoyens!

Paris dormait, hélas! et bientôt, sur les places,
Sur les quais, les soldats, dociles populaces,
Janissaires conduits par Reibell et Sauboul,
Payés comme à Byzance, ivres comme à Stamboul,

Ceux de Dulac, et ceux de Korte et d’Espinasse,
La cartouchière au flanc et dans l’œil la menace,
Vinrent, le régiment après le régiment,
Et le long des maisons ils passaient lentement,
À pas sourds, comme on voit les tigres dans les jongles
Qui rampent sur le ventre en allongeant leurs ongles
Et la nuit était morne, et Paris sommeillait
Comme un aigle endormi pris sous un noir filet.

Les chefs attendaient l’aube en fumant leurs cigares.

Ô cosaques! voleurs! chauffeurs! routiers! bulgares!
Ô généraux brigands! bagne, je te les rends!
Les juges d’autrefois pour des crimes moins grands
Ont brûlé la Voisin et roué vif Desrues!

Éclairant leur affiche infâme au coin des rues
Et le lâche armement de ces filons hardis,
Le jour parut. La nuit, complice des bandits,
Prit la fuite, et, traînant à la hâte ses voiles,
Dans les plis de sa robe emporta les étoiles
Et les mille soleils dans l’ombre étincelant,
Comme les sequins d’or qu’emporte en s’en allant
Une fille, aux baisers du crime habituée,
Qui se rhabille après s’être prostituée.
17 janvier

Le Te Deum du 1er janvier 1852

Prêtre, ta messe, écho des feux de peloton,
Est une chose impie.
Derrière toi, le bras ployé sous le menton,
Rit la mort accroupie.

Prêtre, on voit frissonner, aux cieux d’où nous venons
Les anges et les vierges,
Quand un évêque prend la mèche des canons
Pour allumer les cierges.

Tu veux être au sénat, voir ton siège élevé
Et ta fortune accrue.
Soit; mais pour bénir l’homme, attends qu’on ait lavé
Le pavé de la rue.

Peuples, gloire à Gessler! meure Guillaume Tell!
Un râle sort de l’orgue.
Archevêque, on a pris pour bâtir ton autel
Les dalles de la morgue.

Quand tu dis: - Te Deum! nous vous louons, Dieu fort!
Sabaoth des armées! -
Il se mêle à l’encens une vapeur qui sort
Des fosses mal fermées.

On a tué, la nuit, on a tué, le jour,
L’homme, l’enfant, la femme!
Crime et deuil! Ce n’est plus l’aigle, c’est le vautour
Qui vole à Notre-Dame.

Va, prodigue au bandit les adorations
Martyrs, vous l’entendîtes!
Dieu te voit, et là-haut tes bénédictions,
Ô prêtre, sont maudites!

Les proscrits sont partis, aux flancs du ponton noir,
Pour Alger, pour Cayenne;
Ils ont vu Bonaparte à Paris, ils vont voir
En Afrique l’hyène.

Ouvriers, paysans qu’on arrache au labour,
Le sombre exil vous fauche!
Bien, regarde à ta droite, archevêque Sibour,
Et regarde à ta gauche:

Ton diacre est Trahison et ton sous-diacre est Vol
Vends ton Dieu, vends ton âme.
Allons, coiffe ta mitre, allons, mets ton licol,
Chante, vieux prêtre infâme!

Le meurtre à tes côtés suit l’office divin,
Criant: feu sur qui bouge!
Satan tient la burette, et ce n’est pas de vin
Que ton ciboire est rouge.
7 novembre. Jersey.

Ad majorem Dei gloriam

“Vraiment, notre siècle est étrangement délicat. S’imagine-t-il donc que la cendre des bûchers soit totalement éteinte? qu’il n’en soit pas resté le plus petit tison pour allumer une seule torche? Les insensés! en nous appelant jésuites, ils croient nous couvrir d’opprobre! Mais ces jésuites leur réservent la censure, un bâillon et du feu... Et, un jour, ils seront les maîtres de leurs maîtres...”

(LE PÈRE ROOTHAAN, GÉNÉRAL DES JÉSUITES, À LA CONFÉRENCE DE CHIÉRI.)
Ils ont dit: « Nous serons les vainqueurs et les maîtres.
Soldats par la tactique et par la robe prêtres,
Nous détruirons progrès, lois, vertus, droits, talents.
Nous nous ferons un fort avec tous ces décombres,
Et pour nous y garder, comme des dogues sombres,
Nous démusèlerons les préjugés hurlants.

» Oui, l’échafaud est bon; la guerre est nécessaire;
Acceptez l’ignorance, acceptez la misère;
L’enfer attend l’orgueil du tribun triomphant;
L’homme parvient à l’ange en passant par la buse.
Notre gouvernement fait de force et de ruse
Bâillonnera le père, abrutira l’enfant.

» Notre parole, hostile au siècle qui s’écoule,
Tombera de la chaire en flocons sur la foule
Elle refroidira les cœurs irrésolus,
Y glacera tout germe utile ou salutaire,
Et puis elle y fondra comme la neige à terre,
Et qui la cherchera ne la trouvera plus.

Seulement un froid sombre aura saisi les âmes;
Seulement nous aurons tué toutes les flammes
Et si quelqu’un leur crie, à ces français d’alors
Sauvez la liberté pour qui luttaient vos pères!

Ils riront, ces français sortis de nos repaires,
De la liberté morte et de leurs pères morts.

«Prêtres, nous écrirons sur un drapeau qui brille
— Ordre, Religion, Propriété, Famille. -
Et si quelque bandit, corse, juif ou payen,
Vient nous aider avec le parjure à la bouche,
Le sabre aux dents, la torche au poing, sanglant, farouche
Volant et massacrant, nous lui dirons: c'est bien!

«Vainqueurs, fortifiés aux lieux inabordables,
Nous vivrons arrogants, vénérés, formidables.
Que nous importe au fond Christ, Mahomet, Mithra!
Régner est notre but, notre moyen proscrire.
Si jamais ici-bas on entend notre rire,
Le fond obscur du cœur de l'homme tremblera.

» Nous garrotterons l'âme au fond d'une caverne.
Nations, l'idéal du peuple qu'on gouverne,
C'est le moine d'Espagne ou le fellah du Nil.
À bas l'esprit! à bas le droit! vive l'épée!
Qu'est-ce que la pensée? une chienne échappée.
Mettons Jean-Jacques au bagne et Voltaire au chenil.

» Si l'esprit se débat, toujours nous l'étouffâmes.
Nous parlerons tout bas à l'oreille des femmes.
Nous aurons les pontons, l'Afrique, le Spielberg.
Les vieux bûchers sont morts, nous les ferons revivre
N'y pouvant jeter l'homme, on y jette le livre;
À défaut de Jean Huss, nous brûlons Gutenberg.

» Et quant à la raison, qui prétend juger Rome,
Flambeau qu'allume Dieu sous le crâne de l'homme,
Dont s'éclairait Socrate et qui guidait Jésus,
Nous, pareils au voleur qui se glisse et qui rampe,
Et commence en entrant par éteindre la lampe,
En arrière et furtifs, nous soufflerons dessus.

«Alors dans l’âme humaine obscurité profonde.
Sur le néant des cœurs le vrai pouvoir se fonde.
Tout ce que nous voudrons, nous le ferons sans bruit.
Pas un souffle de voix, pas un battement d’aile
Ne remuera dans l’ombre, et notre citadelle
Sera comme une tour plus noire que la nuit.

» Nous régnerons. La tourbe obéit comme l’onde.
Nous serons tout-puissants, nous régirons le monde
Nous posséderons tout, force, gloire et bonheur;
Et nous ne craindrons rien, n’ayant ni foi ni règles...
— Quand vous habiteriez la montagne des aigles,
Je vous arracherais de là, dit le Seigneur!
8 novembre. Jersey.

À un martyr

On lit dans les Annales de la propagation de la Foi:

«Une lettre de Hong-Kong (Chine), en date du 24 juillet 1852,
nous annonce que M. Bonnard, missionnaire du Tong-King,
a été décapité pour la foi, le 1er mai dernier.
» Ce nouveau martyr était né dans le diocèse de Lyon
et appartenait à la Société des Missions étrangères.
Il était parti pour le Tong-King en 1849.”

I

Ô saint prêtre! grande âme! oh! je tombe à genoux!
Jeune, il avait encor de longs jours parmi nous,
Il n’en a pas compté le nombre;
Il était à cet âge où le bonheur fleurit;
Il a considéré la croix de Jésus-Christ
Toute rayonnante dans l’ombre.

Il a dit: « C’est le Dieu de progrès et d’amour.
Jésus, qui voit ton front croit voir le front du jour.
Christ sourit à qui le repousse.
Puisqu’il est mort pour nous, je veux mourir pour lui;
Dans son tombeau, dont j’ai la pierre pour appui,
Il m’appelle d’une voix douce.
» Sa doctrine est le ciel entr’ouvert; par la main,
Comme un père l’enfant, il tient le genre humain;
Par lui nous vivons et nous sommes;
Au chevet des geôliers dormant dans leurs maisons,
Il dérobe les clefs de toutes les prisons
Et met en liberté les hommes.

» Or il est, loin de nous, une autre humanité
Qui ne le connaît point, et dans l’iniquité
Rampe enchaînée, et souffre et tombe;

Ils font pour trouver Dieu de ténébreux efforts;
Ils s'agitent en vain; ils sont comme des morts
Qui tâtent le mur de leur tombe.

» Sans loi, sans but, sans guide, ils errent ici-bas.
Ils sont méchants, étant ignorants; ils n'ont pas
Leur part de la grande conquête.
J'irai. Pour les sauver je quitte le saint lieu.
Ô mes frères, je viens vous apporter mon Dieu,
Je viens vous apporter ma tête!"

Prêtre, il s'est souvenu, calme en nos jours troublés,
De la parole dite aux apôtres: - Allez,
Bravez les bûchers et les claies! -
Et de l'adieu du Christ au suprême moment:
— Ô vivant, aimez-vous! aimez. En vous aimant,
Frères, vous fermerez mes plaies. -

Il s'est dit qu'il est bon d'éclairer dans leur nuit
Ces peuples égarés loin du progrès qui luit,
Dont l'âme est couverte de voiles;
Puis il s'en est allé, dans les vents, dans les flots,
Vers les noirs chevalets et les sanglants billots,
Les yeux fixés sur les étoiles.

II

Ceux vers qui cet apôtre allait l'ont égorgé.

III

Oh! tandis que là-bas, hélas! chez ces barbares,
S'étale l'échafaud de tes membres chargé,
Que le bourreau, rangeant ses glaives et ses barres,
Frotte au gibet son ongle où ton sang s'est figé;

Ciel! tandis que les chiens dans ce sang viennent boire,

Et que la mouche horrible, essaim au vol joyeux,
Comme dans une ruche entre en ta bouche noire
Et bourdonne au soleil dans les trous de tes yeux;

Tandis qu’échevelée, et sans voix, sans paupières,
Ta tête blême est là sur un infâme pieu,
Livrée aux vils affronts, meurtrie à coups de pierres,
Ici, derrière toi, martyr, on vend ton Dieu!

Ce Dieu qui n’est qu’à toi, martyr, on te le vole!
On le livre à Mandrin, ce Dieu pour qui tu meurs!
Des hommes, comme toi revêtus de l’étole,
Pour être cardinaux, pour être sénateurs,
Des prêtres, pour avoir des palais, des carrosses,
Et des jardins l’été riant sous le ciel bleu,
Pour argenter leur mitre et pour dorer leurs crosses,
Pour boire de bon vin, assis près d’un bon feu,

Au forban dont la main dans le meurtre est trempée,
Au larron chargé d’or qui paye et qui sourit,
Grand Dieu! retourne-toi vers nous, tête coupée!
Ils vendent Jésus-Christ! ils vendent Jésus-Christ!

Ils livrent au bandit, pour quelques sacs sordides,
L’évangile, la loi, l’autel épouvanté,
Et la justice aux yeux sévères et candides,
Et l’étoile du coeur humain, la vérité!

Les bons jetés, vivants, au bagne, ou morts, aux fleuves,
L’homme juste proscrit par Cartouche Sylla,
L’innocent égorgé, le deuil sacré des veuves,
Les pleurs de l’orphelin, ils vendent tout cela!

Tout! la foi, le serment que Dieu tient sous sa garde,
Le saint temple où, mourant, tu dis: Introïbo,
Ils livrent tout! pudeur, vertu! - martyr, regarde,
Rouvre tes yeux qu’emplit la lueur du tombeau; -

Ils vendent l’arche auguste où l’hostie étincelle!
Ils vendent Christ, te dis-je! et ses membres liés!
Ils vendent la sueur qui sur son front ruisselle,
Et les clous de ses mains, et les clous de ses pieds!

Ils vendent au brigand qui chez lui les attire
Le grand crucifié sur les hommes penché;
Ils vendent sa parole, ils vendent son martyre,
Et ton martyre à toi par-dessus le marché!

Tant pour les coups de fouet qu’il reçut à la porte!
César! tant pour l’amen, tant pour l’alleluia!
Tant pour la pierre où vint heurter sa tête morte!
Tant pour le drap rougi que sa barbe essuya!

Ils vendent ses genoux meurtris, sa palme verte,
Sa plaie au flanc, son oeil tout baigné d’infini,
Ses pleurs, son agonie, et sa bouche entrouverte,
Et le cri qu’il poussa: Lamma Sabacthani!

Ils vendent le sépulcre! ils vendent les ténèbres!
Les séraphins chantant au seuil profond des cieux,
Et la mère debout sous l’arbre aux bras funèbres,
Qui, sentant là son fils, ne levait pas les yeux!

Oui, ces évêques, oui, ces marchands, oui, ces prêtres
A l’histrion du crime, assouvi, couronné,
A ce Néron repu qui rit parmi les traîtres,
Un pied sur Thraséas, un coude sur Phryné,

Au voleur qui tua les lois à coups de crosse,
Au pirate empereur Napoléon dernier,
Ivre deux fois, immonde encor plus que féroce,
Pourceau dans le cloaque et loup dans le charnier,

Ils vendent, ô martyr, le Dieu pensif et pâle

Qui, debout sur la terre et sous le firmament,
Triste et nous souriant dans notre nuit fatale,
Sur le noir Golgotha saigne éternellement!
5-8 décembre. Jersey.

L’Art et le Peuple

I

L’art, c’est la gloire et la joie.
Dans la tempête il flamboie;
Il éclaire le ciel bleu.
L’art, splendeur universelle,
Au front du peuple étincelle,
Comme l’astre au front de Dieu.

L’art est un champ magnifique
Qui plaît au cœur pacifique,
Que la cité dit aux bois,
Que l’homme dit à la femme,
Que toutes les voix de l’âme
Chantent en chœur à la fois!

L’art, c’est la pensée humaine
Qui va brisant toute chaîne!
L’art, c’est le doux conquérant!
A lui le Rhin et le Tibre!
Peuple esclave, il te fait libre;
Peuple libre, il te fait grand!

II

O bonne France invincible,
Chante ta chanson paisible!
Chante, et regarde le ciel!
Ta voix joyeuse et profonde
Est l’espérance du monde,
O grand peuple fraternel!

Bon peuple, chante à l’aurore,
Quand le soir vient, chante encore!

Le travail fait la gaîté.
Ris du vieux siècle qui passe!
Chante l’amour à voix basse,
Et tout haut la liberté!

Chante la sainte Italie,
La Pologne ensevelie,
Naples qu’un sang pur rougit,
La Hongrie agonisante… -
O tyrans! le peuple chante
Comme le lion rugit!

7 novembre 1851

Chanson

Courtisans! attablés dans la splendide orgie,
La bouche par le rire et la soif élargie,
Vous célébrez César, très bon, très grand, très pur;
Vous buvez, apostats à tout ce qu'on révère,
Le chypre à pleine coupe et la honte à plein verre… -
Mangez, moi je préfère,
Vérité, ton pain dur.

Boursier qui tonds le peuple, usurier qui le triches,
Gais soupeurs de Chevet, ventrus, coquins et riches,
Amis de Fould le juif et de Maupas le grec,
Laissez le pauvre en pleurs sous la porte cochère,
Engraissez-vous, vivez, et faites bonne chère… -
Mangez, moi je préfère,
Probité, ton pain sec.

L'opprobre est une lèpre et le crime une dartre.
Soldats qui revenez du boulevard Montmartre,
Le vin, au sang mêlé, jaillit sur vos habits;
Chantez: la table emplit l'Ecole militaire,
Le festin fume, on trinque, on boit, on roule à terre… -
Mangez, moi je préfère,
O gloire, ton pain bis.

O peuple des faubourgs, je vous ai vu sublime.
Aujourd'hui vous avez, serf grisé par le crime,
Plus d'argent dans la poche, au cœur moins de fierté.
On va, chaîne au cou, rire et boire à la barrière.
Et vive l'empereur! et vive le salaire!... –
Mangez, moi je préfère,
Ton pain noir, Liberté

Oh! je sais qu’ils feront des mensonges sans nombre

I

Oh! je sais qu’ils feront des mensonges sans nombre
Pour s’évader des mains de la Vérité sombre,
Qu’ils nieront, qu’ils diront: ce n’est pas moi, c’est lui.
Mais, n’est-il pas vrai, Dante, Eschyle, et vous, prophètes?
Jamais, du poignet des poëtes,
Jamais, pris en collet, les malfaiteurs n’ont fui.
J’ai fermé sur ceux-ci mon livre expiatoire;
J’ai mis des verrous à l’histoire;
L’histoire est un bagne aujourd’hui.
Le poëte n’est plus l’esprit qui rêve et prie;
Il a la grosse clef de la conciergerie.
Quand ils entrent au greffe, où pend leur chaîne au clou,
On regarde le prince aux poches, comme un drôle,
Et les empereurs à l’épaule;
Macbeth est un escroc, César est un filou.
Vous gardes des forçats, ô mes strophes ailées!
Les Calliopes étoilées
Tiennent des registres d’écrou.

II

Ô peuples douloureux, il faut bien qu’on vous venge!
Les rhéteurs froids m’ont dit: Le poëte, c’est l’ange,
Il plane, ignorant Fould, Magnan, Morny, Maupas;
Il contemple la nuit sereine avec délices... -
Non, tant que vous serez complices
De ces crimes hideux que je suis pas à pas,
Tant que vous couvrirez ces brigands de vos voiles,
Cieux azurés, soleils, étoiles,
Je ne vous regarderai pas!

Tant qu'un gueux forcera les bouches à se taire,
Tant que la liberté sera couchée à terre
Comme une femme morte et qu'on vient de noyer,
Tant que dans les pontons on entendra des râles,
J'aurai des clartés sépulcrales
Pour tous ces fronts abjects qu'un bandit fait ployer;
Je crierai: Lève-toi, peuple! ciel, tonne et gronde!
La France, dans sa nuit profonde,
Verra ma torche flamboyer!

III

Ces coquins vils qui font de la France une Chine,
On entendra mon fouet claquer sur leur échine.
Ils chantent: Te Deum, je crierai: Memento!
Je fouaillerai les gens, les faits, les noms, les titres,
Porte-sabres et porte-mitres;
Je les tiens dans mon vers comme dans un étau.
On verra choir surplis, épaulettes, bréviaires,
Et César, sous mes étrivières,
Se sauver, troussant son manteau!
Et les champs, et les prés, le lac, la fleur, la plaine,
Les nuages, pareils à des flocons de laine,
L'eau qui fait frissonner l'algue et les goëmons,
Et l'énorme océan, hydre aux écailles vertes,
Les forêts de rumeurs couvertes,
Le phare sur les flots, l'étoile sur les monts,
Me reconnaîtront bien et diront à voix basse
C'est un esprit vengeur qui passe,
Chassant devant lui les démons!
13 novembre. Jersey.

Carte d’Europe

Des sabres sont partout posés sur les provinces.
L’autel ment. On entend ceux qu’on nomme les princes
Jurer, d’un front tranquille et sans baisser les yeux,
De faux serpents qui font, tant ils navrent les âmes,
Tant ils sont monstrueux, effroyables, infâmes,
Remuer le tonnerre endormi dans les cieux.

Les soldats ont fouetté des femmes dans les rues.
Où sont la liberté, la vertu? disparues!
Dans l’exil! dans l’horreur des pontons étouffants!
Ô nations! où sont vos âmes les plus belles?
Le boulet, c’est trop peu contre de tels rebelles
Haynau dans les canons met des têtes d’enfants.

Peuple russe, tremblant et morne, tu chemines,
Serf à Saint-Pétersbourg, ou forçat dans les mines.
Le pôle est pour ton maître un cachot vaste et noir;
Russie et Sibérie, ô czar! tyran! vampire!
Ce sont les deux moitiés de ton funèbre empire;
L’une est l’oppression, l’autre est le Désespoir.

Les supplices d’Ancône emplissent les murailles.
Le pape Mastaï fusille ses ouailles;
Il pose là l’hostie et commande le feu.
Simoncelli périt le premier; tous les autres
Le suivent sans pâlir, tribuns, soldats, apôtres;
Ils meurent, et s’en vont parler du prêtre à Dieu.

Saint-Père, sur tes mains laisse tomber tes manches!
Saint-Père, on voit du sang à tes sandales blanches!
Borgia te sourit, le pape empoisonneur.
Combien sont morts? combien mourront? qui sait le nombre?
Ce qui mène aujourd’hui votre troupeau dans l’ombre,
Ce n’est pas le berger, c’est le boucher, Seigneur!

Italie! Allemagne! ô Sicile! ô Hongrie!
Europe, aïeule en pleurs, de misère amaigrie,
Vos meilleurs fils sont morts; l’honneur sombre est absent.
Au midi l’échafaud, au nord un ossuaire.
La lune chaque nuit se lève en un suaire,
Le soleil chaque soir se couche dans du sang.

Sur les français vaincus un saint-office pèse.
Un brigand les égorge, et dit: je les apaise.
Paris lave à genoux le sang qui l’inonda;
La France garrottée assiste à l’hécatombe.
Par les pleurs, par les cris, réveillés dans la tombe,
— Bien! dit Laubardemont; - Va! dit Torquemada.

Batthyani, Sandor, Poërio, victimes!
Pour le peuple et le droit en vain nous combattîmes.
Baudin tombe, agitant son écharpe en lambeau.
Pleurez dans les forêts, pleurez sur les montagnes!
Où Dieu mit des édens les rois mettent des bagnes
Venise est une chiourme et Naple est un tombeau.

Le gibet sur Arad! le gibet sur Palerme!
La corde à ces héros qui levaient d’un bras ferme
Leur drapeau libre et fier devant les rois tremblants!
Tandis qu’on va sacrer l’empereur Schinderhannes,
Martyrs, la pluie à flots ruisselle sur vos crânes,
Et le bec des corbeaux fouillé vos yeux sanglants.

Avenir! avenir! voici que tout s’écroule!
Les pâles rois ont fui, la mer vient, le flot roule,
Peuples! le clairon sonne aux quatre coins du ciel;
Quelle fuite effrayante et sombre! les armées
S’en vont dans la tempête en cendres enflammées,
L’épouvante se lève. - Allons, dit l’Eternel!
Jersey, 5 novembre 1852

Chanson

La femelle? elle est morte.
Le mâle? un chat l’emporte
Et dévore ses os.
Au doux nid qui frissonne
Qui reviendra? personne.
Pauvres petits oiseaux!

Le pâtre absent par fraude!
Le chien mort! le loup rôde,
Et tend ses noirs panneaux.
Au bercail qui frissonne
Qui veillera? personne.
Pauvres petits agneaux!

L’homme au bagne! la mère
A l’hospice! ô misère!
Le logis tremble aux vents
L’humble berceau frissonne.
Qui reste-t-il? personne.
Pauvres petits enfants!
22 février. Jersey.

C’est la nuit; la nuit noire, assoupie et profonde

C’est la nuit; la nuit noire, assoupie et profonde.
L’ombre immense élargit ses ailes sur le monde.
Dans vos joyeux palais gardés par le canon,
Dans vos lits de velours, de damas, de linon,

Sous vos chauds couvre-pieds de martres zibelines
Sous le nuage blanc des molles mousselines,
— Derrière vos rideaux qui cachent sous leurs plis
Toutes les voluptés avec tous les oublis,
Aux sons d’une fanfare amoureuse et lointaine,
Tandis qu’une veilleuse, en tremblant, ose à peine
Eclairer le plafond de pourpre et de lampas,
Vous, duc de Saint-Arnaud, vous, comte de Maupas,
Vous, sénateurs, préfets, généraux, juges, princes,
Toi, César, qu’à genoux adorent tes provinces,
Toi qui rêvas l’empire et le réalisas,
Dormez, maîtres... - Voici le jour. Debout, forçats!
Jersey, 28 octobre 1852

LIVRE II: L’ORDRE EST RETABLI.

Idylles

LE SÉNAT
Vibrez, trombone et chanterelle!
Les oiseaux chantent dans les nids.
La joie est chose naturelle.
Que Magnan danse la trénis
Et Saint-Arnaud la pastourelle!

LES CAVES DE LILLE
Miserere!
Miserere!

LE CONSEIL D'ÉTAT
Des lampions dans les charmilles!
Des lampions dans les buissons!
Mêlez vous, sabres et mantilles!
Chantez en choeur, les beaux garçons!
Dansez en rond, les belles filles!

LES GRENIERS DE ROUEN
Miserere!
Miserere!

LE CORPS LÉGISLATIF
Jouissons! l'amour nous réclame.
Chacun, pour devenir meilleur,
Cueille son miel, nourrit son âme,
L'abeille aux lèvres de la fleur,
Le sage aux lèvres de la femme!

BRUXELLES, LONDRES, BELLE-ISLE, JERSEY
Miserere!
Miserere!

L'HOTEL DE VILLE

L’empire se met aux croisées
Rions, jouons, soupons, dînons.
Des pétards aux Champs-Elysées!
A l’oncle il fallait des canons,
Il faut au neveu des fusées.

LES PONTONS
Miserere!
Miserere!

L’ARMÉE
Pas de scrupules! pas de morgue!
A genoux! un bedeau paraît.
Le tambour obéit à l’orgue.
Notre ardeur sort du cabaret,
Et notre gloire est à la morgue.

LAMBESSA
Miserere!
Miserere!

LA MAGISTRATURE
Mangeons, buvons, tout le conseille!
Heureux l’ami du raisin mûr,
Qui toujours, riant sous sa treille,
Trouve une grappe sur son mur
Et dans sa cave une bouteille!

CAYENNE
Miserere!
Miserere!

LES ÉVÈQUES
Jupiter l’ordonne, on révère
Le succès, sur le trône assis.
Trinquons! Le prêtre peu sévère
Vide son âme de soucis

Et de vin vieux emplit son verre!

LE CIMETIÈRE MONTMARTRE

Miserere!
Miserere!
7 avril. Jersey.

Au peuple

Partout pleurs, sanglots, cris funèbres.
Pourquoi dors-tu dans les ténèbres?
Je ne veux pas que tu sois mort.
Pourquoi dors-tu dans les ténèbres?
Ce n’est pas l’instant où l’on dort.
La pâle Liberté gît sanglante à ta porte.
Tu le sais, toi mort, elle est morte.
Voici le chacal sur ton seuil,
Voici les rats et les belettes,
Pourquoi t’es-tu laissé lier de bandelettes?
Ils te mordent dans ton cercueil!
De tous les peuples on prépare
Le convoi… -
Lazare! Lazare! Lazare!
Lève-toi!

Paris sanglant, au clair de lune,
Rêve sur la fosse commune;
Gloire au général Trestaillon!
Plus de presse, plus de tribune.
Quatrevingt-neuf porte un bâillon.
La Révolution, terrible à qui la touche,
Est couchée à terre! un Cartouche
Peut ce qu’aucun titan ne put.
Escobar rit d’un rire oblique.
On voit traîner sur toi, géante République,
Tous les sabres de Lilliput.

Le juge, marchand en simarre,
Vend la loi… -
Lazare! Lazare! Lazare!
Lève-toi!

Sur Milan, sur Vienne punie,

Sur Rome étranglée et bénie,
Sur Pesth, torturé sans répit,
La vieille louve Tyrannie,
Fauve et joyeuse, s’accroupit.
Elle rit; son repaire est orné d’amulettes
Elle marche sur des squelettes
De la Vistule au Tanaro;
Elle a ses petits qu’elle couve.
Qui la nourrit? qui porte à manger à la louve?
C’est l’évêque, c’est le bourreau.
Qui s’allaite à son flanc barbare?
C’est le roi… -
Lazare! Lazare! Lazare!
Lève-toi!

Jésus, parlant à ses apôtres,
Dit: Aimez-vous les uns les autres.
Et voilà bientôt deux mille ans
Qu’il appelle nous et les nôtres
Et qu’il ouvre ses bras sanglants.
Rome commande et règne au nom du doux prophète.
De trois cercles sacrés est faite
La tiare du Vatican;
Le premier est une couronne,
Le second est le nœud des gibets de Vérone,
Et le troisième est un carcan.
Mastaï met cette tiare
Sans effroi… -
Lazare! Lazare! Lazare!
Lève-toi!

Ils bâtissent des prisons neuves.
Ô dormeur sombre, entends les fleuves
Murmurer, teints de sang vermeil;
Entends pleurer les pauvres veuves,
Ô noir dormeur au dur sommeil!
Martyrs, adieu! le vent souffle, les pontons flottent;

Les mères au front gris sanglotent;
Leurs fils sont en proie aux vainqueurs;
Elles gémissent sur la route;
Les pleurs qui de leurs yeux s’échappent goutte à goutte
Filtrent en haine dans nos coeurs.

Les juifs triomphent, groupe avare
Et sans foi… -
Lazare! Lazare! Lazare!
Lève-toi!

Mais il semble qu’on se réveille!
Est-ce toi que j’ai dans l’oreille,
Bourdonnement du sombre essaim?
Dans la ruche frémit l’abeille;
J’entends sourdre un vague tocsin.
Les Césars, oubliant qu’il est des gémonies,
S’endorment dans les symphonies
Du lac Baltique au mont Etna;
Les peuples sont dans la nuit noire
Dormez, rois; le clairon dit aux tyrans: victoire!
Et l’orgue leur chante: hosanna!
Qui répond à cette fanfare?
Le beffroi… -
Lazare! Lazare! Lazare!
Lève-toi!
Jersey, mai 1853

Souvenir de la nuit du 4

L’enfant avait reçu deux balles dans la tête.
Le logis était propre, humble, paisible, honnête;
On voyait un rameau bénit sur un portrait.
Une vieille grand’mère était là qui pleurait.
Nous le déshabillions en silence. Sa bouche,
Pâle, s’ouvrait; la mort noyait son œil farouche;
Ses bras pendants semblaient demander des appuis.
Il avait dans sa poche une toupie en buis.
On pouvait mettre un doigt dans les trous de ses plaies.
Avez-vous vu saigner la mûre dans les haies?
Son crâne était ouvert comme un bois qui se fend.
L’aïeule regarda déshabiller l’enfant,
Disant: -Comme il est blanc! approchez donc la lampe.
Dieu! ses pauvres cheveux sont collés sur sa tempe!
Et quand ce fut fini, le prit sur ses genoux.
La nuit était lugubre; on entendait des coups
De fusil dans la rue où l’on en tuait d’autres.
— Il faut ensevelir l’enfant, dirent les nôtres.
Et l’on prit un drap blanc dans l’armoire en noyer.
L’aïeule cependant l’approchait du foyer
Comme pour réchauffer ses membres déjà roides.
Hélas! ce que la mort touche de ses mains froides
Ne se réchauffe plus aux foyers d’ici-bas!
Elle pencha la tête et lui tira ses bas,
Et dans ses vieilles mains prit les pieds du cadavre.
— Est-ce que ce n’est pas une chose qui navre!
Cria-t-elle; monsieur, il n’avait pas huit ans!
Ses maîtres, il allait en classe, étaient contents.
Monsieur, quand il fallait que je fisse une lettre,
C’est lui qui l’écrivait. Est-ce qu’on va se mettre
À tuer les enfants maintenant? Ah! mon Dieu!
On est donc des brigands! Je vous demande un peu,
Il jouait ce matin, là, devant la fenêtre!
Dire qu’ils m’ont tué ce pauvre petit être

Il passait dans la rue, ils ont tiré dessus.
Monsieur, il était bon et doux comme un Jésus.
Moi je suis vieille, il est tout simple que je parte
Cela n’aurait rien fait à monsieur Bonaparte
De me tuer au lieu de tuer mon enfant! -
Elle s’interrompit, les sanglots l’étouffant,
Puis elle dit, et tous pleuraient près de l’aïeule.
— Que vais-je devenir à présent toute seule?
Expliquez-moi cela, vous autres, aujourd’hui.
Hélas! je n’avais plus de sa mère que lui.
Pourquoi l’a-t-on tué? je veux qu’on me l’explique.
L’enfant n’a pas crié vive la République. -
Nous nous taisions, debout et graves, chapeau bas,
Tremblant devant ce deuil qu’on ne console pas.

Vous ne compreniez point, mère, la politique.
Monsieur Napoléon, c’est son nom authentique,
Est pauvre, et même prince; il aime les palais;
Il lui convient d’avoir des chevaux, des valets,
De l’argent pour son jeu, sa table, son alcôve,
Ses chasses; par la même occasion, il sauve
La famille, l’église et la société;
Il veut avoir Saint-Cloud, plein de roses l’été,
Où viendront l’adorer les préfets et les maires
C’est pour cela qu’il faut que les vieilles grand’mères,
De leurs pauvres doigts gris que fait trembler le temps
Cousent dans le linceul des enfants de sept ans.
2 décembre 1852. Jersey

Ô soleil, ô face divine

Ô soleil, ô face divine,
Fleurs sauvages de la ravine,
Grottes où l'on entend des voix,
Parfums que sous l'herbe ou devine,
Ô ronces farouches des bois,

Monts sacrés, hauts comme l'exemple,
Blancs comme le fronton d'un temple,
Vieux rocs, chêne des ans vainqueur,
Dont je sens, quand je vous contemple,
L'âme éparse entrer dans mon cœur,

Ô vierge forêt, source pure,
Lac limpide que l'ombre azure,
Eau chaste où le ciel resplendit,
Conscience de la nature,
Que pensez-vous de ce bandit?
Jersey, 2 décembre 1852

Puisque le juste est dans l’abîme

Puisque le juste est dans l’abîme,
Puisqu’on donne le sceptre au crime,
Puisque tous les droits sont trahis,
Puisque les plus fiers restent mornes,
Puisqu’on affiche au coin des bornes
Le déshonneur de mon pays;

Ô République de nos pères,
Grand Panthéon plein de lumières,
Dôme d’or dans le libre azur,
Temple des ombres immortelles,
Puisqu’on vient avec des échelles
Coller l’empire sur ton mur -

Puisque toute âme est affaiblie,
Puisqu’on rampe, puisqu’on oublie
Le vrai, le pur, le grand, le beau,
Les yeux indignés de l’histoire,
L’honneur, la loi, le droit, la gloire,
Et ceux qui sont dans le tombeau;

Je t’aime, exil! douleur, je t’aime!
Tristesse, sois mon diadème!
Je t’aime, altière pauvreté!
J’aime ma porte aux vents battue.
J’aime le deuil, grave statue
Qui vient s’asseoir à mon côté.

J’aime le malheur qui m’éprouve,
Et cette ombre où je vous retrouve,
Ô vous à qui mon cœur sourit,
Dignité, foi, vertu voilée,
Toi, liberté, fière exilée,
Et toi, dévouement, grand proscrit!

J’aime cette île solitaire,
Jersey, que la libre Angleterre
Couvre de son vieux pavillon,
L’eau noire, par moments accrue,
Le navire, errante charrue,
Le flot, mystérieux sillon.

J’aime ta mouette, Ô mer profonde,
Qui secoue en perles ton onde
Sur son aile aux fauves couleurs,
Plonge dans les lames géantes,
Et sort de ces gueules béantes
Comme l’âme sort des douleurs.

J’aime la roche solennelle
D’où j’entends la plainte éternelle,
Sans trêve comme le remords,
Toujours renaissant dans les ombres,
Des vagues sur les écueils sombres,
Des mères sur leurs enfants morts.
10 décembre. Jersey.

L’Autre Président

I

Donc, vieux partis, voilà votre homme consulaire!
Aux jours sereins, quand rien ne nous vient assiéger,
Dogue aboyant, dragon farouche, hydre en colère;
Taupe aux jours du danger!
Pour le mettre à leur tête, en nos temps que visite
La tempête, brisant le cèdre et le sapin,
Ils prirent le plus lâche, et, n’ayant pas Thersite,
Ils choisirent Dupin.

Tandis que ton bras fort pioche, laboure et bêche,
Ils te trahissaient, peuple, ouvrier souverain;
Ces hommes opposaient le président Bobèche
Au président Mandrin.

II

Sa voix aigre sonnait comme une calebasse;
Ses quolibets mordaient l’orateur au cœur chaud -
Ils avaient, insensés, mis l’âme la plus basse
Au faîte le plus haut;
Si bien qu’un jour, ce fut un dénouement immonde,
Des soldats, sabre au poing, quittant leur noir chevet
Entrèrent dans ce temple auguste où, pour le monde,
L’aurore se levait!

Devant l’autel des lois qu’on renverse et qu’on brûle,
Honneur, devoir, criaient à cet homme: — Debout!
Dresse-toi, foudre en main, sur ta chaise curule! -
Il plongea dans l’égout.

III

Qu’il y reste à jamais! qu’à jamais il y dorme!
Que ce vil souvenir soit à jamais détruit!
Qu’il se dissolve là! qu’il y devienne informe,
Et pareil à la nuit!
Que, même en l’y cherchant, ou le distingue à peine
Dans ce profond cloaque, affreux, morne, béant!
Et que tout ce qui rampe et tout ce qui se traîne
Se mêle à son néant!

Et que l’histoire un jour ne s’en rende plus compte,
Et dise en le voyant dans la fange étendu:
— On ne sait ce que c’est. C’est quelque vieille honte
Dont le nom s’est perdu! -

IV

Oh! si ces âmes-là par l’enfer sont reçues,
S’il ne les chasse pas dans son amer orgueil,
Poëtes qui, portant dans vos mains des massues,
Gardez ce sombre seuil,

N’est-ce pas? dans ce gouffre où la justice habite,
Dont l’espérance fuit le flamboyant fronton,
Dites, toi, de Pathmos lugubre cénobite,
Toi Dante, toi Milton,

Toi, vieil Eschyle, ami des plaintives Electres,
Ce doit être une joie, ô vengeurs des vertus,
De faire souffleter les masques par les spectres,
Et Dupin par Brutus!
Bruxelles. Décembre 1851.

À l’obéissance passive

I

Ô soldats de l’an deux! ô guerres! épopées!
Contre les rois tirant ensemble leurs épées,
Prussiens, autrichiens,
Contre toutes les Tyrs et toutes les Sodomes,
Contre le czar du nord, contre ce chasseur d’hommes
Suivi de tous ses chiens,

Contre toute l’Europe avec ses capitaines,
Avec ses fantassins couvrant au loin les plaines,
Avec ses cavaliers,
Tout entière debout comme une hydre vivante,
Ils chantaient, ils allaient, l’âme sans épouvante
Et les pieds sans souliers!

Au levant, au couchant, partout, au sud, au pôle,
Avec de vieux fusils sonnant sur leur épaule,
Passant torrents et monts,
Sans repos, sans sommeil, coudes percés, sans vivres,
Ils allaient, fiers, joyeux, et soufflant dans des cuivres
Ainsi que des démons!
La Liberté sublime emplissait leurs pensées.
Flottes prises d’assaut, frontières effacées
Sous leur pas souverain,
Ô France, tous les jours, c’était quelque prodige,
Chocs, rencontres, combats; et Joubert sur l’Adige,
Et Marceau sur le Rhin!

On battait l’avant-garde, on culbutait le centre;
Dans la pluie et la neige et de l’eau jusqu’au ventre,
On allait! en avant!
Et l’un offrait la paix, et l’autre ouvrait ses portes,
Et les trônes, roulant comme des feuilles mortes,

Se dispersaient au vent!

Oh! que vous étiez grands au milieu des mêlées,
Soldats! L’œil plein d’éclairs, faces échevelées
Dans le noir tourbillon,
Ils rayonnaient, debout, ardents, dressant la tête
Et comme les lions aspirent la tempête
Quand souffle l’aquilon,

Eux, dans l’emportement de leurs luttes épiques,
Ivres, ils savouraient tous les bruits héroïques,
Le fer heurtant le fer,
La Marseillaise ailée et volant dans les balles,
Les tambours, les obus, les bombes, les cymbales,
Et ton rire, ô Kléber!

La Révolution leur criait: — Volontaires,
Mourez pour délivrer tous les peuples vos frères! -
Contents, ils disaient oui.
— Allez, mes vieux soldats, mes généraux imberbes! -
Et l’on voyait marcher ces va-nu-pieds superbes
Sur le monde ébloui!

La tristesse et la peur leur étaient inconnues.
Ils eussent, sans nul doute, escaladé les nues
Si ces audacieux,
En retournant les yeux dans leur course olympique,
Avaient vu derrière eux la grande République
Montrant du doigt les cieux!

II

Oh! vers ces vétérans quand notre esprit s’élève,
Nous voyons leur front luire et resplendir leur glaive,
Fertile en grands travaux.
C’étaient là les anciens. Mais ce temps les efface!
France, dans ton histoire ils tiennent trop de place.

France, gloire aux nouveaux!

Oui, gloire à ceux d’hier! ils se mettent cent mille,
Sabres nus, vingt contre un, sans crainte, et par la ville
S’en vont, tambours battants.
À mitraille! leur feu brille, l’obusier tonne,
Victoire! ils ont tué, carrefour Tiquetonne,
Un enfant de sept ans!

Ceux-ci sont des héros qui n’ont pas peur des femmes
Ils tirent sans pâlir, gloire à ces grandes âmes!
Sur les passants tremblants.
On voit, quand dans Paris leur troupe se promène,
Aux fers de leurs chevaux de la cervelle humaine
Avec des cheveux blancs!

Ils montent à l’assaut des lois; sur la patrie
Ils s’élancent; chevaux, fantassins, batterie,
Bataillon, escadron,
Gorgés, payés, repus, joyeux, fous de colère,
Sonnant la charge, avec Maupas pour vexillaire
Et Veuillot pour clairon.

Tout, le fer et le plomb, manque à nos bras farouches,
Le peuple est sans fusils, le peuple est sans cartouches,
Braves! c’est le moment!
Avec quelques tribuns la loi demeure seule.
Derrière vos canons chargés jusqu’à la gueule
Risquez-vous hardiment!
Ô soldats de décembre! ô soldats d’embuscades
Contre votre pays! honte à vos cavalcades
Dans Paris consterné!
Vos pères, je l’ai dit, brillaient comme le phare;
Ils bravaient, en chantant une haute fanfare,
La mort, spectre étonné;

Vos pères combattaient les plus fières armées,

Le prussien blond, le russe aux foudres enflammées,
Le catalan bruni,
Vous, vous tuez des gens de bourse et de négoce.
Vos pères, ces géants, avaient pris Saragosse,
Vous prenez Tortoni!

Histoire, qu’en dis-tu? les vieux dans les batailles
Couraient sur les canons vomissant les mitrailles;
Ceux-ci vont, sans trembler,
Foulant aux pieds vieillards sanglants, femmes mourantes
Droit au crime. Ce sont deux façons différentes
De ne pas reculer.

III

Cet homme fait venir, à l’heure où la nuit voile
Paris dormant encor.
Des généraux français portant la triple étoile
Sur l’épaulette d’or;

Il leur dit: « Ecoutez, pour vos yeux seuls j’écarte
L’ombre que je répands;
Vous crûtes jusqu’ici que j’étais Bonaparte,
Mon nom est Guet-apens.

» C’est demain le grand jour, le jour des funérailles
Et le jour des douleurs.
Vous allez vous glisser sans bruit sous les murailles
Comme font les voleurs;

«Vous prendrez cette pince, à mon service usée,
Que je cache sur moi,
Et vous soulèverez avec une pesée
La porte de la loi;

» Puis, hourrah! sabre au vent, et la police en tête!
Et main basse sur tout,

Sur vos chefs africains, sur quiconque est honnête,
Sur quiconque est debout,

Sur les représentants, et ceux qu'ils représentent,
Sur Paris terrassé!
Et je vous paîrai bien!" les généraux consentent
Vidocq eût refusé.

IV

Maintenant, largesse au prétoire!
Trinquez, soldats! et depuis quand
A-t-on peur de rire et de boire?
Fête aux casernes! fête au camp!
L'orgie a rougi leur moustache,
Les rouleaux d'or gonflent leur sac;
Pour capitaine ils ont Gamache,
Ils ont Cocagne pour bivouac.

La bombance après l'équipée.
On s'attable. Hier on tua.
Ô Napoléon, ton épée
Sert de broche à Gargantua.

Le meurtre est pour eux la victoire
Leur œil, par l'ivresse endormi,
Prend le déshonneur pour la gloire
Et les français pour l'ennemi.

France, ils t'égorgèrent la veille.
Ils tiennent, c'est leur lendemain,
Dans une main une bouteille
Et ta tête dans l'autre main.

Ils dansent en rond, noirs quadrilles,
Comme des gueux dans le ravin;
Troplong leur amène des filles,

Et Sibour leur verse du vin.

Et leurs banquets sans fin ni trêves
D’orchestres sont environnés… -
Nous faisions pour vous d’autres rêves,
Ô nos soldats infortunés!

Nous rêvions pour vous l’âpre bise,
La neige au pied du noir sapin,
La brèche où la bombe se brise,
Les nuits sans feu, les jours sans pain.

Nous rêvions les marches forcées,
La faim, le froid, les coups hardis,
Les vieilles capotes usées,
Et la victoire un contre dix;

Nous rêvions, ô soldats esclaves,
Pour vous et pour vos généraux,
La sainte misère des braves,
La grande tombe des héros!

Car l’Europe en ses fers soupire,
Car dans les cœurs un ferment bout,
Car voici l’heure où Dieu va dire:
Chaînes, tombez! Peuples, debout!

L’histoire ouvre un nouveau registre
Le penseur, amer et serein,
Derrière l’horizon sinistre
Entend rouler des chars d’airain.

Un bruit profond trouble la terre;
Dans les fourreaux s’émeut l’acier;
Ce vent qui souffle sort, ô guerre,
Des naseaux de ton noir coursier!

Vers l’heureux but où Dieu nous mène,
Soldats! rêveurs, nous vous poussions,
Tête de la colonne humaine,
Avant-garde des nations!

Nous rêvions, bandes aguerries,
Pour vous, fraternels conquérants,
La grande guerre des patries,
La chute immense des tyrans!

Nous réservions votre effort juste,
Vos fiers tambours, vos rangs épais,
Soldats, pour cette guerre auguste
D’où sortira l’auguste paix!

Dans nos songes visionnaires,
Nous vous voyions, ô nos guerriers,
Marcher joyeux dans les tonnerres,
Courir sanglants dans les lauriers,

Sous la fumée et la poussière
Disparaître en noirs tourbillons,
Puis tout à coup dans la lumière
Surgir, radieux bataillons,

Et passer, légion sacrée
Que les peuples venaient bénir,
Sous la haute porte azurée
De l’éblouissant avenir!

V

Donc, les soldats français auront vu, jours infâmes!
Après Brune et Desaix, après ces grandes âmes
Que nous admirons tous,
Après Turenne, après Xaintraille, après Lahire,
Poulailler leur donner des drapeaux et leur dire

Je suis content de vous!
Ô drapeaux du passé, si beaux dans les histoires,
Drapeaux de tous nos preux et de toutes nos gloires,
Redoutés du fuyard,
Percés, troués, criblés, sans peur et sans reproche,
Vous qui dans vos lambeaux mêlez le sang de Hoche
Et le sang de Bayard,

Ô vieux drapeaux! sortez des tombes. des abîmes!
Sortez en foule, ailés de vos haillons sublimes,
Drapeaux éblouissants!
Comme un sinistre essaim qui sur l'horizon monte,
Sortez, venez, volez, sur toute cette honte
Accourez frémissants!

Délivrez nos soldats de ces bannières viles!
Vous qui chassiez les rois, vous qui preniez les villes,
Vous en qui l'âme croit,
Vous qui passiez les monts, les gouffres et les fleuves,
Drapeaux sous qui l'on meurt, chassez ces aigles neuves,
Drapeaux sous qui l'on boit!

Que nos tristes soldats fassent la différence!
Montrez-leur ce que c'est que les drapeaux de France,
Montrez vos sacrés plis
Qui flottaient sur le Rhin, sur la Meuse et la Sambre,
Et faites, ô drapeaux, auprès du Deux-Décembre
Frissonner Austerlitz!

VI

Hélas! tout est fini. Fange! néant! nuit noire!
Au-dessus de ce gouffre où croula notre gloire,
Flamboyez, noms maudits!
Maupas, Morny, Magnan, Saint-Arnaud, Bonaparte!
Courbons nos fronts! Gomorrhe a triomphé de Sparte!
Cinq hommes! cinq bandits!
Toutes les nations tour à tour sont conquises:

L’Angleterre, pays des antiques franchises,
Par les vieux neustriens,
Rome par Alaric, par Mahomet Byzance,
La Sicile par trois chevaliers, et la France
Par cinq galériens.

Soit. Régnez! emplissez de dégoût la pensée,
Notre-Dame d’encens, de danses l’Elysée,
Montmartre d’ossements.
Régnez! liez ce peuple, à vos yeux populace,
Liez Paris, liez la France à la culasse
De vos canons fumants!

VII

Quand sur votre poitrine il jeta sa médaille,
Ses rubans et sa croix, après cette bataille
Et ce coup de lacet,
Ô soldats dont l’Afrique avait hâlé la joue,
N’avez-vous donc pas vu que c’était de la boue
Qui vous éclaboussait?
Oh! quand je pense à vous, mon œil se mouille encore!
Je vous pleure, soldats! je pleure votre aurore,
Et ce qu’elle promit.
Je pleure! car la gloire est maintenant voilée
Car il est parmi vous plus d’une âme accablée
Qui songe et qui frémit!

Ô soldats! nous aimions votre splendeur première;
Fils de la république et fils de la chaumière,
Que l’honneur échauffait,
Pour servir ce bandit qui dans leur sang se vautre,
Hélas! pour trahir l’une et déshonorer l’autre,
Que vous ont-elles fait?

Après qui marchez-vous, ô légion trompée?
L’homme à qui vous avez prostitué l’épée,
Ce criminel flagrant,

Cet aventurier vil en qui vous semblez croire,
Sera Napoléon le Petit dans l'histoire,
Ou Cartouche le Grand.

Armée! ainsi ton sabre a frappé par derrière
Le serment, le devoir, la loyauté guerrière,
Le droit aux vents jeté,
La révolution sur ce grand siècle empreinte,
Le progrès, l'avenir, la République sainte,
La sainte Liberté,

Pour qu'il puisse asservir ton pays que tu navres,
Pour qu'il puisse s'asseoir sur tous ces grands cadavres,
Lui, ce nain tout-puissant,
Qui préside l'orgie immonde et triomphale,
Qui cuve le massacre et dont la gorge exhale
L'affreux hoquet du sang!

VIII

Ô Dieu, puisque voilà ce qu'a fait cette armée,
Puisque, comme une porte est barrée et fermée,
Elle est sourde à l'honneur,
Puisque tous ces soldats rampent sans espérance,
Et puisque dans le sang ils ont éteint la France,
Votre flambeau, Seigneur!

Puisque la conscience en deuil est sans refuge
Puisque le prêtre assis dans la chaire, et le juge
D'hermine revêtu,
Adorent le succès, seul vrai, seul légitime,
Et disent qu'il vaut mieux réussir par le crime,
Que choir par la vertu;

Puisque les âmes sont pareilles à des filles;
Puisque ceux-là sont morts qui brisaient les bastilles,
Ou bien sont dégradés;

Puisque l’abjection, aux conseils misérables,
Sortant de tous les cœurs, fait les bouches semblables
Aux égouts débordés;

Puisque l’honneur décroît pendant que César monte;
Puisque dans ce Paris on n’entend plus, ô honte,
Que des femmes gémir;
Puisqu’on n’a plus de cœur devant les grandes tâches,
Puisque les vieux faubourgs, tremblant comme des lâches
Font semblant de dormir,

Ô Dieu vivant, mon Dieu! prêtez-moi votre force,
Et, moi qui ne suis rien, j’entrerai chez ce corse
Et chez cet inhumain;
Secouant mon vers sombre et plein de votre flamme,
J’entrerai là, Seigneur, la justice dans l’âme
Et le fouet à la main,

Et, retroussant ma manche ainsi qu’un belluaire,
Seul, terrible, des morts agitant le suaire
Dans ma sainte fureur,
Pareil aux noirs vengeurs devant qui l’on se sauve,
J’écraserai du pied l’antre et la bête fauve,
L’empire et l’empereur!
7-13 janvier 1853. Jersey.

LIVRE III: LA FAMILLE EST RESTAURÉE

Apothéose

Méditons. Il est bon que l'esprit se repaisse
De ces spectacles-là. L'on n'était qu'une espèce
De perroquet ayant un grand nom pour perchoir,
Pauvre diable de prince, usant son habit noir,
Auquel mil huit cent quinze avait coupé les vivres.
On n'avait pas dix sous, on emprunte cinq livres.
Maintenant, remarquons l'échelle, s'il vous plaît.
De l'écu de cinq francs on s'élève au billet
Signé Garat; bravo! puis du billet de banque
On grimpe au million, rapide saltimbanque;
Le million gobé fait mordre au milliard.
On arrive au lingot en partant du liard.
Puis carrosses, palais, bals, festins, opulence
On s'attable au pouvoir et l'on mange la France.
C'est ainsi qu'un filou devient homme d'état.

Qu'a-t-il fait? Un délit? Fi donc! un attentat;
Un grand acte, un massacre, un admirable crime
Auquel la haute cour prête serment. L'abîme
Se referme en poussant un grognement bourru.
La Révolution sous terre a disparu
En laissant derrière elle une senteur de soufre.
Romieu montre la trappe et dit: Voyez le gouffre!

Vivat Mascarillus! roulement de tambours.
On tient sous le bâton parqués dans les faubourgs
Les ouvriers ainsi que des noirs dans leurs cases
Paris sur ses pavés voit neiger les ukases
La Seine devient glace autant que la Néva.
Quant au maître, il triomphe; il se promène, va
De préfet en préfet, vole de maire en maire,
Orné du Deux-Décembre, du Dix-huit Brumaire,
Bombardé de bouquets, voituré dans des chars,
Laid, joyeux, salué par es chœurs de mouchards.

Puis il rentre empereur au Louvre, il parodie
Napoléon, il lit l’histoire, il étudie
L’honneur et la vertu dans Alexandre six;
Il s’installe au palais du spectre Médicis;
Il quitte par moments sa pourpre ou sa casaque,
Flâne autour du bassin en pantalon cosaque,
Et riant, et semant les miettes sur ses pas,
Donne aux poissons le pain que les proscrits n’ont pas.
La caserne l’adore, on le bénit au prône;
L’Europe est sous ses pieds et tremble sous son trône;
Il règne par la mitre et par le hausse-col.
Ce trône a trois degrés, parjure, meurtre et vol.
Ô Carrare! ô Paros! ô marbres pentéliques!
Ô tous les vieux héros des vieilles républiques!
Ô tous les dictateurs de l’empire latin!
Le moment est venu d’admirer le destin.
Voici qu’un nouveau dieu monte au fronton du temple.
Regarde, peuple, et toi, froide histoire, contemple.
Tandis que nous, martyrs du droit, nous expions,
Avec les Périclès, avec les Scipions,
Sur les frises où sont les victoires aptères,
Au milieu des césars trainés par des panthères,
Vêtus de pourpre et ceints du laurier souverain,
Parmi les aigles d’or et les louves d’airain,
Comme un astre apparaît parmi ses satellites,
Voici qu’à la hauteur des empereurs stylites,
Entre Auguste à l’œil calme et Trajan au front pur,
Resplendit, immobile en l’éternel azur,
Sur vous, ô panthéons, sur vous, ô propylées,
Robert Macaire avec ses bottes éculées!
31 janvier.

L’Homme a ri

«M. Victor Hugo vient de publier à Bruxelles un livre qui a pour titre: Napoléon le Petit, et qui renferme les calomnies les plus odieuses contre le prince-président.

» On raconte qu’un des jours de la semaine dernière un fonctionnaire apporte ce libellé à Saint-Cloud. Lorsque Louis-Napoléon le vit, il le prit, l’examina un instant avec le sourire du mépris sur les lèvres, puis s’adressant aux personnes qui l’entouraient, il dit, en leur montrant le pamphlet:

“Voyez, messieurs, voici Napoléon le Petit, par Victor Hugo le Grand.”

(JOURNAUX ÉLYSÉENS, AOUT 1852.)

Ah! tu finiras bien par hurler, misérable!
Encor tout haletant de ton crime exécrable,
Dans ton triomphe abject, si lugubre et si prompt,
Je t’ai saisi. J’ai mis l’écriteau sur ton front;
Et maintenant la foule accourt, et te bafoue.
Toi, tandis qu’au poteau le châtiment te cloue,
Que le carcan te force à lever le menton,
Tandis que, de ta veste arrachant le bouton,
L’histoire à mes côtés met à nu ton épaule,
Tu dis: je ne sens rien! et tu nous railles, drôle!
Ton rire sur mon nom gaîment vient écumer;
Mais je tiens le fer rouge et vois ta chair fumer.
Jersey. 30 octobre 1852.

Fable ou Histoire

Un jour, maigre et sentant un royal appétit,
Un singe d’une peau de tigre se vêtit.
Le tigre avait été méchant; lui, fut atroce.
Il avait endossé le droit d’être féroce.
Il se mit à grincer des dents, criant: Je suis
Le vainqueur des halliers, le roi sombre des nuits!
Il s’embusqua, brigand des bois, dans les épines
Il entassa l’horreur, le meurtre, les rapines,
Egorgea les passants, dévasta la forêt,
Fit tout ce qu’avait fait la peau qui le couvrait.
Il vivait dans un antre, entouré de carnage.
Chacun, voyant la peau, croyait au personnage.
Il s’écriait, poussant d’affreux rugissements:
Regardez, ma caverne est pleine d’ossements;
Devant moi tout recule et frémit, tout émigre,
Tout tremble; admirez-moi, voyez, je suis un tigre!
Les bêtes l’admiraient, et fuyaient à grands pas.
Un belluaire vint, le saisit dans ses bras,
Déchira cette peau comme on déchire un linge,
Mit à nu ce vainqueur, et dit: Tu n’es qu’un singe!
6 novembre. Jersey.

“Ainsi les plus abjects, les plus vils, les plus minces

Ainsi les plus abjects, les plus vils, les plus minces
Vont régner! ce n’était pas assez des vrais princes
Qui de leur sceptre d’or insultent le ciel bleu,
Et sont rois et méchants par la grâce de Dieu!
Quoi! tel gueux qui, pourvu d’un titre en bonne forme,
À pour toute splendeur sa bâtardise énorme,
Tel enfant du hasard, rebut des échafauds,
Dont le nom fut un vol et la naissance un faux,
Tel bohème pétri de ruse et d’arrogance,
Tel intrus entrera dans le sang de Bragance,
Dans la maison d’Autriche ou dans la maison d’Est,
Grâce à la fiction légale is pater est,
Criera: je suis Bourbon, ou: je suis Bonaparte,
Mettra cyniquement ses deux poings sur la carte,
Et dira: c’est à moi! je suis le grand vainqueur!
Sans que les braves gens, sans que les gens de coeur
Rendent à Curtius ce monarque de cire!
Et, quand je dis: faquin! l’écho répondra: sire!
Quoi! ce royal croquant, ce maraud couronné,
Qui, d’un boulet de quatre à la cheville orné,
Devrait dans un ponton pourrir à fond de cale,
Cette altesse en ruolz, ce prince en chrysocale,
Se fait devant la France, horrible, ensanglanté,
Donner de l’empereur et de la majesté,
Il trousse sa moustache en croc et la caresse,
Sans que sous les soufflets sa face disparaisse,
Sans que, d’un coup de pied l’arrachant à Saint-Cloud,
On le jette au ruisseau, dût-on salir l’égout!

— Paix! disent cent crétins. C’est fini. Chose faite.
Le Trois pour cent est Dieu, Mandrin est son prophète.
Il règne. Nous avons voté! Vox populi. -
Oui, je comprends, l’opprobre est un fait accompli.
Mais qui donc a voté? Mais qui donc tenait l’urne?

Mais qui donc a vu clair dans ce scrutin nocturne?
Où donc était la loi dans ce tour effronté?
Où donc la nation? Où donc la liberté?
Ils ont voté!

Troupeau que la peur mène paître
Entre le sacristain et le garde champêtre
Vous qui, pleins de terreur. voyez, pour vous manger,
Pour manger vos maisons, vos bois, votre verger,
Vos meules de luzerne et vos pommes à cidre,
S’ouvrir tous les matins les mâchoires d’une hydre
Braves gens, qui croyez en vos foins, et mettez
De la religion dans vos propriétés;
Âmes que l’argent touche et que l’or fait dévotes
Maires narquois, traînant vos paysans aux votes;
Marguilliers aux regards vitreux; curés camus
Hurlant à vos lutrins: Dæmonem laudamus;
Sots, qui vous courroucez comme flambe une bûche;
Marchands dont la balance incorrecte trébuche;
Vieux bonshommes crochus, hiboux hommes d’état,
Qui déclarez, devant la fraude et l’attentat,
La tribune fatale et la presse funeste;
Fats, qui, tout effrayés de l’esprit, cette peste,
Criez, quoique à l’abri de la contagion;
Voltairiens, viveurs, fervente légion,
Saints gaillards, qui jetez dans la même gamelle
Dieu, l’orgie et la messe, et prenez pêle-mêle
La défense du ciel et la taille à Goton;
Bons dos, qui vous courbez, adorant le bâton;
Contemplateurs béats des gibets de l’Autriche
Gens de bourse effarés, qui trichez et qu’on triche;
Invalides, lions transformés en toutous;
Niais, pour qui cet homme est un sauveur; vous tous
Qui vous ébahissez, bestiaux de Panurge,
Aux miracles que fait Cartouche thaumaturge;
Noircisseurs de papier timbré, planteurs de choux,
Est-ce que vous croyez que la France, c’est vous,

Que vous êtes le peuple, et que jamais vous eûtes
Le droit de nous donner un maître, ô tas de brutes?
Ce droit, sachez-le bien, chiens du berger Maupas,
Et la France et le peuple eux-mêmes ne l’ont pas.
L’altière Vérité jamais ne tombe en cendre.
La Liberté n’est pas une guenille à vendre,
Jetée au tas, pendue au clou chez un fripier.
Quand un peuple se laisse au piège estropier,
Le droit sacré, toujours à soi-même fidèle,
Dans chaque citoyen trouve une citadelle;
On s’illustre en bravant un lâche conquérant,
Et le moindre du peuple en devient le plus grand.
Donc, trouvez du bonheur, ô plates créatures,
À vivre dans la fange et dans les pourritures,
Adorez ce fumier sous ce dais de brocart,
L’honnête homme recule et s’accoude à l’écart.
Dans la chute d’autrui je ne veux pas descendre.
L’honneur n’abdique point. Nul n’a droit de me prendre
Ma liberté, mon bien, mon ciel bleu, mon amour.
Tout l’univers aveugle est sans droit sur le jour.
Fût-on cent millions d’esclaves, je suis libre.
Ainsi parle Caton. Sur la Seine ou le Tibre,
Personne n’est tombé tant qu’un seul est debout.
Le vieux sang des aïeux qui s’indigne et qui bout,
La vertu, la fierté, la justice, l’histoire,
Toute une nation avec toute sa gloire
Vit dans le dernier front qui ne veut pas plier.
Pour soutenir le temple il suffit d’un pilier;
Un français, c’est la France; un romain contient Rome,
Et ce qui brise un peuple avorte aux pieds d’un homme.
4 mai 1853. Jersey.

Querelles du sérail

Ciel! après tes splendeurs, qui rayonnaient naguères,
Liberté sainte; après toutes ces grandes guerres,
Tourbillon inouï;
Après ce Marengo qui brille sur la carte,
Et qui ferait lâcher le premier Bonaparte
À Tacite ébloui;

Après ces messidors, ces prairials, ces frimaires,
Et tant de préjugés, d’hydres et de chimères,
Terrassés à jamais;
Après le sceptre en cendre et la Bastille en poudre,
Le trône en flamme; après tous ces grands coups de foudre
Sur tous ces grands sommets:

Après tous ces géants, après tous ces colosses,
S’acharnant malgré Dieu, comme d’ardents molosses,
Quand Dieu disait: va-t’en!
Après ton océan, République française,
Où nos pères ont vu passer Quatrevingt-treize
Comme Léviathan;

Après Danton, Saint-Just et Mirabeau, ces hommes,
Ces titans, aujourd’hui cette France où nous sommes
Contemple l’embryon,
L’infiniment petit, monstrueux et féroce,
Et, dans la goutte d’eau, les guerres du volvoce
Contre le vibrion!
Honte! France, aujourd’hui, voici ta grande affaire:
Savoir si c’est Maupas ou Morny qu’on préfère,
Là-haut, dans le palais;
Tous deux ont sauvé l’ordre et sauvé les familles;
Lequel l’emportera? l’un a pour lui les filles,
Et l’autre, les valets.
Bruxelles, janvier 1852

Orientale

Lorsque Abd-el-Kader dans sa geôle
Vit entrer l’homme aux yeux étroits
Que l’histoire appelle - ce drôle, -
Et Troplong - Napoléon trois; -

Qu’il vit venir, de sa croisée,
Suivi du troupeau qui le sert,
L’homme louche de l’Elysée,
Lui, l’homme fauve du désert;

Lui, le sultan né sous les palmes,
Le compagnon des lions roux,
Le hadji farouche aux yeux calmes,
L’émir pensif, féroce et doux;

Lui, sombre et fatal personnage
Qui, spectre pâle au blanc burnous,
Bondissait, ivre de carnage,
Puis tombait dans l’ombre à genoux;

Qui, de sa tente ouvrant les toiles,
Et priant au bord du chemin,
Tranquille, montrait aux étoiles
Ses mains teintes de sang humain;

Qui donnait à boire aux épées,
Et qui, rêveur mystérieux,
Assis sur des têtes coupées,
Contemplait la beauté des cieux;

Voyant ce regard fourbe et traître,
Ce front bas, de honte obscurci,
Lui, le beau soldat, le beau prêtre,
Il dit: Quel est cet homme-ci?

Devant ce vil masque à moustaches,
Il hésita; mais on lui dit:
“Regarde, émir, passer les haches!
Cet homme, c’est César bandit.

» Ecoute ces plaintes amères
Et cette clameur qui grandit.
Cet homme est maudit par les mères,
Par les femmes il est maudit;

» Il les fait veuves, Il les navre
Il prit la France et la tua,
Il ronge à présent son cadavre.”
Alors le hadji salua.

Mais au fond toutes ses pensées
Méprisaient le sanglant gredin
Le tigre aux narines froncées
Flairait ce loup avec dédain.
20 novembre. Jersey.

Un Bon Bourgeois dans sa maison

«Mais que je suis donc heureux d’être né en Chine! Je possède une maison pour m’abriter, j’ai de quoi manger et boire, j’ai toutes les commodités de l’existence, j’ai des habits, des bonnets et une multitude d’agréments; en vérité, la félicité la plus grande est mon partage!”

THIEN-CI-KHI, LETTRÉ CHINOIS.

Il est certains bourgeois, prêtres du dieu Boutique,
Plus voisins de Chrysès que de Caton d’Utique,
Mettant par-dessus tout la rente et le coupon,
Qui, voguant à la Bourse et tenant un harpon,
Honnêtes gens d’ailleurs, mais de la grosse espèce,
Acceptent Phalaris par amour pour leur caisse,
Et le taureau d’airain à cause du veau d’or.
Ils ont voté. Demain ils voteront encor.
Si quelque libre écrit entre leurs mains s’égare,
Les pieds sur les chenets et fumant son cigare,
Chacun de ces votants tout bas raisonne ainsi:
Ce livre est fort choquant. De quel droit celui-ci
Est-il généreux, ferme et fier, quand je suis lâche?
En attaquant monsieur Bonaparte, on me fâche.
Je pense comme lui que c’est un gueux; pourquoi
Le dit-il? Soit, d’accord, Bonaparte est sans foi
Ni loi; c’est un parjure, un brigand, un faussaire,
C’est vrai; sa politique est armée en corsaire
Il a banni jusqu’à des juges suppléants;
Il a coupé leur bourse aux princes d’Orléans
C’est le pire gredin qui soit sur cette terre;
Mais puisque j’ai voté pour lui, l’on doit se taire.
Ecrire contre lui, c’est me blâmer au fond;
C’est me dire: voilà comment les braves font
Et c’est une façon, à nous qui restons neutres,
De nous faire sentir que nous sommes des pleutres.
J’en conviens, nous avons une corde au poignet.
Que voulez-vous? la Bourse allait mal; on craignait

La république rouge, et même un peu la rose
Il fallait bien finir par faire quelque chose

On trouve ce coquin, on le fait empereur;
C’est tout simple. On voulait éviter la terreur,
Le spectre de monsieur Romieu, la jacquerie
On s’est réfugié dans cette escroquerie.
Or, quand on dit du mal de ce gouvernement,
Je me sens chatouillé désagréablement.
Qu’on fouaille avec raison cet homme, c’est possible
Mais c’est m’insinuer à moi, bourgeois paisible
Qui fis ce scélérat empereur ou consul,
Que j’ai dit oui par peur et vivat par calcul.
Je trouve impertinent, parbleu, qu’on me le dise.
M’étant enseveli dans cette couardise,
Il me déplaît qu’on soit intrépide aujourd’hui,
Et je tiens pour affront le courage d’autrui.”

Penseurs, quand vous marquez au front l’homme punique
Qui de la loi sanglante arracha la tunique,
Quand vous vengez le peuple à la gorge saisi,
Le serment et le droit, vous êtes, songez-y,
Entre Sbogar qui règne et Géronte qui vote;
Et votre plume ardente, anarchique, indévote,
Démagogique, impie, attente d’un côté
À ce crime; de l’autre, à cette lâcheté.
Novembre 1852. Jersey.

Splendeurs

I

À présent que c’est fait, dans l’avilissement
Arrangeons-nous chacun notre compartiment
Marchons d’un air auguste et fier; la honte est bue.
Que tout à composer cette cour contribue,
Tout, excepté l’honneur, tout, hormis les vertus.
Faites vivre, animez, envoyez vos foetus
Et vos nains monstrueux, bocaux d’anatomie
Donne ton crocodile et donne ta momie,
Vieille Égypte; donnez, tapis-francs, vos filous;
Shakespeare, ton Falstaff; noires forêts, vos loups;
Donne, ô bon Rabelais, ton Grandgousier qui mange;
Donne ton diable, Hoffmann; Veuillot, donne ton ange;
Scapin, apporte-nous Géronte dans ton sac;
Beaumarchais, prête-nous Bridoison; que Balzac
Donne Vautrin; Dumas, la Carconte; Voltaire,
Son Frélon que l’argent fait parler et fait taire;
Mabile, les beautés de ton jardin d’hiver;
Le Sage, cède-nous Gil Blas; que Gulliver
Donne tout Lilliput dont l’aigre est une mouche,
Et Scarron Bruscambille, et Callot Scaramouche.
Il nous faut un dévot dans ce tripot payen;
Molière, donne-nous Montalembert. C’est bien,
L’ombre à l’horreur s’accouple, et le mauvais au pire.
Tacite, nous avons de quoi faire l’empire;
Juvénal, nous avons de quoi faire un sénat.

II

Ô Ducos le gascon, ô Rouher l’auvergnat,
Et vous, juifs, Fould Shylock, Sibour Iscariote,
Toi Parieu, toi Bertrand, horreur du patriote,
Bauchart, bourreau douceâtre et proscripteur plaintif,

Baroche, dont le nom n'est plus qu'un vomitif,
Ô valets solennels, ô majestueux fourbes,
Travaillant votre échine à produire des courbes,
Bas, hautains, ravissant les Daumiers enchantés
Par vos convexités et vos concavités,
Convenez avec moi, vous tous qu'ici je nomme,
Que Dieu dans sa sagesse a fait exprès cet homme
Pour régner sur la France, ou bien sur Haïti.
Et vous autres, créés pour grossir son parti,
Philosophes gênés de cuissons à l'épaule,
Et vous, viveurs râpés, frais sortis de la geôle,
Saluez l'être unique et providentiel,
Ce gouvernant tombé d'une trappe du ciel,
Ce césar moustachu, gardé par cent guérites,
Qui sait apprécier les gens et les mérites,
Et qui, prince admirable et grand homme en effet,
Fait Poissy sénateur et Clichy sous-préfet.

III

Après quoi l'on ajuste au fait la théorie
«A bas les mots! à bas loi, liberté, patrie!
Plus on s'aplatira, plus ou prospérera.
Jetons au feu tribune et presse, et cætera.

Depuis quatrevingt-neuf les nations sont ivres.
Les faiseurs de discours et les faiseurs de livres
Perdent tout; le poëte est un fou dangereux;
Le progrès ment, le ciel est vide, l'art est creux,
Le monde est mort. Le peuple? un âne qui se cabre!
La force, c'est le droit. Courbons-nous. Gloire au sabre!
À bas les Washington! vivent les Attila!"
On a des gens d'esprit pour soutenir cela.

Oui, qu'ils viennent tous ceux qui n'ont ni cœur ni flamme,
Qui boitent de l'honneur et qui louchent de l'âme;
Oui, leur soleil se lève et leur messie est né.

C’est décrété, c’est fait, c’est dit, c’est canonné
La France est mitraillée, escroquée et sauvée.

Le hibou Trahison pond gaîment sa couvée.

IV

Et partout le néant prévaut; pour déchirer
Notre histoire, nos lois, nos droits, pour dévorer
L’avenir de nos fils et les os de nos pères,
Les bêtes de la nuit sortent de leurs repaires
Sophistes et soudards resserrent leur réseau
Les Radetzky flairant le gibet du museau,
Les Giulay, poil tigré, les Buol, face verte,
Les Haynau, les Bomba, rôdent, la gueule ouverte,
Autour du genre humain qui, pâle et garrotté,
Lutte pour la justice et pour la vérité;
Et de Paris à Pesth, du Tibre aux monts Carpathes,
Sur nos débris sanglants rampent ces mille-pattes.

V

Du lourd dictionnaire où Beauzée et Batteux
Ont versé les trésors de leur bon sens goutteux,
Il faut, grâce aux vainqueurs, refaire chaque lettre.
Ame de l’homme, ils ont trouvé moyen de mettre
Sur tes vieilles laideurs un tas de mots nouveaux,
Leurs noms. L’hypocrisie aux yeux bas et dévots
À nom Menjaud, et vend Jésus dans sa chapelle;
On a débaptisé la honte, elle s’appelle
Sibour; la trahison, Maupas; l’assassinat
Sous le nom de Magnan est membre du Sénat;

Quant à la lâcheté, c’est Hardouin qu’on la nomme;
Riancey, c’est le mensonge, il arrive de Rome
Et tient la vérité renfermée en son puits;
La platitude a nom Montlaville-Chapuis;

La prostitution, ingénue, est princesse;
La férocité, c’est Carrelet; la bassesse
Signe Rouher, avec Delangle pour greffier.
Ô muse, inscris ces noms. Veux-tu qualifier
La justice vénale, atroce, abjecte et fausse?
Commence à Partarieu pour finir par Lafosse.
J’appelle Saint-Arnaud, le meurtre dit: c’est moi.
Et, pour tout compléter par le deuil et l’effroi,
Le vieux calendrier remplace sur sa carte
La Saint-Barthélemy par la Saint-Bonaparte.
Quant au peuple, il admire et vote; on est suspect
D’en douter, et Paris écoute avec respect
Sibour et ses sermons, Trolong et ses troplongues.
Les deux Napoléon s’unissent en diphthongues,
Et Berger entrelace en un chiffre hardi
Le boulevard Montmartre entre Arcole et Lodi.
Spartacus agonise en un bagne fétide;
On chasse Thémistocle, on expulse Aristide,
On jette Daniel dans la fosse aux lions;
Et maintenant ouvrons le ventre aux millions!
Jersey. Novembre 1852.

Joyeuse vie

I

Bien! pillards, intrigants, fourbes, crétins, puissances!
Attablez-vous en hâte autour des jouissances!
Accourez! place à tous!
Maîtres, buvez, mangez, car la vie est rapide.
Tout ce peuple conquis, tout ce peuple stupide,
Tout ce peuple est à vous!
Vendez l’état! coupez les bois! coupez les bourses!
Videz les réservoirs et tarissez les sources!
Les temps sont arrivés.
Prenez le dernier sou! prenez, gais et faciles,
Aux travailleurs des champs, aux travailleurs des villes!
Prenez, riez, vivez!

Bombance! allez! c’est bien! vivez! faites ripaille!
La famille du pauvre expire sur la paille,
Sans porte ni volet.
Le père en frémissant va mendier dans l’ombre;
La mère n’ayant plus de pain, dénûment sombre,
L’enfant n’a plus de lait.

II

Millions! millions! châteaux! liste civile!
Un jour je descendis dans les caves de Lille
Je vis ce morne enfer.
Des fantômes sont là sous terre dans des chambres,
Blêmes, courbés, ployés; le rachis tord leurs membres
Dans son poignet de fer.
Sous ces voûtes on souffre, et l’air semble un toxique
L’aveugle en tâtonnant donne à boire au phtisique
L’eau coule à longs ruisseaux;
Presque enfant à vingt ans, déjà vieillard à trente,

Le vivant chaque jour sent la mort pénétrante
S’infiltrer dans ses os.
Jamais de feu; la pluie inonde la lucarne;
L’œil en ces souterrains où le malheur s’acharne
Sur vous, ô travailleurs,
Près du rouet qui tourne et du fil qu’on dévide,
Voit des larves errer dans la lueur livide
Du soupirail en pleurs.

Misère! l’homme songe en regardant la femme.
Le père, autour de lui sentant l’angoisse infâme
Etreindre la vertu,
Voit sa fille rentrer sinistre sous la porte,
Et n’ose, l’œil fixé sur le pain qu’elle apporte,
Lui dire: D’où viens-tu?

Là dort le désespoir sur son haillon sordide;
Là, l’avril de la vie, ailleurs tiède et splendide,
Ressemble au sombre hiver;
La vierge, rose au jour, dans l’ombre est violette;
Là, rampent dans l’horreur la maigreur du squelette,
La nudité du ver;

Là frissonnent, plus bas que les égouts des rues,
Familles de la vie et du jour disparues,
Des groupes grelottants;
Là, quand j’entrai, farouche, aux méduses pareille,
Une petite fille à figure vieille
Me dit: J’ai dix-huit ans!

Là, n’ayant pas de lit, la mère malheureuse
Met ses petits enfants dans un trou qu’elle creuse,
Tremblants comme l’oiseau;
Hélas! ces innocents aux regards de colombe
Trouvent en arrivant sur la terre une tombe
En place d’un berceau!

Caves de Lille! on meurt sous vos plafonds de pierre!
J’ai vu, vu de ces yeux pleurant sous ma paupière,
Râler l’aïeul flétri,
La fille aux yeux hagards de ses cheveux vêtue,
Et l’enfant spectre au sein de la mère statue!
Ô Dante Alighieri!

C’est de ces douleurs-là que sortent vos richesses,
Princes! ces dénûments nourrissent vos largesses,
Ô vainqueurs! conquérants!
Votre budget ruisselle et suinte à larges gouttes
Des murs de ces caveaux, des pierres de ces voûtes,
Du cœur de ces mourants.

Sous ce rouage affreux qu’on nomme tyrannie,
Sous cette vis que meut le fisc, hideux génie,
De l’aube jusqu’au soir,
Sans trêve, nuit et jour, dans le siècle où nous sommes
Ainsi que des raisins on écrase des hommes,
Et l’or sort du pressoir.

C’est de cette détresse et de ces agonies,
De cette ombre, où jamais, dans les âmes ternies,
Espoir, tu ne vibras,
C’est de ces bouges noirs pleins d’angoisses amères,
C’est de ce sombre amas de pères et de mères
Qui se tordent les bras,

Oui, c’est de ce monceau d’indigences terribles
Que les lourds millions, étincelants, horribles,
Semant l’or en chemin,
Rampant vers les palais et les apothéoses,
Sortent, monstres joyeux et couronnés de roses,
Et teints de sang humain!

III

Ô paradis! splendeurs! versez à boire aux maîtres!
L’orchestre rit, la fête empourpre les fenêtres,
La table éclate et luit;
L’ombre est là sous leurs pieds! les portes sont fermées
La prostitution des vierges affamées
Pleure dans cette nuit!

Vous tous qui partagez ces hideuses délices,
Soldats payés, tribuns vendus, juges complices,
Évêques effrontés,
La misère frémit sous ce Louvre où vous êtes!
C’est de fièvre et de faim et de mort que sont faites
Toutes vos voluptés!

À Saint-Cloud, effeuillant jasmins et marguerites,
Quand s’ébat sous les fleurs l’essaim des favorites,
Bras nus et gorge au vent,
Dans le festin qu’égaie un lustre à mille branches,
Chacune, en souriant, dans ses belles dents blanches
Mange un enfant vivant!
Mais qu’importe! riez! Se plaindra-t-on sans cesse?
Serait-on empereur, prélat, prince et princesse,
Pour ne pas s’amuser?
Ce peuple en larmes, triste, et que la faim déchire,
Doit être satisfait puisqu’il vous entend rire
Et qu’il vous voit danser!
Qu’importe! Allons, emplis ton coffre, emplis ta poche.
Chantez, le verre en main, Troplong, Sibour, Baroche!
Ce tableau nous manquait.
Regorgez, quand la faim tient le peuple en sa serre,
Et faites, au -dessus de l’immense misère,
Un immense banquet!

IV

Ils marchent sur toi, peuple! Ô barricade sombre,
Si haute hier, dressant dans les assauts sans nombre
Ton front de sang lavé,

Sous la roue emportée, étincelante et folle,
De leur coupé joyeux qui rayonne et qui vole,
Tu redeviens pavé!

À César ton argent, peuple; à toi la famine.
N’es-tu pas le chien vil qu’on bat et qui chemine
Derrière son seigneur?
À lui la pourpre; à toi la hotte et les guenilles.
Peuple, à lui la beauté de ces femmes, tes filles,
À toi leur déshonneur!

V

Ah! quelqu’un parlera. La muse, c’est l’histoire.
Quelqu’un élèvera la voix dans la nuit noire.
Riez, bourreaux bouffons!
Quelqu’un te vengera, pauvre France abattue,
Ma mère! et l’on verra la parole qui tue
Sortir des cieux profonds!

Ces gueux, pires brigands que ceux des vieilles races,
Rongeant le pauvre peuple avec leurs dents voraces,
Sans pitié, sans merci,
Vils, n’ayant pas de cœur, mais ayant deux visages,
Disent: — Bah! le poëte! il est dans les nuages! -
Soit. Le tonnerre aussi.
19 janvier 1853.

L’Empereur s’amuse

Pour les bannis opiniâtres,
La France est loin, la tombe est près.
Prince, préside aux jeux folâtres,
Chasse aux femmes dans les théâtres,
Chasse aux chevreuils dans les forêts
Rome te brûle le cinname,
Les rois te disent: mon cousin. -
Sonne aujourd’hui le glas, bourdon de Notre-Dame,
Et demain le tocsin!
Les us frappés sont les plus dignes.
Ou l’exil! ou l’Afrique en feu!
Prince, Compiègne est plein de cygnes,
Cours dans les bois, cours dans les vignes,
Vénus rayonne au plafond bleu;
La bacchante aux bras nus se pâme
Sous sa couronne de raisin. -
Sonne aujourd’hui le glas, bourdon de Notre-Dame,
Et demain le tocsin!

Les forçats bâtissent le phare,
Traînant leurs fers au bord des flots!
Hallali! hallali! fanfare!
Le cor sonne, le bois s’effare,
La lune argente les bouleaux;
À l’eau les chiens! le cerf qui branle
Se perd dans l’ombre du bassin. -
Sonne aujourd’hui le glas, bourdon de Notre-Dame,
Et demain le tocsin!

Le père est au bagne à Cayenne
Et les enfants meurent de faim.
Le loup verse à boire à l’hyène;
L’homme à la mitre citoyenne
Trinque en son ciboire d’or fin;

On voit luire les yeux de flamme
Des faunes dans l’antre voisin. -
Sonne aujourd’hui le glas, bourdon de Notre-Dame,
Et demain le tocsin!
Les morts, au boulevard Montmartre,
Rôdent, montrant leur plaie au cœur.
Pâtés de Strasbourg et de Chartre,
Sous la table, un tapis de martre
Les belles boivent au vainqueur,
Et leur sourire offre leur âme,
Et leur corset offre leur sein. -
Sonne aujourd’hui le glas, bourdon de Notre-Dame,
Et demain le tocsin!

Captifs, expirez dans les fièvres.
Vous allez donc vous reposer!
Dans le vieux saxe et le vieux sèvres
On soupe, on mange, et sur les lèvres
Éclôt le doux oiseau baiser;
Et, tout en riant, chaque femme
En laisse fuir un fol essaim. -
Sonne aujourd’hui le glas, bourdon de Notre-Dame,
Et demain le tocsin!

La Guyane, cachot fournaise,
Tue aujourd’hui comme jadis.
Couche-toi, joyeux et plein d’aise,
Au lit où coucha Louis seize,
Puis l’empereur, puis Charles dix;
Endors-toi, pendant qu’on t’acclame,
La tête sur leur traversin. -
Sonne aujourd’hui le glas, bourdon de Notre-Dame,
Et demain le tocsin!

Ô deuil! par un bandit féroce
L’avenir est mort poignardé!
C’est aujourd’hui la grande noce,

Le fiancé monte en carrosse;
C’est lui! César le bien gardé!
Peuples, chantez l’épithalame!
La France épouse l’assassin. -
Sonne aujourd’hui le glas, bourdon de Notre-Dame,
Et demain le tocsin!
25 janvier 1853.

Sentiers où l’herbe se balance

Sentiers où l’herbe se balance,
Vallons, coteaux, bois chevelus,
Pourquoi ce deuil et ce silence?
— Celui qui venait ne vient plus.

— Pourquoi personne à ta fenêtre,
Et pourquoi ton jardin sans fleurs,.
Ô maison? où donc est ton maître?
— Je ne sais pas, il est ailleurs.

— Chien, veille au logis. — Pourquoi faire?
La maison est vide à présent.
— Enfant, qui pleures-tu? — Mon père.
— Femme, qui pleures-tu? — L’absent.

— Où s’en est-il allé? — Dans l’ombre.
— Flots qui gémissez sur l’écueil,
D’où venez-vous? — Du bagne sombre.
— Et qu’apportez-vous? Un cercueil.
1er août 1853. Jersey.

Ô Robert, un conseil. Ayez l’air moins candide

Ô Robert, un conseil. Ayez l’air moins candide.
Soyons homme d’esprit. Le moment est splendide,
Je le sais; le quart d’heure est chatoyant, c’est vrai
Cette Californie est riche en minerai,
D’accord; mais cependant quand un préfet, un maire,
Un évêque adorant le fils de votre mère,
Quand un Suin, un Parieu, payé pour sa ferveur,
Vous parlant en plein nez, vous appelle sauveur,
Vous promet l’avenir, atteste Fould et Magne,
Et vous fait coudoyer César et Charlemagne,
Mon cher, vous accueillez ces propos obligeants
D’un air de bonne foi qui prête à rire aux gens.
Vous avez l’œil béat d’un bailli de province.
Par ces simplicités vous affligez, ô prince,
Napoléon, votre oncle, et moi, votre parrain.
Ne soyons pas Jocrisse ayant été Mandrin.
On vole un trône, on prend un peuple en une attrape,
Mais il est de bon goût d’en rire un peu sous cape
Et de cligner de l’œil du côté des malins.
Etre sa propre dupe! ah! fi donc! Verres pleins,
Poche pleine, et rions! La France rampe et s’offre;
Soyons un sage à qui Jupiter livre un coffre;
Dépêchons-nous, pillons, régnons vite. — Mais quoi!
Le pape nous bénit; czar, sultan, duc et roi
Sont nos cousins; fonder un empire est facile
Il est doux d’être chef d’une race! — Imbécile!
Te figures-tu donc que ceci durera?
Prends-tu pour du granit ce décor d’opéra?
Paris dompté! par toi! dans quelle apocalypse
Lit-on que le géant devant le nain s’éclipse?
Crois-tu donc qu’on va voir, gaîment, l’œil impudent,
Ta fortune cynique écraser sous sa dent
La révolution que nos pères ont faite,
Ainsi qu’une guenon qui croque une noisette?

Ote-toi de l’esprit ce rêve enchanteur. Crois
À Rose Tamisier faisant saigner la croix,
À l’âme de Baroche entrouvrant sa corolle,
Crois à l’honnêteté de Deutz, à ta parole,
C’est bien; mais ne crois pas à ton succès; il ment.
Rose Tamisier, Deutz, Baroche, ton serment,
C’est de l’or, j’en conviens; ton sceptre est de l’argile.
Dieu, qui t’a mis au coche, écrit sur toi: fragile.
29 mai 1853. Jersey.

“L’histoire a pour égout des temps comme les nôtres

L’histoire a pour égout des temps comme les nôtres,
Et c’est là que la table est mise pour vous autres.
C’est là, sur cette nappe où joyeux vous mangez,
Qu’on voit, — tandis qu’ailleurs, nus et de fers chargés,
Agonisent, sereins, calmes, le front sévère,
Socrate à l’agora, Jésus-Christ au calvaire,
Colomb dans son cachot, Jean Huss sur son bûcher,
Et que l’humanité pleure et n’ose approcher
Tous ces gibets où sont les justes et les sages, -
C’est là qu’on voit trôner dans la longueur des âges,
Parmi les vins, les luths, les viandes, les flambeaux,
Sur des coussins de pourpre oubliant les tombeaux,
Ouvrant et refermant leurs féroces mâchoires,
Ivres, heureux, affreux, la tête dans des gloires,

Tout le troupeau hideux des satrapes dorés;
C’est là qu’on entend rire et chanter, entourés
De femmes couronnant de fleurs leurs turpitudes,
Dans leur lasciveté prenant mille attitudes,
Laissant peuples et chiens en bas ronger les os,
Tous les hommes requins, tous les hommes pourceaux,
Les princes de hasard plus fangeux que les rues,
Les goinfres courtisans, les altesses ventrues,
Toute gloutonnerie et toute abjection,
Depuis Cambacérès jusqu’à Trimalcion.
4 février 1853.

À propos de la loi Faider

Ce qu’on appelle Charte ou Constitution,
C’est un antre qu’un peuple en révolution
Creuse dans le granit, abri sûr et fidèle.
Joyeux, le peuple enferme en cette citadelle
Ses conquêtes, ses droits, payés de tant d’efforts,
Ses progrès, son honneur; pour garder ces trésors,
Il installe en la haute et superbe tanière
La fauve liberté, secouant sa crinière.
L’oeuvre faite, il s’apaise, il reprend ses travaux,
Il retourne à son champ, fier de ses droits nouveaux,
Et tranquille, il s’endort sur des dates célèbres,
Sans songer aux larrons rôdant dans les ténèbres.
Un beau matin, le peuple en s’éveillant va voir
Sa Constitution, temple de son pouvoir;
Hélas! de l’antre auguste on a fait une niche.
Il y mit un lion, il y trouve un caniche.
10 décembre. Jersey.

Le Bord de la mer

HARMODIUS
La nuit vient. Vénus brille.

L’ÉPÉE
Harmodius, c’est l’heure!

LA BORNE DU CHEMIN
Le tyran va passer.

HARMODIUS
J’ai froid, rentrons.

UN TOMBEAU
Demeure.

HARMODIUS
Qu’es-tu?

LE TOMBEAU
Je suis la tombe. — Exécute, ou péris.

UN NAVIRE A L’HORIZON
Je suis la tombe aussi, j’emporte les proscrits.

L’ÉPÉE
Attendons le tyran.

HARMODIUS
J’ai froid. Quel vent!

LE VENT
Je passe.
Mon bruit est une voix. Je sème dans l’espace
Les cris des exilés, de misère expirants,

Qui sans pain, sans abri, sans amis, sans parents,
Meurent en regardant du côté de la Grèce.

VOIX DANS L’AIR
Némésis! Némésis! lève-toi, vengeresse!

L’ÉPÉE
C’est l’heure. Profitons de l’ombre qui descend.

LA TERRE
Je suis pleine de morts.

LA MER
Je suis rouge de sang.
Les fleuves m’ont porté des cadavres sans nombre.

LA TERRE
Les morts saignent pendant qu’on adore son ombre.
À chaque pas qu’il fait sous le clair firmament,
Je les sens s’agiter en moi confusément.

UN FORÇAT
Je suis forçat, voici la chaîne que je porte,
Hélas! pour n’avoir pas chassé loin de ma porte
Un proscrit qui fuyait, noble et pur citoyen.

L’ÉPÉE
Ne frappe pas au cœur, tu ne trouverais rien.

LA LOI
J’étais la loi, je suis un spectre. Il m’a tuée.

LA JUSTICE
De moi, prêtresse, il fait une prostituée.

LES OISEAUX
Il a retiré l’air des cieux, et nous fuyons.

LA LIBERTÉ
Je m’enfuis avec eux; — ô terre sans rayons,
Grèce, adieu!

UN VOLEUR
Ce tyran, nous l’aimons. Car ce maître
Que respecte le juge et qu’admire le prêtre,
Qu’on accueille partout de cris encourageants,
Est plus pareil à nous qu’à vous, honnêtes gens.

LE SERMENT
Dieux puissants! à jamais fermez toutes les bouches!
La confiance est morte au fond des cœurs farouches.
Homme, tu mens! Soleil, tu mens! Cieux, vous mentez!
Soufflez, vents de la nuit! emportez, emportez
L’honneur et la vertu, cette sombre chimère!

LA PATRIE
Mon fils, je suis aux fers! Mon fils, je suis ta mère!
Je tends les bras vers toi du fond de ma prison.

HARMODIUS
Quoi! le frapper, la nuit, rentrant dans sa maison!
Quoi! devant ce ciel noir, devant ces mers sans borne!
Le poignarder, devant ce gouffre obscur et morne,
En présence de l’ombre et de l’immensité!

LA CONSCIENCE
Tu peux tuer cet homme avec tranquillité.
Jersey, 25 octobre.

Non

Laissons le glaive à Rome et le stylet à Sparte.
Ne faisons pas saisir, trop pressés de punir,
Par le spectre Brutus le brigand Bonaparte.
Gardons ce misérable au sinistre avenir.
Vous serez satisfaits, je vous le certifie,
Bannis, qui de l’exil portez le triste faix,
Captifs, proscrits, martyrs qu’il foule et qu’il défie,
Vous tous qui frémissez, vous serez satisfaits.
Jamais au criminel son crime ne pardonne;
Mais gardez, croyez-moi, la vengeance au fourreau
Attendez; ayez foi dans les ordres que donne
Dieu, juge patient, au temps, tardif bourreau!
Laissons vivre le traître en sa honte insondable.
Ce sang humilierait même le vil couteau.
Laissons venir le temps, l’inconnu formidable
Qui tient le châtiment caché sous son manteau.
Qu’il soit le couronné parce qu’il est le pire;
Le maître des fronts plats et des cœurs abrutis
Que son sénat décerne à sa race l’empire,
S’il trouve une femelle et s’il a des petits
Qu’il règne par la messe et par la pertuisane;
Qu’on le fasse empereur dans son flagrant délit;
Que l’église en rampant, que cette courtisane
Se glisse dans son antre et couche dans son lit
Qu’il soit cher à Troplong, que Sibour le vénère,
Qu’il leur donne son pied tout sanglant à baiser,
Qu’il vive, ce césar! Louvel ou Lacenaire
Seraient pour le tuer forcés de se baisser.
Ne tuez pas cet homme, ô vous, songeurs sévères,
Rêveurs mystérieux, solitaires et forts,
Qui, pendant qu’on le fête et qu’il choque les verres,
Marchez, le poing crispé, dans l’herbe où sont les morts!
Avec l’aide d’en haut toujours nous triomphâmes.
L’exemple froid vaut mieux qu’un éclair de fureur.

Non, ne le tuez pas. Les piloris infâmes
Ont besoin d’être ornés parfois d’un empereur.
12 novembre. Jersey.

LIVRE IV: LA RELIGION EST GLORIFIEE

Sacer esto

Non, Liberté! non, Peuple, il ne faut pas qu’il meure!
Oh! certes, ce serait trop simple, en vérité,
Qu’après avoir brisé les lois, et sonné l’heure
Où la sainte pudeur au ciel a remonté;

Qu’après avoir gagné sa sanglante gageure,
Et vaincu par l’embûche et le glaive et le feu;
Qu’après son guet-apens, ses meurtres, son parjure,
Son faux serment, soufflet sur la face de Dieu;

Qu’après avoir traîné la France, au cœur frappée,
Et par les pieds liée, à son immonde char,
Cet infâme en fût quitte avec un coup d’épée
Au cou comme Pompée, au flanc comme César!

Non! il est l’assassin qui rôde dans les plaines;
Il a tué, sabré, mitraillé sans remords,
Il fit la maison vide, il fit les tombes pleines,
Il marche, il va, suivi par l’œil fixe des morts;

À cause de cet homme, empereur éphémère,
Le fils n’a plus de père et l’enfant plus d’espoir,
La veuve à genoux pleure et sanglote, et la mère
N’est plus qu’un spectre assis sous un long voile noir;

Pour filer ses habits royaux, sur les navettes
On met du fil trempé dans le sang qui coula;
Le boulevard Montmartre a fourni ses cuvettes,
Et l’on teint son manteau dans cette pourpre-là;

Il vous jette à Cayenne, à l’Afrique, aux sentines,
Martyrs, héros d’hier et forçats d’aujourd’hui!
Le couteau ruisselant des rouges guillotines
Laisse tomber le sang goutte à goutte sur lui;

Lorsque la trahison, sa complice livide,
Vient et frappe à sa porte, il fait signe d’ouvrir;
Il est le fratricide! Il est le parricide! -
Peuples, c’est pour cela qu’il ne doit pas mourir!

Gardons l’homme vivant. Oh! châtiment superbe!
Oh! S’il pouvait un jour passer par le chemin,
Nu, courbé, frissonnant, comme au vent tremble l’herbe.
Sous l’exécration de tout le genre humain!

Étreint par son passé tout rempli de ses crimes,
Comme par un carcan tout hérissé de clous,
Cherchant les lieux profonds, les forêts, les abîmes,
Pâle, horrible, effaré, reconnu par les loups;

Dans quelque bagne vil n’entendant que sa chaîne,
Seul, toujours seul, parlant en vain aux rochers sourds,
Voyant autour de lui le silence et la haine,
Des hommes nulle part et des spectres toujours;

Vieillissant, rejeté par la mort comme indigne,
Tremblant sous la nuit noire, affreux sous le ciel bleu… -
Peuples, écartez-vous! cet homme porte un signe:
Laissez passer Caïn! Il appartient à Dieu.
14 novembre, Jersey.

Ce que le poète se disait en 1848

Tu ne dois pas chercher le pouvoir, tu dois faire
Ton œuvre ailleurs; tu dois, esprit d’une autre sphère,
Devant l’occasion reculer chastement.
De la pensée en deuil doux et sévère amant,
Compris ou dédaigné des hommes, tu dois être
Pâtre pour les garder et pour les bénir prêtre.
Lorsque les citoyens, par la misère aigris,
Fils de la même France et du même Paris,
S’égorgent; quand, sinistre, et soudain apparue,
La morne barricade au coin de chaque rue
Monte et vomit la mort de partout à la fois,

Tu dois y courir seul et désarmé; tu dois
Dans cette guerre impie, abominable, infâme,
Présenter ta poitrine et répandre ton âme,
Parler, prier, sauver les faibles et les forts,
Sourire à la mitraille et pleurer sur les morts;
Puis remonter tranquille à ta place isolée,
Et là, défendre, au sein de l’ardente assemblée,
Et ceux qu’on veut proscrire et ceux qu’on croit juger,
Renverser l’échafaud, servir et protéger
L’ordre et la paix, qu’ébranle un parti téméraire,
Nos soldats trop aisés à tromper, et ton frère,
Le pauvre homme du peuple aux cabanons jeté,
Et les lois, et la triste et fière liberté;
Consoler dans ces jours d’anxiété funeste,
L’art divin qui frissonne et pleure, et pour le reste
Attendre le moment suprême et décisif.

Ton rôle est d’avertir et de rester pensif.
27 novembre 1848

Les Commissions mixtes

Ils sont assis dans l’ombre et disent: nous jugeons.
Ils peuplent d’innocents les geôles, les donjons,
Et les pontons, nefs abhorrées,
Qui flottent au soleil sombres comme le soir,
Tandis que le reflet des mers sur leur flanc noir
Frissonne en écailles dorées.
Pour avoir sous son chaume abrité des proscrits,
Ce vieillard est au bagne, et l’on entend ses cris.
À Cayenne, à Bône, aux galères,
Quiconque a combattu cet escroc du scrutin
Qui, traître, après avoir crocheté le destin,
Filouta les droits populaires!

Ils ont frappé l’ami des lois; ils ont flétri
La femme qui portait du pain à son mari,
Le fils qui défendait son père;
Le droit? on l’a banni; l’honneur? on l’exila.
Cette justice-là sort de ces juges-là
Comme des tombeaux la vipère.
7 mai. Jersey.

À des journalistes de robe courte

Parce que, jargonnant vêpres, jeûne et vigile,
Exploitant Dieu qui rêve au fond du firmament,
Vous avez, au milieu du divin évangile,
Ouvert boutique effrontément;

Parce que vous feriez prendre à Jésus la verge,
Cyniques brocanteurs sortis on ne sait d'où;
Parce que vous allez vendant la sainte vierge
Dix sous avec miracle, et sans miracle un sou;

Parce que vous contez d'effroyables sornettes
Qui font des temples saints trembler les vieux piliers;
Parce que votre style éblouit les lunettes
Des duègnes et des marguilliers;

Parce que la soutane est sous vos redingotes,
Parce que vous sentez la crasse et non l'œillet,
Parce que vous bâclez un journal de bigotes
Pensé par Escobar, écrit par Patouillet;

Parce qu'en balayant leurs portes, les concierges
Poussent dans le ruisseau ce pamphlet méprisé;
Parce que vous mêlez à la cire des cierges
Votre affreux suif vert-de-grisé;

Parce qu'à vous tout seuls vous faites une espèce
Parce qu'enfin, blanchis dehors et noirs dedans,
Criant mea culpa, battant la grosse caisse,
La boue au cœur, la larme à l'œil, le fifre aux dents,

Pour attirer les sots qui donnent tête-bêche
Dans tous les vils panneaux du mensonge immortel,
Vous avez adossé le tréteau de Bobèche
Aux saintes pierres de l'autel,

Vous vous croyez le droit, trempant dans l’eau bénite
Cette griffe qui sort de votre abject pourpoint,
De dire: Je suis saint, ange, vierge et jésuite,
J’insulte les passants et je ne me bats point!

Ô pieds plats! votre plume au fond de vos masures
Griffonne, va, vient, court, boit l’encre, rend du fiel,
Bave, égratigne et crache, et ses éclaboussures
Font des taches jusques au ciel!

Votre immonde journal est une charretée
De masques déguisés en prédicants camus,
Qui passent en prêchant la cohue ameutée
Et qui parlent argot entre deux oremus.

Vous insultez l’esprit, l’écrivain dans ses veilles,
Et le penseur rêvant sur les libres sommets;
Et quand on va chez vous pour chercher vos oreilles,
Vos oreilles n’y sont jamais.

Après avoir lancé l’affront et le mensonge,
Vous fuyez, vous courez, vous échappez aux yeux.
Chacun a ses instincts, et s’enfonce et se plonge,
Le hibou dans les trous et l’aigle dans les cieux!

Vous, où vous cachez-vous? dans quel hideux repaire?
Ô Dieu! l’ombre où l’on sent tous les crimes passer
S’y fait autour de vous plus noire, et la vipère
S’y glisse et vient vous y baiser.

Là vous pouvez, dragons qui rampez sous les presses,
Vous vautrer dans la fange où vous jettent vos goûts.
Le sort qui dans vos cœurs mit toutes les bassesses
Doit faire en vos taudis passer tous les égouts.

Bateleurs de l’autel, voilà quels sont vos rôles.

Et quand un galant homme à de tels compagnons
Fait cet immense honneur de leur dire: Mes drôles,
Je suis votre homme; dégaînons!

— Un duel! nous! des chrétiens! jamais! — Et ces crapules
Font des signes de croix et jurent par les saints.
Lâches gueux, leur terreur se déguise en scrupules,
Et ces empoisonneurs ont peur d’être assassins.

Bien, écoutez: la trique est là, fraîche coupée.
On vous fera cogner le pavé du menton;
Car sachez-le, coquins, on n’esquive l’épée
Que pour rencontrer le bâton.

Vous conquîtes la Seine et le Rhin et le Tage.
L’esprit humain rogné subit votre compas.
Sur les publicains juifs vous avez l’avantage,
Maudits! Judas est mort, Tartuffe ne meurt pas.

Iago n’est qu’un fat près de votre Basile.
La bible en vos greniers pourrit mangée aux vers.
Le jour où le mensonge aurait besoin d’asile,
Vos cœurs sont là, tout grands ouverts.

Vous insultez le juste abreuvé d’amertumes.
Tous les vices, quittant veste, cape et manteau,
Vont se masquer chez vous et trouvent des costumes.
On entre Lacenaire, on sort Contrafatto.

Les âmes sont pour vous des bourses et des banques.
Quiconque vous accueille a d’affreux repentirs.
Vous vous faites chasser, et par vos saltimbanques
Vous parodiez les martyrs.

L’église du bon Dieu n’est que votre buvette.
Vous offrez l’alliance à tous les inhumains.
On trouvera du sang au fond de la cuvette

Si jamais, par hasard, vous vous lavez les mains.

Vous seriez des bourreaux si vous n’étiez des cuistres.
Pour vous le glaive est saint et le supplice est beau.
Ô monstres! vous chantez dans vos hymnes sinistres
Le bûcher, votre seul flambeau!

Depuis dix-huit cents ans Jésus, le doux pontife,
Veut sortir du tombeau qui lentement se rompt,
Mais vous faites effort, ô valets de Caïphe,
Pour faire retomber la pierre sur son front!

Ô cafards! votre échine appelle l’étrivière.
Le sort juste et railleur fait chasser Loyola
De France par le fouet d’un pape, et de Bavière
Par la cravache de Lola.

Allez, continuez, tournez la manivelle
De votre impur journal, vils grimauds dépravés;
Avec vos ongles noirs grattez votre cervelle
Calomniez, hurlez, mordez, mentez, vivez!

Dieu prédestine aux dents des chevreaux les brins d’herbes
La mer aux coups de vent, les donjons aux boulets,
Aux rayons du soleil les parthénons superbes,
Vos faces aux larges soufflets.

Sus donc! cherchez les trous, les recoins, les cavernes!
Cachez-vous, plats vendeurs d’un fade orviétan,
Pitres dévots, marchands d’infâmes balivernes,
Vierges comme l’eunuque, anges comme Satan!

Ô saints du ciel! est-il, sous l’œil de Dieu qui règne,
Charlatans plus hideux et d’un plus lâche esprit,
Que ceux qui, sans frémir, accrochent leur enseigne
Aux clous saignants de Jésus-Christ!
Septembre 1850.

Quelqu’un

Donc un homme a vécu qui s’appelait Varron,
Un autre Paul-Emile, un autre Cicéron;
Ces hommes ont été grands, puissants, populaires,
Ont marché, précédés des faisceaux consulaires,
Ont été généraux, magistrats, orateurs;
Ces hommes ont parlé devant les sénateurs
Ils ont vu, dans la poudre et le bruit des armées,
Frissonnantes, passer les aigles enflammées;
La foule les suivait et leur battait des mains
Ils sont morts; on a fait à ces fameux romains
Des tombeaux dans le marbre, et d’autres dans l’histoire.
Leurs bustes, aujourd’hui, graves comme la gloire,
Dans l’ombre des palais ouvrant leurs vagues yeux,
Rêvent autour de nous, témoins mystérieux;
Ce qui n’empêche pas, nous, gens des autres âges,
Que, lorsque nous parlons de ces grands personnages,
Nous ne disions: tel jour Varron fut un butor,
Paul-Émile a mal fait, Cicéron eut grand tort,
Et lorsque nous traitons ainsi ces morts illustres,
Tu prétends, toi, maraud, goujat parmi les rustres,
Que je parle de toi qui lasses le dédain,
Sans dire hautement: cet homme est un gredin!
Tu veux que nous prenions des gants et des mitaines
Avec toi, qu’eût chassé Sparte aussi bien qu’Athènes!
Force gens t’ont connu jadis quand tu courais
Les brelans, les enfers, les trous, les cabarets,
Quand on voyait, le soir, tantôt dans l’ombre obscure,
Tantôt devant la porte entrouverte et peu sûre
D’un antre d’où sortait une rouge clarté,
Ton chef branlant couvert d’un feutre cahoté.
Tu t’es fait broder d’or par l’empereur bohème.
Ta vie est une farce et se guinde en poëme.
Et que m’importe à moi, penseur, juge, ouvrier,
Que décembre, étranglant dans ses poings février,

T’installe en un palais, toi qui souillais un bouge!
Allez aux tapis francs de Vanvre et de Montrouge,
Courez aux galetas, aux caves, aux taudis,
Les échos vous diront partout ce que je dis
 — Ce drôle était voleur avant d’être ministre! -
Ah! tu veux qu’on t’épargne, imbécile sinistre!
Ah! te voilà content, satisfait, souriant!
Sois tranquille. J’irai par la ville criant:
Citoyens! voyez-vous ce jésuite aux yeux jaunes?
Jadis, c’était Brutus. Il haïssait les trônes,
Il les aime aujourd’hui. Tous métiers lui sont bons
Il est pour le succès. Donc, à bas les Bourbons,
Mais vive l’empereur! à bas tribune et charte!
II déteste Chambord, mais il sert Bonaparte.
On l’a fait sénateur, ce qui le rend fougueux.
Si les choses étaient à leur place, ce gueux
Qui n’a pas, nous dit-il en déclamant son rôle,
Les fleurs de lys au cœur, les aurait sur l’épaule!
10 décembre. Jersey.

Écrit le 17 juillet 1851, en descendant de la tribune

En descendant de la tribune

Ces hommes qui mourront, foule abjecte et grossière,
Sont de la boue avant d’être de la poussière.
Oui, certe, ils passeront et mourront. Aujourd’hui
Leur vue à l’honnête homme inspire un mâle ennui.
Envieux, consumés de rages puériles,
D’autant plus furieux qu’ils se sentent stériles,
Ils mordent les talons de qui marche en avant.
Ils sont humiliés d’aboyer, ne pouvant
Jusqu’au rugissement hausser leur petitesse,
Ils courent, c’est à qui gagnera de vitesse,
La proie est là! — hurlant et jappant à la fois,
Lancés dans le sénat ainsi que dans un bois,
Tous confondus, traitant, magistrat, soldat, prêtre,
Meute autour du lion, chenil aux pieds du maître,
Ils sont à qui les veut, du premier au dernier,
Aujourd’hui Bonaparte et demain Changarnier!
Ils couvrent de leur bave honneur, droit, république,
La charte populaire et l’œuvre évangélique,
Le progrès, ferme espoir des peuples désolés
Ils sont odieux. — Bien. Continuez, allez!
Quand l’austère penseur qui, loin des multitudes,
Rêvait hier encore au fond des solitudes,
Apparaissant soudain dans sa tranquillité,
Vient au milieu de vous dire la vérité,
Défendre les vaincus, rassurer la patrie,
Eclatez! répandez cris, injures, furie,
Ruez-vous sur son nom comme sur un butin!
Vous n’obtiendrez de lui qu’un sourire hautain,
Et pas même un regard! — Car cette âme sereine,
Méprisant votre estime, estime votre haine.

Paris. 1851.

Un autre

Ce Zoïle cagot naquit d’une Javotte.
Le diable, — ce jour-là Dieu permit qu’il créât, -
D’un peu de Ravaillac et d’un de Nonotte
Composa ce gredin béat.

Tout jeune, il contemplait, sans gîte et sans valise,
Les sous-diacres coiffés d’un feutre en lampion
Vidocq le rencontra priant dans une église,
Et, l’ayant vu loucher, en fit un espion.

Alors ce va-nu-pieds songea dans sa mansarde,
Et se voyant sans cœur, sans style, sans esprit,
Imagina de mettre une feuille poissarde
Au service de Jésus-Christ.

Armé d’un goupillon, il entra dans la lice
Contre les jacobins, le siècle et le péché.
Il se donna le luxe, étant de la police,
D’être jésuite et saint par-dessus le marché.

Pour mille francs par mois livrant l’eucharistie,
Plus vil que les voleurs et que les assassins,
Il fut riche. Il portait un flair de sacristie
Dans le bouge des argousins.

Il prospère! — Il insulte, il prêche, il fait la roue;
S’il n’était pas saint homme, il eût été sapeur;
Comme s’il s’y lavait, il piaffe en pleine boue,
Et, voyant qu’on se sauve, il dit: comme ils ont peur!

Regardez, le voilà! — Son journal frénétique
Plaît aux dévots et semble écrit par des bandits.
Il fait des fausses clefs dans l’arrière-boutique
Pour la porte du paradis.

Des miracles du jour il colle les affiches.
Il rédige l’absurde en articles de foi.
Pharisien hideux, il trinque avec les riches
Et dit au pauvre: ami, viens jeûner avec moi.

Il ripaille à huis clos, en publie il sermonne,
Chante landerirette après alleluia,
Dit un pater, et prend le menton de Simone… -
Que j’en ai vu, de ces saints-là!

Qui vous expectoraient des psaumes après boire,
Vendaient, d’un air contrit, leur pieux bric-à-brac,
Et qui passaient, selon qu’ils changeaient d’auditoire,
Des strophes de Piron aux quatrains de Pibrac!

C’est ainsi qu’outrageant gloires, vertus, génies,
Charmant par tant d’horreurs quelques niais fougueux,
Il vit tranquillement dans les ignominies,
Simple jésuite et triple gueux.
Septembre 1850.

Déjà nommé

Malgré moi je reviens, et mes vers s'y résignent,
À cet homme qui fut si misérable, hélas!
Et dont Mathieu Molé, chez les morts qui s'indignent,
Parle à Boissy d'Anglas.

Ô loi sainte! Justice! où tout pouvoir s'étaie,
Gardienne de tout droit et de tout ordre humain!
Cet homme qui, vingt ans, pour recevoir sa paie,
T'avait tendu la main,

Quand il te vit sanglante et livrée à l'infâme,
Levant tes bras, meurtrie aux talons des soldats,
Tourna la tête et dit: Qu'est-ce que cette femme
Je ne la connais pas!

Les vieux partis avaient mis au fauteuil ce juste!
Ayant besoin d'un homme, on prit un mannequin.
Il eût fallu Caton sur cette chaise auguste
On y jucha Pasquin.

Opprobre! il dégradait à plaisir l'assemblée
Souple, insolent, semblable aux valets familiers,
Ses gros lazzis marchaient sur l'éloquence allée
Avec leurs gros souliers.

Quand on ne croit à rien on est prêt à tout faire.
Il eût reçu Cromwell ou Monk dans Temple-Bar.
Suprême abjection! riant avec Voltaire,
Votant pour Escobar!

Ne sachant que lécher à droite et mordre à gauche,
Aidant, à son insu, le crime; vil pantin,
Il entrouvrait la porte aux sbires en débaucbe
Qui vinrent un matin.

Si l’on avait voulu, pour sauver du déluge,
Certes, son traitement, sa place, son trésor,
Et sa loque d’hermine et son bonnet de juge
Au triple galon d’or,

Il eût été complice, il eût rempli sa tâche
Mais les chefs sur son nom passèrent le charbon
Ils n’ont pas daigné faire un traître avec ce lâche
Ils ont dit: à quoi bon?

Sous ce règne où l’on vend de la fange au pied cube,
Du moins cet homme a-t-il à jamais disparu,
Rustre exploiteur des rois, courtisan du Danube,
Hideux flatteur bourru!

Il s’offrit aux brigands après la loi tuée;
Et pour qu’il lâchât prise, aux yeux de tout Paris,
Il fallut qu’on lui dît: Vieille prostituée,
Vois donc tes cheveux gris!

Aujourd’hui méprisé, même de cette clique,
On voit pendre la honte à son nom infamant,
Et le dernier lambeau de la pudeur publique
À son dernier serment.

Si par hasard, la nuit, dans les carrefours mornes,
Fouillant du croc l’ordure où dort plus d’un secret,
Un chiffonnier trouvait cette âme au coin des bornes,
Il la dédaignerait!
Jersey. 25 décembre 1852.

Ceux qui vivent, ce sont ceux qui luttent; ce sont …

Ceux qui vivent, ce sont ceux qui luttent; ce sont
Ceux dont un dessein ferme emplit l’âme et le front,
Ceux qui d’un haut destin gravissent l’âpre cime,
Ceux qui marchent pensifs, épris d’un but sublime,
Ayant devant les yeux sans cesse, nuit et jour,
Ou quelque saint labeur ou quelque grand amour.
C’est le prophète saint prosterné devant l’arche,
C’est le travailleur, pâtre, ouvrier, patriarche,
Ceux dont le cœur est bon, ceux dont les jours sont pleins.
Ceux-là vivent, Seigneur! les autres, je les plains.
Car de son vague ennui le néant les enivre,
Car le plus lourd fardeau, c’est d’exister sans vivre.
Inutiles, épars, ils traînent ici-bas
Le sombre accablement d’être en ne pensant pas.
Ils s’appellent vulgus, plebs, la tourbe, la foule.
Ils sont ce qui murmure, applaudit, siffle, coule,
Bat des mains, foule aux pieds, bâille, dit oui, dit non,
N’a jamais de figure et n’a jamais de nom;
Troupeau qui va, revient, juge, absout, délibère,
Détruit, prêt à Marat comme prêt à Tibère,
Foule triste, joyeuse, habits dorés, bras nus,
Pêle-mêle, et poussée aux gouffres inconnus.
Ils sont les passants froids, sans but, sans nœud, sans âge;
Le bas du genre humain qui s’écroule en nuage;
Ceux qu’on ne connaît pas, ceux qu’on ne compte pas,
Ceux qui perdent les mots, les volontés, les pas.
L’ombre obscure autour d’eux se prolonge et recule;
Ils n’ont du plein midi qu’un lointain crépuscule,
Car, jetant au hasard les cris, les voix, le bruit,
Ils errent près du bord sinistre de la nuit.

Quoi! ne point aimer! suivre une morne carrière

Sans un songe en avant, sans un deuil en arrière!
Quoi! marcher devant soi sans savoir où l’on va!
Rire de Jupiter sans croire à Jéhova!
Regarder sans respect l’astre, la fleur, la femme!
Toujours vouloir le corps, ne jamais chercher l’âme!
Pour de vains résultats faire de vains efforts!
N’attendre rien d’en haut! ciel! oublier les morts!
Oh non, je ne suis point de ceux-là! grands, prospères,
Fiers, puissants, ou cachés dans d’immondes repaires,
Je les fuis, et je crains leurs sentiers détestés;
Et j’aimerais mieux être, ô fourmis des cités,
Tourbe, foule, hommes faux, cœurs morts, races déchues,
Un arbre dans les bois qu’une âme en vos cohues!
Paris, 31 décembre 1848. Minuit.

Aube

Un immense frisson émeut la plaine obscure.
C’est l’heure où Pythagore, Hésiode, Epicure,
Songeaient; c’est l’heure où, las d’avoir, toute la nuit,
Contemplé l’azur sombre et l’étoile qui luit,
Pleins d’horreur, s’endormaient les pâtres de Chaldée.
Là-bas, la chute d’eau, de mille plis ridée,
Brille, comme dans l’ombre un manteau de satin
Sur l’horizon lugubre apparaît le matin,
Face rose qui rit avec des dents de perles
Le bœuf rêve et mugit, les bouvreuils et les merles
Et les geais querelleurs sifflent, et dans les bois
On entend s’éveiller confusément les voix;
Les moutons hors de l’ombre, à travers les bourrées,
Font bondir au soleil leurs toisons éclairées;
Et la jeune dormeuse, entrouvrant son œil noir,
Fraîche, et ses coudes blancs sortis hors du peignoir,
Cherche de son pied nu sa pantoufle chinoise.

Louange à Dieu! toujours, après la nuit sournoise,
Agitant sur les monts la rose et le genêt,
La nature superbe et tranquille renaît;
L’aube éveille le nid à l’heure accoutumée,
Le chaume dresse au vent sa plume de fumée,
Le rayon, flèche d’or, perce l’âpre forêt;
Et plutôt qu’arrêter le soleil, on ferait
Sensibles à l’honneur et pour le bien fougueuses
Les âmes de Baroche et de Troplong, ces gueuses!
28 avril 1853. Jersey.

“Vicomte de Foucault, lorsque vous empoignâtes

Vicomte de Foucault, lorsque vous empoignâtes
L’éloquent Manuel de vos mains auvergnates,
Comme l’océan bout quand tressaille l’Etna,
Le peuple tout entier s’émut et frissonna;
On vit, sombre lueur, poindre mil huit cent trente
L’antique royauté, fière et récalcitrante,
Chancela sur son trône, et dans ce noir moment
On sentit commencer ce vaste écroulement;
Et ces rois, qu’on punit d’oser toucher un homme,
Etaient grands, et mêlés à notre histoire en somme,
Ils avaient derrière eux des siècles éblouis,
Henri quatre et Coutras, Damiette et saint-Louis.
Aujourd’hui, dans Paris, un prince de la pègre,
Un pied plat, copiant Faustin, singe d’un nègre,
Plus faux qu’Ali pacha, plus cruel que Rosas,
Fourre en prison la loi, met la gloire à Mazas,
Chasse l’honneur, le droit, les probités punies,
Orateurs, généraux, représentants, génies,
Les meilleurs serviteurs du siècle et de l’état,
Et c’est tout! et le peuple, après cet attentat,
Souffleté mille fois sur ces faces illustres,
Va voir de l’Elysée étinceler les lustres,
Ne sent rien sur sa joue, et contemple César!
Lui, souverain, il suit en esclave le char!
Il regarde danser dans le Louvre les maîtres,
Ces immondes faisant vis-à-vis à ces traîtres,
La fraude en grand habit, le meurtre en apparat,
Et le ventre Berger près du ventre Murat!
On dit: — vivons! adieu grandeur, gloire, espérance! -
Comme si, dans ce monde, un peuple appelé France,
Alors qu’il n’est plus libre, était encor vivant!
On boit, on mange, on dort, on achète et l’on vend,
Et l’on vote, en riant des doubles fonds de l’urne
Et pendant ce temps-là, ce gredin taciturne,

Ce chacal à sang froid, ce corse hollandais,
Etale, front d'airain, son crime sous le dais,
Gorge d'or et de vin sa bande scélérate,
S'accoude sur la nappe, et cuvant, noir pirate,
Son guet-apens français, son guet-apens romain,
Mâche son cure-dents taché de sang humain!
20 mai 1853. Jersey.

À quatre prisonniers

(Après leur condamnation)

Mes fils, soyez contents; l'honneur est où vous êtes.
Et vous, mes deux amis, la gloire, ô fiers poëtes,
Couronne votre nom par l'affront désigné;
Offrez aux juges vils, groupe abject et stupide,
Toi, ta douceur intrépide,
Toi, ton sourire indigné.

Dans cette salle, où Dieu voit la laideur des âmes,
Devant ces froids jurés, choisis pour être infâmes,
Ces douze hommes, muets, de leur honte chargés,
Ô justice, j'ai cru, justice auguste et sombre,
Voir autour de toi dans l'ombre
Douze sépulcres rangés.

Ils vous ont condamnés, que l'avenir les juge!
Toi, pour avoir crié: la France est le refuge
Des vaincus, des proscrits! — Je t'approuve, mon fils!
Toi, pour avoir, devant la hache qui s'obstine,
Insulté la guillotine,
Et vengé le crucifix!

Les temps sont durs; c'est bien. Le martyre console.
J'admire, ô Vérité, plus que toute auréole,
Plus que le nimbe ardent des saints en oraison,
Plus que les trônes d'or devant qui tout s'efface,
L'ombre que font sur ta face
Les barreaux d'une prison!

Quoi que le méchant fasse en sa bassesse noire,
L'outrage injuste et vil là-haut se change en gloire.
Quand Jésus commençait sa longue passion,
Le crachat qu'un bourreau lança sur son front blême

Fit au ciel à l’instant même
Une constellation!
Conciergerie, Paris. Novembre 1851.

On loge à la nuit

Aventurier conduit par le louche destin,
Pour y passer la nuit, jusqu’à demain matin,
Entre à l’auberge Louvre avec ta rosse Empire.

Molière te regarde et fait signe à Shakspeare;
L’un te prend pour Scapin, l’autre pour Richard trois.
Entre en jurant, et fais le signe de la croix.
L’antique hôtellerie est toute illuminée.
L’enseigne, par le temps salie et charbonnée,
Sur le vieux fleuve Seine, à deux pas du Pont-Neuf,
Crie et grince au balcon rouillé de Charles neuf;
On y déchiffre encor ces quelques lettres: — Sacre; -
Texte obscur et tronqué, reste du mot Massacre.

Un fourmillement sombre emplit ce noir logis.

Parmi les chants d’ivresse et les refrains mugis,
On rit, on boit, on mange, et le vin sort des outres.
Toute une boucherie est accrochée aux poutres.
Ces êtres triomphants ont fait quelque bon coup.
L’un crie: assommons tout! et l’autre: empochons tout!
L’autre agite une torche aux clartés aveuglantes.
Par places sur les murs on voit des mains sanglantes.
Les mets fument; la braise aux fourneaux empourprés
Flamboie; on voit aller et venir affairés,
Des taches à leurs mains, des taches à leurs chausses,
Les Rianceys marmitons, les Nisards gâte-sauces;
Et, — derrière la table où sont assis Fortoul,
Persil, Piétri, Carlier, Chapuys le capitoul,
Ducos et Magne au meurtre ajoutant leur paraphe,
Forey dont à Bondy l’on change l’orthographe,
Rouher et Radetzky, Haynau près de Drouyn, -
Le porc Sénat fouillant l’ordure du grouin.
Ces gueux ont commis plus de crimes qu’un évêque

N’en bénirait. Explore, analyse, dissèque,
Dans leur âme où de Dieu le germe est étouffé,
Tu ne trouveras rien. — Sus donc, entre coiffé
Comme Napoléon, botté comme Macaire.
Le général Bertrand te précède; tonnerre
De bravos. Cris de joie aux hurlements mêlés.
Les spectres qui gisaient dans l’ombre échevelés
Te regardent entrer et rouvrent leurs yeux mornes
Autour de toi s’émeut l’essaim des maritornes,
À beaucoup de jargon mêlant un peu d’argot;
La marquise Toinon, la duchesse Margot,
Houris au cœur de verre, aux regards d’escarboucles.
Maître, es-tu la régence? on poudrera ses boucles
Es-tu le directoire? on mettra des madras.
Fais, ô bel étranger, tout ce que tu voudras.
Ton nom est million, entre! — Autour de ces belles
Colombes de l’orgie, ayant toutes des ailes,
Folâtrent Suin, Mongis, Turgot et d’Aguesseau,
Et Saint-Arnaud qui vole autrement que l’oiseau.
Aux trois quarts gris déjà, Reibell le trabucaire
Prend Fould pour un curé dont Sibour est vicaire.

Regarde, tout est prêt pour te fêter, bandit.

L’immense cheminée au centre resplendit.
Ton aigle, une chouette, en blasonne le plâtre.
Le bœuf Peuple rôtit tout entier devant l’âtre
La lèchefrite chante en recevant le sang;
À côté sont assis, souriant et causant,
Magnan qui l’a tué, Troplong qui le fait cuire.
On entend cette chair pétiller et bruire,
Et sur son tablier de cuir, joyeux et las,
Le boucher Carrelet fourbit son coutelas.
La marmite budget pend à la crémaillère.
Viens, toi qu’aiment les juifs et que l’église éclaire,
Espoir des fils d’Ignace et des fils d’Abraham,
Qui t’en vas vers Toulon et qui t’en viens de Ham,

Viens, la journée est faite et c’est l’heure de paître.
Prends devant ce bon feu ce bon fauteuil, ô maître.
Tout ici te vénère et te proclame roi;
Viens; rayonne, assieds-toi, chauffe-toi, sèche-toi,
Sois bon prince, ô brigand! ô fils de la créole,
Dépouille ta grandeur, quitte ton auréole;
Ce qu’on appelle ainsi dans ce nid de félons,
C’est la boue et le sang collés à tes talons,
C’est la fange rouillant ton éperon sordide.
Les héros, les penseurs portent, groupe splendide,
Leur immortalité sur leur radieux front;
Toi, tu traînes ta gloire à tes pieds. Entre donc,
Ote ta renommée avec un tire-bottes.
Vois, les grands hommes nains et les gloires nabotes
T’entourent en chantant, ô Tom-Pouce Attila!
Ce bœuf rôtit pour toi; Maupas, ton nègre, est là;
Et, jappant dans sa niche au coin du feu, Baroche
Vient te lécher les pieds tout en tournant la broche.

Pendant que dans l’auberge ils trinquent à grand bruit,
Dehors, par un chemin qui se perd dans la nuit,
Hâtant son lourd cheval dont le pas se rapproche,
Muet, pensif, avec des ordres dans sa poche,
Sous ce ciel noir qui doit redevenir ciel bleu,
Arrive l’avenir, le gendarme de Dieu.
1er février.

LIVRE V: L’AUTORITÉ EST SACRÉE

Le Sacre

Sur l’air de Malbrouck

Dans l’affreux cimetière,
Paris tremble, ô douleur, ô misère!
Dans l’affreux cimetière
Frémit le nénuphar.

Castaing lève sa pierre,
Paris tremble, ô douleur, ô misère!
Castaing lève sa pierre
Dans l’herbe de Clamar,

Et crie et vocifère,
Paris tremble, ô douleur, ô misère!
Et crie et vocifère:
Je veux être césar!

Cartouche en son suaire,
Paris tremble, ô douleur, ô misère!
Cartouche en son suaire
S’écrie ensanglanté

— Je veux aller sur terre,
Paris tremble, ô douleur, ô misère!
Je veux aller sur terre
Pour être majesté!

Mingrat monte à sa chaire,
Paris tremble, ô douleur, ô misère!
Mingrat monte à sa chaire,
Et dit, sonnant le glas:

— Je veux, dans l’ombre où j’erre,
Paris tremble, ô douleur, ô misère!

Je veux, dans l’ombre où j’erre
Avec mon coutelas,

Etre appelé: mon frère,
Paris tremble, ô douleur, ô misère!
Etre appelé: mon frère,
Par le czar Nicolas!

Poulmann, dans l’ossuaire,
Paris tremble, ô douleur, ô misère!
Poulmann dans l’ossuaire
S’éveillant en fureur,

Dit à Mandrin: — Compère,
Paris tremble, ô douleur, ô misère!
Dit à Mandrin: — Compère,
Je veux être empereur!

— Je veux, dit Lacenaire,
Paris tremble, ô douleur, ô misère!
Je veux, dit Lacenaire,
Etre empereur et roi!

Et Soufflard déblatère,
Paris tremble, ô douleur, ô misère!
Et Soufflard déblatère,
Hurlant comme un beffroi:

— Au lieu de cette bière,
Paris tremble, ô douleur, ô misère!
Au lieu de cette bière,
Je veux le Louvre, moi

Ainsi, dans leur poussière,
Paris tremble, ô douleur, ô misère!
Ainsi, dans leur poussière,
Parlent les chenapans.

— Çà, dit Robert Macaire,
Paris tremble, ô douleur, ô misère!
— çà, dit Robert Macaire,
Pourquoi ces cris de paons?

Pourquoi cette colère?
Paris tremble, ô douleur, ô misère!
Pourquoi cette colère?
Ne sommes-nous pas rois?

Regardez, le saint-père,
Paris tremble, ô douleur, ô misère!
Regardez, le saint-père,
Portant sa grande croix,

Nous sacre tous ensemble,
Ô misère, ô douleur, Paris tremble!
Nous sacre tous ensemble
Dans Napoléon trois!
17 janvier.

Chanson

Un jour, Dieu sur sa table
Jouait avec le diable
Du genre humain haï.
Chacun tenait sa carte
L’un jouait Bonaparte,
Et l’autre Mastaï.

Un pauvre abbé bien mince!
Un méchant petit prince,
Polisson hasardeux!
Quel enjeu pitoyable!
Dieu fit tant que le diable
Les gagna tous les deux.

«Prends! cria Dieu le père,
Tu ne sauras qu’en faire!”
Le diable dit! « Erreur!”
Et, ricanant sous cape,
Il fit de l’un un pape,
De l’autre un empereur.
1er mars 1853. Jersey.

Le Manteau impérial

Oh! vous dont le travail est joie,
Vous qui n’avez pas d’autre proie
Que les parfums, souffles du ciel,
Vous qui fuyez quand vient décembre,
    Vous qui dérobez aux fleurs l’ambre
    Pour donner aux hommes le miel,

    Chastes buveuses de rosée,
    Qui, pareilles à l’épousée,
    Visitez le lys du coteau,
    Ô sœurs des corolles vermeilles,
    Filles de la lumière, abeilles,
    Envolez-vous de ce manteau!

    Ruez-vous sur l’homme, guerrières!
    Ô généreuses ouvrières,
    Vous le devoir, vous la vertu,
    Ailes d’or et flèches de flamme,
    Tourbillonnez sur cet infâme!
    Dites-lui: « Pour qui nous prends-tu?

    » Maudit! nous sommes les abeilles!
    Des chalets ombragés de treilles
    Notre ruche orne le fronton;
    Nous volons, dans l’azur écloses,
    Sur la bouche ouverte des roses
    Et sur les lèvres de Platon.

    » Ce qui sort de la fange y rentre.
    Va trouver Tibère en son antre,
    Et Charles neuf sur son balcon.
    Va! sur ta pourpre il faut qu’on mette,
    Non les abeilles de l’Hymette,
    Mais l’essaim noir de Montfaucon!”

Et percez-le toutes ensemble,
Faites honte au peuple qui tremble,
Aveuglez l'immonde trompeur,
Acharnez-vous sur lui, farouches,
Et qu'il soit chassé par les mouches
Puisque les hommes en ont peur!
Jersey. Juin 1853.

Tout s’en va

LA RAISON

Moi, je me sauve.

LE DROIT

Adieu! je m’en vais.

L’HONNEUR

Je m’exile.

ALCESTE

Je vais chez les hurons leur demander asile.

LA CHANSON

J’émigre. Je ne puis souffler mot, s’il vous plaît,
Dire un refrain sans être empoignée ait collet
Par les sergents de ville, affreux drôles livides.
UNE PLUME

Personne n’écrit plus; les encriers sont vides.
On dirait d’un pays mogol, russe ou persan.
Nous n’avons plus ici que faire; allons-nous-en,
Mes soeurs, je quitte l’homme et je retourne aux oies.

LA PITIÉ

Je pars. Vainqueurs sanglants, je vous laisse à vos joies.
Je vole vers Cayenne où j’entends de grands cris.

LA MARSEILLAISE

J’ouvre mon aile, et vais rejoindre les proscrits.

LA POÉSIE

Oh! je pars avec toi, pitié, puisque tu saignes!

L’AIGLE

Quel est ce perroquet qu’on met sur vos enseignes,
Français? de quel égout sort cette bête-là?
Aigle selon Cartouche et selon Loyola,
Il a du sang au bec, français; mais c’est le vôtre.
Je regagne les monts. Je ne vais qu’avec l’autre.
Les rois à ce félon peuvent dire: merci;
Moi, je ne connais pas ce Bonaparte-ci!
Sénateurs! courtisans! je rentre aux solitudes!
Vivez dans le cloaque et dans les turpitudes,
Soyez vils, vautrez-vous sous les cieux rayonnants!

LA FOUDRE

Je remonte avec l’aigle aux nuages tonnants.
L’heure ne peut tarder. Je vais attendre un ordre.
UNE LIME

Puisqu’il n’est plus permis qu’aux vipères de mordre,
Je pars, je vais couper les fers dans les pontons.

LES CHIENS

Nous sommes remplacés par les préfets; partons.

LA CONCORDE

Je m’éloigne. La haine est dans les cœurs sinistres.

LA PENSÉE

On n’échappe aux fripons que pour choir dans les cuistres.
Il semble que tout meure et que de grands ciseaux
Vont jusque dans les cieux couper l’aile aux oiseaux.
Toute clarté s’éteint sous cet homme funeste.
Ô France! je m’enfuis et je pleure.

LE MÉPRIS

Je reste.
Novembre 1852. Jersey.

Ô drapeau de Wagram! ô pays de Voltaire

Ô drapeau de Wagram! ô pays de Voltaire!
Puissance, liberté, vieil honneur militaire,
Principes, droits, pensée, ils font en ce moment
De toute cette gloire un vaste abaissement.
Toute leur confiance est dans leur petitesse.
Ils disent, se sentant d’une chétive espèce:
— Bah! nous ne pesons rien! régnons. — Les nobles cœurs!
Ils ne savent donc pas, ces pauvres nains vainqueurs,
Sautés sur le pavois du fond d’une caverne,
Que lorsque c’est un peuple illustre qu’on gouverne,
Un peuple en qui l’honneur résonne et retentit,
On est d’autant plus lourd que l’on est plus petit!
Est-ce qu’ils vont changer, est-ce là notre compte?
Ce pays de lumière en un pays de honte?
Il est dur de penser, c’est un souci profond,
Qu’ils froissent dans les cœurs, sans savoir ce qu’ils font,
Les instincts les plus fiers et les plus vénérables.
Ah! ces hommes maudits, ces hommes misérables
Éveilleront enfin quelque rébellion
À force de courber la tête du lion!
La bête est étendue à terre, et fatiguée
Elle sommeille, au fond de l’ombre reléguée;
Le mufle fauve et roux ne bouge pas, d’accord;
C’est vrai, la patte énorme et monstrueuse dort;
Mais on l’excite assez pour que la griffe sorte.
J’estime qu’ils ont tort de jouer de la sorte.
Octobre 1849.

“On est Tibère, on est Judas, on est Dracon

On est Tibère, on est Judas, on est Dracon;
Et l’on a Lambessa, n’ayant plus Montfaucon.
On forge pour le peuple une chaîne; on enferme,
On exile, on proscrit le penseur libre et ferme;
Tout succombe. On comprime élans, espoirs, regrets,
La liberté, le droit, l’avenir, le progrès,
Comme faisait Séjan, comme fit Louis onze,
Avec des lois de fer et des juges de bronze.
Puis, — c’est bien, — on s’endort, et le maître joyeux
Dit: l’homme n’a plus d’âme et le ciel n’a plus d’yeux.-
Ô rêve des tyrans! l’heure fuit, le temps marche,
Le grain croît dans la terre et l’eau coule sous l’arche.
Un jour vient où ces lois de silence et de mort
Se rompant tout à coup, comme, sous un effort,
Se rouvrent à grand bruit des portes mal fermées,
Emplissent la cité de torches enflammées.
17 janvier 1853.

Les Grands Corps de l’État

Ces hommes passeront comme un ver sur le sable.
Qu’est-ce que tu ferais de leur sang méprisable?
Le dégoût rend clément.
Retenons la colère âpre, ardente, électrique.
Peuple, si tu m’en crois, tu prendras une trique
Au jour du châtiment.

Ô de Soulouque-deux burlesque cantonade!
Ô ducs de Trou-Bonbon, marquis de Cassonade,
Souteneurs du larron,
Vous dont la poésie, ou sublime ou mordante,
Ne sait que faire, gueux, trop grotesques pour Dante,
Trop sanglants pour Scarron,

Ô jongleurs, noirs par l’âme et par la servitude,
Vous vous imaginez un lendemain trop rude,
Vous êtes trop tremblants,
Vous croyez qu’on en veut, dans l’exil où nous sommes,
À cette peau qui fait qu’on vous prend pour des hommes;
Calmez-vous, nègres blancs!

Cambyse, j’en conviens, eût eu ce cœur de roche
De faire asseoir Troplong sur la peau de Baroche
Au bout d’un temps peu long,
Il eût crié: Cet autre est pire. Qu’on l’étrangle!
Et, j’en conviens encore, eût fait asseoir Delangle
Sur la peau de Troplong.

Cambyse était stupide et digne d’être auguste;
Comme s’il suffisait pour qu’un être soit juste,
Sans vices, sans orgueil,
Pour qu’il ne soit pas traître à la loi, ni transfuge,
Que d’une peau de tigre ou d’une peau de juge
On lui fasse un fauteuil!

Toi, peuple, tu diras: — Ces hommes se ressemblent.
Voyons les mains. — Et tous trembleront comme tremblent
Les loups pris aux filets.
— Bon. Les uns ont du sang, qu’au bagne on les écroue,
À la chaîne! Mais ceux qui n’ont que de la boue,
Tu leur diras: — Valets!

La loi râlait, ayant en vain crié: main-forte!
Vous avez partagé les habits de la morte.
Par César achetés,
De tous nos droits livrés vous avez fait des ventes;
Toutes ses trahisons ont trouvé pour servantes
Toutes vos lâchetés!

Allez, fuyez, vivez! pourvu que, mauvais prêtre,
Mauvais juge, on vous voie en vos trous disparaître,
Rampant sur vos genoux,
Et qu’il ne reste rien, sous les cieux que Dieu dore,
Sous le splendide azur où se lève l’aurore,
Rien de pareil à vous!

Vivez, si vous pouvez! l’opprobre est votre asile.
Vous aurez à jamais, toi, cardinal Basile,
Toi, sénateur Crispin,
De quoi boire et manger dans vos fuites lointaines,
Si le mépris se boit comme l’eau des fontaines,
Si la honte est du pain! -

Peuple, alors nous prendrons au collet tous ces drôles,
Et tu les jetteras dehors par les épaules
À grands coups de bâton;
Et dans le Luxembourg, blancs sous les branches d’arbre,
Vous nous approuverez de vos têtes de marbre,
Ô Lycurgue, ô Caton!

Citoyens! le néant pour ces laquais se rouvre

Qu’importe, ô citoyens! l’abjection les couvre
De son manteau de plomb.
Qu’importe que, le soir, un passant solitaire,
Voyant un récureur d’égouts sortir de terre,
Dise: Tiens! c’est Troplong!

Qu’importe que Rouher sur le Pont-Neuf se carre,
Que Baroche et Delangle, en quittant leur simarre,
Prennent des tabliers,
Qu’ils s’offrent pour trois sous, oubliés quoique infâmes,
Et qu’ils aillent, après avoir sali leurs âmes,
Nettoyer vos souliers!
23 novembre. Jersey.

“Le Progrès calme et fort, et toujours innocent

Le Progrès calme et fort, et toujours innocent,
Ne sait pas ce que c’est que de verser le sang.
Il règne, conquérant désarmé; quoi qu’on fasse,
De la hache et du glaive il détourne sa face,
Car le doigt éternel écrit dans le ciel bleu
Que la terre est à l’homme et que l’homme est à Dieu;
Car la force invincible est la force impalpable. -
Peuple, jamais de sang! — Vertueux ou coupable,
Le sang qu’on a versé monte des mains au front.
Quand sur une mémoire, indélébile affront,
Il jaillit, plus d’espoir; cette fatale goutte
Finit par la couvrir et la dévorer toute;
Il n’est pas dans l’histoire une tache de sang
Qui sur les noirs bourreaux n’aille s’élargissant.
Sachons-le bien, la honte est la meilleure tombe.
Le même homme sur qui son crime enfin retombe
Sort sanglant du sépulcre et fangeux du mépris.
Le bagne dédaigneux sur les coquins flétris
Se ferme, et tout est dit; l’obscur tombeau se rouvre.
Qu’on le fasse profond et muré, qu’on le couvre
D’une dalle de marbre et d’un plafond massif,
Quand vous avez fini, le fantôme pensif
Lève du front la pierre et lentement se dresse.
Mettez sur ce tombeau toute une forteresse,
Tout un mont de granit, impénétrable et sourd,
Le fantôme est plus fort que le granit n’est lourd.
Il soulève ce mont comme une feuille morte.
Le voici, regardez, il sort; il faut qu’il sorte,
Il faut qu’il aille et marche et traîne son linceul
Il surgit devant vous dès que vous êtes seul;
Il dit: c’est moi; tout vent qui souffle vous l’apporte;
La nuit, vous l’entendez qui frappe à votre porte.
Les exterminateurs, avec ou sans le droit,
Je les hais, mais surtout je les plains. On les voit,

À travers l’âpre histoire où le vrai seul demeure,
Pour s’être délivrés de leurs rivaux d’une heure,
D’ennemis innocents, ou même criminels,
Fuir dans l’ombre entourés de spectres éternels.
25 mars 1853. Jersey.

Le Chant de ceux qui s’en vont sur mer

Air breton

Adieu, patrie!
L’onde est en furie.
Adieu, patrie!
Azur!

Adieu, maison, treille au fruit mûr,
Adieu, les fleurs d’or du vieux mur!

Adieu, patrie!
Ciel, forêt, prairie!
Adieu, patrie,
Azur!

Adieu, patrie!
L’onde est en furie.
Adieu, patrie,
Azur!

Adieu, fiancée au front pur,
Le ciel est noir, le vent est dur.

Adieu, patrie!
Lise, Anna, Marie!
Adieu, patrie,
Azur!

Adieu, patrie!
L’onde est cri furie.
Adieu, patrie,
Azur!

Notre œil, que voile un deuil futur,
Va du flot sombre au sort obscur!

Adieu, patrie!
Pour toi mon cœur prie.
Adieu, patrie,
 Azur!
Jersey. 31 juillet 1853.

À un qui veut se détacher

I

Maintenant il se dit: — L’empire est chancelant
La victoire est peu sûre. -
Il cherche à s’en aller, furtif et reculant.
Reste dans la masure!

Tu dis: — Le plafond croule. Ils vont, si l’on me voit,
Empêcher que je sorte. -
N’osant rester ni fuir, tu regardes le toit,
Tu regardes la porte;

Tu mets timidement la main sur le verrou.
Reste en leurs rangs funèbres!
Reste! la loi qu’ils ont enfouie en un trou
Est là dans les ténèbres.

Reste! elle est là, le flanc percé de leur couteau,
Gisante, et sur sa bière
Ils ont mis une dalle. Un pan de ton manteau
Est pris sous cette pierre!

Pendant qu’à l’Elysée en fête et plein d’encens
On chante, on déblatère,
Qu’on oublie et qu’on rit, toi tu pâlis; tu sens
Ce spectre sous la terre!

Tu ne t’en iras pas! quoi! quitter leur maison
Et fuir leur destinée!
Quoi! tu voudrais trahir jusqu’à la trahison,
Elle-même indignée!

Quoi! tu veux renier ce larron au front bas
Qui t’admire et t’honore!

Quoi! Judas pour Jésus, tu veux pour Barabbas
Etre Judas encore!

Quoi! n’as-tu pas tenu l’échelle à ces fripons,
En pleine connivence?
Le sac de ces voleurs ne fut-il pas, réponds,
Cousu par toi d’avance!

Les mensonges, la haine au dard froid et visqueux,
Habitent ce repaire;
Tu t’en vas! de quel droit? étant plus renard qu’eux,
Et plus qu’elle vipère!

II

Quand l’Italie en deuil dressa, du Tibre au Pô,
Son drapeau magnifique,
Quand ce grand peuple, après s’être couché troupeau,
Se leva république,

C’est toi, quand Rome aux fers jeta le cri d’espoir,
Toi qui brisas son aile,
Toi qui fis retomber l’affreux capuchon noir
Sur sa face éternelle!

C’est toi qui restauras Montrouge et Saint-Acheul,
Écoles dégradées,
Où l’on met à l’esprit frémissant un linceul,
Un bâillon aux idées.

C’est toi qui, pour progrès rêvant l’homme animal,
Livras l’enfant victime
Aux jésuites lascifs, sombres amants du mal,
En rut devant le crime!

Ô pauvres chers enfants qu’ont nourris de leur lait
Et qu’ont bercés nos femmes,
Ces blêmes oiseleurs ont pris dans leur filet

Toutes vos douces âmes!

Hélas! ce triste oiseau, sans plumes sur la chair,
Rongé de lèpre immonde,
Qui rampe et qui se meurt dans leur cage de fer,
C'est l'avenir du monde!

Si nous les laissons faire, on aura dans vingt ans,
Sous les cieux que Dieu dore,
Une France aux yeux ronds, aux regards clignotants,
Qui haïra l'aurore!

Ces noirs magiciens, ces jongleurs tortueux,
Dont la fraude est la règle,
Pour en faire sortir le hibou monstrueux,
Ont volé l'oeuf de l'aigle!

III

Donc, comme les baskirs, sur Paris étouffé,
Et comme les croates,
Créateurs du néant, vous avez triomphé
Dans vos haines béates;

Et vous êtes joyeux, vous, constructeurs savants
Des préjugés sans nombre,
Qui, pareils à la nuit, versez sur les vivants
Des urnes pleines d'ombre!

Vous courez saluer le nain Napoléon;
Vous dansez dans l'orgie.
Ce grand siècle est souillé; c'était le Panthéon,
Et c'est la tabagie.

Et vous dites: c'est bien! vous sacrez parmi nous
César, au nom de Rome,
L'assassin qui, la nuit, se met à deux genoux

Sur le ventre d’un homme.

Ah! malheureux! louez César qui fait trembler,
Adorez son étoile;
Vous oubliez le Dieu vivant qui peut rouler
Les cieux comme une toile!

Encore un peu de temps, et ceci tombera;
Dieu vengera sa cause!
Les villes chanteront, le lieu désert sera
Joyeux comme une rose!

Encore un peu de temps, et vous ne serez plus,
Et je viens vous le dire.
Vous êtes les maudits, nous sommes les élus.
Regardez-nous sourire!

Je le sais, moi qui vis au bord du gouffre amer
Sur les rocs centenaires,
Moi qui passe mes jours à contempler la mer
Pleine de sourds tonnerres!

IV

Toi, leur chef, sois leur chef! c’est là ton châtiment.
Sois l’homme des discordes!
Ces fourbes ont saisi le genre humain dormant
Et l’ont lié de cordes.

Ah! tu voulus défaire, épouvantable affront!
Les âmes que Dieu crée?
Eh bien, frissonne et pleure, atteint toi-même au front
Par ton œuvre exécrée!

À mesure que vient l’ignorance, et l’oubli,
Et l’erreur qu’elle amène,
À mesure qu’aux cieux décroît, soleil pâli,

L’intelligence humaine,

Et que son jour s’éteint, laissant l’homme méchant
Et plus froid que les marbres,
Votre honte, ô maudits, grandit comme au couchant
Grandit l’ombre des arbres!

V

Oui, reste leur apôtre! oui, tu l’as mérité.
C’est là ta peine énorme!
Regarde en frémissant dans la postérité!
Ta mémoire difforme.

On voit, louche rhéteur des vieux partis hurlants,
Qui mens et qui t’emportes,
Pendre à tes noirs discours, comme à des clous sanglants,
Toutes les grandes mortes,

La justice, la foi, bel ange souffleté
Par la goule papale,
La vérité, fermant les yeux, la liberté
Echevelée et pâle,

Et ces deux soeurs, hélas! nos mères toutes deux,
Rome, qu’en pleurs je nomme,
Et la France sur qui, raffinement hideux,
Coule le sang de Rome!

Homme fatal! l’histoire en ses enseignements
Te montrera dans l’ombre,
Comme on montre un gibet entouré d’ossements
Sur la colline sombre!
Jersey. 24 janvier 1853.

Pauline Roland

Elle ne connaissait ni l’orgueil ni la haine;
Elle aimait; elle était pauvre, simple et sereine;
Souvent le pain qui manque abrégeait son repas.
Elle avait trois enfants, ce qui n’empêchait pas
Qu’elle ne se sentît mère de ceux qui souffrent.
Les noirs évènements qui dans la nuit s’engouffrent,
Les flux et les reflux, les abîmes béants,
Les nains, sapant sans bruit l’ouvrage des géants,
Et tous nos malfaiteurs inconnus ou célèbres,
Ne l’épouvantaient point; derrière ces ténèbres,
Elle apercevait Dieu construisant l’avenir.
Elle sentait sa foi sans cesse rajeunir
De la liberté sainte elle attisait les flammes
Elle s’inquiétait des enfants et des femmes;
Elle disait, tendant la main aux travailleurs:
La vie est dure ici, mais sera bonne ailleurs.
Avançons! — Elle allait, portant de l’un à l’autre
L’espérance; c’était une espèce d’apôtre
Que Dieu, sur cette terre où nous gémissons tous,
Avait fait mère et femme afin qu’il fût plus doux;
L’esprit le plus farouche aimait sa voix sincère.
Tendre, elle visitait, sous leur toit de misère,
Tous ceux que la famine ou la douleur abat,
Les malades pensifs, gisant sur leur grabat,
La mansarde où languit l’indigence morose;
Quand, par hasard moins pauvre, elle avait quelque chose,
Elle le partageait à tous comme une sœur;
Quand elle n’avait rien, elle donnait son cœur.
Calme et grande, elle aimait comme le soleil brille.
Le genre humain pour elle était une famille
Comme ses trois enfants étaient l’humanité.
Elle criait: progrès! amour! fraternité!
Elle ouvrait aux souffrants des horizons sublimes.

Quand Pauline Roland eut commis tous ces crimes,
Le sauveur de l’église et de l’ordre la prit
Et la mit en prison. Tranquille, elle sourit,
Car l’éponge de fiel plaît à ces lèvres pures.
Cinq mois, elle subit le contact des souillures,
L’oubli, le rire affreux du vice, les bourreaux,
Et le pain noir qu’on jette à travers les barreaux,
Edifiant la geôle au mal habituée,
Enseignant la voleuse et la prostituée.
Ces cinq mois écoulés, un soldat, un bandit,
Dont le nom souillerait ces vers, vint et lui dit
— Soumettez-vous sur l’heure au règne qui commence,
Reniez votre foi; sinon, pas de clémence,
Lambessa! choisissez. — Elle dit: Lambessa.
Le lendemain la grille en frémissant grinça,
Et l’on vit arriver un fourgon cellulaire.
— Ah! voici Lambessa, dit-elle sans colère.
Elles étaient plusieurs qui souffraient pour le droit
Dans la même prison. Le fourgon trop étroit
Ne put les recevoir dans ses cloisons infâmes
Et l’on fit traverser tout Paris à ces femmes
Bras dessus bras dessous avec les argousins.
Ainsi que des voleurs et que des assassins,
Les sbires les frappaient de paroles bourrues.
S’il arrivait parfois que les passants des rues,
Surpris de voir mener ces femmes en troupeau,
S’approchaient et mettaient la main à leur chapeau,
L’argousin leur jetait des sourires obliques,
Et les passants fuyaient, disant: filles publiques!
Et Pauline Roland disait: courage, sœurs!
L’océan au bruit rauque, aux sombres épaisseurs,
Les emporta. Durant la rude traversée,
L’horizon était noir, la bise était glacée,
Sans l’ami qui soutient, sans la voix qui répond,
Elles tremblaient. La nuit, il pleuvait sur le pont
Pas de lit pour dormir, pas d’abri sous l’orage,

Et Pauline Roland criait: mes soeurs, courage!
Et les durs matelots pleuraient en les voyant.
On atteignit l'Afrique au rivage effrayant,
Les sables, les déserts qu'un ciel d'airain calcine,
Les rocs sans une source et sans une racine;
L'Afrique, lieu d'horreur pour les plus résolus,
Terre au visage étrange où l'on ne se sent plus
Regardé par les yeux de la douce patrie.
Et Pauline Roland, souriante et meurtrie,
Dit aux femmes en pleurs: courage, c'est ici.
Et quand elle était seule, elle pleurait aussi.
Ses trois enfants! loin d'elle! Oh! quelle angoisse amère!
Un jour, un des geôliers dit à la pauvre mère
Dans la casbah de Bône aux cachots étouffants:
Voulez-vous être libre et revoir vos enfants?
Demandez grâce au prince. — Et cette femme forte
Dit: — J'irai les revoir lorsque je serai morte.
Alors sur la martyre, humble cœur indompté,
On épuisa la haine et la férocité.
Bagnes d'Afrique! enfers qu'a sondés Ribeyrolles!
Oh! la pitié sanglote et manque de paroles.
Une femme, une mère, un esprit! ce fut là
Que malade, accablée et seule, on l'exila.
Le lit de camp, le froid et le chaud, la famine,
Le jour l'affreux soleil et la nuit la vermine,
Les verrous, le travail sans repos, les affronts,
Rien ne plia son âme; elle disait: — Souffrons.
Souffrons comme Jésus, souffrons comme Socrate. -
Captive, on la traîna sur cette terre ingrate;
Et, lasse, et quoiqu'un ciel torride l'écrasât,
On la faisait marcher à pied comme un forçat.
La fièvre la rongeait; sombre, pâle, amaigrie,
Le soir elle tombait sur la paille pourrie,
Et de la France aux fers murmurait le doux nom.
On jeta cette femme au fond d'un cabanon.
Le mal brisait sa vie et grandissait son âme.
Grave, elle répétait: « Il est bon qu'une femme,

Dans cette servitude et cette lâcheté,
Meure pour la justice et pour la liberté.”
Voyant qu’elle râlait, sachant qu’ils rendront compte,
Les bourreaux eurent peur, ne pouvant avoir honte
Et l’homme de décembre abrégea son exil.
«Puisque c’est pour mourir, qu’elle rentre!” dit-il.
Elle ne savait plus ce que l’on faisait d’elle.
L’agonie à Lyon la saisit. Sa prunelle,
Comme la nuit se fait quand baisse le flambeau,
Devint obscure et vague, et l’ombre du tombeau
Se leva lentement sur son visage blême.
Son fils, pour recueillir à cette heure suprême
Du moins son dernier souffle et son dernier regard,
Accourut. Pauvre mère! Il arriva trop tard.
Elle était morte; morte à force de souffrance,
Morte sans avoir su qu’elle voyait la France
Et le doux ciel natal aux rayons réchauffants
Morte dans le délire en criant: mes enfants!
On n’a pas même osé pleurer à ses obsèques;
Elle dort sous la terre. — Et maintenant, évêques,
Debout, la mitre au front, dans l’ombre du saint lieu,
Crachez vos Te Deum à la face de Dieu!
12 mars 1853. Jersey.

L’Expiation

I

Il neigeait. On était vaincu par sa conquête.
Pour la première fois l’aigle baissait la tête.
Sombres jours! l’empereur revenait lentement,
Laissant derrière lui brûler Moscou fumant.
Il neigeait. L’âpre hiver fondait en avalanche.
Après la plaine blanche une autre plaine blanche.
On ne connaissait plus les chefs ni le drapeau.
Hier la grande armée, et maintenant troupeau.
On ne distinguait plus les ailes ni le centre.
Il neigeait. Les blessés s’abritaient dans le ventre
Des chevaux morts; au seuil des bivouacs désolés
On voyait des clairons à leur poste gelés,
Restés debout, en selle et muets, blancs de givre,
Collant leur bouche en pierre aux trompettes de cuivre.
Boulets, mitraille, obus, mêlés aux flocons blancs,
Pleuvaient; les grenadiers, surpris d’être tremblants,
Marchaient pensifs, la glace à leur moustache grise.
Il neigeait, il neigeait toujours! La froide bise
Sifflait; sur le verglas, dans des lieux inconnus,
On n’avait pas de pain et l’on allait pieds nus.
Ce n’étaient plus des cœurs vivants, des gens de guerre
C’était un rêve errant dans la brume, un mystère,
Une procession d’ombres sous le ciel noir.
La solitude vaste, épouvantable à voir,
Partout apparaissait, muette vengeresse.
Le ciel faisait sans bruit avec la neige épaisse
Pour cette immense armée un immense linceul;
Et chacun se sentant mourir, on était seul.
— Sortira-t-on jamais de ce funeste empire?
Deux ennemis! le czar, le nord. Le nord est pire.
On jetait les canons pour brûler les affûts.
Qui se couchait, mourait. Groupe morne et confus,
Ils fuyaient; le désert dévorait le cortège.

On pouvait, à des plis qui soulevaient la neige,
Voir que des régiments s’étaient endormis là.
Ô chutes d’Annibal! lendemains d’Attila!
Fuyards, blessés, mourants, caissons, brancards, civières,
On s’écrasait aux ponts pour passer les rivières,
On s’endormait dix mille, on se réveillait cent.
Ney, que suivait naguère une armée, à présent
S’évadait, disputant sa montre à trois cosaques.
Toutes les nuits, qui vive! alerte! assauts! attaques!
Ces fantômes prenaient leur fusil, et sur eux
Ils voyaient se ruer, effrayants, ténébreux,
Avec des cris pareils aux voix des vautours chauves,
D’horribles escadrons, tourbillons d’hommes fauves.
Toute une armée ainsi dans la nuit se perdait.
L’empereur était là, debout, qui regardait.
Il était comme un arbre en proie à la cognée.
Sur ce géant, grandeur jusqu’alors épargnée,
Le malheur, bûcheron sinistre, était monté;
Et lui, chêne vivant, par la hache insulté,
Tressaillant sous le spectre aux lugubres revanches,
Il regardait tomber autour de lui ses branches.
Chefs, soldats, tous mouraient. Chacun avait son tour.
Tandis qu’environnant sa tente avec amour,
Voyant son ombre aller et venir sur la toile,
Ceux qui restaient, croyant toujours à son étoile,
Accusaient le destin de lèse-majesté,
Lui se sentit soudain dans l’âme épouvanté.
Stupéfait du désastre et ne sachant que croire,
L’empereur se tourna vers Dieu; l’homme de gloire
Trembla; Napoléon comprit qu’il expiait
Quelque chose peut-être, et, livide, inquiet,
Devant ses légions sur la neige semées:
« Est-ce le châtiment, dit-il, Dieu des armées?”
Alors il s’entendit appeler par son nom
Et quelqu’un qui parlait dans l’ombre lui dit: Non.

II

Waterloo! Waterloo! Waterloo! morne plaine!
Comme une onde qui bout dans une urne trop pleine,
Dans ton cirque de bois, de coteaux, de vallons,
La pâle mort mêlait les sombres bataillons.
D’un côté c’est l’Europe et de l’autre la France.
Choc sanglant! des héros Dieu trompait l’espérance
Tu désertais, victoire, et le sort était las.
Ô Waterloo! je pleure et je m’arrête, hélas!
Car ces derniers soldats de la dernière guerre
Furent grands; ils avaient vaincu toute la terre,
Chassé vingt rois, passé les Alpes et le Rhin,
Et leur âme chantait dans les clairons d’airain!

Le soir tombait; la lutte était ardente et noire.
Il avait l’offensive et presque la victoire;
Il tenait Wellington acculé sur un bois.
Sa lunette à la main, il observait parfois
Le centre du combat, point obscur où tressaille
La mêlée, effroyable et vivante broussaille,
Et parfois l’horizon, sombre comme la mer.
Soudain, joyeux, il dit: Grouchy! — C’était Blücher.
L’espoir changea de camp, le combat changea d’âme,
La mêlée en hurlant grandit comme une flamme.
La batterie anglaise écrasa nos carrés.
La plaine, où frissonnaient les drapeaux déchirés,

Ne fut plus, dans les cris des mourants qu’on égorge,
Qu’un gouffre flamboyant, rouge comme une forge;
Gouffre où les régiments comme des pans de murs
Tombaient, où se couchaient comme des épis mûrs
Les hauts tambours-majors aux panaches énormes,
Où l’on entrevoyait des blessures difformes!
Carnage affreux! moment fatal! L’homme inquiet
Sentit que la bataille entre ses mains pliait.
Derrière un mamelon la garde était massée.
La garde, espoir suprême et suprême pensée!

« Allons! faites donner la garde!” cria-t-il.
Et, lanciers, grenadiers aux guêtres de coutil,
Dragons que Rome eût pris pour des légionnaires,
Cuirassiers, canonniers qui traînaient des tonnerres,
Portant le noir colback ou le casque poli,
Tous, ceux de Friedland et ceux de Rivoli,
Comprenant qu’ils allaient mourir dans cette fête,
Saluèrent leur dieu, debout dans la tempête.
Leur bouche, d’un seul cri, dit: vive l’empereur!
Puis, à pas lents, musique en tête, sans fureur,
Tranquille, souriant à la mitraille anglaise,
La garde impériale entra dans la fournaise.
Hélas! Napoléon, sur sa garde penché,
Regardait, et, sitôt qu’ils avaient débouché
Sous les sombres canons crachant des jets de soufre,
Voyait, l’un après l’autre, en cet horrible gouffre,
Fondre ces régiments de granit et d’acier
Comme fond une cire au souffle d’un brasier.
Ils allaient, l’arme au bras, front haut, graves, stoïques.
Pas un ne recula. Dormez, morts héroïques!
Le reste de l’armée hésitait sur leurs corps
Et regardait mourir la garde. — C’est alors
Qu’élevant tout à coup sa voix désespérée,
La Déroute, géante à la face effarée
Qui, pâle, épouvantant les plus fiers bataillons,
Changeant subitement les drapeaux en haillons,
À de certains moments, spectre fait de fumées,
Se lève grandissante au milieu des armées,
La Déroute apparut au soldat qui s’émeut,
Et, se tordant les bras, cria: Sauve qui peut!
Sauve qui peut! — affront! horreur! — toutes les bouches
Criaient; à travers champs, fous, éperdus, farouches,
Comme si quelque souffle avait passé sur eux,
Parmi les lourds caissons et les fourgons poudreux,
Roulant dans les fossés, se cachant dans les seigles,
Jetant shakos, manteaux, fusils, jetant les aigles,
Sous les sabres prussiens, ces vétérans, ô deuil!

Tremblaient, hurlaient, pleuraient, couraient! — En un clin d'œil,
Comme s'envole au vent une paille enflammée,
S'évanouit ce bruit qui fut la grande armée,
Et cette plaine, hélas, où l'on rêve aujourd'hui,
Vit fuir ceux devant qui l'univers avait fui!
Quarante ans sont passés, et ce coin de la terre,
Waterloo, ce plateau funèbre et solitaire,
Ce champ sinistre où Dieu mêla tant de néants,
Tremble encor d'avoir vu la fuite des géants!

Napoléon les vit s'écouler comme un fleuve;
Hommes, chevaux, tambours, drapeaux; — et dans l'épreuve
Sentant confusément revenir son remords,
Levant les mains au ciel, il dit: « Mes soldats morts,
Moi vaincu! mon empire est brisé comme verre.
Est-ce le châtiment cette fois, Dieu sévère?"
Alors parmi les cris, les rumeurs, le canon,
Il entendit la voix qui lui répondait: Non!

III

Il croula. Dieu changea la chaîne de l'Europe.
Il est, au fond des mers que la brume enveloppe,
Un roc hideux, débris des antiques volcans.
Le Destin prit des clous, un marteau, des carcans,
Saisit, pâle et vivant, ce voleur du tonnerre,
Et, joyeux, s'en alla sur le pic centenaire
Le clouer, excitant par son rire moqueur
Le vautour Angleterre à lui ronger le cœur.

Évanouissement d'une splendeur immense!
Du soleil qui se lève à la nuit qui commence,
Toujours l'isolement, l'abandon, la prison,
Un soldat rouge au seuil, la mer à l'horizon,
Des rochers nus, des bois affreux, l'ennui, l'espace,
Des voiles s'enfuyant comme l'espoir qui passe,
Toujours le bruit des flots, toujours le bruit des vents!

Adieu, tente de pourpre aux panaches mouvants,
Adieu, le cheval blanc que César éperonne!
Plus de tambours battant aux champs, plus de couronne,
Plus de rois prosternés dans l’ombre avec terreur,
Plus de manteau traînant sur eux, plus d’empereur!
Napoléon était retombé Bonaparte.
Comme un romain blessé par la flèche du Parthe,
Saignant, morne, il songeait à Moscou qui brûla.
Un caporal anglais lui disait: halte-là!
Son fils aux mains des rois! sa femme aux bras d’un autre!
Plus vil que le pourceau qui dans l’égout se vautre,
Son sénat qui l’avait adoré l’insultait.
Au bord des mers, à l’heure où la bise se tait,
Sur les escarpements croulant en noirs décombres,
Il marchait, seul, rêveur, captif des vagues sombres.
Sur les monts, sur les flots, sur les cieux, triste et fier,
L’œil encore ébloui des batailles d’hier,
Il laissait sa pensée errer à l’aventure.
Grandeur, gloire, ô néant! calme de la nature!
Les aigles qui passaient ne le connaissaient pas.
Les rois, ses guichetiers, avaient pris un compas
Et l’avaient enfermé dans un cercle inflexible.
Il expirait. La mort de plus en plus visible
Se levait dans sa nuit et croissait à ses yeux
Comme le froid matin d’un jour mystérieux.
Son âme palpitait, déjà presque échappée.
Un jour enfin il mit sur son lit son épée,
Et se coucha près d’elle, et dit: «C’est aujourd’hui»
On jeta le manteau de Marengo sur lui.
Ses batailles du Nil, du Danube, du Tibre,
Se penchaient sur son front, il dit: « Me voici libre!
Je suis vainqueur! je vois mes aigles accourir!”
Et, comme il retournait sa tête pour mourir,
Il aperçut, un pied dans la maison déserte,
Hudson Lowe guettant par la porte entrouverte.
Alors, géant broyé sous le talon des rois,
Il cria: « La mesure est comble cette fois!

Seigneur! c’est maintenant fini! Dieu que j’implore,
Vous m’avez châtié!” La voix dit: Pas encore!

IV

Ô noirs événements, vous fuyez dans la nuit!
L’empereur mort tomba sur l’empire détruit.
Napoléon alla s’endormir sous le saule.
Et les peuples alors, de l’un à l’autre pôle,
Oubliant le tyran, s’éprirent du héros.
Les poëtes, marquant au front les rois bourreaux,
Consolèrent, pensifs, cette gloire abattue.
À la colonne veuve on rendit sa statue.
Quand on levait les yeux, on le voyait debout
Au-dessus de Paris, serein, dominant tout,
Seul, le jour dans l’azur et la nuit dans les astres.
Panthéons, on grava son nom sur vos pilastres!
On ne regarda plus qu’un seul côté des temps,
On ne se souvint plus que des jours éclatants
Cet homme étrange avait comme enivré l’histoire
La justice à l’œil froid disparut sous sa gloire;
On ne vit plus qu’Eylau, Ulm, Arcole, Austerlitz;
Comme dans les tombeaux des romains abolis,
On se mit à fouiller dans ces grandes années
Et vous applaudissiez, nations inclinées,
Chaque fois qu’on tirait de ce sol souverain
Ou le consul de marbre ou l’empereur d’airain!

V

Le nom grandit quand l’homme tombe;
Jamais rien de tel n’avait lui.
Calme, il écoutait dans sa tombe
La terre qui parlait de lui.

La terre disait: « La victoire
A suivi cet homme en tous lieux.

Jamais tu n’as vu, sombre histoire,
Un passant plus prodigieux!

“ Gloire au maître qui dort sous l’herbe!
Gloire à ce grand audacieux!
Nous l’avons vu gravir, superbe,
Les premiers échelons des cieux!

“ Il envoyait, âme acharnée,
Prenant Moscou, prenant Madrid,
Lutter contre la destinée
Tous les rêves de son esprit.

“ À chaque instant, rentrant en lice,
Cet homme aux gigantesques pas
Proposait quelque grand caprice
À Dieu, qui n’y consentait pas.

“ Il n’était presque plus un homme.
Il disait, grave et rayonnant,
En regardant fixement Rome
C’est moi qui règne maintenant!

“ Il voulait, héros et symbole,
Pontife et roi, phare et volcan,
Faire du Louvre un Capitole
Et de Saint-Cloud un Vatican.

“ César, il eût dit à Pompée:
«Sois fier d’être mon lieutenant!»
On voyait luire son épée
Au fond d’un nuage tonnant.

“ Il voulait, dans les frénésies
De ses vastes ambitions,
Faire devant ses fantaisies
Agenouiller les nations,

“ Ainsi qu’en une urne profonde,
Mêler races, langues, esprits,
Répandre Paris sur le monde,
Enfermer le monde en Paris!

“ Comme Cyrus dans Babylone,
Il voulait sous sa large main
Ne faire du monde qu’un trône
Et qu’un peuple du genre humain,

“ Et bâtir, malgré les huées,
Un tel empire sous son nom,
Que Jéhovah dans les nuées
Fût jaloux de Napoléon!”

VI

Enfin, mort triomphant, il vit sa délivrance,
Et l’océan rendit son cercueil à la France.
L’homme, depuis douze ans, sous le dôme doré
Reposait, par l’exil et par la mort sacré.
En paix! — Quand on passait près du monument sombre,
On se le figurait, couronne au front, dans l’ombre,
Dans son manteau semé d’abeilles d’or, muet,
Couché sous cette voûte où rien ne remuait,
Lui, l’homme qui trouvait la terre trop étroite,
Le sceptre en sa main gauche et l’épée en sa droite,
À ses pieds son grand aigle ouvrant l’œil à demi,
Et l’on disait: C’est là qu’est César endormi!
Laissant dans la clarté marcher l’immense ville,
Il dormait; il dormait confiant et tranquille.

VII

Une nuit, — c’est toujours la nuit dans le tombeau, —

Il s’éveilla. Luisant comme un hideux flambeau,
D’étranges visions emplissaient sa paupière;
Des rires éclataient sous son plafond de pierre;
Livide, il se dressa; la vision grandit;
Ô terreur! une voix qu’il reconnut, lui dit:

— Réveille-toi. Moscou, Waterloo, Sainte-Hélène,
L’exil, les rois geôliers, l’Angleterre hautaine
Sur ton lit accoudée à ton dernier moment,
Sire, cela n’est rien. Voici le châtiment:

La voix alors devint âpre, amère, stridente,
Comme le noir sarcasme et l’ironie ardente;
C’était le rire amer mordant un demi-dieu.

— Sire! on t’a retiré de ton Panthéon bleu!
Sire! on t’a descendu de ta haute colonne!
Regarde. Des brigands, dont l’essaim tourbillonne,
D’affreux bohémiens, des vainqueurs de charnier
Te tiennent dans leurs mains et t’ont fait prisonnier.
À ton orteil d’airain leur patte infâme touche.
Ils t’ont pris. Tu mourus, comme un astre se couche,
Napoléon le Grand, empereur; tu renais
Bonaparte, écuyer du cirque Beauharnais.
Te voilà dans leurs rangs, on t’a, l’on te harnache.
Ils t’appellent tout haut grand homme, entre eux, ganache.
Ils traînent, sur Paris qui les voit s’étaler,
Des sabres qu’au besoin ils sauraient avaler.
Aux passants attroupés devant leur habitacle,
Ils disent, entends-les: — Empire à grand spectacle!
Le pape est engagé dans la troupe; c’est bien,
Nous avons mieux; le czar en est mais ce n’est rien,
Le czar n’est qu’un sergent, le pape n’est qu’un bonze
Nous avons avec nous le bonhomme de bronze!
Nous sommes les neveux du grand Napoléon! —
Et Fould, Magnan, Rouher, Parieu caméléon,
Font rage. Ils vont montrant un sénat d’automates.

Ils ont pris de la paille au fond des casemates
Pour empailler ton aigle, ô vainqueur d’Iéna!
Il est là, mort, gisant, lui qui si haut plana,
Et du champ de bataille il tombe au champ de foire.
Sire, de ton vieux trône ils recousent la moire.
Ayant dévalisé la France au coin d’un bois,
Ils ont à leurs haillons du sang, comme tu vois,
Et dans son bénitier Sibour lave leur linge.
Toi, lion, tu les suis; leur maître, c’est le singe.
Ton nom leur sert de lit, Napoléon premier.
On voit sur Austerlitz un peu de leur fumier.
Ta gloire est un gros vin dont leur honte se grise.
Cartouche essaie et met ta redingote grise
On quête des liards dans le petit chapeau
Pour tapis sur la table ils ont mis ton drapeau.
À cette table immonde où le grec devient riche,
Avec le paysan on boit, on joue, on triche;
Tu te mêles, compère, à ce tripot hardi,
Et ta main qui tenait l’étendard de Lodi,
Cette main qui portait la foudre, ô Bonaparte,
Aide à piper les dés et fait sauter la carte.
Ils te forcent à boire avec eux, et Carlier
Pousse amicalement d’un coude familier
Votre majesté, sire, et Piétri dans son antre
Vous tutoie, et Maupas vous tape sur le ventre.
Faussaires, meurtriers, escrocs, forbans, voleurs,
Ils savent qu’ils auront, comme toi, des malheurs
Leur soif en attendant vide la coupe pleine
À ta santé; Poissy trinque avec Sainte-Hélène.
Regarde! bals, sabbats, fêtes matin et soir.
La foule au bruit qu’ils font se culbute pour voir;
Debout sur le tréteau qu’assiège une cohue
Qui rit, bâille, applaudit, tempête, siffle, hue,
Entouré de pasquins agitant leur grelot,
— Commencer par Homère et finir par Callot!
Épopée! épopée! oh! quel dernier chapitre! —
Entre Troplong paillasse et Chaix-d’Est-Ange pitre,

Devant cette baraque, abject et vil bazar
Où Mandrin mal lavé se déguise en César,
Riant, l'affreux bandit, dans sa moustache épaisse,
Toi, spectre impérial, tu bats la grosse caisse! —

L'horrible vision s'éteignit. L'empereur,
Désespéré, poussa dans l'ombre un cri d'horreur,
Baissant les yeux, dressant ses mains épouvantées.
Les Victoires de marbre à la porte sculptées,
Fantômes blancs debout hors du sépulcre obscur,
Se faisaient du doigt signe, et, s'appuyant au mur,
Écoutaient le titan pleurer dans les ténèbres.
Et lui, cria: « Démon aux visions funèbres,
Toi qui me suis partout, que jamais je ne vois,
Qui donc es-tu? — Je suis ton crime", dit la voix.
La tombe alors s'emplit d'une lumière étrange
Semblable à la clarté de Dieu quand il se venge
Pareils aux mots que vit resplendir Balthazar,
Deux mots dans l'ombre écrits flamboyaient sur César;
Bonaparte, tremblant comme un enfant sans mère,
Leva sa face pâle et lut: — DIX-HUIT BRUMAIRE!

25-30 novembre. Jersey.

LIVRE VI: LA STABILITE EST ASSUREE

Napoléon III

Donc c’est fait. Dût rugir de honte le canon,
Te voilà, nain immonde, accroupi sur ce nom!
Cette gloire est ton trou, ta bauge, ta demeure!
Toi qui n’as jamais pris la fortune qu’à l’heure,
Te voilà presque assis sur ce hautain sommet!
Sur le chapeau d’Essling tu plantes ton plumet;
Tu mets, petit Poucet, ces bottes de sept lieues;
Tu prends Napoléon dans les régions bleues;
Tu fais travailler l’oncle, et, perroquet ravi,
Grimper à ton perchoir l’aigle de Mondovi!
Thersite est le neveu d’Achille Péliade!
C’est pour toi qu’on a fait toute cette Iliade!
C’est pour toi qu’on livra ces combats inouïs!
C’est pour toi que Murat, aux russes éblouis,
Terrible, apparaissait, cravachant leur armée!
C’est pour toi qu’à travers la flamme et la fumée
Les grenadiers pensifs s’avançaient à pas lents!
C’est pour toi que mon père et mes oncles vaillants
Ont répandu leur sang dans ces guerres épiques!
Pour toi qu’ont fourmillé les sabres et les piques,
Que tout le continent trembla sous Attila,
Et que Londres frémit, et que Moscou brûla!
C’est pour toi, pour tes Deutz et pour tes Mascarilles,
Pour que tu puisses boire avec de belles filles,
Et, la nuit, t’attabler dans le Louvre à l’écart,
C’est pour monsieur Fialin et pour monsieur Mocquart,
Que Lannes d’un boulet eut la cuisse coupée,
Que le front des soldats, entrouvert par l’épée,
Saigna sous le shako, le casque et le colback,
Que Lasalle à Wagram, Duroc à Reichenbach,
Expirèrent frappés au milieu de leur route,
Que Caulaincourt tomba dans la grande redoute,
Et que la vieille garde est morte à Waterloo!
C’est pour toi qu’agitant le pin et le bouleau,

Le vent fait aujourd’hui, sous ses âpres haleines,
Blanchir tant d’ossements, hélas! dans tant de plaines!
Faquin! — Tu t’es soudé, chargé d’un vil butin,
Toi, l’homme du hasard, à l’homme du destin!
Tu fourres, impudent, ton front dans ses couronnes!
Nous entendons claquer dans tes mains fanfaronnes
Ce fouet prodigieux qui conduisait les rois
Et tranquille, attelant à ton numéro trois
Austerlitz, Marengo, Rivoli, Saint-Jean-d’Acre,
Aux chevaux du soleil tu fais traîner ton fiacre!
Jersey, 31 mai 1853.

Les Martyres

Les Martyres

Ces femmes, qu’on envoie aux lointaines bastilles,
Peuple, ce sont tes soeurs, tes mères et tes filles!
Ô peuple, leur forfait, c’est de t’avoir aimé!
Paris sanglant, courbé, sinistre, inanimé,
Voit ces horreurs et garde un silence farouche.

Celle-ci, qu’on amène un bâillon dans la bouche,
Cria (c’est là son crime): — à bas la trahison!
Ces femmes sont la foi, la vertu, la raison,
L’équité, la pudeur, la fierté, la justice.
Saint-Lazare — il faudra broyer cette bâtisse!
Il n’en restera pas pierre sur pierre un jour! —
Les reçoit, les dévore, et, quand revient leur tour,
S’ouvre, et les revomit par son horrible porte,
Et les jette au fourgon hideux qui les emporte.
Où vont-elles? L’oubli le sait, et le tombeau
Le raconte au cyprès et le dit au corbeau.

Une d’elles était une mère sacrée.
Le jour qu’on l’entraîna vers l’Afrique abhorrée,
Ses enfants étaient là qui voulaient l’embrasser;
On les chassa. La mère en deuil les vit chasser
Et dit: — partons! — Le peuple en larmes criait grâce.
La porte du fourgon étant étroite et basse,
Un argousin joyeux, raillant son embonpoint,
La fit entrer de force en la poussant du poing.

Elles s’en vont ainsi, malades, verrouillées,
Dans le noir chariot aux cellules souillées
Où le captif, sans air, sans jour, sans pleurs dans l’œil,
N’est plus qu’un mort vivant assis dans son cercueil.
Dans la route on entend leurs voix désespérées.

Le peuple hébété voit passer ces torturées.
À Toulon, le fourgon les quitte, le ponton
Les prend; sans vêtements, sans pain, sous le bâton,
Elles passent la mer, veuves, seules au monde,
Mangeant avec les doigts dans la gamelle immonde.
Bruxelles, juillet 1852.

Hymne des transportés

Prions! voici l’ombre sereine.
Vers toi, grand Dieu, nos yeux et nos bras sont levés.
Ceux qui t’offrent ici leurs larmes et leur chaîne
Sont les plus douloureux parmi les éprouvés.
Ils ont le plus d’honneur ayant le plus de peine.

Souffrons! le crime aura son tour.
Oiseaux qui passez, nos chaumières,
Vents qui passez, nos soeurs, nos mères
Sont là-bas, pleurant nuit et jour.!
Oiseaux, dites-leur nos misères!
Ô vents, portez-leur notre amour!

Nous t’envoyons notre pensée,
Dieu! nous te demandons d’oublier les proscrits,
Mais de rendre sa gloire à la France abaissée;
Et laisse-nous mourir, nous brisés et meurtris,
Nous que le jour brûlant livre à la nuit glacée!

Souffrons! le crime -

Comme un archer frappe une cible,
L’implacable soleil nous perce de ses traits
Après le dur labeur, le sommeil impossible;
Cette chauve-souris qui sort des noirs marais,
La fièvre, bat nos fronts de son aile invisible.

Souffrons! le crime -

On a soif, l’eau brûle la bouche
On a faim, du pain noir; travaillez, malheureux!
À chaque coup de pioche en ce désert farouche
La mort sort de la terre avec son rire affreux,
Prend l’homme dans ses bras, l’étreint et se recouche.

Souffrons! le crime -

Mais qu’importe! rien ne nous dompte;
Nous sommes torturés et nous sommes contents.
Nous remercions Dieu vers qui notre hymne monte
De nous avoir choisis pour souffrir dans ce temps
Où tous ceux qui n’ont pas la souffrance ont la honte.

Souffrons! le crime -

Vive la grande République!
Paix à l’immensité du soir mystérieux!
Paix aux morts endormis dans la tombe stoïque!
Paix au sombre océan qui mêle sous les cieux
La plainte de Cayenne au sanglot de l’Afrique!

Souffrons! le crime aura son tour.
Oiseaux qui passez, nos chaumières,
Vents qui passez, nos soeurs, nos mères
Sont là-bas, pleurant nuit et jour.
Oiseaux, dites-leur nos misères!
Ô vents, portez-leur notre amour!
23 juillet 1853. Jersey.

Chanson

Nous nous promenions parmi les décombres
À Rozel-Tower,
Et nous écoutions les paroles sombres
Que disait la mer.

L’énorme océan, — car nous entendîmes
Ses vagues chansons, —
Disait: « Paraissez, vérités sublimes
Et bleus horizons!

» Le monde captif, sans lois et sans règles,
Est aux oppresseurs
Volez dans les cieux, ailes des grands aigles,
Esprits des penseurs!

» Naissez, levez-vous sur les flots sonores,
Sur les flots vermeils,
Traites dans la nuit poindre vos aurores,
Peuples et soleils!

Vous, laissez passer la foudre et la brume,
Les vents et les cris,
Affrontez l’orage, affrontez l’écume,
Rochers et proscrits!
Jersey, 5 août 1853.

Éblouissements

Ô temps miraculeux! ô gaîtés homériques!
Ô rires de l’Europe et des deux Amériques!
Croûtes qui larmoyez! bons dieux mal accrochés
Qui saignez dans vos coins! madones qui louchez!
Phénomènes vivants! ô choses inouïes!
Candeurs! énormités au jour épanouies!
Le goudron déclaré fétide par le suif,
Judas flairant Shylock et criant: c’est un juif!
L’arsenic indigné dénonçant la morphine,
La hotte injuriant la borne, Messaline
Reprochant à Goton son regard effronté,
Et Dupin accusant Sauzet de lâcheté!

Oui, le vide-gousset flétrit le tire-laine,
Falstaff montre du doigt le ventre de Silène,
Lacenaire, pudique et de rougeur atteint,
Dit en baissant les yeux: J’ai vu passer Castaing!

Je contemple nos temps. J’en ai le droit, je pense.
Souffrir étant mon lot, rire est ma récompense.
Je ne sais pas comment cette pauvre Clio
Fera pour se tirer de cet imbroglio.
Ma rêverie au fond de ce règne pénètre,
Quand, ne pouvant dormir, la nuit, à ma fenêtre,
Je songe, et que là-bas, dans l’ombre, à travers l’eau,
Je vois briller le phare auprès de Saint-Malo.
Donc ce moment existe! il est! Stupeur risible!
On le voit; c’est réel, et ce n’est pas possible.
L’empire est là, refait par quelques sacripants.
Bonaparte le Grand dormait. Quel guet-apens!
Il dormait dans sa tombe, absous par la patrie.
Tout à coup des brigands firent une tuerie
Qui dura tout un jour et du soir au matin;
Napoléon le Nain en sortit. Le destin,

De l’expiation implacable ministre,
Dans tout ce sang versé trempa son doigt sinistre
Pour barbouiller, affront à la gloire en lambeau,
Cette caricature au mur de ce tombeau.

Ce monde-là prospère. Il prospère, vous dis-je!
Embonpoint de la honte! époque callipyge!
Il trône, ce cokney d’Eglinton et d’Epsom,
Qui, la main sur son cœur, dit: Je mens, ergo sum.
Les jours, les mois, les ans passent; ce flegmatique,
Ce somnambule obscur, brusquement frénétique,
Que Schœlcher a nommé le président Obus,
Règne, continuant ses crimes en abus.
Ô spectacle! en plein jour, il marche et se promène,
Cet être horrible, insulte à la figure humaine!
Il s’étale effroyable, ayant tout un troupeau
De Suins et de Fortouls qui vivent sur sa peau,
Montrant ses nudités, cynique, infâme, indigne,
Sans mettre à son Baroche une feuille de vigne!
Il rit de voir à terre et montre à Machiavel
Sa parole d’honneur qu’il a tuée en duel.
Il sème l’or; — venez! — et sa largesse éclate.
Magnan ouvre sa griffe et Troplong tend sa patte.
Tout va. Les sous-coquins aident le drôle en chef.
Tout est beau, tout est bon, et tout est juste; bref,
L’église le soutient, l’opéra le constate.
Il vola! Te Deum. Il égorgea! cantate.

Lois, mœurs, maître, valets, tout est à l’avenant.
C’est un bivouac de gueux, splendide et rayonnant.
Le mépris bat des mains, admire, et dit: courage!
C’est hideux. L’entouré ressemble à l’entourage.
Quelle collection! quel choix! quel Œil-de-boeuf!
L’un vient de Loyola, l’autre vient de Babeuf!
Jamais vénitiens, romains et bergamasques
N’ont sous plus de sifflets vu passer plus de masques.
La société va sans but, sans jour, sans droit,

Et l’envers de l’habit est devenu l’endroit.
L’immondice au sommet de l’état se déploie.
Les chiffonniers, la nuit, courbés, flairant leur proie,
Allongent leurs crochets du côté du sénat.
Voyez-moi ce coquin, normand, corse, auvergnat:
C’était fait pour vieillir bélître et mourir cuistre;
C’est premier président, c’est préfet, c’est ministre.
Ce truand catholique au temps jadis vivait
Maigre, chez Flicoteaux plutôt que chez Chevet;
Il habitait au fond d’un bouge à tabatière
Un lit fait et défait, hélas, par sa portière,
Et griffonnait dès l’aube, amer, affreux, souillé,
Exhalant dans son trou l’odeur d’un chien mouillé.
Il conseille l’état pour ving-cinq mille livres
Par an. Ce petit homme, étant teneur de livres
Dans la blonde Marseille, au pays du mistral,
Fit des faux. Le voici procureur général.
Celui-là, qui courait la foire avec un singe,
Est député; cet autre, ayant fort peu de linge,
Sur la pointe du pied entrait dans les logis
Où bâillait quelque armoire aux tiroirs élargis,
Et du bourgeois absent empruntait la tunique
Nul mortel n’a jamais, de façon plus cynique,
Assouvi le désir des chemises d’autrui;
Il était grinche hier, il est juge aujourd’hui.
Ceux-ci, quand il leur plaît, chapelains de la clique,
Au saint-père accroupi font pondre une encyclique;
Ce sont des gazetiers fort puissants en haut lieu,
Car ils sont les amis particuliers de Dieu

Sachez que ces béats, quand ils parlent du temple
Comme de leur maison, n’ont pas tort; par exemple,
J’ai toujours applaudi quand ils ont affecté
Avec les saints du ciel des airs d’intimité;
Veuillot, certe, aurait pu vivre avec Saint-Antoine.
Cet autre est général comme on serait chanoine,
Parce qu’il est très gras et qu’il a trois mentons.

Cet autre fut escroc. Cet autre eut vingt bâtons
Cassés sur lui. Cet autre, admirable canaille,
Quand la bise, en janvier, nous pince et nous tenaille,
D’une savate oblique écrasant les talons,
Pour se garer du froid mettait deux pantalons
Dont les trous par bonheur n’étaient pas l’un sur l’autre.
Aujourd’hui, sénateur, dans l’empire il se vautre.
Je regrette le temps que c’était dans l’égout.
Ce ventre a nom d’Hautpoul, ce nez a nom d’Argout.
Ce prêtre, c’est la honte à l’état de prodige.
Passons vite. L’histoire abrège, elle rédige
Royer d’un coup de fouet, Mongis d’un coup de pied,
Et fuit. Royer se frotte et Mongis se rassied;
Tout est dit. Que leur fait l’affront? l’opprobre engraissé.
Quant au maître qui hait les curieux, la presse,
La tribune, et ne veut pour son règne éclatant
Ni regards, ni témoins, il doit être content
Il a plus de succès encor qu’il n’en exige;
César, devant sa cour, son pouvoir, son quadrige,
Ses lois, ses serviteurs brodés et galonnés,
Veut qu’on ferme les veux: on se bouche le nez.
Prenez ce Beauharnais et prenez une loupe;
Penchez-vous, regardez l’homme et scrutez la troupe.
Vous n’y trouverez pas l’ombre d’un bon instinct.
bsp; C’est vil et c’est féroce. En eux l’homme est éteint
Et ce qui plonge l’âme en des stupeurs profondes,
C’est la perfection de ces gredins immondes.

À ce ramas se joint un tas d’affreux poussahs,
Un tas de Triboulets et de Sancho Panças.
Sous vingt gouvernements ils ont palpé des sommes.
Aucune indignité ne manque à ces bonshommes;
Rufins poussifs, Verrès goutteux, Séjans fourbus,
Selles à tout tyran, sénateurs omnibus.
On est l’ancien soudard, on est l’ancien bourgmestre;
On tua Louis seize, on vote avec de Maistre;
Ils ont eu leur fauteuil dans tous les Luxembourgs;

Ayant vu les Maurys, ils sont faits aux Sibours;
Ils sont gais, et, contant leurs antiques bamboches,
Branlent leurs vieux gazons sur leurs vieilles caboches.
Ayant été, du temps qu'ils avaient un cheveu,
Lâches sous l'oncle, ils sont abjects sous le neveu.
Gros mandarins chinois adorant le tartare,
Ils apportent leur cœur, leur vertu, leur catarrhe,
Et prosternent, cagneux, devant sa majesté
Leur bassesse avachie en imbécillité.

Cette bande s'embrasse et se livre à des joies.
Bon ménage touchant des vautours et des oies!

Noirs empereurs romains couchés dans les tombeaux,
Qui faisiez aux sénats discuter les turbots,
Toi, dernière Lagide, ô reine au cou de cygne,
Prêtre Alexandre six qui rêves dans ta vigne,
Despotes d'Allemagne éclos dans le Rœmer,
Nemrod qui hais le ciel, Xercès qui bats la mer,
Caïphe qui tressas la couronne d'épine,
Claude après Messaline épousant Agrippine,
Caïus qu'on fit césar, Commode qu'on fit dieu,
Iturbide, Rosas, Mazarin, Richelieu,
Moines qui chassez Dante et brisez Galilée,
Saint-office, conseil des dix, chambre étoilée,
Parlements tout noircis de décrets et d'olims,
Vous sultans, les Mourads, les Achmets, les Sélims,
Rois qu'on montre aux enfants dans tous les syllabaires,
Papes, ducs, empereurs, princes, tas de Tibères!
Bourreaux toujours sanglants, toujours divinisés,
Tyrans! enseignez-moi, si vous le connaissez,
Enseignez-moi le lieu, le point, la borne où cesse
La lâcheté publique et l'humaine bassesse!
Et l'archet frémissant fait bondir tout cela!
Bal à l'hôtel de ville, au Luxembourg gala.
Allons, juges, dansez la danse de l'épée!
Gambade, ô Dombidau, pour l'onomatopée!

Polkez, Fould et Maupas, avec votre écriteau,
Toi, Persil-Guillotine, au profil de couteau!
Ours que Boustrapa montre et qu'il tient par la sangle,
Valsez, Billault, Parieu, Drouyn, Lebœuf, Delangle!
Danse, Dupin! dansez, l'horrible et le bouffon!
Hyènes, loups, chacals, non prévus par Buffon,
Leroy, Forey, tueurs au fer rongé de rouilles,
Dansez! dansez, Berger, d'Hautpoul, Murat, citrouilles!

Et l'on râle en exil, à Cayenne, à Blidah!
Et sur le Duguesclin, et sur le Canada,
Des enfants de dix ans, brigands qu'on extermine,
Agonisent, brûlés de fièvre et de vermine!
Et les mères, pleurant sous l'homme triomphant,
Ne savent même pas où se meurt leur enfant!
Et Samson reparaît, et sort de ses retraites!
Et, le soir, on entend, sur d'horribles charrettes
Qui traversent la ville et qu'on suit à pas lents,
Quelque chose sauter dans des paniers sanglants!
Oh! laissez! laissez-moi m'enfuir sur le rivage!
Laissez-moi respirer l'odeur du flot sauvage!
Jersey rit, terre libre, au sein des sombres mers;
Les genêts sont en fleur, l'agneau paît les prés verts;
L'écume jette aux rocs ses blanches mousselines;
Par moments apparaît, au sommet des collines,
Livrant ses crins épars au vent âpre et joyeux,
Un cheval effaré qui hennit dans les cieux!
24 mai. Jersey.

À ceux qui dorment

Réveillez-vous, assez de honte!
Bravez boulets et biscayens.
Il est temps qu’enfin le flot monte.
Assez de honte, citoyens!
Troussez les manches de la blouse.
  Les hommes de quatrevingt-douze
  Affrontaient vingt rois combattants.
  Brisez vos fers, forcez vos geôles!
  Quoi! vous avez peur de ces drôles!
  Vos pères bravaient les titans!

  Levez-vous! foudroyez et la horde et le maître!
  Vous avez Dieu pour vous et contre vous le prêtre
  Dieu seul est souverain.
  Devant lui nul n’est fort et tous sont périssables.
  Il chasse comme un chien le grand tigre des sables
  Et le dragon marin;
  Rien qu’en soufflant dessus, comme un oiseau d’un arbre,
  Il peut faire envoler de leur temple de marbre
  Les idoles d’airain.

  Vous n’êtes pas armés? qu’importe!
  Prends ta fourche, prends ton marteau!
  Arrache le gond de ta porte,
  Emplis de pierres ton manteau!
  Et poussez le cri d’espérance!
  Redevenez la grande -France!
  Redevenez le grand Paris!
  Délivrez, frémissants de rage,
  Votre pays de l’esclavage,
  Votre mémoire du mépris!

  Quoi! faut-il vous citer les royalistes même?
  On était grand aux jours de la lutte suprême.

Alors, que voyait-on?
La bravoure, ajoutant à l’homme une coudée,
Etait dans les deux camps. N’est-il pas vrai, Vendée,
Ô dur pays breton?
Pour vaincre un bastion, pour rompre une muraille,
Pour prendre cent canons vomissant la mitraille.
Il suffit d’un bâton!

Si dans ce cloaque ou demeure,
Si cela dure encore un jour,
Si cela dure encore une heure,
Je brise clairon et tambour,
Je flétris ces pusillanimes,
Ô vieux peuple des jours sublimes,
Géants à qui nous les mêlions,
Je les laisse trembler leurs fièvres,
Et je déclare que ces lièvres
Ne sont pas vos fils, ô lions!
15 janvier 1853.

Luna

Ô France, quoique tu sommeilles,
Nous t’appelons, nous les proscrits!
Les ténèbres ont des oreilles,
Et les profondeurs ont des cris.

Le despotisme âpre et sans gloire
Sur les peuples découragés
Ferme la grille épaisse et noire
Des erreurs et des préjugés;

Il tient sous clef l’essaim fidèle
Des fermes penseurs, des héros,
Mais l’Idée avec un coup d’aile
Ecartera les durs barreaux,

Et, comme en l’an quatrevingt-onze,
Reprendra son vol souverain;
Car briser la cage de bronze,
C’est facile à l’oiseau d’airain.

L’obscurité couvre le monde,
Mais l’Idée illumine et luit;
De sa clarté blanche elle inonde
Les sombres azurs de la nuit.

Elle est le fanal solitaire,
Le rayon providentiel.
Elle est la lampe de la terre
Qui ne peut s’allumer qu’au ciel.

Elle apaise l’âme qui souffre,
Guide la vie, endort la mort;
Elle montre aux méchants le gouffre,
Elle montre aux justes le port.

En voyant dans la brume obscure
L’Idée, amour des tristes yeux,
Monter calme, sereine et pure,
Sur l’horizon mystérieux,

Les fanatismes et les haines
Rugissent devant chaque seuil,
Comme hurlent les chiens obscènes
Quand apparaît la lune en deuil.

Oh! contemplez l’Idée altière,
Nations! son front surhumain
A, dès à présent, la lumière
Qui vous éclairera demain!
31 mars. Jersey.

Aux femmes

Quand tout se fait petit, femmes, vous restez grandes.
En vain, aux murs sanglants accrochant des guirlandes,
Ils ont ouvert le bal et la danse; ô nos soeurs,
Devant ces scélérats transformés en valseurs
Vous haussez, — châtiment! — vos charmantes épaules.
Votre divin sourire extermine ces drôles.
En vain leur frac brodé scintille; en vain, brigands,
Pour vous plaire ils ont mis à leurs griffes des gants,
Et de leur vil tricorne ils ont doré les ganses;
Vous bafouez ces gants, ces fracs, ces élégances,
Cet empire tout neuf et déjà vermoulu.
Dieu vous a tout donné, femmes; il a voulu
Que les seuls alcyons tinssent tête à l'orage,
Et qu'étant la beauté, vous fussiez le courage.

Les femmes ici-bas et là-haut les aïeux,
Voilà ce qui nous reste!

Abjection! nos yeux
Plongent dans une nuit toujours plus épaissie.
Oui, le peuple français, oui, le peuple messie,
Oui, ce grand forgeron du droit universel
Dont, depuis soixante ans, l'enclume sous le ciel
Luit et sonne, dont l'âtre incessamment pétille,
Qui fit voler au vent les tours de la Bastille,
Qui broya, se dressant tout à coup souverain,
Mille ans de royauté sous son talon d'airain,
Ce peuple dont le souffle, ainsi que des fumées,
Faisait tourbillonner les rois et les armées,
Qui, lorsqu'il se fâchait, brisait sous son bâton
Le géant Robespierre et le titan Danton,
Oui, ce peuple invincible, oui, ce peuple superbe
Tremble aujourd'hui, pâlit, frissonne comme l'herbe,
Claque des dents, se cache et n'ose dire un mot

Devant Magnan, ce reître, et Troplong, ce grimaud!
Oui, nous voyons cela! Nous tenant dans leurs serres,
Mangeant les millions en face des misères,
Les Fortoul, les Rouher, êtres stupéfiants,
S’étalent; on se tait. Nos maîtres ruffians
À Cayenne, en un bagne, abîme d’agonie,
Accouplent l’héroïsme avec l’ignominie;

On se tait. Les pontons râlent; que dit-on? rien.
Des enfants sont forçats en Afrique; c’est bien.
Si vous pleurez, tenez votre larme secrète.
Le bourreau, noir faucheur, debout dans sa charrette,
Revient de la moisson avec son panier plein
Pas un souffle. Il est là, ce Tibère-Ezzelin
Qui se croit scorpion et n’est que scolopendre,
Fusillant, et jaloux de Haynau qui peut pendre;
Eclaboussé de sang, le prêtre l’applaudit;
Il est là, ce César chauve-souris qui dit
Aux rois: voyez mon sceptre; aux gueux: voyez mon
Ce vainqueur qui, béni, lavé, sacré, sublime, [crime
De deux pourpres vêtu, dans l’histoire s’assied
Le globe dans sa main, un boulet à son pied;
Il nous crache au visage, il règne! nul ne bouge.

Et c’est à votre front qu’on voit monter le rouge,
C’est vous qui vous levez et qui vous indignez,
Femmes; le sein gonflé, les yeux de pleurs baignés,
Vous huez le tyran, vous consolez les tombes,
Et le vautour frémit sous le bec des colombes!

Et moi, proscrit pensif, je vous dis: Gloire à vous!
Oh! oui, vous êtes bien le sexe fier et doux,
Ardent au dévouement, ardent à la souffrance,
Toujours prêt à la lutte, à Béthulie, en France,
Dont l’âme à la hauteur des héros s’élargit,
D’où se lève Judith, d’où Charlotte surgit!
Vous mêlez la bravoure à la mélancolie.

Vous êtes Porcia, vous êtes Cornélie,
Vous êtes Arria qui saigne et qui sourit;
Oui, vous avez toujours en vous ce même esprit
Qui relève et soutient les nations tombées,
Qui suscite la Juive et les sept Machabées,
Qui dans toi, Jeanne d’Arc, fait revivre Amadis,
Et qui, sur le chemin des tyrans interdits,
Pour les épouvanter dans leur gloire éphémère,
Met tantôt une vierge et tantôt une mère!

Si bien que, par moments, lorsqu’en nos visions
Nous voyons, secouant un glaive de rayons,
Dans les cieux apparaître une figure ailée,
Saint-Michel sous ses pieds foulant l’hydre écaillée,
Nous disons: c’est la Gloire et c’est la Liberté!
Et nous croyons, devant sa grâce et sa beauté, [nomme,
Quand nous cherchons le nom dont il faut qu’on le
Que l’archange est plutôt une femme qu’un homme!
Jersey. 30 mai 1853.

Au peuple

Il te ressemble; il est terrible et pacifique.
Il est sous l’infini le niveau magnifique;
Il a le mouvement, il a l’immensité.
Apaisé d’un rayon et d’un souffle agité,
Tantôt c’est l’harmonie et tantôt le cri rauque.
Les monstres sont à l’aise en sa profondeur glauque;
La trombe y germe; il a des gouffres inconnus
D’où ceux qui l’ont bravé ne sont pas revenus;
Sur son énormité le colosse chavire;
Gomme toi le despote il brise le navire;
Le fanal est sur lui comme l’esprit sur toi;
Il foudroie, il caresse, et Dieu seul sait pourquoi;
Sa vague, où l’on entend comme des chocs d’armures,
Emplit la sombre nuit de monstrueux murmures,
Et l’on sent que ce flot, comme toi, gouffre humain,
Ayant rugi ce soir, dévorera demain.
Son onde est une lame aussi bien que le glaive;
Il chante un hymne immense à Vénus qui se lève;
Sa rondeur formidable, azur universel,
Accepte en son miroir tous les astres du ciel;
Il a la force rude et la grâce superbe;
Il déracine un roc, il épargne un brin d’herbe;
Il jette comme toi l’écume aux fiers sommets,
O peuple; seulement, lui, ne trompe jamais
Quand, l’œil fixe, et debout sur sa grève sacrée,
Et pensif, on attend l’heure de sa marée.
Au bord de l’océan, juillet 1853.

Apportez vos chaudrons, sorcières de Shakespeare

Apportez vos chaudrons, sorcières de Shakespeare,
Sorcières de Macbeth, prenez-moi tout l’empire,
L’ancien et le nouveau; sur le même réchaud
Mettez le gros Berger et le comte Frochot,
Maupas avec Réal, Hullin sur Espinasse,
La Saint-Napoléon avec la Saint-Ignace,

Fould et Maret, Fouché gâté, Troplong pourri,
Retirez Austerlitz, ajoutez Satory,
Penchez-vous, crins épars, œil ardent, gorge nue,
Soufflez à pleins poumons le feu sous la cornue;
Regardez le petit se dégager du grand;
Faites évaporer Baroche et Talleyrand,
Le neveu qui descend pendant que l’oncle monte;
Que reste-t-il au fond de l’alambic? La honte.
Jersey. 26 mai 1853.

Le Parti du crime

«Amis et frères! en présence de ce gouvernement infâme, négation de toute morale, obstacle à tout progrès social, en présence de ce gouvernement meurtrier du peuple, assassin de la République et violateur des lois, de ce gouvernement né de la force et qui doit périr par la force, de ce gouvernement élevé par le crime et qui doit être terrassé par le droit, le français digne du nom de citoyen ne sait pas, ne veut pas savoir s'il y a quelque part des semblants de scrutin, des comédies de suffrage universel et des parodies d'appel à la nation; il ne s'informe pas s'il y a des hommes qui votent et des hommes qui font voter, s'il y a un troupeau qu'on appelle le sénat et qui délibère et un autre troupeau qu'on appelle le peuple et qui obéit; il ne s'informe pas si le pape va sacrer au maître-autel de Notre-Dame l'homme qui - n'en doutez pas, ceci est l'avenir inévitable - sera ferré au poteau par le bourreau; — en présence de M. Bonaparte et de son gouvernement, le citoyen digne de ce nom ne fait qu'une chose et n'a qu'une chose à faire: charger son fusil, et attendre l'heure.

" JERSEY, 31 OCTOBRE 1852."

Déclaration des proscrits républicains de Jersey, à propos de l'empire, publiée par le Moniteur, signée pour copie conforme:

VICTOR HUGO, FAURE, FOMBERTAUX.

«Nous flétrissons de l'énergie la plus vigoureuse de notre âme les ignobles et coupables manifestes du Parti du Crime."

(RIANCEY, JOURNAL L'UNION, 22 NOVEMBRE.)

"Le Parti du Crime relève la tête."

(TOUS LES JOURNAUX ÉLYSÉENS EN CHOEUR)

Ainsi ce gouvernant dont l'ongle est une griffe,
Ce masque impérial, Bonaparte apocryphe,
À coup sûr Beauharnais, peut-être Verhueil,
Qui, pour la mettre en croix, livra, sbire cruel,
Rome républicaine à Rome catholique,
Cet homme, l'assassin de la chose publique,
Ce parvenu, choisi par le destin sans yeux,

Ainsi, lui, ce glouton singeant l’ambitieux,
Cette altesse quelconque habile aux catastrophes,
Ce loup sur qui je lâche une meute de strophes,
Ainsi ce boucanier, ainsi ce chourineur
À fait d’un jour d’orgueil un jour de déshonneur,
Mis sur la gloire un crime et souillé la victoire
Il a volé, l’infâme, Austerlitz à l’histoire;
Brigand, dans ce trophée il a pris un poignard;
Il a broyé bourgeois, ouvrier, campagnard;
Il a fait de corps morts une horrible étagère
Derrière les barreaux de la cité Bergère;
Il s’est, le sabre en main, rué sur son serment;
Il a tué les lois et le gouvernement,
La justice, l’honneur, tout, jusqu’à l’espérance
Il a rougi de sang, de ton sang pur, ô France,
Tous nos fleuves, depuis la Seine jusqu’au Var;
Il a conquis le Louvre en méritant Clamar;
Et maintenant il règne, appuyant, ô patrie,
Son vil talon fangeux sur ta bouche meurtrie
Voilà ce qu’il a fait; je n’exagère rien;
Et quand, nous indignant de ce galérien,
Et de tous les escrocs de cette dictature,
Croyant rêver devant cette affreuse aventure,
Nous disons, de dégoût et d’horreur soulevés:
— Citoyens, marchons! Peuple, aux armes, aux pavés!
À bas ce sabre abject qui n’est pas même un glaive!
Que le jour reparaisse et que le droit se lève! —
C’est nous, proscrits frappés par ces coquins hardis,
Nous, les assassinés, qui sommes les bandits!
Nous qui voulons le meurtre et les guerres civiles!
Nous qui mettons la torche aux quatre coins des villes!
Donc, trôner par la mort, fouler aux pieds le droit
Etre fourbe, impudent, cynique, atroce, adroit;
Dire: je suis César, et n’être qu’un maroufle
Etouffer la pensée et la vie et le souffle;
Forcer quatre-vingt-neuf qui marche à reculer;
Supprimer lois, tribune et presse; museler

La grande nation comme une bête fauve;
Régner par la caserne et du fond d'une alcôve;
Restaurer les abus au profit des félons
Livrer ce pauvre peuple aux voraces Troplongs,
Sous prétexte qu'il fut, loin des temps où nous sommes,
Dévoré par les rois et par les gentilshommes
Faire manger aux chiens ce reste des lions;
Prendre gaîment pour soi palais et millions;
S'afficher tout crûment satrape, et, sans sourdines,
Mener joyeuse vie avec des gourgandines
Torturer des héros dans le bagne exécré;
Bannir quiconque est ferme et fier; vivre entouré
De grecs, comme à Byzance autrefois le despote
Etre le bras qui tue et la main qui tripote
Ceci, c'est la justice, ô peuple, et la vertu!
Et confesser le droit par le meurtre abattu
Dans l'exil, à travers l'encens et les fumées,
Dire en face aux tyrans, dire en face aux armées
— Violence, injustice et force sont vos noms
Vous êtes les soldats, vous êtes les canons;
La terre est sous vos pieds comme votre royaume
Vous êtes le colosse et nous sommes l'atome;
Eh bien! guerre! et luttons, c'est notre volonté,
Vous, pour l'oppression, nous, pour la liberté! —
Montrer les noirs pontons, montrer les catacombes,
Et s'écrier, debout sur la pierre des tombes.
— Français! craignez d'avoir un jour pour repentirs
Les pleurs des innocents et les os des martyrs!
Brise l'homme sépulcre, ô France! ressuscite!
Arrache de ton flanc ce Néron parasite!
Sors de terre sanglante et belle, et dresse-toi,
Dans une main le glaive et dans l'autre la loi! —
Jeter ce cri du fond de son âme proscrite,
Attaquer le forban, démasquer l'hypocrite
Parce que l'honneur parle et parce qu'il le faut,
C'est le crime, cela! — Tu l'entends, toi, là-haut!
Oui, voilà ce qu'on dit, mon Dieu, devant ta face!

Témoin toujours présent qu’aucune ombre n’efface,
Voilà ce qu’on étale à tes yeux éternels!

Quoi! le sang fume aux mains de tous ces criminels!
Quoi! les morts, vierge, enfant, vieillards et femmes grosses
Ont à peine eu le temps de pourrir dans leurs fosses!
Quoi! Paris saigne encor! quoi! devant tous les yeux,
Son faux serment est là qui plane dans les cieux!
Et voilà comme parle un tas d’êtres immondes
Ô noir bouillonnement des colères profondes!
Et maint vivant, gavé, triomphant et vermeil,
Reprend: « Ce bruit qu’on fait dérange mon sommeil.
Tout va bien. Les marchands triplent leurs clientèles,
Et nos femmes ne sont que fleurs et que dentelles!
— De quoi donc se plaint-on? crie un autre quidam;
En flânant sur l’asphalte et sur le macadam,
Je gagne tous les jours trois cents francs à la Bourse.
L’argent coule aujourd’hui comme l’eau d’une source;
Les ouvriers maçons ont trois livres dix sous,
C’est superbe; Paris est sens dessus dessous.
Il paraît qu’on a mis dehors les démagogues.
Tant mieux. Moi j’applaudis les bals et les églogues
Du prince qu’autrefois à tort je reniais.
Que m’importe qu’on ait chassé quelques niais?
Quant aux morts, ils sont morts. Paix à ces imbéciles!
Vivent les gens d’esprit! vivent ces temps faciles
Où l’on peut à son choix prendre pour nourricier
Le crédit mobilier ou le crédit foncier!
La république rouge aboie en ses cavernes,
C’est affreux! Liberté, droit, progrès, balivernes
Hier encor j’empochais une prime d’un franc;
Et moi, je sens fort peu, j’en conviens, je suis franc,
Les déclamations m’étant indifférentes,
La baisse de l’honneur dans la hausse des rentes.”

Ô langage hideux! on le tient, on l’entend!
Eh bien, sachez-le donc; repus au cœur content,

Que nous vous le disions bien une fois pour toutes,
Oui, nous, les vagabonds dispersés sur les routes,
Errant sans passe-port, sans nom et sans foyer,
Nous autres, les proscrits qu’on ne fait pas ployer,
Nous qui n’acceptons point qu’un peuple s’abrutisse,
Qui d’ailleurs ne voulons, tout en voulant justice,
D’aucune représaille et d’aucun échafaud,’
Nous, dis-je, les vaincus sur qui Mandrin prévaut,
Pour que la liberté revive, et que la honte
Meure, et qu’à tous les fronts l’honneur serein remonte,
Pour affranchir romains, lombards, germains, hongrois,
Pour faire rayonner, soleil de tous les droits,
La république mère au centre de l’Europe,
Pour réconcilier le palais et l’échoppe,
Pour faire refleurir la fleur Fraternité,
Pour fonder du travail le droit incontesté,
Pour tirer les martyrs de ces bagnes infâmes,
Pour rendre aux fils le père et les maris aux femmes,
Pour qu’enfin ce grand siècle et cette nation
Sortent du Bonaparte et de l’abjection,
Pour atteindre à ce but où notre âme s’élance,
Nous nous ceignons les reins dans l’ombre et le silence
Nous nous déclarons prêts, prêts, entendez-vous bien?
— Le sacrifice est tout, la souffrance n’est rien, —
Prêts, quand Dieu fera signe, à donner notre vie
Car, à voir ce qui vit, la mort nous fait envie,
Car nous sommes tous mal sous ce drôle effronté,
Vivant, nous sans patrie, et vous sans liberté!

Oui, sachez-le, vous tous que l’air libre importune
Et qui dans ce fumier plantez votre fortune,
Nous ne laisserons pas le peuple s’assoupir;
Oui, nous appellerons, jusqu’au dernier soupir,
Au secours de la France aux fers et presque éteinte,
Comme nos grands -aïeux, l’insurrection sainte
Nous convierons Dieu même à foudroyer ceci
Et c’est notre pensée et nous sommes ainsi,

Aimant mieux, dût le sort nous broyer sous sa roue,
Voir couler notre sang que croupir votre boue.
28 janvier.

On dit: — Soyez prudents. — Puis vient ce dithyrambe

On dit: — Soyez prudents. — Puis vient ce dithyrambe:
«… Qui veut frapper Néron
Rampe, et ne se fait pas précéder d'un ïambe
Soufflant dans un clairon.

» Souviens-toi d'Ettenheim et des pièges célèbres;
Attends le jour marqué.
Sois comme Chéréas qui vient dans les ténèbres,
Seul, muet et masqué.

» La prudence conduit au but qui sait la suivre.
Marche, d'ombre vêtu…"
C'est bien; je laisse à ceux qui veulent longtemps vivre
Cette lâche vertu.
2 août 1853. Jersey.

À Juvénal

I

Retournons à l’école, ô mon vieux Juvénal.
Homme d’ivoire et d’or, descends du tribunal
Où depuis deux mille ans tes vers superbes tonnent.
Il paraît, vois-tu bien, ces choses nous étonnent,
Mais c’est la vérité selon monsieur Riancey,
Que lorsqu’un peu de temps sur le sang a passé,
Après un an ou deux, c’est une découverte,
Quoi qu’en disent les morts avec leur bouche verte,
Le meurtre n’est plus meurtre et le vol n’est plus vol.
Monsieur Veuillot, qui tient d’Ignace et d’Auriol,
Nous l’affirme, quand l’heure a tourné sur l’horloge,
De notre entendement ceci fait peu l’éloge,
Pourvu qu’à Notre-Dame on brûle de l’encens
Et que l’abonné vienne aux journaux bien pensants,
Il paraît que, sortant de son hideux suaire,
Joyeux, en panthéon changeant son ossuaire,
Dans l’opération par monsieur Fould aidé,
Par les juges lavé, par les filles fardé,
Ô miracle! entouré de croyants et d’apôtres,
En dépit des rêveurs, en dépit de nous autres
Noirs poëtes bourrus qui n’y comprenons rien,
Le mal prend tout à coup la figure du bien.

II

Il est l’appui de l’ordre; il est bon catholique
Il signe hardiment - prospérité publique.
La trahison s’habille en général français
L’archevêque ébloui bénit le dieu Succès
C’était crime jeudi, mais c’est haut fait dimanche.
Du pourpoint Probité l’on retourne la manche.
Tout est dit. La vertu tombe dans l’arriéré.

L’honneur est un vieux fou dans sa cave muré.
Ô grand penseur de bronze, en nos dures cervelles
Faisons entrer un peu ces morales nouvelles,
Lorsque sur la Grand’Combe ou sur le blanc de zinc
On a revendu vingt ce qu’on a payé cinq,
Sache qu’un guet-apens par où nous triomphâmes
Est juste, honnête et bon. Tout au rebours des femmes,
Sache qu’en vieillissant le crime devient beau.
Il plane cygne après s’être envolé corbeau.
Oui, tout cadavre utile exhale une odeur d’ambre.
Que vient-on nous parler d’un crime de décembre
Quand nous sommes en juin! l’herbe a poussé dessus.
Toute la question, la voici: fils, tissus,
Cotons et sucres bruts prospèrent; le temps passe.
Le parjure difforme et la trahison basse
En avançant en âge ont la propriété
De perdre leur bassesse et leur difformité
Et l’assassinat louche et tout souillé de lange
Change son front de spectre en un visage d’ange.

III

Et comme en même temps, dans ce travail normal,
La vertu devient faute et le bien devient mal,
Apprends que, quand Saturne a soufflé sur leur rôle,
Néron est un sauveur et Spartacus un drôle.
La raison obstinée a beau faire du bruit;
La justice, ombre pâle, a beau, dans notre nuit,
Murmurer comme un souffle à toutes les oreilles;
On laisse dans leur coin bougonner ces deux vieilles.
Narcisse gazetier lapide Scévola.
Accoutumons nos yeux à ces lumières-là
Qui font qu’on aperçoit tout sous un nouvel angle,
Et qu’on voit Malesherbe en regardant Delangle.
Sachons dire: Lebœuf est grand, Persil est beau
Et laissons la pudeur au fond du lavabo.

IV

Le bon, le sûr, le vrai, c’est l’or dans notre caisse.
L’homme est extravagant qui, lorsque tout s’affaisse,
Proteste seul debout dans une nation,
Et porte à bras tendu son indignation.
Que diable! il faut pourtant vivre de l’air des rues,
Et ne pas s’entêter aux choses disparues.
Quoi! tout meurt ici-bas, l’aigle comme le ver,
Le charançon périt sous la neige l’hiver,
Quoi! le Pont-Neuf fléchit lorsque les eaux sont grosses,
Quoi! mon coude est troué, quoi! je perce mes chausses,
Quoi! mon feutre était neuf et s’est usé depuis,
Et la vérité, maître, aurait, dans son vieux puits,
Cette prétention rare d’être éternelle!
De ne pas se mouiller quand il pleut, d’être belle
À jamais, d’être reine en n’ayant pas le sou,
Et de ne pas mourir quand on lui tord le cou!
Allons donc! Citoyens, c’est au fait qu’il faut croire

V

Sur ce, les charlatans prêchent leur auditoire
D’idiots, de mouchards, de grecs, de philistins,
Et de gens pleins d’esprit détroussant les crétins
La Bourse rit; la hausse offre aux badauds ses prismes;
La douce hypocrisie éclate en aphorismes;
C’est bien, nous gagnons gros et nous sommes contents
Et ce sont, Juvénal, les maximes du temps.
Quelque sous-diacre, éclos dans je ne sais quel bouge,
Trouva ces vérités en balayant Montrouge,
Si bien qu’aujourd’hui fiers et rois des temps nouveaux,
Messieurs les aigrefins et messieurs les dévots
Déclarent, s’éclairant aux lueurs de leur cierge,
Jeanne d’Arc courtisane et Messaline vierge.
Voilà ce que curés, évêques, talapoins,

Au nom du Dieu vivant, démontrent en trois points,
Et ce que le filou qui fouille dans ma poche
Prouve par A plus B, par Argout plus Baroche.

VI

Maître! voilà-t-il pas de quoi nous indigner?
À quoi bon s’exclamer? à quoi bon trépigner?
Nous avons l’habitude, en songeurs que nous sommes,
De contempler les nains bien moins que les grands
Même toi satirique, et moi tribun amer, [hommes;
Nous regardons en haut, le bourgeois dit: en l’air;
C’est notre infirmité. Nous fuyons la rencontre
Des sots et des méchants. Quand le Dombidau montre
Son crâne et que le Fould avance son menton,
J’aime mieux Jacques Coeur, tu préfères Caton
La gloire des héros, des sages que Dieu crée,
Est notre vision éternelle et sacrée;
Eblouis, l’œil noyé des clartés de l’azur,
Nous passons notre vie à voir dans l’éther pur
Resplendir les géants, penseurs ou capitaines
Nous regardons, au bruit des fanfares lointaines,
Au-dessus de ce monde où l’ombre règne encor,
Mêlant dans les rayons leurs vagues poitrails d’or,
Une foule de chars voler dans les nuées.
Aussi l’essaim des gueux et des prostituées,
Quand il se heurte à nous, blesse nos yeux pensifs.

Soit. Mais réfléchissons. Soyons moins exclusifs.
Je hais les cœurs abjects, et toi, tu t’en défies;
Mais laissons-les en paix dans leurs philosophies.

VII

Et puis, même en dehors de tout ceci, vraiment,
Peut-on blâmer l’instinct et le tempérament?
Ne doit-on pas se faire aux natures des êtres?

La fange a ses amants et l’ordure a ses prêtres;
De la cité bourbier le vice est citoyen;
Où l’un se trouve mal, l’autre se trouve bien;
J’en atteste Minos et j’en fais juge Eaque,
Le paradis du porc, n’est-ce pas le cloaque?
Voyons, en quoi, réponds, génie âpre et subtil,
Cela nous touche-t-il et nous regarde-t-il,
Quand l’homme du serment dans le meurtre patauge,
Quand monsieur Beauharnais fait du pouvoir une auge,
Si quelque évêque arrive et chante alleluia,
Si Saint-Arnaud bénit la main qui le paya,
Si tel ou tel bourgeois le célèbre et le loue,
S’il est des estomacs qui digèrent la boue?
Quoi! quand la France tremble au vent des trahisons,
Stupéfaits et naïfs, nous nous ébahissons
Si Parieu vient manger des glands sous ce grand chêne!
Nous trouvons surprenant que l’eau coule à la Seine,
Nous trouvons merveilleux que Troplong soit Scapin,
Nous trouvons inouï que Dupin soit Dupin!

VIII

Un vieux penchant humain mène à la turpitude.
L’opprobre est un logis, un centre, une habitude,
Un toit, un oreiller, un lit tiède et charmant,
Un bon manteau bien ample où l’on est chaudement.
L’opprobre est le milieu respirable aux immondes.
Quoi! nous nous étonnons d’ouïr dans les deux mondes
Les dupes faisant chœur avec les chenapans,
Les gredins, les niais vanter ce guet-apens!
Mais ce sont là les lois de la mère nature.
C’est de l’antique instinct l’éternelle aventure.
Par le point qui séduit ses appétits flattés
Chaque bête se plaît aux monstruosités.
Quoi! ce crime est hideux! quoi! ce crime est stupide!
N’est-il plus d’animaux pour l’admirer? Le vide
S’est-il fait? N’est-il plus d’êtres vils et rampants?

N’est-il plus de chacals? n’est-il plus de serpents?
Quoi! les baudets ont-ils pris tout à coup des ailes,
Et se sont-ils enfuis aux voûtes éternelles?
De la création l’âne a-t-il disparu?
Quand Cyrus, Annibal, César, montaient à cru
Cet effrayant cheval qu’on appelle la gloire,
Quand, ailés, effarés de joie et de victoire,
Ils passaient flamboyants au fond des cieux vermeils,
Les aigles leur craient: vous êtes nos pareils!
Les aigles leur criaient: vous portez le tonnerre!
Aujourd’hui les hiboux acclament Lacenaire.
Eh bien! je trouve bon que cela soit ainsi.
J’applaudis les hiboux et je leur dis: merci.
La sottise se mêle à ce concert sinistre,
Tant mieux. Dans sa gazette, ô Juvénal, tel cuistre
Déclare, avec messieurs d’Arras et de Beauvais,
Mandrin très bon, et dit l’honnête homme mauvais,
Foule aux pieds les héros et vante les infâmes,
C’est tout simple; et, vraiment, nous serions bonnes âmes
De nous émerveiller lorsque nous entendons
Les Veuillots aux lauriers préférer les chardons!

IX

Donc laissons aboyer la conscience humaine
Comme un chien qui s’agite et qui tire sa chaîne.
Guerre aux justes proscrits! gloire aux coquins fêtés!
Et faisons bonne mine à ces réalités.
Acceptons cet empire unique et véritable.
Saluons sans broncher Trestaillon connétable,
Mingrat grand aumônier, Bosco grand électeur;
Et ne nous fâchons pas s’il advient qu’un rhéteur,
Un homme du sénat, un homme du conclave,
Un eunuque, un cagot, un sophiste, un esclave,
Esprit sauteur prenant la phrase pour tremplin,
Après avoir chanté César de grandeur plein,
Et ses perfections et ses mansuétudes,

Insulte les bannis jetés aux solitudes,
Ces brigands qu’a vaincus Tibère Amphitryon.
Vois-tu, c’est un talent de plus dans l’histrion;
C’est de l’art de flatter le plus exquis peut-être;
On chatouille moins bien Henri huit, le bon maître,
En louant Henri huit qu’en déchirant Morus.
Les dictateurs d’esprit, bourrés d’éloges crus,
Sont friands, dans leur gloire et dans leurs arrogances,
De ces raffinements et de ces élégances.
Poëte, c’est ainsi que les despotes sont.
Le pouvoir, les honneurs sont plus doux quand ils ont
Sur l’échafaud du juste une fenêtre ouverte.
Les exilés, pleurant près de la mer déserte,
Les sages torturés, les martyrs expirants
Sont l’assaisonnement du bonheur des tyrans.
Juvénal, Juvénal, mon vieux lion classique,
Notre vin de Champagne et ton vin de Massique,
Les festins, les palais, et le luxe effréné,
L’adhésion du prêtre et l’amour de Phryné,
Les triomphes, l’orgueil, les respects, les caresses,
Toutes les voluptés et toutes les ivresses
Dont s’abreuvait Séjan, dont se gorgeait Rufin,
Sont meilleures à boire, ont un goût bien plus fin,
Si l’on n’est pas un sot à cervelle exiguë,
Dans la coupe où Socrate hier but la ciguë!

5 février 1853.

Floréal

Au retour des beaux jours, dans ce vert floréal
Où meurent les Danton trahis par les Réal,
Quand l’étable s’agite au fond des métairies,
Quand l’eau vive au soleil se change en pierreries,
Quand la grisette assise, une aiguille à la main,
Soupire, et, de côté regardant le chemin,
Voudrait aller cueillir des fleurs au lieu de coudre,
Quand les nids font l’amour, quand le pommier se poudre
Pour le printemps ainsi qu’un marquis pour le bal,
Quand, par mai réveillés, Charles douze, Annibal,
Disent: c’est l’heure! et font vers les sanglants tumultes
Rouler, l’un les canons, l’autre les catapultes;
Moi, je crie: ô soleil! salut! parmi les fleurs
J’entends les gais pinsons et les merles siffleurs;
L’arbre chante; j’accours; ô printemps! on vit double
Gallus entraîne au bois Lycoris qui se trouble;
Tout rayonne; et le ciel, couvant l’homme enchanté,
N’est plus qu’un grand regard plein de sérénité!
Alors l’herbe m’invite et le pré me convie;
Alors j’absous le sort, je pardonne à la vie,
Et je dis: Pourquoi faire autre chose qu’aimer?
Je sens, comme au dehors, tout en moi s’animer,
Et je dis aux oiseaux: e Petits oiseaux, vous n’êtes
Que des chardonnerets et des bergeronnettes,
Vous ne me connaissez pas même, vous allez
Au hasard dans les champs, dans les bois, dans les blés,
Pêle-mêle, pluviers, grimpereaux, hochequeues,
Dressant vos huppes d’or, lissant vos plumes bleues
Vous êtes, quoique beaux, très bêtes; votre loi,
C’est d’errer; vous chantez en l’air sans savoir quoi
Eh bien, vous m’inondez d’émotions sacrées!
Et quand je vous entends sur les branches dorées,
Oiseaux, mon aile s’ouvre, et mon cœur rajeuni
Boit à l’amour sans fond et s’emplit d’infini!”

Et je me laisse aller aux longues rêveries.
Ô feuilles d'arbre! oubli! bœufs mugissants! prairies!
Mais dans ces moments-là, tu le sais, Juvénal,
Qu'il sorte par hasard de ma poche un journal,
Et que mon œil distrait, qui vers les cieux remonte,
Heurte l'un de ces noms qui veulent dire honte,
Alors toute l'horreur revient; dans les bois verts
Némésis m'apparaît et me montre à travers
Les rameaux et les fleurs sa gorge de furie.

C'est que tu veux tout l'homme, ô devoir! ô patrie!
C'est que lorsque ton flanc saigne, ô France, tu veux
Que l'angoisse nous tienne et dresse nos cheveux,
Que nous ne regardions plus autre chose au monde,
Et que notre œil, noyé dans la pitié profonde,
Cesse de voir les cieux pour ne voir que ton sang!

Et je me lève, et tout s'efface, et, frémissant,
Je n'ai plus sous les yeux qu'un peuple à la torture,
Crimes sans châtiment, griefs sans sépulture,
Les géants garrottés livrés aux avortons,
Femmes dans les cachots, enfants dans les pontons,
Bagnes, sénats, proscrits, cadavres, gémonies
Alors, foulant aux pieds toutes les fleurs ternies,
Je m'enfuis, et je dis à ce soleil si doux:
Je veux l'ombre! et je crie aux oiseaux: taisez-vous!

Et je pleure! et la strophe, éclose de ma bouche,
Bat mon front orageux de son aile farouche.

Ainsi pas de printemps! ainsi pas de ciel bleu!
Ô bandits, et toi, fils d'Hortense de Saint-Leu,
Soyez maudits, d'abord d'être ce que vous êtes,
Et puis soyez maudits d'obséder les poëtes!
Soyez maudits, Troplong, Fould, Magnan, Faustin deux,
De faire au penseur triste un cortège hideux,
De le suivre au désert, dans les champs, sous les ormes,

De mêler aux forêts vos figures difformes!
Soyez maudits, bourreaux qui lui masquez le jour,
D’emplir de haine un cœur qui déborde d’amour!
28 mai. Jersey.

Stella

Je m’étais endormi la nuit près de la grève.
Un vent frais m’éveilla, je sortis de mon rêve,
J’ouvris les yeux, je vis l’étoile du matin.
Elle resplendissait au fond du ciel lointain
Dans sa blancheur molle, infinie et charmante.
Aquilon s’enfuyait emportant la tourmente.
L’astre éclatant changeait la nuée en duvet.
C’était une clarté qui pensait, qui vivait
Elle apaisait l’écueil où la vague déferle
On croyait voir une âme à travers une perle.
Il faisait nuit encor, l’ombre régnait en vain,
Le ciel s’illuminait d’un sourire divin.
La lueur argentait le haut du mât qui penche;
Le navire était noir, mais la voile était blanche
Des goëlands debout sur un escarpement,
Attentifs, contemplaient l’étoile gravement
Comme un oiseau céleste et fait d’une étincelle
L’océan, qui ressemble au peuple, allait vers elle,
Et rugissant tout bas, la regardait briller,
Et semblait avoir peur de la faire envoler.
Un ineffable amour emplissait l’étendue.
L’herbe verte à mes pieds frissonnait éperdue,
Les oiseaux se parlaient dans les nids; une fleur
Qui s’éveillait me dit -. c’est l’étoile ma soeur.
Et pendant qu’à longs plis l’ombre levait son voile,
J’entendis une voix qui venait de l’étoile
Et qui disait: — Je suis l’astre qui vient d’abord.
Je suis celle qu’on croit dans la tombe et qui sort.
J’ai lui sur le Sina, j’ai lui sur le Taygète;
Je suis le caillou d’or et de feu que Dieu jette,
Comme avec une fronde, au front noir de la nuit.
Je suis ce qui renaît quand un monde est détruit.
Ô nations! je suis la poésie ardente.
J’ai brillé sur Moïse et j’ai brillé sur Dante.

Le lion océan est amoureux de moi.
J’arrive. Levez-vous, vertu, courage, foi!
Penseurs, esprits, montez sur la tour, sentinelles!
Paupières, ouvrez-vous, allumez-vous, prunelles,
Terre, émeus le sillon, vie, éveille le bruit,
Debout, vous qui dormez! — car celui qui me suit,
Car celui qui m’envoie en avant la première,
C’est l’ange Liberté, c’est le géant Lumière!
31 août. Jersey.

Les Trois Chevaux

Trois chevaux, qu’on avait attachés au même arbre,
Causaient.

L’un, coureur leste à la croupe de marbre,
Valait cent mille francs, était vainqueur d’Epsom,
Et, tout harnaché d’or, s’écriait: sum qui sum!
Cela parle latin, les bêtes. Des mains blanches
Cent fois de ce pur-sang avaient flatté les hanches,
Et souvent il avait, dans le turf ébloui,
Senti courir les cœurs des femmes après lui.
De là bien des succès à son propriétaire.
Le second quadrupède était un militaire,
Un dada formidable, une brute d’acier,
Un cheval que Racine eût appelé coursier.
Il se dressait, bridé, superbe, ivre de joie,
D’autant plus triomphant qu’il avait l’œil d’une oie.
Sur sa housse on lisait: Essling, Ulm, Iéna.
Il avait la fierté massive que l’on a
Lorsqu’on est orgueilleux de tout ce qu’on ignore;
Son caparaçon fauve était riche et sonore
Il piaffait, il semblait écouter le tambour.

Et le troisième était un cheval de labour.
Un bât de corde au cou, c’était là sa toilette.
Triste bête! on croyait voir marcher un squelette,
Ayant assez de peau sous la bise et le vent
Pour faire un peu l’effet d’un être encor vivant.

Le beau cheval de luxe, espèce de jocrisse,
Disait:

«Ici le pape, et là le baron Brisse;
Pour l’estomac Brébant, pour l’âme Loyola;
Etre béni, bien boire et bien manger, voilà

Ce que prêche mon maître; et moi, roi de la joute,
J’estime que mon maître a raison, et j’ajoute
Que les cocottes font l’ornement du derby.
Il faut au peuple un dieu par les prêtres fourbi,
À nous une écurie en acajou, la bible
Pour l’homme, et des journaux, morbleu, le moins possible.
Le Jockey-Club veut mieux que l’esprit Légion.
Pas de société sans la religion.
Si je n’étais cheval, je voudrais être moine.
— Moi, je voudrais manger parfois un peu d’avoine
Et de foin, soupira le cheval paysan.
Je travaille beaucoup, et je suis, jugez-en
Par ma côte saignante et mon échine maigre,
Presque aussi mal traité que l’homme appelé nègre.
Compter les coups de fouet que je reçois serait
Compter combien d’oiseaux chantent dans la forêt;
J’ai faim, j’ai soif, j’ai froid; je ne suis pas féroce,
Mais je suis malheureux.”

Ainsi parla la rosse.

Le cheval de bataille alors, plein de fureur,
Indigné, bien pensant, dit: — Vive l’empereur!

Applaudissement

Ô grande nation, vous avez à cette heure,
Tandis qu'en bas dans l'ombre on souffre, on râle, on pleure,
Un empire qui fait sonner ses étriers,
Les éblouissements des panaches guerriers,
Une cour où pourrait trôner le roi de Thune,
Une Bourse où l'on peut faire en huit jours fortune,
Des rosières jetant aux soldats leurs bouquets
Vous avez des abbés, des juges, des laquais,
Dansant sur des sacs d'or une danse macabre,
La banque à deux genoux qui harangue le sabre,
Des boulets qu'on empile au fond des arsenaux,
Un sénat, les sermons remplaçant les journaux,
Des maréchaux dorés sur toutes les coutures,
Un Paris qu'on refait tout à neuf, des voitures
À huit chevaux, entrant dans le Louvre à grand bruit,
Des fêtes tout le jour, des bals toute la nuit,
Des lampions, des jeux, des spectacles; en somme,
Tu t'es prostituée à ce misérable homme!

Tout ce que tu conquis est tombé de tes mains;
On dit les vieux français comme les vieux romains,
Et leur nom fait songer leurs fils rouges de honte;
Le monde aimait ta gloire et t'en demande compte,
Car il se réveillait au bruit de ton clairon.
Tu contemples d'un œil abruti ton Néron
Qu'entourent des Romieux déguisés en Sénèques;
Tu te complais à voir brailler ce tas d'évêques
Qui, pendant que César se vautre en son harem,
Entonnent leur Salvum fac imperatorem.
(Au fait, faquin devait se trouver dans la phrase.)
Ton âme est comme un chien sous le pied qui l'écrase
Ton fier quatrevingt-neuf reçoit des coups de fouet
D'un gueux qu'hier encor l'Europe bafouait.
Tes propres souvenirs, folle, tu les lapides.

La Marseillaise est morte à tes lèvres stupides.
Ton Champ de Mars subit ces vainqueurs répugnants,
Ces Maupas, ces Fortouls, ces Bertrands, ces Magnans,
Tous ces tueurs portant le tricorne en équerre,
Et Korte, et Carrelet, et Canrobert Macaire.
Tu n’es plus rien; c’est dit, c’est fait, c’est établi.
Tu ne sais même plus, dans ce lugubre oubli,
Quelle est la nation qui brisa la Bastille.
On te voit le dimanche aller à la Courtille,
Riant, sautant, buvant, sans un instinct moral,
Comme une drôlesse ivre au bras d’un caporal.
Des soufflets qu’il te donne on ne sait plus le nombre.
Et, tout en revenant sur ce boulevard sombre
Où le meurtre a rempli tant de noirs corbillards,
Où bourgeois et passants, femmes, enfants, vieillards,
Tombèrent effarés d’une attaque soudaine,
Tu chantes Turlurette et la Faridondaine!
C’est bien, descends encore et je m’en réjouis,
Car ceci nous promet des retours inouïs,
Car, France, c’est ta loi de ressaisir l’espace,
Car tu seras bien grande ayant été si basse!
L’avenir a besoin d’un gigantesque effort.
Va, traîne l’affreux char d’un satrape ivre-mort,
Toi qui de la victoire as conduit les quadriges.
J’applaudis. Te voilà condamnée aux prodiges.
Le monde, au jour marqué, te verra brusquement
Egaler la revanche à l’avilissement,
Ô Patrie, et sortir, changeant soudain de forme,
Par un immense éclat de cet opprobre énorme
Oui, nous verrons, ainsi va le progrès humain,
De ce vil aujourd’hui naître un fier lendemain,
Et tu rachèteras, ô prêtresse, ô guerrière,
Par cent pas en avant chaque pas en arrière!
Donc recule et descends! tombe, ceci me plaît!
Flatte le pied du maître et le pied du valet!
Plus bas! baise Troplong! plus bas! lèche Baroche
Descends, car le jour vient, descends, car l’heure approche,

Car tu vas t’élancer, ô grand peuple courbé,
Et, comme le jaguar dans un piège tombé,
Tu donnes pour mesure, en tes ardentes luttes,
À la hauteur des bonds la profondeur des chutes!

Oui, je me réjouis; oui, j’ai la foi; je sais
Qu’il faudra bien qu’enfin tu dises: c’est assez!
Tout passe à travers toi comme à travers le crible
Mais tu t’éveilleras bientôt, pâle et terrible,
Peuple, et tu deviendras superbe tout à coup.
De cet empire abject, bourbier, cloaque, égout,
Tu sortiras splendide, et ton aile profonde,
En secouant la fange, éblouira le monde!
Et les couronnes d’or fondront au front des rois,
Et le pape, arrachant sa tiare et sa croix,
Tremblant, se cachera comme un loup sous sa chaire,
Et la Thémis aux bras sanglants, cette bouchère,
S’enfuira vers la nuit, vieux monstre épouvanté,
Et tous les yeux humains s’empliront de clarté,
Et lors battra des mains de l’un à l’autre pôle,
Et tous les opprimés, redressant leur épaule,
Se sentiront vainqueurs, délivrés et vivants,
Rien qu’à te voir jeter ta honte aux quatre vents!
4-6 avril. Jersey.

LIVRE VII: LES SAUVEURS SE SAUVERONT

Sonnez, sonnez toujours, clairons de la pensée

Sonnez, sonnez toujours, clairons de la pensée.

Quand Josué rêveur, la tête aux cieux dressée,
Suivi des siens, marchait, et, prophète irrité,
Sonnait de la trompette autour de la cité,
Au premier tour qu'il fit, le roi se mit à rire;
Au second tour, riant toujours, il lui fit dire:
«Crois-tu donc renverser ma ville avec du vent?"
À la troisième fois l'arche allait en avant,
Puis les trompettes, puis toute l'armée en marche,
Et les petits enfants venaient cracher sur l'arche,
Et, soufflant dans leur trompe, imitaient le clairon;
Au quatrième tour, bravant les fils d'Aaron,
Entre les vieux créneaux tout brunis par la rouille,
Les femmes s'asseyaient en filant leur quenouille,
Et se moquaient, jetant des pierres aux hébreux;
À la cinquième fois, sur ces murs ténébreux,
Aveugles et boiteux vinrent, et leurs huées
Raillaient le noir clairon sonnant sous les nuées
À la sixième fois, sur sa tour de granit
Si haute qu'au sommet l'aigle faisait son nid,
Si dure que l'éclair l'eût en vain foudroyée,
Le roi revint, riant à gorge déployée,
Et cria: « Ces hébreux sont bons musiciens!"
Autour du roi joyeux riaient tous les anciens
Qui le soir sont assis au temple, et délibèrent.

À la septième fois, les murailles tombèrent.
19 mars 1853. Jersey.

La Reculade

I

Je disais: — Ces soldats ont la tête trop basse.
Il va leur ouvrir des chemins.
Le peuple aime la poudre, et quand le clairon passe
La France chante et bat des mains.
La guerre est une pourpre où le meurtre se drape;
Il va crier son: quos ego!
Un beau jour, de son crime, ainsi que d’une trappe,
Nous verrons sortir Marengo.
Il faut bien qu’il leur jette enfin un peu de gloire
Après tant de honte et d’horreur!
Que, vainqueur, il défile avec tout son prétoire
Devant Troplong le procureur;
Qu’il tâche de cacher son carcan à l’histoire,
Et qu’il fasse par le doreur
Ajuster sa sellette au vieux char de victoire
Où monta le grand empereur.
Il voudra devenir César, frapper, dissoudre
Les anciens états ébranlés,
Et, calme, à l’univers montrer, tenant la foudre,
La main qui fit des fausses clés.
Il fera du vieux monde éclater la machine;
Il voudra vaincre et surnager.
Hudson Lowe, Blücher, Wellington, Rostopschine,
Que de souvenirs à venger!
L’occasion abonde à l’époque où nous sommes.
Il saura saisir le moment.
On ne peut pas rester avec cinq cent mille hommes
Dans la fange éternellement.
Il ne peut les laisser courbés sous leur sentence
Il leur faut les hauts faits lointains
À la meute guerrière il faut une pitance
De lauriers et de bulletins.

Ces soldats, que Décembre orne comme une dartre,
Ne peuvent pas, chiens avilis,
Ronger à tout jamais le boulevard Montmartre,
Quand leurs pères ont Austerlitz! —

II

Eh bien non! je rêvais. Illusion détruite!
Gloire! songe, néant, vapeur!
Ô soldats! quel réveil! l’empire, c’est la fuite.
Soldats! l’empire, c’est la peur.
Ce Mandrin de la paix est plein d’instincts placides;
Ce Schinderhannes craint les coups.
Ô châtiment! pour lui vous fûtes parricides,
Soldats, il est poltron pour vous.
Votre gloire a péri sous ce hideux incube
Aux doigts de fange, au cœur d’airain.
Ah! frémissez! le czar marche sur le Danube,
Vous ne marchez pas sur le Rhin!

III

Ô nos pauvres enfants! soldats de notre France!
Ô triste armée à l’œil terni!
Adieu la tente! Adieu les camps! plus d’espérance!
Soldats! soldats! tout est fini!
N’espérez plus laver dans les combats le crime
Dont vous êtes éclaboussés.
Pour nous ce fut le piège et pour vous c’est l’abîme.
Cartouche règne; c’est assez.
Oui, Décembre à jamais vous tient, hordes trompées!
Oui, vous êtes ses vils troupeaux!
Oui, gardez sur vos mains, gardez sur vos épées,
Hélas! gardez sur vos drapeaux
Ces souillures qui font horreur à vos familles
Et qui font sourire Dracon,
Et que ne voudrait pas avoir sur ses guenilles
L’équarrisseur de Montfaucon!

Gardez le deuil, gardez le sang, gardez la boue!
Votre maître hait le danger,
Il vous fait reculer; gardez sur votre joue
L’âpre soufflet de l’étranger!
Ce nain à sa stature a rabaissé vos tailles.
Ce n’est qu’au vol qu’il est hardi.
Adieu la grande guerre et les grandes batailles!
Adieu Wagram! adieu Lodi!
Dans cette horrible glu votre aile est prisonnière.
Derrière un crime il faut marcher.
C’est fini. Désormais vous avez pour bannière
Le tablier de ce boucher!
Renoncez aux combats, au nom de Grande Armée,
Au vieil orgueil des trois couleurs;
Renoncez à l’immense et superbe fumée,
Aux femmes vous jetant des fleurs,
Al’encens, aux grands ares triomphaux que fréquentent
Les ombres des héros le soir;
Hélas! contentez-vous de ces prêtres qui chantent
Des Te Deum dans l’abattoir!
Vous ne conquerrez point la palme expiatoire,
La palme des exploits nouveaux,
Et vous ne verrez pas se dorer dans la gloire
La crinière de vos chevaux!

IV

Donc l’épopée échoue avant qu’elle commence!
Annibal a pris un calmant;
L’Europe admire, et mêle une huée immense
À cet immense avortement.
Donc ce neveu s’en va par la porte bâtarde!
Donc ce sabreur, ce pourfendeur,
Ce masque moustachu dont la bouche vantarde
S’ouvrait dans toute sa grandeur,
Ce césar qu’un valet tous les matins harnache
Pour s’en aller dans les combats,

Cet ogre galonné dont le hautain panache
Faisait oublier le front bas,
Ce tueur qui semblait l’homme que rien n’étonne,
Qui jouait, dans les hosanna,
Tout barbouillé du sang du ruisseau Tiquetonne,
La pantomime d’Iéna,
Ce héros que Dieu fit général des jésuites,
Ce vainqueur qui s’est dit absous,
Montre à Clio son nez meurtri de pommes cuites,
Son œil éborgné de gros sous!
Et notre armée, hélas! sa dupe et sa complice,
Baisse un front lugubre et puni,
Et voit sous les sifflets s’enfuir dans la coulisse
Cet écuyer de Franconi!
Cet histrion, qu’on cingle à grands coups de lanière,
À le crime pour seul talent;
Les Saint-Barthélemy vont mieux à sa manière
Qu’Aboukir et que Friedland.
Le cosaque stupide arrache à ce superbe
Sa redingote à brandebourgs;
L’âne russe a brouté ce Bonaparte en herbe.
Sonnez, clairons! battez, tambours!
Tranche-Montagne, ainsi que Basile, a la fièvre;
La colique empoigne Agramant;
Sur le crâne du loup les oreilles du lièvre
Se dressent lamentablement.
Le fier-à-bras tremblant se blottit dans son antre
Le grand sabre a peur de briller;
La fanfare bégaie et meurt; la flotte rentre
Au port, et l’aigle au poulailler.

V

Et tous ces capitans dont l’épaulette brille
Dans les Louvres et les châteaux
Disent: « Mangeons la France et le peuple en famille.
Sire, les boulets sont brutaux.”

Et Forey va criant: « Majesté, prenez garde.”
Reibell dit: « Morbleu, sacrebleu!
Tenons-nous coi. Le czar fait manœuvrer sa garde.
Ne jouons pas avec le feu.”
Espinasse reprend: « César, gardez la chambre.
Ces kalmoucks ne sont pas manchots.”
Coiffez-vous, dit Leroy, du laurier de décembre,
Prince, et tenez-vous les pieds chauds.”
Et Magnan dit: « Buvons et faisons l’amour, sire!”
Les rêves s’en vont à vau-l’eau.
Et dans sa sombre plaine, ô douleur, j’entends rire
Le noir lion de Waterloo!
Jersey. ler septembre 1853.

Le Chasseur noir

Qu’es-tu, passant? Le bois est sombre,
Les corbeaux volent en grand nombre,
Il va pleuvoir.
— Je suis celui qui va dans l’ombre,
Le Chasseur Noir!

Les feuilles des bois, du vent remuées,
Sifflent… on dirait
Qu’un sabbat nocturne emplit de huées
Toute la forêt;
Dans une clairière au sein des nuées
La lune apparaît.

— Chasse le daim, chasse la biche,
Cours dans les bois, cours dans la friche,
Voici le soir.
Chasse le czar, chasse l’Autriche,
Ô Chasseur Noir!

Les feuilles des bois -

Souffle en ton cor, boucle ta guêtre,
Chasse les cerfs qui viennent paître
Près du manoir.
Chasse le roi, chasse le prêtre,
Ô Chasseur Noir!

Les feuilles des bois -

Il tonne, il pleut, c’est le déluge.
Le renard fuit, pas de refuge
Et pas d’espoir!
Chasse l’espion, chasse le juge,
Ô Chasseur Noir!

Les feuilles des bois -

Tous les démons de saint-Antoine
Bondissent dans la folle avoine
Sans t’émouvoir;
Chasse l’abbé, chasse le moine,
Ô Chasseur Noir!

Les feuilles des bois -

Chasse les ours! ta meute jappe.
Que pas un sanglier n’échappe!
Fais ton devoir!
Chasse César, chasse le pape,
Ô Chasseur Noir!

Les feuilles des bois -

Le loup de ton sentier s’écarte.
Que ta meute à sa suite parte!
Cours! fais-le choir!
Chasse le brigand Bonaparte,
Ô Chasseur Noir!

Les feuilles des bois, du vent remuées,
Tombent… on dirait
Que le sabbat sombre aux rauques huées
À fui la forêt;
Le clair chant du coq perce les nuées;
Ciel! l’aube apparaît!

Tout reprend sa forme première.
Tu redeviens la France altière
Si belle à voir,
L’ange blanc vêtu de lumière,
Ô Chasseur Noir!

Les feuilles des bois, du vent remuées,
Tombent… on dirait
Que le sabbat sombre aux rauques huées
À fui la forêt;
Le clair chant du coq perce les nuées,
Ciel! l’aube apparaît!
Jersey, 22 octobre 1852

L’Égout de Rome

Voici le trou, voici l’échelle. Descendez.
Tandis qu’au corps de garde en face on joue aux dés
En riant sous le nez des matrones bourrues,
  Laissez le crieur rauque, assourdissant les rues,
  Proclamer le numide ou le dace aux abois,
  Et, groupés sous l’auvent des échoppes de bois,
  Les savetiers romains et les marchandes d’herbes
  De la Minerve étrusque échanger les proverbes;
  Descendez.
  Vous voilà dans un lieu monstrueux.
  Enfer d’ombre et de boue aux porches tortueux,
  Où les murs ont la lèpre, où, parmi les pustules,
  Glissent les scorpions mêlés aux tarentules.
  Morne abîme!

  Au-dessus de ce plafond fangeux,
  Dans les cieux, dans le cirque immense et plein de jeux,
  Sur les pavés sabins, dallages centenaires,
  Roulent les chars, les bruits, les vents et les tonnerres;
  Le peuple gronde ou rit dans le forum sacré;
  Le navire d’Ostie au port est amarré,
  L’arc triomphal rayonne, et sur la borne agraire
  Tettent, nus et divins, Rémus avec son frère
  Romulus, louveteaux de la louve d’airain;
  Non loin, le fleuve Tibre épand son flot serein,
  Et la vache au flanc roux y vient boire, et les buffles
  Laissent en fils d’argent l’eau tomber de leurs mufles.
  Le hideux souterrain s’étend dans tous les sens;
  Il ouvre par endroits sous les pieds des passants
  Ses soupiraux infects et flairés par les truies;
  Cette cave se change en fleuve au temps des pluies
  Vers midi, tout au bord du soupirail vermeil,
  Les durs barreaux de fer découpent le soleil,
  Et le mur apparaît semblable au dos des zèbres

Tout le reste est miasme, obscurité, ténèbres
Par places le pavé, comme chez les tueurs,
Paraît sanglant; la pierre a d’affreuses sueurs
Ici l’oubli, la peste et la nuit font leurs œuvres
Le rat heurte en courant la taupe; les couleuvres
Serpentent sur le mur comme de noirs éclairs;
Les tessons, les haillons, les piliers aux pieds verts,
Les reptiles laissant des traces de salives,
La toile d’araignée accrochée aux solives,
Des mares dans les coins, effroyables miroirs,
Où nagent on ne sait quels êtres lents et noirs,
Font un fourmillement horrible dans ces ombres.
La vieille hydre chaos rampe sous ces décombres.
On voit des animaux accroupis et mangeant;
La moisissure rose aux écailles d’argent
Fait sur l’obscur bourbier luire ses mosaïques
L’odeur du lieu mettrait en fuite des stoïques
Le sol partout se creuse en gouffres empestés
Et les chauves-souris volent de tous côtés
Comme au milieu des fleurs s’ébattent les colombes.
On croit, dans cette brume et dans ces catacombes,
Entendre bougonner la mégère Atropos;
Le pied sent dans la nuit le dos mou des crapauds;
L’eau pleure; par moments quelque escalier livide
Plonge lugubrement ses marches dans le vide.
Tout est fétide, informe, abject, terrible à voir.

Le charnier, le gibet, le ruisseau, le lavoir,
Les vieux parfums rancis dans les fioles persanes,
Le lavabo vidé des pâles courtisanes,
L’eau lustrale épandue aux pieds des dieux menteurs,
Le sang des confesseurs et des gladiateurs,
Les meurtres, les festins, les luxures hardies,
Le chaudron renversé des noires Canidies,
Ce que Trimalcion vomit sur le chemin,
Tous les vices de Rome, égout du genre humain,
Suintent, comme en un crible, à travers cette voûte,

Et l’immonde univers y filtre goutte à goutte.
Là-haut, on vit, on teint ses lèvres de carmin,
On a le lierre au front et la coupe à la main,
Le peuple sous les fleurs cache sa plaie impure
Et chante; et c’est ici que l’ulcère suppure.
Ceci, c’est le cloaque, effrayant, vil, glacé.
Et Rome tout entière avec tout son passé,
Joyeuse, souveraine, esclave, criminelle,
Dans ce marais sans fond croupit, fange éternelle.
C’est le noir rendez-vous de l’immense néant;
Toute ordure aboutit à ce gouffre béant;
La vieille au chef branlant qui gronde et qui soupire
Y vide son panier, et le monde l’empire.
L’horreur emplit cet antre, infâme vision.
Toute l’impureté de la création
Tombe et vient échouer sur cette sombre rive.
Au fond, on entrevoit, dans une ombre où n’arrive
Pas un reflet de jour, pas un souffle de vent,
Quelque chose d’affreux qui fut jadis vivant,
Des mâchoires, des yeux, des ventres, des entrailles,
Des carcasses qui font des taches aux murailles
On approche, et longtemps on reste l’œil fixé
Sur ce tas monstrueux, dans la bourbe enfoncé,
Jeté là par un trou redouté des ivrognes,
Sans pouvoir distinguer si ces mornes charognes
Ont une forme encor visible en leurs débris,
Et sont des chiens crevés ou des césars pourris.
30 avril. Jersey.

“C’était en juin, j’étais à Bruxelle; on me dit …

C’était en juin, j’étais à Bruxelle; on me dit:
Savez-vous ce que fait maintenant ce bandit?
Et l’on me raconta le meurtre juridique,
Charlet assassiné sur la place publique,
Cirasse, Cuisinier, tous ces infortunés
Que cet homme au supplice a lui-même traînés
Et qu’il a de ses mains liés sur la bascule.
Ô Sauveur, ô héros, vainqueur de crépuscule, César!
Dieu fait sortir de terre les moissons,
La vigne, l’eau courante abreuvant les buissons,
Les fruits vermeils, la rose où l’abeille butine,
Les chênes, les lauriers, et toi, la guillotine.

Prince qu’aucun de ceux qui lui donnent leurs voix
Ne voudrait rencontrer le soir au coin d’un bois!

J’avais le front brûlant; je sortis par la ville.
Tout m’y parut plein d’ombre et de guerre civile;
Les passants me semblaient des spectres effarés
Je m’enfuis dans les champs paisibles et dorés;
Ô contre-coups du crime au fond de l’âme humaine!
La nature ne put me calmer. L’air, la plaine,
Les fleurs, tout m’irritait; je frémissais devant
Ce monde où je sentais ce scélérat vivant.
Sans pouvoir m’apaiser je fis plus d’une lieue.
Le soir triste monta sous la coupole bleue.
Linceul frissonnant, l’ombre autour de moi s’accrut;
Tout à coup la nuit vint, et la lune apparut
Sanglante, et dans les cieux, de deuil enveloppée,
Je regardai rouler cette tête coupée.
20 mai 1853. Jersey.

Chanson

Sa grandeur éblouit l’histoire.
Quinze ans, il fut
Le dieu que traînait la victoire
Sur un affût;

L’Europe sous la loi guerrière
Se débattit. —
Toi, son singe, marche derrière,
Petit, petit.

Napoléon dans la bataille,
Grave et serein,
Guidait à travers la mitraille
L’aigle d’airain.
Il entra sur le pont d’Arcole,
Il en sortit. —
Voici de l’or, viens, pille et vole,
Petit, petit.

Berlin, Vienne, étaient ses maîtresses;
Il les forçait,
Leste, et prenant les forteresses
Par le corset.

Il triompha de cent bastilles
Qu’il investit. —
Voici pour toi, voici des filles,
Petit, petit.

Il passait les monts et les plaines,
Tenant en main
La palme, la foudre, et les rênes
Du genre humain;

Il était ivre de sa gloire
Qui retentit. —
Voici du sang, accours, viens boire,
Petit, petit.

Quand il tomba, lâchant le monde,
L'immense mer

Ouvrit à sa chute profonde
Son gouffre amer;
Il y plongea, sinistre archange,
Et s'engloutit. —
Toi, tu te noieras dans la fange,
Petit, petit.
Jersey. Septembre 1853.

Patria

(Musique de Beethoven)

Là-haut qui sourit?
Est-ce un esprit?
Est-ce une femme?
Quel front sombre et doux!
 Peuple, à genoux!
Est-ce notre âme
Qui vient à nous?

Cette figure en deuil
Paraît sur notre seuil,

Et notre antique orgueil
Sort du cercueil.
Ses fiers regards vainqueurs
Réveillent tous les cœurs,
Les nids dans les buissons,
 Et les chansons.

C’est l’ange du jour;
L’espoir, l’amour
Du cœur qui pense
Du monde enchanté
 C’est la clarté.
Son nom est France
Ou Vérité.

Bel ange, à ton miroir
Quand s’offre un vil pouvoir,
Tu viens, terrible à voir,
Sous le ciel noir.
Tu dis au monde: Allons!
Formez vos bataillons!

Et le monde ébloui
 Te répond: Oui.

C’est l’ange de nuit.
Rois, il vous suit,
Marquant d’avance

Le fatal moment
 Au firmament.
Son nom est France
Ou Châtiment.
Ainsi que nous voyons
En mai les alcyons,
Voguez, ô nations,
Dans ses rayons!
Son bras aux cieux dressé
Ferme le noir passé
Et les portes de fer
 Du sombre enfer.
C’est l’ange de Dieu.
Dans le ciel bleu
Son aile immense
Couvre avec fierté
 L’humanité.
Son nom est France
Ou Liberté!
Jersey, septembre 1853

La Caravane

I

Sur la terre, tantôt sable, tantôt savane,
L’un à l’autre liés en longue caravane,
Echangeant leur pensée en confuses rumeurs,
Emmenant avec eux les lois, les faits, les mœurs,
Les esprits, voyageurs éternels, sont en marche.
L’un porte le drapeau, les autres portent l’arche;
Ce saint voyage a nom Progrès. De temps en temps,
Ils s’arrêtent, rêveurs, attentifs, haletants,
Puis repartent. En route! ils s’appellent, ils s’aident,
Ils vont! Les horizons aux horizons succèdent,
Les plateaux aux plateaux, les sommets aux sommets.
On avance toujours, on n’arrive jamais.
À chaque étape un guide accourt à leur rencontre;
Quand Jean Huss disparaît, Luther pensif se montre
Luther s’en va, Voltaire alors prend le flambeau
Quand Voltaire s’arrête, arrive Mirabeau.
Ils sondent, pleins d’espoir, une terre inconnue
À chaque pas qu’on fait, la brume diminue;
Ils marchent, sans quitter des yeux un seul instant
Le terme du voyage et l’asile où l’on tend,
Point lumineux au fond d’une profonde plaine,
La Liberté sacrée, éclatante et lointaine,
La Paix dans le travail, l’universel Hymen,
L’Idéal, ce grand but, Mecque du genre humain.

Plus ils vont, plus la foi les pousse et les exalte.
Pourtant, à de certains moments, lorsqu’on fait halte,
Que la fatigue vient, qu’on voit le jour blêmir,
Et qu’on a tant marché qu’il faut enfin dormir,
C’est l’instant où le Mal, prenant toutes les formes,
Morne oiseau, vil reptile ou monstre aux bonds énormes,
Chimère, préjugé, mensonge ténébreux,

C’est l’heure où le Passé, qu’ils laissent derrière eux,
Voyant dans chacun d’eux une proie échappée,
Surprend la caravane assoupie et campée,
Et, sortant hors de l’ombre et du néant profond,
Tâche de ressaisir ces esprits qui s’en vont.

II

Le jour baisse; on atteint quelque colline chauve
Que l’âpre solitude entoure, immense et fauve,
Et dont pas même un arbre, une roche, un buisson
Ne coupe l’immobile et lugubre horizon;
Les tchaouchs, aux lueurs des premières étoiles,
Piquent des pieux en terre et déroulent les toiles;
En cercle autour du camp les feux sont allumés,
Il est nuit. Gloire à Dieu! voyageurs las, dormez.

Non, veillez! car autour de vous tout se réveille.
Ecoutez! écoutez! debout! prêtez l’oreille!
Voici qu’à la clarté du jour zodiacal,
L’épervier gris, le singe obscène, le chacal,
Les rats abjects et noirs, les belettes, les fouines,
Nocturnes visiteurs des tentes bédouines,
L’hyène au pas boiteux qui menace et qui fuit,
Le tigre au crâne plat où nul instinct ne luit,
Dont la férocité ressemble à de la joie,
Tous, les oiseaux de deuil et les bêtes de proie,
Vers le feu rayonnant poussant d’étranges voix,
De tous les points de l’ombre arrivent à la fois.
Dans la brume, pareils aux brigands qui maraudent,
Bandits de la nature, ils sont tous là qui rôdent.
Le foyer se reflète aux yeux des léopards.
Fourmillement terrible! on voit de toutes parts
Des prunelles de braise errer dans les ténèbres.
La solitude éclate en hurlements funèbres.
Des pierres, des fossés, des ravins tortueux,
De partout, sort un bruit farouche et monstrueux.

Car lorsqu’un pas humain pénètre dans ces plaines,
Toujours, à l’heure où l’ombre épanche ses haleines,
Où la création commence son concert,
Le peuple épouvantable et rauque du désert,
Horrible et bondissant sous les pâles nuées,
Accueille l’homme avec des cris et des huées.
Bruit lugubre! chaos des forts et des petits
Cherchant leur proie avec d’immondes appétits!
L’un glapit, l’autre rit, miaule, aboie, ou gronde.
Le voyageur invoque en son horreur profonde
Ou son saint musulman ou son patron chrétien.

Soudain tout fait silence et l’on n’entend plus rien.

Le tumulte effrayant cesse, râles et plaintes
Meurent comme des voix par l’agonie éteintes,
Comme si, par miracle et par enchantement,
Dieu même avait dans l’ombre emporté brusquement
Renards, singes, vautours, le tigre, la panthère,
Tous ces monstres hideux qui sont sur notre terre
Ce que sont les démons dans le monde inconnu.
Tout se tait.

Le désert est muet, vaste et nu.
L’œil ne voit sous les cieux que l’espace sans borne.

Tout à coup, au milieu de ce silence morne
Qui monte et qui s’accroît de moment en moment,
S’élève un formidable et long rugissement!

C’est le lion.

III

Il vient, il surgit où vous êtes,
Le roi sauvage et roux des profondeurs muettes!

Il vient de s’éveiller comme le soir tombait,
Non, comme le loup triste, à l’odeur du gibet,
Non, comme le jaguar, pour aller dans les havres
Flairer si la tempête a jeté des cadavres,
Non, comme le chacal furtif et hasardeux,
Pour déterrer la nuit les morts, spectres hideux,
Dans quelque champ qui vit la guerre et ses désastres;
Mais pour marcher dans l’ombre à la clarté des astres.
Car l’azur constellé plaît à son œil vermeil;
Car Dieu fait contempler par l’aigle le soleil,
Et fait par le lion regarder les étoiles.
Il vient, du crépuscule il traverse les voiles,
Il médite, il chemine à pas silencieux,
Tranquille et satisfait sous la splendeur des cieux;
Il aspire l’air pur qui manquait à son antre;
Sa queue à coups égaux revient battre son ventre,
Et, dans l’obscurité qui le sent approcher,
Rien ne le voit venir, rien ne l’entend marcher.
Les palmiers, frissonnant comme des touffes d’herbe,
Frémissent. C’est ainsi que, paisible et superbe,
Il arrive toujours par le même chemin,
Et qu’il venait hier, et qu’il viendra demain,
À cette heure où Vénus à l’occident décline.
Et quand il s’est trouvé proche de la colline,
Marquant ses larges pieds dans le sable mouvant,
Avant même que l’œil d’aucun être vivant
Eût pu, sous l’éternel et mystérieux dôme,
Voir poindre à l’horizon son vague et noir fantôme,
Avant que dans la plaine il se fût avancé,
Il se taisait; son souffle a seulement passé,
Et ce souffle a suffi, flottant à l’aventure,
Pour faire tressaillir la profonde nature,
Et pour faire soudain taire au plus fort du bruit
Toutes ces sombres voix qui hurlent dans la nuit.

IV

Ainsi, quand, de ton antre enfin poussant la pierre,

Et las du long sommeil qui pèse à ta paupière,
Ô peuple, ouvrant tes yeux d’où sort une clarté,
Tu te réveilleras dans ta tranquillité,
Le jour où nos pillards, où nos tyrans sans nombre
Comprendront que quelqu’un remue au fond de l’ombre,
Et que c’est toi qui viens, ô lion! ce jour-là,
Ce vil groupe où Falstaff s’accouple à Loyola,
Tous ces gueux devant qui la probité se cabre,
Les traîneurs de soutane et les traîneurs de sabre,
Le général Soufflard, le juge Barabbas,
Le jésuite au front jaune, à l’œil féroce et bas,
Disant son chapelet dont les grains sont des balles,
Les Mingrats bénissant les Héliogabales,
Les Veuillots qui naguère, errant sans feu ni lieu,
Avant de prendre en main la cause du bon Dieu,
Avant d’être des saints, traînaient dans les ribotes
Les haillons de leur style et les trous de leurs bottes,
L’archevêque, ouléma du Christ ou de Mahom,
Mâchant avec l’hostie un sanglant Te Deum,
Les Troplong, Les Rouher, violateurs de chartes,
Grecs qui tiennent les lois comme ils tiendraient les cartes,
Les beaux fils dont les mains sont rouges sous leurs gants.
Ces dévots, ces viveurs, ces bedeaux, ces brigands,
Depuis les hommes vils jusqu’aux hommes sinistres,
Tout ce tas monstrueux de gredins et de cuistres
Qui grincent, l’œil ardent, le mufle ensanglanté,
Autour de la raison et de la vérité,
Tous, du maître au goujat, du bandit au maroufle,
Pâles, rien qu’à sentir au loin passer ton souffle,
Feront silence, ô peuple! et tous disparaîtront
Subitement, l’éclair ne sera pas plus prompt,
Cachés, évanouis, perdus dans la nuit sombre,
Avant même qu’on ait entendu, dans cette ombre
Où les justes tremblants aux méchants sont mêlés,
Ta grande voix monter vers les cieux étoilés!
25 novembre 1852.

Cette nuit, il pleuvait, la marée était haute

Cette nuit, il pleuvait, la marée était haute,
Un brouillard lourd et gris couvrait toute la côte,
Les brisants aboyaient comme des chiens, le flot
Aux pleurs du ciel profond joignait son noir sanglot,
L'infini secouait et mêlait dans son urne
Les sombres tournoiements de l'abîme nocturne;
Les bouches de la nuit semblaient rugir dans l'air.

J'entendais le canon d'alarme sur la mer.
Des marins en détresse appelaient à leur aide.
Dans l'ombre où la rafale aux rafales succède,
Sans pilote, sans mât, sans ancre, sans abri,
Quelque vaisseau perdu jetait son dernier cri.
Je sortis. Une vieille, en passant effarée,
Me dit: « Il a péri; c'est un chasse-marée."
Je courus à la grève et ne vis qu'un linceul
De brouillard et de nuit, et l'horreur, et moi seul;
Et la vague, dressant sa tête sur l'abîme,
Comme pour éloigner un témoin de son crime,
Furieuse, se mit à hurler après moi.

Qu'es-tu donc, Dieu jaloux, Dieu d'épreuve et d'effroi,
Dieu des écroulements, des gouffres, des orages,
Que tu n'es pas content de tant de grands naufrages,
Qu'après tant de puissants et de forts engloutis,
Il te reste du temps encor pour les petits,
Que sur les moindres fronts ton bras laisse sa marque,
Et qu'après cette France, il te faut cette barque!
Jersey, 5 avril.

Ce serait une erreur de croire que ces choses

I

Ce serait une erreur de croire que ces choses
Finiront par des chants et des apothéoses;
Certe, il viendra, le rude et fatal châtiment;
Jamais l'arrêt d'en haut ne recule et ne ment,
Mais ces jours effrayants seront des jours sublimes.
Tu feras expier à ces hommes leurs crimes,
Ô peuple généreux, ô peuple frémissant,
Sans glaive, sans verser une goutte de sang,
Par la loi; sans pardon, sans fureur, sans tempête.
Non, que pas un cheveu ne tombe d'une tête;
Que l'on n'entende pas une bouche crier;
Que pas un scélérat ne trouve un meurtrier.
Les temps sont accomplis; la loi de mort est morte;
Du vieux charnier humain nous avons clos la porte.
Tous ces hommes vivront. — Peuple, pas même lui!

Nous le disions hier, nous venons aujourd'hui
Le redire, et demain nous le dirons encore,
Nous qui des temps futurs portons au front l'aurore,
Parce que nos esprits, peut-être pour jamais,
De l'adversité sombre habitent les sommets;
Nous les absents, allant où l'exil nous envoie;
Nous: proscrits, qui sentons, pleins d'une douce joie,
Dans le bras qui nous frappe une main nous bénir;
Nous, les germes du grand et splendide avenir
Que le Seigneur, penché sur la famille humaine,
Sema dans un sillon de misère et de peine.

II

Ils tremblent, ces coquins, sous leur nom accablant;
Ils ont peur pour leur tête infâme, ou font semblant;

Mais, marauds, ce serait déshonorer la Grève!
Des révolutions remuer le vieux glaive
Pour eux! y songent-ils? diffamer l'échafaud!
Mais, drôles, des martyrs qui marchaient le front haut,
Des justes, des héros, souriant à l'abîme,
Son morts sur cette planche et l'ont faite sublime!
Quoi! Charlotte Corday, quoi! madame Roland
Sous cette grande hache ont posé leur cou blanc,
Elles l'ont essuyée avec leur tresse blonde,
Et Magnan y viendrait faire sa tache immonde!
Où le lion gronda, grognerait le pourceau!
Pour Rouher, Fould et Suin, ces rebuts du ruisseau,
L'échafaud des Camille et des Vergniaud superbes!
Quoi, grand Dieu, pour Troplong la mort de Malesherbes!
Traiter le sieur Delangle ainsi qu'André Chénier!
Jeter ces têtes-là dans le même panier,
Et, dans ce dernier choc qui mêle et qui rapproche,
Faire frémir Danton du contact de Baroche!
Non, leur règne, où l'atroce au burlesque se joint,
Est une mascarade, et, ne l'oublions point,
Nous en avons pleuré, mais souvent nous en rimes.
Sous prétexte qu'il a commis beaucoup de crimes,
Et qu'il est assassin autant que charlatan,
Paillasse après Saint-Just, Robespierre et Titan,
Monterait cette échelle effrayante et sacrée!
Après avoir coupé le cou de Briarée,
Ce glaive couperait la tête d'Arlequin!
Non, non! maître Rouher, vous êtes un faquin,
Fould, vous êtes un fat, Suin, vous êtes un cuistre.
L'échafaud est le lieu du triomphe sinistre,
Le piédestal, dressé sur le noir cabanon,
Qui fait tomber la tête et fait surgir le nom,
C'est le faîte vermeil d'où le martyr s'envole,
C'est la hache impuissante à trancher l'auréole,
C'est le créneau sanglant, étrange et redouté,
Par où l'âme se penche et voit l'éternité.
Ce qu'il faut, ô justice, à ceux de cette espèce,

C’est le lourd bonnet vert, c’est la casaque épaisse,
C’est le poteau; c’est Brest, c’est Clairvaux, c’est Toulon
C’est le boulet roulant derrière leur talon,
Le fouet et le bâton, la chaîne, âpre compagne,
Et les sabots sonnant sur le pavé du bagne!
Qu’ils vivent accouplés et flétris! L’échafaud,
Sévère, n’en veut pas. Qu’ils vivent, il le faut,
L’un avec sa simarre et l’autre avec son cierge!
La mort devant ces gueux baisse ses yeux de vierge.

Quand l’eunuque régnait à côté du césar

Quand l’eunuque régnait à côté du césar,
Quand Tibère, et Caïus, et Néron, sous leur char
Foulaient Rome, plus morte, hélas! que Babylone,
Le poëte saisit ces bourreaux sur leur trône;
La muse entre deux vers, tout vivants, les scia.
Toi, faux prince, cousin du blême hortensia,
Hidalgo par ta femme, amiral par ta mère,
Tu règnes par décembre et tu vis sur brumaire,
Mais la muse t’a pris; et maintenant, c’est bien,
Tu tressailles aux mains du sombre historien.
Pourtant, quoique tremblant sous la verge lyrique,
Tu dis dans ton orgueil: — Je vais être historique. —
Non, coquin! le charnier des rois t’est interdit.
Non, tu n’entreras point dans l’histoire, bandit!
Haillon humain, hibou déplumé, bête morte,
Tu resteras dehors et cloué sur la porte.
1er août 1853. Jersey.

Paroles d’un conservateur à propos d’un perturbateur

Etait-ce un rêve? étais-je éveillé? jugez-en.
Un homme, — était-il grec, juif, chinois, turc, persan? —
Un membre du parti de l’ordre, véridique
Et grave, me disait: « Cette mort juridique
Frappant ce charlatan, anarchiste éhonté,
Est juste. Il faut que l’ordre et que l’autorité
Se défendent. Comment souffrir qu’on les discute?
D’ailleurs les lois sont là pour qu’on les exécute.
Il est des vérités éternelles qu’il faut
Faire prévaloir, fût-ce au prix de l’échafaud.
Ce novateur prêchait une philosophie.
Amour, progrès, mots creux, et dont je me défie.
Il raillait notre culte antique et vénéré.
Cet homme était de ceux qui n’ont rien de sacré,
Il ne respectait rien de tout ce qu’on respecte.
Pour leur inoculer sa doctrine suspecte,
Il allait ramassant dans les plus méchants lieux
Des bouviers, des pêcheurs, des drôles bilieux,
D’immondes va-nu-pieds n’ayant ni sou ni maille;
Il faisait son cénacle avec cette canaille.
Il ne s’adressait pas à l’homme intelligent,
Sage, honorable, ayant des rentes, de l’argent,
Du bien; il n’avait garde. Il égarait les masses
Avec des doigts levés en l’air et des grimaces,
Il prétendait guérir malades et blessés
Contrairement aux lois. Mais ce n’est pas assez.
L’imposteur, s’il vous plaît, tirait les morts des fosses.
Il prenait de faux noms et des qualités fausses,
Et se faisait passer pour ce qu’il n’était pas.
Il errait au hasard, disant: — Suivez mes pas, —
Tantôt dans la campagne et tantôt dans la ville.
N’est-ce pas exciter à la guerre civile,

Au mépris, à la haine entre les citoyens?
On voyait accourir vers lui d’affreux payens,
Couchant dans les fossés et dans les fours à plâtre,
L’un boiteux, l’autre sourd, l’autre un œil sous l’emplâtre
L’autre râclant sa plaie avec un vieux tesson.
L’honnête homme indigné rentrait dans sa maison
Quand ce jongleur passait avec cette séquelle.
Dans une fête, un jour, je ne sais plus laquelle,
Cet homme prit un fouet, et criant, déclamant,
Il se mit à chasser, mais fort brutalement,
Des marchands patentés, le fait est authentique,
Très braves gens tenant sur le parvis boutique,
Avec permission, ce qui, je crois, suffit,
Du clergé qui touchait sa part de leur profit.
Il traînait à sa suite une espèce de fille
Il allait, pérorant, ébranlant la famille,
Et la religion, et la société;
Il sapait la morale et la propriété;
Le peuple le suivait, laissant les champs en friches;
C’était fort dangereux. Il attaquait les riches,
Il flagornait le pauvre, affirmant qu’ici-bas
Les hommes sont égaux et frères, qu’il n’est pas
De grands ni de petits, d’esclaves ni de maîtres,
Que le fruit de la terre est à tous; quant aux prêtres,
Il les déchirait; bref, il blasphémait. Cela
Dans la rue. Il contait toutes ces horreurs-là
Aux premiers gueux venus, sans cape et sans semelles.
Il fallait en finir, les lois étaient formelles,
On l’a crucifié.”
Ce mot, dit d’un air doux,
Me frappa. Je lui dis: « Mais qui donc êtes-vous?”
Il répondit: « Vraiment, il fallait un exemple.
Je m’appelle Elizab, je suis scribe du temple.
— Et de qui parlez-vous?” demandai-je. Il reprit:
“Mais! de ce vagabond qu’on nomme Jésus-Christ.”
25 décembre 1852. Jersey.

Force des choses

Que devant les coquins l’honnête homme soupire;
Que l’histoire soit laide et plate; que l’empire
Boite avec Talleyrand ou louche avec Parieu;
Qu’un tour d’escroc bien fait ait nom grâce de Dieu;
Que le pape en massue ait changé sa houlette;
Qu’on voie au Champ de Mars piaffer sous l’épaulette
Le Meurtre général, le Vol aide de camp;
Que hors de l’Elysée un prince débusquant,
Qu’un flibustier quittant l’île de la Tortue,
Assassine, extermine, égorge, pille et tue;
Que les bonzes chrétiens, cognant sur leur tam-tam
Hurlent devant Soufflard: Attollite portam!
Que pour claqueurs le crime ait cent journaux infâmes,
Ceux qu’à la maison d’or, sur les genoux des femmes,
Griffonnent les Romieux, le verre en main, et ceux
Que saint-Ignace inspire à des gredins crasseux;
Qu’en ces vils tribunaux, où le regard se heurte
De Moreau de la Seine à Moreau de la Meurthe,
La justice ait reçu d’horribles horions;
Que, sur un lit de camp, par des centurions
La loi soit violée et râle à l’agonie;
Que cet être choisi, créé par Dieu génie,
L’homme, adore à genoux le loup fait empereur;
Qu’en un éclat de rire abrégé par l’horreur,
Tout ce que nous voyons aujourd’hui se résume;
Qu’Hautpoul vende son sabre et Cucheval sa plume;
Que tous les grands bandits, en petit copiés,
Revivent; qu’on emplisse un sénat de plats-pieds
Dont la servilité négresse et mamelouque
Eût révolté Mahmoud et lasserait Soulouque;
Que l’or soit le seul culte, et qu’en ce temps vénal,
Coffre-fort étant Dieu, Gousset soit cardinal;
Que la vieille Thémis ne soit plus qu’une gouine
Baisant Mandrin dans l’antre où Mongis baragouine;

Que Montalembert bave accoudé sur l’autel;
Que Veuillot sur Sibour crève sa poche au fiel;
Qu’on voie aux bals de cour s’étaler des guenipes
Qui le long des trottoirs traînaient hier leurs nippes,
Beautés de lansquenet avec un profil grec;
Que Haynau dans Brescia soit pire que Lautrec;
Que partout, des Sept-Tours aux colonnes d’Hercule,
Napoléon, le poing sur la hanche, recule,
Car l’aigle est vieux, Essling grisonne, Marengo
À la goutte, Austerlitz est pris d’un lombago;
Que le czar russe ait peur tout autant que le nôtre;
Que l’ours noir et l’ours blanc tremblent l’un devant l’autre;
Qu’avec son grand panache et sur son grand cheval
Rayonne Saint-Arnaud, ci-devant Florival,
Fort dans la pantomime et les combats à l’hache;
Que Sodome se montre et que Paris se cache;
Qu’Escobar et Houdin vendent le même onguent;
Que grâce à tous ces gueux qu’on touche avec le gant,
Tout dorés au dehors, au dedans noirs de lèpres,
Courant les bals, courant les jeux, allant à vêpres,
Grâce à ces bateleurs mêlés aux scélérats,
La Saint-Barthélemy s’achève en mardi gras;
Ô nature profonde et calme, que t’importe!
Nature, Isis voilée assise à notre porte,
Impénétrable aïeule aux regards attendris,
Vieille comme Cybèle et fraîche comme Iris,
Ce qu’on fait ici-bas s’en va devant ta face;
À ton rayonnement toute laideur s’efface;
Tu ne t’informes pas quel drôle ou quel tyran
Est fait premier chanoine à Saint-Jean-de-Latran;
Décembre, les soldats ivres, les lois faussées,
Les cadavres mêlés aux bouteilles cassées,
Ne te font rien; tu suis ton flux et ton reflux.
Quand l’homme des faubourgs s’endort et ne sait plus
Bourrer dans un fusil des balles de calibre;
Quand le peuple français n’est plus le peuple libre;
Quand mon esprit, fidèle au but qu’il se fixa,

Sur cette léthargie applique un vers moxa,
Toi, tu rêves; souvent du fond des geôles sombres,
Sort, comme d’un enfer, le murmure des ombres
Que Baroche et Rouher gardent sous les barreaux,
Car ce tas de laquais est un tas de bourreaux;
Etant les cœurs de boue, ils sont les cœurs de roche;
Ma strophe alors se dresse, et, pour cingler Baroche,
Se taille un fouet sanglant dans Rouher écorché;
Toi, tu ne t’émeus point; flot sans cesse épanché,
La vie indifférente emplit toujours tes urnes;
Tu laisses s’élever des attentats nocturnes,
Des crimes, des fureurs, de Rome mise en croix,
De Paris mis aux fers, des guets-apens des rois,
Des pièges, des serments, des toiles d’araignées,
L’orageuse clameur des âmes indignées;
Dans ce calme où toujours tu te réfugias,
Tu laisses le fumier croupir chez Augias,
Et renaître un passé dont nous nous affranchîmes,
Et le sang rajeunir les abus cacochymes,
La France en deuil jeter son suprême soupir,
Les prostitutions chanter, et se tapir
Les lâches dans leurs trous, la taupe en ses cachettes,
Et gronder les lions, et rugir les poëtes!
Ce n’est pas ton affaire à toi de t’irriter.
Tu verrais, sans frémir et sans te révolter,
Sur tes fleurs, sous tes pins, tes ifs et tes érables,
Errer le plus coquin de tous ces misérables.
Quand Troplong, le matin, ouvre un œil chassieux,
Vénus, splendeur sereine éblouissant les cieux,
Vénus, qui devrait fuir courroucée et hagarde,
N’a pas l’air de savoir que Troplong la regarde!
Tu laisserais cueillir une rose à Dupin!
Tandis que, de velours recouvrant le sapin,
L’escarpe couronné que l’Europe surveille,
Trône et guette, et qu’il a, lui parlant à l’oreille,
D’un côté Loyola, de l’autre Trestaillon,
Ton doigt au blé dans l’ombre entrouvre le sillon.

Pendant que l’horreur sort des sénats, des conclaves,
Que les États-Unis ont des marchés d’esclaves
Comme en eut Rome avant que Jésus-Christ passât,
Que l’américain libre à l’africain forçat
Met un bât, et qu’on vend des hommes pour des piastres,
Toi, tu gonfles la mer, tu fais lever les astres,
Tu courbes l’arc-en-ciel, tu remplis les buissons
D’essaims, l’air de parfums et les nids de chansons,
Tu fais dans le bois vert la toilette des roses,
Et tu fais concourir, loin des hommes moroses,
Pour des prix inconnus par les anges cueillis,
La candeur de la vierge et la blancheur du lys.
Et quand, tordant ses mains devant les turpitudes,
Le penseur douloureux fuit dans tes solitudes,
Tu lui dis: Viens! c’est moi! moi que rien ne corrompt!
Je t’aime! et tu répands dans l’ombre, sur son front
Où de l’artère ardente il sent battre les ondes,
L’âcre fraîcheur de l’herbe et des feuilles profondes!
Par moments, à te voir, parmi les trahisons,
Mener paisiblement tes mois et tes saisons,
À te voir impassible et froide, quoi qu’on fasse,
Pour qui ne creuse point plus bas que la surface,
Tu sembles bien glacée, et l’on s’étonne un peu.
Quand les proscrits, martyrs du peuple, élus de Dieu,
Stoïques, dans la mort se couchent sans se plaindre,
Tu n’as l’air de songer qu’à dorer et qu’à peindre
L’aile du scarabée errant sur leurs tombeaux.
Les rois font les gibets, toi, tu fais les corbeaux.
Tu mets le même ciel sur le juste et l’injuste.
Occupée à la mouche, à la pierre, à l’arbuste,
Aux mouvements confus du vil monde animal,
Tu parais ignorer le bien comme le mal;
Tu laisses l’homme en proie à sa misère aiguë.
Que t’importe Socrate! et tu fais la ciguë.
Tu créas le besoin, l’instinct et l’appétit;
Le fort mange le faible et le grand le petit,
L’ours déjeune du rat, l’autour de la colombe,

Qu’importe! allez, naissez, fourmillez pour la tombe,
Multitudes! vivez, tuez, faites l’amour,
Croissez! le pré verdit, la nuit succède au jour,
L’âne brait, le cheval hennit, le taureau beugle.
Ô figure terrible, on te croirait aveugle!
Le bon et le mauvais se mêlent sous tes pas.
Dans cet immense oubli, tu ne vois même pas
Ces deux géants lointains penchés sur ton abîme,
Satan, père du mal, Caïn, père du crime!
Erreur! erreur! erreur! ô géante aux cent yeux,
Tu fais un grand labeur, saint et mystérieux!
Oh! qu’un autre que moi te blasphème, ô nature
Tandis que notre chaîne étreint notre ceinture,
Et que l’obscurité s’étend de toutes parts,
Les principes cachés, les éléments épars,
Le fleuve, le volcan à la bouche écarlate,
Le gaz qui se condense et l’air qui se dilate,
Les fluides, l’éther, le germe sourd et lent,
Sont autant d’ouvriers dans l’ombre travaillant;
Ouvriers sans sommeil, sans fatigue, sans nombre.
Tu viens dans cette nuit, libératrice sombre!
Tout travaille, l’aimant, le bitume, le fer,
Le charbon; pour changer en éden notre enfer,
Les forces à ta voix sortent du fond des gouffres.

Tu murmures tout bas: — Race d’Adam qui souffres,
Hommes, forçats pensants au vieux monde attachés,
Chacune de mes lois vous délivre. Cherchez! —
Et chaque jour surgit une clarté nouvelle,
Et le penseur épie et le hasard révèle;
Toujours le vent sema, le calcul récolta.
Ici Fulton, ici Galvani, là Volta,
Sur tes secrets profonds que chaque instant nous livre,
Rêvent; l’homme ébloui déchiffre enfin ton livre.
D’heure en heure on découvre un peu plus d’horizon
Comme un coup de bélier au mur d’une prison,
Du genre humain qui fouille et qui creuse et qui sonde,

Chaque tâtonnement fait tressaillir le monde.
L’hymen des nations s’accomplit. Passions,
Intérêts, mœurs et lois, les révolutions
Par qui le cœur humain germe et change de formes,
Paris, Londres, New-York, les continents énormes,
Ont pour lien un fil qui tremble au fond des mers.
Une force inconnue, empruntée aux éclairs,
Mêle au courant des flots le courant des idées.
La science, gonflant ses ondes débordées,
Submerge trône et sceptre, idole et potentat.
Tout va, pense, se meut, s’accroît. L’aérostat
Passe, et du haut des cieux ensemence les hommes.
Chanaan apparaît; le voilà, nous y sommes!
L’amour succède aux pleurs et l’eau vive à la mort,
Et la bouche qui chante à la bouche qui mord.
La science, pareille aux antiques pontifes,
Attelle aux chars tonnants d’effrayants hippogriffes
Le feu souffle aux naseaux de la bête d’airain.
Le globe esclave cède à l’esprit souverain.
Partout où la terreur régnait, où marchait l’homme,
Triste et plus accablé que la bête de somme,
Traînant ses fers sanglants que l’erreur a forgés,
Partout où les carcans sortaient des préjugés,
Partout où les césars, posant le pied sur l’âme,
Etouffaient la clarté, la pensée et la flamme,
Partout où le mal sombre, étendant son réseau,
Faisait ramper le ver, tu fais naître l’oiseau!
Par degrés, lentement, on voit sous ton haleine
La liberté sortir de l’herbe de la plaine,
Des pierres du chemin, des branches des forêts,
Rayonner, convertir la science en décrets,
Du vieil univers mort briser la carapace,
Emplir le feu qui luit, l’eau qui bout, l’air qui passe,
Gronder dans le tonnerre, errer dans les torrents,
Vivre! et tu rends le monde impossible aux tyrans!
La matière, aujourd’hui vivante, jadis morte,
Hier écrasait l’homme et maintenant l’emporte.

Le bien germe à toute heure et la joie en tout lieu.
Oh! sois fière en ton cœur, toi qui, sous l’œil de Dieu,
Nous prodigues les dons que ton mystère épanche,
Toi qui regardes, comme une mère se penche
Pour voir naître l’enfant que son ventre a porté,
De ton flanc éternel sortir l’humanité!
Vie! idée! avenir bouillonnant dans les têtes!
Le progrès, reliant entre elles ses conquêtes,
Gagne un point après l’autre, et court contagieux.
De cet obscur amas de faits prodigieux
Qu’aucun regard n’embrasse et qu’aucun mot ne nomme,
Tu nais plus frissonnant que l’aigle, esprit de l’homme,
Refaisant mœurs, cités, codes, religion.
Le passé n’est que l’oeuf d’où tu sors, Légion!
Ô nature! c’est là ta genèse sublime.
Oh! l’éblouissement nous prend sur cette cime!
Le monde, réclamant l’essor que Dieu lui doit,
Vibre, et dès à présent, grave, attentif, le doigt
Sur la bouche, incliné sur les choses futures,
Sur la création et sur les créatures,
Une vague lueur dans son œil éclatant,
Le voyant, le savant, le philosophe entend
Dans l’avenir, déjà vivant sous ses prunelles,
La palpitation de ces millions d’ailes!
23 mai 1853. Jersey.

Chanson

À quoi ce proscrit pense-t-il
À son champ d’orge ou de laitue,
À sa charrue, à son outil,
À la grande France abattue.
Hélas! le souvenir le tue.
Pendant qu’on rente les Dupin
Le pauvre exilé souffre et prie.
— On ne peut pas vivre sans pain;
On ne peut pas non plus vivre sans la patrie.

L’ouvrier rêve l’atelier,
Et le laboureur sa chaumière,
Les pots de fleurs sur l’escalier,
Le feu brillant, la vitre claire,
Au fond le lit de la grand’mère.
Quatre gros glands de vieux crépin
En faisaient la coquetterie.
— On ne peut pas vivre sans pain
On ne peut pas non plus vivre sans la patrie. —

En mai volait la mouche à miel
On voyait courir dans les seigles
Les moineaux, partageux du ciel
Ils pillaient nos champs, ces espiègles,
Tout comme s’ils étaient des aigles.
Un château du temps de Pépin
Croulait près de la métairie.
— On ne peut pas vivre sans pain;
On ne peut pas non plus vivre sans la patrie. —

Avec sa lime ou son maillet
On soutenait enfants et femme
De l’aube au soir on travaillait
Et le travail égayait l’âme.

Ô saint travail! lumière et flamme!
De Watt, de Jacquart, de Papin,
La jeunesse ainsi fut nourrie.
— On ne peut pas vivre sans pain;
On ne peut pas non plus vivre sans la patrie. —

Les jours de fête, l’ouvrier
Laissait les soucis en fourrière
Chantant les chants de février,
Blouse au vent, casquette en arrière,
On s’en allait à la barrière.
On mangeait un douteux lapin
Et l’on buvait à la Hongrie.
— On ne peut pas vivre sans pain;
On ne peut pas non plus vivre sans la patrie. —

Les dimanches le paysan
Appelait Jeanne ou Jacqueline,
Et disait: « Femme, viens-nous-en,
Mets ta coiffe de mousseline!”
Et l’on dansait sur la colline.
Le sabot, et non l’escarpin,
Foulait gaîment l’herbe fleurie!
— On ne peut pas vivre sans pain;
On ne peut pas non plus vivre sans la patrie. —

Les exilés s’en vont pensifs.
Leur âme, hélas! n’est plus entière.
Ils regardent l’ombre des ifs
Sur les fosses du cimetière;
L’un songe à l’Allemagne altière,
L’autre au beau pays transalpin,
L’autre à sa Pologne chérie.
— On ne peut pas vivre sans pain;
On ne peut pas non plus vivre sans la patrie. —

Un proscrit, lassé de souffrir,

Mourait; calme, il fermait son livre;
Et je lui dis: « Pourquoi mourir?
Il me répondit: « Pourquoi vivre?”
Puis il reprit:
Je me délivre.
Adieu! je meurs. Néron-Scapin
Met aux fers la France flétrie…”
— On ne peut pas vivre sans pain;
On ne peut pas non plus vivre sans la patrie. —

«… Je meurs de ne plus voir les champs
Où je regardais l’aube naître,
De ne plus entendre les chants
Que j’entendais de ma fenêtre.
Mon âme est où je ne puis être.
Sous quatre planches de sapin,
Enterrez-moi dans la prairie.”
— On ne peut pas vivre sans pain;
On ne peut pas non plus vivre sans la patrie. —
13 avril 1853. Jersey.

“Il est des jours abjects où, séduits par la joie

Il est des jours abjects où, séduits par la joie
Sans honneur,
Les peuples au succès se livrent, triste proie
Du bonheur.

Alors des nations, que berce un fatal songe
Dans leur lit,
La vertu coule et tombe, ainsi que d’une éponge
L’eau jaillit.

Alors, devant le mal, le vice, la folle,
Les vivants
Imitent les saluts du vil roseau qui plie
Sous les vents.

Alors festins et jeux; rien de ce que dit l’âme
Ne s’entend;
On boit, on mange, on chante, on danse, on est infâme
Et content.

Le crime heureux, servi par d’immondes ministres,
Sous les cieux
Rit, et vous frissonnez, grands ossements sinistres
Des aïeux.

On vit honteux, les yeux troubles, le pas oblique,
Hébété
Tout à coup un clairon jette aux vents: République!
Liberté!

Et le monde, éveillé par cette âpre fanfare,
Est pareil
Aux ivrognes de nuit qu’en se levant effare
Le soleil.

Jersey, 1853.

Ultima verba

La conscience humaine est morte; dans l’orgie,
Sur elle il s’accroupit; ce cadavre lui plaît;
Par moments, gai, vainqueur, la prunelle rougie,
  Il se retourne et donne à la morte un soufflet.

La prostitution du juge est la ressource.
Les prêtres font frémir l’honnête homme éperdu;
Dans le champ du potier ils déterrent la bourse;
Sibour revend le Dieu que Judas a vendu.

Ils disent: — César règne, et le Dieu des armées
L’a fait son élu. Peuple, obéis, tu le dois! —
Pendant qu’ils vont chantant, tenant leurs mains fermées,
On voit le sequin d’or qui passe entre leurs doigts.

Oh! tant qu’on le verra trôner, ce gueux, ce prince,
Par le pape béni, monarque malandrin,
Dans une main le sceptre et dans l’autre la pince,
Charlemagne taillé par Satan dans Mandrin;

Tant qu’il se vautrera, broyant dans ses mâchoires
Le serment, la vertu, l’honneur religieux,
Ivre, affreux, vomissant sa honte sur nos gloires;
Tant qu’on verra cela sous le soleil des cieux;

Quand même grandirait l’abjection publique
À ce point d’adorer l’exécrable trompeur;
Quand même l’Angleterre et même l’Amérique
Diraient à l’exilé: — Va-t’en! nous avons peur!

Quand même nous serions comme la feuille morte;
Quand, pour plaire à César, on nous renîrait tous;
Quand le proscrit devrait s’enfuir de porte en porte,
Aux hommes déchiré comme un haillon aux clous;

Quand le désert, où Dieu contre l’homme proteste
Bannirait les bannis, chasserait les chassés;
Quand même, infâme aussi, lâche comme le reste,
Le tombeau jetterait dehors les trépassés;

Je ne fléchirai pas! Sans plainte dans la bouche,
Calme, le deuil au cœur, dédaignant le troupeau,
Je vous embrasserai dans mon exil farouche,
Patrie, ô mon autel! Liberté, mon drapeau!

Mes nobles compagnons, je garde votre culte
Bannis, la république est là qui nous unit.
J’attacherai la gloire à tout ce qu’on insulte
Je jetterai l’opprobre à tout ce qu’on bénit!

Je serai, sous le sac de cendre qui me couvre,
La voix qui dit: malheur! la bouche qui dit: non!
Tandis que tes valets te montreront ton Louvre,
Moi, je te montrerai, César, ton cabanon.

Devant les trahisons et les têtes courbées,
Je croiserai les bras, indigné, mais serein.
Sombre fidélité pour les choses tombées,
Sois ma force et ma joie et mon pilier d’airain!

Oui, tant qu’il sera là, qu’on cède ou qu’on persiste,
Ô France! France aimée et qu’on pleure toujours,
Je ne reverrai pas ta terre douce et triste,
Tombeau de mes aïeux et nid de mes amours!

Je ne reverrai pas ta rive qui nous tente,
France! hors le devoir, hélas! j’oublîrai tout.
Parmi les éprouvés je planterai ma tente.
Je resterai proscrit, voulant rester debout.

J’accepte l’âpre exil, n’eût-il ni fin ni terme,

Sans chercher à savoir et sans considérer
Si quelqu’un a plié qu’on aurait cru plus ferme,
Et si plusieurs s’en vont qui devraient demeurer.

Si l’on n’est plus que mille, eh bien, j’en suis! Si même
Ils ne sont plus que cent, je brave encor Sylla;
S’il en demeure dix, je serai le dixième;
Et s’il n’en reste qu’un, je serai celui-là!
2 décembre 1852. Jersey.

LUX

Temps futurs! vision sublime!
Les peuples sont hors de l’abîme.
Le désert morne est traversé.
Après les sables, la pelouse;
Et la terre est comme une épouse,
    Et l’homme est comme un fiancé!

    Dès à présent l’œil qui s’élève
    Voit distinctement ce beau rêve
    Qui sera le réel un jour;
    Car Dieu dénoûra toute chaîne,
    Car le passé s’appelle haine
    Et l’avenir se nomme amour!

    Dès à présent dans nos misères
    Germe l’hymen des peuples frères;
    Volant sur nos sombres rameaux,
    Comme un frelon que l’aube éveille,
    Le progrès, ténébreuse abeille,
    Fait du bonheur avec nos maux.

    Oh! voyez! la nuit se dissipe.
    Sur le monde qui s’émancipe,
    Oubliant Césars et Capets,
    Et sur les nations nubiles,
    S’ouvrent dans l’azur, immobiles,
    Les vastes ailes de la paix!

    Ô libre France enfin surgie!
    Ô robe blanche après l’orgie!
    Ô triomphe après les douleurs!
    Le travail bruit dans les forges,
    Le ciel rit, et les rouges-gorges
    Chantent dans l’aubépine en fleurs!

La rouille mord les hallebardes.
De vos canons, de vos bombardes
Il ne reste pas un morceau
Qui soit assez grand, capitaines,
Pour qu'on puisse prendre aux fontaines
De quoi faire boire un oiseau.

Les rancunes sont effacées;
Tous les cœurs, toutes les pensées,
Qu'anime le même dessein,
Ne font plus qu'un faisceau superbe;
Dieu prend pour lier cette gerbe
La vieille corde du tocsin.

Au fond des cieux un point scintille.
Regardez, il grandit, il brille,
Il approche, énorme et vermeil.
Ô République universelle,
Tu n'es encor que l'étincelle,
Demain tu seras le soleil!

II

Fêtes dans les cités, fêtes dans les campagnes!
Les cieux n'ont plus d'enfers, les lois n'ont plus de bagnes.
Où donc est l'échafaud? ce monstre a disparu.
Tout renaît. Le bonheur de chacun est accru
De la félicité des nations entières.
Plus de soldats l'épée au poing, plus de frontières,
Plus de fisc, plus de glaive ayant forme de croix.
L'Europe en rougissant dit: — Quoi! j'avais des rois!
Et l'Amérique dit. — Quoi! j'avais des esclaves!
Science, art, poésie, ont dissous les entraves
De tout le genre humain. Où sont les maux soufferts?
Les libres pieds de l'homme ont oublié les fers.
Tout l'univers n'est plus qu'une famille unie.

Le saint labeur de tous se fond en harmonie
Et la société, qui d’hymnes retentit,
Accueille avec transport l’effort du plus petit
L’ouvrage du plus humble au fond de sa chaumière
Emeut l’immense peuple heureux dans la lumière
Toute l’humanité dans sa splendide ampleur
Sent le don que lui fait le moindre travailleur;
Ainsi les verts sapins, vainqueurs des avalanches,
Les grands chênes, remplis de feuilles et de branches,
Les vieux cèdres touffus, plus durs que le granit,
Quand la fauvette en mai vient y faire son nid,
Tressaillent dans leur force et leur hauteur superbe,
Tout joyeux qu’un oiseau leur apporte un brin d’herbe.

Radieux avenir! essor universel!
Epanouissement de l’homme sous le ciel!

III

Ô proscrits, hommes de l’épreuve,
Mes compagnons vaillants et doux,
Bien des fois, assis près du fleuve,
J’ai chanté ce chant parmi vous;

Bien des fois, quand vous m’entendîtes,
Plusieurs m’ont dit: « Perds ton espoir.
Nous serions des races maudites,
Le ciel ne serait pas plus noir!

» Que veut dire cette inclémence?
Quoi! le juste a le châtiment!
La vertu s’étonne et commence
À regarder Dieu fixement.

» Dieu se dérobe et nous échappe.
Quoi donc! l’iniquité prévaut!

Le crime, voyant où Dieu frappe,
Rit d'un rire impie et dévot.

» Nous ne comprenons pas ses voies.
Comment ce Dieu des nations
Fera-t-il sortir tant de joies
De tant de désolations?

» Ses desseins nous semblent contraires
À l'espoir qui luit dans tes yeux…"
— Mais qui donc, ô proscrits, mes frères,
Comprend le grand mystérieux?

Qui donc a traversé l'espace,
La terre, l'eau, l'air et le feu,
Et l'étendue où l'esprit passe?
Qui donc peut dire: « J'ai vu Dieu!

» J'ai vu Jéhova! je le nomme!
Tout à l'heure il me réchauffait.
Je sais comment il a fait l'homme,
Comment il fait tout ce qu'il fait!

» J'ai vu cette main inconnue
Qui lâche en s'ouvrant l'âpre hiver,
Et les tonnerres dans la nue,
Et les tempêtes sur la mer,

» Tendre et ployer la nuit livide;
Mettre une âme dans l'embryon;
Appuyer dans l'ombre du vide
Le pôle du septentrion;

» Amener l'heure où tout arrive;
Faire au banquet du roi fêté
Entrer la mort, ce noir convive
Qui vient sans qu'on l'ait invité;

» Créer l’araignée et sa toile,
Peindre la fleur, mûrir le fruit,
Et, sans perdre une seule étoile,
Mener tous les astres la nuit;

» Arrêter la vague à la rive;
Parfumer de roses l’été;
Verser le temps comme une eau vive
Des urnes de l’éternité;

» D’un souffle, avec ses feux sans nombre,
Faire, dans toute sa hauteur,
Frissonner le firmament sombre
Comme la tente d’un pasteur;

» Attacher les globes aux sphères
Par mille invisibles liens…
Toutes ces choses sont très claires.
Je sais comment il fait! j’en viens!”

Qui peut dire cela? personne.
Nuit sur nos cœurs! nuit sur nos yeux!
L’homme est un vain clairon qui sonne.
Dieu seul parle aux axes des cieux.

IV

Ne doutons pas! croyons! La fin, c’est le mystère.
Attendons. Des Nérons comme de la panthère
Dieu sait briser la dent.
Dieu nous essaie, amis. Ayons foi, soyons cannes,
Et marchons. Ô désert! s’il fait croître des palmes,
C’est dans ton sable ardent!

Parce qu’il ne fait pas son œuvre tout de suite,

Qu’il livre Rome au prêtre et Jésus au jésuite,
Et les bons au méchant,
Nous désespérerions! de lui! du juste immense!
Non! non! lui seul connaît le nom de la -semence
Qui germe dans son champ.

Ne possède-t-il pas toute la certitude?
Dieu ne remplit-il pas ce monde, notre étude,
Du nadir au zénith?
Notre sagesse auprès de la sienne est démence.
Et n’est-ce pas à lui que la clarté commence,
Et que l’ombre finit?

Ne voit-il pas ramper les hydres sur leurs ventres?
Ne regarde-t-il pas jusqu’au fond de leurs antres
Atlas et Pélion?
Ne connaît-il pas l’heure où la cigogne émigre?
Sait-il pas ton entrée et ta sortie, ô tigre,
Et ton antre, ô lion?

Hirondelle, réponds, aigle à l’aile sonore,
Parle, avez-vous des nids que l’Eternel ignore?
Ô cerf, quand l’as-tu fui?
Renard, ne vois-tu pas ses yeux dans la broussaille?
Loup, quand tu sens la nuit une herbe qui tressaille,
Ne dis-tu pas: c’est lui!

Puisqu’il sait tout cela, puisqu’il peut toute chose,
Que ses doigts font jaillir les effets de la cause
Comme un noyau d’un fruit,
Puisqu’il peut mettre un ver dans les pommes de l’arbre,
Et faire disperser les colonnes de marbre
Par le vent de la nuit;

Puisqu’il bat l’océan pareil au bœuf qui beugle,
Puisqu’il est le voyant et que l’homme est l’aveugle,
Puisqu’il est le milieu,

Puisque son bras nous porte, et puisqu'à soir passage
La comète frissonne ainsi qu'en une cage
Tremble une étoupe en feu;

Puisque l'obscure nuit le connaît, puisque l'ombre
Le voit, quand il lui plaît, sauver la nef qui sombre,
Comment douterions-nous,
Nous qui, fermes et purs, fiers dans nos agonies,
Sommes debout devant toutes les tyrannies,
Pour lui seul à genoux!

D'ailleurs, pensons. Nos jours sont des jours d'amertume,
Mais quand nous étendons les bras dans cette brume,
Nous sentons une main;
Quand nous marchons, courbés, dans l'ombre du martyre,
Nous entendons quelqu'un derrière nous nous dire:
C'est ici le chemin.

Ô proscrits, l'avenir est aux peuples! Paix, gloire,
Liberté, reviendront sur des chars de victoire
Aux foudroyants essieux;
Ce crime qui triomphe est fumée et mensonge,
Voilà ce que je puis affirmer, moi qui songe
L'œil fixé sur les cieux!

Les césars sont plus fiers que les vagues marines,
Mais Dieu dit: « Je mettrai ma boucle en leurs narines,
Et dans leur bouche un mors,
Et je les traînerai, qu'on cède ou bien qu'on lutte,
Eux et leurs histrions et leurs joueurs de flûte,
Dans l'ombre où sont les morts."

Dieu dit; et le granit que foulait leur semelle
S'écroule, et les voilà disparus pêle-mêle
Dans leurs prospérités!
Aquilon! aquilon! qui viens battre nos portes,
Oh! dis-nous, si c'est toi, souffle, qui les emportes,

Où les as-tu jetés?

V

Bannis! bannis! bannis! c’est là la destinée.
Ce qu’apporté le flux sera dans la journée
Repris par le reflux.
Les jours mauvais fuiront sans qu’on sache leur nombre,
Et les peuples joyeux et se penchant sur l’ombre
Diront: Cela n’est plus!

Les temps heureux luiront, non pour la seule France,
Mais pour tous. On verra dans cette délivrance,
Funeste au seul passé,
Toute l’humanité chanter, de fleurs couverte,
Comme un maître qui rentre en sa maison déserte
Dont on l’avait chassé.

Les tyrans s’éteindront comme des météores.
Et, comme s’il naissait de la nuit deux aurores
Dans le même ciel bleu,
Nous vous verrous sortir de ce gouffre où nous sommes,
Mêlant vos deux rayons, fraternité des hommes,
Paternité de Dieu!

Oui, je vous le déclare, oui, je vous le répète,
Car le clairon redit ce que dit la trompette,
Tout sera paix et jour!
Liberté! plus de serf et plus de prolétaire!
Ô sourire d’en haut! ô du ciel pour la terre
Majestueux amour!

L’arbre saint du Progrès, autrefois chimérique,
Croîtra, couvrant l’Europe et couvrant l’Amérique,
Sur le passé détruit,
Et, laissant l’éther pur luire à travers ses branches,
Le jour, apparaîtra plein de colombes blanches,
Plein d’étoiles, la nuit.

Et nous qui serons morts, morts dans l’exil peut-être,
Martyrs saignants, pendant que les hommes, sans maître,
Vivront, plus fiers, plus beaux,
Sous ce grand arbre, amour des cieux qu’il avoisine,
Nous nous réveillerons pour baiser sa racine
Au fond de nos tombeaux!
16-20 décembre. Jersey.

LA FIN

(Jersey, 9 octobre 1853)
Comme j’allais fermer ces pages inflexibles,
Sur les trônes croulants, perdus par leur sauveur,
La guerre s’est dressée, et j’ai vu, moi rêveur,
Passer dans un éclair sa face aux cris terribles.

Et j’ai vu frissonner l’homme de grand chemin!
Cette foudre subite éblouit ses prunelles.
Il frémit, effaré, devant les Dardanelles,
Ô lâche! Et peut-être demain,

Grâce aux soldats nos fils, vaillants, quoique infidèles,
Demain sur ce front vil, sur cet abject cimier,
Comme un aigle parfois s’abat sur un fumier,
Quelque victoire aveugle ira poser ses ailes!

Malgré ta couardise, il faut combattre, allons!
Bats-toi, bandit! c’est dur; il le faut. Dieu t’opprime.
Toi qui, le front levé, te ruas dans le crime,
Marche à la gloire à reculons!

Quoi! même en se traînant comme un chien qui se couche,
Quoi! même en criant grâce, en demandant pardon,
Même en léchant les pieds des cosaques du Don,
On ne peut éviter Austerlitz? Non, Cartouche.

Nul moyen de sortir de la peau de César!
En guerre, faux lion! ta crinière l’exige.
Voici le Rhin, voici l’Elster, voici l’Adige,
Voici la fosse auprès du char!

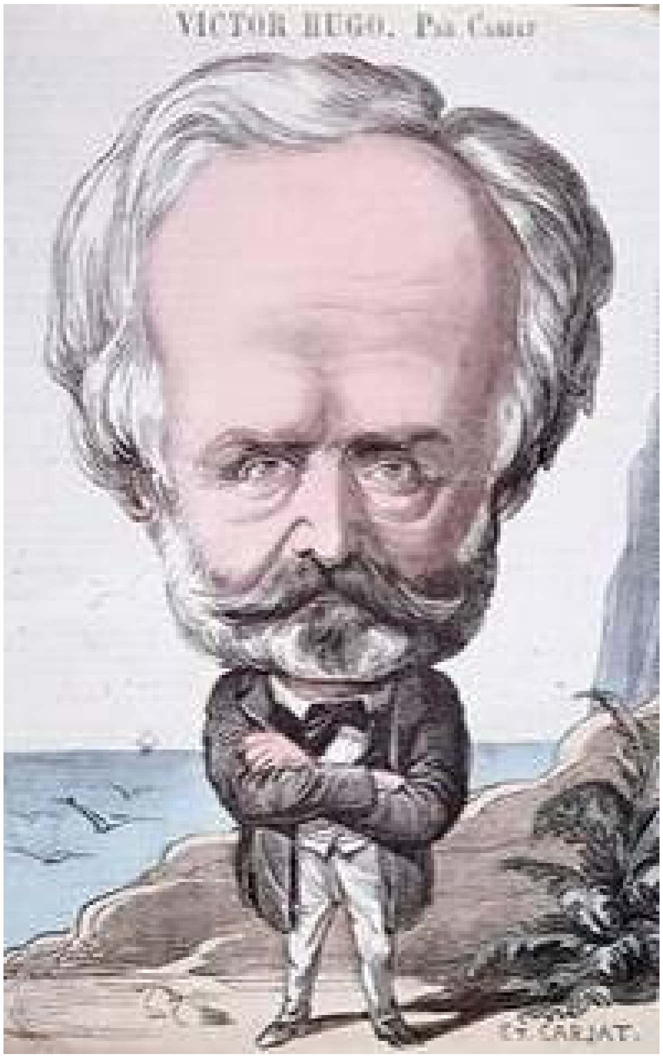
La guerre, c’est la fin. Ô peuples, nous y sommes.
Pour t’entendre sonner, je monte sur ma tour,
Formidable angelus de ce grand point du jour,

Dernière heure des rois, première heure des hommes!

Droits, progrès, qu’on croyait éclipsés pour jamais, Liberté, qu’invoquaient nos voix exténuées, Vous surgissez! voici qu’à travers les nuées Reparaissent les grands sommets! Des révolutions nous revoyons les cimes. Vieux monde du passé, marche, allons! c’est la loi. L’ange au glaive de feu, debout derrière toi, Te met l’épée aux reins et te pousse aux abîmes!

LES CONTEMPLATIONS

This collection of poetry was published in 1856. It is composed of 158 poems collected in six books. Most of the poems were written between 1841 and 1855, but the oldest poems in this collection date from 1830. They contain themes of remembrance, love, joy, but also death, mourning and works that explore mystical faith.



VICTOR HUGO, Par Carjat
ET. CARJAT.

A caricature of Hugo, 1856 – the time of publication

TABLE DES MATIERES

Préface

LIVRE PREMIER: AURORE

À MA FILLE
LE POËTE S’EN VA DANS LES CHAMPS; IL ADMIRE
MES DEUX FILLES
LE FIRMAMENT EST PLEIN DE LA VASTE CLARTE
À ANDRÉ CHÉNIER
LA VIE AUX CHAMPS
RÉPONSE
SUITE
LE POËME EPLORE SE LAMENTE; LE DRAME
A MADAME D. G. DE G.
LISE
VERE NOVO
A PROPOS D’HORACE
A GRANVILLE, EN 1836
LA COCCINELLE
VERS 1820
A M. FROMENT MEURICE
LES OISEAUX
VIEILLE CHANSON DU JEUNE TEMPS
A UN POËTE AVEUGLE
ELLE ETAIT DECHAUSSEE, ELLE ETAIT DECOIFFEE
LA FÊTE CHEZ THÉRÈSE
L’ENFANCE
HEUREUX L’HOMME, OCCUPE DE L’ETERNEL DESTIN
UNITÉ
QUELQUES MOTS A UN AUTRE
OUI, JE SUIS LE REVEUR; JE SUIS LE CAMARADE
IL FAUT QUE LE POËTE, EPRIS D’OMBRE ET D’AZUR
HALTE EN MARCHANT

LIVRE DEUXIÈME: L’AME EN FLEUR

PREMIER MAI
MES VERS FUIRAIENT, DOUX ET FRELES
LE ROUET D'OMPHALE
CHANSON
HIER AU SOIR
LETTRE
NOUS ALLIONS AU VERGER CUEILLIR DES BIGARREAUX
TU PEUX, COMME IL TE PLAIT, ME FAIRE JEUNE OU VIEUX
EN ÉCOUTANT LES OISEAUX
MON BRAS PRESSAIT TA TAILLE FRELE
LES FEMMES SONT SUR LA TERRE
ÉGLOGUE
VIENS! — UNE FLUTE INVISIBLE
BILLET DU MATIN
PAROLES DANS L'OMBRE
L'HIRONDELLE AU PRINTEMPS CHERCHE LES VIEILLES TOURS
SOUS LES ARBRES
JE SAIS BIEN QU'IL EST D'USAGE
N'ENVIONS RIEN
IL FAIT FROID
IL LUI DISAIT: «VOIS-TU, SI TOUS DEUX NOUS POUVIONS
AIMONS TOUJOURS! AIMONS ENCORE!
APRÈS L'HIVER
QUE LE SORT, QUEL QU'IL SOIT, VOUS TROUVE TOUJOURS GRANDE!
JE RESPIRE OU TU PALPITES
CRÉPUSCULE
LA NICHÉE SOUS LE PORTAIL
UN SOIR QUE JE REGARDAIS LE CIEL

LIVRE TROISIÈME: LES LUTTES ET LES RÊVES

ÉCRIT SUR UN EXEMPLAIRE DE LA DIVINA COMMEDIA
MELANCHOLIA
SATURNE
ÉCRIT AU BAS D'UN CRUCIFIX
QUIA PULVIS ES
LA SOURCE

LA STATUE
JE LISAIS. QUE LISAIS-JE?
JEUNE FILLE, LA GRACE EMPLIT TES DIX-SEPT ANS.
OU LES VIVANTS PENSIFS TRAVAILLENT TRISTEMENT
EXPLICATION
LA CHOUETTE
A LA MÈRE DE L'ENFANT MORT
ÉPITAPHE
LE MAITRE D'ÉTUDES
CHOSE VUE
INTÉRIEUR
BARAQUES DE LA FOIRE
INSOMNIE
ÉCRIT SUR LA PLINTHE D'UN BAS-RELIEF ANTIQUE
LA CLARTE DU DEHORS NE DISTRAIT PAS MON AME.
LE REVENANT
AUX ARBRES
L'ENFANT, VOYANT L'AÏEULE A FILER OCCUPEE,
JOIES DU SOIR
J'AIME L'ARAIGNEE ET J'AIME L'ORTIE
LE POËTE
LA NATURE
MAGNITUDO PARVI

LIVRE QUATRIÈME: PAUCA MEÆ

PURE INNOCENCE! VERTU SAINTE!
15 FÉVRIER 1843
TROIS ANS APRÈS
OH! JE FUS COMME FOU DANS LE PREMIER MOMENT
ELLE AVAIT PRIS CE PLI DANS SON AGE ENFANTIN
QUAND NOUS HABITIONS TOUS ENSEMBLE
ELLE ETAIT PALE, ET POURTANT ROSE,
A QUI DONC SOMMES-NOUS? QUI NOUS A? QUI NOUS MENE?
O SOUVENIRS! PRINTEMPS! AURORE!
PENDANT QUE LE MARIN, QUI CALCULE ET QUI DOUTE
ON VIT, ON PARLE, ON A LE CIEL ET LES NUAGES
A QUOI SONGEAIENT

VENI, VIDI, VIXI
DEMAIN, DES L'AUBE, A L'HEURE OU BLANCHIT LA CAMPAGNE
A VILLEQUIER
MORS
CHARLES VACQUERIE

LIVRE CINQUIÈME: EN MARCHE

AU FILS D'UN POËTE
ÉCRIT EN 1846
ÉCRIT EN 1855
À MADEMOISELLE LOUISE B.
À VOUS QUI ÊTES LÀ
POUR L'ERREUR, ECLAIRER, C'EST APOSTASIER
A JULES J.
LE MENDIANT
AUX FEUILLANTINES
PONTO
DOLOROSÆ
PAROLES SUR LA DUNE
CLAIRE P.
À ALEXANDRE D.
LUEUR AU COUCHANT
MUGITUSQUE BOUM
APPARITION
AU POËTE QUI M'ENVOIE UNE PLUME D'AIGLE CÉRIGO
A PAUL M.
J E PAYAI LE PECHEUR QUI PASSA SON CHEMIN
PASTEURS ET TROUPEAUX
J'AI CUEILLI CETTE FLEUR POUR TOI SUR LA COLLINE
O STROPHE DU POËTE, AUTREFOIS, DANS LES FLEURS
LES MALHEUREUX

LIVRE SIXIÈME: AU BORD DE L'INFINI

LE PONT
IBO
UN SPECTRE M'ATTENDAIT DANS UN GRAND ANGLE D'OMBRE

ÉCOUTEZ. JE SUIS JEAN. J'AI VU DES CHOSES SOMBRES
CROIRE; MAIS PAS EN NOUS
PLEURS DANS LA NUIT
UN JOUR, LE MORNE ESPRIT, LE PROPHETE SUBLIME
CLAIRE
À LA FENÊTRE PENDANT LA NUIT
ÉCLAIRCIE
OH! PAR NOS VILS PLAISIRS, NOS APPETITS, NOS FANGES
CADAVER
Ô GOUFFRE! L'AME PLONGE ET RAPPORTE LE DOUTE
A CELLE QUI EST VOILÉE HORROR
DOLOR
HELAS! TOUT EST SEPULCRE. ON EN SORT, ON Y TOMBE
VOYAGE DE NUIT
RELLIGIO
SPES
CE QUE C'EST QUE LA MORT
LES MAGES
EN FRAPPANT A UNE PORTE
NOMEN, NUMEN, LUMEN
CE QUE DIT LA BOUCHE D'OMBRE
A CELLE QUI EST RESTÉE EN FRANCE

Préface

Si un auteur pouvait avoir quelque droit d'influer sur la disposition d'esprit des lecteurs qui ouvrent son livre, l'auteur des Contemplations se bornerait à dire ceci: Ce livre doit être lu comme on lirait le livre d'un mort.

Vingt-cinq années sont dans ces deux volumes. Grande mortalis ævi spatium. L'auteur a laissé, pour ainsi dire, ce livre se faire en lui. La vie, en filtrant goutte à goutte à travers les événements et les souffrances, l'a déposé dans son coeur. Ceux qui s'y pencheront retrouveront leur propre image dans cette eau profonde et triste, qui s'est lentement amassée là, au fond d'une âme.

Qu'est-ce que les Contemplations? C'est ce qu'on pourrait appeler, si le mot n'avait quelque prétention, les Mémoires d'une âme.

Ce sont, en effet, toutes les impressions, tous les souvenirs, toutes les réalités, tous les fantômes vagues, riants ou funèbres, que peut contenir une conscience, revenus et rappelés, rayon à rayon, soupir à soupir, et mêlés dans la même nuée sombre. C'est l'existence humaine sortant de l'énigme du berceau et aboutissant à l'énigme du cercueil; c'est un esprit qui marche de lueur en lueur en laissant derrière lui la jeunesse, l'amour, l'illusion, le combat, le désespoir, et qui s'arrête éperdu «au bord de l'infini». Cela commence par un sourire, continue par un sanglot, et finit par un bruit du clairon de l'abîme.

Une destinée est écrite là jour à jour.

Est-ce donc la vie d'un homme? Oui, et la vie des autres hommes aussi. Nul de nous n'a l'honneur d'avoir une vie qui soit à lui. Ma vie est la vôtre, votre vie est la mienne, vous vivez ce que je vis; la destinée est une. Prenez donc ce miroir, et regardez-vous-y. On se plaint quelquefois des écrivains qui disent moi. Parlez-nous de nous, leur crie-t-on. Hélas! quand je vous parle de moi, je vous parle de vous. Comment ne le sentez-vous pas? Ah! insensé, qui crois que je ne suis pas toi!

Ce livre contient, nous le répétons, autant l'individualité du lecteur que celle de l'auteur. Homo sum. Traverser le tumulte, la rumeur, le rêve, la lutte, le plaisir, le travail, la douleur, le silence; se reposer dans le sacrifice, et, là, contempler Dieu; commencer à Foule et finir à Solitude, n'est-ce pas, les proportions individuelles réservées, l'histoire de tous?

On ne s’étonnera donc pas de voir, nuance à nuance, ces deux volumes s’assombrir pour arriver, cependant, à l’azur d’une vie meilleure. La joie, cette fleur rapide de la jeunesse, s’effeuille page à page dans le tome premier, qui est l’espérance, et disparaît dans le tome second, qui est le deuil. Quel deuil? Le vrai, l’unique: la mort; la perte des êtres chers.

Nous venons de le dire, c’est une âme qui se raconte dans ces deux volumes: Autrefois, Aujourd’hui. Un abîme les sépare, le tombeau.

V. H.

Guernesey, mars 1856.

Un jour je vis, debout au bord des flots mouvants,
Passer, gonflant ses voiles,
Un rapide navire enveloppé de vents,
De vagues et d’étoiles;
Et j’entendis, penché sur l’abîme des cieux
Que l’autre abîme touche,
Me parler à l’oreille une voix dont mes yeux
Ne voyaient pas la bouche:
«Poëte, tu fais bien! Poëte au triste front,
Tu rêves près des ondes,
Et tu tires des mers bien des choses qui sont
Sous les vagues profondes!
La mer, c’est le Seigneur, que, misère ou bonheur,
Tout destin montre et nomme;
Le vent, c’est le Seigneur; l’astre, c’est le Seigneur;
Le navire, c’est l’homme.»
Juin 1839.

LIVRE PREMIER: AURORE

I

À MA FILLE

O mon enfant, tu vois, je me soumets.
Fais comme moi: vis du monde éloignée;
Heureuse? non; triomphante? jamais.
— Résignée! —

Sois bonne et douce, et lève un front pieux.
Comme le jour dans les cieux met sa flamme,
Toi, mon enfant, dans l’azur de tes yeux
Mets ton âme!

Nul n’est heureux et nul n’est triomphant.
L’heure est pour tous une chose incomplète;
L’heure est une ombre, et notre vie, enfant,
En est faite.

Oui, de leur sort tous les hommes sont las.
Pour être heureux, à tous, — destin morose! —
Tout a manqué. Tout, c’est-à-dire, hélas!
Peu de chose.

Ce peu de chose est ce que, pour sa part,
Dans l’univers chacun cherche et désire:
Un mot, un nom, un peu d’or, un regard,
Un sourire!

La gaîté manque au grand roi sans amours;
La goutte d’eau manque au désert immense.
L’homme est un puits où le vide toujours
Recommence.

Vois ces penseurs que nous divinisons,
Vois ces héros dont les fronts nous dominent,
Noms dont toujours nos sombres horizons
S’illuminent!

Après avoir, comme fait un flambeau,
Ébloui tout de leurs rayons sans nombre,
Ils sont allés chercher dans le tombeau
Un peu d’ombre.

Le ciel, qui sait nos maux et nos douleurs,
Prend en pitié nos jours vains et sonores.
Chaque matin, il baigne de ses pleurs
Nos aurores.

Dieu nous éclaire, à chacun de nos pas,
Sur ce qu’il est et sur ce que nous sommes;
Une loi sort des choses d’ici-bas,
Et des hommes!

Cette loi sainte, il faut s’y conformer.
Et la voici, toute âme y peut atteindre:
Ne rien haïr, mon enfant; tout aimer,
Ou tout plaindre!

Paris, octobre 1842.

II

LE POËTE S’EN VA DANS LES CHAMPS; IL ADMIRE

Le poëte s’en va dans les champs; il admire,
Il adore, il écoute en lui-même une lyre;
Et, le voyant venir, les fleurs, toutes les fleurs,
Celles qui des rubis font pâlir les couleurs,

Celles qui des paons même éclipseraient les queues,
Les petites fleurs d’or, les petites fleurs bleues,
Prennent, pour l’accueillir agitant leurs bouquets,
De petits airs penchés ou de grands airs coquets,
Et, familièrement, car cela sied aux belles:
«Tiens! c’est notre amoureux qui passe!» disent-elles.
Et, pleins de jour et d’ombre et de confuses voix,
Les grands arbres profonds qui vivent dans les bois,
Tous ces vieillards, les ifs, les tilleuls, les érables,
Les saules tout ridés, les chênes vénérables,
L’orme au branchage noir, de mousse appesanti,
Comme les ulémas quand paraît le muphti,
Lui font de grands saluts et courbent jusqu’à terre
Leurs têtes de feuillée et leurs barbes de lierre,
Contemplent de son front la sereine lueur,
Et murmurent tout bas: C’est lui! c’est le rêveur!

Les Roches, juin 1831.

III

MES DEUX FILLES

Dans le frais clair-obscur du soir charmant qui tombe,
L’une pareille au cygne et l’autre à la colombe,
Belles, et toutes deux joyeuses, ô douceur!
Voyez, la grande soeur et la petite soeur
Sont assises au seuil du jardin, et sur elles
Un bouquet d’oeillets blancs aux longues tiges frêles,
Dans une urne de marbre agité par le vent,
Se penche, et les regarde, immobile et vivant,
Et frissonne dans l’ombre, et semble, au bord du vase,
Un vol de papillons arrêté dans l’extase.

La Terrasse, près Enghien, juin 1842.

IV

LE FIRMAMENT EST PLEIN DE LA VASTE CLARTE

Le firmament est plein de la vaste clarté;
Tout est joie, innocence, espoir, bonheur, bonté.
Le beau lac brille au fond du vallon qui le mure;
Le champ sera fécond, la vigne sera mûre;
Tout regorge de sève et de vie et de bruit,
De rameaux verts, d’azur frissonnant, d’eau qui luit,
Et de petits oiseaux qui se cherchent querelle.
Qu’a donc le papillon? qu’a donc la sauterelle?
La sauterelle a l’herbe, et le papillon l’air;
Et tous deux ont avril, qui rit dans le ciel clair.
Un refrain joyeux sort de la nature entière;
Chanson qui doucement monte et devient prière.
Le poussin court, l’enfant joue et danse, l’agneau
aute, et, laissant tomber goutte à goutte son eau,
Le vieux antre, attendri, pleure comme un visage;
Le vent lit à quelqu’un d’invisible un passage
Du poëme inouï de la création;
L’oiseau parle au parfum; la fleur parle au rayon;
Les pins sur les étangs dressent leur verte ombelle;
Les nids ont chaud; l’azur trouve la terre belle,
Onde et sphère, à la fois tous les climats flottants;
Ici l’automne, ici l’été; là le printemps.
O coteaux! ô sillons! souffles, soupirs, haleines!
L’hosanna des forêts, des fleuves et des plaines,
S’élève gravement vers Dieu, père du jour;
Et toutes les blancheurs sont des strophes d’amour;
Le cygne dit: Lumière! et le lys dit: Clémence!
Le ciel s’ouvre à ce chant comme une oreille immense.
Le soir vient; et le globe à son tour s’éblouit,
Devient un oeil énorme et regarde la nuit;
Il savoure, éperdu, l’immensité sacrée,
La contemplation du splendide empyrée,
Les nuages de crêpe et d’argent, le zénith,

Qui, formidable, brille et flamboie et bénit,
Les constellations, ces hydres étoilées,
Les effluves du sombre et du profond, mêlées
À vos effusions, astres de diamant,
Et toute l'ombre avec tout le rayonnement!
L'infini tout entier d'extase se soulève.
Et, pendant ce temps-là, Satan, l'envieux, rêve.

La Terrasse, avril 1840.

V

À ANDRÉ CHÉNIER

Oui, mon vers croit pouvoir, sans se mésallier,
Prendre à la prose un peu de son air familier.
André, c'est vrai, je ris quelquefois sur la lyre.
Voici pourquoi. Tout jeune encor, tâchant de lire
Dans le livre effrayant des forêts et des eaux,
J'habitais un parc sombre où jasaient des oiseaux,
Où des pleurs souriaient dans l'oeil bleu des pervenches;
Un jour que je songeais seul au milieu des branches,
Un bouvreuil qui faisait le feuilleton du bois
M'a dit: «Il faut marcher à terre quelquefois.
«La nature est un peu moqueuse autour des hommes;
O poëte, tes chants, ou ce qu'ainsi tu nommes,
Lui ressembleraient mieux si tu les dégonflais.
Les bois ont des soupirs, mais ils ont des sifflets.
L'azur luit, quand parfois la gaîté le déchire;
L'Olympe reste grand en éclatant de rire;
Ne crois pas que l'esprit du poëte descend
Lorsque entre deux grands vers un mot passe en dansant.
Ce n'est pas un pleureur que le vent en démence;
Le flot profond n'est pas un chanteur de romance;
Et la nature, au fond des siècles et des nuits,
Accouplant Rabelais à Dante plein d'ennuis,
Et l'Ugolin sinistre au Grandgousier difforme,

Près de l’immense deuil montre le rire énorme.»

Les Roches, juillet 1830.

VI

LA VIE AUX CHAMPS

Le soir, à la campagne, on sort, on se promène,
Le pauvre dans son champ, le riche en son domaine;
Moi, je vais devant moi; le poëte en tout lieu
Se sent chez lui, sentant qu’il est partout chez Dieu.
Je vais volontiers seul. Je médite ou j’écoute.
Pourtant, si quelqu’un veut m’accompagner en route,
J’accepte. Chacun a quelque chose en l’esprit;
Et tout homme est un livre où Dieu lui-même écrit.
Chaque fois qu’en mes mains un de ces livres tombe,
Volume où vit une âme et que scelle la tombe,
J’y lis.
Chaque soir donc, je m’en vais, j’ai congé,
Je sors. J’entre en passant chez des amis que j’ai.
On prend le frais, au fond du jardin, en famille.
Le serein mouille un peu les bancs sous la charmille;
N’importe: je m’assieds, et je ne sais pourquoi
Tous les petits enfants viennent autour de moi.
Dès que je suis assis, les voilà tous qui viennent.
C’est qu’ils savent que j’ai leurs goûts; ils se souviennent
Que j’aime comme eux l’air, les fleurs, les papillons
Et les bêtes qu’on voit courir dans les sillons.
Ils savent que je suis un homme qui les aime,
Un être auprès duquel on peut jouer, et même
Crier, faire du bruit, parler à haute voix;
Que je riais comme eux et plus qu’eux autrefois,
Et qu’aujourd’hui, sitôt qu’à leurs ébats j’assiste,
Je leur souris encor, bien que je sois plus triste;
Ils disent, doux amis, que je ne sais jamais

Me fâcher; qu'on s'amuse avec moi; que je fais
Des choses en carton, des dessins à la plume;
Que je raconte, à l'heure où la lampe s'allume,
Oh! des contes charmants qui vous font peur la nuit;
Et qu'enfin je suis doux, pas fier et fort instruit.
Aussi, dès qu'on m'a vu: «Le voilà!» tous accourent.
Ils quittent jeux, cerceaux et balles; ils m'entourent
Avec leurs beaux grands yeux d'enfants, sans peur, sans fiel,
Qui semblent toujours bleus, tant on y voit le ciel!

Les petits — quand on est petit, on est très-brave —
Grimpent sur mes genoux; les grands ont un air grave;
Ils m'apportent des nids de merles qu'ils ont pris,
Des albums, des crayons qui viennent de Paris;
On me consulte, on a cent choses à me dire,
On parle, on cause, on rit surtout; — j'aime le rire,
Non le rire ironique aux sarcasmes moqueurs,
Mais le doux rire honnête ouvrant bouches et coeurs,
Qui montre en même temps des âmes et des perles. —

J'admire les crayons, l'album, les nids de merles;
Et quelquefois on dit quand j'ai bien admiré:
«Il est du même avis que monsieur le curé.»
Puis, lorsqu'ils ont jasé tous ensemble à leur aise,
Ils font soudain, les grands s'appuyant à ma chaise,
Et les petits toujours groupés sur mes genoux,
Un silence, et cela veut dire: «Parle-nous.»

Je leur parle de tout. Mes discours en eux sèment
Ou l'idée ou le fait. Comme ils m'aiment, ils aiment
Tout ce que je leur dis. Je leur montre du doigt
Le ciel, Dieu qui s'y cache, et l'astre qu'on y voit.
Tout, jusqu'à leur regard, m'écoute. Je dis comme
Il faut penser, rêver, chercher. Dieu bénit l'homme,
Non pour avoir trouvé, mais pour avoir cherché.
Je dis: Donnez l'aumône au pauvre humble et penché;
Recevez doucement la leçon ou le blâme.

Donner et recevoir, c’est faire vivre l’âme!
Je leur conte la vie, et que, dans nos douleurs,
Il faut que la bonté soit au fond de nos pleurs,
Et que, dans nos bonheurs, et que, dans nos délires,
Il faut que la bonté soit au fond de nos rires;
Qu’être bon, c’est bien vivre, et que l’adversité
Peut tout chasser d’une âme, excepté la bonté;
Et qu’ainsi les méchants, dans leur haine profonde,
Ont tort d’accuser Dieu. Grand Dieu! nul homme au monde
N’a droit, en choisissant sa route, en y marchant,
De dire que c’est toi qui l’as rendu méchant;
Car le méchant, Seigneur, ne t’est pas nécessaire!

Je leur raconte aussi l’histoire; la misère
Du peuple juif, maudit qu’il faut enfin bénir;
La Grèce, rayonnant jusque dans l’avenir;
Rome; l’antique Égypte et ses plaines sans ombre,
Et tout ce qu’on y voit de sinistre et de sombre.
Lieux effrayants! tout meurt; le bruit humain finit.
Tous ces démons taillés dans des blocs de granit,
Olympe monstrueux des époques obscures,
Les Sphinx, les Anubis, les Ammons, les Mercures,
Sont assis au désert depuis quatre mille ans;
Autour d’eux le vent souffle, et les sables brûlants
Montent comme une mer d’où sort leur tête énorme;
La pierre mutilée a gardé quelque forme
De statue ou de spectre, et rappelle d’abord
Les plis que fait un drap sur la face d’un mort;
On y distingue encor le front, le nez, la bouche,
Les yeux, je ne sais quoi d’horrible et de farouche
Qui regarde et qui vit, masque vague et hideux.
Le voyageur de nuit, qui passe à côté d’eux,
S’épouvante, et croit voir, aux lueurs des étoiles,
Des géants enchaînés et muets sous des voiles.

La Terrasse, août 1840.

VII

RÉPONSE

À UN ACTE D’ACCUSATION

Donc, c’est moi qui suis l’ogre et le bouc émissaire.
Dans ce chaos du siècle où votre coeur se serre,
J’ai foulé le bon goût et l’ancien vers françois
Sous mes pieds, et, hideux, j’ai dit à l’ombre: «Sois!»
Et l’ombre fut. — Voilà votre réquisitoire.
Langue, tragédie, art, dogmes, conservatoire,
Toute cette clarté s’est éteinte, et je suis
Le responsable, et j’ai vidé l’urne des nuits.
De la chute de tout je suis la pioche inepte;
C’est votre point de vue. Eh bien, soit, je l’accepte;
C’est moi que votre prose en colère a choisi;
Vous me criez: Racca; moi, je vous dis: Merci!
Cette marche du temps, qui ne sort d’une église
Que pour entrer dans l’autre, et qui se civilise;
Ces grandes questions d’art et de liberté,
Voyons-les, j’y consens, par le moindre côté,
Et par le petit bout de la lorgnette. En somme,
J’en conviens, oui, je suis cet abominable homme;
Et, quoique, en vérité, je pense avoir commis,
D’autres crimes encor que vous avez omis,
Avoir un peu touché les questions obscures,
Avoir sondé les maux, avoir cherché les cures,
De la vieille ânerie insulté les vieux bâts,
Secoué le passé du haut jusques en bas,
Et saccagé le fond tout autant que la forme,
Je me borne à ceci: je suis ce monstre énorme,
Je suis le démagogue horrible et débordé.
Et le dévastateur du vieil A B C D;
Causons.
Quand je sortis du collège, du thème,

Des vers latins, farouche, espèce d’enfant blême
Et grave, au front penchant, aux membres appauvris;
Quand, tâchant de comprendre et dé juger, j’ouvris
Les yeux sur la nature et sur l’art, l’idiome,
Peuple et noblesse, était l’image du royaume;
La poésie était la monarchie; un mot
Était un duc et pair, ou n’était qu’un grimaud;
Les syllabes, pas plus que Paris et que Londre,
Ne se mêlaient; ainsi marchent sans se confondre
Piétons et cavaliers traversant le pont Neuf;
La langue était l’État avant quatre-vingt-neuf;
Les mots, bien ou mal nés, vivaient parqués en castes;
Les uns, nobles, hantant les Phèdres, les Jocastes,
Les Méropes, ayant le décorum pour loi,
Et montant à Versailles aux carrosses du roi;
Les autres, tas de gueux, drôles patibulaires,
Habitant les patois; quelques-uns aux galères
Dans l’argot; dévoués à tous les genres bas,
Déchirés en haillons dans les halles; sans bas,
Sans perruque; créés pour la prose et la farce;
Populace du style au fond de l’ombre éparse;
Vilains, rustres, croquants, que Vaugelas leur chef
Dans le bagne Lexique avait marqués d’une F;
N’exprimant que la vie abjecte et familière,
Vils, dégradés, flétris, bourgeois, bons pour Molière.
Racine regardait ces marauds de travers;
Si Corneille en trouvait un blotti dans son vers,
Il le gardait, trop grand pour dire: Qu’il s’en aille;
Et Voltaire criait: Corneille s’encanaille!
Le bonhomme Corneille, humble, se tenait coi.
Alors, brigand, je vins; je m’écriai: Pourquoi
Ceux-ci toujours devant, ceux-là toujours derrière?
Et sur l’Académie, aïeule et douairière,
Cachant sous ses jupons les tropes effarés,
Et sur les bataillons d’alexandrins carrés,
Je fis souffler un vent révolutionnaire.
Je mis un bonnet rouge au vieux dictionnaire.

Plus de mot sénateur! plus de mot roturier!
Je fis une tempête au fond de l’encrier,
Et je mêlai, parmi les ombres débordées,
Au peuple noir des mots l’essaim blanc des idées;
Et je dis: Pas de mot où l’idée au vol pur
Ne puisse se poser, tout humide d’azur!
Discours affreux! — Syllepse, hypallage, litote,
Frémirent; je montai sur la borne Aristote,
Et déclarai les mots égaux, libres, majeurs.
Tous les envahisseurs et tous les ravageurs,
Tous ces tigres, les Huns, les Scythes et les Daces,
N’étaient que des toutous auprès de mes audaces;
Je bondis hors du cercle et brisai le compas.
Je nommai le cochon par son nom; pourquoi pas?
Guichardin a nommé le Borgia! Tacite
Le Vitellius! Fauve, implacable, explicite,
J’ôtai du cou du chien stupéfait son collier
D’épithètes; dans l’herbe, à l’ombre du hallier,
Je fis fraterniser la vache et la génisse,
L’une étant Margoton et l’autre Bérénice.
Alors, l’ode, embrassant Rabelais, s’enivra;
Sur le sommet du Pinde on dansait Ça ira;
Les neuf muses, seins nus, chantaient la Carmagnole;
L’emphase frissonna dans sa fraise espagnole;
Jean, l’ânier, épousa la bergère Myrtil.
On entendit un roi dire: «Quelle heure est-il?»
Je massacrai l’albâtre, et la neige, et l’ivoire,
Je retirai le jais de la prunelle noire,
Et j’osai dire au bras: Sois blanc, tout simplement.
Je violai du vers le cadavre fumant;
J’y fis entrer le chiffre; ô terreur! Mithridate
Du siége de Cyzique eût pu citer la date.
Jours d’effroi! les Laïs devinrent des catins.
Force mots, par Restaut peignés tous les matins,
Et de Louis-Quatorze ayant gardé l’allure,
Portaient encor perruque; à cette chevelure
La Révolution, du haut de son beffroi,

Cria: «Transforme-toi! c’est l’heure. Remplis-toi
De l’âme de ces mots que tu tiens prisonnière!»
Et la perruque alors rugit, et fut crinière.
Liberté! c’est ainsi qu’en nos rébellions,
Avec des épagneuls nous fîmes des lions,
Et que, sous l’ouragan maudit que nous soufflâmes,
Toutes sortes de mots se couvrirent de flammes.
J’affichai sur Lhomond des proclamations.
On y lisait: «Il faut que nous en finissions!
Au panier les Bouhours, les Batteux, les Brossettes
À la pensée humaine ils ont mis les poucettes.
Aux armes, prose et vers! formez vos bataillons!
Voyez où l’on en est: la strophe a des bâillons!
«L’ode a les fers aux pieds, le drame est en cellule.
Sur le Racine mort le Campistron pullule!»
Boileau grinça des dents; je lui dis: Ci-devant,
Silence! et je criai dans la foudre et le vent:
Guerre à la rhétorique et paix à la syntaxe!
Et tout quatre-vingt-treize éclata. Sur leur axe,
On vit trembler l’athos, l’ithos et le pathos.
Les matassins, lâchant Pourceaugnac et Cathos,
Poursuivant Dumarsais dans leur hideux bastringue,
Des ondes du Permesse emplirent leur seringue.
La syllabe, enjambant la loi qui la tria,
Le substantif manant, le verbe paria,
Accoururent. On but l’horreur jusqu’à la lie.
On les vit déterrer le songe d’Athalie;
Ils jetèrent au vent les cendres du récit
De Théramène; et l’astre Institut s’obscurcit.
Oui, de l’ancien régime ils ont fait tables rases,
Et j’ai battu des mains, buveur du sang des phrases,
Quand j’ai vu par la strophe écumante et disant
Les choses dans un style énorme et rugissant,
L’Art poétique pris au collet dans la rue,
Et quand j’ai vu, parmi la foule qui se rue,
Pendre, par tous les mots que le bon goût proscrit,
La lettre aristocrate à la lanterne esprit.

Oui, je suis ce Danton! je suis ce Robespierre!
J’ai, contre le mot noble à la longue rapière,
Insurgé le vocable ignoble, son valet,
Et j’ai, sur Dangeau mort, égorgé Richelet.

Oui, c’est vrai, ce sont là quelques-uns de mes crimes.
J’ai pris et démoli la bastille des rimes.
J’ai fait plus: j’ai brisé tous les carcans de fer
Qui liaient le mot peuple, et tiré de l’enfer
Tous les vieux mots damnés, légions sépulcrales;
J’ai de la périphrase écrasé les spirales,
Et mêlé, confondu, nivelé sous le ciel
L’alphabet, sombre tour qui naquit de Babel;
Et je n’ignorais pas que la main courroucée
Qui délivre le mot, délivre la pensée.

L’unité, des efforts de l’homme est l’attribut.
Tout est la même flèche et frappe au même but.

Donc, j’en conviens, voilà, déduits en style honnête,
Plusieurs de mes forfaits, et j’apporte ma tête.
Vous devez être vieux, par conséquent, papa,
Pour la dixième fois j’en fais meâ culpâ.
Oui, si Beauzée est dieu, c’est vrai, je suis athée.
La langue était en ordre, auguste, époussetée,
Fleur-de-lys d’or, Tristan et Boileau, plafond bleu,
Les quarante fauteuils et le trône au milieu;
Je l’ai troublée, et j’ai, dans ce salon illustre,
Même un peu cassé tout; le mot propre, ce rustre,
N’était que caporal: je l’ai fait colonel;
J’ai fait un jacobin du pronom personnel;
Du participe, esclave à la tête blanchie,
Une hyène, et du verbe une hydre d’anarchie.
Vous tenez le reum consitentem. Tonnez!
J’ai dit à la narine: Eh mais! tu n’es qu’un nez!
J’ai dit au long fruit d’or: Mais tu n’es qu’une poire!
J’ai dit à Vaugelas: Tu n’es qu’une mâchoire!

J’ai dit aux mots: Soyez république! soyez
La fourmilière immense, et travaillez! Croyez,
Aimez, vivez! — J’ai mis tout en branle, et, morose,
J’ai jeté le vers noble aux chiens noirs de la prose.

Et, ce que je faisais, d’autres l’ont fait aussi;
Mieux que moi. Calliope, Euterpe au ton transi,
Polymnie, ont perdu leur gravité postiche.
Nous faisons basculer la balance hémistiche.
C’est vrai, maudissez-nous. Le vers, qui, sur son front
Jadis portait toujours douze plumes en rond,
Et sans cesse sautait sur la double raquette
Qu’on nomme prosodie et qu’on nomme étiquette,
Rompt désormais la règle et trompe le ciseau,
Et s’échappe, volant qui se change en oiseau,
De la cage césure, et fuit vers la ravine,
Et vole dans les cieux, alouette divine.

Tous les mots à présent planent dans la clarté.
Les écrivains ont mis la langue en liberté.
Et, grâce à ces bandits, grâce à ces terroristes,
Le vrai, chassant l’essaim des pédagogues tristes,
L’imagination, tapageuse aux cent voix,
Qui casse des carreaux dans l’esprit des bourgeois;
La poésie au front triple, qui rit, soupire
Et chante, raille et croit; que Plaute et que Shakspeare
Semaient, l’un sur la plebs, et l’autre sur le mob;
Qui verse aux nations la sagesse de Job
Et la raison d’Horace à travers sa démence;
Qu’enivre de l’azur la frénésie immense,
Et qui, folle sacrée aux regards éclatants,
Monte à l’éternité par les degrés du temps,
La muse reparaît, nous reprend, nous ramène,
Se remet à pleurer sur la misère humaine,
Frappe et console, va du zénith au nadir,
Et fait sur tous les fronts reluire et resplendir
Son vol, tourbillon, lyre, ouragan d’étincelles,

Et ses millions d’yeux sur ses millions d’ailes.

Le mouvement complète ainsi son action.
Grâce à toi, progrès saint, la Révolution
Vibre aujourd’hui dans l’air, dans la voix, dans le livre;
Dans le mot palpitant le lecteur la sent vivre;
Elle crie, elle chante, elle enseigne, elle rit,
Sa langue est déliée ainsi que son esprit.
Elle est dans le roman, parlant tout bas aux femmes.
Elle ouvre maintenant deux yeux où sont deux flammes,
L’un sur le citoyen, l’autre sur le penseur.
Elle prend par la main la Liberté, sa soeur,
Et la fait dans tout homme entrer par tous les pores.
Les préjugés, formés, comme les madrépores,
Du sombre entassement des abus sous les temps,
Se dissolvent au choc de tous les mots flottants,
Pleins de sa volonté, de son but, de son âme.
Elle est la prose, elle est le vers, elle est le drame;
Elle est l’expression, elle est le sentiment,
Lanterne dans la rue, étoile au firmament.
Elle entre aux profondeurs du langage insondable;
Elle souffle dans l’art, porte-voix formidable;
Et, c’est Dieu qui le veut, après avoir rempli
De ses fiertés le peuple, effacé le vieux pli
Des fronts, et relevé la foule dégradée,
Et s’être faite droit, elle se fait idée!

Paris, janvier 1834.

VIII

SUITE

Car le mot, qu’on le sache, est un être vivant.
La main du songeur vibre et tremble en l’écrivant;
La plume, qui d’une aile allongeait l’envergure,
Frémit sur le papier quand sort cette figure,

Le mot, le terme, type on ne sait d’où venu,
Face de l’invisible, aspect de l’inconnu;
Créé, par qui? forgé, par qui? jailli de l’ombre;
Montant et descendant dans notre tête sombre,
Trouvant toujours le sens comme l’eau le niveau;
Formule des lueurs flottantes du cerveau.

Oui, vous tous, comprenez que les mots sont des choses.
Ils roulent pêle-mêle au gouffre obscur des proses,
Ou font gronder le vers, orageuse forêt.
Du sphinx Esprit Humain le mot sait le secret.
Le mot veut, ne veut pas, accourt, fée ou bacchante,
S’offre, se donne ou fuit; devant Néron qui chante
Ou Charles-Neuf qui rime, il recule hagard;
Tel mot est un sourire, et tel autre un regard;
De quelque mot profond tout homme est le disciple;
Toute force ici-bas a le mot pour multiple;
Moulé sur le cerveau, vif ou lent, grave ou bref,
Le creux du crâne humain lui donne son relief;
La vieille empreinte y reste auprès de la nouvelle;
Ce qu’un mot ne sait pas, un autre le révèle;
Les mots heurtent le front comme l’eau le récif;
Ils fourmillent, ouvrant dans notre esprit pensif
Des griffes ou des mains, et quelques-uns des ailes;
Comme en un âtre noir errent des étincelles,
Rêveurs, tristes, joyeux, amers, sinistres, doux,
Sombre peuple, les mots vont et viennent en nous;
Les mots sont les passants mystérieux de l’âme.

Chacun d’eux porte une ombre ou secoue une flamme;
Chacun d’eux du cerveau garde une région;
Pourquoi? c’est que le mot s’appelle Légion;
C’est que chacun, selon l’éclair qui le traverse,
Dans le labeur commun fait une oeuvre diverse;
C’est que de ce troupeau de signes et de sons
Qu’écrivant ou parlant, devant nous nous chassons,
Naissent les cris, les chants, les soupirs, les harangues,

C’est que, présent partout, nain caché sous les langues,
Le mot tient sous ses pieds le globe et l’asservit;
Et, de même que l’homme est l’animal où vit
L’âme, clarté d’en haut par le corps possédée,
C’est que Dieu fait du mot la bête de l’idée.

Le mot fait vibrer tout au fond de nos esprits.
Il remue, en disant: Béatrix, Lycoris,
Dante au Campo-Santo, Virgile au Pausilippe.
De l’océan pensée il est le noir polype.
Quand un livre jaillit d’Eschyle ou de Manou,
Quand saint Jean à Patmos écrit sur son genou,
On voit parmi leurs vers pleins d’hydres et de stryges,
Des mots monstres ramper dans ces oeuvres prodiges.

O main de l’impalpable! ô pouvoir surprenant!
Mets un mot sur un homme, et l’homme frissonnant
Sèche et meurt, pénétré par la force profonde;
Attache un mot vengeur au flanc de tout un monde,
Et le monde, entraînant pavois, glaive, échafaud,
Ses lois, ses moeurs, ses dieux, s’écroule sous le mot.
Cette toute-puissance immense sort des bouches.
La terre est sous les mots comme un champ sous les mouches.

Le mot dévore, et rien ne résiste à sa dent.
À son haleine, l’âme et la lumière aidant,
L’obscure énormité lentement s’exfolie.
Il met sa force sombre en ceux que rien ne plie;
Caton a dans les reins cette syllabe: non.
Tous les grands obstinés, Brutus, Colomb, Zénon,
Ont ce mot flamboyant qui luit sous leur paupière:
Espérance! — Il entr’ouvre une bouche de pierre
Dans l’enclos formidable où les morts ont leur lit,
Et voilà que don Juan pétrifié pâlit!
Il fait le marbre spectre, il fait l’homme statue.
Il frappe, il blesse, il marque, il ressuscite, il tue;
Nemrod dit: «Guerre!» alors, du Gange à l’Illissus,

Le fer luit, le sang coule. «Aimez-vous!» dit Jésus.
Et ce mot à jamais brille et se réverbère
Dans le vaste univers, sur tous, sur toi, Tibère,
Dans les cieux, sur les fleurs, sur l’homme rajeuni,
Comme le flamboiement d’amour de l’infini!

Quand, aux jours où la terre entr’ouvrait sa corolle,
Le premier homme dit la première parole,
Le mot né de sa lèvre, et que tout entendit,
Rencontra dans les cieux la lumière, et lui dit:
«Ma soeur!

«Envole-toi! plane! sois éternelle!
Allume l’astre! emplis à jamais la prunelle!
Échauffe éthers, azurs, sphères, globes ardents!
Éclaire le dehors, j’éclaire le dedans.

«Tu vas être une vie, et je vais être l’autre.
Sois la langue de feu, ma soeur, je suis l’apôtre.
Surgis, effare l’ombre, éblouis l’horizon,
Sois l’aube; je te vaux, car je suis la raison;
À toi les yeux, à moi les fronts. O ma soeur blonde,
Sous le réseau Clarté tu vas saisir le monde;
Avec tes rayons d’or, tu vas lier entre eux
Les terres, les soleils, les fleurs, les flots vitreux,
Les champs, les cieux; et moi, je vais lier les bouches;
Et sur l’homme, emporté par mille essors farouches,
Tisser, avec des fils d’harmonie et de jour,
Pour prendre tous les coeurs, l’immense toile Amour.
J’existais avant l’âme, Adam n’est pas mon père.
J’étais même avant toi; tu n’aurais pu, lumière,
Sortir sans moi du gouffre où tout rampe enchaîné;
Mon nom est Fiat Lux, et je suis ton aîné!»

Oui, tout-puissant! tel est le mot. Fou qui s’en joue!
Quand l’erreur fait un noeud dans l’homme, il le dénoue.
Il est foudre dans l’ombre et ver dans le fruit mûr.

Il sort d’une trompette, il tremble sur un mur,
Et Balthazar chancelle, et Jéricho s’écroule.
Il s’incorpore au peuple, étant lui-même foule.
Il est vie, esprit, germe, ouragan, vertu, feu;
Car le mot, c’est le Verbe, et le Verbe, c’est Dieu.

Jersey, juin 1855.

IX

LE POËME EPLORE SE LAMENTE; LE DRAME

Le poëme éploré se lamente; le drame
Souffre, et par vingt acteurs répand à flots son âme;
Et la foule accoudée un moment s’attendrit,
Puis reprend: «Bah! l’auteur est un homme d’esprit,
Qui, sur de faux héros lançant de faux tonnerres,
Rit de nous voir pleurer leurs maux imaginaires.
«Ma femme, calme-toi; sèche tes yeux, ma soeur.»
La foule a tort: l’esprit c’est le coeur; le penseur
Souffre de sa pensée et se brûle à sa flamme.
Le poëte a saigné le sang qui sort du drame;
Tous ces êtres qu’il fait l’étreignent de leurs noeuds;
Il tremble en eux, il vit en eux, il meurt en eux;
Dans sa création le poëte tressaille;
Il est elle; elle est lui; quand dans l’ombre il travaille,
Il pleure, et s’arrachant les entrailles, les met
Dans son drame, et, sculpteur, seul sur son noir sommet
Pétrit sa propre chair dans l’argile sacrée;
Il y renaît sans cesse, et ce songeur qui crée
Othello d’une larme, Alceste d’un sanglot,
Avec eux pêle-mêle en ses oeuvres éclot.
Dans sa genèse immense et vraie, une et diverse,
Lui, le souffrant du mal éternel, il se verse,
Sans épuiser son flanc d’où sort une clarté.

Ce qui fait qu’il est dieu, c’est plus d’humanité.
Il est génie, étant, plus que les autres, homme.
Corneille est à Rouen, mais son âme est à Rome;
Son front des vieux Catons porte le mâle ennui.
Comme Shakspeare est pâle! avant Hamlet, c’est lui
Que le fantôme attend sur l’âpre plate-forme,
Pendant qu’à l’horizon surgit la lune énorme.
Du mal dont rêve Argan, Poquelin est mourant;
Il rit: oui, peuple, il râle! Avec Ulysse errant,
Homère éperdu fuit dans la brume marine.
Saint Jean frissonne: au fond de sa sombre poitrine,
L’Apocalypse horrible agite son tocsin.
Eschyle! Oreste marche et rugit dans ton sein,
Et c’est, ô noir poëte à la lèvre irritée,
Sur ton crâne géant qu’est cloué Prométhée.

Paris, janvier 1834.

X

A MADAME D. G. DE G.

Jadis je vous disais: — Vivez, régnez, Madame!
Le salon vous attend! le succès vous réclame!
Le bal éblouissant pâlit quand vous partez!
Soyez illustre et belle! aimez! riez! chantez!
Vous avez la splendeur des astres et des roses!
Votre regard charmant, où je lis tant de choses,
Commente vos discours légers et gracieux.
Ce que dit votre bouche étincelle en vos yeux.
Il semble, quand parfois un chagrin vous alarme,
Qu’ils versent une perle et non pas une larme.
Même quand vous rêvez, vous souriez encor.
Vivez, fêtée et fière, ô belle aux cheveux d’or!
Maintenant vous voilà pâle, grave, muette,
Morte, et transfigurée, et je vous dis: — Poëte!
Viens me chercher! Archange! être mystérieux!

Fais pour moi transparents et la terre et les cieux!
Révèle-moi, d'un mot de ta bouche profonde,
La grande énigme humaine et le secret du monde!
Confirme en mon esprit Descartes ou Spinosa!
Car tu sais le vrai nom de celui qui perça,
Pour que nous puissions voir sa lumière sans voiles,
Ces trous du noir plafond qu'on nomme les étoiles!
Car je te sens flotter sous mes rameaux penchants;
Car ta lyre invisible a de sublimes chants!
Car mon sombre océan, où l'esquif s'aventure,
T'épouvante et te plaît; car la sainte nature,
La nature éternelle, et les champs, et les bois,
Parlent à ta grande âme avec leur grande voix!

Paris, 1840. — Jersey, 1855.

XI

LISE

J'avais douze ans; elle en avait bien seize.
Elle était grande, et, moi, j'étais petit.
Pour lui parler le soir plus à mon aise,
Moi, j'attendais que sa mère sortit;
Puis je venais m'asseoir près de sa chaise
Pour lui parler le soir plus à mon aise.

Que de printemps passés avec leurs fleurs!
Que de feux morts, et que de tombes closes!
Se souvient-on qu'il fut jadis des coeurs?
Se souvient-on qu'il fut jadis des roses?
Elle m'aimait. Je l'aimais. Nous étions
Deux purs enfants, deux parfums, deux rayons.

Dieu l'avait faite ange, fée et princesse.
Comme elle était bien plus grande que moi,
Je lui faisais des questions sans cesse

Pour le plaisir de lui dire: Pourquoi?
Et, par moments, elle évitait, craintive,
Mon oeil rêveur qui la rendait pensive.

Puis j’étalais mon savoir enfantin,
Mes jeux, la balle et la toupie agile;
J’étais tout fier d’apprendre le latin;
Je lui montrais mon Phèdre et mon Virgile;
Je bravais tout; rien ne me faisait mal;
Je lui disais: Mon père est général.

Quoiqu’on soit femme, il faut parfois qu’on lise
Dans le latin, qu’on épèle en rêvant;
Pour lui traduire un verset, à l’église,
Je me penchais sur son livre souvent.
Un ange ouvrait sur nous son aile blanche
Quand nous étions à vêpres le dimanche.

Elle disait de moi: C’est un enfant!
Je l’appelais mademoiselle Lise;
Pour lui traduire un psaume, bien souvent,
Je me penchais sur son livre, à l’église;
Si bien qu’un jour, vous le vîtes, mon Dieu!
Sa joue en fleur toucha ma lèvre en feu.

Jeunes amours, si vite épanouies,
Vous êtes l’aube et le matin du coeur.
Charmez l’enfant, extases inouïes!
Et, quand le soir vient avec la douleur,
Charmez encor nos âmes éblouies,
Jeunes amours, si vite évanouies!

Mai 1843.

XII

VERE NOVO

Comme le matin rit sur les roses en pleurs!
Oh! les charmants petits amoureux qu'ont les fleurs!
Ce n'est dans les jasmins, ce n'est dans les pervenches
Qu'un éblouissement de folles ailes blanches
Qui vont, viennent, s'en vont, reviennent, se fermant,
Se rouvrant, dans un vaste et doux frémissement.
O printemps! quand on songe à toutes les missives
Qui des amants rêveurs vont aux belles pensives,
A ces coeurs confiés au papier, à ce tas
De lettres que le feutre écrit au taffetas,
Aux messages d'amour, d'ivresse et de délire
Qu'on reçoit en avril et qu'en mai l'on déchire,
On croit voir s'envoler, au gré du vent joyeux,
Dans les prés, dans les bois, sur les eaux, dans les cieux,
Et rôder en tous lieux, cherchant partout une âme,
Et courir à la fleur en sortant de la femme,
Les petits morceaux blancs, chassés en tourbillons
De tous les billets doux, devenus papillons.

Mai 1831.

XIII

A PROPOS D'HORACE

Marchands de grec! marchands de latin! cuistres! dogues!
Philistins! magisters! je vous hais, pédagogues!
Car, dans votre aplomb grave, infaillible, hébété,
Vous niez l'idéal, la grâce et la beauté!
Car vos textes, vos lois, vos règles sont fossiles!
Car, avec l'air profond, vous êtes imbéciles!
Car vous enseignez tout, et vous ignorez tout!
Car vous êtes mauvais et méchants! — Mon sang bout
Rien qu'à songer au temps où, rêveuse bourrique,
Grand diable de seize ans, j'étais en rhétorique!

Que d'ennuis! de fureurs! de bêtises! — gredins! —

Que de froids châtiments et que de chocs soudains!
«Dimanche en retenue et cinq cents vers d’Horace!»
Je regardais le monstre aux ongles noirs de crasse,
Et je balbutiais: «Monsieur... — Pas de raisons!
Vingt fois l’ode à Plancus et l’épître aux Pisons!»
Or, j’avais justement, ce jour-là, — douce idée.
Qui me faisait rêver d’Armide et d’Haydée, —
Un rendez-vous avec la fille du portier.
Grand Dieu! perdre un tel jour! le perdre tout entier!
Je devais, en parlant d’amour, extase pure!
En l’enivrant avec le ciel et la nature,
La mener, si le temps n’était pas trop mauvais
Manger de la galette aux buttes Saint-Gervais!
Rêve heureux! je voyais, dans ma colère bleue,
Tout cet Éden, congé, les lilas, la banlieue,
Et j’entendais, parmi le thym et le muguet,
Les vagues violons de la mère Saguet!
O douleur! furieux, je montais à ma chambre,
Fournaise au mois de juin, et glacière en décembre;
Et, là, je m’écriais:
 — Horace! ô bon garçon!
Qui vivais dans le calme et selon la raison,
Et qui t’allais poser, dans ta sagesse franche,
Sur tout, comme l’oiseau se pose sur la branche,
Sans peser, sans rester, ne demandant aux dieux
Que le temps de chanter ton chant libre et joyeux!
Tu marchais, écoutant le soir, sous les charmilles,
Les rires étouffés des folles jeunes filles,
Les doux chuchotements dans l’angle obscur du bois;
Tu courtisais ta belle esclave quelquefois,
Myrtale aux blonds cheveux, qui s’irrite et se cabre
Comme la mer creusant les golfes de Calabre,
Ou bien tu t’accoudais à table, buvant sec
Ton vin que tu mettais toi-même en un pot grec.
Pégase te soufflait des vers de sa narine;
Tu songeais; tu faisais des odes à Barine,
A Mécène, à Virgile, à ton champ de Tibur,

A Chloë, qui passait le long de ton vieux mur,
Portant sur son beau front l’amphore délicate.
La nuit, lorsque Phoebé devient la sombre Hécate,
